CHICAGO.

A generous response has been given by local artists to "the call" in behalf of the older French artists. Although the Art Institute gallery, which the officials contributed as a transient headquarters for the movement, is now occupied by the annual exhibition of works of artists of Chicago and vicinity, the committee in charge of the "Appui aux Artistes" announces that other galleries are to be opened for a continuance of the sale of contributed paintings, sculptures, etc. Ralph Clarkson informs patrons where to acquire a canvas or sculpture at a "cut-price" in order to fill this treasury as rapidly as possible.

Among the artists contributing to the fund are Lawton Parker, A. E. Albright, C. F. Browne, Pauline Palmer, Anna L. Stacey, F. C. Bartlett, L. Ritman, Carolyn D. Tyler, P. Bartlett, W. Bernhardt, T. E. Tallman, W. Ufer, Harriet Blackstone, A. Swisher, C. A. Buher, E. S. Cameron, R. Clarkson, Ethel L. Coe, J. St. John, G. Stephenson, H. L. Roecker, E. S. Payne, L. Griffith, O. D. Grover, A. Jourgens, Lucie Hart-rath, J. P. Nuyttens, A. H. Ullrich, Antonia Sterbia, Earl H. Reed, Frank C. Peyraud, Elizabeth K. Peyraud, R. Pearsons, C. L. Mulligan, Grace F. McGann, H. B. Lochman, Clara Ketzinger, W. Irvine, W. V. Higgins, J. W. Reynolds, A. E. Philbrick, Grace Ravlin, A. H. Krehbiel, Flora L. I. Schoenfeld, A. H. Schmidt, W. B. Henderson, E. Haskell, O. Gross, C. C. Davis, F. V. Dudley, G. S. Dewey, J. E. Colburn, and Dahlgreen.

C. M. Russell, cow-boy and Indian-comrade painter and sculptor, has 24 oils and 6 watercolors at Thurber's. Russell is a self-made artist who portrays the West that has passed.

Gustave Baumann introduced his first exhibition of American block prints and wood engravings to invited guests and the public, in the Art Institute, Feb. 1, and this is the first collection of its kind ever put on show in this country. Baumann, as all art lovers know, is noted for his wood-block prints in colors and in black and white, and he is an enthusiast. Now, he's the pioneer in assembling wood engravings and prints from wood-blocks. The Timothy Cole types are classed as traditional—this show is typically modern, a result of the Cole brand of art. Twelve women and eight men are exemplified, and there are 147 prints in line. B. J. O. Nordfeldt works in bold relief lines. Arthur W. Dow has a group of color schemes in his landscapes, Elizabeth Colwell sketches of land and sea, Dean Babcock of Colorado, several forceful compositions, Eliza Gardener picturings of child life, Mary B. Jones "scapes" and "studies," all skillful, Mildred McMillan, Edna Boles Hopkins high-colored flower prints, Gordon Ertz, Michael Carr, and Helen Hyde Japanese lyrics and colors, Margaret Patterson, Juliett S. Nichols, Florence Wyman Ivins, Ethel Mars, Tod Lindenmuth, Rudolph Ruzicka, Bertha Lum, Ada Gilmore, all are well represented. Baumann's prints are in frames of his own making.

The exhibition of oils and watercolors by William and Marguerite Zorach is on at O'Brien's.

Frank Werner is soon going "somewhere out west" to accomplish several commissions in portraiture.

Louis O. Griffith is going to New Orleans to gather fresh inspiration and new subjects for future picturings.

F. Victor Poole, an English artist who has been here several months, has gone to Detroit to paint portraits. Later, he will execute some commissions of the same kind in Boston.

The annual exhibition of works by artists of Chicago and vicinity is installed at the Art Institute. It was opened too late for more attention than an announcement in this week's issue.

Pastels by W. P. Henderson and etchings by Whistler still are on special show at Roullier's. At Ackerman's unusual English prints, old and modern, are on exhibition. At Anderson's there is a show of modern and historic paintings by American artists. The Artists' Guild still is featuring Matilda Vanderpoel's pastels. Moulton and Ricketts are featuring modern French paintings. At Reinhardt's there are paintings by old and modern masters, European and American. The American Art Gallery has a special assembling of American paintings in line. At Crichton Brothers there is an assemblage of rare primitive paintings.

H. Effa Webster.

Three members of the Phila. Plastic Club, Mrs. Paula H. Balano, Miss Mary Butler and Miss Schanna Boericke, are in Philadelphia holding a combined exhibition of some 90 canvases in the club gallery. They are mainly landscapes, Athens and its temple-crowned Acropolis being the leading subject of Mrs. Balano's art. Miss Butler's paintings are of Ireland and Scotland and Miss Boericke shows some poetic glimpses of the Telluride Mountains.

BOSTON.

After all, the wheel of progress does move a bit, even at the "Hub." The fact that the Art Club has opened its gallery for a show by a young and but little known painter proves that it (the Club) is "going some," if not a great deal. The young man in question is Aldro T. Hibbard, the holder of the Paige Traveling Scholarship from the Museum School for 1913-1915, and his exhibition of 200 or more works, which completely fill both galleries, is more than creditable in so young a man (he is still under thirty), and is really surprisingly so. Its most striking feature, next to its size, is its extraordinary variety of subject and treatment. Indeed, it might be the accumulated "stock" of a painter twice his years. Landscapes, marines, figure pieces, still life, foreign architecture, and some finely executed copies of the old masters reveal the young artist's versatility, as well as admirable facility of execution. From Italy, Spain, France and England Mr. Hibbard has gathered an abundant harvest of good motifs, which he has worked up with warmth and brightness and vigor. He has not only "mixed his colors with brains," like another and greater painter, but with the nameless something that we call joie de vivre.

Seven Varied Art Displays.

When a picture gallery is holding seven in flat washes, the subjects chosen for strength rather than beauty, yet with beauty not absent, as in "A Glimpse of Boston College," "Autumn Morning" and "Fresh Snow in Brookline Woodlands." Miss Martha Walter shows a group of Gloucester beach subjects—gay in color and feeling, the sands alive with modern (and hideous, be it said), semi-fashionable folk, who idle under huge umbrellas. Another woman artist—Miss Blackwelder—also shows her work in this busy haunt, while Lester Hornby holds forth with drawings and etchings, and Joseph Pennell with etchings. One cannot fail to be most agreeably entertained and stimulated by this medley of good things. And last, but not least, one finds here a group of precocious paintings by a little schoolboy of tender years—Master Ahl, the son of A. H. Ahl, a well-known local painter. These comprise still lifes that are far better than some grown-ups make 'em.

Miss Macomber's Passing.

The local art world has been not a little shocked by the death of Miss Mary L. Macomber, although her passing is a loss to a far wider circle than her own community. For many years her works have been seen and admired at all the well-known exhibitions of the big cities. She has been one of the few modern painters who have chosen to paint religious and symbolic sub-

The jury of award of the "Americanization through Art" Exhibition at Memorial Hall, Fairmount Park, announce that a special honor, "Hors concours," has been granted to William Sartain's landscape "Solitude" in recognition of the general services of himself and family in the way of advancing the cause of art in America. The first prize of $300 for oils goes to E. W. Schofield's "Canal in Winter," second of $200 to Leopold Seyffert's "Bridal Bonnet." Honorable mentions to Caesare Ricciardi, Morris Molarsky, B. M. Feldman, F. D. DeHenwood. First prize of $300 in sculpture to Albert Laessle's "Billy," second of $200 to Albin Polasek's "Aspiration." Hon. mentions to Alexander S. Calder, Giuseppe Donato, Louis Milione, Luigi Maraffi. Albert Jean Adolphe was awarded first prize of $300 for work in watercolor, a self portrait; second of $200 to Fred Wagner's "Guelph Hills." Hon. mentions to Lazar Raditz, Nicola D'Ascenzo, Fredk. Nunn, Albert P. Willis, Paula H. Balano. First prize in Arts and Crafts of $300 to Samuel Yellin for wrought iron work; second prize, $100, to Edouard Maene for wood carving; another second prize of $100 for stained glass work to Nicola D'Ascenzo. Honorable mention to Alex Colaresi and André Koronski for artistic jewelry, to C. P. Andrade for copper work, to Decorative Stained Glass Co. for their work, and to Alfred Smith for decoration of leather book-bindings. Mention also is made of Walter H. Everett's illustration "Joy to the World," of Herman Deigendisch's case of miniatures and portrait of "Betty T." by Edith Kellett, and of etchings by Emily Sartain and Max Rosenthal.

Some 65 marines and landscapes in oil and watercolor by Clifford W. Ashley, now on view at the Art Club, give one a definite proof of the real ability of the exhibiting artist, already well known also as an illustrator. The sea and ships that pass upon it are the principal theme of Mr. Ashley's compositions, masterful painting of wave forms; and interesting pictures of the old fashioned New Bedford whalers.

The death of Philip Muhr, prof. of painting at the School of Industrial Art, will be keenly felt by all those who knew that clean and enthusiastic painter, thoroughly genuine in his character and conscientious in carrying out the provisions of the "Muhr Scholarship" founded by his brother, the late Simon Muhr. Eugene Castello.

CINCINNATI.

An important oil by John H. Twachtman, also two small bronzes by Paul Manship, have been purchased by the Museum. The bronzes, "Girl with Harp" and "Mother and Child," were bought out of Manship's excellent "one man" show now at the Museum. The Twachtman canvas was painted in Conn. and belongs to the artist's best period. It is a snow scene, typically fine in its pictorial poetic charm of insight into the simplest of themes—a house, a couple of trees—everything enveloped in snow. Once more Twachtman's favorite mood in nature, his silvery violet, is superbly realized. I recall the fact that it was the Museum, which in 1900 purchased their first picture by Twachtman, his well known "Waterfall" for only $400, an example which for years was not followed by any other Museum.

different exhibitions, all at the same time—as is a local one at the present moment—it may be inelegantly said to be running "full blast," rivalling even the munitions factories in "business." One of the most important and interesting of these exhibitions is that of the newly "arrived" sculptor, Mrs. Louise Allen Hobbs. Mrs. Hobbs has arrived fairly and squarely, as proved by this group of sculptures, which, while cast in antique mold, are unmistakably individual. Notwithstanding their Grecian aspect, they are curiously modern, and yet not so much modern as inclusive, in their spirit, of all the ages. Witness "The Dreamer," "Maternity," "Pippa Passes," "The Water Carrier," and, last of all, the charming, wonderfully human boy presented in "The Shell Game." Depth of insight, vision, subtlety, as well as power, are all combined in these unusual sculptures.

A pleasant foil to this exhibition is Mrs. Marion Monks Chase's watercolors, which hold court in the same gallery. These are fine, modern examples of pure aquarelles jects, works which have been characterized not only by rare beauty, but by genuine spirituality—a rare quality in modern painting. John Doe.

At the annual meeting of stockholders of the Pa. Academy, on Feb. 7, Messrs. Clement B. Newbold, Edward T. Stotesbury, Alfred C. Harrison and T. DeWitt Cuyler were re-elected as members of the Board of Directors.

The value of the testimony of experts in antiques was demonstrated on Feb. 7 in the verdict of a jury for the defendant in the case of J. A. Randall against Alexander Sellers in Common Pleas Court No. 4, suing to recover $1,500 on a note given for the purchase of fifteen ponderous tomes, purporting to be the manuscript of the monks of the XIV or XV century, treating of "The Gregorian Mass." "Expert" bibliophiles have decided that the volumes were not nearly so old as was claimed and that their value was greatly exaggerated. The

 "The production of bogus art will continue as long as we have no law making it a crime to forge a picture. And when such a law shall be seriously contemplated, it will necessarily be extremely difficult to frame one that will define the difference between the legitimate and the illegitimate copies. Personally, I don't believe it is possible for the temperamental painters whose works are, as someone has said, the result of a series of carefully prepared accidents—work produced at great heat to make a literal copy, even of their own work, I know it would be an absolute impossibility for me to repeat with exactness anything of my own."

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

Women Painters and Sculptors' Show.

The twenty-fifth annual exhibition of the Association of Women Painters and Sculptors is on at the former Blakeslee Galleries, 665 5th Ave. to Feb. 19. Theresa Bernstein was awarded the National Arts Club Prize of $100—given by Mr. John Agar—for a vigorously attacked and colorful portrayal of the interior of a crowded car in the elevated. "The Three Sisters," a characteristic arrangement of broadly treated nudes by E. Varian Cockroft, won the Saltus prize of $100, given by Mr. Saltus for the best imaginative picture with two or more figures. The landscape prize of the same amount, given by Mr. Emerson McMillin, went to Marian Bullard for a sunny village street scene, and the sculpture prize of $50, also given by Mr. McMillin, to Frances Grimes for a charming bas relief, three-quarter length portrait of a little girl.

An "invited" group of Helen M. Turner's pictures is an attraction. Miss Turner is not a member, but is one of the strongest of American women painters, and the canvases which she has sent include a depiction of a young woman seated at a tea table out-of-doors. She is tastefully gowned and carries an ecru and green parasol. The scene is splashed with sunshine and the color and pattern are delightful. Olive Rush's mother and baby picture, and Alice Beard's naive conception of a little faun, nearby, have charm.

Martha Walter paints light and air and children in the open in her own delightful way. She, too, shows an outdoor tea table and gay little girls, a blonde and a brunette, with Japanese parasols. It is one of the most spontaneous pictures in the exhibition. Edith M. Magonigle shows a portrait, in the modern vein, of Miss Nancy Vanderpool, and Varian Cockroft depicts "Mme. K." rather brutally. The painting is very dexterous, and Miss Cockroft has combined crude colors daringly with a result which is striking and barbaric.

Jane Peterson's outdoor subjects are exceedingly clever and Harriett Bowdoin contributes sunny pictures with flowers. Alethea Platt's "Resting Awhile," an interior with an old lady seated in a rocker, is one of the most sympathetic canvases from her brush, and there is a real little girl, portrayed by Josephine Lewis in a sensitive way. Miss Lewis' portraits of children are notably sincere and delightful. There is a large and interesting portrait of Batelo Robino—a dancer by Della Shull—vigorously attacked and most convincing.

Hilda Belcher's little watercolor, "The Velvet Shoe," shows a blonde young girl in a black gown, with a few sprays of lilies of the valley at her breast, seated by an open fireplace, contemplating the toe of her velvet slipper. The medium is handled with great skill and the girl who is pictured is quite unconscious and unposed.

A little canvas called "A Still Cold Night," by Marian G. Traver, has something subtle about it. There is an "invited" pastel portrait by Mrs. Albert Herter. Lydia Field Emmet is represented by a charming figure of a little blond girl and Jennie Browncombe shows a small picture.

The sculptures are exceptionally pleasing. Edith Woodman Burrough's "Youth" is among them and Jane Poupelet shows a charming nude as well as the hen, cat and little head which were at the Academy. Olga P. Muller and Janet Scudder are represented, and among the smaller pieces one notices a delightful little table fountain—a baby holding a duck—by Laura Gardin. Bernice Langton's "Hecate," a sensitive bit of modeling and an interesting portrait study of a man by E. S. Theobald.

The two cases of miniatures contain many good examples, including "The Butterfly" by Theodora Larsh—an exquisite interpretation of Pavlova. The artist has pictured her in ballet costume full length figure and the ineffable grace and charm of color are noteworthy. Miss Larsh's semi-nude is also most artistic, and Elsie Dodge Pattee shows "Chinese Beads"—a portrait arrangement—charming in color and feeling. The work of Alice P. T. DeHaas has charm and among the other notable examples is Lucia Fairchild Fuller's "Lady in Old Chinese Coat." There are 446 exhibits in all.

Decorative Art Exhibition.

The Society of Friends of Young Artists, which donated cash prizes to the amount of $700 within the past year at three different exhibitions, by painters, sculptors, and architects, is planning a competition in decorative art for which substantial rewards will be offered. Within a fortnight Mrs. Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney will announce the theme of the competition from the studio of C. S. Pietro, 630 Fifth Ave. The exhibition will open April 15 in Mrs. Whitney's studio, 8 West 8th St. The first prize of $200 will be given by Mr. Otto H. Kahn, and Mrs. Whitney will offer ten prizes of $25 each.

Landscapes by William Keith.

Landscapes by the late William Keith, the veteran Cala. painter, loaned, some by the estate, and some by private collectors, are on exhibition at the New York School of Applied Design for Women, 160 Lexington Ave. to March 1. This painter, for a while followed the tradition of the Hudson River School, then influenced by the Barbizon painters, developed his own art. An example of his early, over cautious, detailed work is shown and later canvases, broader and more vigorous. The landscapes are large California scenes, and rich in color with glowing skies.

Pictures by Dewing Woodward.

Some 25 oils, pastels and chalk drawings by Dewing Woodward form an attractive exhibition at 37 Mad. Ave. where they will be shown to Feb. 18. Her treatment of nudes, in the open, and of trees and flowers, suggests the expression of an emotional or spiritual mood rather than a purely optical rendering and her canvases are well lit.

"The Dragon-Fly," an oil, two nude children, sitting on the grass, watching the movements of the dragon-fly, has charm, and a study of a little girl cutting out paper dolls is delightful. Among the oils, besides nudes and decorative panels, is a head, in profile, of a lovely brunette girl, which is called "A Modern St. Cecilia." Among the decorative panels are "Maverick Folk Feast" and "La Farandole (A Harvest Fantasy)." "Fire Opal" is the best of the pastels.

Drake Memorial Show at Public Library.

The recent death of Alexander Wilson Drake is the occasion of a memorial exhibition by the Prints Division of the N. Y. Public Library, which will be on view in the Stuart gallery (room 316) from Feb. 10 until March 20. Excepting some biographical notes relating to Mr. Drake, the show consists of wood engravings by well-known masters of the art in America connected with Mr. Drake's time and activity. The exhibition is fittingly introduced by some of the earliest examples of the technique of the so-called "new school."

The exhibition forms, so to speak, a tribute to the memory of one whose influence in the field of wood engraving and book illustration was so very strong in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, while at the same time it offers a summary review of the development of a period of wood engraving in this country, which, in its finest productions, will remain a noteworthy epoch in the annals of engravings.

John Wenger at Folsom Gallery.

"Afternoon Tea" is the most charming of twenty oils by John Wenger on view at the Folsom Galleries, 396 5 Ave., to Feb. 16. The Samovar, fruit and other bits of still life are skillfully painted, but the face of the young woman at the table seems a bit too highly finished to be in tune with the more impressionistically treated surroundings. The color scheme is delicately charming. In two snow scenes inert nature is realistically depicted and there are decorative landscapes and imaginative compositions suggestive of the Arabian Nights.

Ritschel at Pratt Institute.

William Ritschel well expresses the power and movement of the sea in marines which are among his nineteen exhibits at the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, where they will remain to Feb. 28. He skillfully pictures on his canvases the varied atmospheric manifestations of nature not easy to realize. "Storm Swept Cypress, Point Lobos, California" is very impressive, and "Midnight Sun—Fishing, Norway," gives us an uncommonly interesting glimpse of something few have seen. Sunny and foggy mornings in picturesque California are shown, and the painter has noted beautiful arrangements of nature everywhere. In one canvas the East River is pictured.

Landscapes by Olson.

Some thirty little oils by Joseph Oliver Olson, a young man who has never given an exhibition before, are at the galleries of Samuel Schwartz Sons & Co., 290 5th Ave., to Feb. 15th. The painter's realization of atmospheric conditions not easy to seize is noteworthy. The brushing is vigorous and the color fresh and brilliant. Among the most interesting canvases are rainy day views with pedestrians scurrying along, reflected in the watery streets. There is a serious characterization of an old man, beach scenes, fishing boats with rippling sunlight flooded water, California pictures showing decorative eucalyptus trees, etc.

Stauffer Prints to Library.

The bequest of the late David McNeely Stauffer has enriched the already fine collection at the N. Y. Public Library by about 14,000 prints. Mr. Stauffer made a specialty of collecting American engravings, and at least one-third of the total is made up of these specimens. His book, "American Engravers on Copper and Steel," published in two volumes in 1907 by the Grolier Club is a comprehensive and authoritative work on this subject. Many of the illustrations in these volumes were taken from the collection, which is of interest and value as a record of the development of engraving on metal in the United States.

Girls' Work at Art Club.

There are some good things in a little exhibition of the work of some young women artists at the Catherine Lorillard Wolfe Art Club, in Grace Church house, Broadway and 10th. St. Hope Miller's watercolors are particularly good. She shows a delightful, fanciful illustration for "The Tailor of Gloucester" and there is pathos, as well as good drawing and skillful handling of the medium, in her East Side street scenes—a pitiful little girl, clasping her equally destitute dog to her bosom. Marian Olmstead's little oil landscapes are atmospheric and delicately colorful. Winifred Selwyn's watercolors are also good, and she shows a woman making cake, a girl standing in a doorway, an interesting little landscape in pastel, and three little outdoor oils. Marian M. Kerr shows interesting oil landscapes and Ida P. Becker's "Alabama Barn" and "Autumn Fruit"—a girl, picking grapes—are pleasing.

Art at Union League Club.

At the monthly exhibition of the Union League Club, on this week, Howard Russell Butler shows six vigorous marines and Elliott Daingerfield as many characteristic canvases; Albert Groll his five typical Arizona landscapes, including a colorful and atmospheric one portraying a sand storm. There are four examples of Richard E. Miller's characterizations of dainty femininity and five poetic landscapes by Henry W. Ranger.

Landscapes by Mygatt.

Some 36 landscapes in oil by Robertson K. Mygatt shown at the Louis Katz galleries, 103 W. 74 St. to Feb. 26, inclusive, are true to nature and charming in color. Nature's quiet moods most appeal to the artist, and the work has refinement of vision. Among the best examples are "A Tidal Stream" with tender greens, grays and yellows and a wonderful feeling of space and air. "The Danbury Road, Moonlight," an effective "arrangement" of a marsh and a clump of sunlit trees.

THE ARCHITECTURAL LEAGUE.

(By the Second Viewer.)

Those who write in the "lay" press on matters of art have never told us why the exhibitions of the Architectural League are flat and unprofitable. We have been submitting patiently to these exhibitions for years, hoping that certain fundamental ideas would find their way—somehow—into the circle of power, and that, sooner or later, a really effective and logical union of the related arts of architecture, painting, and sculpture would find demonstration. But, in despairing moments, one never would have supposed that solution lay in the magic of blue gauze which now tempers the clear light of the Vanderbilt Gallery.

The present exhibition has the same basic fault that was felt in former years—a lack of true architectural sense in the selection and arrangement of exhibits. Instead of harmony, cohesion, and largeness in effect, we have confusion, fragmentariness and littleness. Diversity is a rampant presence. One does not object to diversity, indeed one demands it, but it must be controlled; it must serve a large plan. Of the individual exhibits, there are in truth several notable features. The sculpture of Herbert Adams, even in the photographic representation made here, is distinguished, the heads of young women (including a comparatively unfamiliar one of Julia Marlowe) being especially attractive. Standing apart also is the collaborative model for a Music Hall—the work of Kenneth Carpenter (architect), John Gregory (sculptor) and Eugene Savage (painter). Savage is rendering in watercolor of Raphael's "School of Athens" and a part of the ceiling in the Vatican "Stanza" is a much more impressive exhibit than Savage's enormous mural painting. Robert Aitken shows an effective sundial, supported by a young faun in bronze. French's large figure, "The Spirit of Life," in a gilded cast is ill-placed, being much too large for the garden composition in which it is set.

Lukeman's Strauss memorial figure of a reclining woman as pendant to the French figure better approaches the desired scale. The mural paintings, as a whole, are weak, although Stanley Arthur's Delaware Capitol decoration (Continental troops marching) and Violet Oakley's studies are "striking," if rather affectedly so.

The photographs of commercial buildings, the clever watercolor renderings of distinctly bad architecture, and the formal rendering of bits of good architecture, are, as usual, a bore. What a contradiction of endeavor is represented in the hanging of decorative pictures with others that make ridiculous the decorative intent. Whatever else may be said about the exhibitions of the League, it must be apparent to the thoughtful visitor that the main fault is an architectural fault—the lack of a cohesive and well-proportioned plan. Even the bits of sculpture placed this year outside the building are out of tune, being out of tone. Apologists for the League plead a lack of funds. Nonsense! The lack is one of thought. James Britton.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Feb. 1, 1916.

At an exhibition at the Galerie des Indépendants in the rue La Boétie, just closed, there were strikingly interesting canvases by Chalié, Alexander Altmann, G. Dorignac, Luigini, Lagar, Madeline, Maurice Chabas, and Widhopff, and statuettes of notable merit by Soudbine. One of the latter, done to order for the Tsar of Russia, is a portrait-bust of La Pavlowa, the dancer. The sculptor has translated into his work both action and emotion. Chalié combines vigor and grace in his nudes, and Altmann's snow scenes are astonishingly real. Maurice Chabas differs wholly from his famous brother in his sense and choice of color; but his individuality in this particular is very pleasing. He deals in contrasts that are warm and enlivening, but never dazzling. In Lagar is recognized a new follower of Cézanne, of whom much good is predicted. He has found a gamut of grays which are not obtrusively suggestive of other paintings. Georges Dorignac appears to be seeking renown as a disciple of Rodin in design, and thus far is impressive; but he evidently lacks a delicate power of modulation in color.

There is preparing at the Georges Bernheim gallery in the rue La Boétie an exhibition, for the benefit of French war-prisoners, which will have this rather unusual feature—that all the pictures will be of one or two sizes. In one division of the gallery there will be no canvases that exceed 4x5 inches; in the other, the size is fixed at about 16x18 inches. The frames will all be of the same model, perfectly plain and unobtrusive. There is the advantage in this, that, aside from light and the relative placing of the pictures, the beholder's judgment of them will be less subject to meretricious influence than where the artist may distract attention from defects or weaknesses of his work by the cunning choice of a frame. But this exhibition will be noteworthy for a much more important reason. The list of artists contributing to it is long, and among them are many of established fame. All of the pictures are for sale; and in the few cases where the painter does not give his work outright to the patriotic cause, he reserves for himself only a small percentage of the price. Two Americans have complied with the invitation to contribute their work, Frederic Friesseke and Walter Gay. Elizabeth Nourse will also send. Mr. Friesseke's picture, which is of the larger size, is in a pervading tone of pale blue-gray, and in execution gives at a little distance the impression of a mosaic. The subject is a girl, decidedly Oriental in type and in the general lines of her costume, who, with a pose of classic simplicity, is regarding herself in a hand-mirror.

The majority of the important French artists have already sent miniature canvases for this exhibition. From these the public may derive new notions of the relative value of their talent. Certain painters, well known by the large canvases which they have habitually shown at the regular Salons, reveal seemingly a very different kind of merit when they concentrate the strokes of the brush or the pencil on a narrowly limited area. From this point of view there is, undoubtedly, much curious satisfaction to be had in this coming show. I have already had the opportunity of seeing the contributions of Boldini, Joseph Bail, Roll, president of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts; Paul Chabas, Lucien Simon, Guillemin, Gervex, Dagnan, Bouveret, Le Sidaner, Albert Besnard, F. Flameng, Lhermitte, Raffaelli, Rochegresse, Willette, and a dozen others.

The artist colony in Paris has felt a sympathetic shock at the death in battle of Lieut. Charles Sanford Ward, son of the English sculptor, Herbert Ward, who was a companion of Stanley in Africa. Herbert Ward has resided in Paris for some years and has exhibited his sculptures of African types in the Senior Salon with considerable success.

Eric Tayne.

TOLEDO.

The February transient exhibition at the Toledo Museum include fifty oils by Sandor Landeau. A large "Gold Medal" painting, "The Prayers for Lost Seamen," is shown.

The largest collection of Joseph Pennell's work ever shown here is included in the exhibit. There are eighty etchings and lithographs, most of which were made in the large manufacturing cities of America and Europe.

Garden pictures by Mary Helen Carlisle occupy the Mohr galleries.

An unusually interesting group of eight portraits, painted by Chester C. Hayes, of members of the Toledo Tile Club has just been finished and will be used as a frieze in one of the Tile Club's rooms.

The Thomas S. Parkhurst exhibit at Lima, Ohio, includes several Parisian street scenes by L. E. Van Gorder, of Toledo.

Frank Sottke.

PROVIDENCE.

Sydney R. Burling, president of the Art Club, has a show of his paintings in the Art Club gallery. There are 100 examples, mostly recent work, and of interest and variety. Many delicate and subtle phases of nature are handled with discretion and a new and serious note is evident, showing a clear vision and a mature art.

Among the best works are "At the Old Inn Door," a successful picturing of moss-stained early English architecture and "Nightfall on the Sakonnet," a dreamy and tender picture, and "Edge of the World," a striking watercolor painted at Donegal, Ireland.

Other examples of especial interest are "After Rain," a study of sky and water at East Boothbay, Me.; "Morning of Blue Nest," a sensitive harmony in a delightful series of greys; "Down the Bay," "Once a Busy Street" and "The Hand-Organ."

At a local gallery 24 oils by Walter Francis Brown have been recently shown. Venetian scenes predominated and, as is his custom, the artist used clean crisp color and took full advantage of all the accessories of dyed sails and luxuriant flowers clambering over picturesque trellises and arbors. "St. Salute Garden—May" was a large canvas of beautiful design and "On the Lagoon" suggested a Cazin.

Several canvases painted recently at Newport, R. I., complete the exhibition, of which "Trinity Church" is easily the most important. While a few pictures incline overmuch to a surface prettiness of texture, there is still a deal of serious and sound painting and an evident and enviable ability on the

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Minneapolis Institute celebrated its first anniversary of the occupancy of the new building by a public reception to its members and friends. The current exhibition is that of the National Society of Portrait Painters shown in other cities and described in the ART NEWS when first shown in New York.

The portrait of Mr. Cadwallader Washburn by Wm. M. Chase was especially enjoyed by a large number who had known him here from infancy, and watched his art progress with enthusiasm.

The forceful portrait by Louis Betts of Mr. Chas. L. Hutchinson, president of the Chicago Art Institute, was favorably commented upon, as Mr. Hutchinson is, through frequent visits, a familiar figure here. There was also a personal interest in the portrait of Mr. Cottle by Douglas Voete, the early director of the local school.

Last year the Board of Education built a new school building, and at the request of the people in that vicinity named it the Thomas Lowry school. It stands opposite the beautiful little Audubon Park, and is a model in equipment. It will be opened on Feb. 28, the day following the anniversary of Mr. Lowry's birthday. The gift of 200 pictures, reproductions of famous paintings and sculpture, will be placed in the rooms, as had been arranged by the generosity of the late Mrs. Lowry as a memorial to her husband. Mrs. Lowry had given much thought to the selection of the pictures which should be appropriate for the age of the children of each grade, and they have been framed with great care.

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY.

Dined by S. M. Roosevelt.

Some forty members of the National Society of Portrait Painters were guests at a dinner in the Hotel Vanderbilt, last Saturday night, given by S. Montgomery Roosevelt, chairman of the executive committee.

Those present were: Cecilia Beaux, Geo. Bellows, F. W. Benson, Louis Betts, A. Borie, W. M. Chase, Ralph Clarkson, W. Cotton, B. H. Crawford, H. G. Cushing, J. de Camp, Lydia F. Emmet, Charles D. Gibson, W. Glackens, Ben Ali Haggin, V. D. Hecht, R. Henri, H. S. Hubbell, J. C. Johanson, De Witt M. Lockman, G. Luks, M. Jean McLane, R. E. Miller, Ellen E. Rand, J. G. Seyffert, W. T. Smedley, E. Speicher, Helen M. Turner, R. Vonnoh, D. Volk, J. A. Weir and I. R. Wiles.

William H. Cotton is painting a three-quarter-length seated portrait of George Barr McCutcheon, the author, at his studio, 1 W. 64 St. It promises to be a thoroughly good likeness, is interesting in arrangement, and has strong technical qualities. A recent portrait of Miss Violet Gordon-King is one of this artist's most successful works.

Philip Schmand has about completed his full-length portrait of Miss Annette West-bay. The subject wears a gown of soft, silvery green, which blends harmoniously with a warm gray background. The simple arrangement of the composition is ably handled and the result is picturesque and graceful.

Joseph Boston's exhibition at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, was prolonged a week beyond original plans, closing Feb. 5. His charming canvas, "Vanity Fair," was one of the pictures sold during the display, and others are under consideration. At his studio in Carnegie Hall he has recently completed an interesting landscape, "Indian Mountain, Ausable Lake," in which he has succeeded in combining dignity, grandeur and beauty of color.

J. Campbell Phillips recently returned to his Carnegie Hall studio from Hartsville, S. C., where he painted a three-quarter-length seated portrait of Mayor James L. Coker. The work shows spontaneity, and has good flesh tones. The artist has ably presented the gentle, kindly expression of the sitter, whose distinguished head must have been a joy to paint. Among other recent portraits are the two sons of Mr. Henry Wineberg.

Henry Mosler, who has quite recovered from his recent accident, has resumed work at his Carnegie Hall studio. He is at work upon a new canvas, "The Miser," which is typically good in color and interesting in composition.

At his studio, 230 Fifth Ave., Charles F. Naegele is completing a series of decorations for the Watertown, N. Y., public library. At present he is at work upon six panels. These include views of old Watertown, of historical interest, and show the city at about 1860. The scenes are thoroughly American, accurately composed from photographs of the period. Portraits of men great in the country's history, who made Watertown their headquarters during the war of 1812, will also be part of the decoration of the library. They will include President Madison, Governor Tompkins, General Dearborn, General Pike, and Commodore Woolsey. Mrs. Kate Vaughan, wife of Captain Vaughan, will also be commemorated. A recent fine portrait of Mrs. William Gow, and one of Mrs. Willis Reese, painted this winter, may still be seen at Naegele's studio.

Henry Golden Dearth has recently completed an unusually fine portrait of Miss Blair, daughter of Mrs. Chauncey Blair, of Chicago. It is so high in key as to touch, at times, the top-notch point in the color scale. But so well balanced are the contrasting tones that the strength of a master hand is revealed. With light touches the artist appears to have gone over the delicate flesh tints in the youthful face, and portrayed with deftness their subtle lights and shadows. The composition is an example of his usual good taste. His portrait of his daughter Nina is well hung in the Metropolitan Museum.

Mr. Samuel O. Buckner, President of the Milwaukee Art Society, has purchased C. Arnold Slade's "Portrait of a Normandy Fisherman" and "Peasant Woman." Mrs. Ferguson, of Springfield, Ill., has bought the artist's canvas, "Les Nouvelles," which was shown at the Springfield exhibition.

CLEVELAND.

The most thoroughly satisfying of the several "one man" picture shows, recently held here or still on, is that of marines shown by Paul Dougherty at the Gage Gallery. Several of his Cornish coast pictures were among these, with others of the Maine and Mass. coasts, no less virile. Dougherty plans to do his next work on the Cala coast and then to invade Howard Russell Butler's and William Ritschel's territory.

A joint exhibition of oils by Henry W. Ranger and F. Ballard Williams, shown for a fortnight at the Gage Gallery has been enjoyed by art lovers. The latter showed several landscapes, of which "A Vermont Hillside" was perhaps the best, while his "Sylvan Festival," "Fete by the Lake" and other canvases, in which beautiful women are holding festival under the trees, had the charm of a Fragonard or Monticelli with more than a suggestion of the glowing color of the latter. Ranger showed wood interiors, "Noank" in moonlight and at sunrise, and a small "San Juan, Porto Rico." Etchings by Philip Little of Salem, Mass., and some delightfully spontaneous child portraits in watercolor by Miss Elinor M. Barnard of London, have been other special attractions at this gallery.

At the Korner & Wood Gallery representative watercolors by the late F. Hopkinson Smith have been shown, following an exhibition by Orville Peets, local painter and etcher.

In the office will hang a large photograph of the Lowry Memorial by Karl Bitter.

As a tribute to the memory of John S. Bradstreet the friends and members of the Fine Arts Society, presented to the Art Institute a bronze relief portrait, unveiled on Jan. 22. Mr. Bradstreet was one of the founders of the society and a director until his death in 1914. The relief portrait is placed at the entrance to the beautiful Bradstreet room at the Institute. The work is by Paul Fjelde, a Chicago sculptor. Lorado Taft, in whose studio Mr. Fjelde has been working, compares its technical excellence to the work of St. Gaudens and an example of relief portraiture of high rank. The funds were secured by voluntary subscriptions.

FORT WORTH (TEXAS).

The seventh annual exhibition of selected paintings is now on at the Museum. The exhibition was assembled for the Texas circuit, consisting of Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio, and Galveston, by the Federation of Arts. In addition to the 45 paintings by American artists, there are five paintings by English, French and German artists. Gallery talks on the exhibition are given by the artists of the city on Thursdays and Saturdays. The Fort Worth Art Association has offered prizes for the best written estimate of the exhibition or any single picture by the pupils of the grammar and secondary schools.

The following artists are represented in the exhibition: C. W. Ashley, O. E. Berninghaus, M. P. Bewley, L. Blumenschein, F. S. Bredin, G. E. Browne, Mrs. L. U. Brumback, Mrs. M. B. Bullard, E. Carlsen, I. F. Carlson, F. S. Chase, C. C. Cooper, F. I. Couse, C. C. Curran, C. H. Davis, I. Dill, E. Dufner, W. Dunton, C. W. Eaton,

Yamanaka Sale $96,696.

The sale of the Yamanaka coll'n, at the American Art Galleries, on Monday aft. and Tuesday aft. and eve., resulted in $96,696. The first session brought $70,097.50, the second $8,443.50, and the third $18,155. The highest price of the sale was the $4,100 paid, at the first session, by W. W. Scaman, agt., for a large Fei-tsu tripod censer, of mottled emerald green and translucent gray jade. Mr. Edward I. Farmer paid $3,800 for the huge Fu lions in cloisonné, $2,400 for a Fei-ts-ui jade vase, $1,570 for a white jade censer, $1,300 for a jade altar, $1,000 for a jade Phoenix vase, $750 for a Fei-ts-ui ornament of jade and $575 for an altar set of white jade. To Mr. S. P. Avery fell, at $2,600, the cloisonné and gilt dog kennel.

Among the purchases of Otto Bernet, agt., were a Fei-ts-ui incense burner at $2,800, a rock crystal vase $2,100, another $1,090, a pair of white jade incense burners $800, an Aubergine jardiniere $775, jade peonies in a lacquer jardiniere $725, an ivory bird with standard $700, a Cochon China fish bowl $625, an aubergine jardiniere and a butterfly fish bowl, both $575, and a jade and amethyst peach tree $510. W. W. Scaman, agt., gave $1,400 for a pair of magnolia trees in jardiniere of lapis and gilt, and $850 for peonies in a gold lacquered jardiniere. Mr. Edward Getz gave $880 for a tall jade vase; Col. Ruppert $700 for a green jade vase; Mr. C. B. Field $600 for another; Mrs. J. J. Goodwin $550 for a rock crystal vase; Mr. E. Brinkerhoff $530 for a jade censer; Mr. James L. Breeze $525 for a black lacquer bird cage, and Mr. C. E. Chapman the same amount for another.

To Miss Lorenz, agent, went for $850, a tortoise shell bird cage, and for $500 an ivory one. Mr. H. J. Fosdick gave $850 for a tortoise shell specimen.

At the second session Mr. Bernet, agent, paid $1,100 for a reclining Buddha and $250 for an early Korean painting. Mrs. W. Crocker gave $450 for a screen by Tasoku; $340 for noe by Mitsuyoshi, and $250 for another by Yeitoku. Mrs. Gaines gave $390 for a Korean screen, and Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker $340 for a statue of Crown Prince Shotoku. Mr. H. J. Foster secured for $525 a Buddha. Mr. C. Tinker paid $450 for a T'ang period stonehead, and Mr. Seaman, agent, $425 for a memorial group. Miss Lorenz, agent, gave $100 for a Korean painting, and Mr. L. G. Gray $500 for a screen by Munessadt.

Stevensons Letters Sale.

The autograph letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, previous to the sale on the afternoons of Wed. and Thurs. next, comprise 248 lots. They begin with the scrawls of babyhood and run on till the year of Stevenson's death in Samoa, 1896. With one or two exceptions, all the letters were written to the novelist's parents.

Everything of any interest that Stevenson wrote his parents was carefully treasured by his mother, so that this collection is of an unusual character, the letters being in intimate and personal, with details of Stevenson's literary work. This is the last great Stevenson sale by members of the family, and probably the last great sale of Stevensoniana that will ever be held, for the material is now widely scattered to all parts of the globe.

Riviere Bindings Sale.

The finest collection of bindings exhibited in this country since the dispersal of the Hoe library, is now on view at the Anderson Galleries, to be sold next Friday evening. The books come from the famous London binders, Robert Riviere & Son, and are sent for sale because of war conditions in Enroland. Many jeweled and miniature bindings are in the sale, and some wonderful examples of work in leather have attracted wide attention. Many of the books are rare and valuable in themselves. The first edition of Keats's Endymion, the first issue of the first edition of the Vicar of Wakefield, the first folio edition of the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher, a Chaucer of 1561 and a superb copy of the Canterbury Tales, manuscripts by Swinburne, original illustrations by Thackeray and Tenniel, and collected sets of the first editions of famous authors are among the treasures.

Coins Sold at Anderson's.

At a sale of coins, Feb. 4, at the Anderson Galleries, $1,593.90 was realized. A drachem of Tarentum brought $77.50 and a shekel, A. D. 66-67, $54, both from Mr. W. Raymond.

Important Rug Sale at Silo's.

There will be sold at Silo's Fifth Avenue Auction Rooms, N. W. Cor. 45 St. and Fifth Ave., on afternoons from Feb. 15 to 19, at 3 P. M., a notable collection, made by the Boyajian Bros., of Oriental rugs.

An interesting item of this collection is a fragment measuring 12x3 ft. of a XVI century Ispahan rug most beautiful in color and design. The other part of this same rug was sold by the late Stanford White for $30,000.

At the sale of the Theodore B. Starr Collection at the Anderson Galleries on Monday the total was $7,377.25, on Tuesday $9,513, making grand total of $16,890.75. Mr. S. A. Strauss gave $285 for a clock set with the figures of Cupid and Psyche. The Gorham Co. paid $180 for a bronze buffalo by H. M. Shady and $160 for a bronze group by Forestier. A Minton vase by Solon brought $550.

Mrs. John O. Blanchard's Engravings.

It is announced that the American Art Association will sell, early in April, the collection of Japanese color prints formed by Mrs. John O. Blanchard and her late husband, during several years' residence in Japan. It is said that the collection, numbering nearly 1,000 impressions, is superior to any that has been offered for sale in this country. It includes works by Harunobu, Koryusai, Shunsho, Kiyonaga, Eishi, Utamaro, Toyokuni, Shigenaga, Eizan, Hokusai, and Hiroshige.

707 FIFTH AVE. at 55th Street NEW YORK

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

Greene Americana Sale.

At a sale of Americana, owned by the estate of the late E. W. Greene and others, at the American Art Galleries, on Feb. 3, a collection of copies of letters by Gen. Nat'l Greene, Mr. Greene's father, 2,438 in all, brought $1,660, from Mr. Geo. D. Smith, Jas. F. Drake, Inc., paid $187 for a letter from Emerson, to the Second Church, $101 for Freneau's "Village Merchant" and $46 for W. L. Loring's Obituary of Mme. Jumel.

On Feb. 4, Mr. Drake gave $680 for an author's presentation copy of the first and privately printed edition of Longfellow's translation of the "Divine Comedy." Chas. Scribner's Sons secured for $270, McKenney and Hall's "History of the Indian Tribes of North America," in the original wrappers. Mrs. W. S. Peck paid $165 for a good impression of the first state of Visscher's early map of N. Y. City. Mr. Smith gave $145 for Green's mezzotint of Trumbull's full length Washington, second state with margins. For Harriot's "Virginia," Frankfort, 1590, he paid $82.50. Mr. Swann, agt., bought for $200, an authors presentation copy of "The Writings of Longfellow." Mr. Max Williams gave $130 for Greene's mezzotint of Copley's "Henry Laurens." The total of the session was $4,992, and of the sale, $9,185.50.

BLAKESLEE STOCK SALE.

Following the dispersal of the Catholina Lambert pictures next week, at a four-evening sale in the Plaza Ballroom, there will be a week's lull, during which picture lovers and collectors can take breath and prepare for the five nights' auction of the remainder of the stock of pictures left by the late Theron J. Blakeslee—some 464 in all—which will be placed on exhibition at the American Art Galleries on Wed., March 1, and will be sold on the five successive evenings of March 6-10 next. The first evening sale will be held in the Plaza Ballroom, and the sales of the four succeeding evenings at the American Art Galleries.

The catalog, advance copies of which are already in circulation, has been compiled by the same Mr. Roberts of London, who compiled the Lambert catalog and that of the Blakeslee sale last year.

THE BALL OF THE GODS.

This remarkable artistic event, which took place at the Hotel Astor, Feb. 11, after last week's Art News had gone to press, more than surpassed, as a spectacle, the Venetian Fete, given by the same organizers, the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, in the same place, Feb. 21, 1914. Again, as two years ago, the daily newspapers of New York, failed to give their readers, in any way an adequate story of the really wonderful affair, although this year they had more excuse for this failure, as the event was far larger—over 3,000 people, all in costumes typifying the Mythological and prehistoric, and the early periods of Hindoostan, Egypt and Greece were present—and the Pageant itself was given on a far larger stage and with a wealth of detail impossible to describe. Then, too, the costumes were more disguising to their wearers than at the Venetian Fete, and so the social side of the affair was also difficult to chronicle.

The so-called ball was this year not really a ball, but a beautiful and superb series of stage pictures—entitled a Pageant—and given on not only the largest scale of any of the kind ever presented in New York and with the most prominent modish men and women of New York as participants, but with so careful and close a study of historical detail as to costumes, processions, lighting color, etc., as to make it a unique artistic spectacle. Nothing of the kind, in scope and detail, has ever been given or attempted in any country, and while the officers and members of the Beaux Arts Architects Society, and notably Messrs. Lloyd Warren and Howard Greenley are to be warmly congratulated on the great success of their efforts and labors, it is doubtful whether the Society will ever again attempt such an affair. For despite all efforts to confine the attendance to architects, artists and to those related to the arts, through social or other interests, the anticipatory excitement regarding the event, brought in too many people; and, although every effort was made to keep out the element of curiosity-seekers who would not go to the trouble and expense of proper costumes, there was too much leniency shown after the pageant, in admitting persons with only a slight suggestion of period costumes, and quite a number of men and women who were only in formal evening dress.

The Pageant Itself.

The pageant, which was given on a stage that ran the whole length of the great ballroom, and thus bisected it, and diminished the space for dancing—although both the smaller ballrooms on the 44th and 45th sides of the hotel were this year requisitioned—began at 11:15 P. M. and lasted until after 1 A. M., a little too long a time. It was, however, so well managed on the whole, and the effects of lighting and color were so beautiful, that even the hundreds of the audience, who were obliged to stand, or were crowded into narrow galleries and the few boxes around the sides of the room, did not tire as much as might have been expected. The most beautiful and artistic of the periods presented was the Egyptian, although in their way the early Hindu and the later Greek periods were equally remarkable.

The detailed program has been so fully given, as well as the names and costumes of the chief participants in the pageant, that it is unnecessary to repeat them here. Suffice it to say that the "Ball of the Gods" will be recorded in the annals of New York history as perhaps the most remarkable artistic, if not social, event of the kind that has ever taken place here.

ROOSEVELTS IN LUXEMBOURG.

A Paris cable, under date of Feb. 11, announces that a portrait of former President Theodore Roosevelt, now on a West Indian trip, painted and offered to France by his cousin, Samuel Montgomery Roosevelt, has been accepted by Albert Dalimier, Under Secretary of State for Fine Arts, and will be placed in the galleries of the Luxembourg. Colonel Roosevelt is shown in hunting costume.

MEMORIAL TO MR. MORGAN.

Paul Manship has received a commission from the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum to execute a sculptured memorial there to the late J. Pierpont Morgan who did so much for that institution. It will take probably the form of a bronze scroll bearing an inscription and framed with figures and other decorations illustrating the different kinds of art in which Mr. Morgan was interested.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Ledyard Towle are taking a little vacation out of town.

WIDENER BUYS PRINT COLLN

Announcement is made of the sale to Jos. E. Widener of Phila. of the great Clotophle coll'n of XVIII cent. French prints which is only surpassed by that of Baron Edmond de Rothschild, which it is understood he intends to present to the French Inst. The coll'n was purchased by Thos. Agnew & Sons of London, from the son of collector. It includes many rare and unique examples. Among the artists represented are Fragonard, Moreau le Jeune, Aubin, Lavrience, Janinet, Boilly, Ducourt, Baudouin, De Launey and Tauna.

STORY'S LINCOLN FOR NATION

An anonymous donor has offered G. Story's portrait of Lincoln, now shown Knoedler & Co.'s to the Nat'l Gallery Washington. It is an excellent work painted from his studies from life, by emeritus curator of paintings of the Metropolitan Museum.

De Witt Parshall has gone to Mia Florida, for three weeks.

PROTESTS CRITIC'S OUSTING.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Ass'n of American Painters and Sculptors held on Feb. 9, the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"WHEREAS the Architectural League of New York, through its press agent, William Laurel Harris, excluded Charles H. Caffin, the properly accredited critic of a metropolitan journal from the press view of its present exhibition, and

"WHEREAS the reason given by the said Harris, was the attitude taken by Mr. Caffin, as a critic, in his review of the last show, held by the League, and

"WHEREAS from this absurd pretext put forward by Harris was that the League was a private club, and

"WHEREAS the libel laws of this State are a sufficient protection to any artist who considers himself injured by unjust or injurious criticism, therefore be it

"RESOLVED that this Board of the Association of American Painters and Sculptors condemns the introduction of the methods of certain theatrical managers into the field of the Fine Arts and urges all artists and art bodies to support Mr. Caffin against this combination in restraint of thought and freedom of speech."

J. MOWBRAY CLARKE, Secretary.

A reception was given to Mr. Timothy Cole at the National Arts Club Wednesday night.

GREAT ART PROTEST.

The Federation of Arts, the Institute of Architects and the American Civic Association, have decided to make a joint appeal to the public against the erection of the Central Light and Heating Plant on the Mall near the Lincoln monument in Washington

COUNTESS MAKES APPEAL.

The Countess Roncogne of Brussels and Paris, herself a young Frenchwoman married to a Belgian, who is now "interned" in Germany—gave an interesting address at the new and handsome Esler Studios, 47 East 49 St., Tuesday afternoon on the work of the "Appui des Belges"—the French Society, organized for Belgian relief, and told of her thrilling and moving personal experiences near the western front of battle, in bringing aid and supplies to the French and Belgian soldiers in the trenches. She spoke again on Friday afternoon on the same subjects at the Colony Club.

The group exhibition of paintings and sculptures which opened at the MacDowell Club, Feb. 3, has been extended to Feb. 27.

CHICAGO ARTISTS SHOW.

It has become an old habit to declare the annual exhibition of "Works by artists of Chicago and vicinity," as having "greatly progressed," each succeeding year. Chicago expects its artists to grow in their art. The annual show, now installed in the Art Institute, is really this year an improvement on the nineteen previous shows. Caustic critics, connoisseurs, art lovers and the visiting crowd are unanimous in this verdict. There is an unusual number of figure pieces, when five years ago, a really appealing figure piece was a surprise, and even good portraits were rare. This show of 321 paintings and 86 sculptures, demonstrates that local artists are conforming to the higher standard of National art.

Lawton Parker has fine quality in his "Summer Girls." Carl R. Kraft and Rudolph F. Ingerle show as a team of "Ozark painters," whose work has inspiration and charm. Pauline Palmer is represented by six canvases, among which are "New Model," "The Sketch Class," and "Street Scene, Provincetown."

Numerous Cala. Landscapes.

Frank C. Peyraud has five good landscapes of the Berkshire Hills country; and Elizabeth Peyraud scores with Cala. scenes: "The Mermaid, Laguna Beach," "Apricot Pitting, Southern Cala." and others. John F. Stacey's Cala. canvases, "On Canyon River," "Beach Road, Belvedere," and "Golden Hills, Cala.," are among the best landscapes he has painted and William Wendt's fine "San Gabriel Valley," has as a running mate of Cala. scenery, Stacey's charming landscapes. Adam E. Albright shows his skill in painting children in native environment, in seven canvases; and in the landscapes: "Launching the Boat," "Midstream," "In the Clearing" and "A Summer Dream."

Other Notable Works.

Margaret Baker, in "Early Autumn"; George Weisenberg, in "San Gabriel Valley"; Emilie S. Weinberg in "Court of the Universe"; Gordon Saint Claire in "A Decoration, November"; Edgar A. Rupprecht in "On the Hillside"; F. de Forest Schook in "Sunday Morning"; Flora I. Schoenfeld in "On the Beach"; Ernest Roehlk in "The Concert Master"; Jacob Richard in "End of Day"; A. H. Schmidt in "A Gray Day"; J. Allen St. John in "Canal in Ghent"; Marie E. Blanke in "September Afternoon" and Cornelius Botke in "Winter Noon" show good examples.

Frederic M. Grant's "Venetian Morning"; Marie Buckley's "Changing Year," and "Across the Fields"; Eugenia F. Glaman's "Young Cattle near Wood" and "Salt Marsh, Old Lyme"; Elizabeth T. Holsman's "Vacation Days"; Robert W. Grafton's "Katwijk Church"; Josephine L. Reichmann's "Autumn, Flossmore, Ill."; J. Jeffrey Grant's "Willows" and "Siren's Pool"; Edward J. Holslag's "Cala. Rocks"; Irma Kohn's "Mission at Carmel," and two Monterey pictures; Albert H. Krehbiel's "School House in Clearing"; Minnie C. Neebe's "Ghetto"; Allen E. Philbrick's "Flower Shop"; Walter Sargent's "Opalescent Morning" and "After Spring Rains"; Albert H. Ullrich's "Canal in Bruges"; Ada Shulz's "Picture Book"; Ernest P. Thurn's "Girl in White"; Roberta F. Warren's "Lantern Light," are all exceptionally good.

Many Good Watercolors.

A. F. Kienminger again demonstrates his skill in impressionistic painting, and Edgar Payne's is one of a group of his Cala. compositions. Jessie A. Botke presents an assemblage of unique and daintily toned watercolors, "White Peacocks," "Bo-Peep" and "Firefly." Frederick Fursmann's big painting, "In the Shade," is a typical work. Ada Gilmore is exemplified in a group of watercolors, "On a Balcony" and "By the Sea," leading. Lucie Hartrath has paintings on the line, "Sunshine Alley" and "Summer" in her best moods. Louis O. Griffith was never more sincere than in his group of four oils, including "Sunlit Valley" and "Spring Green." Oskar Gross gives a new note of contrasting color in "Cherries." Victor Higgins has six decorative canvases of New Mexico scenery and native types. Alfred Jansson's "Michigan Rocks," is virile and his "Snow and Frost" depicts the rigors of winter. F. C. Bartlett was never more poetic than in his "Gulls," and the brushwork in "Lake Geneva" and "Autumn Afternoon," is excellent. Gustave Baumann's watercolor, "Grannie's Garden," is really beautiful.

Other good works must be left to another week for notice.

H. Eiffa Webster.

PROVIDENCE.

On Feb. 8 the Providence Water Color Club opened its twentieth annual exhibition at the Providence Art Club. Thirty members are represented by 101 paintings. It is, as always, a conservative showing for the most part, consisting of landscapes and still lifes with a few excellent portrait drawings and several groups of clever etchings.

H. Anthony Dyer is represented by four important offerings: "The Blue Blind," "Russet Autumn," "In the Haze of Morning," and "A Maytime Mist." H. Cyrus Farnum has two African views, "Algiers" and "Biskra." Angela O'Leary's "On the Quay, Dinan, France," has charm. Stephen Macomber's large pastel, "Winter" is a delicate presentation of the water front. Another interesting work is Sydney R. Burleigh's "Rising Mist" and "Nightfall." George W. Whitaker sends "At Westport Harbor," Eliza D. Gardiner, clever studies of children; Frank C. Mathewson, "The Pergola," a decorative panel and Charles Biesel, "Windy Day, Newport Beach." Mabel M. Woodward and Gertrude P. Cady each have an attractive group of crisply painted pictures, and others who show excellent work are Maude R. Fenner, Elizabeth Spalding, Clara Maxfield Arnold, Stacy Tolman, Arthur W. Heintzelman, Earl R. Davis, Percy F. Albee, and Sophia L. Pitman. By invitation, a group of English views of cottages and fields painted by the late W. Staples Drown are shown. At the opening reception three sales were made, "Yellow Roses" by Clara Maxfield Arnold, "Warren River" by Gertrude P. Cady, and "A Nocturne" by Percy F. Albee.

At the R. I. School of Design there are paintings by the "Contemporary Group." This collection contains canvases which amuse, others which offend, and several which, to an intelligent observer, give pleasure. The show, as a whole, will well repay a careful study. Karl Anderson shows "Wistaria" and "Malissa—My Fair Lady." Harry Berlin has "Over the Bar" and D. Putnam Bunley, "Dahlias." Ernest Lawson has two serious canvases and Charles Reifel, two landscapes.

Allen Tucker, in his portrait of "Miss Olga Mandell, No. 2," has achieved, with simplest technique, a head of haunting, elusive charm, and harmony of color. This canvas, as a selection for the permanent collection of the R. I. School of Design, would be a graceful acknowledgement on the part of the school of the newer manner of painting, and, in this instance, such acknowledgement could be made at no sacrifice of artistic dignity.

W. Alden Brown.

ROCHESTER.

The February exhibition at the Memorial Art Gallery consists of a collection of landscapes by Ben Foster, one of winter scenes by Walter L. Palmer, and a group of recent canvases by five New York artists. To the last-named group Jonas Lie contributes five pictures, of which the most notable is a daring color arrangement called "To Meet the Day." Edward Pott-hast shows a harbor scene full of color, and several of his famous little beach scenes, Albert Groll two Cape Cod subjects in his most recent manner, and George Elmer Browne only one canvas, but an important one—"Winter Loggers"—in his characteristic style.

Luis Mora contributes five examples, of which four are Spanish figure types, and one called "Field Flowers," two little fair-haired, blue-eyed girls arranging wild flowers in a silver pitcher—a beautiful arrangement of blues, lavenders, and warm and cool grays. The exhibition will continue throughout February.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Portraits by Wilhelm Funk.

Wilhelm Funk, as his name implies, is of German nationality, although long resident here—and this presumably accounts for his temerity in including, and prominently, in his exhibition of some 15 portraits, most of them recent ones, now on at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave.—the presentments of the not over popular (among Americans) Count von Bernstorff—the German Ambassador, the Landgrave of Hesse, German Privy Councillor Lorenz Adlon and Baroness von Joanne.

These portraits, despite their cleverness of technique and fine color and expression, it would have been better, it would seem, to have omitted from the present display at this time—or to have reserved for exhibition by themselves, in the more sympathetic Germanized cities of Milwaukee, and possibly Cincinnati and St. Louis.

But the presentment of unpopular public or private personages has nothing to do with a painter's art, and is simply a question of tact and taste. The artist who has long since achieved deserved reputation as a brilliant and forceful portraitist proves in the present display that his able brush has not lost its force, versatility or cleverness during his recent two or three years' absence abroad. There is less of the carelessness of drawing, which marred his work in former years, and he would seem to be at the zenith of his powers. Take, for example, the really stunning self portrait, in which he has depicted himself—a most faithful likeness—standing, palette in hand before his easel, his figure and face slightly turned to the front of the canvas, and smoking the inevitable cigarette. The faithfulness of pose and expression, and the strong fine brushwork and rich truthful color, combine to make this a remarkable work.

Excellent, and also charming in its translation of handsome femininity, is the three-quarter length seated portrait of Mrs. Stilson Hutchins and, again, truthful and virile is the standing presentment of Mr. John Wyllys of Toledo. The large group portrait of the three Misses Tweedy, seen before, is as attractive as ever—a modern Gainsborough in composition and handling.

Lotos Club Artist's Annual Display.

The annual exhibition of paintings by artist members of the Lotos Club is on at the club galleries. A characterization of Mark Twain by Carroll Beckwith is among the most interesting pictures. Irving Wiles' portrait of a man is somewhat Academic for him, and Howard Hildebrandt's portrait of a little girl has much quality.

Landscapes predominate and among the most noteworthy are "Fifth Ave. in Winter," by C. Guy Wiggins, a rural snow scene by Leonard Ochtman, a nocturne by Albert P. Lucas, and characteristic examples of Bruce Crane, J. Francis Murphy, Wm. Derrick, Frank A. Bicknell and De Witt Parshall. Cullen Yates sends an autumn scene with brilliant foliage, against deep blue mountains. Hugo Ballin contributes a decidedly academic composition. Two of Henry Wolfe's always fine wood engravings are shown—one after Gilbert Stuart's George Washington and the other after Cecilia Beaux's "Reverie."

Three landscape painters of talent, G. Glenn Newell, Robert H. Nisbet and Arthur J. E. Powell, are exhibiting groups of their works at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., to Feb. 26. Mr. Powell, besides two very artistic gray winter views on the River Loing, at Moret and St. Mammies, sends also a winter scene at "Low Tide, Bronx River," which is also capital. Half a dozen scenes in Glacier National Park include a largely and well handled view of Grinnell Lake and Glacier.

Mr. Newell's contributions include the large and effective canvases "The Old Red Mill" and "The Old Gray Mill." Figures are introduced with success in "Les Habitants de Beaupré."

A strikingly true view across a rolling country, in "Winter's Harvest Time," is one of the best of Mr. Nisbet's contributions. "From Hill to Hill" is an admirable study in contrasted greens. Excellent is "The Awakening of the Year" and tender in sentiment and effect are "A Night in June" and "Gray Morning."

Some Color Monotypes.

Goupil & Co., at 58 W. 45 St., are showing to Feb. 29, a number of color monotypes by a group of four painters, who have worked together, and yet each produced a remarkable individual series. David W. Humphrey, charms with nudes in landscapes; Harry K. Smith presents largely handled views, in which the nudes in the main are but incidental; Gustave Verbeek produces fine color effects, while S. Harkness McCrea combines strength with simplicity.

Works by Paul Manship.

A strong sculptor, turning from the Assyrian, to the early Chinese and then to the early Roman and the Renaissance, for his inspiration is Paul Manship, who is now displaying 44 of his works at the galleries of the Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., to Mar. 8. He has had a success, both artistic and financial, which is well deserved. His virtuosity is unquestioned and his assimilative powers are great.

In the present display figures a souvenir of his three years residence at the American Academy in Rome, in the shape of a reproduction of the quite remarkable Infant Hercules Fountain which stands in the courtyard there. Naively charming is the high relief framed portrait in the Della Robbia vein of the artist's daughter at the age of three weeks. A recent single figure sun dial, in gilt bronze, is on the contrary quite in the early Chinese manner. A large plaster group of much distinction shows a dancer with two gazelles. "Briseis" is an admirable nude. Notable groups are the "Centaur and Dryad" that belongs to the Metropolitan Museum, and the "Satyr and Sleeping Nymph."

There is a little "Christ Crucified," in ivory apparently, and a "Portrait Statuette" of a woman, which is modern, but with a suggestion of the antique. Various medals and reliefs appear and a "Flight of Night" statuette is remarkable for its expression of motion. The strength of it all is very impressive and even marked with a certain ferocity, at times, which does not make for beauty.

Pen and Brush Club Members' Show.

At the Pen and Brush Club, 132 East 19 St., some interesting paintings and sculptures by women members are on view. A picture of a Japanese lady by Helen Watson Phelps has quaint charm. Maud Mason shows a good still life with pottery, oranges, grapes and jade beads against flowered drapery. Charlotte Coman an atmospheric little farm scene and Jane Peterson a little girl in white amid tiger lilies. Harriett Bowdoin, H. S. Phillips, Gertrude Fosdick and many others are represented. A bronzed plaster has relief portrait of Governor Whitman by Helen Sahler is among the sculptures.

Wood Gaylor, a young man who has not exhibited before, shows some exceedingly interesting work at the Thumb Box Gallery, 24 East 49 St. to Feb. 19. Most of the arrangements are carved on wood panels and painted. Some of them are exceptionally good in color and design and symbolic in subject. The artist presents his own interpretation of Adam and Eve, which is certainly an original one, and utilizes humans for designs in an amazing way. He shows a group of nude figures, expressing labor—one praying, one groping blindly, one despairing one, irresponsible and care free, and another stalwart figure is going straight ahead, paying no attention to any one. Some red nudes, against black, are effective, and "Charon" and "The Portress of Hell Gate" are interesting patterns. The artist designs and makes his own frames which are unique.

Macomber Pictures at Youngstown.

The third of six important exhibitions, planned by the Mahoning Institute, of Youngstown, Ohio, for the winter and spring, is now on in the Assembly Room of the Reuben McMillan Free Library, closing Feb. 20. The collection of 41 paintings by the late Mary M. Macomber and by Paul Dougherty, Chas. H. Davis and Daniel Garber is shown in Youngstown, through the courtesy of the R. C. and N. M. Vose Galleries, of Boston.

The exhibition takes on added interest through the recent death of Miss Macomber, one of the most gifted of the present generation of American artists and one of the first who sought to express her own idealism through color and design. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus has written to the President of the Mahoning Institute this deserved tribute: "I think Miss Macomber will have a very important place in American art history when our eyes are equal to the high and beautiful demand made upon them by her really great pictures."

There are 28 examples of Miss Macomber's work in the present Vose exhibition, the largest number ever assembled, among them "The Flower of Yesterday," "Mona Rosa, the Modern Jaconde," "Illusions," "Love's Lament," "Faith, Hope and Love," "Little Sister," etc.

Dougherty is represented by 13 fine examples typical marines and coast scenes, among the more important, "The Cornish Coast," "Morning after Storm," "Moonlit Surf," "Waning Light," and "An Equinoctial Gale." "The Alps" is a characteristic mountain scene.

Davis has nine pictures, all typical. "Spring Pastoral," "June Morning" and "Joyous Autumn" are included.

Garber shows four examples of his recent work.

The sculpture of Mme. Marie Apel, a young English sculptor who came here in 1914, shown in connection with the group of miniatures by members of the Am. Soc. of Min. Painters at the Woman's University Club (2 to 6 o'clock, 106 E. 52 St., comprises a number of portrait busts and figures executed in this country and in England. The portraits include those of Mrs. Butler Williamson (lent by Mrs. Williamson), Master Gordon Taylor (lent by Peter Campbell, Esq.), Mr. E. A. Ide, London; Carlue, daughter of Mr. Oscar Egerton Stevens; "Tinker," daughter of Mr. Reginald Thomson; Charles Keeler, Basil Gill (as Duke of Buckingham in "Henry VIII"), Priscilla, Countess Annesley; Miss Enid Burton, Mlle. Eva von Simonowicz, Munich; Master John Jacob Astor (lent by Mrs. Astor), James Britton, and of Mlle. Bronowa of Mlle. Pavlowa's Co.

The figures include a "Penelope," the group "Day and Night," a study for a "Fountain Figure," three small statuettes "Indolence," "Meditation," and "The Indian Maid," and an ornamental door knocker in bronze. Certain of these works were seen at the recent "Eclectic" exhibition at the Folsom Gallery earlier in the season and a bust of E. A. Cole in bronze was shown in the Winter Academy. The head of Bronowa, the dancer, is very beautifully modelled, the bust of Mrs. Williamson has fine poise and distinction, and the portrait of E. A. Cole is fine in expression. Mme. Apel's work denotes a most versatile talent and rare sensitiveness of touch and feeling.

Watercolors by Fowler.

Watercolors of Holland and others of England, by Carlton C. Fowler, are at 2135 Broadway to Feb. 24. The medium is cleverly handled and although the brilliant color is a bit forced, some of the compositions are pleasing.

GREAT IMPORTANCE.

Walkowitz Shows Recent Works.

An exhibition of recent drawings and watercolors by A. Walkowitz is on at the Gallery of the Photo-secession, 291 5th Ave., to March 5. The exhibits are not cataloged or named. Those who are interested in the aim of the "ultra-moderns," to purify art by the emmination of everything not absolutely essential, will find the work entertaining, as Walkowitz is among the foremost exponents of the movement. Aside from drawings, based on the human form, he illustrates his compositional theory with a colored drawing of what is apparently a boat, tossing on the sea.

Decoration by Elmer McRae.

There are now on view at the Macbeth Gallery, 450 Fifth Ave., a number of highly interesting decorative paintings by Elmer McRae. Two are broadly brushed seashore scenes, one with children, while another shows a group of elephants. Flowers and birds figure in other examples.

Arthur Hoerber Memorials.

An auction of paintings contributed by various artists will be held on Feb. 26, at the Nutley, N. J., Public Library, under the American Portraits at Ralston's.

A dozen or so of American portrait painters are showing some of their latest works, at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., to Feb. 26. W. M. Chase is in the lead with a full face, seated picture of Mrs. Kenneth Carr. Irving R. Wiles brushes with distinction Mrs. Arthur White Sullivan, while F. Luis Mora sends a striking portrait of his wife.

Sidney E. Dickinson's remarkable self portrait, which attracted so much attention at the winter Academy, reappears. Morris Molarsky sends a picturesque representation of Miss Jeanne Lillie, which is almost like like Lenbach in color and timbre. Excellent in character and effective in handling is T. Maynard Williamson's "Miss Christian," while suavity and agreeable color characterize William J. Whittemore's "Young Girl with a Tennis Racquet." A. Lenique de Francheville has a bright pastel head of Mrs. Esler and a spirited figure in oil of Mrs. Edward Conkling.

Antonio Barone shows decided talent in a pastel of a young girl called "Grazia," and Albert Herter pictures Miss Marjorie Curtis. Others represented are Louis Mark, Pierre Tartoue and A. Miller Ury.

Hamilton Easter Field's Exhibit.

Hamilton Easter Field, a serious painter with a novel way of expressing himself is showing 11 oils at the Petrus Stuyvesant Club, 129 East 10 St., to Feb. 26. That knowledge is back of his experiments is obvious. His original conception of the much painted Brooklyn Bridge, flooded with rosy light, has charm of color. There are other outdoor scenes and an interior with figure is excellent.

Wood carvings by Robert Laurent are, as usual, shown with these pictures. Primitive in conception like much of the work of the "moderns," they are naive and the figures in one called "The Bath" have a certain grace. Some of the arrangements of conventionalized trees and people are most decorative.

Posters at Municipal Art Gallery.

The aim of a little exhibition now on at the Municipal Art Gallery to March, is to show the art of pictorial publicity at its best. Examples of artistic posters are shown and their production illustrated, step by step. The N. Y. International Art Service collected and installed the material.

Frank W. Rogers' Landscapes.

An exhibition of 24 landscapes in oil by Frank W. Rogers is on at the galleries of Samuel Schwartz and Sons, 290 5th Ave. The canvases are faithful transcripts of nature, and several have unusual appeal. The rendering of atmospheric conditions in a snow scene is noteworthy. Apple trees in bloom by the roadside are well pictured, and there are several glimpses of picturesque rural Massachusetts. "The Run at Bantree" shows trees with gray autumn foliage reflected in the water.

More Landscapes by Lawson.

Ernest Lawson has on view at the Daniel Gallery, 4 W. 47 St., to Feb. 28, a brilliant group of recent landscapes, which include several views of the new and old bridges of the city. Among them is an early moonlight effect on High Bridge. There are several winter scenes on the outskirts of the city. The views of the later bridges are from under the arches.

From Cezanne to Desseignes.

A rechauffé exhibition of Cezanne, Van Gogh, Picasso, Picabia and Braque, lightly spiced with contributions from Diego M. Riviera and Ribeamont Desseignes is on at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave. The title of the single contribution of the last is in French, which being translated reads, "I am not Intelligent." This is almost as much a joke on the public as Picabia's "Catch as Catch Can." The Spanish flavor imparted by Señor Riviera is chiefly in the words Ultima Hora, which appears in print on one of his contributions. Bracques' three "Nature Mortes" are exceptionally dead, and Picasso's "Jeune Fille," is still in many pieces. Amid this all shines with refulgence Van Gogh's "Fleurs Lilas," while Cezanne's lithographic group of male nudes reappears.

Miss Litzinger's Studio Show.

Dorothea M. Litzinger is showing landscapes which she painted at Lake Mohonk last summer, at her studio, 12 W. 69 St., to-day and to-morrow (Sunday).

The canvases are colorful, frank expressions with the charm of spontaneity.

John H. Fry Presents Classic Heroines.

An exhibition of feminine themes from classic myths by John Hemming Fry is on at the Knoedler galleries to Feb. 26. The pictures reveal a gift of creative thought. The brush work seems a bit trim and suave after veiwing the work of the "Modernists" t Montross's. The decorative arrangements of the large compositions are good. Unhappy "Ophelia" has charm, "Pandora" is well presented, and "Heloise" gowned in deep red velvet, is a dignified work skillfully painted and beautiful in color. "Undine," "Sappho," "Diana," and the "Dryads," are grouped, and the "Fates" also among the subjects all well drawn and developed.

Linde Landscapes Shown.

The graceful, decorative and yet vigorous brush work of Ossip L. Linde, is seen in a collection of 22 pictures on view at the galleries, 13 West 46 St. There are landscapes in New Hampshire and Connecticut, as well as scenes in Belgium, chiefly at Bruges, where the Porte d'Ostende and the Beguinage are made most picturesque use of. "The Blue Bay," is quite a remarkable example, evidently a Long Island Sound view, but suggesting something quite Italian.

DEATH OF HELEN F. MEARS.

Helen Farnsworth Mears, sculptor of talent, 37 years old, died suddenly in her studio, 46 Washington Sq. S. on Thursday aft. while entertaining friends. She was a pupil of A. St. Gaudens and won a gold medal at the St. Louis Exposition.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will soon appear.

COLLECTORS' OPPORTUNITY.

As told elsewhere in our columns today, the largest and most important sale of old and modern art works that has taken place in America or Europe for several years—that of the 387 oils and 33 sculptures, forming the widely known collections of Mr. Catholina Lambert of Paterson, N. J.—will take place in the Plaza Hotel Ball room on four evenings of next week, beginning on Monday.

The wide scope and variety of this interesting and important assemblage, especially of old and modern pictures, has not only drawn an unprecedented throng of collectors and art lovers to the galleries where it has been and is on exhibition, but will undoubtedly result in the crowding of the Plaza Ballroom to its utmost capacity, and the turning away of many unfortunates who have not secured the necessary cards of admission.

The result of the sale will be anticipated in Europe, as well as in America, for upon the prices the undisputed pictures bring, the tone and probable course of the picture market for the rest of the season, at any rate, will be determined. There is a wide difference of opinion as to the result of this sale, and as to whether the picture market in its present condition, can absorb, except at very low figures, so large a number of paintings at one time. It must be remembered also that next week's sale is to be followed by that during the week of March 6-10, on five successive evenings, of the remainder of the Blakeslee stock of pictures. It would seem that as the dealers are not likely to wish to add to their already too large stocks, carried over through two poor seasons and thus far in a third and worse one, that here and now is the greatest opportunity that American picture buyers, collectors and lovers have had in years, to secure many good, and more fair examples of well-known painters, on the best possible terms. It is possible, and to be hoped, that this opportunity will be fully taken advantage of, and that the Plaza Ballroom and American Art Galleries will welcome not only many old and well-known collectors, but a host of new ones at these coming interesting and important sales. The new buyer has been conspicuous by his absence in the picture auction rooms for two seasons past and this season, up to the present. Now is his chance, not only to procure art works at low figures for his own pleasure and education, but good investments as well, for it has been repeatedly proven that there are few better financial investments than good art works, bought at low figures.

CORRESPONDENCE

A "Kultur" Exponent Protests.

Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:

With a feeling of amusement, mingled with a certain amount of surprise, in spite of the many curious things I had been getting accustomed to through all sorts of "stuff" in the American papers, I read some weeks ago, in an editorial in the ART NEWS, that some French and English and many of your American readers had declared that all the art news from Germany, which you had published from time to time, was nothing more than a big "bluff." As I am a member of the staff of "Der Cicerone," the well-known German art publication, I am in a position to know pretty well what is going on in the German art world at present; and I can assure you that those readers of your journal, either know nothing at all about the subject, and merely state, with calm conscience, what they think, or rather wish, to be the case—which is what I call "bluff," or else they do know well enough and deliberately tell—well, the opposite of the truth, for purposes of their own.

In order, however, to prove to them that interest in art, as well as art activity in Germany, is not interfered with by the war, I may tell you that I have just received news that the editor-in-chief of "Der Cicerone," Prof. Biermann, who, up till now, has been art adviser to the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, has been made Director-General of all the municipal museums and galleries in Cologne—a post which has been expressly created for him, in order to assure to that city his great organizing talent, knowledge, and foresightedness. If a city in the middle of the greatest and costliest wars that has ever been waged, can think of such a thing, and augment its expenses for art (and Cologne already pays for its art and theatre a considerable sum every year), it proves, I think, pretty conclusively how things stand in Germany.

Whether such readers believe it or not does not make the slightest difference. The Germans will continue, in spite of the war, and even in spite of their opinion, to hold high their "Kultur," which seemingly hated word here, means caring for the higher things in life, most of all for art in every form. But the "neutral" readers of your journal, if such there be, ought to know how things are in reality; and it is for them that I wish to protest against such ridiculous statements and to state how things really are.

Yours very sincerely,

Frank E. Washburn Freund.

New York, Feb. 15, 1916.

That Disputed Romney.

Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:

My attention has been called to your issue of February 5 in which you state that you have received a special cable from London of the 3rd instant, to the effect, on what seems to be most reliable authority, that Mr. Huntington's attorneys are approaching a settlement out of court, in the case of Huntington vs. Lewis and Simmons.

Messrs. Guedalla & Jacobson are the London solicitors who have charge of the case in England on behalf of Mr. Huntington;—my firm represent Mr. Huntington here. Mr. Guedalla is at the present time in New York, partly for the purpose of taking the testimony of Mr. Huntington in the action, on commission.

Speaking for Mr. Huntington, as well as the London solicitors, I beg to inform you that neither in London nor New York has the charge been withdrawn by Mr. Huntington that the picture in question is not by Romney. We also contend that it is not a portrait of Mrs. Siddons or Miss Kemble; and the case is being prosecuted as vigorously as the law will permit.

Having in mind your previous comments on this litigation, I would be obliged if you will do us the courtesy to publish this letter.

Very truly yours,

John B. Stanchfield.

New York, Feb. 9, 1916.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

SOUTH INDIAN BRONZES, by O. C. GANGOLY.
FOLIO PUBLISHED BY THE INDIAN SOCIETY OF ORIENTAL ART, CALCUTTA.—(LUZAC & Co, LONDON.)

The art of India has yet to achieve anything like universal popularity, but if we are to believe the introduction contributed to the present volume, by J. G. Woodroffe, interest in the subject is "rising." Mr. Gangoly's work must be commended as an earnest labor of research, in a field that is now ungrateful and promises to remain so. Students of oriental art are scarcely numerous enough the world over to make up, fully, to this zealous author, the appreciation which he finds lacking in a people whose ancestors were capable of magnificent productions in sculpture.

One must admire the patience with which Mr. Gangoly has pursued his subject from the basis of a Sanskrit text which involved a "strenuous task" of interpretation. He proceeds from so remote a period as 1000 B. C., the conjectural date of Agastya, the first Aryan missionary to South India, whose appearance is thought to antedate that of Buddha. With true scholarly sympathy, he traces the development of artistic expression, which followed Maya's foundation of Indian architecture. He enters into a study of the canons of proportion, adopted by the Indians (after the manner of the Egyptians and Greeks), and in connection with an elaborate series of illustrations, he composes a text rich in historical data and replete with rare information. Mr. Gangoly feels confidence in the aesthetic value of the work of the Indians, sculpture which, he considers, answers "to the supreme tests of great art." His conclusion is enthusiastic and well expressed: "As studies of line pure and consummate, as exquisite examples of the value of movement, as embodiments of force, with power in every line—these images display qualities of everlasting nobility, which unquestionably constitute a full fledged school of vital sculpture." The volume is well and copiously illustrated.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

THE ARCHITECTURE AND LANDSCAPE GARDENING OF THE EXPOSITION. DESCRIBED BY MAUD W. RAYMOND AND OTHERS. INTRODUCTION BY LOUIS C. MOLLGART. 12 MO., PAUL ELDER & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

The text of this attractive volume is not formidable, and as neither the introduction nor the descriptive notes attempt anything like a studious disquisition upon the work considered, the illustrations, which are numerous and of good quality, are made to bear the burden of appeal to the reader's attention. The landscape gardening side of the work might have received more specific notice in both text and illustrative sections, for landscape gardening is an art which is occupying more and more its rightful place in the schemes with which architects have to consider. The ephemeral character of exposition architecture calls perhaps for little more than the sort of comment found in the usual art catalog. The present volume serves well its purpose, therefore, which is, evidently, to supply a clear pictorial record of the architectural features of the Exposition.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DIARIES AND CORRESPONDENCE OF JOHN EVELYN AND SAMUEL PEPEY RELATING TO ENGRAVING. With notes by Howard C. Levis. London: Ellis, 1915. 12mo.

Mr. Levis, whose monumental "Bibliography of Books on Prints" was the product of a faculty of patient research placed in the service of the study of the reproductive graphic arts, has had the happy idea of compiling the present copiously illustrated little volume. Beside the extracts, which throw interesting side-lights on the life and methods of engravers, print-sellers and print-collectors of that day, the book has divisions dealing with "John Evelyn's Etchings" (it will be remembered that Evelyn's name is closely connected with the introduction of mezzotint into England), "Book-plates of Evelyn and Pepys," "Portraits of John and Mary Evelyn and Samuel and Elizabeth Pepys" and "Frontispieces and Illustrations," the last-named referring to those in books published by the two worthies.

The whole appeals in most pleasant and interesting manner to amateurs, connoisseurs and collectors of prints. The editor has added to the value of the book by numerous notes giving information regarding the producers and sellers of prints, and has seen to it that there is a good index.

Wilhelmine Weber is showing some painted furniture at her studio, 122 East 59 St. She has a nice feeling for color and decoration and designs all her work herself. Among the most attractive sets shown is one in yellow with conventionalized fruits and foliage in natural colors. This is intended for a breakfast room.

PHILADELPHIA.

The opening of the Exhib'n of Oriental Art Feb. 12, in the newly-completed Charles Custis Harrison Hall of the University of Pa. Museum brought together a notable gathering of distinguished figures in the artistic literary and social world assembled for a private view of recently acquired Chinese Porcelains from the J. Pierpont Morgan collections, together with a number of examples loaned by Duveen Brothers of New York. Many of these objects have already been on view in the Metropolitan Museum but were a revelation to those who saw them for the first time. The Hall itself, a remarkable work of successful architectural design and engineering skill, is circular in plan, 100 feet in diameter with a valuted dome lighted from the top, the whole interior reminding one of the Pantheon in Rome. The display includes rare and costly specimens of vases with the blue and white hawthorne plum decoration, monochrome peach-bloom and Celadon jars and plaques, Chinese sculptures and paintings, a small collection of Jades Buddhist religious vessels and images of bronze and, on the walls, a number of superb pieces of Flemish tapestry, most of these belonging to the permanent collection of the Museum.

The Gold Medal of Honor of the Pa. Academy has been awarded to J. Alden Weir, in recognition of high achievement in his profession. Mr. Weir exposes a group of his works in the current annual exhib'n, among them a fine portrait of Robert W. Weir. Joseph T. Pearson's medalled "By the Pastures," in which some well painted turkeys figure, have been purchased by the University Club. J. Francis Murphy's ture "On the Valley" and another entitled only exhibit, "An Autumnal Note" has been purchased by Mr. Geo. B. Woodside. Thomas Lakins' canvas "Music," was sold to a dealer.

Mr. Charles J. Cohen has been elected President of the Fairmount Park Art Association, succeeding Mr. Edward T. Stotesbury. Mr. Stotesbury was not a candidate for reelection. Messrs. E. Burgess Warren, James M. Beck and Henry K. Fox were elected Vice-Presidents. John W. Pepper, Treasurer, and Leslie W. Miller, Secretary. The model of the proposed improvement of the east bank of the Schuylkill River from Beacon Light to Gerard Ave. Bridge ordered by the Association under the terms of the Samuel bequest is now on exhib'n in the lecture room at the Academy.

Success seems certain for the performance of the Masque for 1916, in which seven allied art organizations participate, scheduled to take place in the Academy of Music on the evening of Washington's Birthday. Stanley Muschamp, Jr., will be the music director, and Frank Buchanan, stage director. The stage setting is in the hands of Arthur B. Carles and William A. Young. In the Masque the School of Industrial Art is assigned two attractive parts, involving about one hundred and twenty-five players. The first is a gorgeous court scene in which pomp and splendor will be the keynote. A surprise is promised in the costuming and the color of this scene, in which about seventy-five players will participate.

The second part assigned to the School of Industrial Art presents a series of four pictures. Here the scheme of color has been carefully planned by the committee in conjunction with Mr. Leicester Holland, the author of the scenario, to be in contrast with the effects preceding and following it. Every resource of the School and Museum of Industrial Art has been drawn upon in the designing and execution of costumes and accessories.

Dancing will be followed by a stately pageant in which Youth and Beauty will be paramount. The members of the Sketch Club will represent Grecian Warriors. The important feature of their number will be a barbaric torch dance which takes place at the time that Theseus is supposed to be slaying the Minotaur. Joseph Craig Fox is directing this episode, and the costumes have been designed by Morris Hall Pancoast and Herbert Pullinger.

BALTIMORE.

Jonas Lie's gorgeous "Rhapsodie" is by all means the most notable picture in the Charcoal Club's Seventh Annual Exhibition of Contemporary American Art, now on at the Peabody Gallery. This striking canvas is having the success it deserves and is receiving the lion's share of attention. So brilliant is it that it makes the things adjacent to it appear to decided disadvantage. C. W. Hawthorne's "Wild Rose," for instance, is robbed of much of its effect, and the weak points of Childe Hassam's "Girl in Yellow" are emphasized.

The exhibition contains 157 paintings and a small group of sculptures by E. Berge, H. Schuler, Rachel M. Hawks, J. E. Stauffer, Grace H. Turnbull and J. A. Alluisi. Berge's beautiful new bronze fountain, "Will-o'-the-Wisp" has the place of honor, which it well merits. It is being shown simultaneously at the Pennsylvania Academy exhibition. 134 artists, in all, are represented, some of them having sent works by invitation, but the majority are those who succeeded in "getting by" the jury, which was composed of E. H. Potthast, L. Seyffert, and J. H. Carlson. No exhibitor has more than two paintings on the wall.

Some of the more notable exhibits are F. C. Frieseke's "The Path," R. Miller's "Spring," both sunshiny, brilliant works; John Sloan's "Sunday in the Park," George Bellows' "Summer Night," a canvas of absorbing interest; C. Rosen's "Sand Dunes," which has both breadth and strength; M. Molarsky's "Spanish Woman," R. Henri's "Sammy and His Mother," Seyffert's "Julian," W. H. K. Yarrow's touching and sympathetic portrait called "Waiting," C. Ryder's "Village Street," D. Felner's "Heavy Surf" and "Norman's Ledge," E. Haupt's beautiful nude "Girl Arranging Her Hair" and his portrait of Dr. Henry Wood of Johns Hopkins University; R. McGill Mackall's fine "Freight Yards, Baltimore," Camelia Whitehurst's two portraits of little girls, Ben Foster's "Early Autumn Twilight," Grace H. Turnbull's "Winter," E. W. Redfield's "Brook and Meadow," P. King's "Hauling Ice," I. R. Wiles' "Mirror Lake," R. B. Farley's "Dawn-Spurwink, Me.," E. Speicher's "Portrait of a Dancer," Alice Tilden's "Reverie," H. S. Hubbel's "Ten O'Clock," C. H. Walther's "Zinnia Arrangement," Alice Worthington Ball's "In the Late Afternoon" and her still life, "Lemons and Other Things," L. W. N.

BOSTON.

A Childe Hassam show now on at the St. Botolph Club is calculated to make the average ignorant connoisseur "turn pale and turn tail." It is, as one artist said, "a bully show," but only to those who "know." However, Boston's reputation for culture may not be unfounded, and the elect may like and acquire some of these colorful pictures. The figure examples (as to which one innocent old lady asked if they were "done in crewels") are entirely Hassamish, and sometimes quite beautiful, but the shore-scapes, landscapes, and etchings are less markedly in that class that is caviare to the general.

As your critic predicted, Miss Gertrude Fiske's exhibition at the Guild has been exceedingly well received. It is original, her work is remarkably well handled technically, and is both wholesome and interesting. A future is prophesied for this young painter. Portraits strongly characterized, figure studies modern in motif, and some delightfully out-of-doors landscapes comprise the showing. Included in it is the brilliant "Goldfish," a picture of young women bending over glass jars with goldfish in them, suffused with light, contrasted with shadow. This, after being exhibited at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, was bought by Mr. James R. Mellon, founder of the Mellon Institute. Another interesting and successful canvas is "The Shadow," a young girl standing in the half shadow, the property of Mrs. Edward H. Harriman of N. Y.

At the Copley Gallery are two exhibitions of divergent appeal. Miss Lucy Conant holds

Connecticut Academy Prizes.

The prizes in the sixth annual exhibition of the Connecticut Academy, which opened Monday, were awarded as follows: W. R. Derrick of N. Y., the Academy prize of $100 for "Hollyhocks"; Jean Nutting Oliver of Boston, the Hudson prize of $25 for "Helen"; Guy C. Wiggins of N. Y., the Dunham prize of $25 for artists under 25 years old, for "A Blow from the Northwest."

Jane Peterson, N. Y., R. F. Logan, Adelaide Deming, Mrs. Frances H. Storrs, Harold Douglas and James Greenwood received honorable mentions.

N. Y. Quartier Latin Fire.

There has been, figuratively speaking, weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth in the N. Y. Quartier Latin, for fire, last Saturday morning, swept into Bruno's Garret, in S. Washington Sq., and destroyed not alone the effects of the presiding genius, editor of the weekly which bears his name, but also the artistic and literary wares of more than 150 people. Fate seems often unkind. Mss. of Murger and Shaw figured in the holocaust, but the Guido Bruno phoenix has risen superior to its ashes.

There is a capital illustrated catalog of the Americanization Through Art" Display at Memorial Hall in Phila.

At the Catherine Lorillard Wolff Art Club the Feb. exhibition is composed of the work of the following members: Marion M. Kerr, Hope Miller, Ida P. Becker, Marion Olmstead, Winifred Selwyn, Sylvia H. Rafter and M. Sherman.

The current exhibition at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo consists of works by men who paint the Far West, and by Stephen Parrish and Charles Caryl Coleman.

An exhibition of watercolors loaned by a group of N. Y. artists and decorated porcelain by Mary E. Harrison and Marguerite A. Cameron is on to Feb. 27 at the Montclair Museum.

The Nat'l Arts Club gave a reception in honor of Timothy Cole, the veteran wood engraver, on Wed. evening last.

The Rhode Island School of Design is holding an exhibition of works by contemporary American Painters and sculptors to Feb. 24.

The Society of Beaux Arts Architects, the local chapter of the American Institute of Architects, the Washington Architectural Club and the Washington Society of Artists joined in a mammoth entertainment on February 17, at the New Willard, Washington, for the benefit of the families of the French soldier artists, fighting and fallen. It was a costume dance, with a jury to review the grand march and award prizes for the best costumes.

The Fort Worth Museum is holding its VII annual exhibition of paintings by American artists.

Nine N. Y. student bodies are to publish "The American Art Student." The profits are to be used as a fund to aid students.

Rhoda Holmes Nichols is in California, where she will probably remain until spring.

Henry Clews, Jr., and his wife expect to return to Paris in a few weeks.

Harriett Clark, of 135 E. 66 St., gave a reception Monday to a number of her friends, and showed over thirty miniatures which she painted recently. She has a nice sense of color and arrangement, and portrays men as successfully as women and little children.

Dewitt M. Lockman recently painted portraits of Mrs. Edgar L. Young and Mr. and Mrs. James R. Mellon. The last two were added, by invitation, to the exhibition of the Society of American Portrait Painters, now on at Pittsburgh.

Thomas Furlong, of 122 E. 59 St., has been making charming red chalk sketch portraits of little children.

John de Costa has taken a studio in the Gainsborough, 222 W. 59 St.

Miss Jane Peterson is giving a course of lectures on art in Scranton, Pa.

Allen Tucker who went to Paris several months ago to work with the American ambulance service, is due to arrive here today.

Joseph T. Pearson, Jr.

Winner of Temple Gold Medal and Stotesbury Prize at Pa. Academy Exhibition.

Ford's "Heirlooms" and "Poppies," W. Wendt's "Summer Days," H. H. Breckenridge's "Chinese Jar," G. Coale's portrait of himself, Sargeant Kendall's "The Critics," S. E. Whiteman's "Sunlight and Frost," and "New England Hillside," C. H. Ebert's "Tyrol-Alps," F. Usher de Voll's "Grey Day," O. Rouland's "Coral Beads," Jeanie W. Walkinshaw's "Portrait of V," five canvases by the late W. R. C. Wood, and A. Borie's "The Mandarin Orange."

H. Schuler, sculptor, and W. G. Beecher, both of Baltimore, are at work on models for the $100,000 memorial to President Buchanan that will be erected in Washington in accordance with a bequest in the will of Harriet Lane Johnson, President Buchanan's niece. The plans that have already been submitted by Mr. Schuler and Mr. Beecher have met the general, but not the final approval of the Washington Commission of Fine Arts. This is being withheld pending the selection of a site, a question that is now before Congress. The location favored is in the new Meridian Hill Park development on 16th St.

the main gallery with a somewhat exotic collection of unconventional designs—wall decorations for the defunct "Toy Theatre" (renamed "The Copley"). Founded on folklore subjects, and quaintly odd and grotesque in effect, they give one the delightful impression of being a child again and having a peep into "Alice in Wonderland." There are also designs suggested for stained glass, jewelry, etc. Miss Conant has long been known as a competent painter of landscapes in watercolor; so these decorative designs come as a surprise to her public.

In the front gallery Otis Philbrick, a painter of "real babies," shows a collection of his latest artistic offspring, rather sculptural in effect, and just missing the touch of intimacy a "mother," rather than a "father" painter, would have given them. Chacun a son gout!, but the picture of baby and mother on the same white bed (the latter as realistic as may be) is a subject too intimate, as it were, for the public to share.

 "In the painter's art, the secret of the lyric lies in emphasis. When the emphasis dances on the flashing stream of fleeting moments in such a way as to remain always in the present, we have the ideal lyric. But when the emphasis lingers in the past, the lyric qualities of the work live in the shadows, while the dramatic are uppermost in the high-lights and strong in the half-tones. And the secret of emphasis lies in the artist's temperament. In this relation, artistic temperaments, has real meaning."

THE "FIFTY" AT MONTROSS'S.

It is like a gathering of the clans, this assembly of fifty shrill pipers at the Montross Gallery. For pipers they certainly are, for all their "outré" airs and their thin dissonances. A canvas as near to something large and sonorous as possible, comes from the painter of a former "Sensation," Joseph Stella whose "Chromatic Sensation—The Procession" is like a chromatic progression a la Puccini from his kaleidoscopic sensation of two seasons ago, namely, "Mardi Gras at Coney Island." Chromatic certainly is this "Procession," a big gamut of semi-tones. One must come down the color scale somewhat to "feel" the fine tapestry effect of Maurice Prendergast, who has at last, following a suggestion of the "Second Viewer," realized a countenance in one of the block faces that he "places" with such telling decorative effect.

Further down the scale even is Bertram Hartman, "Eclectic" Hartman, whose progression from the high key of his "Seasons" at the Folsom Gallery, is almost into gloom with his black theatric "Vanity." In Walt Kuhn's portrait—"of a man" if one believes the catalog—one has a composite presentment, as for instance—George Moore and James Gregg—in rather sunburned saffronness.

Henri, man of many pupils, has taken, like the "pupil of pupils" Bellows, to painting the nude, with a broom. There ought to be a law against this. Smart sweepers abound. Their virtuosity palls a little. Arthur Davies at least cares not to splash with his brush. He ever has it in control, and the "Bacchante Mother" is a product of one of his best controlled moments.

Hayley Lever still strives to find the "atmosphere" of that great subject for paint—"Gloucester," but the scales of Cornwall have not yet fallen from his eyes. Harry Berlin, who seems to have something of the sense of a big artist, is a bit hyphenated in his landscape "Uphill," and the hyphenation is Gauguin-Cezanne. Rosselino furnishes the main inspiration to Karl Anderson for his "Madonna," and one almost convicts Duvenceck as guilty because of Randall Davey's "Girl in Black." Glackens is still running an account with Renoir in his "Young Girl," while George Hart pays cash, as it were, to Nature in his original and clever "Englewood Ice Pond." Leon Kroll, who has, at intervals, shown talent, presents a fine landscape; John F. Parker another, a simple one, effective and rather new in color entitled—"Study in Abstract Form and Color."

Van Dearing Perrine with "The Wind," Charles Reiffel with "A Homestead," and Allen Tucker with a "Morning in the Valley," are true to modds often before expressed. Max Weber ceases expostulation for demonstration contributing "A Vocal Solo," Henry Fitch Taylor with a theme excused as "A Color Hypothesis"—propounds geometrically in "the Rat Catcher's Daughter," and Eugene Speicher in the "Portrait of Hervey White" adds a touch of Cezanne heaviness to his academic accomplishments as a sort of ticket of admission to the circle of "terrible fellows."

Would that space allowed more than mere mention that McRae is consciously decorative in "Arrangement" here, as he is in his own fine show at Macbeth's, and there are, to make up the fifty, "messages" in line and color, not indeed more thunderous than Jupiter's, from David Milne, Frank Nankivell, Bror Nordfeldt, Walter Pach, Jules Pascin, Charles Prendergast, Hugo Robus, Morton L. Shauberg, C. R. Sheeler, Jr., S. I. Slomka, William Sommer, Morgan Steinmetz, Eug. P. Ullman, Ch. H. Walther, Evan Walters, Oscar Bleumner, D. P. Brinley, James Butler, Arthur B. Carles, Howard Coluzzi, Herbert Crowley, Amos Engel, C. D. Ferrand, Ham. Easter Field, Wood Gaylor, H. Heath, I. Lichtenstein and Robert Lauvent.

Bibelots at the French Museum.

A loan exhibition of French XVIII century bibelots was opened at the French Museum, 599 Fifth Ave., Tuesday last, and continues through Monday. There are loans from both collectors and dealers. Among the paintings and drawings are example of Boucher, Watteau, Mallett, Van Gorp and Louis Moreau, while the other objects include fans, toilet sets and furniture, tapestries and statuettes. Among those who have made loans are Mrs. W. P. Douglas, Miss Gould, Mrs. McDougall Hawkes, Miss Elsie de Wolfe and Mr. Thomas Hughes Kelly.

Whistler in Point and Pencil.

There is now on view at the galleries of Keppel & Co., 4 E. 39 St., a most interesting coll'n of nearly 100 etchings and lithographs by Whistler. The catalog is as usual a model full of information and explanatory criticism.

Kronberg's Ballerinas.

Louis Kronberg is showing twenty oils and pastels of "The Dance" at Knoedler's to Feb. 26, which have simplicity of composition and quiet coloring. In the figures of the ballet girls movement and life are so skillfully suggested as to recall Degas, by whom the artist has been, of course, influenced. There is an interesting nude; the flesh with its delicate grays and the little head with copper-colored hair are well brought out by drapery of mauve, blue and rose. Two arrangements of a ballet girl, in white, adjusting her sandal, are especially good and "La Coiffure," a young girl, arranging her hair, has exceptional charm.

Social Lights by Robert Reid.

Robert Reid is displaying to Mar. 4, at the galleries of Jacques Silegmann & Co., 705 Fifth Ave., another of his effective and artistically facile portrait sketches in oil on rough canvas, of men and women of society, made during the summer and fall at Newport, and in Providence and Phila. The manner of presentation is highly attractive and the works, if somewhat slight, are distinctly clever.

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY.

Augustus V. Tack is preparing to hold an exhibition at one of the leading Fifth Avenue galleries in mid-March. A number of recent portraits will be shown, among them an excellent presentment of Edwin Lefevre, the author. A large allegorical work "The Voice in the Wilderness," will be one of the features of the display. Spiritual in character, strongly modeled and original in conception, the pictures will afford distinct pleasure to art lovers.

Dana Pond returned from France in the late autumn on account of the war and leased a studio in the Bryant Park studio building, where he has been painting portraits. He is now at work upon some figure subjects principally old men and women who have served him as models.

The joint exhibition of Robert Vonnoh and Bessie Potter Vonnoh at Rochester, has been extended another week. It will then go to St. Louis, and later to Kansas City. This exhibition has been traveling about the country since last spring.

Landscapes by Walter Clark.

Walter Clark, one of the older Academicians, whose work has won for him several medals, is showing an interesting group of American landscapes in oil at Milch's Gallery, Mad. Ave. and 74 St., to Feb. 26. A boy driving cows home from the pasture at sundown, Peconic sand dunes, harvest time, with rye stacked in the meadows, and a farm scene with sunlight striking a small white house with red chimney, red barns and a suggestion of a forest in the background are all more successful works than the Gloucester pictures.

Some thirty artist members of the National Arts Club have been invited to paint a frieze about the grill room. The design is left to the artists' decision but the canvases must not exceed twelve in height. Landscapes, figure pieces and marines will be grouped in harmonious relation of color and design.

E. Hodgson Smart, of London, who painted the portraits of the late King Edward and the dowager Queen Alexandra, is in Cleveland printing a portrait of Dean Abbott, of Trinity Cathedral. At his studio he is showing his "Dawn," symbolizing the dawn of soul in a woman of wealth, and "Au Revoir," a portrait study, still unfinished. The artist's "Lady in Black" is well known in England.

William Gilchrist has gone from his Holbein studio for a month to Cleveland, O., to paint an important portrait.

At his Holbein studio, William R. Derrick has a number of fine canvases, painted during the past summer and autumn. These have all of the artist's usual poetry and are, if possible, better than even his former good work.

Since his return to this country from France last summer, Walter Griffin has held successful exhibitions of his work in Philadelphia, St. Louis and Boston. He has been traveling about in various cities but expects shortly to settle permanently in New York.

At his studio, 237 West 80th St., Frank De Haven is showing several landscapes, painted in Northern Connecticut last summer. One of especial interest is "An Abandoned Farm," in which there is good composition, distance with a poetic charm and rich color quality.

Yamanaka Japanese Print Show.

Having held with success their annual auction sale, the Yamanaka Galleries, 254 Fifth Ave., have now on view to Feb. 26, a remarkably interesting collection of old Japanese color prints by Hokusai and his pupils, as well as examples of the work of the famous Ukiyo-e artists. The catalog contains 138 numbers, which include sets as well as single prints. To praise the XVIII and XIX century master, for he lived from 1760 to 1849, would be but to gild the lily. In the present gathering he can be studied to the full, in his water falls and bridges series, as well as in his remarkable flower arrangements and the inimitable group of five scenes in the Yoshiwara Tea House. There is found prodigious industry, wedded to extraordinary technical and artistic skill.

Most interesting is the colored drawing for a wooden block by the master's daughter, Oyei, an interior and exterior scene in Yoshiwara, which has an almost Occidental effect, while retaining the Oriental manner and structure. Among the other pupils of Hokusai represented are Hokkei and Gogaku.

The prints of various schools, chiefly figure works telling interesting stories of Nippon life, are examples of the brilliant craftsman, the Samurai Yeishi; Toyokuni, the specialist in actors; Toyohiro, the master of Hiroshige; Utamoro, remarkable for his feminine types, and Shunzan, also a specialist in the depicting of women.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Two Important Rug Sales.

Two important collections of old Chinese rugs will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries on Monday next, preliminary to the unrestricted public sale on Thursday, Friday and Saturday afts., March 2, 3 and 4 next.

One collection is that of Mr. John Kimberly Mumford, the author of the standard work on "Oriental Rugs" and other writings on this subject, including the exhaustive catalogs of the Yerkes and Marquand collections, have gained for him recognition on both sides of the Atlantic. The other is a collection, just arrived from Peking, and that of Mr. Frederick Moore, an author and traveler who has been a resident of the Chinese capital for more than five years, acting as correspondent of the Associated Press. Collecting rugs was somewhat of an avocation with him, but the opportunities which the Chinese capital afforded and his zeal in studying this little-known branch of the rug-weaving art have made him an authority on the Chinese phase of the subject.

The two collections combined in the illustrated catalog number nearly 300 pieces, and cover the whole range of color, design and size in which Chinese rug-makers have, for the past four centuries, plied the processes of their art. Many of the pieces cannot be duplicated, and all have been selected because of some particular merit.

The Rugs in Detail.

In the collections are great temple hangings, ceremonial squares, palace carpets, kong (the Chinese divan) coverings, travelers' rugs, saddle caparisons, throne coverings, and chair seats. There are rugs from China proper, both the Eastern and Western provinces of the North (South China producing no rugs), and others from the so-called dependencies, beyond the Great Wall. There are grotesque things designed to ward off evil spirits, and delicate, beautiful pieces woven as gifts with emblems of good omen or good wishes for bride, mandarin, prince, or emperor.

The symbols employed cover a wide range of picture language. The eight emblems of Buddhism, and the four of the scholar; the "Nine Precious Things"; and "The Hundred Antiques"; the flowers of the seasons—which every gentle person loves; the fruits which have meanings, and the fragrant "fingers of Buddha"; the conventional lotus—the Buddhist flower—and the peony; the clouds and waves of eternity; the mythical dragon, emblem of the dynasty, and the phoenix, significant of the empress; the fabulous lion, used to indicate authority; the heavenly dog which tries from time to time to devour the moon; the deer and the pine tree, good omens for the traveler; the horse, symbol of nobility and strength; the bat and the shou character for good fortune; the golden "cash," for wealth; temple bells and loops of jewels—these are the designs more frequently found. Then there are also, on occasional pieces, a monkey, several little birds, a human figure, or other distinctive features.

Notable is a pair of panels with four Kwan Yin, Goddesses of Mercy with two attendants, in smaller scale, at the base of the temple hangings. They are believed to have come from one of a famous group of monasteries known as Wu Tai Shan, high in the mountains of Shansi. Another pair of the same size have, at the base of each, a Lama priest, sounding perhaps a call to the spirits, on a conch shell. And still a third pair (forming a set of six in all), display great dragons, which formerly, when in place on the pillars of the temple, coiled completely round them.

There are many remarkable pieces, but that which is judged to be the finest of all is the little rug which is numbered last in the catalogue, a Kang Hsi piece. It is probable that no such rug will again come out of China. And it is doubtful whether another exists in America or Europe.

The collections offer the widest possible field for the study of the rich Chinese symbolism and for the exercise of selective taste in decorative material. They have double importance at the present time, since not only have prevailing conditions throughout the world practically stopped the importation of rugs to America but the rapid exhaustion during the past few years of the supply in China—a field never so productive as that comprising the Mohammedan countries—has given a multitude of the rugs a largely increased value in rarity. The collections are the most interesting and important that have been exhibited in the United States in many years. In addition to the rugs are some porcelains, sculptures, bronzes, embroideries, jewelry, and other examples of ancient Chinese art.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Feb. 9, 1916.

This week has arrived the news that during the period of the war the Government proposes to close all public museums and galleries. It is not quite clear whether the order is made with a view to further safeguarding of the national treasures or whether motives of economy underlie the change. The total cost to the nation of maintaining these institutions is approximately £280,000, but the fact that they will be closed to visitors will, by no means, result in the saving of anything like so large a sum. If their contents are to be at all properly preserved, the retention of a large number of officials will still be necessitated while many other heavy expenses will continue as before. It is considered in many quarters that this step will prove false economy and that it is the duty of the State to continue to provide distraction of an artistic type during wartime. It is interesting to note that, since the outbreak of the war and in spite of the consequent withdrawal from the towns of large numbers of men, the attendance at galleries and museums has shown an increase over former years, a fact which is in part no doubt due to the presence in our midst of many foreign refugees as well as of members of disabled and convalescent who find welcome amusement in this way. It is quite possible that public protest at this summary curtailment of our artistic pleasures, will eventually lead to some modification of the decree.

Pastel Society Exhibition.

Pastels seem to have but little affinity with the strenuous spirit of war, so that it is small wonder that the present exhibition at the Pastel Society should show few pictures of any distinction or power. The art of the pastel is, necessarily, a very dainty, delicate one; but this delicacy and daintiness have unfortunately deteriorated into mere weakness in the hands of the majority of exhibitors. There is no medium which shows so unmistakably faults of craftsmanship as does the crayon of the pastellist, so that it behooves the artist to realize very clearly the limitations to which his work will, necessarily, be subjected. These limitations are, perhaps, most satisfactorily dealt with by George Sheringham, whose compositions are among the most pleasing in the exhibition and who shows therein the same lightness of touch which has rendered his fan designs some of the best that have been produced by our modern men. There is a kind of twilight effect in Sheringham's pastels which contrasts most favorably with the harder and more flamboyant tones of certain of his contemporaries who attempt decorative aims quite outside the function of their chalk.

American art-lovers who have visited the house built at Sunbury for Anne Boleyn by Henry VIII. will regret to hear that this beautiful, oak-panelled mansion was recently destroyed by fire. It is not so long since a bid was made for its handsome oak staircase by an American collector, but although a high price was offered, it was not accepted. The ceilings of the house were painted by the same artist who decorated those in Hampton Court Palace.

Readers of the AMERICAN ART NEWS will remember the report of the robbery which took place at the Marlborough Gallery last July, when a number of "Old Masters" were cut from their frames, the thieves leaving behind them no trace or clue. A sequel to this event will take place in a fortnight, when Mr. Meyer-See, the proprietor of the Gallery, will sue the Insurance Company for the value of the pictures. It is rumored that Sir Edward Carson has been briefed by Mr. See, so that the case is bound to create an enormous amount of interest. Mr. See is still absent on military service in the French army.

After a five days' hearing the disputed carpet case, of which I wrote in my last letter was decided by the jury in favor of the owner, on the ground that reasonable care and skill in repairing it had not been exercised by the firm to whom it was entrusted, and in consideration thereof the jury awarded her damages to the extent of £30. They, however, decided that the carpet returned to her was that which she entrusted to them, there being no evidence to prove that the defendants had substituted an inferior one for it. The defendant's costs were to be borne by the plaintiff. The jury were exempted from further service for three years.

New Civic Art Ass'n.

Messrs. John Lavery, George Clausen, W. Rothenstein and Frank Dicksee are devoting considerable time and energy just now to the formation of a Civic Arts Association, the object of which is to be "the amelioration of those civic arts without which no towns fit to live in can be created, extended or improved, and without which no rational interest can be bestowed upon or maintained in town or village." It is the intention of those interested to train craftsmen to create works of art for the adornment of the buildings which have been partially destroyed in the Allied countries through the war, and likewise to extend and improve the towns and villages of the United Kingdom. A further object of the

No better proof that the middle and wealthy classes in France have not yet begun to feel, in any distressing degree, the economic pinch of the war can be found than the state of things at the great auction centre in the rue Drouet. The official commissaires of sales report that there is no extraordinary pressure whatever to realize on private artistic possessions. It could be readily understood that there would be an avoidance, as far as possible, of the placing of great collections on the market in wartime, when money is at the best a rarity for the mass of the public. But the very fact of the rarity of money would normally tend, it would seem, to force many individuals of limited means to part with their art treasures. The lack of such a symptom is of great significance. On the other hand, it is well to remember that thousands of houses and apartments, full of pictures and statuary, rare furniture and other bric-a-brac of every description, are closed through the absence of the owners or tenants because of the war, while the contents of other thousands of such dwelling-places, whereof arrears of rent have already accumulated to considerable amounts, can not be sold or removed until the hour of liquidation arrives, most probably after the war and after the Parliament has enacted some special laws relating thereto.

Association will be to co-ordinate in England the artists and craftsmen so that the two bodies may in future work in better relation and in closer touch than has hitherto been the case in this country. In view of the general reconstruction which may be looked forward to at the conclusion of peace, it is considered expedient that all such plans should be well formulated and in readiness so that the work of preparation must be undertaken in good time. The names on the Committee should augur well for the success of the scheme.

Some high prices were reached at Puttick and Simpson's for color-engravings, 150 guineas being given by Mr. F. Sabin for a pair of ovals, "The Morning" and "The Evening" after W. Hamilton by P. W. Tomkins, while Messrs. Scott gave 110 guineas for a pair of mezzotints after G. Morland by W. Ward. Several other examples also reached high figures, the general bidding being exceedingly brisk.

Admirers of J. Solomon, R. A., will be interested to learn that he has recently passed from the United Arts Force to enter the Regular Army as a Lieutenant Colonel, in which capacity he has already gone to the front. Much valuable work has been done by this distinguished artist in regard to inventions of military importance, among which his advice in regard to color-schemes which shall render both the soldiers and their equipment invisible has proved itself of especial worth. Indeed, one of the minor surprises of this war has been the variety of practical ways in which Art has shown herself of service in military matters. I have already mentioned in a previous letter the useful work done by our sculptors in the preparation of plaster casts of damaged limbs and in the construction of anatomical splints. Every day sees a further development on this side of our artist-soldiers' achievements.

too little moderation in colouring; Frank M. Armington, with paintings, aquarelles and etchings of Parisian and rural landscapes that are vivid with reality and full of a generous atmospheric warmth; and Gabriel Thompson, with clever landscapes and marines, showing greater finish than vigor. Mr. O'Connor's most remarkable work in this exhibition is his portraiture of flowers. Mr. Thompson's best picture is a small marine, with very wonderful cloud effects; light breaking through an angry mass of vapour and deepening the shadow on the billows to the deepest of deep blue-blackness. Mr. Armington has presented Notre Dame de Paris on a large canvas, in a most poetic symphony of grays.

One of the most characteristic exhibitions during this winter of gloomy waiting is that of some 150 sketches of army scenes in pencil, crayon and gouache, by Eugene Allaud, at the Galerie des Independants. The drawing is most excellent, but the sketches are chiefly valuable for their historical interest. They represent the many types of the soldier in the anti-German armies, from the Sonogalis and the Algerian Arabs to the Hindus and the Australians, uniting truthful precision with charming romanticism in conception. The State has purchased six large sketches in gouache and two other important ones have been taken by Mr. George Haviland of Limoges.

The disposition to buy liberally of the works of living artists, as much from a benevolent as from an esthetic motive, has become marked and the co-operative effort to this effect organized under the title of the Amis des Artistes, which is the mother of the like movement in America under the lead of Mr. Whitney Warren, is receiving warm support.

A bas-relief will be placed in the wall of the Tuileries gardens, at the corner of the place de la Concorde and the rue de Rivoli, in memory of Miss Cavell, who was shot after court-martial by the Germans in Belgium. A committee is in charge of the project and artists are invited to send designs to it for the monument. These will be exhibited, and a jury will choose the one to be used.

That the Triennial Exposition is to be held is good news in view of the sore lack of the larger Salons in war-time. The series of proposed triennial shows, largely retrospective, was begun in 1912, and the second should have been held last year; but the tragedy of the nations prevented it. There had been nothing so interesting in Paris for a long time as that of 1912. Rarely has there been presented anywhere so great an opportunity to make a comparative study of the art of the last 50 years and that of the present. This year's exposition will be held in the jeu de paume pavillion in the Tuileries Gardens, from March 1 to April 15. The list of the directing committee includes the names of several of the foremost living French artists, such as Rodin, Besnard, Harpignies, and Renoir. Eric Tayne.

The exhibition of works by Goya, Greco and Zurbaran, which opens Monday at the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., will contain five important examples of the two first and four of the last.

A Lafayette exhibition for the benefit of wounded French artists and their families, will be held in the old Knickerbocker Club Building, 5th Ave. and 32 St., from Feb. 22 to Mar. 11. The Lafayette relics owned by the family and French Government, and shown at San Francisco, will be on view. The City Hall's portrait will also be in the collection.

Sale of Stevenson Letters.

The first session of the sale of the third and concluding part of the collection of letters and literary material of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, consigned by Mrs. Salisbury Field, daughter of Mr. R. L. Stevenson, was held Wed. aft., at the Anderson Galleries. There was a good attendance of dealers, autograph collectors and book lovers, not only from the city but from different parts of the country, and the bidding for the rare specimens of Stevensoniana was spirited.

The highest price of the session, $250, was paid by Mr. George D. Smith for a letter to the novelist's mother mentioning the small sum, £20, paid to him by the publisher Paul for "Virginibus Puerisque." The letter, dated Dec. 13, 1881, has a unique value from the fact that it is signed in full, "Robert Louis Stevenson: His Autograph, price 2d. coloured and 1d. plain." Mr. Smith also gave $232.50 for a letter from the novelist to his father, dated Skerryvore, Jan. 25, 1885.

Walter M. Hill obtained a letter, dated Jan. 26, 1881, written to Stevenson's father. It is almost entirely about "Treasure Island." Mr. Smith secured the Mss. of "The School Boys Magazine," written by young Stevenson at Burlington Lodge Academy, Spring Grove, 1863. Other prices were: Mr. Smith $170 for one letter, $155 for another, $150 each for two and $100 each for three; Mr. Hill $155 for one letter and $122.50 for another, and Mr. C. Walter $145 for a letter from Stevenson to his mother, in which he mentions Sargent, the artist, and Gladstone.

The total of the session was $8,983.00, and the grand total of the Stevenson sales that far, $75,477.95.

Part III of the collection was sold Thursday aft. and reached a total of $7,638.50, making a grand total for the sale of the three parts of this remarkable collection of Stevensoniana, which began last fall, $83,116.45.

The bidding at the concluding session was lively, but limited almost entirely to autograph dealers. The highest price Thurs. (in fact, for the two days), was $387.50, paid by Mr. George D. Smith for a 30-page letter, written by Stevenson when he was only 19 years old, describing a trip to the Shetland Islands on the lighthouse steamer "Pharoe." This MSS. has never been published.

A letter of strong interest to artists and art lovers is the one in which he speaks of his portrait done by the late John Alexander: "Alexander did a good thing of me at last; it looks like a mixture of an aztec idol, a lion, an Indian Rajah, and a woman; and certainly represents a mighty comic figure."

Mr. W. M. Hill paid $107.50 for the first edition, original wrappers of "Testimonials in Favour of Robert Louis Stevenson, Advocate."

Salmagundi Club Auction.

With Bruce Crane, the landscapist, acting as auctioneer, the Salmagundi Club, 14 West 12 St., conducted the first session of the annual sale of pictures by artist members on Wed. eve., Feb. 16, the total realized for 68 oils and watercolors amounting to $3,044, about $600 in excess of the figures reached on the first evening a year ago. There were 203 paintings to be sold.

E. A. Bell's charmingly modeled head of a beautiful girl in profile, wearing a yellow rose, "The Yellow Rose," brought the top price of the first night's session, $252, and was purchased by Mr. Percy Bullard. John F. Carlson's "Winter Light" sold for $205 to Mr. H. S. Bowen, and a fine composition, "River Seine," by Arthur Powell, brought $181 from A. W. Vogt. Other fair prices paid were $140 for Geo. M. Brustle's "Summer Clouds," purchased by H. S. Bowen; $140 for C. Warren Eaton's "Sunset—Holland," also bought by Mr. Bowen; $126 for "Autumn," by Cullen Yates, Dr. H. C. Seabury, buyer; and $105 for F. J. Waugh's "Big Surf," bought by Mr. Hal Marchbanks.

The total amount realized at the second evening's sale was $3,550, making a total for Wed. and Thurs. eves. of $6,594. The top price of the second session was $210 paid by Mr. R. E. Lippert for Carleton Wiggins' "October Morning." Other fair prices were $185 for C. C. Curran's "Hill Top" and $170 for Leonard Ochtman's "February." The total for the 3 sale evenings will be announced in next week's issue.

Sydney Herbert Book Sale.

At the opening Wed. eve. of the Sydney Herbert, and others, sale of books at the American Art Galleries, Mr. J. H. Batcheller gave $112.50 for Johnson's "Works of the English Poets," in 75 vols. Mr. Swan, agent, paid $101 for "Parisian Costumes and Views"; Mr. H. R. Lenberg, $75 for Mme. D'Arblay's "Diary and Letters" and Mr. G. D. Smith $60 for Shirley's Beaumont-Fletcher. The total of the session was $2,545.50.

At the second session on Thursday, Mr. F. W. Morris paid $435 for a first edition of Dickens' "Sketches by Boz." The total of the session was $8,294.50.

Boyajian Rug Sale.

A Persian Palace Keshon silk carpet fetched $475 from Mrs. P. S. Bennett at the opening session Tuesday, of the Boyajian rug sale at Silo's. Mr. J. E. Goodhue gave $235 for an antique Sultana-bad carpet and $190 for a Chinese rug.

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

HOW PICTURES APPRECIATE.

The high figures brought by the BlakeLOCKS in the Lambert sale have attracted wide public attention, and already almost a deluge of pictures, large and small, attributed to the old and insane painter is flowing in upon collectors and dealers. To the ART NEWS office has come some of these works, and sad to say not one was genuine. Harry Watrous, Secretary of the Academy of Design, who worked with Blakelock in the latter's studio for some years, and who probably knows his work as well as could anyone, has had a throng of callers at his studio, carrying Blakelocks and a number of letters from points as far off as Chicago, offering others for his inspection. He says that the majority of the pictures that have been brought him are spurious, but that he has been frankly puzzled to decide on others—so cleverly has Blakelock's peculiar technique been imitated. It would appear that the young Brooklyn artist, from whom proceeded three or more years ago a number of small canvases, and such direct imitations of Blakelock's manner as to deceive even some good judges—among them a representative of the bankrupt firm of Moulton and Ricketts—is still at work, although it must be said for him that he does not sign the pictures he paints in the Blakelock manner. That is done by others.

The chief reason for the high prices brought by the Lambert Blakelocks was that Mr. Lambert purchased them direct from the artist himself, who he knew well.

It is pathetic to contemplate the fact that the smaller Blakelocks which brought prices in the thousands, at this week's sale, were originally sold by the artist for an average of $100 each.

The superb "Moonlight," which brought $20,000 on Tuesday evening, it is generally understood, cost Mr. Lambert only $500, and the artist was glad to get this sum for it.

CONTRASTING SALE FIGURES.

The anticipation that the sale of the Lambert pictures and sculptures would reach the million mark, while not realized—was undoubtedly due to the presence in the collection of so many old pictures whose attributions could be questioned.

It is interesting, in this connection, to recall the totals of other great picture sales of recent years. The Yerke's sale of April, 1910 reached a total of $932,150; the Borden sale, Feb. 14-17, 1913, one of $796,050, and the Emerson-McMillin sale of Feb. 20-23, 1913, one of $442,395.

At the Borden sale a Romney portrait, the "Woollett Children," sold for $100,000 to Scott and Fowles; a Corot to Senator Clark for $41,500, a George Inness to Miss Lorenz, as agent, for $24,000, a Turner for $105,000 to Seaman, as agent, and a Rembrandt "Lucretia Stabbing Herself" for $130,000 to Knoedler & Co.

The highest figures paid for pictures at the Emerson-McMillin sale were $75,000 for a Corot, purchased by Mr. E. W. Burke of Cleveland, Ohio, and $12,000, paid for a Wyant by Knoedler & Co.

NOT ANTIQUES AT ALL.

As the end of a somewhat long litigation, the U. S. Court of Customs Appeals, in a decision by Judge Barber, has finally decided that Prof. W. H. Baltzell of Wellesley, Mass., must pay full duty of 45 per cent., as a manufacture of marble, on his round stone temple, alleged to date from the XVII century, and that it was less than fifty years old and could therefore not be admitted free as an antique. Prof. Baltzell is said to have paid nearly $100,000 for the work in Italy, it being held to be an old copy of an ancient shrine of Pallas. Though Dr. Paul W. Hoffman of the Boston Museum held it to be genuine, Mr. Clarence L. Lersner, examiner of antiques at Boston, said that it was in part machine made, while A. P. Nardini, an artist, thought it had been artificially colored to simulate age.

Judge Barber also decided that a marble copy of a mantel in the Doge's Palace at Venice, imported by the Halle Bros., must pay 45 per cent. as a manufacture of marble and not 15 per cent. as a sculpture.

Henry Merwin Shradys's cavalry group in bronze for the Grant Monument at Washington has been finished. It is a companion to the artillery group now in place, and the two are the largest ever cast in America.

ENGLISH PICTURE DUPES.

"Many newly rich persons in the woolen districts of England," says the Westminster Gazette, "have been duped by a party of itinerant picture-dealers. The victims belong chiefly to the class who have gained large profits of late from government contracts for army clothing.

"The dealers are scarcely likely to extend their activities to any district in which expert advice would be sure to precede purchases of works of art. Fortified with abundant funds and a few genuine examples of works by two artists of repute, one a famous landscape painter in oil, the other a water-colorist of even greater celebrity, the salesmen of the party were wont, in an evening, to motor up in great style to the mansions of the Leeds, Bradford, and Huddersfield manufacturers. The car was laden with pictures, and a plausible story was told to the people about to be fleeced.

"A wealthy lady," the dealers proceeded to explain, "whose husband had fallen in

A STUART WASHINGTON SOLD.

The sale is reported of one of the original pictures of Washington by Gilbert Stuart, by the Holland Galleries to a well known New York collector, for a good sum. The portrait was passed upon by Messrs. Charles Henry Hart, William Macbeth, and other authorities on early American painting, and the owner is to be congratulated on its purchase, and the Holland Galleries on its sale.

TO SHOW ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

The Nat'l Arts Club is preparing to hold from March 8-25, what is certain to prove a most interesting exhibition. It will consist of the portraits of the National Academicians and associates furnished by them and mainly self portraits, which form part of the permanent collections of the National Academy and have never been publicly shown.

A COPLEY PUZZLE.

Two fine Colonial portraits recently shown at the Century Ass'n gallery without attribution, have excited some interest as works possibly executed by John Singleton Copley during his New York visit in 1772. Henry Rutgers Marshall, the architect, owns these portraits and loaned them for exhibition, has recently had them carefully restored, and calls attention to a similarity in the woman's portrait to the Copley portrait of Mrs. Thos. Dongan, owned by the Vose Gallery in Boston.

The woman's portrait also resembles the N. Y. Historical Society's portrait of Mary Phillipse, which has been attributed to Copley, as well as the Historical Society's De Puyster portraits (wrongly attributed to Copley). The hand of Wollaston or Blackburn has been suggested as the possible executant of all these interesting old portraits, and while the existing evidence does not entirely dispel the theory that Copley may have painted the pictures in question (which represent ancestors of Mr. Marshall), the superficial indications are discouraging to the idea that they may be Copleys. The need of more light upon the lives and productions of Copley's contemporaries and especially of Jonathan Blackburn, is thus emphasized anew. The difficulties of making correct attributions of early American portraits are increasing with the increase of examples coming forth from family possession. Nothing but authoritative biographies of the early artists founded on deep research, will rescue from confusion and restore to the credit of their actual painters many admirable family portraits which deservedly take rank as works of art.

ART APPRAISERS DIFFER.

A wide difference in the estimates of two appraisers as to the market values of a collection of pictures left by Miss Marguerite B. Hicks of this city, who died in September, 1914, to the Metropolitan Museum and declined by that Institution, and which, after the appraisal were sold at auction by Mr. Hiram H. Parke last December—proves, if proof were needed, the unwisdom of the present custom of attorneys and executors for estates, employing persons for art appraisals whose appraisals prove them not qualified for such work.

In the case of Miss Hicks' pictures, a Mr. Philip J. Curry, said to be an art auctioneer, placed the total value of 48 paintings, chiefly modern Italian works, such as the average American tourist picks up in Naples, Rome, Venice or Florence, at $5,633. He appraised a small watercolor, signed by A. H. Wyant at $500, and a large canvas, "Boy Feeding a Calf," attributed to Landseer, at $2,000.

The heirs of Miss Hicks, being dissatisfied with this appraisal, and the consequent inheritance tax made necessary by it, called in the appraiser of the AMERICAN ART NEWS Co. to reappraise the pictures. This appraiser gave a total value to the entire collection of $1,330, at the best, and testified in an affidavit, that the so-called Landseer was presumably not by that artist at all, and at the best was worth only $500, if that, while the attributed Wyant watercolor had no value.

The ART NEWS appraiser was well sustained in his opinion when at the auction the paintings only brought $320, the Landseer fetching only $150 and the Wyant watercolor only $5.

Allowance must be made for the unreasonable time of the auction, and the further fact that the auctioneer, Mr. Parke was a new arrival from Phila. and his rooms at Broadway and 22 St., and his name were not known to N. Y. auction frequenters and picture buyers. Otherwise the pictures would have probably reached the estimate of the ART NEWS

ENGLAND TO CLOSE ALL MUSEUMS.

In the interests of public economy the British government has decided to close all museums and galleries to the public. This will release men for active service and will allow of the buildings to be used by government departments. The annual upkeep of the galleries, according to the estimates of 1915-16, was about £300,000 ($1,500,000). The attendances have greatly diminished. In 1912 the Wallace collection was visited by 175,000, in 1914 by 75,000 and in the first nine months of 1915 by 47,000.

the war, had resolved to sell his art collection privately." With this introduction two or three genuinely signed pictures were displayed, and as soon as a favorable impression had been produced, the rest of the stock was brought out and the sales of spurious works effected. In one case a cheque for about £700 was thus obtained.

"To heighten the deception, an offer was put forward to buy back for £100 a picture sold to a Huddersfield millowner for £25. The buyer replied 'No, I will not resell. If the picture is worth £100 to someone else it is worth that amount to me.' Of course the tricky salesmen knew how to exploit this incident at its full value. The picture when professionally valued was found to command a sale at £2 only. A rare harvest has been reaped by the agents of the imaginary widow."

Mr. Torrey, of Vickery, Atkins & Torrey, of San Francisco recently arrived in N. Y.

ARCHITECTURAL LEAGUE REPLIES.

The Association of American Painters and Sculptors, which protested against the exclusion of Mr. Charles H. Caffin from the recent press view of the Architectural League, has received the following communication from William Laurel Harris, who, as the press agent of the League, personally refused admission to Mr. Caffin:

"My attention having been called to the erroneous statements which you have caused to be published, I wish to state that the Architectural League has never employed a press agent, and that no Art Critic has ever been excluded from our exhibitions because of adverse criticism which he may have written.

"Very truly yours,
"Wm. Laurel Harris."

A memorial exhibition of works by the late John W. Alexander at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, will open Feb. 29.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.

The sale of the art collections formed by Mr. Catholina Lambert was concluded at the fifth session—counting in the sale of sculptures at the American Art Galleries on Wednesday aft.—in the Plaza Hotel ballroom on Thursday eve, when a total of $195,900 was realized. This, added to the totals of the four previous sessions, made a grand total for the entire sale of $522,110 less $1,690 loss on 11 pictures resold at the last session, because not claimed, or a correct grand total of $590,420. The story of the sale follows:

The first session of the sale, Monday evening, brought a large attendance, but more largely composed of art lovers and curiosity seekers than collectors, as the pictures offered, with the exception of the examples of Michel, Monticelli, the American Blakelock and a few others, notably a Knaus, two Monets, a Lepine and a Sisley and Pissarro were not especially important.

The dealers were well represented, but did not buy largely, while only two museums, those of Toledo and Seattle were purchasers—the first of the late Julian Rix's "Devonshire Farmhouse," for $600, and the latter of the large nude "Susannah and the Elders," by Winterhalter for $900.

Among the buyers were Joseph Stransky, the musician, who bought the "Landscape and Pigs," by Ludwig Knaus for $1,825, and Lindenschmidt's "Luther and the Reformers," for $500, and Dr. Cadegine, an Argentine buyer, who secured "The Persecution of the Huguenots," by L. E. Gros for $950, and "Repetition of Mirame Before Cardinal Richelieu" by Adrien Moreau for $1,575.

The examples of Blakelock sold well, better on the whole than those of Monticelli, which was a surprise. Some examples of Michel also brought good prices.

The highest figure of the session was $3,500 for Renoir's "Olive Trees near Marseilles." The total of the session for 100 pictures was $63,385.

First Session Prices.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Monday evening, with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices.

Table listing art pieces sold at the first session, including titles like 'Cave of Endor', 'Stable of the Nativity', 'Early Morning', 'Study', 'River Scene', 'On the Riverside', 'Casus Belli', 'Landscape and Pigs', 'Landscape', 'Chevaux au Bord de la Mer', 'Lady with Fan', 'Cavalier', 'Faust and Marguerite', 'Flower Piece', 'Landscape and Moonlight', and 'Landscape'.

Main table listing art pieces sold at the second session, including titles like 'Landscape', 'Landscape with Castle', 'Landscape with Trees', 'Arrival', 'The Meet', 'Moonlight', 'A Vista in France', 'Marine', 'Landscape', 'Uninvited Guests', 'Herald of the Tower', 'Head of Girl', 'La Baignade Des Chevaux', 'Street Scene', 'Peasant Boy of Apennines', 'The Griffin', 'The Cavalcade', 'On the Terrace', 'Feeding the Chickens', 'Samson and Delilah', 'Landscape with Windmill', 'Landscape', 'Oriental Scene', 'View in the Midi', 'On the Seine', 'On the Highway', 'Moonrise', 'Landscape', 'Landscape', 'Three Ladies', 'Arrival of Cupid', 'Lady's Portrait', 'Poultry Yard', 'Landscape', 'Ruined Chateau', 'Landscape', 'Flower Piece', 'Flower Piece', 'Landscape', 'Seacoast with Boats and Figures', 'Louvectennes', 'On Coast of Normandy', 'Oliviers de L'Estaque', 'Landscape', 'The Lake', 'The Carrefour', 'Road to Monastery', 'Frosty Morning', 'Marine', 'Confidences', 'Interior of Cathedral', 'Windsor Castle', 'Villa Castellani', 'Interior of Cathedral', 'Marine', 'Dordrecht', 'Landscape', 'Women Bathing', 'The Persecution of the Huguenots', 'Repetition of Mirame', 'Dordrecht', 'Landscape', 'Marine', 'Shore at Portrieux', 'Marine', 'Scene in Netherlands', 'Dutch Landscape', 'Dutch Landscape', 'A Seaport', 'Shore at Portrieux', 'Marine', 'Scene in Netherlands', 'Dutch Landscape', 'Dutch Landscape', 'Pontoise', 'Pontoise'.

Table listing art pieces sold at the second session, including titles like 'Flowers', 'Napoleon Bidding Farewell to Empress Josephine', 'Military Subject', 'Landscape', 'Landscape', 'Head of Monk', 'Reading the Letter'.

Second Session.

The second session Tuesday night proved one of the most successful picture auctions ever held in New York, some 101 pictures having been sold for a total of $238,160. Ralph A. Blakelock's large and superb upright landscape, 72 inches in height by 47 1/2 inches wide, entitled "Moonlight," reproduced in the ART NEWS of Feb. 5, was purchased by Mr. Henry Reinhardt for the Toledo (Ohio) Museum of Art for $20,000—the second highest figure ever paid for an American picture at auction—a landscape by George Inness having been sold at the Borden sale, Feb. 14-17, 1913, two seasons ago through Miss Lorenz as agent, for $25,000. The only Blakelock that ever approached these figures in any auction sale was another "Moonlight," 27x37 inches, which brought $13,900 at the W. T. Evans sale in 1913.

The French impressionist painter Renoir's "Girl Knitting" brought, for him, the record auction price from Scott & Fowles of $16,200.

Again, as at the first session, several of the American pictures "topped" those obtained for some of the most noted foreign painters' work, and old New York picture buyers, dealers and art lovers almost gasped to see Blakelock pass Corot and even such masters as Monet, and in several cases Renoir and Monticelli. Three landscapes by Blakelock sold respectively to William Macbeth and Scott & Fowles for $3,800, $3,300, and $3,100, another "Sunset" to Scott & Fowles for $5,600 and still another to Wm. Macbeth for $6,300.

The highest price paid for a Corot was $6,300, given by Mr. John Levy for "Evening," while another sold to Mr. John R. Thompson of Chicago for $3,800. A Delacroix, "Lion Feeding," brought $5,100 from Durand-Ruel; a good landscape by Jules Dupre $4,500 from Mr. S. R. Guggenheim; and a Daubigny, "Apple Orchard," $2,125 from Knoedler & Co. The highest figure given for any of the works of the French impressionists, outside of the $16,200 for the Renoir, was $7,700 paid by Bernet as agent for Monet's "The River." There were a number of examples of Monticelli in the sale and some of them brought very high prices. The "Woodland Fete" was bought by R. C. & N. M. Vose of Boston for $6,700; the "Floral Festival" by Mr. Arthur Ryle for $6,500; and the "Autumn" by Mr. Bernet as agent for $7,100.

After Blakelock and Renoir, Puvis de Chavannes brought the highest figures of the sale. His "Meeting of Saints Germaine and Genevieve," was bought by Mr. F. von Hellman for $18,000, and his frieze by the same for $3,300. The Holland Galleries gave $6,000 for the classical scene attributed to Turner, but more resembling Claude Lorraine. The two large works by the Russian painter Verestchagin did not sell at high figures, "The Pearl Mosque at Agra," going to Bernet as agent for $1,500, and the large and fine but almost panoramic view of Moscow, nearly 15 feet in length and 12 feet in height going to Mr. H. Loewenstein for $2,550.

There were more buyers at the second session and the bidding was more spirited.

Third Session.

At the third session Wednesday evening, Mr. Kirby called the attention of the audience to the fact that there were always "doubting Thomases" as to the attribution of old pictures and that those he was about to sell, which came under the general title of "Old Masters," had been given their attributions with the greatest care and after study and research by the English art writer and compiler, Mr. W. L. Roberts, who made the catalog.

The session was not as exciting or interesting as that of Tuesday evening, but although the bidding was never over-spirited it did not lag and fair prices were obtained, on the whole. A total of $90,715 was realized for 89 pictures, all by painters of the early Italian, Dutch, Flemish and English schools—an average of a little more than $1,000 a picture.

There were no sensational features in Wednesday night's sale, and the highest figure reached $8,100, paid for a "Portrait of William Herschel," the astronomer, given to Romney, by Bernet as agent, and the same amount, by the same buyer, for Sir Francis Cotes' charming portrait of the Marchioness of Rockingham, given to Reynolds by some critics. Mr. Kirby read a letter from Mr. Lambert regarding this last canvas, stating his belief, as also that of the late Sir William Agnew and others, that the work is a genuine one by Reynolds.

Some of the collectors present were Mr. Henry Babcock, and Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, Mr. Thos. N. McCarter of Newark, N. J., who bought quite largely, Mr. K. Gilchrist, Mr. J. E. Aldred, Mr. Hugh A. Murray, and Mmes. E. S. Bayer, Spencer, Kellogg and others. The dealers were not out in force and were not buyers to any extent. The Ehrich Galleries secured Daniel Mytens' fine full-length standing portrait of the Marquess of Huntley for the low figure of $850, and the attractive "Holy Family," by Cariani at an equally low figure of $475; while John Fenning bought, among other pictures at low figures, the two large and showy portraits of George III and his consort Queen Charlotte for $525 each.

Fourth Session.

The fourth and concluding session of the sale of the pictures Thursday eve. resulted in a total of $195,900. The session was marked, while a comparatively quiet one, by the highest figures of the sale, notably the $33,500 paid for the altar piece by Bernardino Luini, which was secured for the Brooklyn Museum by Mr. A. A. Healey; the $27,000 paid for the large and beautiful "Holy Family," by Andrea del Sarto, which went to an anonymous buyer through Mr. W. W. Seaman as agent, and on which Mr. F. R. Welsh of Phila. was the under bidder, and the $22,000 paid for the large oval "Madonna and Child," attributed to Botticelli, which again went to an anonymous buyer through Mr. O. Bernet as agent.

There were a number of new buyers, notably, former Atty Gen. John W. Griggs and Messrs. R. Schwarzenbach, Jacob Rosbach, F. J. Arendt and H. B. Boston, and Mmes. R. O. Sinclair, W. G. Walters, M. J. Lewis, G. K. Springer, and it was reported, Chas. B. Alexander, while Messrs. D. G. Dery, A. A. Healey, Robt. Glendening, J. E. Aldred, Julian Detmar, J. H. Bailey, R. H. Kriesser and Arthur M. Gardner, most of whom were buyers at the previous sessions, were again to the fore.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will soon appear.

LESSONS OF LAMBERT SALE.

The full story of the much anticipated sale of the pictures and a few sculptures, owned by Mr. Catholina Lambert, the veteran American collector, is told at length in our columns today.

While the sale brought a good total, it, perhaps naturally, fell far below the appraisal of the collections, made when Mr. Lambert executed a two-years' Trust deed of all his personal properties to the Paterson Trust Co. in the fateful war Autumn of 1914. The amount obtained is far above that which the collections cost their owner, and if the history of his purchases of individual pictures could be told, it would prove, as we have so often contended, that good art works are, if bought prudently and closely, almost always one of the best possible investments.

As was predicted the largest gains were made by the paintings by modern American and Foreign masters, and especially by the works of the American Blakelock, whose superb "Moonlight" brought the second record price ever obtained by an American picture at auction, and the Frenchman, Monticelli, both of which painters Mr. Lambert knew personally and well, by those of the French Impressionists, Monet, Pissaro, Sisley, and by those of Boudin, and Puvis de Chavannes. The old pictures sold as well as was expected, and many bargains were secured by collectors who were willing to risk the correctness of attributions, and others, who wisely bought, as Mr. Kirby sagely advised on Wednesday evening, "for quality and not names."

The sale was a disappointment to the art trade, in that it did not bring out any marked number of new collectors, and was not participated in by old or well-known ones to any extent. The new Argentine art mart was represented by a Dr. Cadegene, who made several good purchases. But, on the whole, the sale especially in the case of modern pictures, was a successful one and undoubtedly would have reached the appraisal total of a million, had the public been more assured as to the correctness of the catalog's attributions of the old pictures.

THE FEBRUARY BURLINGTON.

The late Arthur Hughes' "April Love," in the National Gallery of British Art, furnishes the frontispiece for the Feb. number of Burlington Magazine. In his note on the picture "R. R." calls attention to the fact that Time has decided in favor of the New York workingman's appreciation of pre-Raphaelitism, as shown in exhibition in the city in 1857. A note on the National Museum of Florence treats of Giotto de Nicola. Andreas Lindblom writes about the "Cope of Ska" and Sir Martin Conway discourses on "Religion and Art." Lionel Cust writes of a portrait sketch of a youth by Hals and R. C. Witt discusses the cataloging of the Nat'l Gallery. Dr. Sprigg continues his talks on "Art and Medicine." The Burlington may be had from the American Agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40th Street.

Max Kuehne has spent the past two years painting in Spain. He expects to return to New York in the Spring.

CORRESPONDENCE

Boston Interprets German "Kultur."
Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:
I read with interest the very patriotic letter of the gifted member of the staff of the well-known German art publication and I am glad to be able to corroborate his assertion that German interest in art is not lessened by the war. I have seen mentioned several instances where art directors had been assigned to collecting, carrying to Berlin, and studying objects stolen from museums and private residences in Poland, Belgium and France. "Kultur," the writer tells us, means caring "most of all for art in every form"—even in the form of stolen goods.

If "art activity" means an undiminished stream of German pictures and statues, the world will shudder.

Yours faithfully,
T. S. Perry.

Also at the First Water Color Meeting.
Editor American Art News,

Dear Sir:
Perhaps it is of no great importance to the world at large, but the statement in the article on the 49th exhibition of the American Water Color Society that Samuel Coleman is at present the only survivor of its foundation is not entirely accurate. Technically it may be correct, but actually it is not.

At the time the Society was started I was still in my teens, taking lessons from an Irish artist named William Craig. One day he said that a meeting was to be held to consider the formation of an association of painters in water colors, and invited me to go to it with him, which I did, but took no part in the proceedings, and was probably not even introduced to any one present. The first meetings were very informal and without careful minutes, so I do not think my name appeared until I paid my first annual dues of twelve dollars, but "I was there all the same."

I could enlarge on many interesting items connected with our early struggle for existence, but I spare your space and patience.

Very truly yours,
J. C. Nicoll.

ART BOOK REVIEW.

Impressions of The Art at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. By Christian Brinton. Octavo. John Lane Co. $3 Net.

The author of this interesting volume, true to his degrees of M. A. and Litt. D., grapples with the problem of modern art, as precipitated by the displays at the Exposition, in the spirit of orthodox scholasticism. His impressions are those of a critic who wants to be sure of his ground, one who is willing to accept information, one who is willing even to go out of his way to "find out." Dr. Brinton is not a slaying critic, indeed beside such an "angel of destruction" as W. H. Wright, he seems the quintessence of mellifluous tolerance.

For Dr. Brinton has even listened to Picabia, long and attentively enough to quote him, and as for Henri-Matisse, it is enough to say, there are no "Matissean" terrors for him.

Dr. Brinton's general position with regard to modernism is very clearly summed up in his phrase—"It matters little, in the end, whether the message of art be conveyed through the employment of lines, dots, dashes, cubes or spheres." So much for general position—little to quarrel with in that.

With his attitude as to specific examples of modern art, the justness of his discriminatory sense, the worth of his opinions, many will demur, although few can doubt that his conclusions are fairly arrived at and stated with frankness and clarity. One looks in vain for any breaking of new ground from a man whose literary art follows confirmed lines. One looks in vain for any bringing forward of new men, although there do appear in the foreign sections some names comparatively unfamiliar to Americans.

The section devoted to Americans is of first importance. Here the author startles one a little by calling La Farge "at best a studious, eclectic amateur."—La Farge, the writer thinks, one of the few great figures in American painting of the last century—while Th. Robinson and Twachtman are cordially hailed, the former as the "purest lyric talent we have produced." Duveen's display is noted as the "chief success among living Americans," the "periodic prize winners" are observed as "specialists," while to the "younger element" one looks for "less perfunctory impression of contemporary painting"—Frieske, Lever, Lie, Griffin, Bellows and Arthur Carles. The notes on the foreign exhibits lead to the conclusion that "we have not thus far solved the problem of assembling a satisfactory exhibition of international painting and sculpture.

The illustrations to this volume are numerous and fine, Vincent Van Gogh's "Moulin de la Galette" being one of the most striking. The Brangwyn decorations are given in color while a color print of Gari Melchers' "Skaters" serves as a frontispiece. James Britton.

American Painter in British Army.

Lieut Elmer Schofield, the well-known landscape painter, who is now serving with the British Army, is stationed at Pendennis Castle, Falmouth, Cornwall. The ART NEWS, by courtesy of his friend, Parker Newton, is enabled, this week, to present a portrait of him in uniform.

ITALIAN NOTES.

An exhibition and sale of caricatures was held in Turin during Dec., the proceeds of which were given to the Institute for soldiers crippled during the war. Besides the productions of well known Italian caricaturists, there were also shown works by the celebrated French artists, Favre, Guillaume, and Poulbot, and drawings by Mario Tosini, a gifted young caricaturist who was killed lately in the fighting against the Austrians.

The Austrian bombs spared the monuments of Verona, but among their numerous human victims was Prof. Attilio Sparri, a sculptor of note.

In the abandoned church of San Antonio, at Lugano, has been discovered a painting by Giovanni Batista Discepoli, called the "Dwarf of Lugano." The finding of this work is important as it not only bears the date (1624) when it was painted, but also the age (22) of the artist. The subject of the picture is "The Annunciation."

Some precious illuminated Mss. were stolen lately from the Royal Academy of the Liueli in Rome. The theft was discovered when a foreigner and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, presented themselves at the Academy asking permission of the Librarian to study some of these illuminations. After a long search, the police found out that the documents in question had been sold by an antiquary in Florence for the sum of 20,000 lire to a wealthy foreigner, who, when he heard of their having been stolen, returned them to the Ministry of Public Instruction.

LONDON LETTER.

February 16, 1916.

It is reported that our detective force is busily engaged just now in endeavouring to elucidate the mystery of the whereabouts of the many curios and works of art, which have been stolen during the past year or two from dealers, museums and private collectors. One would imagine that the opportunities enjoyed by thieves for disposing of treasures, of practically world-wide fame, would be exceedingly small, but the police are of the opinion that as a rule a purchaser has already been found before the theft takes place and that many an ardent collector is quite satisfied to possess a picture or antique which he is unable to display, provided it is of rare or historical interest.

In many instances the stolen goods have little or no intrinsic value and consequently would not attract the attention of the common burglar, but in the opinion of Scotland Yard, there are few individuals so unscrupulous as the collector, and men, who in other matters are models of probity, will disdain no means, however, shady, to add a coveted article to their artistic hoards. The fact that the stolen goods probably pass into no more than one set of hands after the theft and are not circulated or widely offered for sale, adds to the difficulty of our detectives, who so far have had to confess themselves baffled. The latest burglary of antiques is that which took place a few days ago on the premises of Mr. Percy Webster, a dealer who specializes in antique clocks and watches. In this case the theory is advanced that the theft was carried out by a "swell mobster."

There is to be another Red Cross Sale at Christie's this Spring, and Mr. Sargent has already designed in aid of it a Sargent envelope, to be sold in connection with Red Cross notepaper in aid of the Fund. The decoration of the envelope consists of two figures posed against a background formed by a Red Cross. One is the figure of a wounded soldier, bearing in one hand a banner and in the other a sword, the second is a nurse helping the hero from his stretcher. The design displays the greatest force and virility and while excellent from the artistic point of view is equally happy in regard to the purpose for which it is intended. A number of leading portrait painters have again promised to paint portraits for the highest bidders and many contemporary artists have promised of their best.

R. A. to Have Its Own Catalog.

An innovation is to be introduced this Spring by the Directors of Burlington House, who have decided to issue an official illustrated catalog, of the Academy pictures on their own account, thus dealing a death blow to the various independent editions of reproductions. The official catalog is to cost 2 shillings and will be on sale inside the building.

The Dowdeswell Galleries at 160 New Bond Street are occupied just now with an exhibition of drawings, illustrating portions of the New Testament, by the Dutch artist, M. Bauer. This is a "one-man" show of uncommon interest, for it consists of work which is not alone masterly in regard to technique, but also distinguished by a power of imagination as unusual as it is subtle. Mr. Bauer's sense of beauty is combined with a singular appreciation of the dramatic effect to be produced by his Rembrandtesque methods of lighting, methods which indeed often remind the spectator of the masterpieces of his great forebear in art. Mr. Bauer's talent is displayed to its best in these Biblical themes for he knows how to command the dignity and restraint so necessary to his subject and never belittles his composition by trivial or inessential detail.

Antique Furniture Sales.

Never have sales of antique furniture been better attended than during the last few weeks, for in consequence of the diminished supply of labor, combined with the increased difficulties of obtaining wood from abroad, the price of modern stuff has materially increased, with the result that old furniture is being purchased from motives of pure economy. Furniture dealers, who during the first few months of the war, believed themselves to be face to face with bankruptcy, now find it difficult to secure enough to satisfy the demand, and are putting up the price of their goods in consequence.

There is no doubt that quite a large proportion of the separation allowances paid to working class wives is at once expended on articles of furniture long desired, but unattainable on the income of ordinary peace times, so that the factories are kept busy on the production of the low-priced, but exceedingly profitable type of cheap goods, leaving the better class customer to satisfy his requirements on antique or second hand furniture of good workmanship.

AMERICANS AT VOSE'S.

Boston, Feb. 23, 1916.

An exceptionally interesting and important exhibition of works by the strongest modern American painters, notably J. Alden Weir, George Inness, George Fuller, John La Farge, J. Francis Murphy, Elliott Daingerfield, Paul Dougherty, F. W. Benson, C. W. Hawthorne, Daniel Garber, Ballard Williams, Luis Mora, Emil Carlson and others is now on in the Galleries of R. C. & N. M. Vose, 394-398 Boylston Street.

The "star" pictures in this most important display are the really great landscape by the late George Inness, "Even Tide—Tarpon Springs, Fla." painted in 1893 and never before publicly exhibited, and a companion to the well known "Home of the Heron," owned by the Chicago Art Institute, and the two most characteristic and satisfactory examples of the art of J. Alden Weir, president of the National Academy of Design, "The Sisters" and "The Flower Girl," both reproduced in this issue.

infant standing at three-quarter length by a table. The figures are more modeled than usual, however.

There are three examples, all typical autumn landscapes, of J. Francis Murphy; and the La Farge is the well known and strong "Boy with a Dog" (portrait of Richard M. Hunt, the architect). There is a fine golden William Keith, and Frieseke's "Venetian Blind," that delicious color harmony in blue. From Elliott Daingerfield comes a recent work, "The Heart of a Rose," one of the largest he has painted and with all his typical and rich color. The composition is a most original one and depicts youth and love; the petals of the rose are young and handsome girls, while a little figure of Cupid forms the center or heart of the flower.

WASHINGTON.

A display of 109 pictures and several sculptures, by the Society of Washington Artists, is now on at the Corcoran Gallery. It is the Society's 25th exhibition. Among

THE FLOWER GIRL
J. Alden Weir

At the R. C. and N. M. Vose Galleries, Boston.

The Weir pictures emphasize the claims of Mr. Weir's admirers that he is the leading American figure painter to-day, and these works in particular, evidence not only his distinguished and original style, but have that feeling, color harmony and, especially, that refinement of expression and technique which marks the artist's work. He has ever been most sensitive to a chaste refinement in subject and treatment, and no painter's work could be more free from any taint of vulgarity. One well known critic has said of these pictures, "They seem to me a step in advance of any of Weir's work that I have seen, and combine the subtle qualities of Whistler and Sargent, without in any respect reminding one of either of those artists."

The example of George Fuller is the three-quarter length figure, "Fedalma," the subject taken from George Eliot's "Spanish Gypsy," and in his most characteristic vein. From the able brush of Charles W. Hawthorne comes "The Mother," a square canvas, the figure of the mother holding an those notably represented are Lucien Powell, Geo. Washington Smith, Hobart Nicholls, Sara H. Munroe, Catherine C. Critcher, W. H. Holmes, Richard N. Brooke, W. B. Closson, C. Bittinger, J. W. Breyfogle, Bertha C. Perrie, L. C. Clephane, Jerome Connor, G. W. Zolnay, H. K. Bush-Browne and R. G. Paine.

LOUISVILLE.

The Louisville Art Ass'n has arranged an attractive exhibit of paintings and etchings by Ernest Peixotto in its rooms in the Public Library, and the artist spoke recently on "Pen Draughtsmanship." The exhibit consists of some 50 etchings. Especially interesting are those of Capravola and the gardens of the Frascati, and the Cascade of the "Villa Torlonia."

The black and whites are the originals of the sketches published with the artist's articles in Scribner's and sketches in his books, "By Italian Seas," "Pacific Shores from Panama," and "Through the French Provinces."

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Feb. 16, 1916.

A reputed Goya, which is shortly to be sent to America, will surely prove of great interest to connoisseurs of art. It will be shown for a time in Burlington House, London, and then at New York in a Fifth Avenue gallery, together with a number of paintings signed by the great Arroganese. Although in some particulars it differs in manner from much of Goya's work that is best known, there are enough intrinsic coincidences to make its attribution to him in a high degree probable. It is more finely finished than was the habit of Goya; but it should be remembered that necessity compelled him during a great part of his life to paint subjects which did not especially appeal to him, and that he took a kind of malicious pleasure in travesty them by means of a seeming brutality of execution, which many have too readily assumed to be one of his chief distinguishing characteristics.

"Le Nain" ("The Dwarf")—for that is the subject of this picture—is evidently the work of predilection, done in his native Province of Saragossa. The dwarf was probably a figure long familiar to him, perhaps associated with his younger years. Thick-set and broad-shouldered, he stands up on a low rush-bottomed chair, wearing a quaint, ill-fitting peasant costume, topped with a large fur-covered cap, and in one hand has a rustic staff. The neutral bistre background, uniform and of a profound transparency, produces an effect of atmospheric fluidity; the gray, brown and yellow tonalities exquisitely harmonized, so as to give to the head its full value. One might almost say the face is depicted with loving care. There is a prodigious vigor of delineation, softened, however, by knowing touches of the brush—caresses, as it were, as if the artist feared to exceed the warrant of his inspiration. In the expression of the features, particularly of the eyes, there is a whole psychological world. In the portraiture of the poor, deformed peasant, the artist, indeed, has produced the effigy of an entire category of human beings. If it could be conclusively shown that this picture is not a Goya, it would still remain the fact that it is a superb performance. It will easily bear comparison with the dwarfs of Velazquez, who were conventional figures of the court; while this of Goya is devoid of factitious grotesqueness, even of romanticism, and is simplicity itself, and hence all the more moving.

Druet, the art dealer, whose taste was discovered and brought into recognition by Rodin, left on his sudden death an important collection of modern works. Whether they will be publicly sold or not is undecided. Druet rose from the condition of a small restaurateur to that of a recognized authority in art. The intermediate step was the profession of photographer. He was the familiar of cabinet ministers, as well as of the famous and the latest artists of the time. Like other of the elder Parisians who were always pointed out in public places, Druet seemed to have been aged by many years since the nightmare of the war began, and for months his appearance had been most pathetic. In other words, the chaos into which the world has apparently been plunged had broke his heart.

There is one gallery of the Rue Royale which remains a centre of interest for art-lovers. I asked its owner yesterday whether in his opinion the war would produce much or any diminution of art prices, through the throwing of small private collections on the market. "Certainly not, as regards antiques," he said. "The number of the authentic old masters is so limited, they are held in such few hands, and we know so well where they are that there can be no danger that the market for them will become demoralized. As to modern works of art, the question is entirely different. There prices are governed by taste or fantasy, as the case may be. I don't think, in any event, that the next twelve months or the period immediately succeeding the war will witness the breaking up of many desirable collections because of financial stress. Most of the people who possess really valuable paintings or sculptures will still be able to hold them."

M. Jacques Zoubaloff, who gave to the Louvre a collection of the bronzes of Barye, which fills two rooms, has presented the city of Paris, for the Petit Palais in the Champs-Elysees, thirty maquettes of some of the principal subjects of the great sculptor of animals, besides forty of his drawings. Nearly all came direct from Barye's studio and still bear traces of the retouches given them by the masters. A public exposition of the Zoubaloff collection is promised for the near future.

Eric Tayne.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York) "I have always fancied that the technic of the Luminists, perhaps best typified by Monet, Sisley, and Pissarro, had its inception in the mosaics of Italy, particularly the Venetian. The superior carrying-power of the church-pictures done in strips of colored glass has always been noticed. A church decoration done in oil loses its effect at a comparatively short distance; while the pictures in mosaic easily carry very much farther."

Walton Memorial Display.

A memorial exhibition of many works by the late William Walton is on at the Century Club Galleries, 7 W. 43rd St. to March 2. An interesting characterization of the painter by Carroll Beckwith forms the nucleus of the group of oils and pastels which are largely fanciful subjects, suggested by classic myths or popular fairy tales. Among the most interesting are "Hesperides," "Ghosts Walk," which has a certain charm and mystery, some little landscape impressions and a study for a tapestry with a hunter, a huntress and hounds.

CHICAGO.

The Zorachs pictures at a local gallery, still continue to attract visitors and create excitement with their rather flamboyant subjects and high-keyed colorings.

The "wild west" paintings by Charles Russell, at Thurber's, remain on the walls because they are applauded by crowds of visitors. Certainly these paintings are inspiring with their sweeps of wild country, their wonderful skies, Indian life, and pioneer men in action.

A large and valuable collection of fine prints by old and modern masters is on exhibition at Roullier's. There are rare acquisitions of traditional prints in this assemblage.

A. Ackerman's colored etchings by N. Brooker Mayhew are installed. Works by American artists are on the walls of the American Gallery. American paintings are on show at Anderson's.

Chicago artists are represented at the Artists' Guild Galleries. At Reinhardt's there's an assemblage of paintings by F. T. Hutchins.

The Art Institute is introducing a collection of drawings, etchings, and engravings by Ernest Haskell.

The Englewoman's Club has awarded its prize in the encouragement for young artists to Martin Hennings.

Leonie C. Lavaron is showing a special collection of wrought silver, bowls, platters and other flatware, in her studio in the Fine Arts Building.

C. R. Ashby of London, fellow of the Royal Institute, and practicing architect, is in the city. Artists and clubs are entertaining him.

The Persian exhibit, from the Panama Exposition, is installed in the Marshall Field Galleries.

Paul Schulze has added Gardner Symons' "Winter Afternoon" to his collection of American paintings.

H. Effa Webster.

BOSTON.

It is a question whether local hunger for art food can equal its supply. Works by Philip Hale, now on view at the Guild of Boston Artists, arouse interest, as always, especially as he is widely known as a writer "as well as an artist, and erstwhile as an art cricket" who chirped "not wisely but too well." Of Mr. Hale it may be said, "this painter can paint." He can also draw (when he feels like it); and he has imagination. One may cavil at his choice of subjects, perhaps, but not at his manner of presentation. One of the best things in the exhibition is his "Girl with Muff," loaned by the Corcoran Gallery—an attractive picture, thoroughly good in technique. "The Madonna of the Porcelain Tub," loaned by Mr. H. H. Sherman, also strikes subtle and complete. In the pastel, "The Spirit of Antique Art," he gives a good rendering of the nude. "La Donna Mi-Velata," "Blue Roses," "The Lady of the Garden," etc.—pictures in all, to the number of twenty—make up an exhibition of sustained and varied interest.

The observer takes a long stride backward from contemporary art in viewing the centenary exhibition of sculptures, paintings and drawings by Dr. William Rimmer, at the Museum. Not that all these works of the physician-sculptor strike one as archaic or out of date. In the sculptures one sees the vigor and power and originality of conception that gave Dr. Rimmer his reputation, as, for instance, in that remarkable work, "The Falling Gladiator," which occupies the center of the forecourt room. Another famous piece is the Centaur, a bronze replica of the one in the Metropolitan Museum. No student of art should miss this exhibition.

But to return to "our" moderns. Elizabeth Wentworth Roberts is exhibiting plein-air effects at a local gallery, which are original and piquant, especially the beachscapes. She has reduced the complexities of the sunlit sands, with small figures disporting thereon, to simple terms, and the whole effect is good, and more than that, true.

The Copley Gallery is showing the work of three excellent artists. Mrs. Leverett Bradley's (Susan Bradley) group of watercolors is spirited in execution, good in color—very competent—although somewhat affected by the modern spirit. Alexander James, son of the late Professor William James, is showing some beautifully drawn heads, subtle in modelling, exquisite in technique, and somewhat atmospheric, although thoroughly "made." There is a strong portrait of Langdon Warner, also portraits of Dr. Chandler Foot, George A. James, William James, Jr., and Mrs. William James, Jr.

The main gallery is occupied by Jessie Wilcox Smith, well-known and skilful depicter of children, with a series of pictures illustrating "Mother Goose," "Kipling's Stores of Children," "T'was the Night Before Christmas," and "Little Women." John Doe.

CINCINNATI.

The exhibition of works by British artists at the Museum is disappointing inasmuch as it is nothing more than the result of a hurry call for paintings without any aim for something representatively English—at least it is to be hoped not. Sims, Orpen, Lavery, Mann are rather poorly represented and the rest are more or less a tame sort. Why should a group of pictures like these, under the conspicuous banner of English art, travel thousands of miles in a country given, long ere this, the chance really to know and appreciate good national British art?

The leap year party given by the students of the Academy last week was a huge success. The general scheme of the decorations was black and white. The climax was a play, in which several of the teachers, Messrs. Hopkins, Wessel and Meakin, were impersonated.

Norbert Heermann.

ST. LOUIS.

The collection of French and Belgian art from the Panama-Pacific Exposition is now on exhibition at the City Museum; and, because of the instructive manner in which it reveals the general tendency of modern art in France, it is receiving much study and attention.

The museum is also showing a coll'n of portraits including interesting examples of Charles Hopkinson, Robert Henri, William Cotton, John C. Johansen and other leading American portrait painters.

Among recent accessions to the museum's collection of paintings are a representative landscape by Henry W. Ranger, a New England village enveloped in the sparkling atmosphere of a summer day; another important landscape, "A Glimpse of the Sea," by F. Ballard Williams; a delightful little figure composition by Alfred Stevens; "Waterfall, Yellowstone Park" by J. H. Twachtman, which forms a valuable

PHILADELPHIA.

The annual exhibition of the Fellowship of the Pa. Academy open to March 4 in the Galleries of the Sketch and Plastic Clubs comprises 201 works selected from about 300 submitted to the jury, and appears to be one of the best shows ever held by this organization of ex-students of the Academy. Not all of them, however, are seen here for the first time, but those that have figured in former local exhibitions happen to be good ones and add perceptibly to the general brilliance of the ensemble. Among these is a charming canvas by Adolphe Borie, "The Letter," and Henry R. Poore's "Autumn Morning," both shown recently at one of the Art Club annuals. As an example of the landscape painter's art at its best Hobart Nichols shows a satisfying picture of "Perkins' Cove, Ogonquit." Richard Blossom Farley has carefully studied sky and seashore effects in his contribution, "After the Storm." Laura D. S. Ladd's "Milldam" has much that is admirable in handling of reflected foliage in still water. Herbert Pullinger exhibits some excellent drawing in his "Bridge." A characteristic snow picture by Fred Wagner is entitled "Winter." The finest bit of figure painting in the show, without doubt, Leopold Seyffert's "Woman of Segovia." Nathalie Morris gives us also the Spanish type in her recalling Zuloaga, "Woman in a Black Shawl," and Nina B. Ward has good painting of the figures in her "Lady in Black" as has also Cesar A. Ricciardi in his "Filomena." Herbert Welsh has fine tonal quality in his Italian landscape, "The Torrent," and Mary Butler exhibits an agreeable, sunny "Temple Hills, New Hampshire."

The Art Club has an exhibition of 43 oils and 51 watercolor marines and landscapes to March 12, the work of the late James B. Sword, one of the founders of the Club. This will be followed on March 19 by the Club's show of oils open for contributions to the profession in general and to works not before publicly shown here. Watercolors by the late F. Hopkinson Smith are on view at McClees' Galleries. An exhibition and sale of rare and desirable prints will be held at James F. Freeman's Gallery in March. At the Stan V. Henkels' auction sale rooms there is being sold this week the valuable libraries of Mr. Warren G. Griffith and the late Judge Robert Ralston, containing many fine editions of works on the Fine Arts.

The "Three Arts Club Journal," the third issue of the first volume of an attractive monthly magazine devoted to the interests of women artists engaged in the professions of Music, Painting and the Drama, including Arts and Crafts and Authorship, has made its appearance. Interesting contributions by Mmes. Leopold Stokowski, Christine Wetherill Stevenson, and Mr. Henry Hanby Hay and a number of beautiful illustrations make the publication a notable accession to the current art literature.

Eugene Castello.

MINNEAPOLIS.

Through the co-operation of the Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts, a general survey of the history of art is presented at this second semester, at the State University. There are thirty-two lectures in the course, fully illustrated, two each week. Director Jos. Breck will give the lectures on Ancient Art; Miss M. T. Jackson, Director's Assistant, on Christian, Romanesque, Gothic and Renaissance Art, and Prof. Robert Koehler, Director Emeritus on Art from the XVII century to the present.

The display of American portraits arranged by the Federation of Arts, has been replaced by the splendid collection of work by members of Society of Illustrators, which will remain until March. The XVIII century period room, is enriched by the recently acquired painting by Tiepolo, a fine example, the head of an old man examining a book with a reading glass. The portrait by Gilbert Stuart just acquired from the income of the Dunwoody Fund is signed and dated 1779. The boy about twelve years of age, is James Ward, who later became the well known engraver. Master Ward's name is on the collar of the dog who stands by his side.

The pictures purchased at the Reisinger sale as listed in the Art News of Jan. 22 are now hung at the Art Institute; "The Beach at Frettal," Boudin; Claus' "In the Shade," Crodel's "Mountain Village in Winter," and Laing's "Storm at Sea." A Cazin is loaned by Mr. Alfred Pillsbury.

Invitations have been sent out by the St. Paul Institute to artists in the upper Mississippi Valley States to submit works for a Spring exhibition. Mr. J. J. Hill has presented a medal to be awarded. It was designed by Paul Manship who was born in St. Paul. A beautiful little relief in plaster was modeled by Miss Margaret De Voe White, a sculptor of Minneapolis, to assist the work of the committee in the plans for "Baby week." Miss White studied at the Minneapolis Art School and in Chicago.

BUFFALO.

Three special exhib'ns of paintings by the "Society of Men Who Paint the Far West," Stephen Parrish and C. C. Coleman are at the Albright Gallery. Several sales have been made. The two first exhibitions will close Feb. 27, but Coleman's will continue until March 2.

During March, the Exhibition of French and Belgian Art, selected from the Panama-Pacific Exposition, which is being shown in the principal cities of America under the management of Miss Cornelia B. Sage, will be shown at the Albright Gallery.

Portraits in charcoal and paintings by James Britton will be shown at the studio of Mme. Marie Apel, March 2-April 1.

link in the museum's collection of earlier American art; and characteristic examples of Frederic C. Frieseke and Ernest Lawson, together with a small but wonderfully drawn pastel by Elihu Vedder.

The print collection is being steadily augmented, and no effort is spared to secure early impressions in the best available state of preservation and by such artists as are needed to round out the collection and make it a representative one. With this end in view, the print committee has recently acquired a fine set of Durer's "Little Passion," two strong portraits by Zorn; two Rembrandts, one of them a self-portrait; and examples of Daubigny, Hayden, Beham, Tiepolo, Webster, and others.

Parke Picture Sale.

At a two evening sessions sale on Feb. 17 and 18 at the Hiram Parke Galleries, 924 Broadway, $8,760 was realized. At the final session an F. E. Church "Heart of the Andes" fetched $300 and a Thaulow "Dutch Canal" $125.

Americana at Collectors Club.

A sale on Feb. 18 at the Collectors Club by Scott and O'Shaughnessy of rare Americana realized $15,480.25. Mr. George D. Smith gave $2,000 for the rare Boston, Mass., 1697 "Narrative of Hannah Swarton," bound in with Mather's "Humiliations followed with Deliverances," and "A Narrative of the Captivity of Hannah Duns-ton." He paid $1,650 for "The History of the Kingdom of Bassurah" Bradford, N. Y., 1715. For "The Mohawk Prayer Books," one of two known copies, he gave $1,010; for "A Mid-Night Cry from the Temple of God, Slumbering and Sleeping," Bradford, N. Y., 1710, $710; for "Bonifacius, an essay upon the Good that is to be Devised and Designed," Boston, 1710, $480; for the manuscript of Foster's song "Oh, Boys, Carry Me Long" and two letters to him from the minstrel Christy, $410; for Mather's "The Voice of God Fe," Boston, 1704, $355; for Burnett's "An Essay on Scripture Prophecy," Bradford, N. Y., 1724, privately printed, $255, and for the Quaker "Principles of Truth, Bradford, circa. 1688, $190. Mr. Robert H. Dodd paid $1,850 for the rare Franklin imprint, one of the two known, The Charter, Land and Catalogue of the Books in the Library Company of Philadelphia, 1757, and $530 for the "Letters to the Right Honorable, the Earl of Millsborough from Gov. Bernard, General Gage, etc.," Boston, 1769. Mr. Walter M. Hill gave $350 for Stephen's "Document, etc.," New York, 1812, the first book printed on railroads in the United States, and Mr. Lathrop C. Harper secured for $290 Johnson's "History of New England," London, $654.

Riviere Collection Sale.

The Robert Riviere & Son of London sale of rare books in fine bindings, sold at the Anderson Galleries on the evening of Feb. 18, fetched $38,410. Mr. Gabriel Weiss gave $9,000 for forty volumes of engravings by French masters of the art, bound in full crushed levant. Mr. Devereaux secured for $1,800 an 18-volume, illustrated edition of the works of Rousseau, Paris, 1793-1800, bound by F. Bozerian. Mr. George D. Smith paid $1,800 for the illuminated and jewelled copy on vellum by Alberto Sangorski of Poe's Annabel Lee and other poems. He also gave $1,100 for a complete set of the first editions of the Waverly novels in blue crushed Levant morocco; $1,150 for an extra illustrated Foster's "Life of Dickens"; $975 for an extra illustrated Blanchard's "Life of George Cruikshank" with 40 of his letters; $810 for Ricardi press "Chaucer," one of 12 on vellum; $775 for "Morte d'Arthur," London, 1910-11; $685 for the Kelm-Scott "Chaucer"; $600 for Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women"; $590 for the first edition of "The Vicar of Wakefield"; $450 for Isabey's "La Vie Ton Temps," with 22 ivory miniatures, by Miss Currie, after Isabey, one on the front cover being surrounded with pearls; $400 for the first edition of "Endymion," and $250 for two manuscripts of Swinburne.

Mr. T. T. Gannon paid $625 for Emerson's "May Day" and $575 for Whittier's "The Female Martyr," "The Witch's Daughter" and "Memories," and $420 for Wordsworth's "Selected Poems," all three done on vellum by Sangorski, the first in jewelled binding. Mr. P. Wolf gave $510 for the London 1897-1910 Kipling edition de luxe. To Mr. Walter M. Hill of Chicago fell at $310 the first folio edition of Beaumont and Fletcher.

J. S. Morgan Print Sale.

At the Junius S. Morgan XVII Century portrait print sale at the American Art Galleries, on the evening of Feb. 18, Vischer's "Gelluis de Bouma" fetched $560. Mr. J. T. Drake gave $280 for Nanteuil's "Duc de Bouillon" and Mr. William Brown $190 each for his "Colbert" and "Cardinal Bentivoglio," and $25 for Flack's "Daniel Digerus." Mr. C. Dillon paid $160 for Edelinck's "Philin de Champagne," Seaman agent $130 for Nanteuil's "Honore Courtin" and Mr. Drake $105 for Nanteuil's "Duke of Beaufort." The total of the sale was $7,515.50.

Joline Library Sale.

The first session of the sale of the last portion of the Library of the late Adrian H. Joline took place at the Anderson Galleries on Wednesday afternoon, and resulted in a total of $1,429.70. The most interesting item sold was a letter of instruction to the first captain in the U. S. Navv, Dudley Saltonstall, dated Phila. Nov. 27, 1775, which was secured for $285 by Mr. W. L. Rogers. Mr. Geo. D. Smith paid $260 for John Hancock's letter to Gen. McCobb, requesting an inventory of the public stores at Penobscott, dated Boston, March 31, 1784, and the same buyer secured for $87.50, a letter of Gen. Burgovne to Major Gen. Riedesel dated Sept. 11, 1777,

At the final session, Thursday, $2,917 was paid, which brings the total for the two sessions to $4,346.55, and for the various Joline sales to $66,693.20. On Thursday Mr. Weiss gave $560 for a Poe letter to Mrs. Shain the day before his wife's death. Mr. Smith paid $290 for the Mss. of Irving's "Story of Abderahman." For the Mss. of Harte's poem "Cicily," Mr. Drake gave $200.

Blakeslee Stock Sale.

The sale of the 467 paintings which form the remainder of the stock of the late Theron J. Blakeslee, and which are now on exhibition at the American Art Galleries, as announced in last week's Art News exclusively, will be held on the five successive evenings, Monday-Friday, Mar. 6-10, inclusive. The first session in the Plaza ballroom and the four succeeding ones at the American Art Galleries.

As will be remembered, the first portion of the Blakeslee pictures, comprising 237 examples of the early Italian, Spanish and Dutch schools was sold on April 21, 1915, by Mr. Kirby of the American Art Association on four evenings in the Plaza ballroom, for a total of $262,235. The 467 pictures now to be sold make up the remainder of the large stock of 704 which the art dealer left in his Galleries at his death.

While the pictures to be sold next week are not on the whole as representative of their various schools and periods as those which made up last year's sale, they include many interesting canvases; and art lovers and collectors will find this exhibition and sale well worth attending and also an opportunity to secure bargains.

The first evening's sale in the Plaza ballroom, when 83 paintings will be offered, will bring, among other notable works one of the American William Keith's golden sunsets; a good Verveoekhoven "Sheep" picture, signed and dated 1878; a Clouet school picture, an attributed Terburg, a "Kit-Kat" portrait of the Countess of Stratford, purchased from Agnew & Sons of London as by Reynolds; a Lawrence period portrait of a lady, another lady's portrait by Sir Francis Cotes, a "Group" by Nicholas Maes, an attributed Constable landscape, a charming little half-length seated portrait of a musician attributed to Van Honthorst, a quaint little portrait group, probably painted in Boston by J. S. Copley, a decorative three-quarter length seated portrait of a lady by Richard Cosway, a most attractive picture of a "Girl with Dog" by the old English engraver, John Raphael Smith, a family group by Frans Denis, the Belgian artist; an interesting full-length standing portrait of a Spanish Prince, in an antique Louis XIV frame, given to Goya; another interesting copy of a Velasquez portrait by del Mazo, a large and interesting composition, "A Visit to Baby," by that strong old early English painter, Rev. William Peters; a full-length standing portrait of a daughter of the Count of Holland, purchased from Sully & Co., of London as by Vandyck; a fine copy of Van Dyck's "Portrait of James Stuart," a "Portrait Group" of a father and four children, quaint and stiff, but strong, by Miereveldt; an "Adoration of the Magi" by Louis Tristan; and a number of examples of or attributed to early painters of the Italian, English, Dutch and Flemish schools.

The more notable pictures of the second session of the sale at the American Art Galleries on the evening of March 7 are a bust portrait of Lady Ashburton, by Geo. F. Watts; a "Madonna and Child," given to Bissolo; another to Di Ricci, a delightful half-length of a young woman by Beechey, a half-length portrait of a nun by the Spaniard Carreno de Miranda, a quaint half-length of a young woman, "Bianca Capella" by A. Bronzino, a half-length of a man with ruff by Ravensteyn, a quaint and interesting portrait of a boy by Zucchero, a half-length portrait of Col. Lord Howden, probably painted by Thos. C. Thompson, although given to Beechey; an attractive half-length portrait of a woman (Mrs. Ramsay) by that quaint, if stiff old painter, Allan Ramsay; and a quaint, almost amusing, group portrait of three children of the English school of about 1830.

The third evening's sale at the Art Galleries on March 8 will bring out portraits, some interesting but few important, by Ravensteyn, the Rev. Peters, Cotes, Beechey, Zucchero, Thos. Hudson, Harlow, Kneeler, and one of Flora McDonald, attributed to Sir John Millais and with good reason. There is also a good marine given to A. van der Velde and landscapes by George Willcock, Poussin, and others, and one given to Richard Wilson. There are also two superior examples of Pannini.

On Thursday evening, at the fourth session, at the Galleries, there will be offered a most varied assortment including examples of William Etty, the English portrait painter; the Americans Arthur Hoeber, Wm. Hilliard, and other works attributed to Moro, Greuze, Diaz, Vandyck, Cotes, Mignard, Jackson, Kneller, Beechey, Hudson, De Baen, Barker of Bath, Carl Van Loo, Backheysen, de Gelder, Rigaud, Jacquet, Shee and Albano, with many works simply given as "in the style of" and "in the manner of."

The last evening's sale at the Galleries on Friday, March 10, will bring out a number of school pictures and examples by the Americans, W. A. Gay, R. L. Newman, Frank De Haven, R. N. Brooke, C. W. Stetson, Arthur Hoeber, Kenyon Cox, and Wm. Brown, with again works attributed to such painters as Gauguin of Boston, John Watts, Henry Singleton, Thos. Stohardt, A. Vermeulen, Isabey, Wm. Dobson, Jos. Stannard, Eddy, Ribera, Elisabetta, Sirani, Kneller, Lawrence, Ziem, Hondcoter, Fouquet, Giordano, Thos. Barber and John Riley.

Rare Chinese Rugs at Auction.

The two collections of old Chinese rugs now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries previous to their dispersal at auction Mar. 2-4 next, are attracting wide attention. Connoisseurs and collectors, as well as owners of beautiful private homes, are visiting and studying the rugs, and the comments on them have been most complimentary to Mr. John Kimberly Mumford and Mr. Frederick Moore, owners of the collections.

It is generally stated that Mr. Moore's rugs are the largest single collection that has ever come to N. Y., and it is known that Mr. Mumford's rugs have the quality that his knowledge and taste assure.

There are so many rugs in the joint collections that they occupy two floors of the Anderson Galleries, covering walls and floor spaces and even hanging from the ceilings of the rooms, and there is a surprising range of color and design. The evidences of Mr. Moore's industrious search through the old quarters of Peking are everywhere apparent.

The rooms in which the display appears resemble a Chinese bazaar, such as one may witness once a year in the temples of the famous Lu Li Chang district of Peking, lacking only the squalor and the odors of incense.

There are so many notable rugs that it is impossible to comment on them all. For detail the collector must study the catalog and the exhibition itself. The catalog is a notable one. Nothing like it has been seen before. It contains as an introduction a brief statement, replete with information on the study of the symbolism with which Chinese rugs are crowded; and in the chronology an explanation of periods which everyone interested in the study will be glad to preserve for reference. The numerous illustrations, made by a new process, are remarkable; both those in color and those in black and white.

One rug is a long Ming piece, wonderfully well preserved, and remarkable in being entirely free from any of the grotesque or harsh designs of that severe period, and covered only with a floral spray, its border is only a swastika fret. Yet the combination of color and design and the tone that age has given it, make it a weave probably not to be excelled.

Old Masters from Russia Sale.

The American Art Association announces the sale at the Plaza Hotel in Easter week of the pictures by old masters, recently brought to this country by M. Nicolas Riabouchinsky of Moscow, of which some account was given at the time in the Art News. Many of the works come from the collection of Prince Golinicheff-Koutousoff. Among the names of artists represented are Lippi, Van der Goes, Van den Meere, Potter, Breughel, the elder, S. Ruysdael, Piero di Cosimo, Moreelse, Moroni, Patinir, Mabuse, Cranach, Van Cleef, the elder, Van Goyen, Sodoma, and Poussin. In April also is to be sold an important collection of old Chinese rugs belonging to the Tiffany studios.

End of the Herbert Sale.

The final session of the Sydney Herbert sale at the American Art Galleries Feb. 18 resulted in $3,317, which made the grand total of the sale of $11,611.50. Mr. Gabriel Weiss gave $310 for the fourth folio of Shakespeare, London, 1600; Mr. N. J. Bartlett $200 for a first edition of "Pamela."

Old Masters at Christie's.

At a sale of old masters at Christie's, in London, on Feb. 18 the total was $20,000. Mr. Harris gave $790 for Segher's "Pete Denying Christ," Mr. Lewis $785 for a Va Goyen "Landscape with Lime-Kilns" and Mr. C. Richton $682 for a Madonna with child with an angel put down to the Master of Frankfurt.

GREAT GAINSBOROUGH COMING.

A cable from London, says that "Daily Telegraph" announces that famous Gainsborough "View in the Mall St. James' Park," long in the collection of Audley Dallas Neeld, at his country seat at Littleton, has been sold to come to America. It believes that the purchase price is over the $150,000 paid by the J. P. Morgan for Gainsborough's "Duc of Devonshire."

Japanese Prints at Salvar's.

Those who are susceptible to the subtle appeal of Japanese art, sublimely imaginative in conception and simple in design yet powerful and majestic, will appreciate a collection of rare color prints and other objects which is at the Salvar Studio, 12 E. 48 St. The only complete set of the thirty-seven poets in existence is included, and there is a Hokusai scroll with a poem, which the poet, Gensho Kosan, has illustrated with 100 views from Tokio to Yakahama. There are fan prints and Hokusai bird and flower designs—one with a gourd plant and bees is charming. There is a Kakimona of sacred tiger, a beautiful Utmano, richly colored by old age and ex-posure, Hiroshige snowscapes, interpretations of nature by Kuniyoshi, Kunisada wrestlers and an early Chinese scroll which is fascinating.

Besides the prints and some original paintings there are stone and ivory carvings including a rare third century Chinese tomb piece, reclining Buddhas, miniatures, incense burners and a beautiful hand-turned bowl of Korean Satsuma.

don Campbell and Arthur B. Davies lend to it a touch of the aggressively modern, the former with eight limber nymphs, dancing with some grace, oblivious of the danger from the sickles they hold, under "The Harvest Moon" and the latter with a classic landscape called "Castalias," in which a goddess figures in the near foreground, while some graces disport themselves in a dell on the opposite side of the picture.

Charles W. Hawthorne's offering is a rather coarsely effective picture, of a fat-legged model seated in dishabille at "The Open Window." Ivan G. Olinsky shows a well realized and individual picture of "Marianne," a handsome Italian girl with a basket. Robert Henri strikes his familiar note with the little "Irish Girl." Louis Betts has painted in agreeable manner, "Miss D.," a little girl with an open book and Richard Miller is represented by a workmanlike picture of a girl looking at her rather small "Reflection" in a glass.

Others represented are Boronda, Bunce, Carlsen, Daingerfield, Davis, Dewey, Dougherty, Ben Foster, Garber, Groll, Haslam, Kopman, K. K. Miller, H. D. Murphy, Ochtman, Ranger, Ritschel, C. F. Ryder, Sartain, Symons, Tryon, Weir, and F. B. Williams.

Early Spanish Pictures at Ehrich's.

The late Louis Ehrich was among the first of American art dealers to import the works of the early Spanish masters, and his sons and successors, justly and modestly call attention to the fact in the foreword to the neat little catalog of an exhibition of 14 examples of Goya, Greco and Zurbaran, now on at their galleries, No. 707 Fifth Ave. to March 4, "that more early Spanish paintings have passed through their galleries than through any other in America, and that many Spanish Old Masters first became known to American art lovers through their exhibition."

The present little, but most attractive and educational display, has in it 5 examples of Goya, five of Greco and four of Zurbaran, each example well worth close study.

Of the Goyas, those not seen before, are the somewhat sketchy, but strong "Portrait of the Duc d'Ossuna," and the two small, almost miniature, presentments of "A Spanish Lady" and "A Spanish Cavalier," and notably the fine typical bust portrait of a man—Goya at his best.

The Grecos include the "Portrait of a Man in Armor," the small and beautiful "Holy Virgin," with exceptional rich coloring of the blue robe, and the curious "Madonna and Child."

Of the four Zurburans, the full length of "St. Lucy," formerly called "A Saint of Seville," and which has been shown before in the galleries, still holds its charm of refinement and expression. The "St. Ignatius de Loyola" is strong and characteristically morbid, and the double portrait of the "Daughters of Juan de Ruclas," a new canvas here, is finely composed and painted, with a characteristic example of the painter's broad handling.

J. Alden Weir Exhibits.

A tender, sensitive strain of beauty runs through the work of J. Alden Weir, now president of the Academy, and thirty odd years ago a promising young founder of the Society of American Artists.

A group of 14 of his paintings is now on view to Mar. 8 in the elegantly appointed Whitney-Richards galleries, in the Holland House, 5th Ave. and 30 St. Prominent in the display are two "Nocturnes," almost as beautiful as those of Whistler, but more comprehensive in grasp and subject. One is the moonlight effect, on "The Plaza," at 59 St., that won a silver medal at the Chicago Institute, and the other a view looking "Towards the Queensborough Bridge," a work of much nobility.

Then there are the silvery green landscapes with figures introduced in several cases in complete harmony with surroundings. Children and their mother figure in a hillside garden in June, and a hunter stands "In the Woods with His Dogs." Then there is "A Visiting Neighbor, Windham Village." "The White Oak" figures prominently in a glimpse down a woodland road. Highly attractive is a "Midsummer" scene and a picture of "Building a Dam on the Shetucket" has a suggestion of Puvis de Chavannes in the middle distance. Almost as fine as a Chardin is a still life with "Pheasants." And evident in every case is a masterly sobriety and reserve of force.

Mrs. Whitney's Show of Sculpture.

Gertrude V. Whitney (Mrs. H. P. Whitney), who is making the first collective display of her sculptures, at her studio, 8 W. 8 St., to Mar. 4, has in decided fashion, the grand manner. This she combines with a truly virile technical skill and a cultivated taste. She inclines to the Rodinesque in such smaller works as the marble slightly outré group "Paganisme Immortel," but she is thoroughly herself in the imposing and pathetic Titanic memorial, the single male figure being shown in the plaster in the final phase, and in the first and second sketches in bronze, the former of which won the competition. There is a reduction in bronze of the impressive 3 figure fountain for the New Arlington Hotel in Washington, already seen here in full size in plaster.

A sketch for a monument to a sculptor is strongly conceived, and two strong heads are those of an old Spanish peasant and a young American athlete. There is a bronze male caryatid which is full of vigor. In lighter vein are the bright little statuette, "La Chinoise," and the capital portrait busts of the children, Sheila, Cornelia and Barbara.

There appear, besides heads of Pan and a Bacchante, as well as a bronze reduction of the Aztec fountain, in the Bureau of American Republics at Washington.

OLD MASTERS of the English, Dutch and Italian Schools.

MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 4 BERKELEY STREET LONDON, W. is acting as private agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

The Ehrich Galleries
Dealers in "Old Masters" exclusively

707 FIFTH AVE. at 55th Street NEW YORK

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

VOL. XIV., No. 22.

Entered as second class mail matter,
N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, MARCH 4, 1916.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

BUYS $100,000 TAPESTRY.

Mr. Arthur Lehman, of 31 W. 56 St., has purchased from P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., a remarkable XV century golden Gothic tapestry, representing the Holy Family. The work, which is framed, measures only 52 by 54 inches; was used as an altar piece in a private chapel, and came from a Spanish noble family. St. Anne is shown with the Virgin, the infant Saviour and St. Joseph. She holds an open Bible while St. Joseph offers the infant a cluster of grapes, and in the left an apple. The virgin is seated under a canopy by the side of which is shown a landscape with buildings.

DUVEENS THE BUYERS.

It has transpired that Gainsborough's famous picture of the "Mall of St. James Park," formerly owned by Sir Audley Dallas Neeld, whose sale to come to America was announced in Last week's ART NEWS, was bought by the Duveen Bros. They secured the picture through Thomas Agnew and Sons and it will be shown in their Galleries at 720 Fifth Ave. at the end of the month. Rumor has had it that various collectors were the real purchasers and the price is assumed to be in the neighborhood of $250,000. The picture was painted in 1786, two years before Gainsborough's death. Comparing it to Watteau's "Embarquement pour Cythere" Sir William Armstrong in his standard work on Gainsborough says that it is the more beautiful. On the canvas 47 in. high by 57 in. wide, a group of women of fashion are shown walking down the Central Avenue near Carlton House; a figure to the left shows the artist sketching the scene while nearby are the heads of several cows. Hazlitt said that the canvas was "all emotion and in a flutter like a lady's fan."

A HALS SOLD FOR $175,000.

A bust portrait by Hals representing an aristocratic elderly Hollander in military costume with gorget of steel over which falls a lace collar has been sold by the Duveen Bros. to Mr. Henry Goldman, a banker of this city. It is said that this canvas has been in this country only a few days. It is illustrated and described in Dr. Bode's book on Hals.

BARTLETT'S GROUP FOR WASH'N.

In May, it has been announced, Paul W. Bartlett's pediment group for the House wing of the National Capitol in Washington will be unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. In this group the central idea is "Peace Protecting Genius." The group is strictly American in conception; the artist having taken his types from the actual life of the nation, with the costumes of everyday.

YOUNG ARTISTS COMPETITION.

It is announced that the theme for the competition of young decorators, to be held under the auspices of the Friends of Young Artists will be the ceiling decoration of a private library. The sketches in pure watercolor, must not measure more than 15 by 18 inches. Works will be received April 4 and 5 at the studio of Mrs. Henry Payne Whitney, 8 W. 8th St. So popular has been the exhibition of Mrs. Whitney's sculptures, which was to have closed to-day, that it has been decided to extend it until Wednesday next.

OMAHA BUYS 8 PICTURES.

Edward W. Redfield's "The Road to the River," valued at $2,000; Prinet's "The Author," another $2,000 canvas; Teyraud's "In the Berkshires," Mary Butler's "Beeches at Muckross Abbey," and four other oils have been purchased from the recent exhibit of the Omaha Society of Fine Arts by residents. Redfield's paintings now hangs in the Public Library.

L. C. TIFFANY'S BIRTHDAY FETE.

Louis C. Tiffany gave recently, at the Tiffany Studios, 347 Madison Ave., a birthday fete to some 300 of his friends, which included a breakfast, masque and retrospective exhibition. J. Alden Weir, president of the Nat'l Academy made the opening speech. The masque, arranged by Mr. J. Linden Smith represented "The Quest of Beauty."

Mr. Paul Schulze of Chicago has bought Gardner Symons' "A Winter Afternoon."

MR. FRICK'S NEW ART GALLERY.

Mr. Henry C. Frick is to add to his residence and art and picture gallery, between 70th and 71st Streets, a gallery for a collection of statuary. It will be a one and a half story building, similar to the art gallery and will occupy a 50-foot plot at 6-8 East 71st Street, adjoining that building, which was purchased by Mr. Frick last October. For this new gallery Mr. Frick's architects, Carrere & Hastings, have already made preliminary designs which conform to the general architectural features of the house and present art gallery.

ART AT SAN DIEGO.

The Panama-California Exposition is undergoing important changes of exhibits, and

MR. LAMBERT NOT SATISFIED.

In an interview, on his return to Paterson, Mr. Catholina Lambert stated to a Times correspondent that the $590,420 realized from the sale of his paintings and sculptures by the American Art Association represented only a little more than half their value. He called attention to the fact that a large number of the examples were exceptionally large and unsuited to private collections and held that to be one of the reasons for the low prices.

The Boston Museum has purchased from the income of the Sarah Wyman Whitman Fund an important Viennese XIV century picture, a "Marriage of St. Catherine."

ANN'L MEETING OF THE MUSEUM.

At the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Museum on Monday, the reports showed the institution to be in good condition though as usual there is a deficiency in its running expenses. This amounted last year to $115,831, while in 1914 it was $162,183. The only money bequest of 1914 was the $25,000 from John L. Cadwalder. The amount last year was greatly in excess excluding some large ones which are in litigation. The cost of the administration in 1915 was $407,357, of which the city furnishes $200,000. The trustees acknowledge the gifts of money from members amounting to $32,200. On account of the war the expenses were decreased last year and fewer purchases were made. The library has been increased by 1,439 volumes and 4,970 photographs. The attendance was not as large as in the years when the Morgan and Altman collections were first placed on view. The following officers were re-elected: President, Robert W. de Forest; First Vice-President, Joseph H. Choate; Second Vice-President, Henry Walters; Honorary Librarian, William L. Andrews; Treasurer, Howard Mansfield, and Secretary, Henry W. Kent. The trustees elected for the term ending 1923 were V. Everet Macy, Henry C. Frick and John P. Johnson.

ACQUISITIONS OF BAVARIAN MUS'N.

Of no less importance than the early Gothic "Annunciation," acquired last year by the Bavarian National Museum, has been the recent acquisition by the same institution of a seated figure of the Apostle James, more than life size. The figure is in wood, with traces of the original mounting by Hans Leinhenger. Another work of interest is a ceramic figure of St. John, the Evangelist, an Ingolstadt work of the 14th century.

MEMORIALS OF EASTERN FRONT.

According to the Kunstchronik, in which the subject has been treated by Paul Clemm, specimens of late Gothic extending to the 16th century, as well as of late baroque, have been preserved. Notwithstanding the duration of warlike operations in the East, the destruction of important architectural memorials in Poland, Lithuania, and Courland has not been so extensive as had at first been feared. The preservation of architectural monuments to the east of Germany, is said to be regarded as equally important work, as that in the western portion of the scene of battle.

DR. VON BODE'S BIRTHDAY.

The "expert," Dr. Wilhelm von Bode, was the recipient of many souvenirs on the occasion of his 70th birthday. Among those deserving special mention was a carefully prepared summary of all his works and treatises by Dr. Ignatz Beth, with a preface by M. J. Friedlander. Another souvenir was the special annual of Prussian art collections, by the directors of the National Ethnological and Archaeological museums.

A WAR ALBUM.

Under the title "Wars of All Nations and Periods," Gilhofer and Ranschlung of Vienna have issued a catalog of 8,000 numbers, including books, handbills and pictorial representations connected with wars, from the earliest periods up to the present date. This handy volume contains 386 pages.

STOLEN "VIRGIN" IDENTIFIED.

A cable to the Times from Paris said that a few weeks ago there was talk of an alleged Murillo, said to have been stolen from a Belgian, recovered at Bordeaux when on being shipped to America.

It has just been discovered that the supposed Murillo—in reality a replica of the celebrated Spanish painter's "Virgin and Child," now in Rome—was stolen by the Germans in 1871 from a villa at Meudon, near Paris, where a part of Prince Frederick Charles' staff was quartered. The painting, which belonged to a local doctor, was sent into Germany. Its present possessor says he received it from an aunt, to whom it was given by an Italian monk. The painting has been identified by a daughter of the doctor of Meudon from whom it was stolen.

the installation of many of the better foreign collections shown at San Francisco. The art gallery in charge of Miss Maude D. Foster will have a number of new canvases later on, when transportation will have been resumed. The showing of the artists of Southern California will be better and more comprehensive than last year's.

CLEVELAND ART SUITS.

The city law dep't of Cleveland is bringing suit to test the legality of Hy. G. Keller's mural painting contract, and H. N. Matzen's sculpture contract with the City. The contracts are for works of the new city hall.

The "Fakirs" of the Art Students League are to give another costume dance at the Hotel Vanderbilt April 5, the proceeds to go to the fund for art students.

DR. SIREN'S LECTURES.

Dr. Oswald Siren, Professor of the History of Art at the University of Stockholm delivered the first four lectures on Giotto on Monday at the Metropolitan Museum and a second one on Friday. The subject of the first lecture was the St. Frances frescoes Assisi and at the second the frescoes in the Arena Chapel at Padua. The attendances were so large that many had to be turned away.

ART GALLERY IN TROUBLE.

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Charles Nelter, who with a partner, was established as the Rembrandt Galleries, 2172 Broadway, dealers in pictures and objects of art. The petition creditors were Nunnenbacher & Co., $498; Ullman Manufacturing Company, $158, and Albert E. Hickok, $125.

CONN. ACADEMY ANNUAL SHOW.

Hartford, Conn., Mar. 1, 1916.

The sixth annual exhibition of the Conn. Academy had so many contributions this year that the Wadsworth Atheneum Annex, where it is held, could not contain all and was forced to hang some of its accepted exhibits in two adjoining committee rooms. The quality of the work shown, however, does not impress one, as sufficiently high to justify the oft expressed contention of some of the Academy's officials that space should be granted the organization in the adjacent Morgan Memorial Museum.

As, for some years past, a number of the organizers and original members of the Academy are unrepresented—the strong work of such men as Robert Brandegee, Harold Green, Foster, Brabazon and Constant Z. Furryk is particularly missed—while the absence of work by such widely known Conn. men as Alden Weir, Dwight Tryon, Robert Vonnoh, Emil Carlsen, W. L. Carrigan, Hassam, Ranger, Metcalfe, et al., is conspicuous absence enough.

With a few exceptions, the paintings shown are of local significance only. In such company the Venetian fantasies of Gedrey Bunce shine with particular brilliance, the two contributions of the veteran painter (so recently painted as to be scarcely dry) being the product of his most gorgeously colorful vein. Bunce is now at work in his Hartford studio producing some great canvases, and his patriarchal interest in the Conn. organization is much valued.

The prizes this year have gone, contrary to the intention of those who planned the organization, to painters not resident in Conn. These prizes, however, are not bones of bitter contention, the two $25 ones being likely to take the form of medals later. The winner of the chief prize, $100, Wm. R. Derrick of N. Y., contributed an effective landscape, "Hollyhocks," a simply treated harmony in repressed rich greens not unlike certain canvases by the late Roger Donoho. The $25 awards went to Jean Nutting Oliver of Boston and Guy C. Wiggins of N. Y., for the pictures "Ruth" and "A Blow from the Northwest" respectively.

George W. Lawlor's seated figure of the artist, Melbourne Hardwick, is one of the strongest of the portraits, although the portrait by Miss Helen Andrews of her father, if properly hung must have made an effective showing. Clara Mawre Norton's portrait entitled "My Mother in 1916," Margaret Fitzhugh Browne's portrait, Marion Boyd Allen's "John Orth" and her large self-portrait, James Goodwin McManus's portrait of a lady and C. N. Flagg's portrait of Jas. M. Thomson, are of varied interest as conservative and in certain cases conventional productions. Bernhard Gutman's group of portrait heads called "Two Creeds" and his "Breton Types" are notable for departure from the academic "setup" arrangement.

Charles C. Curran contributes one of the most attractive pictures, a composition of "Rhododendrons" in which appears a pretty head of a young woman. Gertrude Fiske's crouching nude, "Katherine" is effective in color and handling, but defective in drawing. Edith Barry's head of "Marie Jeanne" is ably treated and her picture called "The Boudoir" contains an interesting quality of light. Frank Giddings contributes a broadly brushed study of the Bullfinch City Hall (which Hartford is in doubt about saving from demolition); Isaac H. Grant sends a simply treated landscape, "Corn Stacks;" Samuel Simpson a study of an "Oak Tree;" Adelaide Deming "Willows in Spring," and "Lillies and Larkspur;" Charles Reiffel, "Edge of the Village;" F. Usher De Voll "The Great Canyon, N. Y.;" Mary Nicholena MacCord a "Village Street."

The winter painters are much in evidence—Geo. F. Muendel's "Frozen In" is broadly handled; Russell Cheney and Stephen Wesley Macomber use the same title, "Winter Afternoon;" the latter has also a "Midwinter—Country Road;" Leith Ross's "Winter" is a New England one, Oscar Anderson's a Gloucester one. Rob. Emmett Owen paints "A Winter Morning" and Whitney M. Hubbard "A Winter Afternoon." Walter Nettleton's "Winter" is a "Bleak" one, and Charles Hudson's "Winter" is in the "Pine Woods."

The Springtime has many interpreters. A. Eden Jones shows a "tender" "Spring Mornning." Joseph H. Greenwood, "Signs of Spring," George R. Travora a "Spring Song," Mabel B. English "Spring in the Hills," G. Victor Grinnell "Early Spring Snow," C. C. Mase "When Maples Bud," Adelaide Deming "Willows in Spring," and Mabel L. Coolidge "Early Spring."

The summer pictures are W. E. Norton's "Summer Afternoon," Mabel Coolidge's "June," George Thomson's "Oaks in Summer," Mary N. MacCord's "Sunny Garden" and E. McManus's "Farmington Hills." Autumn is shown in Ralph Hillbom's "The Last of the Gold," W. B. Green's "Autumn Glow," R. E. Owen's "Autumn on the Rippewam," Jean Paul Slusser's "October Woods," Alton S. Clark's "Lyme in Winter," and Daniel F. Wentworth's "November Evening." Matilda Browne's "Hay Wain," Robert Nisbet's "Leonard Pond," and Henry C. White's "Birches" are notable landscapes. Jane Peterson shows "The Pier," Carl Blenner a Fair Haven subject, and Everett L. Warner, a view of "Roadside Birches."

Other exhibitors are Marion Bullard, George M. Bruesthe, Marion Howard, E. W. Nicht, Frank De Haven, Robert F. Logan, R. M. Kimbel, Ralph McLellan, Elmer Hudson, M. L. Hudson, Julia Titworth, Alpheus Cole, Marion L. Pooke, Oscar Gieberich, Frances A. Storrs, Gerret A. Beneker, Jean Barkydt, Roy Ketchum, C. A. Etherington, Ruel Crompton Tuttle, C. H. Freeman, Hester Miller, Durand Felten, Alice Wothington Ball, W. B. Closson, William J. Potter, Berta Perrie, Harold Douglas, Alice Hirsh, Walden Broan, Leo F. Dorn, O. V. La Valley, Frank Kidder and Ralph N. Senecal. Paul Trumbull.

Of more than usual importance and interest, is the exhibition of paintings by El Greco and that artist and his partner, Preboste, which is on, at the Durand-Ruel Galleries, 12 E. 57 St., to Mar. 11. The five examples of El Greco, ranging in date from 1594 to a few years before the artist's death, in 1916, and thus permitting of a study of his variations of style, include two works of capital importance, an "Annunciation," dating from the period between 1594 to 1604 and a "Jesus in the House of Simon" of about 1610.

There is great beauty in the "Annunciation," in both the figures of the Virgin and the angel, and less of the mannerism that becomes more pronounced in the second canvas, which is, however, remarkable for its many qualities of syle and characterization. A beautiful St. Catherine is in the master's latest manner, while the two pictures representing St. Francis of Assisi and but slightly variant, date from the earlier period to the later.

The series of heads made either by El Greco or his partner, Preboste, and showing the Saviour and the apostles, were executed for the Spanish convent and were later in a private collection in Seville. Particularly remarkable among them is the head of St. Matthew evidently by El Greco.

Bakst at Scott & Fowle's.

The remarkably vigorous, varied and often fantastically Oriental art of Leon Bakst, has been made somewhat familiar to the American public, by the displays at the Berlin Photographic Co., but the collection now shown at Scott & Fowles containing a large amount of fresh material, is of great importance and interest. The large picture called "Terror Antiquas," which took a gold medal at the International Exhibition at Brussels in 1910, is a remarkably powerful composition and as comprehensive in the largeness of its grasp of objects animate and inanimate as a John Martin or a Thomas Cole, the central figure of Aphrodite suggesting somewhat the creations of Blake.

The portraits in black and white furnish a remarkably fine series in which are notably those of the "Doctor" and the French poet, Cocteau. Included among the very remarkable drawings, which show on how firm a superstructure all the artists stage and illustrative designs are based include a remarkable recumbent figure of a young woman, nude, which is, however, not over lovely, and a sleeping woman. As for the stage drawings they are an epitome of semi-barbaric Oriental art, powerful and fantastic, novel, always interesting and thoroughly Bakst, for the word Bakst has become the name of a style.

A brilliant series of paintings of Japanese scenes and life, by the Roumanian painter, Samys Mutzner, is on view at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave. There are scenes at the temples and in the tea-houses, in the gardens, under the cherry blossoms and wistaria, on the heights of Nagasaki, and at the corners and palace of Kyoto. Mr. Mutzner is a capable painter, a colorist of excellent quality and has a good eye for character. One of his most important works with several figures, of women, a child and a farmer "At the Stone Lantern," has something of the spirit of French XVIII century decorative painters and would make a fine subject for reproduction in tapestry. Two notable half nudes are the "Make-up" and the "Geisha" arranging her hair. The little girl with a sun umbrella called "O-Kiku-San" is delightful. There is fine character in the largely handled, "A Lady of the Court," while a capital study is of a Japanese woman on a "Windy Day." Interest in subject and execution is to be found on every hand. Mr. Mutzner, who is now in this country after a three years' stay in Japan, is making a display of one-half of his Japanese work in the city while the other half is being shown at Bucharest.

Group Exhibit at Thumb Box Gallery

There are action sketches and other noteworthy drawings and a large collection of new lithographs by George Bellows in an exhibition at the Thumb Box Gallery which is on to March 11. They cover a wide range of subjects—from a small town prayer meeting to a prize fight. His perception is keen, there is ever a delightful touch of humor and his method of attack is, as always, simple and direct. Edith M. Magonigle's contributions—Japanese in feeling—are admirable. She has good decorative sense and an imagination and interpretation of "Mimi," and a picture called "The Lily of Yedo," are among her works. Maurice Prendergast shows, among other new things, what is perhaps the Garden of Eden—a characteristically effective mosaic like pattern of colors. E. Dimock handles watercolor cleverly, in a group of impressions of east side life, the best of which is probably a glimpse of a fish market. "Mending Street"—an exquisite bit of color—and a group of figures on the beach are among the most interesting in a group of pastels by Wm. Glackens.

Macdowell Club Show.

An exhibition of works by ten painters and two sculptors is on at the MacDowell Club, 108 W. 55 St. to Mar. 12th, inclusive. Jane Peterson's direct colorful rendering of Gloucester scenes and her impression of a bit of L. C. Tiffany's garden at Oyster Bay. C. P. Gruppe's son, Emil, is represented by landscapes, full of atmosphere and pleasing in color and arrangement. Clara M. Norton's broadly treated portraits have a personal note and among those by Delos Palmer, Jr., one notes an representation of a sunny young girl which has the charm of momentariness. An adaption of a Chinese design is of interest in an over mantle by Agnes Street. Other painters represented are C. W. Ashley, H. E. O. Campbell, E. de Hoa Le Blanc, Maria Stone and Julia N. Wickham. Clara Hill's sculptures are charming. They include a replica of her stolen "Florentine Girl Reading." Katharine Underhill shows a strongly modeled pair of Belgian horses.

Strong Work by D. Rice.

One notes the incidentals, rather than the essentials of the art of Greco, Zuoloaga, other Spaniards—both ancient and modern—and of our own Henri, in eighteen striking characterizations of people which D. (Dorothy) Rice exhibited at the Folsom Galleries, 396 5th Ave. to March 3rd. However, there is an individual note too. Masculine brush work and an emotional quality are characteristics. The color is not good. Forms and color which add to the effectiveness of the figures are decidedly Greco-esque. Pilgrims at Lourdes, Spanish peasants, priests, nuns and portraits are shown—among the latter are depictions of the tenor, Diaz and of Raphael Sanchez. The artist proves her versatility by exhibiting as many sculptures as paintings.

Koyetzu Screens at Arden Gallery.

A loan display of seven important screens by Koyetzu now on at the Arden Gallery, 599 Fifth Ave., will be replaced by a number of others, by another Japanese master, Sotatsku Tawarya. The screens of Koyetzu have remarkable charm and are very artistic in handling. Particularly remarkable are the flower gardens under summer and winter aspects and the "wave screen." It is rare that the public has an opportunity of seeing examples of the great Japanese screen painters for collectors of such work are chary of making loans.

Laces at Little Gallery.

An antique Spanish lace robe, of exceptional beauty is one of the exhibits at the Little Gallery, 15 East 40th St., where there is an interesting collection of Spanish and Italian needle point and bobbin laces. It came from the estate of Countess Inella of Santa Fe, Spain, and was made a hundred and fifty years ago when Royal families had their own lace-makers. It is pure silk and in good condition. There are also beautiful pieces of Alencon, blondes, fillets, etc.

The American Modernists Show.

On March 13 will open The Forum Exhibition of Modern American Painters at The Anderson Galleries, Madison Avenue at Fortieth Street. The exhibition will be the largest of its kind ever held in this country. The Committee which has fathered the exhibition, and which has selected all of the paintings that are to be displayed, is composed of Mr. Willard Huntington Wright, Dr. Christian Brinton, Mr. Alfred Stieglitz, Dr. John Weichsel, Mr. W. H. de B. Nelson and Mr. Robert Henri. The Forum Exhibition is not a commercial undertaking, and the members have no interest in it other than a philanthropic one. There will be 200 paintings by about twenty artists.

At the Gamut Club.

An interesting group of nineteen paintings by women is at the Gamut Club, 69 West 46th St. to March 12th. "La Petite, or The Engagement Ring" by Elizabeth Watrous is an exquisite bit of color and a charming interpretation of young girlhood; Theresa Bernstein's contributions are colorful and full of movement. Clara Davidson, Isabel V. Cook, Harriette Bowdoin, and Clara Mamie Norton are also represented.

Lafayette Loan Exhibition.

A Lafayette Loan Exhibition for War Relief, was opened at the old Knickerbocker Club building, 319 Fifth Avenue last week, with a speech by Mr. Joseph H. Choate. The relics included those loaned by the French Government and the family to the Pana.-Pacific Exposition. Besides the desk, chair, hat, sword, portfolio, busts of Washington and Franklin and French and American flags, are shown the Morse portrait from the City Hall.

Owing to an inadvertence, a Gensho Kosan scroll, in Mr. Boyer's collection at the Salvar Studio, 12 E. 48 St., was alluded to as by Hokusai in last week's issue.

PHILADELPHIA.

The display of sculpture at the 111th Annual Exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy is perhaps more interesting from the point of view of originality, than the collection of paintings to be seen at the same time of a general degree of excellence, it is true, but of a conservative kind and almost entirely lacking the note of freshness one sees here and there among the marbles and bronzes that throng the corridors of the Academy.

One of the notable pieces exposed is Chester Beach's marble in high relief entitled "Cloud Forms," a work giving evidence of considerable power of original artistic conception combined with effective grouping of the figures and suggestive modeling of anatomical detail. A bronze figure, a little more than life size, by Edward F. Sanford, Sr., catalogued as "Hamadryad," had much of the influence of ancient Egyptian work, judging from the posing of the arms and legs and the costume recalling that of some of the temple statuary, although the subject of this work is a classical Greek myth. Edward McCartan's dancing figure "Spirit of the Woods," awarded the Widener Medal, while extremely well-modeled could not be said to record any new note of sculptural art. A group of three figures by Anna Coleman Ladd with the title "Peace Victorious" attracts attention by the novelty of the composition and the effective modeling of the partly-draped nudes. Paul Manship was represented by a carefully studied costumed statuette of "Salome" in the act of performing the famous dance of the Seven Veils with the head of the Saint lying in a platter at her feet, and Edith Barretto Parsons touched a note of humor with fine appreciation of infantile character in her little figure of "Turtle Baby." Numerous portraits appear, the most notable, from its life-like character and the distinction of the sitter being Charles Grafty's bust of Frank Duveneck. The character of a prominent local ecclesiastic was expressed very skillfully by Samuel Murray, in his bust of Archbishop Prendergast, and of Philadelphia's leading financier by Aurelius Renzetti, in his bust of Edward T. Stotesbury, Esq.

The James B. Sword Exhibition at the Art Club open Feb. 25-March 12, is made up principally of landscapes and marines of moderate size with an occasional large picture as an accept in the middle of a wall group. Some of the best of these are views of Barnegat Bay at Sunset; also, near Jamestown, R. I., "The Road to the Fort," being an attractive smaller canvas. Mr. Sword was one of the founders of the Art Club and this exhibition is intended as a tribute to his memory.

The Artists' Masque of 1916 after many trials and tribulations, inevitable, of course, when so many different organizations take part, finally was performed with real artistic success at the Academy of Music on Feb. 22, and was followed by an equally brilliant Bal Masque in Horticultural Hall.

Credit for the constructive work of the production with the whole underlying costume color scheme and the arrangement of the stage setting is due to Mr. Leicester B. Holland, the author of the Scenario of the Masque. The stage was set as a Greek theatre with an altar in the center of the Pronaos where the processions and dances were performed. The costuming was mainly Cretan and Athenian, one group in purple peplums making a greatly admired stage picture. The leading role of "Ariadne" was gracefully sustained by Miss Beatrice Fox. The spectacle had as its finale a Labyrinthine Dance and an Orgiastic Revel trained and costumed by Miss Helen W. Henderson.

At the Samuel T. Freeman & Co. Art Galleries, there will be sold on March 6 and 7, the Marquis Collection of Oil Paintings, 108 in number, including, besides works attributed to distinguished foreign painters, some very good examples of well-known Americans.

CHICAGO.

Twenty large mural paintings by Adolphe Mucha are on show at Moulton and Ricketts. There are compositions of the Slav race. The city of Prague has arranged to erect a palace as a permanent gallery for them.

A special exhibition of the portrait of Abraham Lincoln painted from life by Jesse Atwood, notable as an early Philadelphia painter, is a feature at Young's Gallery. This portrait was made at Springfield in the latter part of 1860. Also, there's an assemblage of rare prints and engravings of Lincoln at this gallery, with other early prints, lithographs, drawings, and engravings of events connected with Lincoln.

At Ackermann's there is a collection of etchings of California by N. Brooker Mayhew.

Out of 645 prints submitted, 344 have been accepted by the Jury for the coming display at the Institute of the Chicago Society of Etchers.

The Institute is enriched, for an indefinite period, by the Edward E. Ayre's collection of Burgundian miniature paintings of the fifteenth century, illuminated scrolls, and ancient manuscripts.

BOSTON.

With the present Watercolor Club exhibition, the Boston Art Club must feel like the hen that hatched out the duck's eggs—a great deal doing with water as a medium. The invited guests of the organization are full of a lively and modern art spirit. W. J. Potter, Jane Peterson, Albert Sterner, Alice Schille, Charles W. Eaton, and others make the walls hum with color and esprit. Miss Schille's streets and tall buildings of the metropolis are convincing and interesting. Jane Peterson's canvases are gay, the water in one Gloucester sketch being so movingly portrayed that one visitor susceptible to mal de mer had to leave the gallery suddenly.

George H. Hallowell shows a distinguished group, luminous, and beautiful in color. Charles H. Woodbury (president of the Club) has a fine and impressive group of Caribbean Sea subjects. Lucy Conant shows a change of mood and harks to the lure of decorative design. Charles Hopkinson shows six examples of pure aquarelle. Sarah C. Sears has a decorative design on a large scale with flowers for motifs. A group of eight subjects by the late Ross Turner contains a number of good examples. Dodge MacKnight seems to travel far

The Chicago Society of Artists has made its annual award of a silver medal for the strength of a group of paintings by one artist in the annual show of Chicago paintings, to Wilson Irvine, for "Midsummer," "Amaranthine Days," "Woods's Pond," "April," "The Sheltering Elms."

The Mrs. Julius Rosenwald prize of $200 for a painting to be given to the public schools of Chicago was awarded to Pauline Palmer for her picture, "The Sketch Class," done at Provincetown, Mass., and the Edward B. Butler prize of $200 for one or two paintings to be given to the public schools for exhibitions in class rooms, to Victor Higgins for his "Town of Taos."

The Palette and Chisel Club is featuring paintings by Ben Blossom of the Norwegian country, and J. Bror Olsson-Nordfeldt is conspicuous this week, at Roullier's, in block-prints in colors.

At the Marshall Field Galleries, is a collection of watercolor pictures by Witold Gordon, a Polish artist. William R. Leigh's paintings of "great-west" scenery, are on at Thurber's. to discover difficult "stunts." His work is strictly colorful.

Vose's Gallery continues two shows of interest. The American painters in the long gallery attract well-deserved attention. A collection so representative as one containing examples by Inness, Hawthorne, J. Alden Weir, Benson, Francis Murphy, F. C. Frieseke, Homer Martin, A. P. Ryder, Blakelock, Randall Davey, George Fuller, William Keith and Elliott Daingerfield is a rarity.

The promised opening of the Art Museum's stiffly hinged doors to modern American art now seems an assured fact. John Doe.

PROVIDENCE.

An exhibition of paintings by Norwood MacGilvary and Frank C. Mathewson of New York opened on Feb. 22nd at the Providence Art Club to continue to March 5th.

Mr. MacGilvary's canvases reveal an exceptionally poetic temperament. His subjects are landscapes treated in a romantic vein and paintings of the nude done with delicacy and refinement. "Autumn on the Hill" and "Crescendo" are MacGilvary's most important examples; both pictures being nudes with the landscape as an accessory. The former picture has been purchased by a Providence collector. "The Gift Bearing Season" is a small canvas with semi-nude figures in robes of rich color. This canvas is also purchased to remain in Providence.

Other examples are "Fantastic Forest," "Sun After Shower," "In the Garden of Time (Variation No. 1)," and "Twilight and Silver Cloud." Mr. Mathewson's pictures are landscapes including "Flax Mill, Donegal, Ireland," "Matumuck Pasture" and "Garden at Gray Craig, Newport." The Donegal picture is especially popular with visitors to the gallery. It has a mood of loneliness heightened by the rainy sky. Other good examples of Mr. Mathewson's, several of which have been sold, are "Quai Vert, Bruges," "Market-Place, Camdebec," "Apple and Pine," and "Nightfall."

The Prov. Art Club annual costume party occurs March 7th and will be "An Arabian Night." Mr. Wm. E. Brigham of the R. I. School of Design is planning settings and decorations and the affair promises to be a popular event. W. Alden Brown.

ST. LOUIS.

On account of the great interest in the French and Belgian exhibition at the City Museum, a special night view was given on the evening of Feb. 23. The last week of the French exhibition was saddened by the death of Mr. Paul L. Snutsel, who, as a representative of the Belgian-French Art Commission, was assisting Mrs. Ethel Quinton Mason in the management of the collection. Mr. Snutsel was a native of Brussels, but had resided in America for the past twenty years.

The special attractions at the museum during March will be a collection of paintings by the Chicago Society of Artists and an exhibition of the work of the late Mary L. Macomber. Mr. John da Costa, the English portrait painter, has an interesting group of ten portraits on view at the museum. Mr. da Costa has achieved a deserved popularity for his portrayal of the charm of childhood.

The museum recently added to its collection of Egyptian antiquities a small but very interesting group of specimens, including a stele of the 18th dynasty, carved in low relief, from a tomb in Thebes; a large stone bowl, a mortar and pestle from Karnak, and a small ebony figure of the god Ptah, represented as a mummy and holding the papyrus sceptre in his hand. A number of fragments of Coptic textiles dating from the I to the X century were also acquired.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, will soon appear.

THE RIGHT TO CRITICIZE.

A few seasons ago we contended, following an experience in having what we considered our fair and just criticism of some old pictures offered for sale in a public gallery and advertised in our columns and those of the dailies, condemned by the owners of the gallery—that the right to criticize is always permissible when an exhibition is a public one. Our contention to this effect brought us at that time,
the approval of both press and public.

While it is stated that the recent banning of the art writer, Mr. Charles H.
Caffin, from the Architectural League exhibition in the Fine Arts Galleries, on account, as was stated of his adverse criticism of the exhibition of last year, was not an official act of the League itself, and that organization is therefore, and happily relieved from blame—we cannot but consider it as unfortunate that the incident occurred.

Although the Court of Appeals has just decided in the case of the dramatic critic of the Times vs. the Messrs.
Shubert, that theatrical managers have the privilege of forbidding entrance to public performances in their theatres of dramatic critics, whose criticisms they may not like—this surprising decision does not, to our minds, affect the principle of the right to criticize public exhibitions. Hyper-sensitiveness to criticism which is often helpful, even if annoying is seemingly a regrettable element in the make-up of not only theatrical managers but of American artists and owners of exhibition galleries. Mr. Frederick S. Church, the veteran American artist, recently wrote us that, as a rule, he preferred the press criticisms of this work which made him angry for this anger only made him work the harder to refute his adverse critics, with his next picture. A wise man is Church!

CORRESPONDENCE

Editor American Art News:

Dear Sir:

What I meant to say, in my letter of August last, was: That knowledge of pictures cannot be obtained from books: that it is only by study of pictures themselves that you may learn them. Of course, the history of art is another matter, and falls within the true domain of the book.

The reason given why books cannot teach art is that the language is different. It might be nearer the mark to say, that art has no language, as we commonly use the word, but is more a telepathy, a communication not framed in words. I am referring to the manifestation evidenced by pictures and music; but the truth holds where the expression is in words. A line of Keats, like a master brush-stroke, may charm you with its, let us say, technique. But really what has stirred you is not the line, but the artist, the creator, carrying to you by means of the line, the mood, fancy, or emotion that stirred him. Somehow, over the line, you have touched hands—he with you. The line is only the ship, not the cargo. And so to repeat, you may learn art in pictures only by the study of them; you may learn art in literature only by the study of it. As well try to learn literature from pictures, as pictures from literature. Nevertheless,
the art in them is much the same.

From the time that art first was men have asked, "What is art?" The question is hoary with age; definitions have been heaped, one on the other; but the elusive, beautiful thing has never been enmeshed with words.

Most frequently it is said, art is something made by man for man, that moves his emotion, etc. Give every word its full weight, and what have you? Have you Inness, or the work of any one of half-a-for a moment. Prove it by looking at an Inness, or the work of any one of half-a-dozen of our living American landscapists (and I, for one, believe them great); by losing yourself in music; by closing your eyes and seeing Keats' Darien and the Pacific; and then with the lights of your appreciation aflame, turn to your definition.

Have the words told you what you have seen and heard, have they approached it?
Are they—not so many husks?

Nor is emotion always the touchstone.
Even if it were, how tell emotion in words?
And if you cannot tell emotion, how can you go back of it, and tell the source? Great works of art have been passed by for long, even scorned; they gave out little or nothing to their generation. Many, that produced emotion for a time, produce it no more. Were they art, when they produced it, and did they cease to be art, when they failed to produce it?

A lily grows in a field. The eastern sky is tender with the new day. These things are beautiful, they produce emotion; but they are not art. Man sees them, recreates them, and we have art. But note: It requires THE MAN. He gives out something—something that was not in the lily or the sky. There is a sort of chemistry here, a taking-on and giving-off. The manner of this giving-off, the style, the form of it, its power to please and awake, is what we call Art. Such as Fitzgerald's rendering of the Rubaiyat, for instance. This is about as close as we can get to it. Our definitions are only little utterings, gropings about, not the bright, brilliant things that the heart knows and feels; the messages one sends another across the world, through the centuries, regardless of nation or tongue.

It has occurred to me that we try to give too fixed and definite a character to art.
The thing itself is so broad, varying, and adaptable, a most universal. We are prone to look at things with our own eyes, and declare that what is not discernible to us does not exist. I can well conceive of a savage art, and I can conceive of craftsmanship, the mere doing of a thing, that is art.
We know there are different grades of art;
may there not be different kinds? I do not mean more difference in the mode of expression, such as literature, music or painting, but difference in the thing itself. It's a pretty far call, it is not, from the totem pole of a Siwash Indian to a morning by Corot? They are about as different as can be. But both are art.

What difference does it make, whether there be a definition or not? The important thing is not to define art, but to produce it,
and to recognize it when it is produced.
The latter is not always easy.

In art, as in some other things that give keenest human pleasure, love, for example —the intellect, with its preciseness, curiosity, and knowingness, must play second fiddle.

Very truly yours,

Tucson, Arizona, Feb. 26, 1916.

OBITUARY.

William E. Norton.

William Edward Norton, the well known marine painter, died Feb. 28 in the Flower Hospital at the age of 74. He was born in Boston, his father being a seafaring man, and in early life became an artist. After his majority he went to sea as a sailor for three years. From 1877 to 1882 he studied in Europe, becoming in Paris a pupil of Villon and Jacquesson de la Chevreuse.
On his return to Boston he studied at the Lowell Institute under Inness. Later he made a second trip abroad. He exhibited at both the Paris Salon and at the Royal Academy in London, receiving an honorable mention at the first in 1895. His honors further included three gold medals in Boston and the Osborne prize in 1905. Mr.
Norton, whose studio was at 1931 Broadway, was a member of the Salmagundi Club, Boston Art Club, and also an honorary member of the Blackheath (London) Art Club. He is survived by two daughters.

Emily H. Chamberlain.

Emily Hall Chamberlain, an artist and magazine illustrator of 77 Irving Place, died Monday in St. Luke's Hospital. Miss Chamberlain who made a specialty of drawing children had done much work for St. Nicholas and the Youths' Companion. She was born in Shelby, Ohio, and studied art at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and also in Paris and London. She was a member of the National Arts Club and the Art Workers' Club for Women, and is survived by a mother and brother.

Col. F. S. Hesselstine.

Col. Francis S. Hesselstine, lawyer, artist, traveler, orator, lecturer and poet, a veteran of the Civil War, died recently in Boston at the age of 83. It is stated of him that he was as capable as a painter as he was in legal and literary fields, and one of the most versatile men of the day.

GODS AT LAI-YUAN &amp; CO'S.

Lai-Yuan & Co. (C. T. Loo) who are now permanently settled in their attractive Oriental galleries, at 557 Fifth Ave., have now on view their latest importation, consisting of two large stone carved figures—one a Avalokites'vara (or Kwanyin), over life-size, the other a Sakyamuni (or Buddha).
The latter is most refined and simple in its expression of primitive art, while the former has a nobility of expression rarely seen on stone sculpture. Both pieces come from

CHINESE BUDDHA

At Lai-Yuan & Co's.

Wu-ai Hsien (sub-prefecture) of Changteh
Fu in the Honan Province.

Southeast of Wu-Ai Hsien on the mountain Kou, there is a Temple called Pe-Sian-Dang or Northern Temple which was a summer Palace of the Emperor Kao Quen of the Tsi Dynasty.

He received the title of "Kao Wang Tien Tse" after his death and he was immortalized and buried in the Palace which thus changed into his Temple in ruins. The figures were probably made during the transition period of Chinese art. Among the decorative objects shown by the firm are some unusual specimens of Ming and other antique lacquer furniture of the finest workmanship and color. There are also on view notable collections of antique bronzes, potteries, porcelains and jades.

Mr. A. Preyer, of the Hague, who came over about six months ago and has visited all the Western cities, is in New York, where he came especially to attend the Catholina Lambert sale.

LONDON LETTER.

February 24, 1916.

Special arrangements have been made by the Lord Mayor to show at the Mansion House the allegorical picture, "The Call to Humanity," painted by Mr. Percy Bigland. This beautiful work. Humanity is symbolized by figures of a man and a woman, pilgrims of life's thorny path, which is illumined for them by the radiance of the Light of the World. The woman still holds in her hands baubles which represent the lure of earthly things and neither she nor her companion can quite resist the appeal which these make. Their eyes turn, however, to the heavenly glory and one knows that the two will follow where its light shall lead. Reproduction of the work both in color and in photogravure have been prepared.

A novel scheme for the assistance of distressed artists has been evolved by the Imperial Arts League, whose committee arrange loans to artists in need of assistance, on the security of their works. These works are sold if opportunity arises, or merely held until their owner is able to repay the sum advanced, and the working expenses of the League are defrayed by gifts of pictures from well-known painters, to be sold for the benefit of their less fortunate brethren. As both the pictures given in this manner and those on which money has been advanced are exhibited without distinction at the shows held by the Association, the public cannot discern which artists are the beneficiaries or which are patrons, a tactful arrangement which means much to the pride of those who for the moment are placed in the painful position of seeking help.

Economically, the scheme works out extremely well, for it has the effect of preserving the market price of pictures, saving many a necessitous painter from sacrificing a canvas worth £50 for £5. The League, in fact, promises in time to come to take its place beside such institutions as the Institute of British Architects and the Society of Authors, both of which perform valuable work on behalf of their members in safeguarding their interests in a number of useful ways. It will probably prove the nearest approach to a trades union which the artistic profession will ever achieve.

The Painter-Etchers are holding an exhibition in Pall Mall, but apart from the fact that the hanging committee has at last adopted the sensible plan of reducing the number of exhibits to a couple of rows with an adequate space between each picture, there is little of note to record in connection with the show. It might have been expected that the many curious effects to be observed in our towns by night under the new lighting conditions would have inspired our etchers to some effort to do justice to the variety of new impressions thus afforded them, but so far we have yet to wait for the needle which shall make immortal Knauts' "Spinning." The total of the familiar themes of the years gone by, the same architectural subjects portrayed in the same painstaking way, and we leave the exhibition wondering whether perhaps after all the works were not executed before the present upheaval and merely exhumed for the sake of furnishing the exhibition. The best work in the exhibition is among the mezzotints, though the most striking, it must be confessed, is by the French artist, Eugène Bijot.

Messrs. Knoedler, of 15 Old Bond Street, have on a second Exhibition of Belgian Art, as interesting as the previous one. Every type of modern Belgian painting is represented, from the mystic essays of M. Fernand Khnopff to the brilliant flower pieces of Mlle. Alice Ronner. There is something very live and not a little stimulating in this collection of Belgian paintings, which is characterized by a sincerity from which our own men might well learn a valuable lesson. In portraiture especially there is much of exceptional merit, M. van Rysselberghe exhibiting two canvases which in their impressionistic force place him in a very high rank. The sculpture of M. Victor Rousseau evinces an imaginative strength of no mean quality.

Gifts for the second Red Cross Sale at Christie's are coming in freely and comprise many interesting objects. By Messrs. Duveen Brothers are contributed four miniatures set with diamonds, which formed part of the famous Hawkins collection, and from Mr. Ernest Renton come twelve oil paintings of Roman Emperors, given to King Charles I by Philip II of Spain and for many years hung at Whitehall Palace. These paintings realized 1,100 guineas when the unfortunate monarch's effects were sold. Two Millais drawings have also been given and another by Simonini, depicting the surrender of Belgrade by the Turks.

A splendid gift has just been made to the British Museum in the form of Mr. Whitcombe Greene's collection of Italian and German plaquettes. These include some of the finest examples of Renaissance craftsmanship and were exhibited some four years ago at the Burlington Fine Arts Club. Among the many rare specimens are several medals by the Paduan artist, Il Riccio, and some very scarce plaquettes by Moderno. The majority represent mythological scenes and several examples are believed to be unique.

A welcome relief from the actualities of the day is afforded by the delightful artificialities to be enjoyed in the Exhibition of Original 18th Century Drawings so well displayed just now in the galleries of Messrs. Colnaghi and Obach at 144 New Bond Street. Especially admirable are a number of the Rowlandsons shown, all of which are illustrative of his excellence as a draughtsman, apart from his quality as a satirist and caricaturist. Downman is well represented in several portraits in chalk and watercolors. A portrait of Miss Bloomfield by Adam Buck, in the semi-classic style affected by the portraits of the day is characteristic of the taste of the late 18th Century, while for craftsmanship the pencil and watercolor work takes a high place. A portrait of The Marchioness of Exeter by Sir Thomas Lawrence speaks eloquently of that artist's facility in dealing in chalks. Among the minor items are several drawings by H. W. Bunbury, which, while lacking the ease and skill of his more famous contemporaries, are yet deserving of careful attention. L. G-S.

An Early Italian Sculpture.

At the Gothic Gallery, 15 E. 40 St., Mr. Aharon has on view a highly interesting marble sculpture panel, attributed to the school of Michael Angelo, a recumbent figure in high relief of a child blowing soap bubbles, one of which is just issuing from his mouth. The work is conceived quite in the grand manner and modelled with much subtlety and force, preserving the charms of nature, and having withal a noble classicism. The panel measures 10 inches in height by 17 inches length.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

S. Montgomery Roosevelt has recently completed a three-quarter length seated portrait of Mrs. L. C. Beach. The fair sitter whose hair is a glorious bronze, wears a pearl colored gown and is placed against a remarkable blue background. The ensemble is unusually effective and the result artistically a success.

Sherry Fry's charming statuette "The Wonder of Motherhood" has recently been purchased by the Detroit Museum. His monument to Captain Abbey, which is to be presented to Enfield, Conn., by Mr. Alden Freeman is now being cut in marble and will be placed in the late Spring. The architects are McKim, Mead and White.

The Allied Artists Association are planning an exhibition to take place in the Fine Arts Gallery in late April or early May.

Robert Aitken's group statue, the commission for which he won in a competition of six well known sculptors, and which is for Mrs. William H. Bliss, is nearly completed. When cast in bronze it is to be placed in Woodlawn. The two figures which it embraces are of heroic size and are symbolical of the soul leaving the body, the idea being that of Mrs. Bliss. The figures are of Faith and Hope.

C. Y. Turner has spent the greater part of the winter in Baltimore where he is director of the Baltimore Institute of Fine Arts. Occasionally he comes to New York and paints at his studio in the Sixty-seventh St. building.

John Gregory who won the Prix de Rome scholarship three years ago and since which time he has been in Italy, has recently returned to New York and has taken a studio in the Lincoln Arcade, 65th St. and Broadway. He is modeling several notable works.

Theodore K. Pembroke expects to hold an exhibition at a Fifth Ave. gallery about the end of April. One of the most attractive features of the display will be a large landscape of an Autumn wood interior.

Arthur Crisp is at work upon a large decorative canvas, at his studio in the Healy Building, 66th St. and Broadway. The work comprises several figures of women and children, and is well composed. The artist expects shortly to begin an important decoration for a public building.

A big loan exhibition of paintings will be held in the Maryland Institute, Baltimore, April 5-22. The last show of the kind in Baltimore was held 7 years ago and was a complete success.

Pastel panels by Carton Moorepark are at the City Club Galleries. Gorgeous birds in the Bronx Park aviary furnished inspiration to the artist and he has made the most of their decorative possibilities and color beauty. Manchurian cranes, macaws, adjutants, vultures, etc., figure in the arrangements and, sometimes, wild flowers, grasses or autumn leaves add to the effectiveness of the schemes.

The Detroit Museum has bought Prince Troubetzkoy's statue of Lady Constance Richardson, the classic dancer.

Miss Josephine A. Huddleston, of Chicago, has been selected from nearly 1,000 candidates, as the model from whose form and features will be moulded the monument to be erected on the Dixie Highway, near the Mason and Dixon Line, symbolical of "American Womanhood of the North." Her measurements approximate very closely those of the Venus de Milo.

Hamilton King is planning an exhibition of pastel portraits in early April at one of the leading galleries. A number of well known people will be represented.

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts an additional gift of $25,000, made by Mrs. John R. Van Derlip and Dr. Angus Morrison for the erection of an art school building as a memorial to their mother, was announced. The total endowment of the art school is now $50,000. The new building will be erected in the block where the Art Institute is located.

In the fire which destroyed the American Club, Toronto, recently $15,000 worth of picture were lost. The total loss to the club was $100,000, covered by insurance.

Artists' Fund Society Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Artists' Fund Society took place Wed. eve. at the Salmandi Club, 14 W. 12 St., with 75 present out of a total membership of 115. Among the honorary members present were Dr. Alexander H. Humphreys, director of Stevens Institute, Hoboken; Messrs. Geo. W. Maynard, pres't Artists' Aid Society; Wm. T. Evans, Jos. S. Isidor, H. S. Sparks and Sam'l T. Shaw. The following officers were also at the dinner: Alexander C. Morgan, pres't of the Society; Wm. H. Howe, vice-pres't; W. Merritt Post, treas'r, and John Ward Dunsmore, Sec'y.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Feb. 20, 1916.

Crowds have visited the Petit Galleries every day for a week to see the original drawings and watercolors of Louis Raemackers, the Dutch cartoonist. The impression the exhibition has made upon the Paris public is greater even than is justified by the intrinsic merit of Raemackers' work. As a caricaturist he is disappointing and he will live chiefly as a delineator, always intensely realistic, often satirical, of the horrors of war.

To the pictures exhibited in London have been added a considerable number of more recent production. For nearly all, not already disposed of, eager purchasers have presented themselves. Of 220 in the catalog, only about a tenth remain unsold. The prices asked for these, which are, of course, the least desirable, are from $100 to $150 each.

There is a great diversity in Raemackers' work, but since the war commenced it has steadily grown in breadth of execution and intensity of meaning. The exhibition has been welcomed as an important event. Critics even declare that Raemackers proves himself as great, in the purely artistic sense, as he does in his character as a pictorial polemic. As a matter of drawing, certain enthusiasts are already comparing him to Goya. But this is exaggeration. In one of his pictures which makes the most violent impression is seen a train packed full of corpses of soldiers, it is bearing back to Germany from Liege. Blood is streaming in thin, bright cascades from beneath the locked doors, even from the cracks above. Not a human figure, living or dead, is visible.

The massacres at Dinan; the sacrifice of hostages in the first ranks of battle; corpses afloat in the flooded lowlands on the advance toward Calais; the atrocious death by asphyxiating gas; the slaying of Miss Cavell; the submarine murders and the multitudes of German dead on the marshes of Pinsk—these scenes are typical of the gruesome subjects which Raemackers depicts most ably. In caricature he best succeeds in drawing the faces of Wilhelm II, the German Kronprinz, the emperor Franz-Josef and Ferdinand of Bulgaria. The climax of the horrible and the satirical combined is reached in a portrayal of the German Kaiser drinking the health of Civilization in a goblet overflowing with blood, which splashes down about his feet. In bitterness of satire, Satan charging Wilhelm by telephone to congratulate his "good old God" on the success of the liquid-fire is Raemackers' pathos which seems most to reflect his finer talent.

In "A Success for Zeppelin," a little girl, in the presence of her dead mother, is asking her weeping father: "But mother hadn't done anything, had she, Papa? Then there is the noble scene wherein the Christ is gazing with stern reprobation upon the cringing Kaiser, who exclaims, while turning as if to flee: "We are not—we are not barbarians!"

All the pictures left by Druet, the rue Royale dealer, even those in his home, are to be offered at private sale by his widow, who is continuing his business. There are now on exhibition at the Druet Gallery very interesting drawings, aquarelles and pastels by David, Corot, Cezanne, Gauguin, van Gogh, Delacroix, Flandrin, Rodin, Daumier and H. Matisse. The original designs of Gauguin for his book on Tahiti are among them.

A series of 7 oil and 70 watercolor paintings by Harnignies has been presented to the City of Paris by Jacques Zoubaloff, in addition to his gift of works by Barye. They are on exhibition at the Petit Palais.

An exhibition by "war-artists," Henry Cheffer, at the Georges Petit Galleries, is of peculiar interest. The pictures are all either watercolors or colored drawings. Every one is of historical value.

Three cartoonists, Raemackers, Steinlen and Abel Faivre, were guests of honor at the monthly luncheon of the Anglo-American Press Association of Paris this week. Afterwards Raemackers was decorated with the Legion of Honor by his brother-artist, Ferain, officially representing the French Government.

It is announced by the secretary of the Académie des Beaux Arts that the Villa Médici, on the Pincia in Rome, has been re-opened for the benefit of art students who by disability are exempted from military service. It is also used for the housing of art students who have been wounded in the war.

The "Figaro" exults over the results of the Reisinger sale in New York, as "a brilliant victory of French over German Art." It ought, says the "Figaro," to stimulate art auctioneers in France to renewed emulation. "The Paris market is not asleep; prices, at such sales as there are, are good. It is needful that greater zeal should be shown in the present crisis, in order that the task of revival after the war may not be so immense as to be impossible."

Art Objects and Furniture.

The interesting and important collections of Mrs. Williams Sprague of Hempstead, L. I., and Mrs. Frances Byam of East Chatham, N. Y., on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries, include Chinese porcelains, snuff bottles, bronzes, brasses, mirrors, valuable rugs, beautifully upholstered suites of modern furniture, and other works of art, but the collections are particularly attractive because of the unusually large number of very fine pieces of antique furniture, among the famous makers of the old days who are represented being Chippendale, Hepplewhite, Adam and Sheraton.

Many of the pieces in this division of the collection were brought from Oatway, of London; others were purchased from Sloan, Tiffany, and other leading dealers. The set of twelve Hepplewhite dining room chairs belonged to the late Miss Coleman of Hatton Road, Harlington, Middlesex, England, and were originally purchased in 1797. A satin-wood table is even older, for it is one of a pair made at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1794.

A mahogany Sheraton writing table was brought from France soon after the battle of Waterloo, and a large Hepplewhite wardrobe was built for Byam House, Brighton, (now the Union Club) about 1796. A curious mahogany chest of drawers with washstand top, composed of six pieces, was brought from France in 1816 by the Dowager Lady Temple. These collections will remain on exhibition till the sale on the afternoons of March 10 and 11.

The Horsfield Furniture Collection.

In addition to the Blakeslee pictures fully noticed in last week's ART NEWS, there are now also on view at the American Art Galleries prior to sale on the afternoon of Mar.
7, the English XVII century furniture and pottery collection of Major George Horsfield of London. A feature of the display, is an old oak table in a center of an oak paneled room. The table equipment is partly of pewter, with knives and forks of the period and cups of horn engraved with sporting subjects. The potteries include examples of Staffordshire, Spode, Wedgewood, Walton, Whieldon, old Sunderland and old Pratt, Minden and Delft, while some Dutch portraits and a very large landscape by Constable, together with a silver luster bust of Shakespeare complete the list of other salient features of the collection.

Early American Art Sold.

At the Anderson Galleries on the afternoon of February 25 was held the first session of a sale of old American views and of art objects in china, brass and pewter as well as textiles. The total of the session was $2,357.50. A Chinese fish dish of pewter sold to Mr. H. B. Weil for $51 and an old Russian deep pan for $21. Mr. O. C. Hill gave $43 for a Hispano-Mauresque plaque, and $30 for a Crown Staffordshire jug. To Mr. William Randolph Hearst was sold a fine cracked old Liverpool pitcher for $42. On one side is a decoration showing the American ship Caroline. Mr. Hearst also secured an old silver Leicester jug for $33, a Southerland luster pitcher for $28, a white plate with a view of Fishkill for $27, and a white and pink vegetable dish with a view of Schenectady for $22. Mr. J. H. Collins gave $35 for a pair of blue and white Chinese vases and Mr. J. B. Wilbur $30 for a Colonial rug.

At the concluding session, Feb. 25, Mr. Hearst secured for $100 a dark blue and white plate, with a view of Niagara Falls; for $29 an old salt glaze jug with a figure of Liberty in relief, and for $22 a large black and white soup tureen and cover, with a view of Schenectady. Mr. O. C. Hill paid $51 for a pair of alabaster Italian altar candlesticks. To Mr. A. M. Hudnut went for $50 a dark blue and white American Herve's pitcher, and to Mr. E. Knodel for the same amount a set of six mahogany Chippendale chairs. Mr. L. E. Knott gave $44 for a blue and white Staffordshire pitcher with medallions of the Boston State House and N. Y. City Hall, and $41 for a blue and white punch bowl, with the Upper Ferry bridge over the Schuylkill. To Mr. E. Turnbull went at $41 a statuette of John Wesley preaching. The total for the session was $3,439 and of the sale $5,796.50.

Des Portes De La Fosse.

The opening session, on the evening of March 25, at Silo's Fifth Ave. Galleries, of the collection of oils formed by M. Henry des Portes de la Fosse produced $2,435. Mr. F. Brummer gave $160 for a flower piece by Van Huysums; $130 for a portrait by a Dutch painter, thought to be a copy of a Rembrandt school; and $56 for "The Combat," attributed to Woevermans. "Three Virtues" put down to Graeyet sold for $115. To Mr. C. Oberwalder fell a "St. Catherine" said to be of the 17th century Florentine School at $77.50. "The Faggot Gatherers" cataloged to Harpignies sold to Mr. J. A. Topping for $60. A few small works attributed to Blakelock brought low prices.

At the second and final session, Feb. 26, Mr. L. F. Willis gave $625 for Thaulow's "The Cathedral" and Mr. T. Topping $575 for Bogert's "Venetian Sunset." To Mr. O. B. Wilkins went for $310 a "Portrait of a Woman" cataloged to Holbein. A "Virgin and Child" attributed to Francia fetched $255 from Mr. T. B. Brunner. Bruce Crane's "Harvest Time" sold to Mr. J. N. Murdock for $190 and an "Evening Landscape by George Inness to Dr. Hopkins at $180. Dr. Brunner gave the same amount for Knaus' "Spinning." The total of the session was $5,875 and of the sale $8,310.

Morgan and Huntington Duplicates.

It is announced that Messrs. J. Pierpont Morgan and Henry E. Huntington are to sell at the Anderson Auction rooms the duplicate copies of works in their libraries. The Huntington duplicates will be sold this season, but it will not be decided whether the Morgan sale will take place this season or next until Mr. Morgan's return from Europe. The late Mr. Morgan acquired many duplicates in his search for the most perfect obtainable copies while Mr. Huntington's purchase of whole libraries, which was also a custom of Mr. Morgan's, has naturally resulted in his possessing hundreds of duplicates and even triplicates.

Sale of Oriental Art.

An important collection of ancient Chinese and Japanese brocades and tapestries, paintings, color prints, illustrated books, and curios, the property of Mr. Shotaro Sato of Kyoto, Japan, is on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries, preparatory to the sale on Thursday afternoon and evening, and Friday eve. next. It includes Chinese paintings of the Sung, Yuang and Ming periods; Japanese Buddhist and Tosa paintings of Kamakura, Ashikaga, and early Tokugawa periods, and Ukiyoe paintings by various famous masters. There are also many old Japanese color prints, including several fine specimens of primitives of Urushiye and Beniye; unusual large prints Harunobu and Shunsho; fine triptyches by Yeishi, Toyokuni, and Toyochiro, and the exceedingly rare complete sets of "Twelve Silk Cultures," by Utamaro.

Mr. J. T. Kinsley's Sale

Some of the paintings of the collection of Mr. Joseph T. Kinsley of Philadelphia, sold at the Hiram Parke Galleries, will be on view at the Hiram Parke Galleries, 107 Grant Avenue, San Francisco, during the first half of this month. There are many examples of modern French and American artists. Among the pictures included a large canvas by the late painting Franklin D. Roosevelt, House of Representatives.

SUES TO OUST MRS. THURBER.

"Mrs. Martha C. Thurber, widow of W. Scott Thurber, founder of the well-known Chicago art galleries, is charged with mismanagement and excessive waste of funds by the Fine Arts Building corporation in a petition filed in court asking that the power of executrix given her be revoked. "It is charged that the company is now insolvent and that there is due the Fine Arts corporation about $16,000 for rent. It is alleged also that an assessed valuation of $70,000 on the art galleries is excessive and that in reality their value does not exceed $40,000. It is set forth that claims totaling more than $62,000 are still unpaid. It is asserted that Mrs. Thurber in the management of the galleries has paid excessive salaries to herself and to two sons-in-law.

"The petition asks that the court appoint a custodian to take charge of the assets and to enjoin Mrs. Thurber from disposing of any more of the paintings."—Chicago Daily News.

BESNARD MURALS IN WEST.

The large mural painting, "Peace," by Albert Besnard, as well as a ceiling decoration for the French Embassy in Vienna, by the same artist, which were brought over early in the season by the N. Y. French Museum, have been recently on exhibit in Butte and Helena, Mont. The pictures have been shown also in other cities of the Far West, through the generosity of former Senator Wm. A. Clark, who has paid all the expenses of their transportation and insurance. The receipts from admission fees of 25 and 10 cents are devoted to the relief of French artists suffering from the effects of the war.

TO BUY CHASE SELF PORTRAIT.

The Richmond (Ind.) Art Association is trying to raise $250 to pay its share of $500 for the painting of himself by William M. Chase in the current exhibition of "The Ten" reviewed elsewhere. The other $250 of the purchase price has been donated by Mr. Warner Leeds.

Mrs. M. F. Johnston gave a lecture on Mar. 6 to help raise funds for the purchase of the picture.

OLDER ARTISTS AID YOUNGER.

An exhibition for the benefit of young artists, under the auspices of the "Friends of Young Artists," will open at the former Blakeslee Galleries, Fifth Ave and 53 St., on Monday next. The following old artists have donated works: J. Weir, D. C. French, Mrs. Whitney, P. Manship, J. Lie, G. Borglum, C. Beckwith, L. Mora, A. Kimball, T. Hastings, A. Groll, S. C. Paolo, R. Vonnoh, I. R. Wiles, W. T. Smedley, S. Werner, C. Yates, H. Mosler, J. E. Frazer, M. Sandor, O. Linde, Miss Lillian Genth and B. Danzi.

The fourth competition, under the auspices of the "Friends of Young Artists," in this time for young decorators, is now in progress, and 365 artists are competing from all parts of the country. An exhibit of the works submitted will open April 15 at Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's studio, 8 W. 8 St.

PORTRAIT OF LLOYD GEORGE.

Augustus John has finished the portrait of Lloyd George commissioned by Sir James Murray for presentation to the Aberdeen Art Gallery. Before going to Scotland, however, it is being shown in the exhibition of the National Portrait Society at the Grosvenor Gallery, London. The origin of the portrait may be recalled. To last year's Red Cross sale several well known artists presented frames with the promise to paint portraits for them to the order of the purchasers of the frames. Sir James Murray bought the frame given by Mr. John, and got the consent of Lloyd George to sit for the portrait.

SALMAGUNDI CLUB SHOW.

The annual exhibition of oils, by members of the Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., will open Monday and continue to Mar. 23. The three prizes to be awarded as usual are: the Samuel T. Shaw purchase prize of $500, from which portraits are excluded; the William T. Evans prize of $100, for the best figure painting, and the Joseph S. Isidor prize for the best landscape. The exhibition, the largest yet made by the Club, was inaugurated by the usual "stag" smoker last night.

"LEST WE FORGET"

It was a sad coincidence that the second and last sale of the remainder of the stock of pictures left by the late Theron J. Blakeslee, this week, should have come during the week which marked the second anniversary of his death, which occurred on March 7, 1914. It is to be wondered how many of his fellow dealers who bid for his pictures at the sale sessions this week, noticed the coincidence. Only a brief "In Memoriam" published notice in the Evening "Post" on March 7 proved that at least "one heart is faithful still."

The three pictures by J. Alden Weir, president of the Academy, which figure in the exhibition of "The Ten," now on at the Knoedler Galleries, have all been sold.

MR. FRICK THE PURCHASER.

It has become known, as suspected, that the purchaser of Gainsborough's "Mall of St. James' Park," who was represented in the transaction by Duveen Brothers, was Mr. Henry C. Frick. It will be recalled that the famous picture, long in the collection of Sir Audley Dallas Neeld, at Gittleton, England, was secured there through Thomas Agnew and Sons. The purchase price of the painting is thought to be in the neighborhood of $250,000.

Plans are on foot for the establishment of a public art museum in Des Moines, Iowa, and Mr. J. S. Carpenter has been authorized to arrange a large art exhibit in the near future in the Public Library, to interest citizens in the art museum movement.

WINS PICTURE INSURANCE.

(Special cable to AMERICAN ART NEWS). London, March 9, 1916.

The suit brought some time ago by the proprietor of the Marlborough Gallery, Mr. M. Mayer See and his partners, to recover the insurance values on a number of pictures that were stolen from the gallery some months ago and just prior to Mr. See's departure to serve in the French army at the front, has been decided in favor of the plaintiffs and their claim of £3,224 has been allowed them.

DEALER COLLINS CONVALESCENT.

Samuel Collins, of Stroudsburg, Pa., the well known traveling art dealer, who attempted to commit suicide, through an overdose of sulphonal at the Hotel McAlpin a fortnight ago, is convalescent at Bellevue Hospital. It will be remembered that in June, 1908, Collins was arrested on the complaint of Mr. John M. Beckley of Rochester, N. Y., who obtained a body execution on account of Collins' failure to pay a judgment of $3,500 which Beckley had obtained for the sale to him of a spurious Dupre, with $500 costs, and while in Ludlow St. Jail was sued by Francis Wilson, the actor, for $5,000, again on a charge of selling spurious pictures. Collins then filed a counter suit for $25,000 damages and vainly endeavored to have Mr. Wilson arrested.

COUSE PICTURE SOLD.

Irving Couse's important painting, "Making Pottery," which took the Carnegie prize at the Spring Academy of 1912, was recently purchased by the Fort Worth, Tex., Art Ass'n for their permanent exhibition. At his Sherwood studio there are several canvases painted at Taos, N. M., his summer studio, among them "A Prehistoric Image," in soft grays and browns.

ST. LOUIS MUSEUM.

The Museum has added to its increasing collection of Oriental ceramics a very important specimen—a large club-shaped Chinese vase of the K'ang-hsi period, about 28 inches in height, decorated in famille verte colors with finely drawn figures illustrating a legend of the Chinese Emperor, Mu Wang (1000 B. C.). The purchase of this vase, together with numerous recent acquisitions from the Morgan collection and other sources, gives the Museum a representative assemblage of Chinese porcelains. The collection now embraces a number of the early Ming pieces, often comparatively crude; a choice selection of famille verte, blue and white and single colors of the period of K'ang hsi, and numerous pieces dating from the later periods of Yung-cheng and Ch'ien-lung.

A recent accession of importance to the Museum's collection of paintings is the canvas by Andre Dauchez, entitled "Walled Town: Concarneau, Brittany." This picture was purchased from the French Exhibition.

FRENCH ART AT BUFFALO.

The exhibit of pictures and sculptures from the French Pavilion and section of the Fine Arts Dept. at the San Francisco Exposition, and which is in charge of Mrs. Ethel Quinton Mason, opened last week in the Albright Gallery after a display in St. Louis and Chicago. It will go from there to the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, and the Detroit and other museums.

ART TALK AT CLUB LUNCHEON.

At a luncheon in the Republican Club on Mar. 4, the speakers included Director Robinson of the Metropolitan Museum, Cass Gilbert, architect; Frederick Dielman, former president of the Academy; William T. Evans, A. A. Anderson, Park Commissioner Ward and Grosvenor T. Atterbury, architect. Mr. Anderson found greater love for art in America than anywhere, Mr. Robinson talked of the educational work of the Museum, Mr. Gilbert urged more museums, Mr. Evans suggested that the Metropolitan buy more American pictures, and Mr. Ward wanted to limit the number of statues in Central Park and save certain sites for great works of art.

James G. Tyler's "Cape Ann Flyer," a characteristic marine, depicting a Gloucester mackerel schooner before the wind, was in the second night's sale at the Salmagundi sale recently, and was purchased for $180 by Mr. Cowl, grandson of the late George A. Hearn.

WESTERN SOC'Y BUYS A CARLSON.

The Nebraska Art Association has purchased John F. Carlson's "Winter Dream Days," one of this artist's latest works and, by many judges, considered among his best, for about $2,000. The painting is now on tour, with a number of others, of the art centers of the country and in a few weeks will be hung in the Art Gallery, at Lincoln, Neb.

ART COURSES AT N. Y. UNIVERSITY.

Two new art courses are being given at New York University, under the direction of Louis Weinberg. One, under the auspices of the extramural division, is conducted at the Metropolitan Museum and includes a study of "cubism," "futurism" and "post-impressionism" in painting. The other course, "Old Masters," embraces a study in art from Giotto to Watteau, illustrated by the paintings in the Museum, with especial attention paid to the Morgan and Altman canvases. The work will also include a study of the Morgan enamels and the Hoontschef exhibit.

MEDALLIC ART.

A medal in light bronze of very unusual but artistic design by C. J. Van der Hoef has been struck for the benefit of Dutch artists, painters and sculptors, affected by the present war in Europe. The obverse shows the Goddess of Peace and the reverse the arms of the Committee for the Relief of Artists in Holland.

Another curious war medal has appeared in commemoration of the German prisoners of war interned at Douglas, Isle of Man. The obverse bears a view of the prison camp surrounded by barbed wire and near the top is a cartouch, showing the singular three-legged Manx Triskelion.

Miss. Institute Elects Officers.

At the recent annual meeting of the Mississippi Home Science and Art Institute in Columbus, Miss., the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Susie W. Gunter; vice-president, Annie Cook; treasurer, S. Mae Jackson; secretary, Iva Causey.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*"The Ten" Make a Good Show.

To be select and not to be selected, is apparently one of the objects of the group of painters known as "The Ten," now holding its annual exhibition this year of 25 works at the Knoedler Galleries, 556 Fifth Ave., to March 18. Of course, there was an original selection but it was of men, and not of works, and the question now annually propounded is whether "The Ten" make good in their aloofness from the "Ninety and Nine." This year they certainly do, for their display is brilliant if somewhat uneven in quality.

William M. Chase easily dominates the present exhibition, with a large and remarkably true and vivid "Self Portrait," which is loaned by the Richmond, Indiana, Museum, and a remarkably fine still life study of "Fish." It is not an exaggeration to say that the portrait is probably the best thing the artist ever did. It is certainly better than that of Chase himself by Sargent, which is saying a good deal. And then the present is much the more important work. As to the still life the painter has long since painted such subjects, and in them he has reached such a degree of sheer virtuosity that they might be worthy of Chardin or Villon.

Mr. Chase has a close "runner up" in Robert Reid, who sends a brilliant life-size presentation of a "Trio" of young women, walking in the open, full of the joy of living, and flecked with patches of sun and shade. The group is admirably composed, the faces well individualized, and the bare arms and hands remarkably well drawn, modelled and painted. This work is loaned by Mr. Joseph H. Choate. In several of the canvas sketch portraits, in which the artist has lately had success, are the very graceful female figure, "A Fantasy" and "Portrait Impression," while a somewhat elusive effect is well caught, in a "Landscape."

Other landscapes are by Willard L. Metcalf, who paints as ever with sure and graceful brush, and shows "Silver Poplars" and "Young Birches," the pictorial effects of "The Breath of Autumn" and the wide spanning arch in full sunlight, of the "Ponte alla Badia, Florence."

Two single figures of young women, and a landscape, "The Old Sertinel of the Farm," are the contributions of J. Alden Weir. Skillful are the arrangements of his highly attractive "A Harmony in Yellow and Pink," where the heavy impasto is less obtrusive than in "The Letter." Most workmanlike, and painted with a fine relation of values is Edmund C. Tarbell's picture of a very handsome "Young Woman Studying."

The third Bostonian, Joseph De Camp, sends a serious, strong and agreeable bust portrait of Charles Sprague, while Edward E. Simmons is rather prosaic but effective in two half-lengths of young women, one looking at her "Reflection" in a hand mirror and the other, "L'Insouciance," Childe Hassam's half a dozen contributions show various influences. There is a well painted group of "Oregon Apples" a la Cezanne, and a glimpse of "Naples" a la Pissaro. A nude young woman is seated in rather stiff fashion on "The Top of the Cliff," and a quite effective night view of "Manhattan" also appears.

Show of Academy Portraits.

One of the most interesting displays that has been made for a long time in this city, is that of the National Academy portraits, now on at the National Arts Club to Mar. 25. This Loan Exhibition of Portraits of Academicians and Associates, selected from the permanent collection of the Academy, is held under the joint auspices of that institution and the club. It contains 142 portraits, 36 of them of artists who are dead. It is no reflection on the living to say that, historically, the collection would be more interesting did it represent more of the dead. There are Inman, Kensett, Henry Peters Gray, Casilear, J. D. Smillie and R. Swain Gifford for instance. The former presidents who appear are Morse, Durand, Huntington, Whittredge, J. G. A. Ward, Wood, Dielman and Alexander, while among the early men shown are Dunlap, Elliott, Waldo, Verbruyck and Leutze, besides those mentioned. It is a pity that the collection, taken out of storage for the occasion, should not have a permanent home where it could be on public view as are the 500 odd portraits of old and modern masters, painted by themselves, which are displayed in the Galleries of the Uffizzi Palace in Florence. Several of the canvases are not in the best of condition and the frames in many cases are sadly in need of repair. The display of the present collection is one of the best pleas for the erection of a suitable Academy building.

Gari Melchers Exhibits.

A most capable painter of rather prosaic genre is Gari Melchers, who is showing 26 works to April 1, at the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave. His technique is rather heavy in the later examples, but in some of the earlier ones, such as "Easter Sunday," with its attractively unconventional composition, it is lighter and the color is bright and true. Effectively handled, though the composition is rather scattered, is the picture of a baptism in "The White Church." Among the later works are notably "The Summer Cottage" and the story picture of "The Open Door," at which the nurse waits in the shadow, while in the light the mother dandles her babe before a woman friend.

The well known large exhibition size canvas, most effectively handled, in rather conventional fashion, "Maternity," is again shown. Figures of women posed in well selected and painted picturesque interior surroundings, appear in "The Breakfast Table," "Writing" and "Open Fire," while "Nelly Kabel" is more in the nature of a portrait, and an attractive one it is. There is a rather commonplace "Nude" study and several decorative flower pieces appear. "The Plantation Home" is one of a small group of landscapes. A couple of studies of red snapper are rather painty.

There was opened to the public Monday, at the Metropolitan Museum, in the gallery of special exhibitions to remain through April, the most important and valuable loan exhibition of Chinese potteries and sculpture which has yet been made here or abroad.

The display, the first to be made under the auspices of Mr. W. Boschreitz, the new and capable curator of the Department of Far Eastern Art, includes examples from the collections of Messrs. Charles L. Freer, Samuel T. Peters, E. L. Winthrop, A. N. Beadelston, James and Howard Mansfield and John Platt; Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer and Miss Katherine Rhoades. The examples of pottery and porcelain date back to the earliest known period, that of Han, which is 200 years B. C., and some of the sculptures in stone and bronze are of even earlier date. In variety and beauty the potteries and porcelains are not to be surpassed. A semi-circular stone has a remarkable incised representation of Buddha, surrounded by his apostles, etc., and a square stone has a reproduction of a picture by the artist, Wu-Tao-Tzu. A very remarkable frontal stone, reproduced on this page, has interesting sculptural adornment. Highly interesting are a large and early sculpture in bronze and a small copy in metal of a sarcophagus.

Russell's Pictures and Bronzes.

Paintings and sculptures by Charles M. Russell, faithfully picturing "The West that has Passed," are at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., to March 16. Russell has been a cowboy and is familiar with the scenes he pictures. Action is the salient quality in both paintings and bronzes, and movement is so well expressed that one is surprised to know the artist was self-taught. There is more of the illustrator than the painter in the work, the brushing is a little sleek, and, perhaps, less attention to details would have yielded bigger results. An interesting picture is "Innocent Allies," a "hold up" on a lonely road. The "allies," presumably, are the bandits' horses which stand by looking on. There is a good effect of space and air.

James Britton's Charcoal Portraits.

An exceptionally interesting little exhibition of sketch portraits, in black and white, and a few oils by James Britton will be open to the public Thursdays and Saturdays, through this month, at the studio of Mme. Marie Apel, 3 Wash. Sq. North. Mr. Britton gets something more than the salient qualities of his sitters, giving us a glimpse of the inner nature of each with no superfluous details to detract from the impression. Characterizations of Charles Coffin, Robert Cole, Gedney Bunce, John Flannigan, August F. Jaccaci, Frank B. Gay, Marie Apel, Mrs. James Britton and Mrs. H. C. Redgrave are in the group. "The Widow," an oil of Mrs. Claude Raguet Hirst Fidler, has tonal value, quite unusual. The flesh is low in tone, yet remarkably luminous. The general scheme is of rich blacks, simply treated, but the background has variations of browns and yellows. Thin impasto, over a heavy ground, is effective. The picture is exceedingly vital.

Wolfe Art Club Display.

There are 74 pictures at the annual exhibition of the Catherine Lorillard Wolfe girls' art club which will last through the month at Grace Church House, 802 B'way.

Gayety of color and a tendency to break away from the Academic characterize the exhibition as a whole. Josephine Paddock's "Hollyhocks" is effective and one of the best works is Ellen Ravenscroft's rendering of snow clad pine trees on a hillside. A portrait by Harriett Titlow is a strong character study, vigorously treated but a bit crude in color. This applies to many of the exhibits. Clara Mamie Norton's "Young Woman with Muff" was awarded the portrait prize. It is a quiet and convincing picture with a personal note. Margaret Huntington's garden picture is promising.

There is a group of clever and broadly treated landscape impressions by Ethel Louise Paddock, one of which took the landscape prize. Katharine Welch's miniature of Mr. Marshall received a prize and Hon. mention was given to Harriett W. Titlow for a broadly treated portrait impression of a woman, to Nellie Lloyd for an interesting portrait study. There are some notably artistic photographs by Caroline Geiger and Mary P. Moore.

Real Color by Halpert.

Samuel Halpert is a man who believes in "calling a spade a spade." He paints the local colors of landscape and still life as he sees them, and with a deal of truth. Generally speaking, however, his world is lit simply with cold light and of variations of atmospheric effect, of sunshine and shadow and the wearing of wind and weather, he takes little account. It seems as if he were painting the landscapes and villages of children. And yet, as shown in 16 of his recent oils, chiefly done in Portugal and now on view at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., to Mar. 20, the painter often gets the same solidity and truth of effect that are found in the best works of Cezanne.

at 2:30 P.M. each day

In our Art Galleries, 1519-21 Chestnut St.
Philadelphia.

In making this collection Mr. Latta was imbued with the thought of procuring the rarer prints, maps, engravings and even books pertaining to Early Philadelphia which, when the history of Early Philadelphia is remembered makes many of the prints of nation-wide interest. Among some of the rarer pieces may be mentioned The Aquatint of the Battle of Mud Fort—the only authentically known plate of this Battle in existence. Skull's map of Philadelphia, many rare Birch Views, the unfinished plate of the Signing of the Declaration of Independence by Savidge, various Philadelphia Views from its beginning to the Civil War period, together with a few early and scarce Histories and Guide books.

On exhibition from Thursday, March 16 until day of sale.

Notable Oriental Art Display.

At the Bourgeois Galleries, 668 Fifth Ave., there is now on view an interesting collection of the pictorial art of the Far East, partly Japanese and chief Persian and Chinese. Among the examples of the early art of the Middle Kingdom are four XV century specimens, all of the Tosa School, two screens and two fans. There is besides an amusing picture of Hotei and his Treasure Bag, by Kano Yeitoku, and a still life by Korin. The Persian specimens are chiefly of the XV and XVI centuries, though there are two XIII century treatises of Dioscorides by Abdulla Ben El Fadl, one of a single flower and the other of three flowers. There are a number of specimens of Cufic writing of the X century and a small mosque door from Ispahan of the XVI century. The artists represented by calligraphy and pictures, include besides El Fadl, Behzad, Sheik Sahde, Ali El Meched, Li Tang, Nan Yuan, Lee Fuh Chin, Chuen Ku, Shah-Namah and Chao-Thung.

Antique Silver Sculptures at Hofer's.

Mr. Martin Hofer, who sails for England today on the Rotterdam on a brief business trip, has now in his gallery, at 668 Fifth Ave., three very remarkable pieces of ancient art from the collection of the late Sir J. C. Robinson at Swanage Manor. Two are remarkably fine silver gilt sculptures of the XII century, one showing a Virgin and Child, the former with a Cabochon jewel on her chest and a St. Christopher holding the Infant Saviour. There is also a richly decorated altar rest for the book of the mass. Of the sculptures the most important is the famous Mongro Madonna which figured in Sir Charles Robinson's collection for over a quarter of a century.

Historical Miniatures at Hodgkins.

At his galleries, 9 E. 54 St., Mr. Hodgkins is showing an interesting collection of British historical miniatures, arranged in 8 frames. Famous historical characters, including royalty and Cromwell and members of his family, of the XVI and XVII centuries appear as limned by Samuel Cooper, Peter and Isaac Oliver Jehannet, Jean Petitot, Balthasar Gerbier, Lawrence Cross, Bernhard Lens, Franz von Mieris, Jean Prevost, William Dobson and Christian Richter.

Miss Brown's Art Work.

Fanny Wilcox Brown is showing some tapestries and 21 paintings and sketches at the Petrus Stuyvesant Club, 129 E. 10th St., to Mar. 20. The tapestries are naive and nice in design and color. "The Happy Prince" recalls Oscar Wilde's beautiful fable. In an oil of Mrs. Sam Dexter one feels that the sitter's salient qualities are well suggested. Most of the oils which are treated decoratively, are immature. An impression of a garden of butterflies and babies strikes a good note.

Birds in Watercolor.

Some 81 watercolors of birds, painted life size, by H. C. Donslow, are at the Louis Katz Galleries, 103 W. 74th St., to Mar. 25. The exhibition has an educational value, for the subjects are rendered with photographic accuracy and every detail is noted, and the birds are pictured in their natural haunts. The parasitic wild orchid has been used effectively in an arrangement of egrets. Owls, thrushes, robins, blue jays and other little feathered friends, down to the humming bird, are pictured, as well as rarer specimens.

Alexander Memorial Exhib'n.

The comprehensive memorial exhibition of 82 canvases by the late John W. Alexander is now on at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, the artist's native city to April 1. The four-score and more pictures give a new idea of this painter's versatility. There are portraits, still lifes and landscapes—all truly representative. Among the notable portraits are those of Dr. Francis L. Patton, late president of Princeton University; Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Joseph Jefferson as "Bob Acres," Robert Louis Stevenson, Walt Whitman, Auguste Rodin and Mrs. Alexander. The number of portraits of men in the exhib'n refute the accusation, sometimes made, that Alexander painted women exclusively, although in the many portraits of beautiful women, young and old, and of children shown, the typical refinement of the artist's brush is evidenced. There is a portrait sketch of Mark Twain, little known, which will doubtless become more valuable in time.

The Boston Museum loaned the well-known "Pot of Basil" and the Metropolitan Museum the fine "Walt Whitman," probably Alexander's strongest portrait.

"Armory Show" In Petto.

The Forum exhibition of Modern American Painters will open next Monday at the Anderson Galleries. The exhibition is not a commercial enterprise, and the only beneficiaries will be the artists themselves. The entire expenses are met by the Anderson

Francis Murphy, five of F. K. Frieseke's dainty impressions of femininity, in and out of doors, convincing winter scenes by Gardna Symons and two Douglass Volks with characteristic charm, "Fairy Tales" and "Ave Maria."

"The Five" at Macbeth's.

The current exhibition to March 21, at the Macbeth Gallery, 450 Fifth Ave., is composed of the works of Charles H. Davis, Paul Dougherty, Kenneth H. Miller, Chauncey F. Ryder and William Sartain, with three examples of each painter. Miller, who has something of Blake in his artistic composition, saturates his pictures with filtered light and groups his figures in a fashion suggesting Puvis de Chavannes. There is something monumental, indeed, almost dead, about his pathetic group of a "Woman and Children." The "Dreamer" is a graceful figure of a half nude young woman seated with crossed arms, while the "Family" is interesting, though the father has rather a Pan-like appearance.

The chief of the compositions of Mr. Davis is a glimpse under trees on "A Summer Afternoon," to an old country house. This is unusual and extremely interesting. There is also a delicate "Spring"

Galleries, and the committee, composed of Christian Brinton, W. H. de B. Nelson, Robert Henri, Alfred Steiglitz, John Weichsel and Willard Huntington Wright are giving their time and services free. The undertaking is a philanthropic one, and its object is to give a large number of conscientious and deserving modern American painters an opportunity of reaching the public in a large and comprehensive manner, without any commercial intermediary.

The entire top floor of the Anderson Galleries will be hung with over 200 pictures by the more modern American painters, and some twenty artists are represented.

The exhibition will represent the largest collection of the new art works ever shown in this country, with the exception of the Armory show. But the Forum display has a more intimate interest for this country, inasmuch as it comprises only American work; and this work has been critically selected with great care and consideration by the Committee, the members of which represent many divergent tastes.

It is often difficult for the very advanced painters to get a fair and adequate showing and often native artists suffer as a result of commercial discrimination. It is to overcome this injustice that the exhibition has been inaugurated. By thus attempting to differentiate between the sincere and insincere paintings of the new movement, the Committee hopes to stimulate intelligent interest in the excellent work of the American "moderns."

The artists represented will be Ben Benn, Thomas H. Benton, Oscar Bluemner, Andrew Dashburg, Arthur G. Dove, Marsden Hartley, S. Macdonald-Wright, John Marin, Henry L. McFee, George F. Oi, Man Ray, Morgan Russell, Charles Sheeler, A. Walkowitz and William and Marguerite Zorach.

Art at Union League.

At the current monthly exhibition of the Union League Club, the following canvases are shown: "October Sea," "Seal Cove" and three other marines by Paul Dougherty, nine phases of nature, as visioned by J.

effect, and in the more familiar vein some finely studied clouds shadowing in part a bare landscape. The Doughertys are a vigorous effect of "Moonlit Surf," and rocky shore scenes at high and low tide. The works of C. F. Ryder are a Boudinesque scene at "Stoge Harbor, Cape Cod"; a fine purple view of "Overlook from Putnam Farm" and a spirited landscape with some men hauling logs. The examples of Mr. Sartain are a delicately painted portrait of "My Mother," a short landscape and a rather sketchy view of the tomb of a saint in Algiers.

The "Futuristic" Miss Stevens.

The Braun et Cie Galleries, 13 W. 46th St., are holding, to March 27, an exhibition of 21 "futuristic" paintings by Frances Simpson Stevens. The catalog has a rather bright preface by Manager Philippe Ortiz, who confesses that his firm does not even pretend to understand "futurist" pictures. After this utterance he sailed, presumably wisely, for France on Mar. 4. Miss Stevens also signs a "Foreword" in the Catalog. The best that can be said about the examples in whose production the artist has shown great industry, is that they are full of liveliness of line and color. They apparently intend to convey, visually, a sense of certain impressions produced on the mind of the artist. The impressions are of "Dynamic Philosophy," "Color Vibrations," "Simultaneity," "Vibrations," "Man Against Woman" and the "Rhythm of Venice."

Among the few natural objects unaccountably presented is a green elephant, while in another case the Italians are supposed to be shown approaching Gorizia. There is some suggestion of reality in the "Rhythm of Venice," but most of the rest is "vanity and vexation of spirit."

R. B. Farley at Arlington Gallery.

Richard Blossom Farley's canvases, now at the Arlington Gallery, 274 Mad. Ave., have subtlety of color and quiet charm. They are largely beach scenes and marines, painted at Barnegat, N. J., and on the Maine coast. Atmospheric effects are skillfully rendered, especially in a depiction of a Lunar low in one of the sea scapes. There is a pleasing interpretation of an elderly lady, low in tone and a more colorful portrait arrangement of a Mrs. Robert Logan.

PHILADELPHIA.

City Solicitor John P. Connelly has given his opinion that the sum necessary to complete the building of the proposed new Art Museum, $3,000,000, does not, according to law, have to be included in the loan bill of $87,000,000 to be submitted to City Councils by Joseph P. Gaffney, Chairman of the Finance Committee. The Museum loan will be probably deferred until next year and Mayor Smith thinks the money will be needed for the erection of a new general hospital at Blackley. Mr. Eli K. Price, a member of the Art Jury and Vice-President of the Fairmount Park Commission has been entering in his efforts to interest the Mayor and Councils in the appropriation of funds sufficient, in addition to the $800,000 now available to erect and carry to a finish the imposing Temple of Art as foreshadowed in the beautiful model now on view at City Hall.

Thirteen oils and thirteen sculptures have been sold from the current annual Pa. Academy exhibition, the sales, according to the Curator, exceeding those made at any similar exhibition in the history of the institution. Among the notable canvases sold are Thos. Eakin's "Music," "An Autumnal Note," J. Francis Murphy; "The Letter," Wm. M. Paxton; "Pennsylvania Landscape," E. W. Redfield; "Sea and Rocks," F. J. Waugh; "The Mother," M. D. Page and "My Neighbor's Farm," Charles Morris Young, and among the sculptures, "Turtle Baby," Edith B. Parsons and "Spirit of the Woods," by Chester Beach. Fifteen pictures had been sold at the Fellowship Exhibition, among them "Golden Glow," by Hugh H. Breckenridge; "The Bridge," by Herbert Pulliger; "The Deserted Hamlet," by Herbert Welsh, and "Passing Liners," by Morris H. Pancoast.

The annual Color Exhibition of the Plastic Club will open with a private view in the Club Gallery on Mar. 14.

At the last report fifteen pictures had been sold from the James B. Sword exhibition at the Art Club.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Branton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, will soon appear.

AN OBNOXIOUS LAW.

Unless New York book and art publishers and picture, antique and rug dealers can succeed in eliminating, through amendments, now pending before the city authorities—the objectionable and harmful provisions of the ordinance, recently passed by the Board of Aldermen, to become effective Apr.
1 next—their business will be seriously affected.

The new ordinance, or rather the revival of an old and obsolete one, requires the keeping of extensive records of all purchases, the procurement of special licenses to do business at all, a limitation of the time during which purchases can be made, and a stipulation that all goods must be held for thirty days before resale.

The ordinance is a decided step backward—comes under the head of restrictive, discriminatory and class legislation, and should be amended, or better still, repealed. There should be hearty and speedy co-operation on the part of all those interested in, or likely to be affected by the ordinance, or the book and art trade will be dealt a blow which may be most harmful. Preparedness is the watchword on this serious question.

"DOUBTING (ART) THOMASES."

The timely and sensible criticism, made by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby from his auctioneer's rostrum in the Plaza Ballroom in opening the third session, that at which the so-called "Old Masters" were offered, at the recent Catholina Lambert sale, of "The Doubting Thomases, who always asperse the authenticity of old pictures offered for sale," bids fair to become as famous in the American picture trade, as have the "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" of the late Dr. Burchard, and the more recent "Objectionable Bs—Bryan, Bernstorff and Berlin" of Major George Haven Putnam, in political polemical circles.

Mr. Kirby supplemented his just criticism by the expressed wish that if art lovers and buyers would seek more for quality and merit than names, it would be for the good of the trade and art educational interests in general.

In this issue of the "Art News," Dr.
Bredius of The Hague pronounces the admirable "Portrait of a Man," given to Verspronck in the Lambert sale, and purchased by the Kleinberger Galleries, as more probably from the brush of De Keyser. From the art or commercial viewpoint, it matters little who painted this fine portrait. It should suffice that it is well painted and a satisfactory work.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Kirby will continue to urge upon his auction audiences to look more for quality than names, especially when collectors are searching for pictures that please and educate. Let it not be forgotten also that because a work is called an "old master," even with reason, it does not necessarily become a good picture.
"Old Masters" like Homer, frequently
"noddod."

CORRESPONDENCE

Dr. Bredius Thinks it De Keyser.

Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:

The portrait of a man, of which you published a reproduction in your issue of Jan.
6 last, as to be sold from the Catholina
Lambert collection is not by Franz Hals (this attribution was an error and was corrected in a following issue—Ed.) nor does it look like Verspronck. Both Dr. Kronig and myself are nearly convinced that the original must be a fine example of Thomas de Keyser.

Yours truly,
Abraham Bredius.

The Hague, Holland, Feb. 6, 1916.

[This fine portrait, one of the best pictures in the collection, was sold for $3,300 at the fourth session of the Lambert sale at the Plaza ballroom on Feb.
4 last, to the Kleinberger Galleries, who are to be congratulated on its acquisition.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

Charles G. Balmanno.

Charles G. Balmanno, president of the Mechanics' Bank of Brooklyn and a collector of books, prints, coins, stamps and autographs, died Tuesday in that borough at the age of 51. Much surprise was expressed at the time, of his appointment by his friend and political associate, State Comptroller Travis, to appraise the books and prints of the collection of the late J.
Pierpont Morgan. For this work he secured the "expert" assistance of Mr.
Thomas E. Kirby, of the American Art Association.

Thomas M. Jensen.

Thomas M. Jensen, of Brooklyn, who painted many of the portraits of judges which hang in the Kings County Court House, died Monday in his eighty-fifth year. He was born at Apenrade, Denmark, came to this country in 1870, and had painted many well-known people, including Bishops Loughlin and Andrews, Morris K.
Jesup and Augustin Daly. Four daughters and a son survive.

Henry Charles Payne.

Henry Charles Payne, brother of William Norton Payne, and one of the founders of the Chicago Society of Artists, died in Chicago on March 1. He was born in New-buryport, Mass., Nov. 27, 1850, and settled in Chicago at the age of 19. He worked chiefly in oil and pastel, painted principally landscapes, and his career as a painter covered nearly half a century. Payne at one time was art critic for the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Charles S. Carstairs, of M. Knoedler & Co., and Mrs. Carstairs sail today for England on the Rotterdam.

Mr. Robert C. Vose, of R. C. & N. M.
Vose of Boston, was in town recently and was a prominent buyer at the Lambert sale. Mr. Vose, whose firm probably holds the largest number of Monticellis in this country, purchased at the first night's Lambert sale Monticelli's "Feeding the Chickens" for $250, and at the second night's sale the same artist's "Marriage Scene" for $700, his "Concert in Forest" for $1,600, his "Woodland Fete" for $6,700, and the two large "Group of Ladies" and "Ladies and Children," painted for the Empress Eugenie, for $2,000 and $1,700, respectively.

The John Levy Gallery has sold an important large oil by Winslow Homer entitled "Summer Squall" to a New York collector. At the Gallery there are now on exhibition two fine large pictures by George Inness, one an extremely youthful work of "panoramic" description, exceptionally high-keyed in color for an American landscape of the period. Two fine Blakelocks are to be seen in the same gallery, as well as a brilliant figure piece by Elliott Daingerfield.

Writer's Name Wanted.

Will the writer of the communication signed "F. C.," kindly send his full name and address in confidence to this office?
It is a rule in all well-regulated publishing offices that communications intended for publication must be accompanied by the writer's full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a measure of good faith.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

THE PERSONAL LIFE OF JOSIAH WEDGWOOD.
By Julia Wedgwood. Ed. by C. H. Her-ford. MacMillan & Co., 12mo.

In spite of the jumble which the great granddaughter of the famous Georgian potter has made of the mass of material concerning her distinguished progenitor, this contribution to Wedgwood literature contains much interesting matter. Wedgwood came into contact with many of the British art, but an unfortunate volubility makes his own literary productions rather forbidding. Miss Wedgwood wears the reader with lengthy extracts from the potter's letters, in which he strangely mixes his religious and political philosophy with
"shop talk" of his chemical experiments.
But the potter who had the good sense to employ such a designer as John Flaxman could not be wholly a bore.

Flaxman's "post-Greek" sympathies were of the greatest service to Wedgwood, who rapidly grew rich from the manufacture of vases inspired by the classic examples collected by Sir Wm. Hamilton, the architect.
The author gives a mass of interesting data anent the Wedgwood factory at "Etruria" and a most entertaining story of the celebrated "Barbarini Vase." Wedgwood's plagiaristic abilities are clearly revealed in the process of copying the famous vase. It must be said, however, that he did not pose (in the case of the "Barbarini") as anything but a copyist. The commercial advantage accruing to him from shrewd riding of the wave of favor for classic art was considerable. Miss Wedgwood says he was encouraged in his imitations by Sir Joshua Reynolds, which seems strange, and by Sir W. Hamilton, which doesn't seem so strange. It was through Sir William's sister, the wife of Lord Cathcart, that Wed-wood's pottery was projected with signal success into Russia.

In his Russian dinner service, Wedgwood introduced a flavor of British character by the painting of English landscape scenes upon plates and saucers, but he relied largely upon classic contours and classic ornamental devices. A typical Georgian character, his friends were like himself, given to speculative philosophy—Wilberforce, Joseph Priestly, Erasmus Darwin and the painter Wright of Derby were conspicuous among these friends. The plan of Miss Wedgwood's book is ineffective, lacking as it does order, continuity, and sequence.
Her main facts are buried in a maze of inconsequential references.

A CHIPPENDALE ROMANCE. By Eben Howard
Gay. Quarto, N. Y., Longmans, Green &
Co., $5.00 net.

The quest of the antique in the department of furniture has resulted in much prattle about Chippendale, Heppelwhite, Sheraton, etc., by persons who like to sound the names without worrying about what they mean. In this romance Eben Gay offers evidence, at the outset, of the fact that Chippendale was a real personage, a cabinet-maker who knew the value of his own work, as the invoice of a break front bookcase for £84 attests. A photograph of this book-case (date 1753) forms the frontispiece and this and other pieces designed by the immortal Thomas furnish the author's enthusiasm, which mounts to the point of declaring Chippendale the premier furniture designer produced by the world.

The hero of this romance, having been outbid at an auction in Fifth avenue on the book-case, seeking consolation of Rose Lee,
a collector of Adam period Georgian pieces, indulges in an entertaining dialogue with his fair friend over the merits of his favorite designer. The sudden turning up of a fortune, from Mexican oil, permits the hero to pursue his conquests in Chippendale, to dream with hope of furnishing of his Georgian house, while the vision of Miss Lee hovers always in attractive view—with possibilities. Despairing of locating in New York the proper pieces which his fortune would now permit him to acquire, the hero journeys to England, and there, as his Georgian accumulations grow, his thoughts ever fly over the sea to the fair collector whose sympathy for Adamite matches his Chippendale fervor.

With the fittings for his Georgian house in America, the hero takes ship at Liverpool, with one last conquest to make. Without delay he seeks the home of Miss Lee and there he sees the coveted pieces of Chippendale. Miss Lee confesses. She had outbid him. Now the great moment has come. These forces must join; the Georgian house must have "a queen." Miss Lee acquiesces. The Georgian house thus becomes perfect.

The illustrations to this "Chippendale Romance" are fittingly beautiful. The book is a fine memorial to a great artist in serviceable wood.

James Britton.

LONDON LETTER.

London, March 1, 1916.

The first meeting of the Westminster Tribunal under the Military Service Act was, curiously enough, occupied with an appeal made by Sir E. J. Poynter, President of the Royal Academy, for exemption for the Academy secretary, Mr. W. Lamb. It was pointed out that Mr. Lamb had to deal each spring with some 12,000 works sent in and that it would be impossible to fill his place with anyone inexperienced in the particular class of work. It was eventually conceded that he should be given three months' respite and should not be called upon for service until his work for the May exhibition had been carried out. It is little incidents such as this that bring home vividly the actualities of the times.

Very architectural in tone is the exhibition of original etchings now on at the galleries of Messrs. Connell & Sons. As is usual with the shows which one is accustomed to enjoy in these rooms, everything touches a high level of merit but in this instance one could find it in one's heart to wish that the plates were a little more expressive of the spirit of the times. From William Strang one is used to expect drawings which breathe the very spirit of modernity, yet when an exhibition of etching is concerned, he, like the majority of his brother-etchers, harks back to the antique and contributes of the Church at Palermo and of Girgenti. One would be unappreciative indeed, if one sought to quarrel with the excellence of technique displayed in these plates, but one is, nevertheless, left wondering why it should be thought necessary to find expression in none but architectural subjects when copper is employed in place of canvas. Andrew Affleck sends etchings of Rouen Cathedral and of Burgos, employing for his effects sharp contrasts of light and shade which are extremely impressive. Eugene Béjot, who has minimized the limitations of the etching-needle to a quite remarkable extent, is as delightful as is his wont, in his "Pont Neuf," bringing into the etching in some remarkable way the peculiar light and atmosphere which makes the view from the Paris quays unlike those in any other city. The exhibition only comprises some thirty etchings but each one is worthy of more than a passing attention.

As an example of the "finds" which from time to time occur in the most unlikely places, must be mentioned the recent discovery in a London builder's yard of a fine Greek tomb relief, showing a beautifully executed group of mourning figures. Yet another similar example was found not long ago in Jersey, where it had been built into the pavement of a cottage yard, the sculptured side having fortunately been placed face downward; so that when removed, the figures were found to be perfectly preserved. In such unexpected places may we look for the antique!

Hard on the heels of the agitation in regard to the closing of the Museums comes an indignant protest from art-lovers in regard to the use of the Victoria and Albert Museum for the purpose of a trade exhibition of British Industries in connection with the Board of Trade. The grumblers complain that one of the few public museums still left open should be utilized in this way, but seeing that the vast rooms are seldom, if ever, inconveniently crowded and that the Toy Fair will in all probability have the effect of bringing into the building a large number of people who in the ordinary course studiously avoid entering the doors of a museum, it seems as if the protest were more sentimental than practical. There is little room for aesthetic sentiment in wartime!

Sale of the Barrett Collection.

The sale of the pictures owned by the late Mr. Thomas Barrett of Pear's Soap fame, which will probably take place at Christie's in May, will doubtless prove the most important salesroom event of the season. It has been said that "Mr. Barrett might well have been a Pierpont Morgan in art, had he not remained an Englishman in his limitations," and certainly his selection of paintings invariably displayed an uncommon power of insight and discernment. The Norwich School is well represented in the collection, there being several examples of distinction by Old Crome, as well as excellent works by Vincent and Stark. Among the Victorians are Landseer's "Monarch of the Glen" (purchased from the painter by Lord Lonsborough for 350 guineas and sold at the Chylesmore sale for 6,900 guineas), David Cox's "Vale of Clwyd" (sold at the Murietta dispersal for 4,500 guineas), and John Gibson's famous tinted statue of "Venus" which brought £1,837 at Christie's in 1890. The fickleness of fashion and not the fortune of war will have to be held responsible, if a decided slump in value is found to take place in May, for it is unlikely that any of these works will approximate to the prices given for them in the nineties.

L. G.-S.

CLEVELAND.

Mrs. James Creelman, widow of the noted correspondent and author and herself art critic for the Paris edition of the Herald during a long residence abroad, is here, at the Gage Gallery, with a display of original drawings from the Lawlor collection. One of the most valuable is a tiny red chalk drawing by Watteau from the collection of Jacques Dupan; a Del Sarto "Madonna Enthroned"; a pen drawing by Rembrandt, "Moses Saved from the Waters," and others from the Vallery sale. Titian, Veronese, Van Dyck, Tiepolo, Greuze, Millet, and other great masters are represented in this connoisseur's collection. There is a small watercolor by Corot. The series of 26 drawings by Emile Levy, recently shown at the School of Applied Design, N. Y., is a feature of the display.

Mrs. Creelman shows a few fine oils, a rich toned Rousseau, a gray spring morning by Daubigny and a XVI century "Descent from the Cross," by an unknown Flemish hand. There is also a masterly head in oil by Ingres. David's portrait of Lamartine is one of the great works shown. Several fine examples of early German wood-carving and other art objects from the Blair collection are also being shown by Mrs. Creelman.

CHICAGO.

The Palette and Chisel Club's exhibition of oils and watercolors, by its members, places them in the ranks of "native fine art." Many of the members are showing works in leading museum exhibitions, as well as in the Club's quarters.

The Club will make its first annual appearance in the Art Institute in the near future. It will occupy three galleries, and will exhibit paintings, sculptures, etchings, engravings, wood-blocks and examples of graphic and industrial arts. The Club is also arranging an exhibition to be sent on tour. Mention will be given of paintings in the Club's show later on.

The Club's Pochard sale of paintings and etchings by members, for the Appui des Artistes fund, realized $137.50. The Chicago Society of Artists has raised $6,000 for this French fund.

The Palette and Chisel Club has closed its show of paintings by its "Ozark Painters," and now is installing an exhibit of pictures by artists of the Southwest. St. Louis is represented by Watson, Gray, Berninghaus, Wuerpel, Carpenter, Waldeck, Barnett and Wachtel.

Eva W. Schutze is giving an exhibit of her paintings and photographs at her studios, 5704 Stony Island Avenue. There

New England wood interiors by Mrs. Jeannette Agnew Lyon are among the latest oils put on exhibition at the Gage Gallery. At the School of Art, Miss Grace Kelly, one of the faculty, is showing some fifty oils and watercolors.

Jessie C. Glasier.

ST. LOUIS.

The Art Museum is exhibiting this month a group of paintings by the members of the Chicago Society of Artists, which gives splendid promise of the possibilities of building up a national school of painting in the United States, or at least a school which shall be typical of the Middle West. The collection was selected from the recent annual exhibition of the Society in Chicago and contains about fifty pictures. Among the artists represented are C. F. Browne, A. E. Albright, Pauline Palmer and A. H. Schmidt.

The special attraction at Anderson's this week is a collection of paintings by G. Warshawsky of Cleveland, O., and Paris. The Guild of Boston Artists is installing an exhibition in the Art Institute.

Fitzroy Carrington, curator of prints at the Boston Museum, and lecturer on the principles and history of engravings, has accepted the Art Institute's invitation to deliver the Scammon lectures.

Pauline Palmer conducted 8 gallery tours at the Art Institute for as many women's clubs during the last week of the show of paintings by Chicago artists. Mrs. Palmer is scheduled to give a talk on "Art and the Press" before the Cordon Club at the March banquet in its headquarters, Fine Arts Building.

H. Effa Webster.

A display of modern Dutch oils is now on in the rooms of the Nineteenth Century Club in Memphis, Tenn. Among the artists represented are Tony Offerman, J. H. Weiland and Bodelet.

BOSTON.

The exhibit of the Guild of Boston Artists opened at the Art Museum during the week. And a mighty good show it is. No longer can the outsider "sniff" at the Guild and say that it is an "organization of half students." Most of the best local painters are of it—a fact well borne out by the exhibit which the cold and austere Art Museum has "invited" to its hallowed walls. Already growls low and deep are heard anent the limitations placed upon the exhibit by the Museum. Why should the members of this favored society alone be invited into the Museum's inner circle, while all the remaining local artists are left to gnash their teeth in the outer darkness of neglect and indifference? Naturally, the Guild members are all pleased and happy.

A line of paintings hung in the large gallery allows the idiosyncrasies of each painter to manifest themselves. The show fills one of the largest galleries and a small adjoining one. E. C. Tarbell's clever portrait of the Albright family of Buffalo—a father and two little girls—is in the center, flanked by the work of R. A. Merriam, H. D. Murphy, C. Hopkinson (who has a portrait group), I. Gaugengigl, L. Kronberg, A. Goodwin, Gertrude Fiske, Lilla C. Perry, C. H. Woodbury and A. Paxton, who contributes a beautiful nude study. Interspersed along this wall are small pieces of sculpture by Bela Pratt (who is reported, by the way, to be at work on a statue of Phillips Brooks). Quite exciting, indeed, to be a member of the Guild these days.

En passant, it might be said, that many of the works hung in this show bear the stamp of the San Francisco Exposition in the shape of attached legends describing the various rewards of merit received.

An exhibition of pictures by Paul Harvey, whose theme is Santa Barbara and Southern Cal., is on at a local gallery. There is breadth as well as vigor of handling, and an effective sense of color, in these representations of grassy plans and desolate slopes bathed in warm sunlight. The artist has seen his subjects, not fancifully, but with dignity and truth, and gives realism of a stirring kind.

Baska Paeff, the young sculptress who worked her way through the Art Museum school by acting as cashier in one of the Boston subway stations, is exhibiting at the same gallery a well-characterized bas relief of Miss Jane Addams. It is an interesting as well as creditable performance, happily accompanied by her representation of Miss Gertrude Kiske's handsome white dog, "Boy."

John Doe.

NASHVILLE.

Dr. Mitchell Carrols will lecture on March 14 at the Archaeological Institute on "Athens, the City of the Violet Crown." As Nashville has a Parthenon of her own, the occasion will be one of unique intellectual pleasure and benefit.

The annual Fine Arts Exhibit held in the Parthenon in Centennial Park during the past three years, with the support of the Park Commissioners, has aroused interest in a possible broader field of activity. It is hoped that the Commissioners will decide to convert the Parthenon into a permanent Art Museum, to be open throughout the year.

Mrs. Geo. Denny, President of the Tenn. Fed'n of Women's Clubs, and the Congressman from this district, were the guests of the Nashville Art Association recently.

In March an exhibit of illustrators from the A. F. of A. will be shown in the Canujie Gallery.

COPLEY'S "NATH'L HURD."

John Singleton Copley's portrait of Nathaniel Hurd, reproduced in this issue of the Art News, the sale of which recently by the Copley Gallery, Boston, was exclusively announced in this journal, is an uncommonly good example of Copley's American period and distinguished, as well, as a representation of one of the earliest if not the very first of engravers on copper, to practise that art in America.

Nathaniel Hurd was born in Boston in 1730 and died during the Revolution in 1777. He was a skillful seal and die cutter, engraving the early seals of prominent colonial institutions, including Harvard College. He also engraved a number of portraits of public men in a quaint original style, some of them from the portraits painted by Copley. A contemporary and, in a way, a rival of Paul Revere and Henry Pelham, he was on terms of intimate friendship with Copley and Copley's stepfather, Peter Pelham, the pioneer mezzotint-engraver in the colonies.

In his day he was considered a sort of American Hogarth, having a vein of humor which ran to the satirical in some of his engraved cartoons. In painting Hurd, Copley has given the portrait an interesting Hogarthian flavor, portraying the engraver's homely features with full appreciation of their character.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York) "It is interesting to notice how closely painters of similar aim and temperament resemble one another in their work, when they happen to select similar motives. Daubigny occasionally painted something that is difficult to distinguish from a Corot. In Mr. Hearn's collection there is a Constable which from across the room might easily be mistaken for a Corot. Mr. William H. Fuller had a Constable - A Misty Sunrise - that might have passed for a Turner, and so forth."

Sale of Mss. at Collectors Club.

At the Collectors Club on Wednesday, Scott and O'Shaughnessy sold a collection of Mss. and first editions which realized $3,500. Mr. George D. Smith gave $625 for the Mss. of Leigh Hunt's "Sonnets by Italian Poets." He also paid $100 for Godwin's "Life of Chaucer," London, 1804, with a dedication to Hunt. For $85 he secured Napier's "Florentine History," London, 1846, a first edition with Hunt's autograph and marginal notes; for $70 Hunt's autographed Plato, also with marginal notes, and for $75 his 6 vol. Milton. James F. Drake paid $82.50 for the first edition of Hunt's "Attempt to Stem the Folly and Danger of Methodism," London, 1809. For Andre's Journal, issued by the Bibliophile Society of Boston, 1903, he gave $52.

Oriental Art Sale.

The sale of quaint and interesting old art objects from China, Korea and Thibet, at the Fifth Ave. Auction Rooms, Fourth Ave. & 25th St., Mar. 1-4, inclusive, was well attended, especially on the last day, and brought a total for the four afternoon sessions of $9,564. The most important pieces were sold at the final session and some fair prices were obtained by Mr. Hy. A. Hartman, the auctioneer. A pair of brass Okimono, in the form of deer, on carved brass stands, 17½ in. high by 15 in. long, brought the highest price of the entire sale, $410, from Mr. R. E. Moore. Mr. F. H. Conant paid $220 for a pair of Chinese lanterns, on carved teakwood posts, and Mr. J. Stone secured another pair for $180. The large Chinese screen in 12 panels, superbly carved and colored, was knocked down for $150. All of the gold tapestry panels (Kien Lung) sold well, from $180 to $200 per set of four panels, Messrs. R. Moore, K. Lange, James Allen and H. Grabagan being the principal buyers.

Snuff Boxes Sold at Christies.

The feature of the seventh Christie sale of the season in London on Tuesday was a collection of snuff boxes, which brought $15,000. A Louis XVI gold jeweled, oval box brought $925; for an oblong gold specimen from the collection of the Duke of Cambridge, $870 was given. Another oblong box with diamonds, rubies and emeralds brought $830. At Sothebys the first sale of Japanese color prints consisting of 171 lots realized $1,705.

An exhibition of oils by Ernest Lawson is on in the galleries of the City Club, 55 W. 44 St.

An exhibition of Colonial Antiques at the Copley-Plaza, Boston, March 18th to 26th, inclusive, with sales on the afternoons of March 27th, 28th and 29th. This collection of about 600 numbers is of particular interest to collectors and museums because of the rarity of the objects. It includes among its items:

STIEGEL GLASS—125 pieces in blue and white flint, including the best of the Hunter collection and some unique pieces not known to Hunter.

MILLEFIORI GLASS—The largest collection known in the world; paper weights, seals, doorknobs, etc.

LOWESTOFT CHINA—More than 150 pieces, the largest and finest collection known in America.

RARE CLOCKS—Work by Simon and Aaron Willard.

MINIATURES—Examples by Copley, Malbone and Doyle.

EARLY AMERICAN SILVER—60 pieces by the best makers, including Andrew Tyler, John Dixwell, Paul Revere, Samuel Minot, Benjamin Burt, Hurd, and others.

EARLY AMERICAN FURNITURE—About 150 pieces, many unique; finest American ball and claw-foot cabriole bed known; satinwood table, excellent example of Adam's work; mirrors.

Every article will be sold under guarantee as to age and quality. An illustrated catalogue will be sent on receipt of 50 cents.

SPECIAL EXHIBITION OF HAND WROUGHT JEWELLERY

BLAKESLEE PICTURE SALE.

First Session.

The first session of the auction sale of the 467 pictures which made up the balance of the stock of the late Theron J. Blakeslee, took place in the Plaza Ballroom on Monday evening last, March 6, when 78 pictures were offered.

The driving snowstorm made the attendance small, and the few buyers did not compete vigorously. In fact, Mr. Kirby, who conducted the sale for the American Art Association was enabled to complete it at the early hour of 10 o'clock. The total was $30,535, and the highest figure, $5,100, was paid by Mr. J. A. Mitchell for the charming portrait of his daughter, entitled "Girl with Dog," by Paphael Smith, the early English mezzotint engraver.

The largest buyers of the evening were Mr. Raymond Wyer, director of the Hackley Museum, of Muskegon, Mich.; the Ehrich Galleries and Mr. William I. Michel, formerly of the Brandus Galleries, but now associated with Dr. Paul Mersch.

Some of the pictures showed great depreciation, notably the four sketches by Orchardson, which cost Mr. Blakeslee $1,000, and sold for a total of only $275, to Messrs. Wyer, H. B. Smith and Jerome D. Kerr, and the two portraits by Carle Van Loo of the Emperor and Empress of Austria, which cost Mr. Cooper, of London, originally $1,000 each, and which he sold to Mr. Blakeslee for $1,250 each. These brought only $105 each from the Lans Curiosity Shop.

Second Session.

A total of only $17,342.50 was obtained at the second session, held at the American Art Galleries, Tuesday evening for 99 pictures including three passed at the first session.

Mr. Otto Bernet acted as auctioneer. The attendance was fair, but as the works offered included a number of school pictures and other oils attributed to noted masters, the bidding was not spirited and the prices were low.

The session had no special feature of interest. The highest figure was $1,800, paid by Seaman, agent, for a Beechey portrait of Col. Howden. Bernet, as agent, paid $1,025 for a large canvas of "Vessels in Harbor," given to A. Van de Velde. Among the chief buyers were C. J. Charles of London, the Ehrich Galleries and the Lans Co. Messrs. Charles A. Platt and Gari Melchers and Geo. Gray Barnard were also among the buyers.

Such low figures as $7.50 and $10 and $15, the last for a large canvas actually attributed to Paris Bordone, were noted.

Sale List.

The following is a list of the pictures which brought $100 or more, sold Tuesday evening, with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices:

Third Session.

The attendance at the third session Wednesday eve. was not large and a total of $9,645 was obtained for 95 pictures. The bidding was not brisk and many bargains in the way of decorative pictures were obtained, notably by C. J. Charles, Marshall Clapp and William Michel. The Ehrich Galleries bought sparingly. There were few private buyers.

The auctioneer was Mr. Otto Bernet and the sale was over at 9.30 o'clock. The highest figure was $520, paid by A. Rudert as agent for a "Portrait of Dr. Homan" by Harlow.

Sale List.

A Great Rug Sale.

The Mumford-Moore sale of antique Chinese rugs and textiles at the Anderson Galleries, closed Mar. 4 with a grand total of $42,443. Mr. H. Kervorkian gave $1,550, the highest price of the sale, for a Ming rug in fine preservation, measuring 15 ft. 3 in. by 6 ft. 9 in. S. Davidson, agent, gave 1,300 each for rugs, said to have come from a Tibetan temple, and a Kang Hsi example of fine quality, and $1,000 for a rare old brown rug. The total for the last session was $24,062.50.

The opening session, March 2, produced $7,473. Mr. W. M. Wheeler gave $410 for a Kong rug, with lions and Mr. T. P. Carvin $400 each for two long, narrow examples, with rectangular paterens. W. A. A. Dilley paid $360 for a Ming carpet, and W. O. A. Jones $275 for a Kong rug with a design of "the 100 antiques." The Metropolitan Museum secured for $210 a part of an old Kang-Hsi example.

The second session, March 3, brought $10,907. Mr. Deming paid $475 each for a pair of temple pillar hangings. A Ming period Kang-Hsi rug fetched $435, and Mr. G. C. Smith paid $400 for a salmon colored carpet of the middle Ching period. A large square rug was bought by Mr. A. G. Hencen for $350, and Mr. J. French gave $300 for a Kong rug. To Mr. J. A. Griswold fell at $250 a XVII century example. Mr. A. A. Lawrence gave $225 for a Turkestan Beshir rug.

Among the prices of the final session were: yellow and red rug, $700; a coral pink rug, $550; a Ming rug, $525, and a ceremonial carpet, $500; all to Mr. Deming; a Kwan-Gin statue in bronze, $500, to Mr. G. H. Fearon, a yellowish white rug, $525, to Mr. M. L. Zabriskie, and a blue, white and tan rug, $450, to Mr. J. F. Ballard.

At his Sherwood studio, Victor D. Hecht is painting a series of outdoor pictures, principally park subjects, in which figures have been cleverly introduced. He is also at work upon an interesting group portrait, comprising three figures. This is an important work and promises to be one of the artist's best canvases.

BENJAMIN BENGUIAT

known to art collectors and connoisseurs as one of the greatest rug experts of his time

ANNOUNCES

A further continuance of the [important exhibition and sale] of Antique Oriental and Chinese Rugs of the late Benguiat and Kersey collection.

This sale is comprised of some of the rarest examples of 15th and 16th Century rugs existent-museum pieces. Each of these fine rugs is a masterpiece of art—in coloring, design and texture, and can never be duplicated.

This sale is due to a business readjustment and offers an unusually advantageous opportunity of purchase.

At the fourth session Thursday evening, with again a light attendance, and with Mr. Otto Bernet as auctioneer, a total of $7,704 was obtained for 95 pictures. Prices again ruled low, and the few buyers obtained, in almost every instance, veritable bargains in decorative old canvases.

The highest figure of the sale, $430, was paid by the Ehrich Galleries for a large and effective "Portrait of Joseph Wright of Derby," by Thomas Barker of Bath, a leader of the old Norwich, early English school. George Gray Barnard bought several canvases and Bashford Dean of the Metropolitan Museum added to his several purchases of portraits of men in armor for the Armor Room at the Museum, one of "A Gentleman" by A. Van Noort.

The principal buyers were the Ehrich, Weston and Holland Galleries, Clapp and Graham, A. M. MacDonald, Charles A. Platt, Robert F. Phifer, A. M. Henry, A. L. Kramer, Rudolph Deutsch, Dr. Weidler, A. Wilkins, Henry Blaub, T. Kern, C. Jones, A. E. Clegg, Arthur Maingay, Ginsburg & Levy, Di Salvo Brothers, M. V. Callan, E. Reilly, T. Brummer, G. W. Harris, William Odum, Dr. Leo Kessel, V. D. Martin, and the AMERICAN ART NEWS.

The character of the pictures offered, similar to those presented at the three previous sessions, proved that Mr. Blakeslee dealt largely, in addition to important canvases of high values, in what are known in the trade as "commercial pictures," a term applied to paintings, generally of good quality and merit, which are copies or imitations of noted painters' works, and which have good value for purposes of decoration. It was deemed passing strange, therefore, that with the exception of such dealers as Charles of London, Clapp and Graham, and a few others who sell decorative canvases, the dealers in interior decorations, tapestries and furniture did not avail themselves of this unusual opportunity to secure such pictures, which they often find useful to complete the furnishing of houses. Some really good pictures sold for far below the cost of their frames and such low figures as $4 and $5 were touched.

The total of the four sessions which closed Thursday evening was $65,226. The last session of the sale, last (Friday) evening, probably brought the total of the entire sale to something like $75,000, a good result on the whole, will be reported next week.

Sale List.

The pictures sold Thursday evening for $100 and over were as follows:

Total.....	$7,704

Japanese Prints at Anderson's.

The first session Thursday, at the Anderson Galleries, of the Shataro Sato Japanese and Chinese collection fetched $5,678.50. Mr. C. A. Mason gave $160 for a nobleman's house scene tryptic, by Yeishi; $140 for a piece of a feudal lord's kimono, and $80 for Yeishi's "Prince Gengi." For a piece of Chinese brocade Mr. O. G. Smith paid $140; Mr. Pack $90 for a Samarcand rug, and Mr. T. J. Johnson $85 for a Japanese tapestry.

Coming Kinsley Sale.

The sale at auction of an interesting and important collection of pictures owned by Mr. Joseph T. Kinsley of Phila., Mr. W. Hogencamp of Paterson, N. J., and a few others, at the large and handsome galleries of Hiram Parke, 924 Broadway, at 21 St., and which are now on exhibition there, on Thursday and Friday evenings next, Mar. 16-17, should attract collectors and art lovers, for in the collections there are a number of most attractive canvases.

Notable especially among the Kinsley pictures is the original and famous painting by Christian Schuessel, "Dr. Benjamin Franklin before the Privy Council in London, Jan. 29, 1773," familiar through the fine colored and other reproductions to all Americans, and which has just returned from San Francisco, where it attracted the greatest attention in the Fine Arts Galleries at the Exposition, and reproduced in petto in this issue. This valuable historical work is also one of rare artistic worth, and should go to the Pa. Academy or the Metropolitan or Boston Museums. There is also among the Kinsley pictures, the large and dramatic "Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine" by Scaglia-Lucien, and the best example of the art of the late B. J. Blommers, "On the Beach," (reproduced in the ART NEWS last year) ever painted. Mr. Kinsley also owns, and is to sell, two superior examples of H. C. Shayer, a Josef Israels, an Oswald Achenbach, a Richard Wilson, a charming example of Thomas Sully—a typical "Orestes and Pylades," after Benjamin West; a "Mother and Child" by Jane Stuart Darley, both from the Darley collection; a good small Monticelli, a still life by Rembrandt Peale, and a large and fine sheep piece by Brandi, which recalls Salvator Rosa.

There are also in the Kinsley collection a large and fine "Cow, Sheep and Ducks" by Vserboeckhoven, and examples of several early American artists.

From the Gov. Flower estate comes the well-known painting, reproduced in this issue, in petto, by the late William H. Beard, "Wall St. Bulls and Bears," a most amusing and effective canvas, which should go to the N. Y. Stock Exchange.

Rare Colonial Antiques.

An exhibition and sale of Colonial Antiques, composing the entire collection of Mr. Ross Hall Maynard, to be held at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston, March 18 to 29, the exhibition to open Mar. 18 and continue to the sale dates, Mar. 27-29 inclusive, should have enough of interest to collectors outside of Boston to warrant a trip to "The Hub."

Mr. Maynard is a collector of unusual discernment, knowledge and taste, and his treasures, so soon to be dispersed, include an exceptionally choice assemblage of early American glass, Lowestoft and other China, early American silver, miniatures, oils, engravings and furniture. In connection with the exhibition there will be shown a portrait of George Washington, owned by Mr. Maynard, and which would seem, from its indicia, quality and provenance, to justify his belief in its authenticity as one of the "original Washington Stuarts."

The features of the collection are the fine assortment of Lowestoft china, the 100 examples of the rare Stiegel glass, recently brought into prominence by the gift of the collection of the same glass to the Metropolitan Museum by Mr. Frederick William Hunter, the superior pieces of early American silver, notably the hammered silver rapier marked "Hurd," the splendid pieces of old American furniture, notably the mahogany Chippendale bed and the satinwood table, the centre beautifully painted in the style of Angelica Kauffman, and the drawer fronts and legs in that of Zuchi.

Among the few, but good, paintings are two examples of Thomas Sully, a portrait of Israel Trask, and a charming presentment of a boy.

The miniatures include one of a man, signed by Doyle, an exceptional example, a good one of "Elder John Peak" by Malbone, one of Agnes Miller by Russell, and a small and delightful one of "George Colesworthy of Boston" by Copley.

LORD R. S. GOWER DEAD.

Lord Roland Sutherland Gower, son of the second Duke of Sutherland and a well known sculptor and writer, died Thursday at the age of 81, at his home at Tunbridge Wells, England. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and is best known by his Shakespeare monument at Stratford, and his statue of Marie Antoinette on her way to execution. Among his books are a "Life of Joan of Arc," "The Last Days of Marie Antoinette," a "History of the Tower of London" and "Stafford House Letters."

The Art League of Boston has just sold a portrait study by Frank Duveneck to the Cincinnati Museum. This portrait is a study of a woman in profile, done after Mr. Duveneck's Munich student days.

Old English Furniture Sale.

The American Art Galleries were crowded Tuesday afternoon when the collection of 170 lots of XV to XVIII Century English furniture and other art objects forming the collection of Major Horsfield of London were sold by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, for a total of $15,984. The number of active buyers made the competition brisk and some good figures were obtained. George Grey Barnard paid $825 for the XVII Century English oak paneled room for his studio. An early XVII Century English oak court cupboard brought the highest price for a single piece, $780, from O. Bernet, agent. Mr. Joseph Labey secured the early XVII Century English oak priory table for $500. An oak dole Jacobean cupboard sold to Mrs. Chas. M. MacNeill for $325. Mr. L. MacCarthy obtained for $400 a XVII Century English oak drawing table, and six Chippendale mahogany chairs brought $510 from Mrs. E. Chauncey. W. W. Seaman, agent, paid $300 for two XVIII Century English child's samplers, one dated 1768. Mrs. James A. Garland bid $370 for the XVII Century English oak paneled room, with paneled over-mantle and also obtained for $250 a XVII Century English oak cupboard.

End of Burton Library Sale.

The sale of Part 6 of the John E. Burton Library was concluded Tuesday aft. at the Anderson Galleries with a total of $2,474.15 for the three sessions, making a grand total for the six parts of $29,479.65. Some interesting Lincolniana and literary and journalistic material of the Civil War were offered and brought good prices. John Locke Scripps' "Life of Lincoln," Chicago, 1860, the earliest published "Life," the proofs read and approved by Lincoln himself, was bought by Mr. G. F. Drake for $72.50. Mr. Geo. D. Smith paid $50 for a Lincoln autograph note and $100 for 2 vols. of "Fudge Doings, by Ik Marvel," both books inscribed in Lincoln's handwriting. Mr. Smith also secured the rare first edition of Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" for $47.50. The Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., paid $41 for 135 playbills dating from the Civil War.

The Franklin Library.

The library of the late William M. Franklin of East Orange, N. J., to be sold at the Anderson Galleries in six afternoon and evening sessions beginning Monday afternoon next is of particular interest to artists, as Mr. Franklin was deeply interested in works on the history of printing and the making and illustration of books, and many rare and important publications on these subjects are in the sale.

Persian Antiquities and Rugs.

Rare Persian antiquities belonging to Mirza Raffy of Persia will go on exhibition this afternoon at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale next Friday and Saturday afternoons, Mar. 17-18. They consist of decorative Persian pottery and curios, antique brocades and velvets, some antiquities of the pre-Christian era, faiences of Rhages and Sultanabad, and Persian and Indo-Persian miniatures. The collection is large and interesting, perhaps the most important of its kind that has been offered in several years.

With it will be sold an important collection of Oriental Rugs, including Chinese rugs. In all there are 170 pieces, mostly antique. The collection has great interest for collectors and art lovers, as it contains many remarkable and typical products of old looms of Asia Minor, Caucasia, Central Asia, Persia and China.

Rare Books and Autographs.

The Anderson Galleries announces the most important sale of rare books, autograph letters, and original Mss. held in this country since the dispersal of the Robert Hoe library.

The sale will be made up of duplicates and selections from the famous libraries of Messrs. Henry E. Huntington of New York and William K. Bixby of St. Louis, with the addition of 166 lots of books on early English literature, from the estate of E. Dwight Church, formerly of Brooklyn, whose remarkable collection of Americana is now a part of Mr. Huntington's Hoe library.

These remarkable books and autographs will be placed on exhibition on Saturday, Mar. 18, and will be sold in five afternoon and evening sessions, beginning Wed. aft., Mar. 29.

A Notable Chinese Sale.

The American Art Association announces the coming sale, at the American Art Galleries, 6 E. 23 St., on the afternoons of April 29-30, of the collection of Chinese art and antiquities of the late Gen. Hwang Hsing, first president of the Chinese Republic. It consists of old porcelains, single color and decorated; snuff bottles and other objects,

Print Sale at Henkels'.

At the first session of the Sale of Proof Etchings, Engravings and Mezzotints, Mar. 2, at Stan V. Henkels' Auction Rooms, Phila., an original signed proof etching of "Beauvais" by D. Y. Cameron was sold to the Rosenbach Galleries for $175. Mr. Max Williams bought "The Gargoyles, Stirling Castle," by the same artist, for $160 and "Street in Cairo" for $150. Mr. Grover bought "Montevilliers" for $110 and "Ponte de la Trinita" for $95. "The Chimera of Amiens" went to the Knoedler Galleries for $75. A number of Arlent Edwards prints were sold, among them a portrait of "Mrs. Lloyd" to Max Williams for $77.50, a portrait of "Mrs. Drummond Smith" to Mr. Sharp for $65 and a portrait of "Louise de Bourbon" to Mr. Day for $100. Mr. E. F. Keen bought Hedley Fitton's etchings of "In the Aisles, Charters Cathedral" for $105 and "Shrine of Edward the Confessor, Westminster" for $50. Mr. T. Wester Brown bought "Casino de Nobili, Sienna" for $65, "St. Etienne Beauvais" for $50 and "Rue Barbette, Paris," for $40. Axel H. Haig's etching of "Salamanca" went to Mr. Reifsnnyder for $40 and "Bourges Cathedral Exterior" to Max Williams for $41.

At the second session, Mar. 3, Mr. Max Williams secured the original etching by C. Meryon, "L'Abside de Norte Dame de Paris" for $325, and Mrs. Linn the same etcher's "Tourelle, Paris," for $41. Signed proof etchings by Zorn, "Effet de Nuit" was sold to a private collector for $130, the same artist's "Musical Family" to Mr. Braun for $125, a portrait of "Augustus St. Gaudens" to Mr. Grover for $120. "Princess Ingeborg de Suede" to Max Williams for $75 and "Crown Princess Margaret of Sweden" to the same purchaser for $81. "The Barbers," an original proof etching by Whistler, was sold to Mr. Williams for $85 and "The Rag Gatherers," by the same artist, to Mr. Braun for $37.50.

Some 31 remarque proofs, signed, after W. Dendy Sadler, were sold and the highest prices were obtained for "The Last of the Bin" from Mr. Wallace for $42, "It Might Have Been, John" for $18 and "Waterlooport" for $20, both to Mr. Reifsnnyder. Fourteen mezzotints in color, all signed proofs by F. G. Stevenson, were sold, the best prices being "Giovani Tornabuoni," after Botticelli, to Mr. Grover for $14, "La Belle Ferroniere," after da Vinci to the Rosenbach Galleries for $13, and "Madonna of the Trees," after Bellini, to R. W. Staton for $11.

NEW ORLEANS.

The fifteenth annual exhibition of the Art Association now on at the Delgado Museum has been materially strengthened by a group of eight canvases in oil by Bartholomew Gallotti, a member of the local Mexican colony, resulting from the disturbances in Mexico. Mr. Gallotti has selected his subjects from among the poorer classes and he has portrayed the character and feelings of these people with much force. His treatment is broad and direct and his color is good. Among other artists who are represented by good canvases are F. Usher DeVol, A. J. Drysdale, Miss Julia M. Massie, Gideon Townsend Stanton and Ellsworth Woodward. Prof. Woodward's landscape among the pines is admirably painted, full of feeling and is very decorative. Mr. Stanton's "Along the Mississippi Sound" is especially good.

The Christophle-Widener Prints.

A selection from the famous Christophle Collection of French XVIII century prints recently purchased by Mr. Joseph E. Widener, has been on exhibition for some days at Knoedler & Co.'s. The most remarkable thing about the highly interesting display was the very fine state of all the impressions.

Some "Modernist" Sculpture.

Five exponents of "modernism" in sculpture are showing to Mar. 23, at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave., 15 examples of their work. The results of the reductio ad elementum are sometimes interesting, but rarely convincing. Nature is left almost entirely out of the question, and art is certainly not held to have any relation with truth or beauty. Brancusi has two imitations of antique negroid sculpture, a stone head with a nose more than ten times the length of the mouth and a mythological bird in metal.

ART AND ARTISTS.

Adolph Wolff sends 11 "block" sculptures, of which the only one that impresses is a really clever concrete idea of N. Y. and its high buildings. Modigliani shows a couple of odd figure heads and Mrs. A. Roosevelt a love embrace apparently of "The Atoms" and an odd suggestion of a "Tennis Player Serving." Alice Morgan Wright displays her talent in a "Wind Figure."

J. H. D. Ferguson, a Battle Creek, Mich., portrait painter, is now engaged upon the portrait of Mr. W. K. Prudden, president of the American Savings Bank of Lansing, Mich. Ferguson recently completed portraits of Hon. Edwin C. Nichols and other prominent residents of Battle Creek.

Middleton Manigault, who spent several months in France with the American Hospital Service, driving an ambulance, returned to this country in the late autumn. He will hold an exhibition of recent works at the Daniel Galleries in April.

Eliot Clark recently returned from Buffalo, where he is holding an exhibition which thus far has proved a decided success. When it closes in Buffalo, it will be shown for some weeks at the Vose Galleries, Boston.

Cullen Yates' charming, colorful and poetic landscape "In the Delaware Valley" was purchased last week by Mrs. John Fowler. His large landscape "Edge of the Ravine" was sold to Mrs. Henry Lang for her private collection in Montclair. The artist has been interesting large and appreciative groups of young artists with "Talks on Landscape Painting" at the studio of Miss Isabel Neill in the Vandyck, on alternate Thursdays. Artists who have enjoyed the privilege of his criticism describe the classes as among the most interesting art events of the season.

At her Vandyck studio, Miss Marion Swinton gave a charming reception on Thursday last in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Newell, who have recently taken a studio in the Vandyck. Some of her recent work was shown and also several fine examples of Newell's work were on exhibition during the afternoon.

Among recent portraits by Louis Mark are an interesting full-length standing figure of Miss Juliet Breitung, a three-quarter length seated presentment of Mrs. Arthur Carroll, whose blond hair and fair skin are enhanced by a black tulle gown against a neutral background. There are also two dignified portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Guggenheim, and a well executed presentment of Mrs. C. M. Schott, clad in a blue flowered gown which harmonizes with a background of tapestry effect. The artist is at present at work upon a portrait of the Countess Rudolphe de Festetics.

An interesting feature of the present Catherine Lorillard Wolfe exhibition at Grace House, is a "Portrait of a Young Woman with a Muff," by Clara Marme Norton. It is a low-toned work, full of sympathy, and the sweet-faced subject is gracefully posed. It is good in color and well executed. This artist is also showing a group of recent works at the Gamut Club, 69 West 46th St.

Aston Knight has left his Holbein studio and has gone to Georgetown, S. C., for an indefinite period to paint portraits.

A new institution at the Salmagundi Club is the "Keep Together Dinner," which took place for the first time on Tuesday last. Mr. J. B. Carrington was the guest of honor.

William T. Ritschel has been located in the National Arts Club Building since his return from California. He will remain until the spring, when he will probably go to the Coast again.

Miss Louise Huestis spent almost the entire winter in Cleveland, O., where she has been painting portraits.

Alexander Harrison, owing to the war, has returned to this country for an indefinite period, after spending many years abroad.

Will La Favor is making a life-size bust of Mayor Armstrong of Pittsburgh. The Mayor is actively at work at his desk while the sculptor models his features.

A fine portrait in oil of Hon. James Sykes, a Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals in Delaware just after that colony became a State, has been presented to the State of Delaware and will soon be hung in the State House at Dover, alongside the collection of distinguished citizens of the State which now grace its walls. Judge Sykes was born in 1725 and died in 1793.

Friends of Mrs. Charlotte B. Coman will be glad to learn that she is enjoying better health this winter than during the past three years. At her Vandyck studio she is at work on a garden picture, bright in color and appealing in composition. Another interesting work in course of completion is an upright mountain scene, a typical Coman subject, in which a range of mountains appear through a soft mist.

OLD MASTERS of the English, Dutch and Italian Schools.

MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 4 BERKELEY STREET LONDON, W. is acting as private agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

ESTABLISHED 1900
The Ehrich Galleries
707 FIFTH AVE. at 55th Street NEW YORK

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

MR. TAFT'S NEW PICTURES.

The Taft collection of old masters, in Cincinnati, has just been enriched by two inferior works, an interior "The Sleeping Soldier," by Terburg, and a portrait of the bullfighter "Costillares," by Goya. Terburg, the aristocrat among his great colleagues of interior painting of the XVII. century, again triumphs in this little picture through his, what may be called, finest of innate noblesse. His delicacy of drawing and picturesque representation of textiles, silks, uniforms, armor, etc., combine here in an expression of infinite charm and virtuosity of craftsmanship. The picture shows the figure of a sleeping soldier who is on the verge of awakening through being tickled with a straw by a woman. Another soldier, a trumpeter, is smilingly standing nearby. The latter figure is the same portrayed in that pearl of a Terburg in the Rijks Museum called "Fatherly Advice."

The Goya portrait, showing the almost life-size head of the famous bull fighter, is a stunning piece of powerful realism. Costillares was the originator of a school of famous bull fighters. He was the first one who really attacked the bull. With such life, such real flesh and blood as is expressed in this rather early portrait, added to the impression one gets through Goya's later portrait of Queen Maria Louisa, hanging in the next room, which is just as picturesquely forceful, chiefly through its wonderful color, one can readily understand the great influence Goya was bound to exercise on modern art.

ART CRITIC SEES AFFRONT.

Mr. Grosvenor Atterbury, president of the Architectural League of New York, recently wrote Mr. Charles H. Caffin, art critic of "The New York American," who was not invited to the recent press view of the League Exhibition, expressing his regret and that of the league for the incident, and explaining that the chairman of the press committee, Laurel Harris, had been told that Mr. Caffin no longer represented that newspaper, and that someone else did, to whom the invitation was sent. "It would appear," said Mr. Atterbury, "that the league did not welcome public discussion and criticism of its exhibits. Its policy is, on the contrary, to encourage full and free discussion of its exhibits, no matter whether the opinions be praise or disapproval."

"Thanking Mr. Atterbury for his assurance that the league regrets the occurrence," Mr. Caffin, in his reply said, "that the explanation does not satisfy him, since his name has appeared for the last three art seasons in large letters every Monday morning at the top of the art department that I conduct in the 'New York American.' 'It is a satisfaction,' he continues, 'to learn that the league as a body does not stand for the personal affront put upon me by its representative.'"

ANCIENT ART IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. W. A. Titus, of Fond du Lac, Wis., has loaned to the history department of the University of Wisconsin, an interesting collection of ancient Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Arabic, Syrian-Hebrew and Phoenician art relics, some of them dating from 2350, 2000 and 1500 B. C.

"THE ORIGINAL C.?"

Much amusement has been caused in rug and auction circles this week by the large spread announcements in the advertising columns of the dailies, in many instances placed side by side, of an auction sale of Oriental rugs and carpets at a Fifth Ave. Auction Gallery by an Armenian named rug concern, which closed a three days' session yesterday, and of another rug house of almost the same name—the last firm to the effect that they had no connection with the auction sale aforesaid, and have never held any auction or special sales.

The sole difference in the names of the two concerns is that one calls itself "C. Bros. and Co.," and the other "C. and Co." It would be interesting to know whether this war of advertising benefited or injured the auction sale, and which of the two houses is the "Original C."

SARGENT FOR ALBRIGHT GALLERY.

Miss Cornelia B. Sage, director of the Albright Gallery at Buffalo, announces the purchase by that institution, of the remarkably fine example of John S. Sargent "Venetian Bead Springers."

AERO CLUB'S DEFENSE POSTERS.

A committee of the Aero Club of America, composed of Jules Turcas, Henry Reuterdahl and Henry Woodhouse initiated on Mar. 10 a movement to mobilize the artists of this country for national defense work, the plan being to stimulate patriotism by means of paintings, cartoons and posters to be contributed free by the artists and to be published and distributed by the Aero Club and the Conference Committee on National Preparedness. The reproductions of the paintings and cartoons and of the posters will be published in the newspapers and magazines and displayed on bill boards in elevated, street and subway cars, and in public buildings. They will also be given to the army and navy and marine corps, to the militia and to the various societies for national defense. A meeting of those interested in the propaganda was held in the Aero Club on the evening of Mar. 11.

CLEVELAND GETS EARLY AM'NS.

The Cleveland Museum has acquired the fine portrait of Nathaniel Hurd by J. S. Copley—one of the most striking of the artist's American period, and which was reproduced in the ART NEWS last week as having been sold by the Copley Gallery of Boston.

The Museum has also secured an important pair of portraits—those of Captain and Mrs. David by Thomas Sully, and from the Vose Gallery of Boston, the portrait of Mrs. John Greene, in frame made by Paul Revere.

A movement is on foot to secure for the new Museum, the valuable collection of original drawings gathered by Miss Lillian Lawlor during her long residence in Paris.

Forty-four paintings of Alaskan scenery by R. V. V. Sewell are on view at the Museum of Natural History.

THE SPRING ACADEMY.

The ninety-first annual exhibition of the National Academy of Design, familiarly known to the art world, as the "Spring Academy," which, following the "Vernissage" and reception of yesterday morning and afternoon, respectively, opens to the public today in the Fine Arts Galleries in West 57 Street, will be the Art Mecca for local and out-of-town visitors until April 23.

After a trial last year of free admission, the Academy Council has decided to restore the admission fee of 50 cents this year, save on Mondays, when admission will be free. The exhibition is again this year a good one, and is unusually well hung. Some 400 oils and a score or more of sculptures are displayed, chosen from some 1,500 sent in. Again, as in past years, want of space prevented the hanging of more pictures than those on the walls, which were accepted by the Jury, but perforce returned to their senders. These, at least, have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that their works were not rejected.

It is becoming wearisome—this annual forced rejection of good pictures at the Academy shows for want of space. A new President—Mr. Weir—has succeeded to Alexander, who each year of his long incumbency hopefully predicted and worked for adequate galleries for the Academy, and no progress towards the acquirement of these sorely needed galleries is even this year reported. Shall we have this year another show of works accepted but not hung, or was the one attempt at such a display two years ago not sufficiently encouraging?

The Miniature Society, again this year, makes its annual showing with the Academy—in the opinion of some of its members, a mistake, for the Society's delightful display, even smaller this year than last, suffers from want of the public notice and attention it has always received and would receive again if made independently, and not overshadowed by the larger display of oils.

An Effective Display.

A first visit to the present Academy show, without the necessary aid of a Catalog, emphasizes the criticism passed by most of the New York writers who journeyed to the current Pennsylvania Academy exhibition in Philadelphia, last month, on that display—that its strength this year was largely derived from the presence in it of many of the best pictures from last year's Spring and Winter Academies. The New York organization has so steadily improved the general character of its two annual displays, the past few years, that the Philadelphia show, which has not really deteriorated in any marked degree, is no longer superior, as of yore, and reflects the New York displays. There is a refreshing atmosphere of energy and vitality in every room of the Fine Arts Galleries this, as last year. No sensational or "Star" pictures—which one looked for in past years—but a high general average of merit and the stronger painters are all well and, in some instances, admirably represented. There are some regrettable absentees, notably J. Francis Murphy, Jr., Cecilia Beaux, Paul Dougherty and again Robert Henri—but such painters as Weir, Chase, Horatio Walker, Emil Carlsen, Smedley, Groll, Van Laer, Potthast, Parschall, Snell, Bogert, Geo. Elmer Browne, Lawton Parker, W. S. Robinson, Bellows, Gifford Beal, Ryder, John F. Carlson, Paul King, Hugo Ballin, Lydia Emmet, Edward Dufner, Joseph Pearson, Jr., Max Bohm, Luis Mora, Ernest Lawson, and Howard Russell Butler, are all unusually well represented, while such veterans as Edward Gay, George H. Smillie, E. L. Henry, and such near veterans as W. L. Palmer and Francis and Bolton Jones, Ben Foster, C. C. Curran, and Cullen Yates, are to the fore. With such men sending virile and fine works the display could not be a poor one.

The delayed catalog, or even the usual proof sheets, furnished in advance to those writers who perforce, like the "Art News" representative, must see the display some time before its opening, makes other than a hasty general review impossible. More detailed notice must be given next week.

New Method of Casting Sculpture.

Alfred Lenz, a New York sculptor, has invented a new method or process of casting in metal from sculptural and other models, which is said to represent a decided advance over the process that has been employed for years. He has developed a slightly porous mould substance and this enveloping mass he makes nearly as hot as the metal when ready for casting. This mould is then set over a cylinder upon which a suction pump acts, and by drawing air out of the mould a partial vacuum is produced in the cavities into which the molten metal is thus stimulated to flow. The most delicate parts of flowers and leaves can be perfectly reproduced in metal by the Lenz process.

The Walters' Art Gallery of Baltimore, one of the finest in the East, will not become a municipal institution, as was previously reported, but will probably be perpetuated along lines similar to the Peabody Institute.

AN ISRAELS FOR READING.

Mrs. Huber L. Smith, of Reading, Pa., has presented to the Art Gallery of that city a painting of a peasant girl by Josef Israels. The late George F. Baer, president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, bought this picture in Amsterdam in 1897.

NEW GIFT TO ART SOCIETY.

Mr. Samuel Owen Buckner, pres't of the Milwaukee Art Soc'y, has presented to the soc'y, for its permanent coll'n, C. Arnold Slade's "Vender of Cocoa Water. Some 13 of the artist's works were purchased by Milwaukeeans during his recent show.

POPULAR PRIZE PICTURE.

Marie Danforth Page's "The Mother," a well-executed and sympathetic study of a woman holding a baby in her arms, has been awarded the Philadelphia Prize at the 11th annual exhib'n of the Pa. Academy. The award was made by popular vote.

The Inness gold medal for the best landscape shown (combined for the first time at the present display with the Altman first prize of $1,000), won last year by Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., goes this year to Charles Rosen, for his fine strong "Winter Landscape."

The Isaac N. Maynard prize for the best portrait shown, won last year by Douglas Volk, goes this year to W. T. Smedley for his virile expressive portrait of "Mrs. C. B. R."

The J. Sandford Saltus gold medal for merit, won last year by Abbot H. Thayer, goes this year to Emil Carlsen for his remarkable "Moonlight on a Calm Sea" which has been, deservedly, given the place of honor on the north wall of the Vanderbilt Gallery.

The three Hallgarten prizes, for the three best oils, won respectively last year by Eugene E. Speicher, Randall Davey and Robert H. Nisbet, go this year to Arthur Crisp for his "Strollers," R. Sloan Bredin for his landscape "Summer Afternoon" and John Follinsbee for his landscape "Winter Quiet."

The South Gallery.

The pictures which stand out the most in the South Gallery on first view, are a fine, broadly and strongly painted landscape by A. Van Laer, a typical and delightful interior, with two girls in old-fashioned costumes, by Charles Bittinger, a characteristic winter woodland scene, by W. L. Palmer, another fine winter landscape by A. L. Clark, a delightful and clever figure work, by R. L. Maynard, a young woman seated before a mirror which reflects her fair visage and clad in rich greens and yellows, a large sunny and bright autumn landscape, by Bolton Jones, a virile, finely conceived and painted mountain view, by Carl Rungius, a three-quarter-length seated, delicately colored portrait of a young woman, by Joseph Boston, an autumn landscape at sunset, rich in color quality, and full of feeling, by Ben Foster, a strong outdoors with two women's figures, almost in flat masses, by Max Bohm, which won one of the too many and too loosely awarded gold medals at San Francisco, a clever scene in a "Quick Lunch" café, by Arthur Spear—three men seated at a counter with backs towards a window and faces turned to the front, a skillful handling of color and especially of light effects, two Arizona desert scenes, by Albert Groll—one, the larger, with "trailing clouds of glory," almost Aurora Borealis-like in varied color—a good "Misty Day—Madison Square," by Paul Cornoyer, a striking three-quarter-length seated portrait of a young woman, by Lowton Parker, of Chicago, an effective, if rather patterned landscape, by Roy Brown, a gray tonal landscape, by Charles Rosen, another fine large "Lake Louise, Alberta," by Edward Potthast, an autumn landscape, by Cullen Yates, and a delicate, refined outdoors, with figures, by Francis C. Jones.

The Central Gallery.

Works which most call for mention in the Central Gallery are one of the best autumn landscapes Edward Gay has ever painted, largely conceived, fine and strong, a stunning three-quarter-length seated portrait of a young woman, clad in a fascinating blue gown, by William M. Chase, with all his skillful technique, a typical soft blue toned landscape, by the veteran, Mrs. Coman, an admirable virile landscape, by Chauncey F. Ryder, a tonal, feeling moonlit landscape, by Paul King, Horatio Walker's large upright landscape with figure, another "poem of toil," best from his able brush in many a day, F. De Haven's strong, large and broadly painted landscape, John F. Carlson's feeling and truthful "Winter in the Woods," Henry B. Snell's joyous, finely colored and lit, "Beach Scene," William Wendt's large coast scene, with its fine distance and beautiful blue of the sea, George Elmer Browne's "Harbor Scene," vibrant with color, light and air, William S. Robinson's charming early autumn landscape, and Gifford Beal's truthful, typical New York scene "Under the 'L Road."

In this gallery also are Ernest Lawson's virile depiction of Morningside Park, R. H. Nisbet's Summer landscape, with its well painted greens, George H. Smillie's rich landscape, R. W. Van Boskerck's ambitious and well painted "Delaware Valley," George H. Bogert's typical moonlight, with its rich impasto, Carlton T. Chapman's "Old Gaal-leon," which proves his brush has not lost its power, Sergeant Kendall's curious and somewhat vulgar "Sphinx," a decided contrast to his usual charmingly refined pictures of children and women—remarkable for its clever foreshortening, R. S. Bredin's smoothly painted alluring Summer landscape, "Lal-lin's large and richly painted "Two Women," clothed and nude, reminiscent of the early Italians who have always inspired him in color and feeling, De Witt Parshall's "Arizona Canon" view, and H. S. Hubbell's "Girl in Bed," a most natural and well painted work.

The curious canvas, by George Bellows, "Billy Sunday in Philadelphia," will most attract the visitor in this gallery. It is a work to be studied: full of faults but yet appealing in its remarkable composition, study of character and fine sense of movement.

The Vanderbilt Gallery.

The place of honor is given this year to Emil Carlsen for his large upright coast scene—a beautiful work in every way, full of poetry and with fine effect of pale sunlight on shining sands—and Luis Mora's curious but effective "Goya Dreaming," appropriate in this year devoted so much to Spanish art and especially to Goya. The figure of the old painter is well thought out and drawn, but the forms of his heroines, which float around him, are not as effective.

There is an admirable seated portrait of Mr. Augustus Schermerhorn, President of the Union Club, reproduced in this issue, by Augustus Franzen, a splendid portrait of a little girl, by Lydia Emmet, a fine large "Cornwall Harbor," by Hayley Lever, a decorative composition of ducks and an old gnarled tree stump, reminiscent of his Philadelphia prize picture, by Joseph Pearson, Jr., a beautifully lit and colored joyous landscape with figures, by Edward Dufner, a strongly modelled bust portrait of an old woman, by the late Montague Flagg, a virile portrait, by W. T. Smedley, a stirring breezy joyous coast scene and marine, by Howard Russell Butler, and a number of other superior landscapes, figure works and portraits which, with the sculptures and pictures in the Academy Room, and the miniatures, must be left until next week for mention.

James B. Townsend.

The "Wild West" of Criticism.

Another time, when they had gotten the animal into the corral, it got away and chased "Bill," the buckaroo. "Bill" ran for the fence and made it, but was only halfway up it when Mr. Bull Buffalo already had his horns lowered to gore and toss him. At that moment Mr. Proctor, from the other side of the fence, dropped a big pole on the buffalo's head and the animal, thinking he'd gotten "Bill," tossed the pole high in air, while the buckaroo scrambled to safety."—Gustav Kobbé on Art Page of N. Y. Sunday "Herald," Mar. 12, 1916.

The exhibit of porcelains, modelled chiefly on the Chinese, made by Mrs. Alsop-Robineau at the Pana-Pacific Exposition, now on at the Mabeth Galleries, 450 Fifth Ave. is of much interest. In form, color and quality they approach closely the Oriental examples.

Mrs. E. H. Harriman has presented to the National Art Gallery, G. H. Story's portrait of Lincoln, painted recently from life studies.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*The Forum Modernist Show.

The French have a proverb, which says that he who excuses himself accuses himself, and so the gentlemen writers on art, and artists, to the number of six, who stand sponsor for the "Forum Exhibition of Modern American Painters" run some risk of its application in publishing a de luxe catalog with many words of eulogy or explanation, both from themselves and some of the exhibitors. A work of art should speak for itself, though the life and productions of the artist are always naturally a subject of more or less serious literary study.

Though the names and works of many of the contributors to the display now on in the spacious Anderson Galleries, 15 E. 40 St. are quite familiar, through one man shows at various local galleries, there are a few others in some slight sympathy with what may be called the movement, who show work of considerable interest. The young, yet old warhorses, are on hand, the Zorachs, Man Ray, Marsden Hartley, John Marin and A. Walkowitz, and contribute more or less seriously to the gayety of nations with a large proportion of the 193 exhibits. To discuss them in any detail would lead nowhere where one has not been before. With the possible exception of Mr. Marin, who seems to be after some apparently legitimate object, in his analysis of landscapes and other forms, and who has a delicate appreciation of color values and a sense of movement, the rest either distort nature or seek to represent it by more or less arbitrary symbols.

There is for instance Mr. Hartley, fresh from Berlin, where he almost initiated an artistic war of his own. His "Portrait of a Young Man," is a group of inanimate objects, including an iron cross and some flags while his "One Portrait of One Woman" (sic) consists largely of a cup, symbolical—perhaps of bitterness or joy, and a Gothic arch. The only human note in his half dozen contributions is struck in the group of filled glasses called "Handsome Drinks." Man Ray has his usual assortment of tailors' cuttings and seems, perhaps on account of the season, to have run short of stove pipes. The Zorachs again libel the beauties of nature and give their work a Persian twist. Marguerite is the more decorative and William makes ugly what should be beautiful. Mr. Walkowitz, though he still specializes in what look like attempts at topographical studies, has occasional lapses into quite understandable efforts to delineate the human form, very far from divinity.

S. MacDonald Wright, one of the new comers, shows considerable talent of the normal variety in male and female studies, some of his drawings being distinctly good but gets into swim with the majority of his fellows in various examples of "Synchromy" and "Organization." Arthur G. Dove, in 14 contributions, symbolizes nature as he frankly acknowledges from A. to N. and Heaven knows what he will do in the laying on of paint when he gets through the alphabet. Alfred Maurer has some suggestions of the realities of landscape and still life in a number of rather mussy contributions. Oscar Bluemner, whose work has already been seen at the Photo-Secession, displays a more or less successful, yet ever interesting, group of simplified landscapes—a "Meditation" and an "Expression" both in New Jersey towns, and a "space motive" and "motive of space and form" in a Jersey valley and village.

Thomas H. Benton is vigorous in various groups of red, blue and other colored struggling humans and some landscapes, and Andrew Dasburg, besides some brilliant little nude drawings, has various simplified still lifes and "improvisations." Ben Benn displays strength and some sympathy with nature in several contributions including "Figure" and "Grayhouse" and George L. Of shows quality in still life and landscape. Charles Sheeler, Morgan Russell and Henry L. McFee complete the list of contributors.

Japanese Flower Arrangements.

At the Yamanaka Galleries, 254 Fifth Ave. there is now on view to Mar. 25, an attractive exhibition of Japanese Flower Arrangement. The various flowers, plants and dwarf trees are placed in the artistic receptacles used in Japan, many of them remarkably fine in workmanship and arranged with the keen eye for decorative effect which is characteristic of Nippon. At one end of the gallery in which the display is made, is shown a tea room, all being there but the geishas. On Tuesday afternoon Miss Mary Averill, assisted by Mr. N. Nakagawa lectured on "Flower Arrangement," about which and the flower art of Japan she has written books, and the lecture will be repeated on Tuesday next. The subject Friday was "Tea Ceremony," and this lecture will be repeated on a Mr. 24.

The new accessions and loans shown at the press view of the Metropolitan Museum on March 10 were nearly all displayed in the Gallery of Recent Accessions. The purchases included two paintings bought at the Reisinger sale von Haberman's "In the Studio," and Trubner's "Landscape," and there was besides an XVIII century English skirt and dress. The gifts shown for the first time were a stone fragment from the dungeon of Joan of Arc and a bronze medal of the unveiling of the Joan of Arc statue by Anna V. Hyatt, both the gift of the New York Statue Committee. There are also pieces of Italian, French and Belgian lace of the last century given by Mrs. Henry S. Redmond, and an English glass coaching horn from Mr. Rodman Wanamaker. The gifts not shown were a model of a man in armor, French about 1860 and three early XIX century Italian powder containers given by Mr. William S. Oothout. A loan not yet placed on exhibition is a marble bust of a man, School of Bernini, owned by Mr. Howard L. Goodheart. A purchase shown with the Ceramic collections consists of two Chinese flower pots of the Sung period and two gifts of Mr. A. Behr, a Sun bowl and a box with cover of the Yuan period.

Mr. Gouverneur Morris lends a Louis XV court sword which is with the Arms and Armor. In this department have also been placed, after repairing and restoration, the two suits of armor of Sir Scudamore, the original Sir Scudamore of "The Faerie Queen." These were bought in 1911 from the Earl of Chesterfield.

Two personal announcements made in the bulletin and by director Robinson, at the meeting, were that in recognition of his recent gifts Mr. John Pierpont Morgan had been officially declared a benefactor of the Museum. It was also stated that Dr. Wilhelm Valentiner, the curator of decorative arts, who was for a year at the front in the Vosges with the German army, where he was twice decorated for bravery, had been recently ordered from the front to duty at the war office at Berlin.

Paintings and lithographs by Bolton Brown and a group of thumb boxes by members of the Blue Dome Fellowship are at 37 Madison Ave. to April 1. Delicate tonality and charm characterize Mr. Brown's canvases. "Girl and Turtle" is a pleasing rendering of the nude, and there is a glimpse of quiet, snow-clad country at twilight with lifting mist. In "Golden Glen" one notes the diffused lights, of which this painter is so fond. There are sea and landscapes and a wood interior with a nude. The lithographs, too, are fascinating.

Among the Fellowship thumb boxes are spontaneous little impressions of masses of mountain laurel and dogwood, of nudes in sunlight, and one of a little barefoot girl sitting by a "lonesome rock," by Dewing Woodward. A watercolor still life with fruit by Charles Cook is convincing, and his effective, decoratively-patterned landscapes indicate an anti-academic spirit. Beatrice Montizambert's "Butterfly" is a nude holding out pink draperies. Louise Johnson's work is pleasing. Among others represented are H. S. Phillips, Henry Albright, Sophy S. Dev. Henrick Hillbom, Helen Penniman, Lillian Wish, and Abbie Sullivan.

The annual exhibition of oils, by members of the Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., is now on to March 23. The pictures of moderate size form a most interesting collection, are fresh from the painters' studios, and are eminently saleable in quality.

The Samuel L. Shaw purchase prize of $500, from which portraits are excluded, went this season to Daniel Garber's "Ye Olde Apple Tree." This is a fine, sunny, midsummer morning effect over a landscape saturated with color and light. The William T. Evans prize of $100, for the best figure painting, went to Warren Davis, for his dramatic and poetic work showing a young woman lying nude on a rock by the seashore, under the spell of "Sea Magic." The winner of the Joseph S. Isidor prize of $100, for the best landscape, is Harry Franklin Waltman, the picture being "Northern Woods," was doubly fortunate for he sold it on the first day for $500. It is a remarkably truthful winter scene, with a snow covered slope falling to a still flowing stream, and notable for its light and color. Prominent among the 162 other examples is a capital winter view in "Central Park South," by F. J. Mulhaupt.

The city furnishes another subject in Guy C. Wiggins' effective scene "Broadway in Winter," at City Hall Park. Other New York scenes are Edmund Greacen's rather too much simplified view of the Public Library and a winter scene in North Washington Square, by H. Ledyard Towle, which is somewhat heavy in drawing. The docks also furnish subjects, Charles Vezin having an excellent "Winter Scene" looking on the riverside from a high building, while Clement King shows the 34th Street Ferry and George Elmer Browne a spirited study of the groups at the "Departure" of an excursion boat. C. J. Nordell shows a sprightly figure of "Madeline" and W. Granville Smith a sunny and true "Edge of the Woods."

A palm leaf and purple ribbon are placed under the late William E. Norton's spirited and ship shape view of a sailing ship "Outward Bound." Lewis L. B. Berneker sends a gracefully composed group of four female figures, one of them being that of "Proserpine." G. L. Nelson has a capital "Portrait of my Brother," and S. A. Guarino a most artistic study with figures, of the entrance to the "Golden Church." By James G. Tyler there is a brilliant sunset sky in the "Golden West," over a swelling sea.

Among others well represented are G. W. Maynard, C. A. Aikin, C. C. Curran, C. L. Bull, whose "The Fireflies" by the way is a most original conception, W. J. Whittemore, G. Grant, G. Wright, J. W. Dunsmore, R. K. Ryland, F. De Haven, L. Mielziner, C. Rungius, R. S. Bredin, L. Seyffert, O. Fehrer, H. Mosler, C. Yates, M. Herrmann, J. C. Phillips, I. H. Calliga, B. Gutman, H. L. Towle, F. J. Waugh, W. H. Dunton, W. J. Aylward, W. N. Hasler, C. Basing, E. L. Warner, E. H. Potthast, L. Kroll, E. C. Volkert, C. Rosen, G. M. Bruestle, R. H. Nisbett, F. A. Bicknell, J. F. Carlson, E. Dufner, C. F. Ryder, W. H. Howe, G. Wiegand, H. A. Vincent, G. Cimitotti, M. Colt, H. L. Hildebrandt and W. F. Kline.

Descendant of Rubens' Master Shows.

Pieter J. L. Van Veen, a lineal descendant of Otto Van Veen who was one of the masters of Rubens, has come over from Holland to remain here two months and is showing 21 canvases at his studio in the Sherwood, 58 W. 57 St., through March 31. He believes in maturing his pictures, one of the most charming of which is a rendering of a clear, placid lake in Holland with reflections of the banks, dotted with fisher houses, in the water. A tiny deserted cottage—the oldest house at Barbizon—is pictured in another, and there are wood interiors, painted in the forest of Fountainbleau and in the Valley of Rousseau, more impressionistically treated.

GREAT IMPORTANCE.

Paintings by Prince Pierre Troubetskoy.

The painter brother of the two artistic Princes Troubetskoy, Pierre, has now on view at the Reinhardt Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., 15 portraits and landscapes in oil. The most attractive of his portraits are those of two boys, Masters Willard Chandler and Howard Cushing, both frankly and freely painted and good in character. Among the women presented are the Princess Pierre Troubetskoy (Amelie Rives) Mesdames Leonard and George C. Thomas, Mrs. Robert Meade Parker, with a dog on her shoulder, Mrs. William Allen, and Miss Frances Starr as Marie Odille, the last, perhaps suitably, theatrical. The single portrait of a man, is that of Dr. Arnold Genthe. The landscapes are broadly handled and soberly colored, with a strong appreciation of masses in composition. They include "Box Hedges," "Autumn Gleam" and "Sifted Light." Two rather tame impressions of New York at night are "Towards the Great White Way" and the "Hour of Mystery." A study of a scene on the deck of a yacht, which is handled with a good deal of spirit, represents "The Squall."

The beautiful Bernardino Luini, altar piece, "The Madonna Enthroned," purchased for the Brooklyn Museum by Mr. A. A. Healy at the recent Catholina Lambert sale, is on exhib'n at the Museum, Eastern Parkway and Washington ave.

The attendance at the recent Swedish Art Exhib'n at the Museum, ending March 5, reached a total of 141,256.

American Artists at Ralston's.

A work of much nobility and distinction by George H. Bogert, showing the "Crescent Moon," in a beautiful twilight sky over a spacious landscape, is the clou of an interesting display of 15 works by as many artists, now on to March 25, at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave. In this canvas the solitary human note is furnished by the figure of a woman in the foreground gathering wood. "The Wind," by Van Dearing Perrine, is another work of distinguished character, an epic of the blasts, under which sways on a hill against a tormented sky, one tall, slender tree towering above companions which hug close to the ground.

Guy C. Wiggins sends his spirited scene of "Fifth Avenue in Snow," at 34th Street which is remarkable for its truth and its naturally disposed groups and single figures of pedestrians. George Bellows sends a curious "Portrait of Adelaide Spratlin," who appears in a very blue dress against a green background, and J. Carroll Beckwith, an effective portrait of Henry Rutgers Marshall. "Poppies for Sleep," by Elliot Daingerfield, shows a kneeling nude woman, with three attendant sprites bearing the flowers. This is successful in its general effect, though rather crude in all the details, except the brilliantly handled flesh of the principal figure.

Others represented are C. T. Chapman, Bruce Crane, J. F. Carlson, A. F. Groll, E. A. Gruppe, F. de Haven, Jonas Lie, L. Ochtman, and R. W. Van Boskerck.

Art Objects at Symons & Co.

A remarkable storehouse of decorative art, sculpture, bibelots and rare furniture is the establishment of Henry Symons & Co., 26 E. 45 St. Here are to be found a number of notable objects which were captured in such London sales of last season, as those of Lady Charteris and Lord Huntingfield, as well as many others found in the ancient country seats of the nobility and gentry in the United Kingdom and Ireland. Highly interesting are two over life size marble busts of a Neptune and goddess, crowned as if to symbolize some city or province, which were for over 50 years on loan in the Dublin National Gallery. They are signed J. V. L., 1739.

There is a large allegorical ceiling painted by Sir James Thornhill for Honington Hall in Devonshire. A four post bed of ancient pattern is of much interest, for it was decorated with allegorical figures by Angelica Kauffman while on a visit to Bellevue, Delgany, Co. Wicklow, the seat of Major Peter La Touche, from which it came. A beautiful XVII century Spanish cabinet in ebony and silver is from Lady Charteris' collection and decorative paints by Desportes of fruit and still life are from Balloch Castle, Scotland. A notable group of furniture is made by various examples of Chippendale—a commode, a grandfather's clock and 5 chairs and a settee, and a couple of Adams tables, all of mahogany. There are some rare pieces of Chinese porcelain, as well as a remarkable group of European porcelains, examples of Frankenthal, Nymphenberg, Hocht, Vienna and Dresden.

American Illustrators at Pratt Institute.

Mr. George Whittle has loaned over 150 pictures which, chronologically arranged, are on view at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, to April 8. They demonstrate the progress made by American illustration. Early woodcuts and works in demand today are shown, with practically every step between. Some blocks, tools, and old prints—the property of Timothy Cole—are included in an interesting group illustrative of the old methods. Among the artists whose work is shown are Timothy Cole and other contemporary engravers, Edmund Ashe, William Aylward, W. T. Benda, Robert Blum, Ernest Blumen-schein, Andre Castaigne, F. S. Church, Arthur I. Keller, Howard Chandler Christy, Penrhyn Stanlaws, C. Underwood, Palmer Cox, Peter Newell, O. Herford, Frederick Dielman, Wm. Glackens, Abbott Thayer, Albert Sterner, and F. R. Gruger. Variety certainly is the spice of the show. Mr. Whittle became identified with Alexander W. Drake and Wm. Lewis Fraser, of the art departments of "Scribner's" and the "Century Magazine," in 1881, and continued with the latter until 1914.

At the MacDowell Club.

Many of the painters in the current MacDowell Club exhibition have been occupied with sunlight and gay color and the ensemble is unusually effective, with bits of sculpture here and there. One's attention is immediately drawn to flower pictures by Maud M. Mason, expressive of maturity of vision, thorough knowledge of the subject, and feeling for color and design. Chas. Cook's still lifes with fruit are convincing in quite a different way, and his large canvas "The Green Schooner" is interesting, although the strength and directness notable in the foreground is missed in the background. Theresa Bernstein's familiar crowds always entertain, and Ledyard Towle shows his several phases. In a portrait arrangement of Mrs. Francis Bennett he combines pastel tints tastefully, and suggests the interesting personality of the sitter. His study of an old man, painted premier coup, is good and the interpretation of Mrs. Towle—a more matured canvas—has spontaneous grace and charm. Delicate light gradations and lacy trees effectively patterned, characterize W. C. Emerson's interpretations of nature. J. Weiland's pictures are fairly strong, but raucous in color. An attractive pointillistic rendering of a sun-flooded flower garden by Mary McCord is shown. Others exhibiting are Z. Steele, Ossip Linde, A. Many, A. St. Gaudens, and Laura Gardin.

Chinese Porcelains at Esler Studio.

On Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. Frederic Esler gave a reception for G. Muranyi, a portraitist well known in New York, who recently returned from England. She is showing his latest work at her studio, 47 E. 49 St., through Monday, where there are also on exhibition a number of exceptionally interesting old Chinese porcelains. There are also miniature figures and other cabinet pieces.

Homer Boss at Thumb Box Gallery.

Homer Boss is exhibiting 9 landscapes in oil and 8 in watercolor, expressed with broad planes and vivid hues, at the Thumb Box Gallery, 24 E. 49 St., to March 25. In "Breaking Calm," he probably tried to paint the effect of atmospheric conditions upon him rather than a literal transcript of nature.

Mr. Walter P. Fearon, long popular as the head of the former Cottier Galleries, will hereafter be connected with the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave. Mr. Fearon, who had previously served in the British Navy, went to London in February 1915 and volunteered for service. He was detailed to the Admiralty office in London.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger, Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, will soon appear.

LESSONS OF BLAKESLEE SALE.

The somewhat disappointing total, only $69,063.50, of the five nights' sale last week, of the remainder of the stock of pictures left by the late Theron J. Blakeslee, added to the grand total of the first sale of pictures last year, or $262,235 and of the furnishings of the Blakeslee galleries or $2,446.50, makes a grand total of only $333,745 for all the properties. This result, which falls much short of the predicted half, or even three-quarter million total, has naturally led to much discussion in the art trade and among collectors.

We have never estimated, from the first, that the collections would bring over half a million, if they reached even near that amount, for with the coming of war and the consequent prostration, for nearly a year, of the art business all over the world with the dealers here and abroad left with large stocks of pictures, good and inferior, on their hands, and with no evidence of collectors being in a buying mood, we could not figure out how the market could digest either the better pictures offered last year, at any but low prices, or, a fortiori, the inferior ones offered last week at any but bargain prices.

And it was as we estimated. In fact, the last four sessions of last week's sale, while it was true the majority of the works offered were what is known in and to the trade as "commercial pictures" was almost a slaughter. It is passing strange that, save only a very few dealers and interior decorators, neither the trade in general, nor collectors seized the rare opportunity to secure paintings that would have in many instances brought the dealers good profits, if only for decorative purposes, and in some cases, large profits, as genuine examples of good old painters. The collectors also lost a chance to pick up real bargains.

For the sale was, in reality, a bargain one. One collector in a small way, for example, secured an old canvas, slightly damaged and without a frame, for $20, which, as he suspected, has proven to be a veritable and good example of Rubens, having the written testimony to that effect of the late Max Rooses, the authority on Rubens, and we hear of other instances of a like nature.

The lessons of the Blakeslee sale may therefore be summed up as proving the danger of dealers loading up with too many so-called Old Masters and commercial pictures, and of the advisability of both dealers and collectors paying more attention to art sales of the kind, in the future.

Some dealers and auctioneers argue that a far better result would have been obtained had the sale been held, if it could have been arranged, within a month or even two, of Mr. Blakeslee's death, and when his sad and sensational passing would have the more directed public attention to the dispersal of his pictures, and this view seems reasonable.

Will Foster, the illustrator, has taken a studio in the Colonial, 39 W. 67 St.

WHO WAS RIGHT?

The "American Art News," while it does not claim infallibility, takes every possible precaution against the publication of incorrect or erroneous news, and nothing causes its officers or editors more annoyance and vexation, than to innocently publish anything which can be questioned or controverted.

Our exclusive announcement last week that Mr. Henry C. Frick had secured, through Duveen Brothers, the famous picture by Gainsborough, "The Mall," perhaps the most valuable painting obtained by an American collector since Mr. Widener's acquisition of Rembrandt's "Mill," and the "Cowper" Raphael Madonna, was questioned, however, by the "Tribune," in the following article published March 13 last.

"According to the current number of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, Henry C. Frick was the purchaser of the famous Gainsborough painting, 'The Mall,' the sale of which to the Duveen Brothers was announced last week.

"Duveen Brothers, according to the periodical, represented Mr. Frick in purchasing the painting from Thomas Agnew & Sons. The price, it is said, was in the neighborhood of $250,000.

"Joseph Duveen said last night there was no truth in the report that Mr. Frick bought the Gainsborough painting.

"We are the absolute owners of 'The Mall,' said he. 'It has not left the other side yet, but it will be on its way to New York next week, and it will be placed on exhibition at our galleries when it arrives.'

On Wednesday morning last the N. Y. "Times" published the following:

"Henry C. Frick has authorized the N. Y. 'Times' to say that he has bought the famous Gainsborough, 'The Mall,' which is soon to be brought to this country by Duveen Brothers, Incorporated, through whom it was purchased."

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

Edmund Greacen is painting the portraits of two children at his studio, 242 East 18 St. He has been successful this winter painting river scenes which he does with great skill. Mrs. Greacen has met with unusual success in, for her, a new phase of art, that of fashion designing.

Samuel Halpert, who went to Europe nearly two years ago and visited France and Portugal, is now in Spain. He will return to this country in the Spring.

Guy C. Wiggins has been established in a studio in the Central Park Studio building in West 67 St., since the late autumn where he has painted several fine landscapes and street scenes, among them a recent example of "Sherman Square—a Snow Storm."

Ivan Olinsky has recently completed an important portrait group of the family of Mr. Elon Huntington Hooker. The work which was begun out of doors at Greenwich, Conn., last summer, includes six figures, gracefully grouped in a landscape. The canvas is a decorative work as well as a portrait, is well balanced, serious and beautiful in color.

Cecilia Beaux, Janet Scudder, Howard G. Cushing and Princes Pierre and Paul Troubetzkoy have offered to contribute sketches or models for the Venetian Masked Ball to be held for Italian War relief at the Century Theatre on Mar. 24.

Mme. De Wentworth, Papal Marquise, is in Washington with her husband. She painted portraits of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft.

Robert Nisbet recently returned from Boston where he held a successful exhibition at the Vose Galleries.

Ossip Linde has devoted the greater part of the Winter to painting Connecticut landscapes near his home at Westport, Conn. He has a large landscape class in New York and comes here to criticize every week.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, March 8, 1916.

One of the most striking artistic features of the period immediately following the war will be architectural restoration in northern France and Belgium. This will involve, at the same time, great activity in decorative art. In both these departments commendable foresight is already shown by the leaders of art and aesthetic criticism, in laying down, what may be termed, the general principles which should be followed in such restoration. To one who has read of the enormity of the destruction which has been wrought in the war-ridden sections, it is needless to emphasize the greatness of the task. In its proper performance many years must be consumed. The critical question is: Shall it be properly performed? In France there is a profound revolt of sentiment and taste against the kind of rococo effects which distinguish German decorative art; and yet there are cliques of artists even now, who, while refusing to confess that they are of that school, would gladly seize the opportunity to insinuate much of its style, under a different designation, into the new architectural and decorative work which must largely take the place of the old in the cities battered and pulverized by the war, for in very many instances identical restoration will be naturally impossible.

Danger to True Art.

The danger to true art that is here indicated is that which preoccupies the most intelligent artistic spirits in France. It is fortunate that practical measures of organization are already being taken to forestall it. A propaganda for restoration, adhering as closely as possible to the original forms, is being vigorously carried on. In its compass it does not even ignore the soldier who is fighting in the trenches, and who will come back from the war, it is certain, with ideas and resolutions very clearly fixed on many subjects relative to the future of his Motherland. How far the war is educative of average French manhood will be realized by-and-by. The common people, as well as the more accomplished, do not wish to see northern France reborn under a non-traditional aspect. They want the villages of Flanders, Artois, Picardy, Champagne and Alsace to be, in the visual sense, what they had been for centuries. Incidentally, let me say, therefore, the generous suggestion from America that pine lumber from Oregon, Maine and Georgia shall replace the stone, brick and stucco which have been demolished by shell-fire and savage arson does not meet with general acceptance. Such material may have a temporary use, as far as exterior walls go, but not a permanent one. The French villages in the north will be rebuilt as much as possible as they were built originally, with, of course, some mechanical improvements in the direction of modern comfort. Artistically, when the restored newness shall somewhat have worn off, they may still have the old idyllic charm.

Much more will be heard of this question of restoration. It is bound to engage the attention of the artistic world for a long time to come.

A "Modernists" Show.

Paris has flocked to the exhibition "by modern masters," as described in the catalog, at the George Bernheim Galleries, for the benefit of French artists who are prisoners of war in Germany, as announced in one of my former letters. There are seven panels of miniature paintings, twenty to each, by such artists as Joseph Bail, Boldini, Caro-Dolville, Paul Chabas, Maurice Denis, Devanbez, Abel Faivre, Le Sidaner, René Ménard, Picard, Lucien Simon, Willette, Gervex, Guillaumin, Roll, Adler, Cadel, Leir-Luigi, Nezal, Poulbot, and Madeleine Lemaire, comprising landscapes, marines, figures, flowers and still-life, all of which have been sold for the total of 42,000 francs. The section of the exhibition devoted to larger pictures is, however, by far the more interesting. Here are fine examples of Bompard, Dagnan-Bouveret, Dauchez, Etcheverry, Latouche, Mme. Lucien Simon, Loir-Luigi, Claude Monet, René Ménard, Frieseke and Chabas.

A watercolor show of René Levard at the Georges Petit Galleries accentuates the present intensified interest in all that relates to the older aspects of Paris. M. Levard displays great accuracy in perspective, a fine sense of local character and a pleasant sobriety of color.

At the Luxembourg is shown the picture executed to order of the French government by J. F. Boucher, official painter to the army, commemorative of the transference of the remains of Roget de l'Isle in July of last year to the Invalides. The work possesses a certain vivacity of representation, together with a feeling of individuality with reference to most of the living figures, that compensates in some degree for its rather photographic grouping and rigidity of detail. Most of the leading members of the French government at that period are portrayed.

Eric Tayne.

LONDON LETTER.

London, March 8, 1916.
While press and public wax enthusiastic over the merits of the Red Cross Sale and the generosity of the donors, Bond Street looks on the matter in quite a different light. I am told that after the last Sale, many collectors spent, in connection with it, such large sums, which would otherwise have been expended with the dealers, that it took the trade quite six months to recover from the slump. Indeed, many of them say that they would sooner offer to the Fund 50 per cent. of the takings of their best day in the whole year, than undergo again the damage to business occasioned last time. Of course in buying from the Red Cross Sale at Christie's a purchaser has the satisfaction of seeing his name published as a benevolent participator in the cause of charity, while at the same time securing, as a rule, quite excellent return for his money. And so the dealers have reason to be bitter at the interference of charity with legitimate trading. Among the gifts recently sent for the forthcoming sale are a Hondecoeter oil painting from Messrs. Lewis and Simmons, embroideries from Messrs. Durlacher, a pair of old Battersea vases from Mr. John Duveen, and a set of old Dresden china from Mrs. Isaac Seligman. It is rumored that the French Government is contributing a "Biscuit de Sevres" known as the centre-piece of the "Bacchus Surtout."

The infliction of a fine of £200 on the proprietors of "The Bystander" and of others of £50 apiece on the editor and a cartoonist, has awakened the journalistic world to the necessity of exercising as strict a surveillance over their cartoon commentaries on the war, as that maintained on their letter press. The cartoon which is responsible for the occurrence depicted a drunken soldier lying under a tree somewhere in Gallipoli and was entitled "Reported Missing!" The charge was, that a picture of this description prejudiced both the recruiting and the discipline of the forces, the Foreign Office having thought fit to call the attention of the Public Prosecutor to the matter.

Nat'l Gallery Buys a de Hooch.

It is reported that the Nat'l Gallery has purchased from Mr. Goudstikker, the Amsterdam picture-dealer, Pieter de Hooch's famous "Music Party," which was formerly in Baron Steengracht's collection at The Hague. When this collection was dispersed a few years ago, the price which the picture then fetched was about £3,500, but it is understood that Mr. Goudstikker's price was considerably lower than this. The picture is especially interesting in so far as it appears to have been practically the last work executed by the artist, the canvas being inscribed with the date, 1667. There has, of course, been the obvious protest in the press with regard to the inconsistency of closing the galleries and at the same time of acquiring fresh pictures, but whatever the policy pursued, it is safe to conclude that opposition would have proved inevitable.

Gainsborough's famous "View in the Mall," on which dealers have for many years cast covetous eyes, is to pass from its Wiltshire home to an American collector. The sum paid for it is supposed to be enormous, even larger than that given by the late Mr. Pierpont Morgan for the same artist's famous "Duchess." The picture is extremely Watteau-esque and one of the most charming scenes which XVIII century art ever produced. It is said that nothing but wartime conditions would ever have induced its owner to part with it.

Nat'l Portrait Soc'y Exhib'n.

The exhib'n of the Nat'l Portrait Soc'y at the Grosvenor Gallery is exceptionally interesting this year, for it contains quite an unusual number of exhibits of arresting power and individuality. There are four portrait busts by Jacob Epstein, which show this sculptor in a mood happily less eccentric and more convincing than any which has lately characterized his work. In the head of Miss Iris Tree, however, he essays a new departure in using a smooth surface of burnished copper to represent the hair, a device which contrasts well with the green of the bronze used elsewhere, but which adds a strangely mysterious touch to the whole. In his "Baby's Head" the modelling is extraordinarily powerful, though a frank disregard of the appealing side of babyhood reduces its effect rather to that of a purely pathological study than to one of artistic beauty. The best of three pictures exhibited by Augustus John is a portrait of Mme. Réjane, a clever piece of work, but one so cynical in tone as to be almost in the nature of an impertinence. William Strang sends several portraits in those clear, pure tones, which he understands so admirably and handles so freely. Each year sees a distinct advance in the achievement of this highly personal and individual artist, whose canvases always seem to throw into semi-obscure all that is in their neighborhood.

A STATEMENT

It has come to my knowledge that certain spurious pictures attributed to Wyant, Inness, Blakelock and other American artists are being offered for sale as having come through this gallery.

However plausible an attribution may seem, I neither buy nor offer for sale any canvas about whose authenticity there can be the slightest question.

The facts concerning my previous ownership of pictures can easily be ascertained. Those who buy canvases bearing any of the above names without first verifying every statement made about them, do so at their own risk.

CHICAGO.

The Chicago Society of Etchers has an excellent show in the Art Institute. The "original twenty" organized the Soc'y in 1910, and now it covers an international membership of notable artists in this country, England, France, Italy, Sweden, Germany, China, and Canada. There are 32 exhibitors and 334 prints. George Seneseny, the Pres't, shows characteristic color-prints. Ettore Caser has delicate subjects, and George E. Burr portrays Colorado scenery in black and white. Troy Kinney's reflections of nature, and Earl Reed's poetic pictures of sand swirls along the Michigan beach, with a few of his forest scenes, are conspicuous. Otto J. Schneider, vice-pres't, shows skill in landscapes, portraiture, and Parisian architecture.

Bertha Jaques, sec'y, Ernest D. Roth, Ashdale Maine, J. Alsson-Nordfeldt, John W. Cotton, R. F. Seymour, Ernest Haskell, William H. Lester, Sears Gallagher, Elizabeth Colwell, and M. V. Bretmayer, all have examples. There are portraits by Dorothy Stevens and Jacques Reich contributes a few etchings and drawings. Beatrice Levy, Frank W. Benson, W. G. Reindel, Caroline H. Armington, Clifford Adames, and Frank M. Armington present various prints. Maurice Achner, Helen Hyde, Lester G. Hornby, Charles K. Gleason, and John Marin, Charles B. Keeler, W. A. Levy, and Lewis Calewaert add to the exhibit with distinctive work, and Nell Cover shows unique and pretty subjects.

The Guild of Boston Artists is making an effective display in the Art Institute—the Society's first western exhibit. Some 40 painters and sculptors are represented. With many of these artists, Chicago art lovers are familiar through work previously shown. Louis Kronberg seems one of the local colony, almost, through the frequent appearance here of his ballet girl pictures. H. D. Murphy is here with two colorful marines, "Tropical Sea," and "Caribbean Sea," and "Mount Washington."

Joseph de Camp adds to the show with his colorful "Blue Lady," as does also Charles H. Woodbury in his "A North-easter" and "Mount Monadnock." Lilla C. Perry, Marie D. Page, Ernest Major, Gertrude Fisk, Evelyn Purdie, Jean N. Oliver, Laura C. Hills, W. W. Churchill, W. M. Paxton, Mary B. Hazelton, Dwight Blaney, Margaret F. Hawley, Richard Maryman, Alice R. Schier, Sally Cross, T. M. Wendel, Bertha Cooleage, Edmund C. Tarbell, Leslie P. Thompson, and W. J. Kaule, are all well represented.

Leslie P. Thompson is represented by miniatures. Frank W. Benson by his "Gray Room," Philip L. Hale by some strong landscapes; John Enneking, and the late Mary L. Macumber are well represented. Lucy C. Richards, F. W. Allen, C. E. Dallin, Anna C. Ladd, Richard Recchia, and Bela Pratt contribute small sculptures. Exhibiting with the Boston artists in this display are several identified with the "New England Group."

Anna V. Hyatt's sculptures shown at the Art Institute have her usual force of characterization in modelling. She shows some good modellings of animals—notably of horses and bulls, cats and dogs, tigers and jaguars.

Charles Haag's sculptures add another feature to the Art Institute's season. He runs the scale of emotions and shows the beauty and dignity of labor, and the "poetry of toil." "The Emigrants," "Hay Man," "Log Carrier," and "Protection" are among the best of his works.

Ben Foster is at the Art Institute with his landscapes—pictures of the Maine coast, and sweeps of rugged inland scenery. There are New England paintings, landscapes, and several with figures.

An exhibition of original drawings by Lester G. Hornby is on at Roullier's, to March 25. There are also rare XVIII Century stipple and mezzotint engravings, in colors, in one of the Roullier galleries, and a special exhib'n of etchings by noted Americans.

BOSTON.

The Guild Show at the Art Museum has excited much discussion. One Boston paper remarks that at least one-third of the pictures would not pass a jury! Another calls the show "dignified" and "impressive." All the papers rejoice, however, at the fact that the Museum has at last opened its doors (part way) for a showing of local talent. The sculpture in this exhib'n is an important accessory. Cyrus Dallin's group of 3 figures (life-size) is disquietingly good! It is a fine work, human and interesting.

J. L. Sharman's exhib'n in the St. Botolph Club, coming directly after the seasoned display of Childe Hassam, might have been expected to fall a little flat—look amateurish—but it doesn't. This young painter, whom Boston has not much noticed, is rather a good find. He paints a landscape with almost appreciation for beauty! He was trained at the Museum, but he seems to be getting over academic traditions, and thinks for himself. The Chocorua series are good, but the everyday landscapes are even better. "Summer Night," "Garden Wall," with flowering trees, autumnal landscape, etc., are interestingly seen and good in color.

In the Copley Gallery C. Scott White has gathered a harvest of landscapes and other subjects. These are faithfully done with some charm, the snowscapes being the best.

The Copley Soc'y has shaken itself together and pulled off a mid-winter Scandinavian exhib'n. A private view, to which those of social or artistic aspirations were bidden, marked the opening on Wed. eve. Here one met the strained-eyed artist, the volatile student, the bored musician, the soulful writer, the glad "Society Lady," and her indifferent husband. Common clay, too, stalked through the big halls and uttered the pompous opinions to which nobody listened. The show? Well, that is a second thought reserved for a later date.

The "Pas de Calais," by Turner, has been loaned for exhibition at the Fogg Museum at Cambridge.

John Doe.

PHILADELPHIA.

Unusually interesting will be the Latta Sale in the Galleries of Samuel T. Freeman & Co., March 20 and 21, especially the collection of old Phila. prints by Thos. Birch, a unique aquatint of the "Battle of Mudfort," another showing a view of Phila. from the old Navy Yard by I. Hill, various "prospects" of the city, military and firemen's processions, etc.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the increasing interest and the taste displayed in pageantry of various forms as seen a few weeks ago in the beautiful "Masque of 1916." The University of Pa. is the latest large public institution to distinguish itself in this way. The flourishing period of the Byzantine Empire at Constantinople was chosen by the students in architecture as the setting of one of the most remarkable picture dramas ever seen here. The scenery and costuming were historically correct. The students were grouped in different ateliers as they are at the Beaux Arts in Paris and each atelier had its own performance before the Emperor personated by Prof. Alfred H. Gumaer, his throne surrounded by gorgeously attired courtiers, ecclesiastics, and ladies in waiting.

Five purchases have been made of pictures in the present Academy's Annual Exhib'n with the income derived from the John Lambert Fund of $50,000 established by him for the purpose of encouraging the younger artists. Howard Giles' "Holidays," Theodore van Solen's "Along the River," "The Old Court Yard" by Roy C. Gamble, "Storm Clouds" by Nathalie Peck, and "Provincetown" by Nancy M. Ferguson are the works so honored.

Eugene Castello.

A new art building is to be erected in Columbus, Ohio, at a cost of $200,000. It is to have two wings, to be occupied respectively by the Dept. of Architecture and that of Sculpture and Painting.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

BLAKESLEE SALE ENDS.

The fifth and concluding session of the sale of the remainder of the stock of pictures left by the late Theron J. Blakeslee, at the American Art Galleries, March 10, totaled $4,469.50, making a grand total of $69,063.50 for the entire lot. As the first lot of pictures sold at the Plaza on April 21-23, 1915, brought $262,235, and the fixtures and furnishings of the Blakeslee Galleries, 813 Fifth Ave., sold in October last $2,446.50, the grand total of the complete sale, including both lots of the Blakeslee art properties amounted to $333,745. One dividend of 35 per cent. has been paid to the creditors of the estate.

The Ehrich Galleries paid the highest price, $610, at the last session for a "Portrait of a Man," a fine listed Romney. Mr. A. L. Kramer gave $240 for J. Riley's "Portrait of a Magistrate," and Mr. William Flattau paid $150 for an Italian school picture of "A Sibyl." J. Nottenhammer's panel, "St. Cecilia," brought $110 from Mr. A. M. Henry, and Mr. Charles de Kay paid $150 for a decorative picture, "Cupids," given to Albano.

Sale List.

The following is a list of the pictures sold at the last session which brought $100 or over, with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices.

Coming Art and Book Sales.

The sales at the American Art Galleries next week will be those of the stock of Karl J. Freund, Monday-Thursday afternoons, Mar. 20-23 inclusive, afternoon sales to begin at 2.30 o'clock each day, of the Library of the late Mrs. Amzi L. Barber, Monday-Tuesday Mar. 20-21 at 3 and 8.15 P. M. each day, of the early line engravings and mezzotints by Arlent Edwards and of a scarce series of American portraits, consigned by Mr. J. P. S. Sabin, Wednesday evening, Mar. 22.

The following week, that beginning Mar. 27, will bring the sale of old and modern paintings by Foreign and American artists, belonging to the estates of Salvador de Mendonca, Alfred Henry Lewis, Mrs. Amzi L. Barber and others, the eve'gs of Mar. 29-31 inclusive.

On April 1, the old and modern paintings by great masters, owned by Mr. John Anderson, Jr., will be placed on exhibition, previous to their sale in the Plaza ballroom on April 6. The sale of the pictures owned by the late Andrew J. Freedman will take place in the Plaza ballroom April 14.

At the Anderson Galleries next week there will be sold on the afternoons of March 20-22, Mon.-Wed., inclusive, the John E. Burton collection of curios and collections of old china, pewter, pottery and artistic furniture from other owners, and on Thurs. aft. and eve., March 23, Chinese potteries, embroideries, porcelains, paintings and Japanese color prints, the property of Naka Hayashi, of Tokio, Japan.

Collection of Oriental Art.

An interesting collection of Chinese potteries, embroideries, porcelains and paintings, the property of Naka Hayashi of Tokio, is on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries and will be sold on Thursday afternoon and evening next. The potteries include fine examples of Hang, Tang, Yuang and Ming, in addition to which there are some unusual examples of antique Korean bowls. Miniature vases and figures, antique Chinese glass, decorated cups, saucers, bowls and plates, beak necklaces and pendants, brocades, silks, and embroideries, and Chinese paintings on glass are other divisions of the collection. The second session of the sale is devoted entirely to Japanese prints, among which are some fine examples of the work of Hiroshige, Katsushika Kuni, Yeisan, Utamaro, and other famous artists.

"When I first went to Paris in the eighties, the Luminist movement was just reaching the crest of the wave. I don't see how any landscape-painter with the love of Nature in his heart could fail to recognize the charm of light and air in the Luminist's expression of feeling for outdoor work. There was an underlying truth to the movement that was valuable. And yet, after all, a truth is only a truth when it is just, in its relation to other truths."

Important Autographs.

What is announced as one of the most interesting and important collections of American and foreign autographs that has come on the market in many years goes on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries on Monday, preliminary to the sale on March 27-28. Many great names are represented by autograph letters. There is a Bible of 1634 with a presentation inscription by Cromwell, and 300 letters by Ruskin.

Among the American material appear the only known letter by Joseph Rodman Drake, author of "The American Flag," the original order for the firing on Fort Sumter, a full set of letters by the Presidents, a Maya manuscript of seventeen large leaves, painted on deer-skin, and twenty remarkably interesting letters by Longfellow. Letters and documents by many of the Signers are in the sale, and the Washington letters are unusually important. The Grant autographs are of interest. There are many letters to members of his family, and in addition there are his original Field Despatch Book and the original letter which Grant wrote to Sherman about the terms of surrender which Sherman had offered to Johnston—certainly one of the most important of all Civil War letters.

The original Mss. by John Fiske are of very great importance. Two quarto volumes beautifully bound in crushed levant morocco, contain the holograph Mss. of "Scenes and Characters in American History," and also the original Mss. of his sketch of Hutchinson and his "Koschei, the Deathless."

More important, however, than any of these is the original Mss. of his greatest work, "The Discovery of America." This is in 3 quarto volumes, containing more than 1,000 pages. The marginal headings and notes have been written by Fiske in red ink and an interesting leaf gives a chronological record of the time spent in writing the work which occupied a little over a year.

Huntington Library Sale.

Beginning today, and continuing until the sale at public auction starting Wed. aft. March 29, there will go on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries an unusual collection of autograph letters, beautiful bindings, rare and fine books, and valuable Mss., duplicates and selections from the libraries of Messrs. Henry E. Huntington and William K. Bixby, together with an important lot of rare books on early English literature from the library of the late E. Dwight Church. This will be the most important public offering of literary properties since the sale of the famous Robert Hoe Library, which was also conducted by the Anderson Galleries. For several years Mr. Huntington has been the largest individual buyer of rare books in the world. Long ago he acquired literary treasures from the McKee, Poor, Daly, Heckscher, and other important sales; at the dispersal of the Hoe Library he was by far the largest buyer, and since then he has acquired en bloc no less than four magnificent libraries—the great collections made by the Duke of Devonshire, and Messrs. E. Dwight Church, Beverley Chew, and Frederick W. Halsey.

The books from Mr. Huntington's library to be sold consist almost entirely of XIX Century English colored plate books and comprise the entire first session of the sale. With hardly an exception they are first editions, extremely rare, and in fine bindings. In a letter to The Anderson Galleries, Mr. Bixby says:

"During a long period of collecting I have acquired some duplicate books, many manuscripts by the same authors, and many autograph letters by the same writers, until the room in which I keep them has been crowded to overflowing. To obtain more space, I have sent a large quantity of literary material to you for sale."

The Bixby Collection.

In Mr. Bixby's consignment are illuminated Mss., privately printed books, extra-illustrated books, great rarities in English literature, and a very large amount of autographic material. There are letters from Byron, Carlyle, Dickens, Emerson, Franklin, Goethe, Hawthorne, John Paul Jones, Shelley, Washington, and other celebrities. Mr. Bixby's consignment is richest in the original Mss. of distinguished authors. Among those represented are Henry James, Daudet, Dumas, Field, Fiske, Harte, Hawthorne, Haydn, Hazlitt, Hogg, Holmes, Irving, Kipling, Lamb, Lever, Cotton Mather, John Howard Payne, Poe, Riley, Scott, Southey, Swinburne, Tennyson, Thoreau, Verdi, Wilde, and Charles Reade, who is represented by the original Ms. of one of the greatest novels in the language—"The Cloister and the Hearth."

From the Church Estate.

Among the extraordinary books consigned by the Church estate are: Byrd's Songs (1589), Churchyard's "Miserie of Flaunders" (1579) Ford's "Fames Memorial" (1606), "Kalender of Shepards" (1518), Kendall's "Flowers of Epigrammes" (1577), Lydgate's "Treatise of the Horse" (1499), Shakespeare's "Henry the Fifth" and Lancaster and York, printed in 1608 and 1619, and Reynolds's "Mythomystes," 1630. Of some of these books only two or three copies are known; of others, only three or four. In addition, there are many first editions of English authors of later times.

Sprague-Byam Sale.

At the first session on the aft. of Mar. 10 at the Anderson Galleries, of the collection of Mrs. William Sprague and Mrs. Francis Byam, $2,631 was realized. Mr. C. H. Harden paid $335 for a Lang Yao bowl of mottled sangle-boeuf of the Kang Hsi period.

At the second and final session Mar. 11, the total was brought to $18,183.50. Mr. F. J. Perkins gave $1,800 for 12 Hepplewhite dining room chairs. Mr. Geo. D. Smith paid $700 for two Louis XVI vitrines, ornamented with gold ormolu, and the Lans Co. the same amount for a suite of silk Beauvais tapestry, 7 pieces, made for the 1900 Paris Expos'n.

Curios, Pewter and Pottery.

The John E. Burton collection of curios is now on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries and will be sold on the afternoons of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, next. This collection has been famous in the West for many years, and was made during Mr. Burton's travels in Alaska and the Orient.

The division of Alaskan carved ivories and curios is large and important, and many interesting objects are to be found among the Chinese and Japanese objects of art, the firearms, Indian objects, coins and medals, precious and semi-precious stones and Egyptian jewelry and glass.

The third session is composed of other consignments of china, etc.

Rare Books Sold at Walpole Galleries.

At a book sale on March 10, at the Walpole Galleries, 10 E. 49 St., $7,070 was realized. Mr. E. D. North gave $1,825 for a work, said to be by Herbert Lawrence, and claimed to be hitherto unknown, attributing the authorship of Shakespeare's plays to Bacon, and antedating by 100 years all other works on the controversy. It is the "Life and Adventures of Common Sense, an Historical Allegory," 12 mo. London, 1769. Mr. George D. Smith paid $775 for 8 unpublished letters of Dickens, written to John Macrone, the publisher of "Sketches by Boz." He also gave $95 for the first edition of the "Ingoldsby Legends," $85 for the manuscripts of "Memorable Names," an unpublished book of Leigh Hunt and $80 for a silver bound "Enchiridion Militis Christiani," Cambridge, 1685.

Franklin Library Sale.

The first four sessions, Mar. 15-16, of the sale of the Library of the late William M. Franklin, of E. Orange, N. J., at the Anderson Galleries, amounted to a total of $7,562.80. The fifth session on Wed. eve. brought $1,927.75. The sale ended Thurs. aft. with a grand total of $11,121.75.

Mr. Geo. D. Smith paid $65 for the Crolier Club's publication (one of 150 on Japan) of the "Rubaiyat," Mr. N. J. Bartlett gave $70 for a descriptive catalog of George Cruikshank's works, containing 313 illustrations; and Dr. J. Martini paid $62.50 for 3 vols., "History of Printing in France in the XV and XVI Centuries," by A. Clauhin. Mr. H. O. Harris gave $62.50 for Dibdin's "Typographic Antiquities, or the History of Printing in England, Scotland, and Ireland." Messrs. Chas. Scribner's Sons obtained for $50 F. de Goya's "La Taureau machie," and for $63 the "Collection des Goncourt," 3 vols., with heliograph plates. Mr. A. J. Kennedy paid $55 for 3 vols. of "L'Estampe Originale," published by the artist members of the Socy.

Kinsley-Hogencamp Sale.

At the Hiram Parke New Galleries, 924 Broadway, on Wed. evening, the first session of the sale of the collections of Joseph T. Kinsley of Phila. and William Hogencamp of Paterson, N. J., realized $4,590. The highest price of the evening was $195, paid by Mr. Ditmar for A. S. Franke's "Spanish Dancers." Mr. Stone gave $190 for J. G. Brown's "Expectation." Mr. Helfer $165 for A. Ritzberger's "Love's Young Dream" and Mr. Wilbur $140 for G. Laugee's "The Gleaners." Mr. A. W. Jenkins paid $105 for Portielje's "Drawing the Squire's Portrait."

At the final session, Thursday, the results were $28,590, which brought the grand total for 179 numbers to $33,180. The highest price, $6,500, was paid by Mr. S. S. Ellis, said to be acting for a N. Y. club, for Schuessle's "Benjamin Franklin Before the Privy Council." Mr. J. J. Atkinson, Jr., of Phila., gave $6,000 for Blommer's "Departure of the Fishing Boats." Mr. Henry Schulteis gave $1,050 for O. Achenbach's "Bay of Naples." Mr. Ditmar secured for $925 Ziem's "Entrance to the Public Gardens, Venice," and Bruner Bros. for $750 Verboechehoven's "Cow and Landscape." For the same amount Mr. William Zanker bought W. H. Beard's "Bulls and Bears." Holland Galleries paid $510 for Daubigny's "Villerville," and Mr. John Levv the same amount for W. M. Chase's "Still Life, Cod and Snapper."

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

American Art News

VOL. XIV., No. 25.

Entered as second class mail matter,
N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, MARCH 25, 1916.

10 PAGES

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

A MEMLING FOR MR. LEHMAN.

This is in very truth, a Memling year in art collecting circles in America. Following news of the acquisition by Mr. Dreicer of the fine portrait of a young man known as "The Archer," first and exclusively announced, and afterwards exclusively reproduced in the ART NEWS, and of the beautiful and feeling "Madonna and Child," by the same old Flemish painter, secured, as was "The Archer" from the Kleinberger Galleries, and reproduced in this issue, comes the news of the purchase from Knoedler & Co., by that discriminating collector, Mr. Philip Lehman, of still another and superior example of Memling, a "Portrait of a Young Man" with a landscape background. Mr. Lehman is to be congratulated upon this addition to his exceedingly choice collection of Old Masters.

MR. FRIEDSAM'S MEMLING.

The remarkable and beautiful "Madonna and Child," one of the finest and rarest of the works of the quaint old Flemish master, Memling, recently secured by Mr. Michael Friedsam from the Kleinberger Galleries, and reproduced on this page, for the first time in this country, has an interesting history. It was for many years in the collection of Lord Northwick of England, and was exhibited in a collection of art treasures in Dublin in 1865, as by Jan Van Eyck. It later passed into the collection of Sir Charles Dilke, who exhibited it at the Burlington Club in London in 1892, again as a Jan Van Eyck. Dr. Freedlander of the Berlin Museum, who saw the picture at Sir Charles Dilke's, after close study, declared it to be by Memling, and of the date 1465. It is presumably a pendant to the well-known "Christ in the Act of Blessing," in the Kauffmann collection, Berlin.

The picture is one on whose acquisition Mr. Friedsam is to be warmly congratulated.

OBNOXIOUS LAW MODIFIED.

The obnoxious and objectionable ordinance, or rather the revival of an objectionable ordinance by the Board of Aldermen, affecting the interests of book and art publishers, dealers, auctioneers, etc., to the danger of whose enforcement on April 1 next attention was editorially called in the ART NEWS of March 11, has, through the efforts of a number of art dealers, co-operating under the lead of the Ehrich Galleries, been amended, so that dealers in paintings, drawings, etchings and engravings are exempt from the harmful provisions of the proposed ordinance.

Its amendment, so that these are excluded from its provisions, is a matter for congratulation in the fine art trade.

THE MORGAN BOOKS, $7,500,000.

It has become known that the report, recently filed with the State Comptroller, by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby of the American Art Association and the late Charles Balmanno appraised the contents of the library of the late J. P. Morgan, including engravings and etchings at about $7,500,000. It will be recalled that the pictures and furnishings of the library were appraised more than a year ago by a Mr. Samuel Marks, a Deputy State Appraiser, at $253,000. The library contains over 20,000 volumes and includes examples of all the most famous early printed books. Mr. Swann who appraised the books alone, said that his valuations were conservative. For instance, there is in the collection the original Mss. of Dickens' "Christmas Carol," which is appraised at a little less than $50,000, though it is said that it would bring at private or public sale between that and $100,000. Other rarities are the Mss. of "Paradise Lost," "Vanity Fair," and of all the better known poems of Burns. There are, besides, Mss. and first editions of Scott and Johnson and the collection of Bibles and missals is extremely valuable, including many books illuminated on vellum by monks. The Chaucer and Shakespeare collections are very rare and excel those in the British Museum. Notable is a very rare Caxton edition of Chaucer and a first edition of the "Complete Angler," said to be worth $5,000 or over.

A LUCKY ROMNEY SALE FIND.

The time when art "finds" can still be discovered is not past by any means. The general public will not soon forget the important Rembrandt, discovered by Dr. Valentiner in a sale here some two years ago, and now another important discovery has just come to light. In the recent Blakeslee Sale, where many good pictures, because of the great number of inferior works in the collection, brought only very small prices a genuine Romney was sold and went begging for a few hundred dollars.

The picture was cataloged as "Romney Periods," and in this country, where so many people buy names instead of pictures that immediately damned the work. This painting, cataloged as "Head of a Man, Romney Period," is in truth one of the figures in one of Romney's very important pictures. It is cataloged and described in the authoritative work, "Romney-Catalogue Raisonne," by Humphrey Ward and W. Roberts, p. 120. The picture in its original state was a composition picture, composed of three figures containing the portrait of Major Pierson, a Brahmin and his servant, and its original size was 94x60 inches. As has been done several times with art composition pictures, this painting was cut to make it more salable and the figures sold in the Blakeslee sale was one of the remaining parts.

PARTRIDGE BUYS NOTED COLL'N.

(Special cable to AMERICAN ART NEWS). London, March 23—Frank Partridge has just purchased the well known and exceptionally fine and valuable Oppenheim collection of old English furniture, etc., which he will probably send over to his New York galleries.

RICKETTS BANKRUPTCY CASE.

The creditors of Robb R. Ricketts, doing business as Moulton & Ricketts, of Chicago, in that city have received the following: "Notice is hereby given that on April 4, 1916, at 10 o'clock A. M. the petition of Frank M. McKey, trustee for Robb R. Ricketts, bankrupt, filed on March 10, will come on for hearing in Room 437, Monadnock Block, Chicago, in which petition the trustee represents that Arthur Tooth & Sons, of London, England, filed a petition herein for the return of five certain paintings, and also filed a claim against said estate for the sum of $175,863.49, to which claim the trustee filed objections. He filed a petition in the Southern District of New York in certain ancillary proceedings there pending, for the return of certain paintings, which property was turned over, conditionally, to said petitioner, under order of court, which matters are more fully set forth in said petition, and the trustee asks that he be given leave to accept an offer received for the compromise

CURIOUS ART INSURANCE CASE.

Judgment was delivered in London recently by Mr. Justice Rowlatt, in the action in which Lieut. Robert Rene Meyer-See, of the Zouaves, claimed £3,141 from Mr. H. S. Mountain and other Lloyd's underwriters, for a total loss, under a policy of insurance against burglary on valuable art pictures at the Marlborough Galleries, Duke St., St. James', for a claimed burglary June 17, 1915.

The defendants contested the claim, and asserted that at the time of the issue of the plaintiff's writ the claim was not proved, and that full and proper information was not given them.

Justice Rowlatt reserved judgment in order to give his reasons in detail; but he stated that he was satisfied this was a burglary within the meaning of the policy and that the Lieut. was in France at the time it occurred. It had been suggested, in a letter read in the case, that the Lieut. left for France on the day of the burglary.

Mystery of a Window.

"The circumstances of the burglary," he continued, "were unusual. It took place near Midsummer Day, when burglars were not usually very active. The police witnesses satisfied him that the window which it was said had been pushed up bore no marks to show that it had been approached from the outside, and he could only accept the theory set up by counsel for the plaintiff that the window had been pushed up by the burglar to create the false impression that entry had been secured through it from the outside.

"It seemed certain," the Justice proceeded, "that the pictures were taken by somebody who had secreted himself inside the gallery, and then departed by the door." He did not say the case was not a mysterious one, but he could not accept any view other than that a thief took the pictures.

He was of the opinion that "the issue of the writ on August 7, only nine days after the day on which the total value had been communicated and four days after the delivery of the statutory declaration, was unreasonable.

"The claim was proved by the statutory declaration and the delivery of the books," said the Justice, but as he thought that the plaintiff's conduct was unreasonable in regard to the issue of the writ he gave him judgment for the sum claimed and £83 interest, but without costs.

It is said that the costs amounted to £1,000.

The Blakelock Relief.

The plight of the painter Ralph A. Blakelock, who has lately, it is said, shown some signs of a return to reason in a desire to paint once more, and of his widow and family, has aroused great interest since attention has again been called to the facts by the somewhat sensational price, $20,000, reached by his large upright "Moonlight," purchased for the Toledo Museum at the recent Catholina Lambert Sale. It is now proposed to hold a loan exhibition of Blakelock's works, including the canvas in question, at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave., opening April 3. This is being arranged by Mrs. Van Rensselaer Adams for the benefit of the artist, who, it is state, may be shortly released, in care of his family, from the Middletown Asylum. In the display will also be former Senator Clark's $15,900 "Moonlight."

In the meanwhile, the Artists' Fund Society, whose attention was called to the case by the AMERICAN ART NEWS, has, through its Board of Control, arranged to assist Mrs. Blakelock with a small sum monthly for a year. The Society hopes to interest other societies. An appeal is being prepared to picture dealers and collectors to subscribe to a fund, which the Society will be pleased to administer, for Mrs. Blakelock's benefit. The pressing need, it is held, is for Mrs. Blakelock and her family, for the unfortunate artist has everything that is needed for his comfort at present.

Mr. A. Augustus Healy, President of the Brooklyn Institute, made the first donation on Wed. to the R. A. Blakelock Fund. The amount was not made public. Mr. Stevenson Scott of Scott and Fowles, 590 Fifth Ave., who purchased 3 of the artist's paintings at the recent Lambert sale two of which have been sold, sent word that he would donate to the fund, whatever profit he might make by the sale of the third work which cost him $3,000. The Astor Trust Co. has consented to act as custodian of the fund.

MADONNA AND CHILD
Memling

Sold by the Kleinberger Galleries to Mr. Michael Friedsam

A long description of the picture is given in the Rev. John Romney Memoirs, p. 69, where it is described as "perhaps the best that Romney painted before he went to Italy." The painting was exhibited at the Society of Artists in 1771, No. 140.

It was due to the discrimination of Mr. Ehrich of the Ehrich Galleries that this painting was recognized and the picture bought by that firm. The Ehrich Galleries are to be congratulated on the acquisition of this most interesting and valuable canvas.

BAN TEUTONIC ART.

Painters, sculptors, composers, musical conductors, actors and writers have formed at Florence an association called "The Artistic Entente." The membership comprises French and Englishmen, Russians, Belgians and Serbians, and the aim of the organization is to prevent "the infiltration of Teutonic artistic influence."

HER WORK IN THE LUXEMBOURG.

A canvas by Grace Ravlin, a Chicago artist, "Femmes au Cimetiere; Tangier," purchased by the French government at the 1914 Salon, has been placed in the Luxembourg.

of said matter, whereby the trustee is to receive the sum of $12,250 in cash and is to turn over to Arthur Tooth & Sons the pictures claimed, which he has possession of, said creditor's claim to be allowed in the sum of $192,213.49, as prayed for in said petition.

"At the same time there will come on for hearing the petition of the trustee filed on March 10, 1916, in which he sets forth that one George H. Ainslie, of N. Y. City, filed a petition herein, claiming title to and right of possession to three certain pictures, described therein of the value of about $10,400, who also filed claims against this estate in the sum of $11,250; also setting forth that one John R. Norris filed an answer to said petition, claiming right to possession of one of said pictures, and the trustee asks that he be given leave to accept an offer received for the compromise of said matter, whereby he is to receive from said George H. Ainslie the sum of $2,500, also a withdrawal of said claims filed herein in the sum of $11,250, said three pictures in question to be delivered to said parties, as set forth in the trustee's petition.

THE SPRING ACADEMY.
(Second Notice)

It was rather careless, on the part of the Jury of Awards at the current Spring Academy, to give the second Hallgarten prize to R. Sloan Bredin for his charming landscape, "Afternoon", without looking over the prizes of past years to ascertain if he had not previously been thus honored, and was therefore ineligible, when, before their eyes, in the Academy Catalog, was the printed notice of the same prize given the artist in 1914—only two years ago. So, after giving out Mr. Bredin as the winner, the Jury, was, perforce, hurriedly obliged to meet again, and this time gave the prize to Miss Christine Herter, for her decorative, well-cooled and thoughtful figure work, "Light and Shadow."

Further study—this time with a Catalog—of the pictures in the Galleries, confirms the opinion given last week that the Spring Academy this year is exceptionally well and harmoniously hung, and congratulations are extended herewith to Messrs. Irving Couse, William S. Robinson and Daniel C. French, the Hanging Committee.

The Vanderbilt Gallery.

The Vanderbilt Gallery, in particular, presents a most attractive appearance. The pictures in this large gallery, which could not be mentioned last week and which will most impress the visitor, are Bruce Crane's "December Morning" (the finest Winter landscape from his able brush he has given us in some years), Robinson's "Meadow Brook" (with tender greens); Eliza C. Moran's "New Shawl" (an effective study of reflected light); W. L. Lathrop's "Little Wills Quarry" (simple, true and strong as always); Granville Smith's "Regatta Day" (with characteristic, soft and delicate color and joyous feeling); E. I. Couse's typical, feeling Indian subject, "Autumn Melody"; F. S. Church's decorative, delicate, graceful, "The Dance," and Lydia F. Emmet's fine large three-quarter length seated "Portrait of a Child"—so rich in color quality, so fine in expression and so truthful and natural, as to confirm her claim, if this needed confirmation, to the title of America's foremost painter of children.

There are also Henry B. Kenyon's "Early May" (tender in color); Charles Basing's misty, tonal, alluring, "Staten Island Moorland"; Jane Petersen's finely, colored, atmospheric "The Pier" (full of movement and life); John Ward Dunsmore's dainty little sketch, "Petit Trianon"; Gifford Beal's strong, large "N. Y. Freight Yards"; Charles H. Davis' rich atmospheric "Clearing—Late Afternoon" (through which the "winds of Autumn blow"); Robert Spencer's tonal "Canal—New Hope"; Walter Griffin's rich-colored "Breton Fishing Village"; Dines Carlsen's (worthy son of a worthy sire), strong still-life; Gardner Symons' "In the Shadow of the Bridge"; Howard Russell Butler's large, fine conception, "Surging Seas in Sunshine" (perhaps the best marine in the display); J. Francis Murphy's delicious typical "Summer Morning" (by error it was stated last week that Mr. Murphy was not represented); Elmer F. Hudson's "Fishing Schooner" (remarkable for its rich color and true feeling); Hobart Nichols' sunny Winter landscape; Edward F. Pott-hast's "Water Nymphs" (which emphasizes his claim to the title of the American Sorolla) and Eliot Clark's rich "Fields in Flower." Leonard Ochtman's strong mountain view, "Big Warrior"; Martha Walter's good figure work, "Brother and Sister"; F. C. Frieseke's decorative, and naturally, finely colored "In the Hammock"; Ivan Olinsky's "Fire Gods"; the late Montague Flagg's finely modelled "Portrait of Artist's Wife," with an old master quality; William H. Howe's good cattle piece, "Holland Lowlands"; E. L. Blumschein's excellent speaking likeness of Joseph Hartley, F. J. Waugh's figure work, (Is Mr. Waugh forsaking the sea for the paths of Arthur Davies?); O. D. Grover's rich "Lago Maggiore"; Ballard Williams' rich, deep-colored "Village Church"; W. T. Smedley's finely modelled "Portrait of a Man"; and Jonas Lie's truthful "Winter Afternoon" are all good.

Some good pictures in the Academy Room, some sculptures and a few miniatures which merit mention, must be left until next week for such mention.

James B. Townsend.

It is to be questioned if ever an exhibition of sculpture was made in this country under more suitable conditions than that now on at the Gorham Galleries, 5th Ave. and 36th St., to April 15. Mr. W. Frank Purdy has arranged the display of 91 works, of garden and decorative sculpture, two being in the store, on the sixth floor, and surrounded them with suitable backgrounds and environments of greens and flowers. The pillars are covered to represent the holes of palm trees. There are fountains in number and quite a group of sun dials. Daniel Chester French is represented by a reproduction of his graceful "The Spirit of Life," and from Paul Manish's recent exhibition comes his charming garden group of a girl with deer and his Oriental sundial. C. S. Pietro is represented by a realistic figure of John Burroughs looking across country and shading his eyes with his hand. This he calls, "The Out-of-doors Man." By Robert Aitken there is a remarkably fine "Sundial" with a boy-fawn reaching to a snail on the edge. A beautiful and vigorously modeled, and as yet incomplete marble figure by Solon Borglum, is emblematic of "The Waters." Full of spirit is Henry Crenier's fountain, with a boy dancing away from a snapping turtle. Nellie Thompson has an original sculptural idea, in her little model of "The Wave," with its laughing figures. Capital is the expression of the baby Triton, in G. Moretti's "Crab Fountain." By Eugenie F. Shonard there is an artistic porcelain bird bath fountain, a somewhat emaciated little female figure representing "Egypt," also for a wall fountain, and a clever "Maribou" figure for a gate post. Helen Sahler's fountain shows a graceful mermaid decorating herself with seaweed. Two capital laughing "Terminal Figures" are by Sarah Morris Greene.

There is a melancholy interest in the memorial display of six works by the late Helen Farnsworth Mears. A graceful female nude is sketched by Bridget Guinness lying "By the Waters." An ambitious work by Anna Coleman Ladd shows an old man, who represents the ocean, holding up a sail which has the nude figure of a girl for the mast. Agreeably artistic is a "Decorative Relief" with a dozen allegorical figures by H. A. McNeil. Janet Scudder's female fountain figure would be more in keeping if the hair were not partly dressed. The weight is well felt in Louis Ulrich's "Boy and Shell Fountain." Grace Purden Neal sends a fine figure of a girl holding aloft a parrot and a "Turtle Boy" fountain. "The Fountain of the Rising Sun," by Adolph A. Weinman is more successful, than his more familiar "Fountain of Descending Night." Well modeled and posed is "The Voice of the Water Spirit," by Maude F. Jewett. By Sherry E. Fry there is a spirited "Goddess of the Waters" and a "Spartan Mother." C. C. Rumsey sends his "Group for a Garden Pool," and Gertrude V. Whitney her "Aztec Fountain." There is a fine motive ably carried out in Clio Bracken's "Wall Fountain," with its rim of male and female figures. Chester Beach sends his rather heavy Egyptian figure, "The Sacred Fire" and a "Boy with Bagpipe," who is capitally posed.

Others represented are Herbert Adams, V. D. Brenner, Edward Berge, Mabel Conklin, A. Stirling Calder, Rudolph Evans, Ulrich Ellerhusen, A. St. L. Eberle, Harriet W. Frishmuth, Emilie Fiero, Louise A. Hobbs, A. J. Jaegers, C. L. Hinton, Maude F. Jewett, Isador Konti, Isabel M. Kimball, Evelyn Beatrice Longman, Edward McCartan, Edith B. Parsons, W. B. Haddock, R. Hinton Perry, Linsay M. Stirling, Katherine B. Stetson, Alice M. Wright, Winifred D. Ward, Julie Yates, and Valery H. Walter.

An exhibition of 128 notable examples of etchings, line and wood engravings, and lithography is on at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, to April 3.

British Art at Knoedler's.

Exactly what purpose is served by the exhibition of British art, now on at Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., it is difficult to see. The 42 oils and 44 drawings and watercolors may have a measurable success of curiosity, but it will be rather difficult to understand how they can have any decided success of esteem. There is plenty of vigorous painting and a fair amount of novelty, but half a dozen or so of strong works cannot make up for the rest. There is the almost always interesting William Orpen with the huge "A Western Wedding" with its many figures, some of them out of perspective, gathered about a wayside cross. Others of his contributions are a familiar subject, with figures under a tent "Looking Towards the Sea," a bright picture of a little girl called "Kit" and a breezy view "On the Cliff, Dublin Bay."

William Strang somewhat justifies his reputation by a common-place composition of three figures, a modern interpretation of "Danae." In this the nude figure is beautifully painted. A large decoration by J. Derrick tells with five figures the story of the judgment of Paris. The ill-formed goddesses with blue, red and yellow hair and green and yellow skins in shade are grouped about a blue-haired Paris and his emaciated friend. This apotheosis of the Gaiety Girls has more in common with Offenbachian than any other mythology.

A measure of relief is furnished by the American Charles Shannon's rather crowded but well painted composition "Delia in the House of Tibulla" and by the lovely figure of Charles Sims' "Anthea," the only disturbing note in which is furnished by the black and white striped draperies. P. Wilson Steer has a fairly well painted but utterly common-place half nude figure of a model in a "Panama Hat," and a landscape of better quality "Painswick Beacon." Another painter who has a couple of fair landscapes, in one of which, "A Windy Day" there is little regard for values, is P. Connard who furnishes also a rather vulgar nude "Woman Rising from Bed." There is a sketch portrait in very poor proportion of a "Girl in a Hat," by A. E. John, among whose other contributions is a rather uninteresting "Two Romany Women."

W. Rothenstein shows beautiful color and very nice sentiment in a "Little Boy Lost." The eight contributions of Gerald Kelly are all well painted and excellent in local color. They are scenes in Burmah and Mandalay and include both figure and landscape. "The Round Pond," by W. Dacres Adams, is an attractive work solidly painted. He also shows the not so successful "Staircase." Clever but decidedly painty are the contributions of W. B. Rankin. They are a bright figure of a flower girl called "Flash Emma" and a three-figure genre, "Bribery and Corruption." There are two contributions, both vigorous works, by D. Y. Cameron, "Airds" and "Rocks of Kerrera." Others represented by oils are Harrington Mann, James Pryde, William Nicholson, J. Munnings, Francis Dodd, W. W. Russell, F. C. Cadell, and Charles Gere. The drawings and watercolors include some capital crayon studies by Orpen and notable landscapes by F. Dodd, A. W. Rich and Henry Tonks. Other names here are A. E. John P. F. Gethin, Rankin, P. Wilson Steer, Strang, A. A. McEvoy, Charles M. Gere, Russel Flint, Laura Knight, Munnings and Russell.

Modern Eccentricities at Macbeth's.

The Macbeth Galleries, 450 5th Ave., have fallen into the "Modernists" line, with a somewhat startling joint exhibition of paintings, drawings and sculptures by Arthur B. Davies, Walt. Kuhn and Jules Pascin. Mr. Davies, a man of much talent, who is always interesting even if he is not always commendable, is represented principally by a number of female nude drawings done in white chiefly on grey paper, which are often elegant and occasionally rather unusual in pose.

Mr. Kuhn, who shows considerable skill in some of the simplest of his drawings, is often unpleasantly realistic and even vulgar in his nudes. He has also several roughly effective portrait sketches in oil and a huge and uninteresting life size figure of a female mountebank. Mr. Pascin shows a number of tropical and sub-tropical scenes with figures in the Gaugin vein which are decidedly confused in effect, though evidencing artistic ability.

In another gallery are displayed a group of admirable landscape watercolors, suggesting Japanese inspiration, by Charles H. Pepper of Boston.

Colored Prints and Monotypes at Goupils.

There are now on view at the Goupil & Co. Galleries, 59 W. 45 St., a number of artistic landscape color prints and monotypes by Beatrice S. Levy, as well as some interesting monotypes in color by Marion G. Traver. Miss Levy is particularly successful in the color prints "Dancing Aspern of Lake Minnewaska," and the aquatint "A Mountain Pass near Banff." Of note also are "The Derelict" and "Vacant Lot."

Nathaniel Cobb at Folsoms.

Nathaniel Cobb, a painter of exceptional talent and refined and luxuriant imagination, has sent from Rome 13 paintings and several sketches in oil which are on view at the Folsom Galleries, 395 5th Ave., to Apr. 1. Mr. Cobb's works in technique are largely inspired by those of the XVI century Italian and much later Frenchmen and Englishmen, such as Watteau and Turner. The artist is an able colorist though some of his examples are almost duo or trichromatic and a number of his subjects are taken from classic and poetic legends. In "Cesare," evidently a Borgia and "La Princesse Prend l'Air," he has a capably painted portrait and genre, both fine in color and quality. "Cephalus and Procris" is well composed and remarkable for its perspective and distance. Two fine companion works show "La Duchesse, le Dieu, la Dryade, et le Dragon" and "Le Prince et la Peri." Other notable examples are "The Vintage" and "Dejanira."

Manigault at Daniels.

There is an interesting show at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., on to Apr. 11, of a dozen odd works in oil and watercolor by Middleton Manigault, who has just returned from ambulance service in France. The chief examples, built up with solidity, in the artist's usual peculiar yet artistic manner represents a scene, which has the now familiar title of "A Town in France." Several female figures appear in the "Adagio" which is hardly as successful as some of the artist's previous figure compositions. Two watercolors, however, "Durance" which shows apparently a slave and "Savages" are masterly. "Driver C" and "Cavalry Lines" are reminiscences of the writer's recent military experiences.

Drake Memorial Exhib'n on to Apr. 10.

The Alexander W. Drake memorial exhibition in the Stuart Gallery of the N. Y. Public Library has attracted so much attention, that it has been decided to extend the date of closing to Apr. 10.

Wolf Memorial Exhib'n in B'klyn.

The Print Dep't of the B'klyn Museum announces a Memorial Loan Exhib'n of the wood engravings of Henry Wolf to open to-morrow, to April 25. Over 200 examples of the artist's work will be shown, and the exhibit will be systematic and comprehensive, of the earlier, as well as the later, stages of his art.

To Give Phila. a Collection.

It is reported from Phila. that a collector, name not announced, has offered that city, through its Chamber of Commerce, an art collection valued at $1,000,000 provided a suitable building is erected. There are three great collections in Phila., those of the late P. A. B. Widener, to which his son to whom it was bequeathed has since added considerably, of John G. Johnson and that of the Elkins family.

Color Monotypes at Kennedy's.

There is now on view at Kennedy & Co., 613 Fifth Ave., an interesting display of 43 color monotypes by Clark Hobart, of Monterey, Cal. They are well composed and include figures and landscapes with and without figures. Among the subjects are "Colonial Ladies," "Impressionist Dance," "The Pool," "Evening Glow," "The Waterfall" and "The Beggar Woman."

For Benefit of Young Artists.

An exhibition of 55 paintings and sculptures, donated to the Society of the Friends of Young Artists for sale for its benefit, are on view at the former Blakeslee Galleries, 661 Fifth Ave. The notable group includes Mrs. H. P. Whitney's gifts of a bronze reduction of her "Caryatid Fountain" and a bronze "Head of a Spanish Peasant." C. S. Pietro sends among other examples "John Burroughs—Summit of the Years" and Sarah Morris Greene a "Laughing Faun." C. S. Paolo contributes a replica of his goat "Nanni," which also appears at the Academy, and A. Stirling Calder a "Virgin and Child." By the late Helen Farnsworth Mears there is a portrait in bas relief of her master, the late Augustus Saint Gaudens, and two seals are by Chester Beach.

Among the paintings is prominent a little girl's head called "Gypsy," by Robert Henri. J. Alden Weir sends a watercolor "Road to Chatham" and Cullen Yates "Autumn." J. Carroll Beckwith has "Christmas Night" and J. Montgomery Roosevelt "Cigarettes," and "Summer Days" is by Arthur Dawson and "The Storm Line" by Elliot Daingerfield. Others represented are Prince Pierre Troubetskoy, Augustus V. Tack, F. Luis Mora, Jonas Lie, S. K. Hesh, De Witt Parshall and Paul Swan. Various entertainments have been arranged during the exhibition.

Americans at Strauss'.

At the galleries of Mr. J. H. Strauss, 275 5th Ave., there are on view to Apr. 8, 16 works by American artists. By George H. Bogert there is a fine landscape, and George M. Bruestle shows a strikingly true effective "Summer Sunshine." "Grey Weather" is an unusually good example of the late F. K. Rehn; William A. Coffin has a tender "Morning" effect and Albert Groll a spacious view of the "Acama Valley, N. M." A spirited "Head of a Young Girl" is by W. M. Chase, and E. Irving Couse is represented by the "Water Shrine," a very good example. By J. F. Murphy there is a "Late September" landscape, and by Mrs. Murphy a nicely handled figure of a woman writing called "The Green Quill." Others represented are Guy C. Williams, Child Hassam, Henry Mosler, E. H. Potthast, F. Luis Mora, Alfred Hensby and M. J. Bloodgood.

Works by George Wright.

A most interesting artistic personality is George Wright, who shows at the Whitney-Richard Galleries, in the Holland House, 5th Ave. and 30th St., to Apr. 5, some 60 sketches and small pictures and watercolors. The smaller works, many of which are executed on both sides of the paper are chiefly taken from the artist's sketch book, and some of them appeared some years ago in Scribner's Magazine. They are capital colored impressions touched up with pen and ink. These include many quite inimitable Paris scenes, full of the bustle and movement of the streets and some views in other parts of France and in Germany. Among the watercolors are delicately artistic landscapes and various spirited views of Rothenburg, which reproduce scenes of the middle ages.

Miss Brumback's Pictures.

At the Petrus Stuyvesant Club, 129 East 10th St. the walls are graced by a number of charming canvases by Louise Upton Brumback. In one Gloucester picture the steeple of a quaint white church rises above the unpretentious houses, nestling among trees in their luxuriant summer garb and over the river, in the background, a mountain village gleams opalescent through a haze. In another one sees nature inert with a heavy mantle of snow. A road, running along the edge of a wood is shown and the atmospheric effect and play of light and shadow are admirable. Nocturnes and day time glimpses of Cos Cob, Gloucester, etc., are direct, frank bits of realistic painting, pleasing in color.

Blue Dome Display.

The current exhibitions at the Gamut Club, 69 W. 46th St., on to Apr. 5, consists of some 20 odd examples of work done by the Blue Dome Fellowship, of which Dewing Woodward is the president. Miss Woodward, herself shows several interesting works, in which nudes figure, and also a capital picture of a child playing with paper dolls. Florence Rolfe pictures "Winter at Shady" with success, and Lillian Whish has an attractive view of "The Brook" at the same place. "Altar Fires" and "Pipers" are credited to Louise Johnson. There is also a bright effect of afternoon sun by Helen F. Penniman, and Henry Albright besides a clever out-of-door nude has also a landscape called "Blue and Silver." Among others represented are Edmund and Florence Rolfe, Remington and Anne Schuyler, Beatrice Montzamber, and Sophia Schuyler Dey.

An Unusual Art Catalog.

The catalog of the 87 old and modern paintings by the Great Masters, owned by Mr. John Anderson, Jr., which are to be sold in the Plaza Ballroom on Thursday evening, April 6 next, following their exhibition at the American Art Galleries, to begin April 1, is an unusual one, in that the old and, it would seem, outworn custom of having a written perfunctory description of each canvas opposite the illustration of the same or even when a work is not illustrated, has been broken. The description of each painting in Mr. Anderson's collection is left to the reproduction and the note under each work's title, are limited to interesting and instructive statements relative to the painting itself and to its painter.

The catalog is an exceptionally handsome one, both in typography and illustrations, and is accompanied by an interesting and instructive series of monographs, written by Mr. Anderson himself, on the examples of Rembrandt, Raphael and Van Dyck in his collection.

R. Lamb, E. V. Meeks, and W. N. Taylor, chairman.

Early Engravings at Keppels.

The current exhibition at Frederick Keppel & Co., 4 E. 39 St., is of engravings of the early German and Italian schools. The former include examples of Schongauer, Durer, Van Meckenen, Van Leyden, Altdorfer, Behan, Barthel Hans, Zatzinger, Krug, Lautensack, Binck and Aldegraver. Among the latter are examples of Pol-laiuolo, Di Barbari, Da Ceseno, Mantegna, Andrea, Da Brescia, Da Modena, Veneziano, Da Ravenna and Campagnola.

WALKER'S "GETTYSBURG."

James Walker's canvas, "The Battle of Gettysburg," a work which required eight years to paint and which shows 25 square miles of the Gettysburg battlefield, is now on exhibit in Room 132 of the Senate Office Building in Wash'n. Congress is considering the purchase of the picture and depositing it in the Lincoln Memorial, now being erected on the Speedway.

OLD HOGARTH (?) ART SUIT UP.

The old suit of the trustee of the estate of Tomlinson & Humes, a former Chicago art firm, against Eli P. Clark for the possession of 12 oils attributed to Hogarth and said to be valued at $500,000, and which are now in a Los Angeles warehouse, has been taken on appeal from the Los Angeles district court to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"THE RIGHT TO CRITICISE."

Charles A. Kinney, graduate of the Chicago Art Institute, was arrested recently when he insisted that he had a right to enter the building against the orders of the guards. Kinney was dismissed from the institute some time ago for criticising its policies. He retaliated by publishing a book deriding those who had offended him and was then forbidden to enter the building again.

It is reported that Dr. Wilhelm Valentiner, who is still Curator of Decorative Arts at the Metropolitan Museum, although he has been serving with the German army since the outbreak of the war, is to succeed Dr. Wilhelm Bode, whose pupil he was, as Director of the Kaiser Frederick Museum at Berlin.

Some time ago Dr. Valentiner was ordered from Munich to duty at the War Office in Berlin. No confirmation of the report can be obtained from the Museum officials, as the ART NEWS goes to press.

GETS BORGLUM BRONZES.

Mr. Ralph Booth has donated a group of 6 bronzes by Solon H. Borglum to the Detroit Museum, and Mr. George G. Booth has made to the same institution an indefinite loan of 3 important bronzes by Paulanship.

Some 18 fine marines by William Ritschel are at the Museum to April 1. They are all representative examples of his strongest work.

Gari Melchers' religious canvas, "The Communion," owned by Cornell University, is also on view.

SARGENT COMING HERE.

A special cable to The World from London says that John S. Sargent, who for many years has been a resident here, has booked passage on the Nieuw Amsterdam for New York. It will be his first visit in several years, and the reason for it is the source of much speculation in the American colony in London.

MEXICAN ART EXHIBIT FOR N. Y.

The Mexican Carranza administration plans to hold in N. Y. City in March, 1917, an exhibit of Mexican art, music, architecture and allied works. While the Carranza troops are chasing Zapata and the U. S. troops Villa bandits, through the provinces, the office of bellas artes is canvassing the republic for composers, painters and draftsmen who may desire to present typical Mexican works.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

BLOT ON SPRING ACADEMY.

We are not only surprised, but amazed, that an artist of such standing and reputation as Sergeant Kendall should have sent to the current Spring Academy—and, with his privilege as an Academician, have had hung on the line—such a picture as that entitled
"The Sphinx" now on view in the Centre Gallery in the Fine Arts Building.

The fact of this picture's presence in the popular exhibition, through the old time and long adversely criticised Academician's privilege of having his works admitted to and hung at Academy displays—emphasizes strongly the need of the abrogation, or, at least, the modification of this old privilege. We firmly believe that no Academy Jury would have passed such a work or permitted its hanging had it been in their power to exclude it.

The fact that this repellant work —for it is nothing else—should have been shown without opposition at the last annual exhibition of the Art Institute in Chicago—a city in which the police "pulled" Chabas' pure and lovely "September Morn" as indecent—does not justify its acceptance in New York and especially by the old National Academy, which veteran Institution has hitherto always stood for the good in art and the elevation and education of the public art taste. The Academy, in fact, has hitherto been considered a "Custos Morum" as well as a Custos Artium."

The picture—we do not hesitate to say—and we are convinced that in this opinion we have the support of all true art lovers and right thinking people—is unworthy of the artist and of American art. It is not only suggestive in the extreme—but decadent in idea and conception. Far better that the Academy should exhibit the deformed figures that pass for human beings in the works of such so-called "modernists" as the Zorachs and some of their fellows, than to have admitted this canvas, degrading to the young, and false to every conception of the true and beautiful. And it is not a good work of art—the face is not well modelled, the values are not true and the pose is not only repulsive but almost impossible. And this from Sergeant Kendall —erstwhile a painter of pure mothers and children—and in whose former pictures a rare refinement of feeling and expression were their most delightful features. Was "The Sphinx", of course, inspired as to subject by Kipling's "Vampire," painted by Mr. Kendall and sent to the Academy in deference to the wave of so-called "new art" and new ideas that is now sweeping over the land in painting, sculpture, and even poetry, and to make a sensation?

HACKLEY GETS NEW PICTURES.

The Hackley Art Gallery, Muskegon, Mich., has added 5 canvases to its permanent collection, the result of Director Raymond Wyer's purchases at the recent Blakeslee sale at the American Art Galleries, N. Y.
These are: "Portrait of Young Lady," Clouet School; George Pencz's "Portrait of a Lady"; "Three Men" (fragment), by Van Den Eeckhout, and 2 sketches by William Orchardson.

THE BLAKELOCK MATTER.

It is paradoxical that the fact of pictures by the unfortunate American painter Blakelock having brought sensationally high prices at the recent Lambert sale, seems to have been necessary to direct the attention, even of the art public, to his condition, and the needs of his family. We have called the attention of our readers, from time to time during the past few years to the Blakelock case, but in this over-commercialized country and period, the appeal of high money figures to the public has alone, at last, influenced a movement of relief through certain channels for the artist who is not in need himself of creature comforts—all he can enjoy. The Artists' Fund Society has more wisely, and not so influenced by the high prices for Blakelocks of the sale, voted a monthly sum to Mrs.
Blakelock and her family.

Why would this not be a good time to start a movement, similar to that under way in France when the war came, for legislation that would compel the setting apart of a certain percentage of the sale price of artists' works, while living, for the support or benefit of their families or heirs after their death?

ALTMAN MEMLING ENDORSED.

Some aspersions upon the correctness of the attribution of the "Portrait of an Old Man" in the Altman collection in the Metropolitan Museum to Memling, having been recently published, it is interesting to know that the Museum authorities have a letter from no less an authority than Dr.
Freedlander of the Berlin Museum, attesting its authorship by the early Flemish master.

The picture, it would seem, is too well known to make reflections upon its authenticity at this late day either safe or wise. It was in the famous exhibition of old Flemish art at Bruges in 1902 and was then attributed to Van Eyck. Afterwards both Dr. Freed-lander, and Weale, another authority of repute, pronounced it a genuine ancien example of Memling.

"SUPERIOR"—NOT "INFERIOR."

The Linotype machine, especially when combined with careless or unintelligent proof reading, can cause more annoyance than any later human labor-saving invention. This machine, and inexplicable carelessness in proof reading, made us say last week in our story of the two interesting pictures by Terburg and Goya, that Mr. Charles P.
Taft has added to his choice collection in Cincinnati, that these were "inferior" examples of the painters. We can only hope that the context of the article enabled our readers to see that we intended to designate these fine works as "superior," not as "inferior"
examples.

Nicholas R. Brewer is showing 60 oils at the gallery of the Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Art Ass'n. There are portraits, figures, land and sea scapes.

Mr. Eugene Glaenger, of Jacques, Selig-mann & Co., left the Hospital this week after a severe operation, happily convalescent.

OBITUARY.

Henry Wolf.

Henry Wolf, the famous American wood engraver and member of the Academy of Design, died at his home in this city on March 18, in his 64th year. With the exception of his friend, Timothy Cole, he was the last of the great wood engravers of the modern American school, which flourished most luxuriantly over a quarter of a century ago. Mr. Wolf, whose death will be widely regretted, not only on account of the loss to art, but because of his many estimable personal traits, was born in Eck-wersheim, Alsace, and became a pupil of Jacque Levy, then a famous engraver at Strassburg. He came to this country in 1871 and soon became noted for his work, notably in Harper's and the Century magazines, and on the passing of the fashion of using his art for illustration, continued to produce blocks, proofs from which were eagerly sought by collectors. Among Mr.
Wolf's most notable blocks were a series of American artists, the portraits of Carlyle,

THE LATE HENRY WOLF

Lincoln, Joseph Jefferson, "The Evening
Star," "The Morning Star," "Morning
Mists," "The Duck Pond," "The Scattering of the Mists," "Evening," "Lower New York in a Mist" and "Swan Lake, Central Park." Mr. Wolf, who was a life member of the Lotus Club, was chosen in 1905 an associate of the National Academy and three years later was made a full member.
He also belonged to the American Federation of Arts, the London International Society of Sculptors, Engravers and Painters and the Paris Union Internationale des Beaux Arts et des Lettres. He was a member of the juries at the International Exposition in Paris in 1889, at Buffalo in 1901 and at St. Louis in 1904. At the French Salon in 1888 he received an honorable mention and at that in 1895 a gold medal.
At the Chicago Exposition in 1893 he was awarded a first class medal, received a silver medal in 1903 at Rouen, and a gold medal at St. Louis in 1904. He was awarded a grand prize at the Panama Pacific Exposition. Mr. Wolf is survived by his wife, who was Miss Rose Masee, and a son, Austin Wolf.

THE MARCH BURLINGTON.

The March number of the Burlington Magazine has for a frontispiece, a reproduction of Durer's india ink drawing of "The Brazen Serpent," in the collection of M. Eugene Rodrigues of Paris. This is accompanied by a short comparative criticism by Campbell Dodgson. Horatio R. F. Brown writes of Com. G. T. Rivoira's latest volume on Mussulman Architecture and Edward Speyer of the portraits of "Mozart at the National Gallery" and elsewhere.
S. Squire Quigg, M. D., concludes his remarks on "Art and Medicine" and Amanda Coomaraswamy the discussion of the Buddhist Primitives. Hamilton Bell tells of Mr. C. L. Rutherford's Chinese bronzes and Sir Martin Conway gives an account of the "Mrs. Grundy of Furnes," who was Alienor Vicom-tesse de Furnes, daughter of a maid of honor of Isabella of Portugal, third wife of Duke Philip the Good. Walter Sickert discusses "The True Futurism" and holds that art systems and theories are generally disastrous in practice. The Burlington may be had of James B.
Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

LONDON LETTER.

London, March 15, 1916.

In addition to the Meyer-See case which has now been decided definitely in favor of the plaintiff, though no costs were allowed, there have lately been several instances in which the affairs of the art-dealing world have occupied the attention of the Courts. One of these was the action brought against Messrs. Agnew for the recovery of the sum of 1,000 guineas alleged to be due on account of an introduction effected on their behalf in regard to a Gainsborough portrait of Mrs. Annie Horton. This picture was bought by the firm in question for the sum of 10,000 guineas but the defendants denied that its purchase was due to the plaintiff's intervention, the original negotiations having fallen through and the picture being subsequently offered to other persons. It was not until a couple of years later that Messrs. Agnew actually purchased the painting, another individual then acting as intermediary. The judge's decision was that the plaintiff had failed to prove "efficient cause" of the selling of the picture, and accordingly gave judgment in favor of Messrs. Agnew. This ruling is of particular interest to the trade, for cases of this character are by no means rare. The judge held, very justly, that had he decided in favor of the plaintiff, it would have implied that an introduction of the kind having once been effected, the party so introduced could never after effect purchase without making payment of commission.

Another case of litigation was involved by an action brought by Mr. Albert Amor against Baron de Forest for some £1,000 said to be due for professional services in regard to the purchase of works of art on commission, the valuing and cataloging of the Baron's silver and old furniture, as well as in connection with the supposed robbery of certain works of art afterwards found to be reposing in the Baron's safe. The Baron is disputing the charges made by Mr. Amor in regard to the various items as unfair and unreasonable, but the hearing has now been adjourned. The charge made for the cataloging of the silver plate, which was valued at a total of £10,750, was calculated at 1%.

Still another case, which is not without interest to the art-world, is that in which the proprietors of "Punch" sue a music-hall agent for infringement of copyright in reproducing, by means of stage tableaux, certain well known cartoons which have appeared in their pages, notably Sir John Tenniel's famous "Dropping the Pilot." Judgment was entered for "Punch" with costs.

Pennell Exhibition.

Joseph Pennell, who I understand, has determined to take up his abode once more in America, forsaking the London which has shown him so much appreciation, has an interesting exhibition at the Leicester Gallery of drawings and lithographs of "Germany at Work," made before the outbreak of the War, while the artist was arranging the Anglo-American section of the Leipzig Exhibition. During those months he made many sketches in the dockyards, steel works, and coal mines and even in Krupp's works at Essen, opportunities which gave him material for depicting that inherent romance which he knows so well how to develop in themes which are derived from labor and industry. Pennell is, perhaps, a little inclined to overinsist upon the wonder and beauty of his subject and to sacrifice strength to mere picturesqueness; still, the show is an impressive one even though it cannot be said to contain work that can be fitly called the artist's best. But it is not altogether easy to sympathize with the point of view of the artist when he asserts that an erection of steel and iron is finer than any mediaeval castle and that a cathedral is less beautiful than a shipyard! Indeed, his judgment appears just now to be a little ill-balanced, the vast proportion of Germany's activities in regard to labor apparently overshadowing for him the merits to be found in manifestations of energy on a less gigantic scale.

New Christopher Wren Rooms.

An interesting discovery has been made in the neighborhood of Fleet Street where several rooms, undoubtedly designed by Sir Christopher Wren, are found to be still extant, although it was generally believed that the last vestige of the great architect's work hereabouts had long since been destroyed by fire. These rooms, which belong to a house in Crane Court, are remarkable for the rich beauty of their ceilings, which bear deep flowered mouldings surrounding handsome panelling carried out in heavy plaster, and so elaborate in conception as to suggest the idea that they may have been originally designed in preparation for some more important work. The building is now used as a publisher's storeroom.

CHICAGO.

The exhibition of prints of various kinds under the auspices of the Chicago Society of Etchers, at the Art Institute attracts throngs of visitors. Three of Timothy Cole's fine wood block reproductions of "The Pearl Necklace," "The Lace Maker," and a copy of Seymour Thomas' portrait of President Wilson, are loaned to the show by the Brotherhood of Chicago Engravers.

The Palette and Chisel Club is showing 44 oils by St. Louis artists, among which the examples of E. H. Wuerpel and O. E. Berninghaus are the best. Wuerpel's "Gray Afternoon," and "Opalescent Mist," Berninghaus "Taos," "Trail of the Wagon Train," and "The Tribe's Scout," Paul Berdanier's "A Winter Afternoon," Tom Barnett's "Moonrise," Carl Waldeck's "Ozark Farmer," Arthur Mitchell's "Autumn," F. R. Neuman's "Old Churchyard," Mrs. Cherry's "White House," Kissack's "South Window," Charles Gault's "Japanese Holiday," Frank B. Nuderscher's "Breath of Spring," F. G. Carpenter's "Decorative Figure," and W. J. Lonergan's "Merlyn," all demand notice.

Director Carpenter of the Art Institute and Carl N. Wertz of the Academy of Fine Arts are staging an exhibit of applied design of dress-art evolved by The Fashion League of America at the Blackstone Hotel. Mr.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Art Club opened its 22nd Annual Exhibition, now open to Apr. 9, and has 103 oils. Many excellent American landscapes by painters of the standing of young Garber, Farley, Nichols, Miss Ball, Wagner, Redfield, are to be seen, and there are portraits such as of John Huneker, by Rittenberg (quite the strongest work in that class), "Two Boys," by Alice K. Stoddard, clever, but a bit careless, a charming little girl, and of "Evelyn Yerkes," by Leopold Seyffert, who also contributes a portrait of Miss Frazier, equally good. Every man with real red blood in him will appreciate the charm of Louis Kronberg's ballet girls, "L'Habileuse," and "Before the Dance," and mysterious beauty is seen in Charles Rosen's "Veiled Sunlight," and Cesare Ricciardi's "Moonlight." Joseph T. Pearson shows a decorative landscape "Spring," treated in a way peculiar to himself yet most interesting and beautiful in tonality.

The watercolors and pastels at the Sketch Club number 88 and are arranged mainly in groups of the principal exhibitor's work,

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Mar. 15, 1916.

A most pathetic exhibition of art was opened this week at the Petit Palais in the Champs-Élysées. The collection consists of relics of the devastated cities of Belgium, but chiefly of Ypres. The great oaken door of the Market Hall is there. It was recently saved under German bombardment by a Belgian named Dhucque, who got some soldiers to aid him in the perilous work. Some of the statues shown are tinged with a peculiar green, said to be due to the effect of gases emitted by exploding bombs. There are some beautiful XVII century choir-stalls, all that remains of the superb interior furnishings of the cathedral of Saint-Martin at Ypres.

On of the most emphatic commentaries upon the spirit of the French nation in the most fearful crisis of its history is the Triennial Exposition in the Tuileries gardens. The soldiers of the Motherland are fighting within a hundred miles of Paris, but French civilians, those who are incapacitated from bearing arms, neither lose their composure nor abandon the normal objects of their existence. The walls of the old tennis hall on one of the Tuileries terraces bear witness to this. Here is full evidence that the artists of France still bravely stick to their hopes and their ideals. France is creating art, while Germany is destroying it. This is the proud note of the French press in contemplating this marvellous manifestation of energy and fortitude.

The pictures and sculptures exposed may be said to be a message from those who lead the esthetic movements in French life to their countrymen, both on the fighting line and in the rear or the war zone. For the French soldiers follow with keen interest all that takes place in France.

The Triennial Salon.

The Triennial is strikingly free from pictures of war, either symbolical or realistic. It is representative of normal life. There is evidence everywhere, nevertheless, of grater gravity of effort than could be noted in the principal Salons before the war, an absence of frivolity and a sane lack of ultra cynicism and decadent sensuousness. Certain artists who before made their chief appeal through such a medium, now seem to disdain it.

The exhibits that give text to most discussion are unquestionably those of Renoir, Degas and Marquet. Renoir shows a bronze "Venus Victorieuse," of godlike dimensions, which is one of the few specimens of his work in sculpture that the public has ever had the opportunity of seeing. This and his large canvas, "Eurydice," ought to be judged together. I know sensible artists who profess the greatest admiration for both, but I think that even a tyro can without difficulty discover their faults. The Venus is wonderfully strong in modelling, but totally lacking in ideality. It seems passing strange that a great artist should take a woman of a coarse popular type to reflect his conception of the acme of feminine beauty. In the Eurydice there is a seemingly naive disregard of the canons of design. But the modelling and the color are still such as have given Renoir his fame. How much of the faultiness of his present work is to be attributed to the pitiless rheumatism that has made it a martyrdom for him to work at the easel I am unable to say.

Degas, the most modest of really great artists, has two figures which impress one with a penetrating sense of their living entity. The propriety and sobriety of the coloring are also a convincing element. Albert Marquet's single nude is one of the most remarkable pictures that have been seen in Paris for a long time. It is one of the few works of its kind that impart a feeling that there is solid flesh, not merely paint-smearing canvas, behind the vivid skin to which the artist has given a daring, yet a thoroughly natural, luminosity. The pose is bold, almost audacious, yet the picture on the whole has the cold finality, the esthetic absolutism, of a Greek drama; and vulgar and prudish censure of it would fail.

Besnard does not shine in the small canvases which he has sent from Rome, "La Chambre Ardente du jeune Bruno Garibaldi." It is valuable solely as a study in color and tonality. As a picture it is too confused and too ultra-impressionist. La Gandara's frozen figure-portraits are as lifeless, as much like fashion plates as ever. The one landscape by Harpignies is in his poorest manner. Le Sidaner has a view of Trafalgar Square which reveals the ultimate possibilities of the pointillé method of painting. René Ménard's landscapes, well described as having a Virgilian quality, and those of Maurice Chabas, also suggestive of the pastoral poetry of the ancients, are very fresh and

MAVERICK FOLK FEAST
Dewing Woodward

At the Blue Dome Fellowship.

Werntz arranged an exhibition of this kind at the South Shore Country Club, also. Mr. Werntz has developed a department at the Academy for the training of students in drawing and coloring costumes.

Portraits, landscapes and marines by Christian Abrahamson are on view at a local gallery and include the portrait of Frank Baackes from the Institute show, and portrait sketches of Lillian Westerland, Elizabeth Holland, Helen Taylor, Melba Kinsman, Jans Janson and Dr. Bauback. A full length portrait of Max Kramm is well painted as are also those of Louise and Mary Fenton. The portrait of N. V. Lindsey with face unlifted is attractive. Abrahamson is one of the younger local artists, and some six years ago his work at the Students' League's show attracted attention and since that time he has grown rapidly in the quality of his art, and his work appears in the important exhibitions of the larger cities.

There's a collection of lithographs, in colors from Belgian villages, French towns, and from Paris, all of the famous period environing 1830, at a local gallery.

Royal H. Milleson has sent a collection of his paintings, by request, to Las Vegas, New Mexico, for exhibition in the Commersuch as Fred Wagner (6), Herbert Welsh (6), E. S. Clymer's (8), J. J. Dull (6), and M. W. Zimmerman (5).

Some 113 works in color carried out in varying media, make up the 19th annual exhibition of the Plastic Club now on to Apr. 2. One of the best portraits shown is of Miss Nina B. Ward by Henriette L. Stadelman. As Miss Ward is a clever portrait painter herself, the picture has a double interest. Two figures, well painted by Mary Audubon Post entitled "The Blue Door: Holland," command attention as do some cleverly painted flowers by Edith M. Mann.

The Penn'a Academy has purchased from the current annual exhibition for its permanent collection, W. H. K. Yarrow's "Orchard," Martha Walter's "Portrait of Dorothy Lee Bell," and Karl Anderson's "The Heirloom."

"Leila," by Alice Kent Stoddard, a local artist, has been awarded the $100 Fellowship Prize at the Penn'a Academy exhib'n.

George Demetrios, a 17-year old student, has won the Edmund Stewardson prize of $100 in gold for sculpture at the current Academy display. He has been in this country only four years.

"The very nature of Painting saves it from the usual defects of Poetry, its sister art. In lyric painting the emotion is either caught or missed. For pigments, unlike words, will not easily permit the high mood of the moment to degenerate into a morose, or to overflow into reminiscence, or to rise into a formless and variegated cloud-bank of prophetic postulate."

INDIANAPOLIS.

The ninth annual exhibition of "Works by Artists of Indiana," is now on at the John Herron Art Institute and sets a new standard for Indiana artists. It contains 197 paintings, 25 sculptures and 40 examples of the applied arts.

The J. Irving Holcomb Prize, of $100 offered by Mr. J. Irving Holcomb of Indianapolis, for a painting of special excellence in the exhibition, was awarded to Wayman Adams for his "Portrait of Alexander Ernestinoff," shown in the 1914 exhibition of the Academy of Design and there received the Thomas R. Proctor prize.

The Art Institute, in order to encourage Indiana artists, has appropriated $100 to be known as "The Art Association Prize." Three paintings recommended by the Jury-Committee for this prize and to each of which was awarded an hon. mention, are "The Visitor," by Katherine H. Wagenhals of Ft. Wayne; "Evening Flowers," by Olive Rush of N. Y.; a small charming Goya-like study of a child in a white dress; and a watercolor entitled "Windy Day, Rockport Harbor," by Herman H. Wessel of Cincinnati. From these three paintings the Fine Arts Committee of the Association will select the one to receive the prize, upon which the painting will become the property of the Association.

BOSTON.

Notwithstanding the Lenten season, Boston's meal of art has been a varied one the past week, with many foreign dishes added. The full-course dinner is the Swedish Exhibit in Copley Hall. To actually see the pictures at these Copley Exhib'ns, one always goes a second time. Boston was not aroused to enthusiasm by this display. Not that it is a bad showing but it lacks distinction. One is struck by the large size of many of the paintings, evidently made for exhibition purposes only. Snow under all aspects, sunsets, midnight scenes, moonlight and afterglow—all are here, on a big, declaratory scale. It represents the "obvious in art."

At a local gallery, New England's own product, Dodge MacKnight, now has his annual showing. Brilliant work this—dashing, gallantly done—from the hard and dazzling coldness of his New England snow scenes to the splendid, rioting color and strange, almost startling shapes and forms of his Grand Cañon series. But is nature really as freakish as this?

The Guild of Boston Artists' exhibit at the Museum is so excellent that it continues to grieve and irritate the narrow-minded croakers, who cannot believe that anything local can be good. At the Guild's own galleries, William James, son of the late distinguished psychologist, has opened a "one-man" show. He paints in a broad, lucid manner, with youthful courage and ambition.

Old American portraits, gathered by that enthusiast, Mr. Frank Bayley, are at the Copley Galleries.

There are examples of the works of Copley, Sully, West, Pratt, Feke, Smibert, Blackburn, Badger, Johnston, Savage, Henry Sargent, Williams, Greenwood and others—a list which embraces the names of some interesting painters but little known today. With one exception, the collection is entirely composed of pictures never before publicly exhibited. They are all loans, and most of them come from local private collections. The gallery presents a distinguished appearance, and is well arranged with furniture belonging to the period of the paintings. The exhibition is to remain open until April 8.

Thomas Sully's fine portrait of Sarah Bringham Dunant is one of the notable pictures in the exhibition, and represents him at his best. Other important canvases are John S. Copley's "Portrait of Mrs. Judge Vinal"; Robert Feke's self-portrait and his "Portrait of Mrs. Charles Apthor." John Smibert's two portraits; a fine "Nathaniel Cunningham," by Jonathan Blackburn; four works by Joseph Badger; a portrait of Samuel Dexter of Dedham by John Johnston; two portraits by Edward Savage; a "Portrait of Polly Allen," by Benjamin West, and portraits by Henry Williams, Ethan Allen Greenwood and Henry Cheeves Pratt—which will be noticed more at length next week.

TOLEDO.

The much-talked of "Moonlight," by Ralph Blakelock, sold for $20,000 at the recent Lambert sale in New York, has been hung in the permanent collection of the Museum. As the Museum has no funds with which to buy paintings, the canvas was not purchased by this institution, but by Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Libbey, who presented it to the Museum.

Three important exhibitions will be on view in the transient galleries of the Museum during the current month, the first, a group of 12 examples by the American artists Gifford Beal, W. J. Glackens, Hayley Lever, Paul Daugherty, George Bellows, Child Hassam, W. Elmer Schofield, Ernest Lawson, Wm. M. Chase, Robert Henri, Gardner Symons and J. Alden Weir; the second, a collection of 24 paintings by George Elmer Browne, and the third, a rare collection of book-plates from the Winifred and Leroy Truman Goble collection of Chicago.

The exhibit of landscapes by John F. Carlson at the Mohr Galleries during the first 2 weeks of Mar. created an unusual amount of interest. Three out of 22 canvases were sold: "Woodland Pool," "Waning Snows," and "Silent Woods." The last half of Mar. at the galleries will be occupied by a coll'n of watercolor portraits of children, the work of Elinor M. Barnard of London. At a private exhibit in his studio Thos. S. Parkhurst sold his landscapes entitled: "Dutch Canal," "June Days," and "Autumn in the Berkshire Hills."

CLEVELAND.

Robust impressionism, strong color values and sincerity in his treatment of the seafaring French peasants who figure largely in his paintings, are the chief characteristics of the first homecoming exhibition of Alexander Waishawsky. For nearly three years this ardent "modernist" has been away from his home here and a warm welcome was tendered him on his arrival at the School of Art with the display of his canvases.

Mr. Cheshire L. Boone of the Macbeth Galleries, N. Y., has a fine collection of modern American art at the Gage Galleries. Hawthorne's "Annunciation," Ivan Olin's figure piece "The Statuette"; Richard Miller's portrait of his wife, "Waiting"; Robert Henri's "Spanish Girl" and marines by Dougherty, Waugh and Carlsen and landscapes by Ben Foster, Chauncey Ryder, Ballard Williams and Henry Ranger are among the noteworthy canvases shown.

Originals by Leon Bakst will be shown at the Korner and Wood Gallery next week. Watercolors by Onorato Carlandi, leading modern Italian painter, are hung there at present and include old Roman gardens and ruins, Italian villas and other characteristic scenes rich in color and atmosphere.

Mr. Max Spero, N. Y. illustrator, who has been winning success as a portraitist in that city and Chicago, has returned to Cleveland for a time to execute several commissions.

Jessie C. Glasier.

RICHMOND, IND.

William M. Chase of N. Y. will probably be the guest of honor of the Richmond Art Association at the formal reception and dedication of Chase's self-portrait, painted especially for the Association, in the High School Art Gallery about April 15. Mr. Warner Leeds, also of New York, who was born and reared here and who has agreed to pay half the purchase price of the Chase picture ($500) will also be a special guest of the Association on that evening.

Grand Canon to sketch before his return. He has had a successful winter in New York painting portraits and also sold some nocturnes and landscapes.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cotton are spending this month in Bermuda. They will return to their studio, 1 W. 64 St., early in April.

Charles Naegele, son of the portrait painter, has recently won a competition over a number of young musicians to play at a concert April 30 with The Young Men's Symphony Orchestra.

Everett Warner has taken a studio for the present at 33 West 67 St., where he will remain until the summer when he will probably return to Lyme, Conn.

Recent portraits by Francisco Pausas are a full length of Tamaki Mura, the Japanese Prima Donna, a faithful presentation of Mrs. R. Penfield, and a remarkable portrait of Maria Guy, as Carmen, in which he has caught an excellent likeness. It is rich in color and full of character. A striking presentation of Miguel Llobet, the famous guitarist, is also shown at his studio.

C. Arnold Slade's "one man" show of 66 varied canvases is on at the Swain School of Design, New Bedford, Mass., until April 1.

Gustave Wiegand is at 44 West 96 St., where he has painted several of his attractive landscapes, snow pictures and moonlights. He has had a successful winter, having sold several paintings to prominent collectors.

Robert Vonnoh plans to go to Lyme, Conn., within a few weeks to remain for some months, to paint a number of pictures, for exhibition.

Walter Griffin has taken Paul Bartlett's studio at 400 West 23 St. for a time, where he will show a group of his recent work—watercolor, oil and pastel.

Glenn Newell has taken a studio in the Vandyck where he will paint until the late Spring when he will return to his studio at Glenn Ridge, Conn. He shows a number of fine landscapes and cattle pieces, the result of his summer and autumn's work.

Chester Hayes spent the winter in Toledo, Ohio, where he has been painting portraits. He also painted a large decoration for an important club in that city.

Irving R. Wiles has recently completed a portrait of Mr. Daniel Barnes, president of the Seamen's Bank for Savings—a dignified painting, full of strong character and able brushwork. At his studio, 130 W. 57 St. he is at work upon an unusually interesting portrait of Miss L. Silvey. The color scheme is browns and blues. The sitter, who is a charming blonde, reclines gracefully on a sofa. The composition is individual and the whole work expressive of the culture and usual good taste of the artist. Next week he will go to Rochester to complete the portrait of Mr. L. N. Stein.

Mrs. George G. Trask, a relative of the late Spencer Trask, is holding an exhibition of California subjects at her studio, 140 W. 46 St. The paintings are done with great sympathy and understanding of the subject. Mrs. Trask spent considerable time during the past year in the far west and her work shows thought and skill. It includes oils, watercolors and pastels, and the subjects are records of street scenes in San Francisco, landscapes, Scenes from the Panama Exposition, Dock Scenes, the Canyon and various mountain subjects.

34 Nordell Oils in Buffalo.

Carl J. Nordell is showing 34 landscapes and portraits at the Guild of Allied Arts exhibition in the Little Gallery, Buffalo. Among these may be mentioned, "In the Forest of Fontainebleau," "A Brittany Landscape," "Luxembourg Gardens," "The Fishing Fleet, Concarneau," "A Paris Market Woman" and "Girl in Black."

Rare Egyptian Painting.

There is now on view at the Gothic Gallery, 15 E. 40 St., a rare Egyptian painting on linen, one of the most notable ever brought to this country. The work has already been sold but the former owner, Mr. G. Aharonian, has received permission to exhibit it for several weeks. The painting, which some claim is of the Ptolemaic period and others of the Coptic period, the 1st and 2nd centuries, A. D., represents an Egyptian deity, who is surrounded by all the symbolical gods and goddesses of Egypt. The background is of greyish white and the coloring of the figure is very artistic, the torso being rose colored, while the arms and breast are of golden yellow. The face which is apparently not the original one, has both black eyes and eyebrows. In size the painting is quite unusual, being 6 ft. 2 in. in height and 3 ft. 6 in. in width.

Mr. John Shelton Eland of London has completed portraits of several Cleveland society folk, including Mrs. Parmely Herrick and two sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Palmer. Mr. E. Hodgson Smart of London, whose "Lady in Black" won him a commission to paint King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra, has opened a portrait studio here and has completed a portrait of Very Reverend H. P. Alman Abbott, dean of Trinity Cathedral.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

Charles Hoffbauer, the gifted young French painter, who spent several successful seasons in this country where he made many warm friends, and where his art was much appreciated, all of which he sacrificed to fight for France, writes from the trenches that he is in good health and spirits.

Albert P. Lucas is spending several weeks on the Pacific Coast. He will visit the

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

THE ARTISTIC ANATOMY OF TREES.

—By Rex Vicat Cole, 8vo, J. B. Lippincott & Co., Phila., $1.75 net.

The impetus given to geological and botanical study for landscapers by Ruskin in his "Modern Painters," which had notable results in the early work of Sir John Millais and Holman-Hunt, is comprehended by this new volume by a British painter, whose purpose springs from a "worship of nature, an enthusiasm for art, and a love of truth which should help to check excesses." As might be expected in the work of an English author, Ruskin's hero Turner is relied upon to furnish glowing examples of tree form treatment. Indeed Turner's "Blair Athol" from the "Liber Studiorum" supplies the frontispiece, and a fine reproduction of his "Bay of Bale, Apollo and the Sibyl," is included among the illustrations of the text.

Other British landscape masters represented are the "pioneer" English classicist, Richard Wilson, "Venus and Adonis," Gainsborough, "Wood Scene—Village of Cornard, Suffolk," which has a remarkable compositional anticipation of Th. Rousseau, Gainsborough ("Market Cart"); "Old Crome" ("Poringland Oak"); Constable ("Valley Farm"); John Linnell ("Wood-Cutters"), and Creswick ("Village Church Pathway").

The modern Britishers who furnish examples are Sir Alfred East, David Murray, George Clausen, Hughes Stanton, Adrian Stokes, Mark Fisher, Sir E. A. Waterlow, Cecil Lawson, Vicat Cole, R. A.; and the author. The Continental masters, whose landscapes further exemplify the author's conscientious studies are Giorgione, whose "Judgment of Solomon," contains a fine classical landscape; Rubens, Guercino, the inevitable Claude Lorraine ("Marriage of Isaac and Rebecca"); Gaspar Poussin, Rembrandt, Salvator Rosa, Sebastian Bourdon, Jan Both, Van der Neer, Hobbema (the famous "Avenue, Middleharnis"); Adam Pynacker and Watteau. The Barbizon men Corot, Diaz, Troyon, Dupre and Rousseau, are also drawn upon for examples.

These illustrations are mentioned specifically because they constitute a valuable portion of the book. The author's own drawings are numerous and give point to his analyses of various species. His chapters on the "influence of buds," "How a tree is built up," and "The position, form and texture of leaves," are admirably handled, and show the results of much painstaking and patient study.

The appendices dealing with the indigenous and introduced trees of England and the distribution of trees in Europe contain also a lengthy and valuable bibliography. Such a book cannot be too highly commended. It encourages a deeper study of nature than the ordinary landscape painter imposes upon himself. Some of our smart American landscapers might do well to peruse this volume, for the book emphasizes anew the fact that the most "artistic" and apparently licentious of the great outdoor painters had a basis of scientific knowledge of nature's creations. One need not be pedant to acquire an intimate knowledge of at least the most majestic of the marvels "that seem," as Ruskin said, "perpetually to tempt our watchfulness and take delight in outstripping our wonder."

CATALOG DE LUXE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF FINE ARTS—PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION, 1915-16. Edited by John E. D. Trask and J. Nielsen Laurvik. San Francisco, Paul Elder & Co. Quarto, two volumes.

This sumptuous de luxe edition of the Catalog of the Fine Arts Department at the recent Panama-Pacific Exposition has an unusually well written and appreciative introduction by Fine Arts Director Trask, concluding with some well chosen and appropriate verses, and which prepares the way for a series of briefer and longer essays, chiefly by J. Nielsen Laurvik on early and modern American Art and that of most of the various nations represented by exhibits in the Fine Arts Departments, and on the dozen or more American artists who were honored by special rooms.

While Mr. Laurvik writes intelligently and appreciatively on the whole, there is entirely too much from his pen in the work, and it suffers therefore from a certain monotony of impression and expression. Mr. Laurvik's sympathy for new "modes" of painting is scarcely sufficient justification for his essaying to write about early American art, of which he evidently has little intimate "first-hand" knowledge. True enough, the Exposition was not particularly strong in its display of early American art, and the average reader will likely pay little attention to the conventional "twitter" anent Benjamin West, Copley and Gilbert Stuart which accompanies illustrations of their works. The extraordinary weakness of the group of works by native "old masters" shown at the Exposition—Copley being represented by the more than questionable portrait of "Mrs. Powell" alone, a surprising blunder—although not by any means indicative of weakness in the whole collection, is unfortunate.

A great American exposition which does less than justice to the interesting beginnings of American art cannot hope to command the completest respect. The sense of lost opportunity in this case is rendered even more poignant when one recalls that 1915 was the centennial of Copley's death, when something in the nature of a memorial loan display of his American portraiture should have proven a feature of the Exposition's fine art department.

We might easily have been spared the view of many of the too-often displayed canvases of some of our "smart" contemporaries, whose facile accomplishments mean nothing in the big scheme of the world's art. There is novelty at least in the work of Duveneck, old as it is; indeed, even more might have been made of it in this catalog. The treatment of Whistler—the one universal figure in XIX century art to whom America can lay any claim—is distinctly inadequate. Neither does Sargent get his due, nor Winslow Homer. But the little wheedlings, as usual, are paraded in pomp.

James Britton.

PROVIDENCE.

On March 14th, a joint exhibition of paintings by F. Usher De Voll, Angela O'Leary, Hope Smith and Wm. H. Drury opened at the Art Club. Mr. De Voll's subjects are for the most part street scenes and views along the waterfront in New York City and Providence. "Winter in New England" and "In Old Quebec" are excellent. Miss O'Leary shows about forty water-colors of decorative quality in which quaint and dilapidated old buildings and tumble down rookeries are the motive and several studies of bridges.

Miss Smith has about a score of broadly painted pictures of market places, street scenes, coal pockets and winter landscapes. Mr. Drury is especially well represented with a series of ocean pictures—the result of a recent trip to Bermuda.

At Tilden and Thurber Co.'s original color etchings are on view. "Island of the Swan" is a choice example of G. de Latenay and the several examples of J. Aphege Brewer are excellent. "Antwerp," "Dieppe," and "Malines" by this artist are of interest not alone for their subjects, but for their color as well.

W. Alden Brown.

MINNEAPOLIS (MINN.)

An exhibition, unique and practical, is now on at the Museum, consisting of a wall paper display, most designed to show good and bad designs. Each example bears a label explaining why it has the desirable quality, or lacks that merit.

In the recent competitive poster contest for "Baby Week," three posters, designed by the students of the Fine Arts School, won the cash prizes. Four other schools entered the contest. Miss Mary Moulton Cheney is in charge of this department of designs, and the poster work in other exhibition has become quite noted.

The gift of $25,000 for a new building for the Art School, given by Mrs. John Vanderlip and her brother Dr. Angus Morrison, has been increased to $50,000 and work on the structure will be begun in the spring. On account of the demand for instruction in etching, Mr. Gustav F. Goetsch, the principal, has formed a class in this branch of art.

The gift of two important pictures to the Museum has just been announced by Director Breck. One, a large landscape, by G. Michel, from the recent Lambert sale presented by Mr. J. J. Hill; the second is the Martin Koon Memorial collection by Mrs. C. C. Rovey and her sister Mrs. C. D. Velie, a twilight scene in the Luxembourg gardens, by John S. Sargent, painted for his friend, Architect McKim.

Messrs. E. H. Wuerpel, Director of the St. Louis Fine Arts School, and Charles H. Browne, landscape artist of Chicago, were the two artists outside of Minnesota who formed the Jury of Awards in St. Paul for the artists' exhibit of six western States.

The gold medal awarded by the St. Paul Institute, designed by Paul Manship, and presented by J. J. Hill, was won by Miss Elsa Lavbach, of St. Paul, for a portrait. Among other winners of medals were Geo. F. Burr, of Denver, an etching; Mabel Kev, Milwaukee, watercolor; Mrs. Gertrude J. Barnes, Minneapolis, oil study "Peonies." M. C. Wells.

ART SALES IN HOLLAND.

The first art auctions of importance anywhere on the continent since the outbreak of the war, are announced to take place at the galleries of Frederick Muller & Co. in Amsterdam—the first of the well known collection of pictures formed by the late W. J. Van Randwijk of the Hague, and the second that of the also well known Rosenfeld-Goldschmidt collection of XV-XVIII century French and Flemish tapestries and bronzes, ivories, enamels, Italian and German faïences, fans, etc., together with a few pictures, and which is to be held May 9-12 inclusive, in two sessions, morning and afternoon on each day.

The ART NEWS has received the catalogs of these most important and interesting sales. That of the Randwijk collection is a large and exceptionally handsome volume, with beautiful plates of the principal pictures to be sold, which include some admirable examples of Blommers, Boshoom, Breiter, Israels, Corot, Dupre, Daubigny, Jacque, Millet, Neuhuys, Mauve, Jongkind, Jacob and William Maris and Troyon.

This sale should specially interest American dealers as the 37 pictures are of exceptional quality. The catalog, can be examined at the ART NEWS' office and orders will be received by the ART NEWS, to be sent by cable. The details of the Rosenfeld-Goldschmidt collection, in which the tapestries are exceptionally fine, will be given later. The handsome catalog of this collection can also be seen at the ART NEWS office.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Huntington-Bixby-Church Rarities.

Duplicates and selections from the famous libraries of Messrs. Henry E. Huntington of New York, and William K. Bixby of St. Louis, and books on early English literature from the library of the late E. Dwight Church of Brooklyn, are on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries. These great rarities are to be sold in five afternoon and evening sessions beginning Wednesday aft. next. Mr. Huntington was the largest buyer at the Hoe Library sale, and since then has bought four great libraries, so that he has accumulated a large number of duplicates, which must be sold to make room for additional purchases. Mr. Bixby has one of the largest autograph collections in the U. S. and in a letter to the Anderson Galleries says:

"During a long period of collecting, I have acquired some duplicate books, many Mss. by the same authors, and many autographs by the same writers, until the room in which I keep them has been crowded to overflowing. To obtain more space, I have sent a large quantity of literary material to you for sale."

Mr. Huntington's consignment consists mainly of XIV century English colored plate books. Some of the rarest and finest editions of books, illustrated by Alken, Cruikshank, Egan and Rowlandson are in the collection, and while many are in the original binding, others have been bound in sumptuous style. Later on, duplicates from other divisions of his great collection will be sold.

Mr. Bixby's consignment consists of some rare books, and a large number of autograph letters and Mss. of distinguished authors. The most valuable of the Mss. are Fiske's "Discovery of America," consisting of more than a thousand pages, bound in three quarto volumes, and Charles Reade's "The Cloister and the Hearth," bound in four volumes. The former is one of the most important of American Mss. and the latter is regarded by many critics as the greatest of all English historical novels.

Among other authors represented by Mss. are James, Dumas, Hawthorne, Irving, Kipling, Lamb, Poe, Scott, Tennyson and Thoreau, but there are a hundred others. Lamb's Common Place Book, consisting of seventy-seven pages in his autograph, and unpublished letters and poems by Lamb, two copies of Burns' Poems each with corrections and additions in his autograph, and two copies of each of Mr. Bixby's privately printed books are in the collection. There are hundreds of autograph letters by the great soldiers, statesmen, and authors of England and America.

The consignment from the executors of the Church estate consists mainly of books on early English literature, once in the Frederick Locker-Lampson library, and among them some great rarities: Kendall's Flowers of Epigrammes, 1577; Churchward's Misericordia Flauders, 1579, and Revnold's Mythomystes, 1630, were not in either the Hoe or Huth collections. Ford's Fames Memorial, 1606, is one of four known copies, and of Lydgate's Treatise of the Horse only two copies are known, one in this sale and the other in the library of Cambridge University. This precious volume was printed at Westminster by Wynkyn de Worde about 1499.

Sale of Old and Modern Masters.

An interesting collection of paintings by Old and Modern Masters will be placed on exhibition Tuesday next at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale in three evening sessions beginning Monday, Apr. 3. Among the consignors are William Macbeth, Mrs. Joseph J. Little and the estates of Florence B. Ruthrauff, and Dr. R. A. Witthaus.

Most of the paintings consigned by Mr. Macbeth consist of Old Masters, purchased by him in Holland more than twenty years ago and formed the collection which was the life work of a well-known resident of The Hague, M. Muijsier. A few of the pictures were sold immediately after the collection arrived here, but the remainder were placed in storage and are now publicly exhibited for the first time. The authenticity of many of the pictures has been well established by competent authorities, among them Dr. Hofstede de Groot, whose written opinion accompanies several canvases.

Among the Old Masters represented are Cotes, Reynolds, Rubens, Terburg, Van der Werff, and Van Ostade, and among the Moderns are Bierstadt, Blakelock, De Haas, Inness, Keith, Moran, Twachtman, and Wiggins. The paintings by these artists are, without exception, interesting and important.

Sale of Rare Autographs.

In the collection of rare autographs, which the Anderson Galleries is to sell Monday and Tuesday afts. next, is a quantity of Washington material, including many letters and documents signed by him, several full autograph letters, among these a remarkably fine letter, written shortly before his death, and a curious letter of thirteen pages, taken from his own copybook. The Grant material is of superlative importance. His original letter and despatch books, with his own copies of important war documents, are here, but more extraordinary, even than these, is the original letter which Grant wrote to Sherman anent the surrender of Johnston, one of the most important of all Civil War letters. More than 300 autograph letters by Ruskin are in the sale, and an extraordinary collection of more than twenty letters by Longfellow. The letter in which he describes his entertainment of Dickens is particularly important.

Latta Print and Map Sale.

The Latta Collection of Phila. prints and maps, was sold Monday and Tuesday, at the rooms of Samuel T. Freeman & Co. in that city. The Nicholas Skull Map of Phila. was sold to Mr. Joseph Sabin for $1,650. It was originally disposed of by a New York dealer to one in Phila. for $300, and the latter sold it to Mr. Latta for $500. Mr. Rosengarten of Phila. secured for $550 the acquit of the Battle of Mud Fort, by Lieut. W. Elliott. A set of Birch's "Views of Philadelphia" brought $460 from Mr. Fearon of that city. "Philadelphia from the Old Ship House" brought $210 from Mr. Pettit. Mr. Max Williams gave $180 for a "View of the House of Employment, etc." and Mr. Beck $100 for "An Attempt to Burn John Harris by the Indians."

End of Burton Sale.

Part 6, the last of the John E. Burton collection of curios and miscellaneous art objects was sold at the Anderson Galleries, Monday to Wednesday, bringing a total of $1,727.70, which, added to the $27,005 obtained for the first five parts, made a grand total for the entire sale of $28,732.70.

Art Auction at Savoy.

The ballroom of the Hotel Savoy is the newest place selected for an art auction sale, and beginning Apr. 13 next, there will be exhibited there, to Apr. 15 inclusive, previous to their sale at auction, Apr. 17 to 20 inclusive, the varied art collections, formed by the late Daniel S. Miller, uncle of Messrs. George, Howard, Edwin and Frank Gould, and of Mrs. Finley Shepard, removed from his former large apartment in the Navarro apartments, 150 W. 59 St.

Mr. Samuel Marx will be the auctioneer. The collections comprise an unusual and choice assortment of jades, ivories, French porcelains and miniatures, Italian marbles, and some 160 pictures, mostly by modern French and American painters. There are also a number of editions of standard authors in beautiful bindings, some jewelled.

The Barber Library Sale.

At the opening of a sale of books from the library of the late Mrs. Amzi L. Barber and others, at the American Art Galleries, on Monday afternoon and evening, Mr. Hiram Parke being the auctioneer, $5,350 was real-

English Comment on "THE CONCEPTION OF ART" By H. Poore

[G. P. PUTMAN'S SONS, $2.00 NET.]

There is in all that he writes a direction, an American sanity, which, if at times it be iconoclastic, is iconoclastic in the best sense; it builds anew and better what it destroys. I think he proves conclusively that Ruskin, Tolstoy, Kant and 'les autres' generally viewed the subject in a false light and none but the practiced artist is competent to say in what Art consists.

$11,988.50. Mr. Otto Bernet as agent gave $1,380 for a pair of XVII century carved, painted and inlaid side tables of the Adam period. He also gave $540 for a couple of XVIII century paintings on glass. Mr. Kenney paid $400 for a set of ten painted arm chairs of the Adam period and Mr. F. J. Marion the same amount for a pair of English side tables painted by Cipriani. The latter also paid $155 for a XVI century Italian walnut coffer. Mr. P. J. Mosenthal gave $310 for a XVI century walnut carving and Mr. H. Symons $300 for a pair of French terra cotta figures attributed to Clodion.

The second session on Tuesday fetched $18,427.50, bringing the grand total to $30,436. Miss Elizabeth Woodville paid $1,120 for a set of 8 English XVIII century painted chairs and $480 for another set.

On Wednesday $23,334 was realized which advanced the grand total to $55,626. Mr. E. T. Moran gave $1,025 for an "Infant Christ Lying in the Manger," attributed to Luini. Mr. Otto Bernet, agent, paid $900 for a pair of XVIII century French walnut arms chairs. Mrs. E. S. Harkness gave $820 for two English wax statuettes, after bronzes by Falconnet, and Mr. C. K. G. Billings $770 for a pair of XVII century Italian walnut arm chairs.

At the final session Thursday, $54,632.50 was realized, which brought the grand total of the sale to $110,258.50. Mr. W. M. Flook paid $8,300 for a set of panels by Angelica Kauffman illustrating the story of "Telemachus and Calypso." He also bought for $1,100, the Florentine tapestry, "Carpet of the Popes." Mrs. Payne gave $4,000 for the oak panelled "Gun House Room," and Mr. W. W. Seaman, agent, $3,800 for the XVII century pipe organ. The "Wren Room" went to Mr. J. W. Cross at $2,600.

Oriental Antiquities Sold.

The opening session of the sale of the Mirza Raffy collection of Persian antiquities, at the Anderson Galleries on Mar. 17, produced $5,314.50. Mr. A. N. Davis paid $390 for a large Hamadan rug and $300 for a large Seraband rug with a palm leaf pattern. The latter amount was given by Mr. A. Devejian for a Hamadan rug.

The final session, Mar. 18, realized $21,705, the grand total for the sale being $27,030. A buyer, whose name is not given, paid $4,200 for an antique Oushak Palace rug and also to a party not named went a $2,200 Melez prayer rug.

SABIN PRINT SALE.

At the sale of a collection of line engravings and mezzotints, including 47 examples of S. Arlent Edwards, owned by Mr. J. P. Sabin, at the American Art Galleries, Wed. eve., a total of $6,705 was obtained for 190 numbers.

The 47 examples of Arlent Edwards brought some $2,399.50, a somewhat disappointing result, although a number of the prints notably the early series of American Generals of the Revolution were not colored. The highest figure brought by an Edwards prints was $225, paid by Arthur Swann, agent, for "The Princess Beaujoulas," after Nattier. Ackerman & Sons, the English dealers, paid $200 for the "William of Orange," after Van Dyck, and Seaman, agent, $130 for the "Lady de la Spencer," after Gainsborough.

The highest figure of the sale was $600 for which sum Mr. Edward Shearson secured a beautiful set of eight French colored plated representing scenes in the life of Mme. La Valliere.

A good set of Wheatley's "Cries of London," engraved by Thomas G. Appleton, brought only $50 from Mr. Edward Shearson.

William Ward's "Farmer's Stable," after G. Morland, brought $140 from Max Williams. The large and fine "Duke of Hamilton," by P. Vanderbanck sold for only $32.50 to Max Williams. Mr. J. B. Cobb secured George Morland's "Fruits of Early Industry and Piety" for $200. The examples of Nanteuil sold poorly, only one "Cardinal Barberini" bringing a fair figure, $110 from Seaman, agent.

Of the Meryons again, only one, "Abside of Notre Dame," brought a good figure, namely, $340, from Mrs. Osterlein.

KELEKIAN'S NEW IMPORTS.

The Kelekian Galleries, No. 707 Fifth Ave. have recently received some superior examples of the early Chinese painters and sculptors, and an assortment of old Italian majolicas, including some rare plates by Gubbio and Urbino from the Cottreau sale, in Paris, of 1910.

BUYS THE PEMBROKE BOOKS.

When Mr. George D. Smith bought a very large number of rarities from the Earl of Pembroke library, when it was sold at Sotheby's in London, it was said that the final owner would be Mr. Henry Huntington. It is now announced that these books have become a part of his great library. The price paid, it is said, was $115,000.

Among the books are five Caxton imprints, among which is the "Recuyell of the Histories of Troye," the first work ever printed in English; the very rare Dutch edition of the "Speculum of Humanae Salutationis," which is not duplicated either in London, Paris or Oxford; the first dictionary ever published the "Collection," of Joannes Ballus, printed by Gutenberg in 1460; the first edition of the first Greek Lexicon, by Suidas, Milan, 1499; "The Book of St. Albans," 1486, and two Papal Indulgences, one dated 1482. There are also rare editions of Thomas Aquinas, St. Augustine from the first press at Venice, "The Epistles of St. Cyprian" and a copy of St. Jerome, printed by Schaefer, Gutenberg's partner.

There is a splendid collection of incunabula from the earliest presses of Europe, a number of first editions of the best known Greek and Latin classics and a fine array of specimens of the Fathers of the Church and other early Christian writers.

WARRING OVER A PICTURE.

Mr. Carl Beck, director of the Labor Forum, has written a letter to the Board of Education criticising Mr. Edward C. Zabriskie, principal of Washington Irving High School, for the latter's refusal to hang J. C. Dollman's canvas, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" in the school auditorium. The picture shows six human derelicts seated on a bench on the Thames Embankment, London, with the lights of the Hotel Savoy shining brightly in the background. Mr. Zabriskie considers the painting of a degenerate character and "out of harmony with the scheme of decoration" of the school; he also feels that it has a depressing and harmful influence upon the pupils, and has therefore consigned the canvas to the dust and oblivion of the basement.

Mr. Beck and others feel that the picture, besides being an artistic and sincere piece of work, has a strong and uplifting moral influence.

MORGAN LIBRARY APPRAISAL.

The American Art Association, appraisers of the library and engravings of the late J. P. Morgan, wish it understood that the recently published account of the results of that appraisal was entirely unauthorized. The association furnished no such information, for this would be manifestly improper before the report is made public by the state authorities.

BUYS "POPULAR VOTE" PASTEL.

Francesco J. Spicuzza's pastel, "Holiday" won the popularity voting contest at the recent exhibition of the work of Northwestern artists at the St. Paul Institute, and the Institute will purchase the picture probably at its listed price, $400.

PROF. VOLPI TO DEPART.

Prof. E. Volpi, of Florence, who came here some months ago with a number of Old Masters, including two works attributed to Titian, and who for the past few weeks has occupied a Gallery in the Ehrlich Building, 707 Fifth Ave., is to return to Italy this week. Owing largely to the unfortunate circumstances which attended his arrival here and to a prejudice thus unjustly aroused against his pictures, it is understood that he has not disposed of any of his paintings, some of which are exceptionally fine and valuable. It is reported that, through Mr. Hamilton Bell, some of the pictures may be exhibited at the new Cleveland Museum.

Electrical Poster Competition.

America's electrical week is scheduled for December 2-9, 1916, and this spring a competition is announced for a design for reproduction as an 8-sheet poster, a window lithograph, a window card and poster stamp in at least five colors. Prizes are offered to artists, also for art students, high school and academy pupils. There is a Grand Prize of $1,000, a second prize of $300, a public choice prize of $300, to which artists and designers are eligible, and an art students' prize open to students who are regularly attending any place where poster art is taught. The competition closes June 1.

BLAKELOCK TO VISIT EXHIBIT.

There will be 30 odd pictures by R. A. Blakelock in the display which is to be opened for his benefit at the Reinhardt Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave. on Apr. 3. There will be a public meeting at the Hotel Biltmore on Monday in the interest of the fund. It is stated that Dr. Maurice C. Ashley, superintendent of the Middletown Asylum will accompany the unfortunate artist on a visit to the display. It is said that he has expressed a desire to revisit N. Y. The time of his coming will not be announced and it is hoped that his trip and a revived interest in his work, will ameliorate his mental condition. A considerable fund is certain to be raised for the benefit of the artist and his family.

J. S. SARGENT'S VISIT.

The somewhat unexpected return of John S. Sargent to this country is due to his desire to direct the placing in the upper hall of the Boston Public Library of the last of the series of his mural decorations, depicting the "Triumph of Religion." The paintings, which have already arrived in this country, are to occupy the long east wall over the staircase. The subject of the new decoration is said to be "Christ Preaching to the Nations of the Earth."

A DE HOOGH SOLD.

"The Music Party," by Pieter de Hoogh (1629-1677), (signed "P. de Hoogh"), and reproduced on this page, is fully described in "Catalog of the Dutch Painters," by Hofstede de Groot, Vol. I, p. 508. The picture has been known for several years and originally came from the Matthew Nevin Collection in Colon, which was sold in 1879. The painting is unusually beautiful in its harmony of tone and in the naturalness of the positions of the sitters. Pieter de Hoogh's works are exceedingly rare and are found in only the more important collections. America is unusually fortunate in owning several of de Hoogh's best works.

Mr. Zenos Crane bought this painting for the purpose of donating it to the Museum of National History and Art at Pittsfield, which he founded and is to be congratulated upon his good taste and good fortune in acquiring such an important work. In the Museum, Mr. Crane has already a number of important paintings, numbering among them fine examples of Reynolds, Romney, Hoppner, etc., etc.

GIVE 18 PICTURES TO MUSEUM.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Clifford Brown of Portland, Oregon, have given to the Art Museum of that city 6 oils, 6 watercolors, 6

DEALERS' PROFIT SUIT.

The suit of Mr. John J. Piggott, the Brooklyn art dealer, against Mrs. James S. McAnulty of Scranton, Pa., to recover the amount of $25,000 which the plaintiff alleges the defendant agreed to pay him for a number of modern watercolors, including examples of Adriaen Moreau, John Wesley Little and others, and which agreement was not carried out, the defendant claims, because she believes the plaintiff overcharged her and tried to make an unreasonable profit out of the transaction, will come up again for trial, probably next week, in Brooklyn. It will be remembered that the jury disagreed when the case was first tried last November.

Commenting editorially on the case last November the ART NEWS stated that it was simply one of a dealer's right to what he considered a legitimate profit and the coming second trial of the case will be watched with interest, as it directly affects the art trade.

SACHS' RESEARCH FUND.

Mr. Samuel Sachs, of Goldman, Sachs & Co., of N. Y., father of Paul J. Sachs, assistant curator of the Fogg Museum at Harvard, has offered that college $2,000 annually to establish the "Sachs Research Fellowship in Fine Arts." The fellowship will be awarded annually to any American man or woman whether student or instructor in Harvard or Radcliffe.

ASTONISHING ART THEFT.

A cable from Rome says ten rare old masters, whose value totals more than a million dollars, have been stolen from the ancient monastery of San Pietro dei Cassinesi at Perugia. Two Raphaels, including the famous "Infant Jesus and St. John," were stripped from the walls by the thieves. Other stolen paintings included four works of Perugino, Bassano's "Coronation," two of Guercino's paintings and Mantegna's "Christ."

HARVARD GETS 32 PRINTS.

The Fogg Art Museum has just acquired 32 new prints, including some fine examples of Millet, Jacque, Daubigny, Corot and Rousseau and two lithographs by Whistler. A number of prints recently obtained by the Museum were the gift of Mr. David Keppel of N. Y. in memory of his father.

NEW CANESSA GALLERY.

There was added to the art attractions of New York, through the opening on Wednesday of the new Canessa Galleries—formerly the larger of the two spacious rooms adjoining the residence of the late Benjamin Altman at Fifth Ave. and 50 St., an exceptionally handsome and artistic resort for art lovers.

When it was announced, some time ago, that the old and well known Naples, Paris and New York art firm of C. and E. Canessa had leased the larger of the old Altman galleries for a term of ten years, those who know their beautiful galleries in Paris and Naples were skeptical as to whether the former Altman rooms, spacious as these were, were capable of a transformation which could make them compare with the Paris and Naples establishments. But the Messrs. Canessa are men, not only of knowledge and taste, but of resource, and calling in Snelling and Metcalf, the architects, to aid them, they have transformed the large 100-foot long rear room into a most beautiful and attractive gallery and have also made of the basement an entresol which invites and welcomes the visitor to a true home of art.

One of the most effective features of the new gallery is the elevator in one corner, which, made of open carved iron work, resembles a large, graceful bird cage and proves the possibility of making even an elevator attractive.

The large and finely lit upper gallery has the green hangings on its wall which Mr. Altman installed, and which have been wisely left. Its spacious proportions, and great height, make a splendid setting for the old pictures, bronzes, antiques, porcelains, potteries, weaves and antiques, for which the house of Canessa is famous. The old French and Greek marble and stone statues, the Italian majolicas, French enamels, and the various antiques, many of which were shown at the San Francisco Exposition and in the old N. Y. Galleries are now displayed with an effectiveness they did not have in their former surroundings.

HISTORIC WORK TO CHURCH.

Frank H. Halbedel's painting, "The Wyandot Indian Mission," depicting the first laymen's mission meeting in Ohio 100 years ago, has been presented by the artist to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Marietta, O. John Stewart, of Marietta, is shown in the midst of about 50 Indians and the mission in the picture is the one erected by Stewart at Upper Sandusky in 1816.

Painter's Son Decorated by France.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Times calls attention to the fact that John Marquand Walker, who was recently decorated with 11 other Americans by the French Government, is the son of the artist Henry Oliver Walker, whose studio and residence are at Lakewood, N. J.

INDIAN ART IN CUBA.

An expedition from the University Museum, Phil., has discovered pre-Columbian wooden instruments in Cuba, which are declared some of the most extraordinary finds ever made in American archeology. Considering the crude tools of the Indians before the time of Columbus, the carved decorations on the wood are remarkable.

miniatures, and a porcelain. The oils include Douglas Volk's "Child Reverie" and Howard Pyle's "Chase of the Slaver."

BANK LOSES PICTURE SUIT.

The Third National Bank of St. Louis recently lost a suit in Circuit Judge Cave's Court for $9,685.75 which the bank brought against the R. U. Leonori Auction and Storage Company to recover on twelve paintings left with the storage firm and pledged as security for a loan, but later sold by the storage company.

Portrait of Dr. Schechter.

A portrait of Dr. Solomon Schechter, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary, by Bayard H. Taylor, was placed on view this week at the Schutheis Gallery, 142 Fulton Street. It was painted at the seminary from photographs and from data supplied by the family and friends.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Society of California Pioneers has presented to Golden Gate Park Memorial Museum a life-size portrait of the famous Emperor Norton, a familiar local street character for more than thirty years. The Chinese Commission to the exposition has presented the Memorial Museum with a large collection of drawings, prints and kamonas selected from the Chinese exhibit in the Fine Arts Palace.

The Japanese Commission has donated a comprehensive collection of woods, including a series of inlaid woods resembling those of the Italian and mosaic schools, and in addition its collection of costumed dolls.

The Japanese and Chinese gifts to the Museum have been so extensive since the close of the exposition that their number now reaches 15,000 pieces, and are so comprehensive that it is said that no other museum now has so complete a collection of such articles.

Miss Edith Bull recently added to the Oriental collections a fine series of Japanese and Chinese bronzes, including 200 pieces.

Mr. M. H. de Young has added also to his many other recent gifts to the Museum, a series of original bronzes by Sirio Tofanari and A. Vennetti.

These sculptures have been installed for the present in the galleries of the California Art Exposition.

Charles Dickman has a new canvas, "Cypresses of the 17-Mile Drive, Monterey," in the Gump Galleries. "Comin' Thro' the Rye," by Jerome Thompson, painted in 1872, is in the Courvoisier Galleries, and Arthur Beckwith has a glimpse of "Greenbrae" at the same galleries. At the Schussler Galleries there is a tawny colored "Sunset" by H. J. Breuer and a strong seascape by Armin C. Hansen.

Florence Lundborg is working upon a large, oval-shaped, decorative panel.

Louise Mahoney, after several years of invalidism, is painting again.

A "one-man show" of the works of W. A. Coulter is on in the Merchants' Exchange Building and is attracting much attention. Among the 42 oils, are "Mount Tamalpais," "Off the Farallones," "On the Marin Shore," "In the Lee of the Cross" and many other scenes dealing with San Francisco Bay and other parts of the Pacific Coast.

PORTLAND (OREGON).

The Besnard Mural, "La Paix" is now at the Art Museum and is shown in connection with a loan exhibition of French pictures locally owned. On the opening evening paintings donated by local artists, Henry F. Wentz, C. E. S. Wood, Carl A. Walters, Shanna Cummings and John H. Trullinger, were auctioned. The proceeds from the pictures and admission fees go to the fund for the French artists' families suffering from the war.

The French artists represented by pictures on exhibition are: Petitjean, Barillot, Dubouchet, Corot (4), Boudin (2), Dupre (3), Harpignies, Chardin, Daubigny (4), Michel, Mettling, Le Neuville, Courbet, Diaz (3), F. Roybet (2), Vallon, Charlet, Delacroix, Monticelli (2), and Rousseau.

SAINT LOUIS.

Two important exhibitions are on at the City Museum, a collection of works by members of the Chicago Soc'y of Artists and a group of pictures by the late Mary L. Macomber. Among the excellent examples of Miss Macomber's work included in the exhibition are "The Twenty-third Psalm," "Song," "A Flower of Yesterday," and "Flora." On Mar. 16 the museum opened in one of its large galleries an exhibition of tapestries. The collection, assembled by Director R. A. Holland, embraces important specimens of all the best periods and makes, including Flemish, Aubusson, Beauvais and Gobelin.

Famous old tapestries valued at $500,000 are on exhibition at the St. Louis Museum. There are 21 examples of Brussels, Aubusson, Beauvais and Gobelin, loaned by a N. Y. dealer. In addition a rare old Flemish tapestry, owned by Mr. Edward A. Faust, of St. Louis, has been loaned to the show.

On the first Sunday in April the third annual competitive exhibition of painting and sculpture will take place at the Artists' Guild, under the direction of the St. Louis Art League. The first prize of $500 is for the best work in whatever class. The other prizes range from $50 to $100 each.

At the Algonquin Club a large and excellent collection of pictures by Will Matthews is on display, prior to being shown in the Central Library building. Other "one, two and three man" shows are in contemplation.

NEW ORLEANS.

At the recent exhibition of pictures by Harry B. Lachman at the Delgado Museum a number of his canvases were acquired by the following prominent local art collectors: Messrs. H. F. Baldwin, S. W. Weis, J. K. Newman, Dr. I. M. Cline, and Mmes. Leon Gibert, and John B. Richardson. The Museum will probably purchase "A Home in the Tyrol" for the permanent collection.

After leaving here the Lachman pictures were shown at the 19th Century Club in Memphis.

Dr. I. M. Cline has added during the last week ten unusually interesting Buddhist bronze figures to his already important collection of this phase of Oriental art. Dr. Cline also loaned to the Museum recently some important additions to his collection of American portraits in oil among which is a good portrait of a gentleman by Jouett, and also portraits of Major General Edmund P. Gaines and his wife Myra Clark Gaines.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.

Following the Macbeth exhibit at the Mahoning Institute, the Birge Harrison pictures will be shown on Apr. 1.

The season at the Institute will probably close in May with a fine showing of American canvases.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, of Chicago, will give an illustrated lecture at the Institute soon, and later Mr. Raymond Wyer will lecture.

CLEVELAND.

Ferdinand Burgdorff, a local landscape painter who has been on the Pacific Coast, Arizona and New Mexico for the past six years, varied by a leisurely trip around the world, is holding a successful "one man" exhibition at the Gage Gallery. The artist is a colorist and his desert pictures appeal. Contrasting with such luminous canvases as "Gateway to the Desert," "The Painted Desert" and "Desert Rubies" are cool, tranquil scenes, such as "Venus and the Lone Pine, Monterey," an idyl of dim skies and solitary shores. Several paintings made along the Nile, in Greece and Italy, are vibrant with light and color, as also a tropical storm in Manila.

The Thomas Whipple Dunbar collection of paintings by modern American artists, is here from Milwaukee. "Andromeda and the Sea Maidens" by Elliott Daingerfield, a gem of a landscape by Robert Martin, cattle painting by Matilda Brown, strong canvases by Jonas Lie, are noteworthy examples which include representative work of the best landscapists and marine painters.

The Lawlor collection of rare drawings by the masters of the last four centuries, shown here for a fortnight, has been loaned to the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, at the request of the managers who are exhibiting it in connection with the French display from the Louvre, just received from San Francisco.

Poster art, in its best form is shown by some 60 of the posters made for the celebration of the 250th anniversary of Newark, N. J., now at the Cleveland School of Art.

Jessie C. Glasier.

John Wenger has recently been elected a member of the Salmagundi Club. He has an interesting canvas at the present Academy exhibition, "A Cathedral."

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The special exhibition of sketches which is being shown in different cities throughout the country by the American Federation of Art, has been placed on view at the Corcoran Gallery. It will remain in Washington about three weeks.

Henry Merwin Shradly's cavalry group in bronze for the Grant Monument here has been completed and will soon be put in place as a companion-piece to the artillery group. The two groups are the largest bronzes ever cast in America.

At the Smithsonian Institution there is an exhibit of graphic arts, showing the development of drawings, printing, painting, and engraving, step by step, and including a complete display of implements for Japanese woodcutting and woodcut printing in color.

At the Corcoran Gallery, there are shown to Apr. 9, 37 recent landscapes by Edward W. Redfield, most of them his typical colorful, virile, Winter and Spring Centre Birdge landscapes. Among the more important are "Woodland Solitude," "Old Homestead," "Deserted Farm," "Birch and Sycamore," and "Green Sleigh."

A coll'n of watercolors by Col. Anthony Dyer of R. I., is on view at the Moore Galleries.

Lucien W. Powell's oils are at the Shelby Clarke Galleries for a fortnight.

The annual exhibit of oils, watercolors and pastels will take place at the Home Club, Apr. 4-17, inclusive.

KANSAS CITY.

The "Neo-Fantasionists" recently gave a ball here at which their pictures were first shown. The costumes were also of the neo variety. The 25 pictures are shown at the Rombong.

An exhibit of some 50 small bronzes by American sculptors is on at the Fine Arts Institute. Among those represented are E. Berge, Emily C. Bishop, Karl Bitter, Beatrice Fenton, Eli Harvey, H. Hering, Anna V. Hyatt, Grace M. Johnson, W. Sergeant Kendall, I. Konti, Anna C. Ladd, Paul Manship, Helen F. Mears, Albin Polasek, A. P. Proctor, Frederick Remington, C. C. Rumsey, Janet Scudder, Bessie P. Vonnoh, J. Q. A. Ward, A. A. Weinman, M. Young. Weinman's "Descending Night" will probably be purchased by students of the Institute.

The K. C. Camera Club held its annual exhibit recently at the Hotel Baltimore.

Some 50 Edwards mezzotints, owned here, are in a loan exhibit at the City Club.

Charles P. Gruppe recently held an exhibition of some twenty-four canvases at the Findlay Art Galleries, Kansas City, which proved a success in point of sales.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

An exhibit of nat'l illustrations is on at the Carnegie Library. The drawings are those reproduced in late novels and periodicals. Among the illustrators represented are Philip Boileau, Alice Barber Stephens, Walter Biggs, F. C. Yohn, Howard Chandler Christy, Thos. Fogarty, A. O. Fischer, Alonzo Kimball, Rose O'Neil, Orsen Lowell, Peter Newell, A. J. Keller, Will Foster, E. Penfield, Jos. Pennell, Walter Hale, Ernest Peixotto, C. D. Gibson, J. M. Flagge and May Wilson Preston.

Dr. Mitchell Carroll, National Lecturer Archaeological Institute of America, delivered a scholarly lecture on "Athens, the City of the Violet Crown" at the Centennial Club, on a recent afternoon, under the auspices of the Nashville Chapter of the Institute. Mrs. G. W. Cole, Life Member of the Washington and Nashville Chapters was the hostess. The members of the Centennial Club (Nashville's Women's Club), Nashville Art Ass'n, Archaeological Chapter, and all who were interested in Art and Archaeology were invited to be her guests; and a brilliant audience assembled in the handsome club auditorium.

Dr. Carroll's subject was handled in an inspiring way. He linked the past with the present and made a stirring appeal to the Nashville Chapter to take up the restoration of the Parthenon in Centennial Park in marble, as their contribution to American art.

After a reception tendered Dr. Carroll by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Claude Waller of the Art Department of the Centennial Club, there was a conference with Chapter members and the election of officers for the local Chapter for 1916. An ideal close for an artist's day came in a drive out to Centennial Park, where the Parthenon by moonlight was viewed.

In May, the Annual Fine Arts Exhibit will open in the Parthenon, Cenennial Park. The Besnard Peace Canvas will then be shown.

OBITUARY.*Walter Cook.

Walter Cook, one of the most distinguished of New York architects, died in his 70th year on Mar. 25. He was born in New York and graduated at Harvard in 1869; three years later he received his master's degree. He went abroad and studied at the Royal Polytechnic School in Munich and at the Paris Ecole des Beaux Arts. He returned to New York in 1877 and was active in the practice of his profession until his death. Mr. Cook, who was at one time consulting architect for the City and also served on the Municipal Art Commission, had been President of the American Institute of Architects and of its New York chapter and of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects. He was a member of the National Academy, an officer of the Institute of Art and Letters and a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He was also a member of the Harvard and Century Clubs. Among the buildings designed by firms of which he was a member were the New York Life Buildings in this city, Montreal and Minneapolis, De Vinne Press, the Stadium and other buildings at the Buffalo Exposition, various of the branches of the New York Public Library.

Charles J. Mulligan.

The death of Charles J. Mulligan of Chicago, deprives American art of a leading sculptor. Mr. Mulligan had unusual understanding of, and sympathy with students. He was a prominent member of the Irish Fellowship Club, and was beloved for his charming personality. He was one of the few sculptors who himself chiseled in marble and stone, as well as modelled in clay. He came to this country at an early age and found work at Pullman, a suburb of Chicago, as a stone cutter. He began the study of sculpture at the Art Institute night classes, inspired from the first by the confidence of Lorado Taft in his genius. In the capitols of many of the States sculptures by Mulligan are conspicuous, and the beauty of Chicago's public parks is enhanced by his works.

Among his more important works are: "The Three Sisters," at the entrance of the Supreme Court, Springfield, Ill.; "The Rail Splitter," Lincoln statue, "Spirit of the Mines," a symbolic group and statue of Colonel Finnerty.

Francis L. Leland.

Francis L. Leland, Pres't of the N. Y. County Nat'l Bank in this city, who gave the Metropolitan Museum $1,000,000 in 1912, this being the largest single gift it has ever received, died on Tuesday in his 77th year. He was the son of the late Francis Leland of Boston and Mrs. Eufrosia de Aguilar Leland and was born in Montevideo, Uruguay.

George William Whitaker.

George William Whitaker died Mar. 6, 1916, at the age of seventy-five. He was born in Fall River, but for more than a half century he lived in Providence. He painted landscapes and also marines and fruit compositions. He was one of the founders of the Providence Art Club and the A. E. Club and for several years he has been called by associates and the press, "the dean of Providence artists."

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

THE SPRING ACADEMY.
(By the Second Viewer)

In many respects the most important picture shown at the Academy in years is the "De Profundis" of Horatio Walker which is attracting much attention at the current Spring exhibition. This picture brings well come evidence of the fact that the nobly serious field of religious painting has not been entirely forsaken by Americans, and that one of the ablest of native craftsmen has risen high above his craft to demonstrate to his fellows that in the art of painting the mind still exercises dominion over the hand. Nor does the artist lay aside his skill of hand on this occasion, for while he feels with genuine profundity the great sentiment of his theme, he does not fail to execute in the masterly manner to which he has accustomed us. But his skill is not the flaunting skill of a Bellows (of whom there has been much blowing)—the skill of Walker is rather an indigenous, humble capability of rendering dictated by intimate contact with nature.

One cannot help but condole with the hanging committee for failing to give such a canvas as the "De Profundis" the place of honor in the exhibition, a place which, however, is in no way dishonored by Emil Carlsen's clever "Moonlight on a Calm Sea." Something like a mist seems to have escaped from this misty moonlight of Carlsen's to partly obscure all the pictures in its near vicinity. The repressed tonalities of these, however, are chargeable to the full intention of their painters. These "repressed" color arrangements are J. Alden Weir's "Follower of Grolier" (the sex of whose subject has been the subject of considerable discussion by visitors); Hazelhurst's figure piece, "Spring," Lester B. Ronda's "Winter Twilight" and Gardner Symons' "In the Shadow of the Bridge." Carrigan's "Charlie Smith House" nearby, another "repressed" color scheme is much injured by too high hanging, and Walter Griffin's fine "Breton Fishing Village" would have made its proper effect in almost any other setting. If the committee aimed at harmony in the hanging of the "star wall" they have succeeded—to the point of monotony.

In the Vanderbilt Gallery certain things have come away from the monotony with distinction. One "sees" Frieseke's pearly outdoor composition of a reclining woman in "The Hammock;" Martha Walters' fine outdoor "Brother and Sister," which should have hung on the line; J. Francis Murphy's accomplished "Summer Morning;" August Franzen's very rich portrait of F. Aug. Schemerhorn; Ernest Lawson's "Pigeon Coop;" Dines Carlsen's "Dutch Bottles and Jug" (a wonderful performance for a boy under 15); F. Luis Mora's "Fantasy of Goya," and the late Montague Flagg's portrait of his wife (who survived the artist but a few weeks), a picture with a decided "Mona Lisa" suggestion. Mora's "Fantasy of Goya" is injured by a general heaviness of color, a heaviness of execution, and a too concrete representation of the fantastic element.

Kenyon Cox, as if to challenge the painters of "new" tendency, against whom he has set himself with some bitterness and so little humor, exhibits a nude which he calls "Truth," in which he slips up a bit as premier defender of academical canons of proportion. The veteran Gedney Bunce, whose problem is eternally a horizon line (sometimes not "too" horizontal) and a Venetian sail or two, shows in an unusually large canvas, to what lengths a pure colorist can go toward producing "absolute" beauty in paint. F. Edwin Church's "Peacock Girl" is vivid and rather unconventional in color, and offers sharp contrast to "The Spinner" by the veteran Thomas Eakins, with its golden browns and dull blacks. A strong landscape, the "Waning Day" of Ben Foster, a pretty lady, "Miss Mary" by Chase, an unrecognizable portrait of Ben Foster by Louis Betts and Sergeant Kendall's revolting and stupid "Spinx" are canvases over which much discussion might be held. Space forbids more than a word for Minna Fonda Ochtman's large "Sunset," Martha Walter's "N. Y. Street Car," Everett Warner's "Roadside Bushes," Nancy Ferguson's "In the Sunshine," eLopold Seyffert's "Spanish Woman," Edward Gay's "October Days," Howard Hildebrandt's "Chinese Fan," Griffin's "Nature's Appeal," John Carlsen's "Sylvan Labyrinths," Frank Bicknell's "May Morning," C. Y. Turner's "Unwelcome News," Ernest Lawson's "Park Bridge," R. H. Nisbet's "From Hill to Hill," Wm. H. Lippincott's "The Dial," H. Salem Hubbell's "Ice on the Water Pitcher," Leopold Seyffert's "Nude," Geo. Lawrence Nelson's "Brittany Bouquet," Charles Rosen's "Winter Sunlight," Ernest Ipsen's full length "Miss Dorothy Graham," Philip Little's "First of the Golden Rod," Helen M. Turner's "Portrait of Miss Owings," Thomas Eakin's quaint portrait of J. Harry Lewis, and Randall Davey's rather painty "Man and Monkey."

The miniatures shown have about as much chance of being noticed in an exhibition of this kind as they would at the Natural History museum, and the sum total of sculpture displayed is little more than a bare showing.

James Britton.

Portraits by Irving R. Wiles.

There are now on view at Knoedler & Co.'s, 556 Fifth Ave., a collection of 14 portraits, a character study and a genre by Irving R. Wiles. The portraits are painted with strength and a facile technique, agreeable in color and excellent in character, self-evidently good likenesses. It is in his portraits of women that Mr. Wiles is probably at his best, though those of the painter, Charles J. Bittinger, and the architect, Arnold Brunner, are not surpassed by any others in the display.

An attractive double portrait is that of the Misses Dorothy and Caroline Kohl, the one sitting and the other standing. Here the treatment of the draperies is particularly successful. The portrait of Miss Melville Silvery, sitting on a sofa is unusual and unaffected in pose. "The Portrait in Profile," of a young woman in dinner dress is handled with refreshing freedom, and other excellent examples are the representations of Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, and of the artist's daughter, Miss Gladys.

Notable among the male portraits are those of St. Clair McKelway, Frank J. Marion, Edward Mallinckrodt, and Daniel Barnes. "The Student," loaned by the Corcoran Gallery of Art, is seen again with pleasure, and from the purely technical standpoint shares the admiration which is felt for the brilliant genre called "Divided Attention," in which the handling of the still-life on the table is as effective as that of the figure.

Land and Shore Scenes by R. Holland.

Raymond Holland, a painter of much talent and a notably fine colorist, who is a follower of Pissaro and the open-air school, is showing to Apr. 10 at the Henry Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave., a collection of 15 landscapes and street scenes. The landscapes are chiefly on the coast of Morocco and in Connecticut. The street scenes are a brilliant night view of Madison Ave. and 59 St., and a winter scene at Fifth Ave. and 61 St., in the early evening, with hurrying figures of pedestrians. "The Swirl of the West Wind," is well felt and notable among the American landscapes are "Across Five-Mile River," "Rowayton, Conn.," and "Morning Contentment Island, Conn." But it is in the north African coast scenes with their brilliant skies and many colored tumbling surf that the artist is at his best. Both color and sunlight are remarkable in "Summer Sea, Cape Spartel," and fine in effect are "The Blue Pool," and "Evening," both in the same locality. There is a view of the "Dunes, Tangiers," in which the figures are rather nebulous, but the glimpse across the waters of the "Borj El Babba, Tetuan," is most artistic.

Calumet Crochet on View.

The Little Gallery, 15 E. 40 St., has now on view a display of Calumet crochet work done at the Michigan copper mines, by women, under the direction of Clara S. Grierson and Anna K. Fax. Duplicates of various prize winning pieces are shown. There is also on view an interesting collection of lustured china and glass by Sarah Rylecomer.

Princess Lwoff-Parlaghy is showing at her new studio, 109 E. 9 St., a recently completed portrait of the inventor, Nichola Tesla. The figure is lit by artificial daylight.

Artistic Weapons at Bonaventures.

Two historic weapons are now shown at Bonaventures, 601 Fifth Ave. One is a Hispano-Mauresque short sword, or rather dagger, presented by King Victor Emmanuel, of Italy, to that celebrated beauty, the Countess of Castiglione, whom he sent, it is said to Paris on a successful mission to charm Napoleon III. The scabbard and handle are of silver gilt, richly chased, and ornamented with two large emeralds, one set near the hilt and the other at the end of the handle. A date incised on the scabbard is 1805, but this is evidently only of interest to some possessor.

The second weapon is a sword of Oriental style which belonged to Gen. Lassalle, one of Napoleon's commanding officers, and probably dates from the campaign of Egypt. The blade is damascened, the handle of ivory and the scabbard of silver and peau de chagrin.

MORGAN POTTERY EXH'N.

The famous collection of potteries owned by the late J. Pierpont Morgan is to be exhibited in Pittsburgh about April 20. The exhibition will be given in the Gillespie Galleries in Wood St. The Morgan collection of potteries is famous the world over and embraces many treasures, the value of which are almost fabulous. It was gathered from all parts of the globe and includes specimens from ages and dynasties dating back many centuries.

The Work of Karfunkle.

Mr. Martin Birnbaum, of the Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., has a talent for seeking and presenting to the public the work of interesting artistic personalities, who are more or less well known. His latest discovery is David Karfunkle, a painter, who is also a sculptor. This artist recently returned from a second long stay abroad, where he last studied with the distinguished Paris sculptor Bourdelle, and was through the aid of a far-seeing patron, Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip, not bothered with the question of how to live while studying.

The 17 pictures the artist is showing in the galleries for three weeks, evidence that it is not with methods of painting or drawing that he concerns himself but with modelling and composition. Not that he cannot draw or paint, for that he can is in constant evidence in works, beside others where such things have not been the prime question. The human form, not in its beauty alone is his chief inspiration and while he is often very matter of fact in statement in his nudes, both female and male, he is never vulgar. And it is interesting to see that he makes even unpromising types interesting. His search is for nature first and beauty almost last. Still his drawings in sanguine, in black crayon, with ivory yellow ground and in prismatic pastels, are full of artistic charm recalling somewhat those of the English sculptor Alfred Stevens.

In his compositions in oil and pastel, Mr. Karfunkle recalls both Burne-Jones and Leighton. There is such a warm reddish glow over the female nudes grouped in the foreground and seen in the middle distance of the seashore scene "Atlantis" that the effect is rather unreal. More true is the crouching figure of "Ariadne," while various groups of boy bathers such as "On the Rocks" are brilliant in color and true in effect. The two figures of Pomona are most attractive and such landscapes as "Cassis," "Spring Awakening," and the view in the "Luxembourg Gardens," show fine qualities of painting pure and simple.

Perrine's Appreciations of Childhood.

That highly decorative, original and very spirited painter, Van Deering Perrine, is showing at the Thumb Box Gallery, 24 E. 49 St., a group of 28 "Appreciations of Childhood," which he has set in his fantastically artistic landscapes. "The Appreciations" are little more than indications and the children often get rather tangled up with the landscapes, which is to be sure rather childlike. Among the titles are "Gathering Blossoms," "Child's World," "Adventures," "Children Playing" and "Springtime." The landscape effects are often impressive as in "Hurry Home," and the decorative quality is shown at its best "In Blossom Time."

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

THE RED TICKET.

Numerous letters, telephone messages, and even telegrams, not only from New York but from Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and other art centers, which we have received this week, approve without one word of dissent, our editorial condemnation last week of the presence of Sergeant Kendall's repellent picture "The Sphinx" in the current Spring Academy Display. Some press extracts, published elsewhere in our columns today, further attest the soundness of our position, and the justness of our protest against the public showing of this work—unworthy of its painter and his hitherto high reputation as an artist of lofty purpose and rarely refined expression and sentiment; and of the veteran Academy of Design.

The fact that Chicago, which shied at Chabas' "September Morn" but whose citizens and Art Institute swallowed whole, and without even the tenuous drapery which the artist has now added to the "nakedness of his nude"—this canvas—and permitted its public showing, is no possible excuse, it seems to us, for its exhibition in New York. The Metropolis, while it may not have a reputation for squeamish-ness as to the nude, prides itself on having good taste in matters of art and fashion at least, as compared with Chicago.

And on the grounds of good taste alone, if nothing else, "The Sphinx," we believe, should not be shown in public. We are informed that the representatives of the Society for the Suppression of Vice have visited the Academy display and have inspected the picture, but have not yet made their report, but whether or no Mr. Anthony Comstock's successor deems the canvas unfit for public exhibition, its presence on the walls of the Fine Arts Building, is an offence, if not necessarily to decency—to good taste.

The presence of this work in the Spring Academy display also, as we said last week, brings up again, and emphasizes the seeming necessity of the abrogation, or, at least, the modification, of the old rule of the Academy permitting an Academician to send in to its displays a work or works, marked with a red ticket, and thus designated, made "Hors concours," or exempt from Jury rulings, and entitled to a place on the line.

If such an Academician as Sergeant Kendall feels himself privileged to avail himself of this outworn old rule, to force on the Academy and the public such a picture as "The Sphinx," why may not some other Academician, perhaps unknowingly insane, send, in the same way, some work to an Academy display, which would surely result in the "pulling" of the picture by the police, or the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and cause, as Mr. Kendall's performance may nearly have done, a public scandal?

It would seem to be time for the abolishment of the Red Ticket of privilege.

A. H. Gorson is showing 34 of his canvases in Pittsburgh.

A SCULPTURE REVIVAL.

Those American art lovers who have sighed of late years, and since the passing of such sculptors as St. Gaudens and J. Q. A. Ward, that American sculpture was declining in strength and waning in favor, despite the output of such worthy successors to the great men gone as Daniel C. French, Bela Pratt and others, should visit the delightful and inspiring display of modern American sculpture, so well and skillfully organized and arranged by Mr. W. Frank Purdy, on the top floor of the Gorham Building on Fifth Ave. and which we reviewed last week.

Here are shown in a garden setting of low evergreen hedges, and trees, in whose foliage birds sing and chirp, running fountains, with statues and statuettes by clever, older and younger American sculptors, the majority so graceful, strongly modelled and effective as to emphasize the fact, that American sculpture is waxing, not waning, in strength and popular favor.

The owners of country estates, who have gardens or are planning gardens should be especially interested in this display, which proves how greatly well chosen sculpture, especially when combined with fountains, can enhance the beauty of gardens, both large and small.

THE PRESS ON "THE SPHINX."

"In Execrable Taste."

"It is hard quite to understand Sargent Kendall's 'Sphinx,' founded presumably upon Rudyard Kipling's 'Vampire,' a most unpleasant picture and in execrable taste."
—Helen W. Henderson in Phil'a "Inquirer."

"Painting is Dead."

"This is not the first time that the canvas
(The Sphinx) has appeared in one of the official circuit exhibitions, but if Mr. Kendall has any respect for his reputation it will be the last.

"Mr. Kendall's 'Sphinx' answers many questions. It is a sphinx that is likely to end its career reproduced on a postcard of commerce, or as a cover for a sphinx calendar. A nude figure plays the part of the so-called sphinx, and below a skeleton stretches across the canvas, but that is not the only symbol of death in the picture.
The painting is dead; so dead that even a large and popular jury must be completely absolved.

"When a red ticket is put on an Academy canvas the jury is powerless to reject it, which, of course, brings the old problem to the surface again. It is a problem that properly solved might supply the yeast to raise the dough that now makes the Academy a little difficult to digest. The red ticket might be a tribute to the men who are sufficiently alive to experiment. But at present it is more generally used to keep before the public the men whose art has fallen below their own standards.—Forbes Watson in N. Y. "Evening Post."

"Stupid—Inherently Foolish."

"The picture is called 'The Sphinx.' In it a pretty but vapid young female model sits nude upon the floor and before her stretches a bleached skeleton. There is nothing in the work to offend our censor of morals, and reproductions of it could pass freely through the mails, no doubt. It is just because the picture is of the sort to intrigue the more careless portion of the public that it must be sternly labelled 'stupid.'"

* * *

"The Sphinx," by Sergeant Kendall, will not be apt to answer questions very satisfactorily, for so empty headed a little model has rarely been painted nude into a puzzle picture before. She squats upon her haunches and before her on the floor, a white, bleached skelton stretches across the bottom of the canvas, but the inherent foolishness of the picture cannot be described.

"Truth," by Kenyon Cox, is another unfortunate work. Truth is a naked elderly female, according to Mr. Cox, with badly drawn legs and arms, who sits upon a Venetian well (some kind of a well, it is) and holds up a mirror in which neither she nor clusion is that the sooner 'Truth' gets back where she belongs, i. e., at the bottom of the well, the better it will be for all concerned."—Henry MacBride in N. Y. "Sun."

"Attempt at a Shocker."

"Even such an attempt as Sergeant Kendall makes with his 'Sphinx' to produce a 'shocker' is painted in a fashion best described as genteel. His sphinx is a young woman clad in next to nothing, squatting upon her heels, her arms folded upon her knees, her eyes staring vacantly into the distance. At her feet is a skeleton, doubtless masculine, its fleshless arm raised like a grotesque signpost. Careful drawing and painstaking painting do not make up for what seems rather an illustration than an easel picture."—Phila. "Record."

Academy's "Red Light District"

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir: I was greatly pleased to note that your journal alone of American art and other publications has had the courage to openly and frankly characterize, if possible in too mild terms, the sending under his "Red Ticket" privilege as an Academician by Mr. Sergeant Kendall, to the Spring Academy, of such a work as that entitled "The Sphinx."

Unless the Academy takes some measures to prevent this abuse of privilege in future,
I predict an influx of objectionable works with "red tickets" to future exhibitions.

Meanwhile, let me suggest that during the remainder of the exhibition if "The Sphinx" is not meanwhile happily removed by the authorities, that the Centre Gallery in which the obnoxious work hangs, should be labelled "The Academy's Red Light District."

Yours Very Truly,
Academician Who Admires Courage,
New York, March 29, 1916.

Art News from Munich.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:
Your most valued paper I receive gladly, with a few exceptions very regularly, and it is of especial value to us as it tells us what is going on in the U. S. in the Art business. The result of the Reisinger sale was a great disappointment here as the German pictures in the collection, at least, would have brought much higher figures in Germany, if the auction could have been held here, than they fetched at the sale in New York. On account of the war the German dealers could not get over to attend the sale, and the few orders given by them to agents were only on the strength of information in the Catalog, as to my knowledge none of the German dealers, save myself, had seen the collection.

Business with us, to our great surprise, has been more than good, but only the best is bought. The new "modern" art is not any more wanted, and is a thing of the past. The Barbizon School pictures, as well as those of the good old English School
by Romnev, Raeburn, Lawrence, Constable, etc., are still in demand, but only first class
examples.

During the whole war not once were good pictures offered for sale, which shows the financial wealth and strength of Germany.
Everything is going on as usual, theatres, concerts, all are open and crowded just as in times of peace.

Yours most sincerely,
Theodore Heinemann.
Munich, Feb. 23, 1916.

LONDON LETTER.

London, March 21, 1916.

In addition to Pieter de Hoogh's "La Collection," the National Gallery has purchased with the aid of the National Art Collections Fund, a "Madonna and Child" by Masaccio, which, while erroneously attributed to Gentile da Fabriano, was identified some years ago by Mr. Berenson as the central panel of the altarpiece painted by Masaccio in the early part of the 15th Century for the Church of the Carmine at Pisa. The picture belonged at one time to Samuel Woodburn, the famous picture dealer and figured at his sale at Christie's after his death. The picture has suffered to some considerable extent, the red of the ground showing through certain portions, but it is nevertheless a most acceptable example of this rare master. The panel is not at present shown to the public, but will be stored away in a place of safety until after the war. It is rather amusing to note that the remaining portions of the altarpiece are in Berlin!

The first of the "Empty Frame" Portraits, which formed a novel feature of the last Red Cross Sale at Christie's, at which gifts were made by a number of leading portrait painters, of framed black canvases to be painted later, according to the behest of the purchaser, has now been completed and is on view this week for the first time. This is the "Portrait of Mr. Lloyd George," by Augustus John, which, for some time past, has been awaited with considerable interest. As was to be expected from the work of an artist of so much originality the Minister of Munitions has not been depicted as the benign and rather suave gentleman to whom the ordinary sketch has accustomed us, but has drawn instead a particularly vivid and forceful portrait of the man of affairs, working under immense strain, but with every faculty strung to its highest. The picture, although it is probable that owing to the difficulty of obtaining sittings it did not occupy more than about nine hours in all, is a remarkable achievement and will be a most valuable addition to the Aberdeen Art Gallery for which it is destined. The canvas was bought by its chairman, Sir James Murray for the sum of 210 guineas. In connection with the Red Cross Sale, I may mention that for the forthcoming sale a gift has been made by Mr. Rochelle Thomas of a French flag taken at Waterloo, a trophy which very rarely comes into the market, but examples of which are to be seen in certain of the French museums.

Old English Furniture Exported.

It is noticeable that, owing to the suspension of the importation of furniture from abroad, fewer antiques of Continental workmanship are exposed for sale, in addition to which the majority of the objets d'art exported by our dealers to America since the outbreak of war have been of English workmanship. For the time being I understand that all originality of design in the manufacture of modern furniture is at a stand still, for the majority of the buyers, who do not confine their purchases to the antique, insist that the new stuff shall be as faithfully as possible reproduced from the old models. For the sake of the encouragement of contemporary art, it is hoped that some modification of taste will before long manifest itself.

The Allied Artists' Association is holding its exhibition this year at the Grafton Galleries and once more shows a catholic impartiality towards every type of art movement. Although it is by no means easy for the spectator to continually adjust his point of view from one school of artistic thought to another, it is distinctly useful to have the opportunity of contrasting side by side the somewhat conflicting claims of "Futurism," "Cubism," "Post-Impressionism," and numerous other kindred cults, and in spite of the somewhat chaotic condition of mind which is apt to result, the conglomeration of impressions is distinctly illuminating in the insight which it affords into the experimental methods of the day. Happily, the restriction of space has led to the weeding out of a considerable number of works, so that it is easier than in former years to gain a coherent idea of the whole.

Miss Vanessa Bell, who is exhibiting at the Omega workshops, follows in Mr. Roger Fry's footsteps in regard to her use of colored wall papers as portions of her pictures. Severini accustomed us some years ago to the introduction of spangles and tinsel into his pictures of ballet-girls, but it is doubtful whether the impression of actuality does not suffer, rather than thrive on such extreme methods.

Then comes the art of the restorer."

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, March 21, 1916.

This month has opened with what will possibly prove the most important art exhibition during the war—the Triennial, reviewed in my last letter. The regular holding of the Triennial Salon was first attempted about 20 years ago, with the idea of presenting a review of the best work of the annual Salons of each preceding period of years. There were some lapses from regularity in the holding of the Salon and its character also has changed, owing to the new groupings of the artistic brotherhood which have gradually come about. Works which have appeared in both the Autumn and the Independent Salons, are now admitted, as well as those of the two older institutions.

Portraits of the generals in the French service, painted from studies made "at the front," and a series of pictures entitled "Souvenirs of the Great War," are exhibited at the Georges Petit galleries by J. F. Boucher, official painter to the armies of the Republic.

After a deal of discussion, pro and con, the French under-secretary for the fine arts at last decided to open a part of the Louvre to the public. The whole of the palace had been closed since the early days of August, 1914, and the most valuable of its treasures were transported soon afterward to Toulouse, where they still remain. The section that was least disturbed is that of sculpture, and the halls devoted to mediaeval renaissance, and modern statuary are those which the public is now invited again to visit. Some rare works that were not visible before have even been brought forth out of the reserves vaults, and thus the opportunity is rendered all the more interesting.

A gallery on the Place Vendome is showing just now some very good works by the contemporaneous Dutch school. Among them are landscapes with cattle by Mauve, an interior with figures by Blommers, and a watercolor by J. Maris.

The American Art Ass'n is preparing for a second exhib'n of works of French artists, the majority of whom are in the trenches. Eric Tayne.

LOS ANGELES.

Charles Orchardson, aged and eccentric painter, has been victorious in his final legal battle for the recovery of a large number of his own paintings in a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals.

In Orchardson's complaint he alleged that he turned 105 pictures over to Christie under a contract in which Christie agreed to act as agent in the proposed sale of the works and that Christie refused to make a settlement with the plaintiff.

BUFFALO.

The exhibitions of oils by the "Society of Men Who Paint the Far West" and of etchings by Stephen Parrish in the Albright Gallery have closed, the former going to Worcester, Mass., Museum and the latter to some Western cities. The display of oils by Charles Caryl Coleman, has also closed.

The 22nd annual exhibition of the Buffalo Society of Artists will open April 15 in the Albright Gallery. A fellowship prize of $50 has been offered. Only original works in oil, watercolor, black and white, and sculpture, which have never been in a public exhibition in Buffalo are eligible.

At the Albright Art Gallery an exhib'n of French and Belgian Art, selected from the Panama-Pacific Exposition, is now on. This exhibition is on tour of various museums throughout the country, in charge of Mrs. Ethel Quinton Mason, and is made up of the greater part of the French exhibit shown in the Palace of Fine Arts at the Exposition. It represents in a most instructive manner the general trend of French Art at the present time, and it is the desire of those responsible for the collection to exhibit chiefly works produced within the last fifteen years and by men of recognized ability of every school. The Belgian paintings were selected from the retrospective exhibition in the French Pavilion. This collection comprises 245 canvases by the most celebrated men of the day, 29 sculptures and 21 prints.

There is an interesting exhib'n on of watercolors by Carl J. Nordell, in connection with the display of arts and crafts from the San Francisco Expos'n. Most of the pictures are those done abroad during his student days and are full of color and vitality.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

An exhib'n of 115 watercolors from the American Watercolor Soc'y opened recently at Edwards' Art Place, under the auspices of the Springfield Art Ass'n, with a large public reception.

On April 21-23 the sixth annual art exhibit of Saginaw artists will take place in the Auditorium banquet hall, Saginaw, Mich. Three prizes will be offered for the best oil, watercolor, and etching.

Display of Graphic Art.

The American Institute of Graphic Arts has arranged at the National Arts Club, where it remains to April 14th a most important exhibition of American printing. This is arranged in wall and floor cases and includes the very valuable exhibit of "The Evolution of Printing," loaned by the American Type Founders Co. and the library of the General Theological Seminary.

In this exhibit, besides the books before and after Gutenberg, there are the first editions and his son, the Aldine and Elzevir presses, Plantin and Estienne and a number of examples of early American printing. There are besides bronze busts of Franklin, by Boyle and De Vinne by Beach and a portrait of Alexander Anderson, the first American wood engraver and examples of his work.

There are exhibits of books, booklets, catalogs, stationary, circulars and folders, menus, cards, labels and wrappers, calendars, maps, postage stamps, posters and examples of color plate and process printing, made by firms and companies all over the country, as well as examples of work of designers and illustrators. A notable feature is a display of American posters loaned by Mr. Harry M. Sparks.

THE ANDERSON GALLERIES
Madison Ave. at Fortieth St., New York

An exhibition of a number of oils by prominent foreign and American artists, is now on, under the auspices of the Washington State Art Ass'n in Seattle, Wash. The exhibit includes an unusually good and typical portrait of the late G. A. Healy.

CHICAGO.

From the Panama-Pacific Exposition have come 27 framed drawings from the Japanese art School in the educational building at the big show to this city's public library.

Joseph Pennell etchings "London in War Time"—25 in number, are shown in a local gallery. There are day as well as night scenes of the city, among the most conspicuous "The Moon of the Harvest of Death," "The Sword Blade Rays," "The River in Search-Light," "The Long Black Line."

A. G. Warshawsky, the painter of Breton peasants, has painted a portrait sketch, "Dorothy Q," which the patronesses of the French Orphan Fund has taken "for sale" at a price of $19,000, half of the proceeds to go to the charity fund.

Earl Reed, the etcher of the sand dunes and the forest, has "arrived" as a sculptor and presents the plastic reflection of "Old Sipes," a veteran and eccentric inhabitant of the Dune Country.

Charles E. Hallberg, familiar to all lovers of marines, entertained the Austin's Woman's Club recently, in his studio—and showed a number of his recent paintings. The artist's son, Ben Hallberg, mural painter and landscapist, also showed some of his best works.

Edith Lucile Howard has some 20 paintings on view at a local gallery done in Ireland. Miss Howard's canvases are always welcomed here.

The Independent Society of Artists has been organized. It is composed of some 75 of the younger painters and sculptors, all ardent believers in "exhibitions under the free jury system." These artists are going in for originality in work, and for their own choice of subjects and modelings, instead of using the judgment of a jury. The Board includes Allen Swisher, President, 808 East Erie St.; Norman Tolson, George W. Weisenburg, Lance W. Hart, George F. Weisenberg, John Sileika, Roy S. Hambleton. The first exhibition will be installed Mar. 28.

"The Arts Club" is the name of a new organization to be formed on March 22, when a committee of the whole will meet at the Art Institute to perfect plans for the launching of the Club. The idea is to follow more or less closely the purpose and policy of the National Arts Club of New York. Of the membership 150 can be active workers in the arts. It is intended to have a permanent home in Michigan Avenue. The dues to members will not exceed $50. Many local art lovers, artists, and professional people have endorsed the movement and signified their desire to help organize the Club and place it on a firm foundation.

The Art Institute announces the 28th annual exhib'n of watercolors, pastels, etc., May 11 to June 7. The artists on the jury are Gustave Baumann, Grace Ravlin, Chas. W. Dahlgreen, Carolyn D. Tyler and William Penhallow Henderson, the remaining members being the art committee of the Art Institute.

The fifth Swedish-American art exhib'n will be held in the hall of the Swedish clubhouse, 1258 North La Salle Street, Apr. 30-May 7. The exhib'n committee includes C. S. Peterson, C. E. Carson, G. F. Anderson, K. A. Warner, E. A. Anderson, R. Engberg, I. Holmstrom, A. Karlsteen, J. Sandell, E. Werner and F. A. Winship.

The Independent Society of Artists has been organized to hold exhibitions in which the point of view of the younger men will be expressed. This exhib'n will be genuinely catholic and cover a range from extremely ultra-modern work to that quite conservative. The first showing will be in the Ohio building, Wabash Ave. and Congress St., from Apr. 4-23.

The home of the new Arts Club, recently organized, will probably be the property situated between the Fine Arts Building and the Chicago Club on Michigan Ave. The top floor will be used as an art gallery. H. Effa Webster.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

Bottinelli's life-size bust of Miss Carolyn Boyd has been placed in the Arnot Gallery.

Louis Agassiz Fuertes, of Ithaca, is showing his bird paintings at the Arnot Gallery this month. Nature lovers and students of bird lore are especially interested in his work.

LIMA (O.).

This city will undertake to build an art museum. Mr. Thomas S. Parkhurst, of the Toledo Museum, recently delivered addresses in Lima on the community value of such an institution. Local people of means will be appealed to help along the project.

SEATTLE.

Some of the best oils from the San Diego (Cal.) Exposition are in the exhibition of the Seattle Fine Arts Society, which continues to the latter part of March. Among the artists represented by excellent examples are Ernest Lawson, George Bellows, Childe Hassam, William Glackens, George Luks, Robert Henri, Guy P. du Bois, John Sloan, and Carl Springhorn.

PHILADELPHIA.

The following artists in the current Pa. Academy exhibition have received the Lambert awards: Nancy M. Ferguson, for her "In Provincetown"; H. Giles, "Holidays"; T. Van Soelen, "Along the River"; Natalie Peck, "Storm Clouds," and Roy O. Gamble, "The Old Courtyard."

Significant of the growing importance of art culture as a factor in the curriculum of the university student will be the fifth Annual Meeting of the College Art Association, at the University of Pa., April 21-22. One session will be devoted to the question of what art instruction the Bachelor of Art course should offer to the future artist, museum worker, art writer and layman. Mr. Edward Robinson, N. Y.; R. W. de Forest, President; Profs. Allan Marquand, J. C. Van Dyke and George H. Chase will speak. The subjects will be "The College Art Museum and Art Gallery," "A Working College Museum of Originals," "A College Museum of Reproductions" and "Loan Exhibits in College Art Galleries." This discussion will be opened by Prof. Frank J. Mather. Special papers will be read by Prof. Arthur Wesley Dow on "Modern Tendencies in Art"; "The Doubting Thomas," a bronze group of Andrea del Verrocchio, by Prof. John Pickard, Missouri; "Art Education in Ohio," by Prof. Chas. F. Kelley, and "Siennese Art as Represented in the Fogg Museum," by Prof. Geo. H. Edgell.

An exhibition of American and European

MINNEAPOLIS.

A collection of early Chinese are has been acquired by the Institute from the Dunwood fund, comprising 10 jades, from the woody fund, comprising 10 jades, from the Ming, Sung and Yuen paintings.

The Fine Arts Institute has just had some important additions of Oriental art; one, a gift from Mr. Chas. L. Frier of Detroit, a Chinese painting on silk, a portrait of a lady of rank by Tang Yiu (Ming).

The Institute has purchased some fine pieces of Ming jades. One of the largest collections of jades in the U. S. belongs to Mr. T. B. Walker of this city.

Mrs. Bertrum, who took the medal at the San Francisco Fair in wood-block prints, has just returned from her fourth visit to Japan, where she has studied and worked at wood-block printing. The artist has brought back, after her absence of one and a half years, some very fine examples of her new work, with many new and original ideas.

M. C. Wells.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The Dutch paintings which formed the Holland section in the Fine Arts Palace at the S. F. Exposition will be shown in the Exposition's Fine Arts Gallery here, May 1-July 1 next.

The Luxembourg collection of oils, now on exhibition in the Fine Arts Gallery of the Exposition, will remain until April 1.

posters, under the auspices of the Penna. Museum and School of Industrial Art, will be on view at the School until April 10.

April 1 has been appropriately chosen as the opening day for a "fake" art exhibit at the Pa. Museum.

Many of the fakes are made in Philadelphia; others come from London and Paris. One of the desires of the trustees of the Museum is that the public will gain knowledge of the difference between genuine and imitation art objects, and that the wholesale exploitation of an uninformed public will be more difficult in the future.

A portrait of the late Justice John P. Elkin has been presented to the Supreme Court by Attorney-General Brown on behalf of the Elkin family.

More than 100 burlesques on the current Penn'a Academy exhibition are shown at the Academy. Three prizes have been awarded for the cleverest "take-offs" on canvases in the regular exhib'n.

Rare and scarce Americana and a collection of North American Indian curios were sold Mar. 31, and a remarkable set of autograph letters by Gen. P. G. T. Beauregard will be sold Apr. 4 at Stan V. Henkel's Rooms.

The University Club has purchased Joseph T. Pearson's "On the Valley," the picture which won the Temple Gold Medal and the Edward T. Stotesbury Prize of $1,000 at the Penna. Academy exhibition recently closed. It is said that local collectors have offered the Club four times the price paid for the canvas, but all offers have been declined. Eugene Castello.

The Columbia S. C. Art Ass'n, organized several weeks ago, now has 130 members. The residents of this city, who are interested in art, including both workers and collectors, have made a gratifying response.

Watercolors by British artists from Thomas Walker's Galleries, Cornwall, England, are shown at Orr's Gallery. Included are works by Arthur Tucker, Frank Rouse, Leyton Forbes, Tom Rowden and Rosa S. Bowers.

LOUISVILLE.

The 6th annual show of the Louisville Artists' League is on in the Public Library. The artists exhibiting are J. B. Alberts, Jr., Alice Cane, J. A. Doll, Harvey Joiner, P. A. Plaschke, R. M. Rasmussen, Miss Patty Thum, Fred. Weygold, C. S. Williams, Powhatan Woodbridge and Walter Ufer.

TWO ART ESTATES.

Ellen W. Hodges has filed in the Supreme Court a petition, asking for ancillary letters of administration on the estate of art dealer Charles Francis Williamson, who lost his life on the Lusitania. The assets in this State are claimed to be about $150,000, which are almost equalled by the debts and it is stated that the transfer tax should not be over $100. One of the debts is $100,000 due to the estate of Alfred G. Vanderbilt. According to the will, Millie A. Baker gets $10,000 and half the residue, the rest going to father, sister and brothers.

Miss Mary A. Mears, author, has received letters of administration on the estate of her sister, the Sculptor Helen Farnsworth Mears. The amount of the estate is about $3,000, which is to be shared by the administratrix and her sister, Louise Mears Fargo, of Lake Mills, Wis.

"The Home of the Thrush," a characteristic canvas by the late Roswell M. Shurtleff, was sold last week in Springfield, Mass., for $1,500. This was one of the artist's smaller works, but one of his best.

BOSTON.

The 61st Annual Exhibition of the Boston Art Club is on through April 22. Being one of the leading art events of the year, it has, of course, produced the usual tempest in a teapot (or perhaps one should say, in a paint pot) with respect to the question of "who are present" and who are not. Having reached the venerable age of 61 years, with a membership composed of "arrived" business men of artistic aspirations and "businesslike" artists, it is to be presumed that the Art Club knows how to manage its own affairs. Nevertheless, in many an animated "talkfest" anent the exhibition, heads are shaken dismally over the list of unfamiliar exhibitors. Mirabile dictu! One looks in vain here for a Tarbell or a Benson, for an Enneking or a Hale, a Paxton or a DeCamp, a Churchill or a Chase. Neither will one find in the collection any work of Bosley or of James, the Art Museum's talented young instructors; and as for the sculptors—Dallin, Pratt, Kitson, for example—where are they? Where, too, the younger generation of sculptors, with the exception of W. H. Atkins?

Some strikingly brilliant "imported" examples jump to the eyes at first glance. Take, for instance, the one and only Frieseke. He sings (for colors are said to have sound) in bright yellow and blue notes about a pale-faced lady standing by a yellow birdcage—a very smart achievement, but a little off key. Luis Mora's hackneyed Spanish-shawled lady is the natural centre of another wall, and holds the place effectively. A big Davis landscape, with drifting clouds, fills a corner. Then there is a spirited Woodbury marine, with its booming wave, and its group of lively bathers adding a warm note of color. Alden Weir sends a poetic green landscape, and Charles Rosen, a good snowscape. That smart "youngster," Leopold Seyffert, has a typical study of peasants. Nor should mention be omitted of a number of clever young Boston painters, who have but recently emerged from the student class, as for instance, Misses Beatrice Whitney, Gertrude Fiske, and Marion Pooke, who occupy a goodly portion of the wall space. Taken all in all, a very interesting exhibition, despite its curious and unexplained "sins of omission!"

It is understood that the next show at the St. Botolph Club will be the joint offering of the cosmopolitan Frieseke and the young sculptor, F. W. Allen.

A decided innovation in art circles is scheduled for the last three days of next week, when the work of ten well known Boston painters will be exhibited and sold at auction at a local auction gallery. It is to be hoped that enterprising art lovers will take this opportunity to secure the works of such artists as Louis Kronberg, Abbott Graves, Hendricks A. Hallett, Edmund Garrett, and others represented in this sale. In the catalog are listed some notable examples of Kronberg's ballet and dancing girls shown at important exhibitions throughout the country.

A group of 10 local artists have an exhibition of about 200 pictures at Leonard's Bromfield St. galleries, preparatory to their sale at auction, April 6-8. The 10 painters represented are S. C. Carbee, C. C. E. Garrett, A. Graves, H. A. Hallett, M. H. Hardwick, L. Kronberg, G. W. Lawlor, C. F. Pierce and F. H. Tompkins.

The Robert Gould Shaw collection of dramatic prints, portraits, Mss., playbills, magazines, plays and biographies of players is now attractively displayed in the new Harvard University Library.

The Museum has acquired Charles W. Hawthorne's "The Mother," recently shown at the R. C. & N. M. Vose Galleries.

The Voses will soon open an exhib'n of works by deceased American painters, and an important Bierstadt will be included. John Doe.

MILWAUKEE.

There are nearly 100 paintings and etchings in the March exhib'n at the Milwaukee Art Soc'y Galleries, including 24 landscapes by the late W. C. Fittler, 28 canvases by Wm. E. Schummacher, recently from Paris, and 25 pictures by Robert Henri of N. Y. There are also etchings and monotypes by Childe Hassam and Charles Dahlgren.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

An exhibition of 25 oils and 71 sketches by Harry B. Lachman closed at the Nineteenth Century Club on Thursday. The former consist of landscapes painted in France and Spain, and the sketches were made in those countries as well as in Italy, Switzerland, Bavaria, the Tyrol, and Northern Africa. Several of these canvases have been hung in the Paris Salons.

John F. Carlson will have a "one man" show here April 6-20.

CEDAR RAPIDS, (IOWA).

The Art Ass'n will purchase Louis Ritman's canvas, "In Pensive Mood," recently exhibited here. The next exhibit here will be of 50 canvases by Nicholas R. Brewer of Minneapolis.

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY

Mr. Warner to Lecture.

Mr. Langdon Warner, of the Cleveland Museum, will give a series of six lectures on "The Development of Chinese Art," at the Knoedler Galleries, 556 Fifth Ave., on Apr. 10, 13, 17, 20, 24 and 27, at 3 o'clock.

Tickets for the course at ten dollars may be obtained by application to Miss Belle Greene, 33 E. 36 St., or at the Galleries.

"Mrs." not "Miss" Brumback.

It appears that, through a misunderstanding, the Kansas City artist, Mrs. Louise Brumback, now exhibiting her pictures at the Petrus Stuyvesant Club, was given the title "Miss" for "Mrs." in the review of her work which appeared last week.

The ART NEWS regrets to have innocently called Mrs. Brumback "out of her name."

Pres't Weir's Daughter Engaged.

President of the Nat'l Academy and Mrs. J. Alden Weir have announced the engagement of their elder daughter, Miss Caroline Alden Weir to Mr. George P. Ely, the son of Mrs. George Ely and the late George Ely of Lyme, Conn.

Adams-Langhorne.

Miss Katherine Langhorne, landscape painter and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis C. Langhorne of Plainfield, N. J., was married at her home on Mar. 10 to Mr. Benjamin Pettigill Adams of the editorial staff of the Literary Digest. The bride and groom are on a trip to Hawaii and Japan.

Hugo Ballin, who spent four years painting at his home at Saugatuck, Conn., has taken a studio at 18 West 47 St. where he has been at work all of this winter. During the time that he lived at Saugatuck, he painted some thirty-five mural decorations, a number for the Executive Chamber at Madison, Wis. Several were painted for the home of Mrs. Oliver G. Jennings, and a number of overmantels for private houses. He has also painted a number of portraits.

The print department of the Brooklyn Museum has opened a most interesting memorial exhibition of the works of the recently deceased Henry Wolf, the famous wood engraver. Over 200 prints are shown.

At the MacDowell Club, tonight, there will be an "Italian Fantasy," drawn upon Shakespearean themes.

The dinner given to the Society of Women Painters and Sculptors at the National Arts Club last week, by Mrs. Helen Foster Barnett, at which some 200 guests were present, was both interesting and successful. After the dinner Shakespeare talks were given by Mary Austin and Mrs. D. Cohen. Old English songs and dancing followed. Mrs. Barnett, it will be recalled, is the donor of the annual prize for sculptors under 35 years, at the Winter Academy exhibition. She is affectionately called "The Mother of Young Sculptors."

An interesting loan display of screens by Sotatsu, a follower of Koyatsu, is now on at the Arden Gallery, 599 Fifth Ave.

David Edstrom's latest work in stone is a two-figure group of the granddaughters of the late Frank W. Higgins, governor of New York. Ten of the sculptor's works have been purchased by the Swedish Government for the Thiel Gallery in Stockholm, and other works of his are at the Salon in Paris and in the collection of Mrs. White-law Reid.

The St. Paul Institute has purchased "Winter Morning," by Robert F. Gilder of Omaha.

During 1915 the Reading (Pa.) Art Gallery acquired 45 pictures, as well as some valuable terra cottas and porcelains.

Alexander Zeitlin, who recently returned from Paris, has taken a studio at 59 Gramercy Park.

George W. King, of Utica, recently showed 80 oils in the Utica Public Library.

William P. Henderson is in Santa Fe, N. M., making studies of the American Indian.

Modern Art at the Salmagundi.

At the Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., on the eve of Mar. 24, the members and a number of guests listened or took part in a discussion of "Tendencies in Modern Art," as presented by Frederick James Gregg. In the informal argument which followed Messrs. Groll, Blumenschein and Vezin participated.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Coming Daniel S. Miller Sale.

As already announced in the ART NEWS, the art collections of the late Daniel S. Miller, a brother-in-law of the late Jay Gould will be placed on exhibition on the ball-room floor and an adjacent suite of ten rooms in the Hotel Savoy, Thursday, April 13, to be sold there by Mr. Samuel Marx, April 17, and the following four afternoons and evenings.

Mr. Miller lived in such retirement that even his intimate friends, at the time of his death, were surprised to learn of accumulations he had made. His collection includes important paintings of modern American and foreign schools, jades, rock crystals, faïences, Hispano Moresque plaques, Sevres and other ceramics, ivories, miniatures, old silverware, editions de luxe, fine prints and other property.

John Anderson Picture Sale.

The 87 pictures by old and modern masters, forming the private collection of Mr. John Anderson, Jr., will be on exhibition from this morning at the American Art Galleries, to the time of their sale by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, Thursday eve., April 6 next, in the Plaza Ballroom.

Mr. Anderson has been for some years a studious collector and has selected his paintings with unusual care. The ART NEWS last week reviewed the handsome Catalog, which was prepared under Mr. Anderson's own supervision, and to which he has added an appreciatively written monograph on the "Entombment of Christ," "Pieta" and an "Ecce Homo," attributed respectively to Rembrandt, Hubert Van Eyck and Raphael in his collection. Mr. Anderson argues well for the correctness of the Rembrandt authorship of "The Entombment" giving both the objections and the reverse to such authorship. He also proves himself a good disputationist in his remarks on the attributed Van Eyck and Raphael.

In the introduction to his exceptionally handsome catalog, which, as the Art News noticed last week, is without the hackneyed and outworn dry descriptions of individual pictures, for which are substituted brief biographical details regarding the artists, and good half tone reproductions of each work, Mr. John Anderson, Jr., gives an entertaining story of his art collecting. He says that "early in life he decided to become the possessor of at least one good authentic example of one of the acknowledged great painters of the world; that long study of art, and later travel, convinced him that there could be no competent judgment without sight and first studying the great works of the masters; and as a collector he was not content merely to seek great names and certified pedigrees." He says further that "he has found true the old statement of John Durand. 'The art of all modern schools suffers more or less by contact with the works of the old masters.'"

The pictures in the Anderson collection are certainly varied as to schools and periods. There are examples of such early masters as Adriaen Brouwer, Gonzales Coques, Correggio, Cuyp, Marks, Geeraerts, van Goyen, Holbein the younger, Jordaens, Metsu, Murillo, van der Neer, A. den Ostade, Jacob and Solomon Ruysdael, Schalcken, Teniers, and Jan Wynants, and others attributed to Rembrandt, Velasquez, H. van Eyck, and Raphael of the Continental old masters; to Constable, John Cotman, David Cox, W. Etty, Watson Gordon, Hogarth, Hudson, Kneller, Morland, Northcote, Ramsey, Reynolds, Richardson, Romney, Shayer, Stothard, Turner, and David Wilkie of the earlier and a little later English schools; to Jules Breton, Calame, Detaille, Greuze, Huguet, and Troyon of the French school; and to such American painters as W. H. Bartlett, A. B. Durant, William Hart, George Inness, George H. McCord, Charles Willson Peale, Julian Rix, Thomas Sully, and A. H. Wyant.

Paintings by Old and Modern Masters.

The 300 paintings now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries preliminary to the public sale on Mon., Tues. and Wed. evenings next, are consigned by William Macbeth, the estates of Florence B. Ruthrauff, and Dr. R. A. Witthaus, by Mrs. Joseph J. Little, by order of Henry B. Singer, of New York, and by other owners.

More than 200 artists are represented. The largest consignor is Mr. Macbeth, who sends a large number of paintings by Old Masters. In a letter Mr. Macbeth says that he bought the paintings in Holland more than twenty years ago, and they formed a collection which was the life work of a well-known resident of The Hague, M. Muijser. A few of the pictures were sold soon after their arrival in New York, but owing to his increasing interest in American pictures, he simply put them aside, postponing any exhibition yearly from year to year. The authenticity of many of these pictures has been well established by competent authorities, among them Dr. Hofstede de Groot, whose written opinion accompanies several of the canvases.

Paintings by Cotes, Reynolds, Rubens, Terburg, Van der Werff, and Van Ostade, are especially interesting, while among the modern paintings are fine examples of the work of Blakelock, De Haas, Inness, Keith, Moran, Twachtman, Wiggins, and many more.

Andrew Freedman Picture Sale.

The most important picture sale of the near future will be that of the 52 pictures owned by the late Andrew Freedman in the Plaza ballroom Friday evening, April 14, next. The pictures will be placed on exhibition in the American Art Galleries on Saturday April 8.

The Catalog of the collection emphasizes the high quality of the comparatively small collection as a whole.

Mr. Freedman's taste was for the examples of the Barbizon painters and their contemporaries and followers, although he secured a few modern Americans, and, fortunately for his heirs, three exceptionally good examples of the now most popular Blakelock. These are "Nymphs in the Forest," "Moonlight" and the "Edge of the Forest."

The first of these is an oblong, 16 inches in height by 24 in width, and has as subject a group of six small nude women in a forest glade with a pool in the centre—a Monticelli motif. The second, "Moonlight," is a small panel 9½ in. high by 7 in. wide, very rich in color, and the third, "Edge of the Forest" is a small but rich landscape.

The best Barbizon examples are those of Corot, (one of which, the "Nymphs Bathing," was in the Mary Jane Morgan and Alexander Blumensteil sales), Dupre, Troyon and Diaz. These, with other examples of later French painters were, with few exceptions, purchased from Koendler & Co. Good also, exceptionally so, are the examples of Fantin, Latour (2), Cazin (3), Fromentin, Isabe, Pasini, Harpignies (4), Henner (5), Vibert, Charelemont, Gerome, Thaulow, Ziem, Tissot, Alma-Tadema, Schreyer and the American Julian Rix.

Blanchard Japanese Colored Prints.

The collection of Japanese color prints and of Oriental curios, lacquers, bronzes, etc., formed by the late John Osgood Blanchard, with the aid of his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Blanchard, during a three years' residence in Japan, 1906-'09, is to be sold at the American Art Galleries on Wed. and Thurs. afts. and eves., next, April 5 and 6, and is now on exhibition there.

The prints comprise beautiful examples of Haranohu, Koryusai, Shunho, Kiynaga, Shuncho, Eishi, Utomaro, Toyokuni, Hokusai and Hiroshige, and there are some tryptiches by Shigenaga, Eishi, Toyohiro Eizan, and the "Seven Women of the Bamboo Grove" by Toyokuni, over which collectors will dispute.

The Haddock Library.

The library of the late B. F. Haddock of Philadelphia which the Anderson Galleries is to sell on the afts. of April 10-12, is an unusually good collection of the best editions of standard works in English literature, and there are many first editions and books illustrated by Cruikshank, Greenaway and others. Colored caricatures of Napoleon and books about him constitute an important division of the library.

In a separate alphabet, to complete the sessions, are interesting books from various consignors, including most of the Grolier Club publications and those of famous presses, and some desirable items of Americana. A book of the highest interest is "The Second Punick War," printed in London in 1661—a royal folio in the original calf, which brilliant impressions of the plates—which was presented by the author 'to my honour'd friend, Sir William Penn.' In addition to this inscription the book contains a note by Penn, and his very rare bookplate.

Books on American History.

The library of the late Edson Salisbury Jones of Greenwich, Conn., and the library of Charles J. Fisk of New York are to be sold by the Anderson Galleries on the afts. of Thurs. and Fri. next. The Jones library consists of American and English heraldry, books relating to the early history of New England and New York, and a large number of scarce genealogies. The Fisk coll'n consists mainly of sets of the standard authors, for the most part in attractive morocco binding; but there are some very interesting books in miscellaneous literature.

Rare Books and Mss. Sale.

An important sale is announced at the American Art Galleries on the afts. and eves of April 5-7. It includes rare volumes, Mss. and autographs and Mss. from several libraries including those of the late William E. Dunwoody of Minneapolis, Charles B. Eddy of Plainfield and Albert Ottinger of this city among others. There are also roadsides, portraits in mezzotint and line, colored plates, drawings by Cruikshank and Rowlandson, incunabula N. Y. City views and N. Y. and New Jersey maps.

Dr. John C. Ferguson Sale.

Dr. John C. Ferguson, during a continuous residence in China of some 25 years, studied deeply the expression of the inner thought of the Chinese, as expressed in their Government and art products. This study led him to collect, at first porcelains and coins, and later paintings and bronzes, and when he returned home recently, he brought his collections with him. An enforced return to China now makes the sale of these collections necessary, and they will be placed on exhibition at the American Art Galleries today, and sold there next Friday afternoon, April 7.

The collection is a choice one of ivory carvings, jades, porcelains (some rarely fine pieces), enamels, pottery, framed fragments of Chun ware, bronzes and paintings. The bronzes and paintings will especially appeal to collectors.

Great Literary Rarities.

A sale of rare books in many divisions of literature is announced by the Anderson Galleries for the aft. and eve. of April 14. The first, second, and fourth folios of Shakespeare, 1623, 1632, and 1685, are among the items. Neither is a perfect copy, each having a few leaves in facsimile or other repairs, but it is very seldom indeed that these folios, in any condition, come on the market. Among the Americana in the sale are: the rare first edition of Smith's History of New York, 1757, with a presentation inscription by the author; Shepard's Clear Sunshine (the third of the Eliot tracts), 1648; Two Voyages to New England, 1674; New and Further Narrative of New England, 1676; the Christian Philosopher by Cotton Mather, 1721, and Edwards's Faithful Narrative, 1737. All of these are excessively rare. A large and sound copy of the Nuremberg Chronicle, 1493; a first edition of John Smith's England's Improvement, 1670, and a first edition of Paradise Lost are among many other rarities. The sale will include bindings by such famous artists as Derome, Chambolle-Duru, Riviere, Padeloup, Bretault, Root, Bayntun, Dubois, Ruban, and Roger Payne.

Oriental Art at the "A. A. A."

At the opening sale in the American Art Galleries on Tuesday aft. of the Oriental collections of Mrs. E. G. Simmons and C. A. Hirschfelder, 248 numbers brought $4,469. Mr. E. Franklin gave $130 for a Hawthorne temple jar and $80 for a pair of the same. For $105 Mr. F. R. Welsh secured a white ovoid jar and Mr. E. Franklin $100 for a garniture of five famille verte jars. Mrs. T. Carney gave $90 for a Ming Celadon jar and Mr. Seaman, Agent, $85 for an imperial Peking enamel sweet meat dish. Miss E. Cockcroft paid $62.50 for a green temple jar, and Mr. M. L. Jellinek $60 for a famille rose jar.

On Wed., $8,750 was realized, which brought the grand total of the sale to $13,252. Mr. Bernet, agent, paid $430 for two silver gilt groups of Knights in armor. Miss Lorenz, agent, gave $310 for a pair of moss green jade bowls. Mr. Seaman $265 for a XVII Century Bavarian tankard of ivory and Mr. S. L. M. Shafer $205 for a XVII Century German hunting horn in the same material. Mr. Edson Bradley gave $165 for a carved rock crystal box and Mr. S. Wyler $120 for a silver gilt statutte of King Arthur.

Chinese and Japanese Art at Anderson's.

The collection of Chinese potteries, embroideries, porcelains and paintings and Japanese color prints, sold at the Anderson Galleries on Mar. 23 fetched $1,873.30. A Chieu Lung peach vase brought $50. Mr. A. C. Morse gave $37.50 for a Chinese jade nephrite and coral plant of the Chien-Lung period and Mr. R. Keating $37 for a Yung-Cheng famille rose vase. Mr. J. Boyd paid $35 for a pair of Chinese bottle shaped glass vases.

English Opinion on "THE CONCEPTION OF ART" H. R. Poore, -G. P. Putnam's Sons $2.00 net. "The Conception of Art" displays to the full a deep philosophic sense, mastery of phrase and wide scholarship and places the author in the front rank of thinkers on Art. It turns a blast of the open air of commonsense on the elaborate mysteries which have cobwebbed the schools and the webs disappear."—Journal of Decorative Art, London.

 brought $8,147.60. Mr. George D. Smith gave $750 for the original letter book and pearl stylus used by Gen. Grant from Mar.
 29 to Apr. 9, 1865, containing the communications to Gen. Lee relative to the surrender of the army of Northern Virginia. He also gave $650 for a letter of Grant to Sherman, relating the terms of surrender of Johnston to the latter, $270 for a collection of autographs of Presidents, $210 for a letter of Longfellow, $55 for a letter of Catherine of Medicis to the Duc de Nemours, $52.50 for a letter of Edmund Burke, $51 for a bible given by Cromwell to Capt. Beale, and $50 for a letter of John Adams. Mr. I. Straus gave $660 for Grant's field despatch book with the carbon copies. To Mr. W. T. Wallace went at $605 a Maya Mss. of 17 leaves painted on deerskin. He paid $87.50 for a Dickens letter. Mr. F. W. Morris secured for $155 a letter of the signer, Francis Lightfoot Lee and for $110 a "Resolve of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay," signed by Samuel Adams. Mr. W.
 R. Benjamin paid $115 for a letter of Joseph Rodman Drake and Mr. James F. Drake
 $110 for a letter of Jefferson to Caesar Rodney, the Signer. Pierce and Scrope paid $92 for a letter of the Signer, Richard Henry Lee and $82 for a letter of Gen.

 Charles Lee. A letter of Charlotte Bronte went to Mr. Gabriel Weiss at $52.50.
 At the second and final session the amount realized was $7,411,075, which made the grand total for the 491 lots $15,559,035.
 The 23 Washington items brought $1,697,050
 and the same number of Ruskin items $1,554.
 Mr. George D. Smith gave $400 for a letter of Washington to his nephew about his plantation. He also gave $225 for another Washington letter and $190 for a duplicate of the bond given to Gov. George Clinton and bearing three Washington signatures.
 Mr. Smith further gave $200 for a Stevenson letter written from Hyeres. The highest price of the Ruskin items was $295, paid by Mr. Gabriel Weiss for 38 letters written to Thomas Dixon. Mr. F. W. Morris secured for $330 for a letter of the signer, William Whipple referring to the attitude of the Indian tribes in the Revolution towards the Colonies.

Mendonca and Others Picture Sale.
 What was claimed to be a "Portrait of Columbus" by the old Italian master, Parmigianao, was sold at the American Art Galleries Wed. eve. at the first session of an auction of pictures owned by the late Senor de Mendonca and others, for $10 to Mr.
 Aharonian of the Gothic Gallery.
 There were many bargains at the session, and dealers secured them for the most part. The highest figure obtained was $510, paid by Mr. M. H. Wilson for Georges Crocgart's "Disputed Passage." Other prices were $115, paid by Seaman, as agent, for A. Seifert's "Portrait of Young Lady";
 $200, paid by Mr. D. G. Dery for Grutzner's

MRS. WHITNEY'S LATIN QUARTER.

It is whispered in "inner" art circles that Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney plans to create an American "Latin Quarter" in the vicinity of Washington Square. Her purpose is to erect studios and studio apartments, compatible with the needs of the artists, and to the best of her ability to afford them necessary comforts within their means. It would seem that that section of the city promises soon to become popular with artists, as a large co-operative studio apartment building is to be erected on the South side of the Square, in which a number of well known painters have taken space.

NEW STUDIO APARTMENTS.

On the large plot, on the south side of Washington Sq., at the corner of Thompson St., directly opposite the Judson Memorial Church, will be erected a 14-story studio apartment house. The building is to be put up by a syndicate of artists under the name of the Washington Square Studios. The architect is Charles W. Buckham, who has planned other artists' apartments such as the Plaza Home Club and the Gainsborough Studios.

The committee who represent the subscribers and have general supervision of the project are: Carl J. Blenner, Edmund W. Greacen, Frank T. Hutchins, Charles Shingleton, and Albert Jaegers. It is hoped to have the studio apartments ready for occupancy early next year.

The first floor will be fitted up as club and meeting rooms for art and kindred societies, and in the rear will be a large restaurant. By a cooperative plan each artist may purchase his own apartment outright and have it designed according to his own ideas. The cost to the owners will vary from $9,000 to $16,000, and it is thought that there will be no necessity for charging additional assessments.

The structure which will not exceed 150 ft. in height, will be of the Gothic type, and the facade will be of light free brick and terra cotta, conforming to that of the Judson Memorial opposite. The cost, including the value of the land, is estimated at about $750,000.

KITSON'S BURNS STATUE.

H. H. Kitson's statue of Robert Burns, to be erected in the Public Gardens, Boston, is nearing completion at the sculptor's studio in Macdougall Alley. The great Scottish bard is represented working, carrying a heavy staff and accompanied by his faithful dog. The poet carries his Tam o' Shanter in his hand grasping it naturally with the staff. In the other hand he carries a book. His bare head is inclined forward and slightly downward, eyes and mouth having an expression of deep contemplation. A heavy cloak attached to the shoulder flows behind the figure as he moves, supplying a fine sweep of line from the side and rear. The cloak is fringed and the naturalistic treatment of this feature is sufficiently masterly to please the most fastidious lover of detail.

GERMAN ART FRAUDS.

A letter from Paris to the London Telegraph says: "Sequestration of German houses in Paris constantly leads to fresh discoveries of fraud practised by Germans settled here before the war. The Saxon firm of Thieme three months before the war was convicted and sentenced for forging the famous trade-mark of the Sevres porcelain manufactory of chinaware. The conviction evidently did not put an end to their practices. The property of a German shop, in Paris, under sequestration, has just been cataloged. Among goods consigned to the firm from Hamburg a couple of days before the war two imitation Sevres vases have been found, bearing one of the Sevres trade-marks—two L's interwoven.

The fraud was soon discovered, for two reasons. To begin with, the German manufacturer had forgotten to put a small letter beneath the two capital L's, which was the custom in the eighteenth century, the period from which the spurious vases were copied. Secondly, the cover of the vases bears a blue crescent. This is a bad blunder on the part of the German imitator. This crescent was the mark of Ledoux, who designed for the Sevres factory from 1758 to 1761, but the original eighteenth century vase imitated by the Germans is one that was manufactured at Sevres in 1780. Any connoisseur would thus have detected the fraud at once.

EXHIB'N OF FAKES IN PHILA.

A special exhibition of fakes and reproductions, which opened in Phila., at the School of Industrial Art, on Saturday, April 1, seems to be interesting the public, for since Sunday the attendance has been nearly 13,000, which is unusual. Requests from several other museums for assistance in organizing similar exhibitions have been received, and a campaign of education against spurious art works will be taken up all over the country. The Phila. exhibition, while not extensive, is designed to cover the broad field of industrial art, and it is hoped to organize a more comprehensive exhibition in the near future.

SELF ART ADVERTISING.

Hunt Diederich, a young sculptor and a grandson of the late William M. Hunt, who is now showing some of his work in an exhibition at the Bourgeois Gallery, 668 Fifth Ave., although born and long resident in Paris, whence he has recently returned, has the American advertising sense.

With some men and women friends, one of whom is in touch with a daily newspaper, he went to a knoll on the west side of Central Park, which was crowned with a pedestal, on which formerly stood a statue of Bolivar, removed because too inartistic, even for New York. On this abandoned pedestal he hoisted, with the aid of his friends, a colossal bronze of his own modeling, of two greyhounds struggling, which they had brought with them in an auto.

GARI MELCHERS RESIGNS.

Gari Melchers, art adviser to the Telfair Academy, Savannah, Ga., finding that he was no longer able to serve in that capacity, has presented his resignation and the curators have regretfully accepted it. Melchers has been connected with the Academy for 10 years, during which time he has purchased for it 42 pictures, added four new galleries, and equipped the building with electric light.

JOHN S. SARGENT HERE.

John Singer Sargent arrived Tuesday on the Nieuw Amsterdam and has been stopping with his friend, J. Carroll Beckwith, at the Schuyler, 59 W. 45 St., before proceeding to Boston to superintend the placing of the last of his decorations, "The Triumph of Religion" in the Boston Public Library. This is the first visit to America Mr. Sargent has made in 13 years, and he will remain in this country during the summer and devote himself chiefly to the painting of American landscapes. It is now three years since he announced his intention of giving up the painting of portraits. He received the commission for the monumental series of Boston decorations 16 years ago. The remainder of the work of this character is by Puvion de Chavannes and Edwin A. Abbey.

The following day, both morning and evening dailies printed columns of the advertising freak act, the Park police dismounted and carted off the greyhounds. Mr. Diederich's forte is that of a press agent. He has beaten his fellow American gentry at their own game.

WIDENER BUYS SCULPTURES.

It is announced that Mr. Joseph E. Widener has purchased from the Martelli of Florence two notable examples of Renaissance sculpture, a "David" by Donatello and a bust of "St. John" by Rossellino, for which he is said to have paid $225,000. The sculptures have not yet left Italy, whose government has consented to their exportation on condition that that country shall retain a third work of importance owned by the family. Arrangements for the shipment to Mr. Widener have been made by the Florentine dealer Fenaro.

The David is said to resemble the famous bronze of the same subject by Donatello, while the Rossellino is thought to have been modelled from one of the children of the owners of the Palazzo Martelli.

FRICK'S GAINSBOROUGH HERE.

Mr. Henry C. Frick's famous Gainsborough, "The Mall," recently purchased by him, as exclusively announced in the ART NEWS, through the Duveen Bros. and Thomas Agnew & Sons, from Sir A. Douglas Neeld, arrived on Tuesday on the Nieuw Amsterdam. It was taken to the Duveen Galleries, 720 Fifth Ave., and will be added to Mr. Frick's collection, without being publicly exhibited.

BLAKELOCK BENEFIT SHOW.

It is the hours between the deepening and the dark, the time of mystery and the hours when the moonlight throws its opalescence over land, tree and foliage, that had the greatest charm for Ralph Albert Blakelock, the American Rousseau, for whose benefit and that of his family a remarkably fine loan exhibition is now open, to April 15, at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave.

The committee in charge of the display consists of Mrs. Van Rensselaer Adams, Elliott Daingerfield, Harry W. Watrous and Frederick Fairchild Sherman, the last of whom furnishes a short foreword to the catalog, in which he calls attention to the untoward fate which some years ago closed apparently forever the painter's career.

That the mind of the painter, so long distraught, is apparently clearing is thought to be evidenced by his desire and ability to paint again and if no further permanent return to the normal follows, it will be at least a great satisfaction, that the renewed interest in his work which has brought about such a splendid representation of his art and public appreciation of it, will enable him to end his days in greater comfort and provide for a family, doubly stricken in the mental infirmity of both father and daughter.

Throughout the work of Blakelock, there runs a train of melancholy, side by side with an intense appreciation of beauty. The sunset, the starlight and the moonlight are the almost universally chosen effects, and in the present display of over forty works, there are but two "Springtime" and the "Landscape," the latter with the subtitle of "Early June," where the themes are in the lighter and more joyous vein. The earlier Indian scenes are also of much interest and remarkably fine little single figure examples in this line are "Shooting the Arrow" and "The Indian Girl."

In the lead in importance among the landscapes, pure and simple, is, of course, the great upright "Moonlight" of the Catholina Lambert sale, for which the Toledo Museum gave $20,000. Again moonlight is the effect in the beautiful lakeside scene owned by former Senator William A. Clarke. Other moonlights are the small and fine example owned by the Engineers Club, the picture with a stretch of water of Mr. Ralph Cudney, Mr. Frederick Fairchild Sherman's "Moonrise" and the glimpse through the delicate tracery of the pines, shown in Mr. George H. Ainslee's example.

It is this tracery of the foliage, as delicate as in the finer art of Japan, this lacquer of the interlaced leaves against the beautiful enameled skies of sunset, snow or starlight, that is the most characteristic feature of the painter's art. At times when he is at his best, he suggests Rousseau, as, for instance, in the "Autumn," owned by the Buffalo Museum and in the "A Cloudy Eve," with its two little figures in the distance loaned by the estate of George A. Hearn, and Mrs. Allan W. Adam's "Sunset." Monticelli comes to the mind in such examples as "The Vision of Life," with its graceful string of dimly suggested figures, owned by Mr. Joseph Snyder, "The Nymphs," with its superb sunset by the brookside, of Mr. James G. Shepherd and "A Nature's Mirror," from the Evans collection at the U. S. Nat'l Museum, where there is but a single nude.

From the Nat'l Museum collection comes also the large "Sunset, Navarro Ridge—California Coast," so masterly in its sky and its glory of diffused light over the shore. Perhaps the most complete of the Indian pictures is the "Story of the Buffalo Hunt," loaned by Messrs. A. H. and T. A. Ball, who also own a superb "Golden Sunset," and "The Indian Hunter's Camp," of Mr. George S. Palmer.

A few birds are introduced with fine effect in the witching "Afterglow," belonging to Mr. F. L. Montague. There is a most interesting early "Indian Encampment on the James River, North Dakota," owned by Snedecor & Co. Mr. Louis A. Lehmaier sends "The Old Oak"; Mr. John McCormack the view in "Spring Rock Cove" and the Lotos Club "Ruby Wine." There is fine quality in Mr. Lody Smith's "The Forests Marge," and an admirable example is the Buffalo Academy's "Autumn." There is a remarkable sky in Mr. James Speyer's "The Close of Day." A notable feature of the display is one of the landscapes which Scott & Fowles bought at the Lambert and the profits on whose resale are to be donated by that firm to the fund.

Other examples come from Elliott Daingerfield and Messrs. John F. D. Degener,

A BLAKELOCK SYMPOSIUM.

"The first real experiment with Ralph A. Blakelock, the insane American artist," says a writer in the 'N. Y. Times,' "to see how a touch of freedom will affect him will be tried within a week or so, when Dr. Ashley will bring him to New York from the Middletown, N. Y., Asylum, and take him to the exhibit of his own pictures now on at the Reinhardt Gallery. He remembers them all. That was indicated the other day at the Asylum when a copy of Mr. Daingerfield's illustrated book was shown him on the occasion of a call from Mrs. Blakelock. He was delighted to greet his wife, whom he had not seen for two years, for the simple reason that she had not had money enough to pay the fare to Middletown. He showed her some of the pictures that he had painted at the asylum, and gave her several to take home."

"Then, after this pathetic little exhibit of the cigar box pictures of the asylum period, they all looked over the Daingerfield book with the copies of the paintings that have given Blakelock his sure place as one of the greatest American artists.

"He recalled the now famous 'Brook by Moonlight,' which, at the recent Catholina Lambert sale, was knocked down for $20,000 to the Toledo Museum. Mar. Lambert is said to have paid $500 for the picture. 'I remember now,' he said, as they turned to the picture of it in the book, 'how I pondered the trunk of that tree for a long time, wondering if I had made it thick enough to support all the mass of top branches and foliage.'

"That same $20,000 'Moonlight' is one of his masterpieces that Blakelock will again see in the original when he comes down to his exhibit.

How a Picture Appreciated.

"Blakelock once set out from Harry Watrous' studio with that picture under his arm, determined to sell it for $50. His eighth child had been born that day and there was no money and little food in the house. Incidentally, the rent was so long overdue that the dispossess stage had been reached, a familiar situation in the Blakelock family. But there happened to be the new baby this time and something had to be done, hence the move to sell for $50 the picture that was to bring $14,000. But Watrous averted the disaster in part. When he saw what picture Blakelock had under his arm he begged and pleaded with him not to throw it away. Blakelock insisted on having $50 and getting it in the quickest way he knew how.

"'I'll give you $500 for it if you will wait three days,' said Watrous.

"'All right, Harry, it's yours, but will you let me have five dollars to-day on account?'"

"Watrous did. Then he paid the balance, and soon afterward sold the picture to the collector for $600 and gave Blakelock the extra hundred. That was probably the highest price Blakelock ever got for a picture. The lowest price that any one recalls now was $100 for thirty-three pictures, $3.03 a piece. Elliott Daingerfield vouches for that strongly.

"There used to be a junk dealer, Robert Fullerton, over on Third Ave. near 18 St., said Mr. Daingerfield, "who would buy anything from old bottles to a grand piano. One of his many specialties was paintings from students and poor artists. I was a student then, and more than once found it convenient to let the junk dealer have a study or sketch for the two or three dollars he was willing to pay. One day when I was in there he took me into a back room and showed me thirty-three pictures in one stack. "Ralph Blakelock painted every one of them," he said, "and I got the lot for $100."

"It was on the birth of the eighth child that Watrous had helped save the day, and Blakelock had said in jesting reply to his friend's protest against a family under such conditions: "Why, Harry, I just had to have a full octave."

Who Was This Collector?

"But the real crisis came with the one over the octave. The threat to dispossess figures in this story, too. Matters were so desperate a week or so before the end that Mrs. Blakelock sent word to a collector, who had bought several of her husband's pictures and begged him to come to the house. He did so, and was told that they must have money or be forced into the street. The collector looked over the artist's unframed pictures (Blakelock could never buy frames) and said there was nothing there he cared for. Then he pointed to a small picture and remarked that that might do if it were larger. He finally agreed to pay $200 for the same subject, repainted on a larger canvas, and Blakelock joyfully accepted the commission.

"This is what that collector said when Blakelock arrived with the painting: 'Well, I see you didn't hit it off this time.' That certainly is not the picture I offered to pay $200 for. I wouldn't have it in my house.' Then he relented and offered much less. Blakelock went home with the picture; the insult had been too much even for him. That is, it was too much for him when it was offered. But it could not compete with the practical starvation at home. He went back to the collector, who now offered a still lower figure, and counted out the money in bills. It was not such a large sum but what any gentleman of a high degree of culture and a lover of the arts might carry it in his pocket for incidentals.

"Blakelock took the cash and went home. He showed the money to his wife, counted it carefully, slowly, and then threw it in the kitchen fire. That was the end of Blakelock as a great American artist. He became violent that night. They took him away the next day and in the evening the one over the octave came, a boy.

"There are many stories as to just what did come as the last straw to cause the mental collapse of the artist, but the one concerning the burning of the money was told by the wife to Mr. Daingerfield. The stories that surely are not true are those to the effect that Blakelock's downfall was due to dissipation; that he peddled his pictures in saloons for liquor.

Harry Watrous' Reminiscences.

"Blakelock was practically a teetotaler," says Harry Watrous, who knew him best. "He never touched drugs. He had no vices of any sort. His was an extreme case of a man who did not know the value of his own work, who had no ability whatever for business, and who certainly did not know the meaning of money. He simply went to pieces under the strain of his mental suffering, due to his never-ending money plights.

"But he was queer. Some of the things he did in my studio were as crazy as the things you would expect a man to do in an asylum. Before I knew him at all, when he had a studio of his own, I was puzzled one day by hearing the endless thrumming of weird little dance tune on the piano in his rooms. As I was going out he opened his door and asked me to step into his studio, which I did. He ran to the piano and repeated the tune, then swung around on the stool and exclaimed: 'Do you think that will make 'em dance?' I asked what he meant, and he pointed to a picture he was at work on with a lot of Indians in it dancing. 'I've been trying to make 'em dance all day,' he said, 'and now I think I've got 'em going.'

"The picture which Blakelock, who loved music as he did painting, was at work on that day, running back and forth between easel and piano, was the 'Pipe Dance,' one of three Blakelocks now in the Metropolitan Museum.

Leon Dabo Philosophizes.

"Leon Dabo was another artist who knew Blakelock well in the last few years before he went away. 'I had come over from Paris,' said Dabo, 'to decorate the Church of St. John the Baptist in Brooklyn. I needed a big studio near the church, so I hired the loft of a stable from an Irish contractor. One day I went to this man's house and was taken into one of those frightful parlors, furniture in baby blue plush, walls covered with crayon portraits of all the members of the contractor's family, mantelpiece decorated with rubbish, but there, hanging above the same mantel, was a beautiful thing, beautiful even in that room. It was a picture by Blakelock. I asked why, of course, and the Irishman told me that it was something a poor devil of a painter who lived in one of his tenements around the corner had given him in part payment for a month's rent.

"The contractor took me to the door of the artist's flat, but would not go in himself for fear his call would be taken as a hint for the rent. He was a good-hearted person. That was how I met Blakelock, whom I got to know very well after that, and through him I learned as facts the unbelievable things about the American business instinct to get a bargain. I know of two pictures that Blakelock was forced into selling for thirty-five dollars, not thirty-five dollars apiece, but that sum for both. Within the last two years one of those two pictures has sold for eight thousand dollars. And the man who got them for seventeen dollars and a half apiece has given away three hundred thousand dollars' worth of pictures to the American public.

"These fellows may be lovers of art, but how they love a bargain! They are the scoundrels who sent Ralph Blakelock to the madhouse. And they boast of it, they gloat over it. I met a man over in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, the other day. 'I've got a Blakelock,' he told me, 'and I paid only twelve dollars for it. I want you to look at it and tell me what it is really worth.'

"These collectors, these benefactors, enriching themselves and their estates with the life work of a man whose life was destroyed by the starvation which they are responsible for, and all this in the name of the love of the things that are beautiful. And the Academy, the National Academy! What did it do to poor Blakelock? Fourteen years after he had been taken away to a lunatic asylum because his pictures had no commercial value to him, the Academy elects him an associate because his pictures have acquired commercial value. They elected Blakelock crazy when a picture by Blakelock sane sold for $13,000, and not before. Now, I say, they should elect him President because one of his pictures has sold for twenty thousand dollars.

Collectors Should Support Artist.

"But the collectors should pay for the support of Blakelock now. Ask every man who owns one of his pictures to contribute a dollar a year—not ten dollars, for that would be too much to expect of them, but one dollar a year—and that would yield enough to give him a decent room to live in at the asylum, some paint and brushes with which to amuse himself, sane or insane.

"If every man who owns a spurious Blakelock should contribute a dollar the fund would be much larger. The market is flooded with pictures that bear the forged name of the artist. This swindle began to assume serious proportions about two years ago, when the genuine Blakelocks first brought notable prices at the auction sales. In connection with that is one of the saddest phases of the whole Blakelock story.

Artist's Honest Daughter.

"One of Blakelock's children is a daughter who can paint fairly good pictures, unconsciously imitating her father both in manner of workmanship and in selection of subjects, for he was her teacher. She painted several of these pictures as her part toward the support of the family and had no difficulty in selling them for a small figure. But she soon discovered that her father's name was being put upon them. She protested, and in response to the protest received from the dealer an offer to take all the pictures she could turn out with the understanding that they would be put on the market as the work of R. A. Blakelock.

"I cannot be a party to a crime,' she told Mr. Daingerfield. 'I cannot ruin my father's fame which has come to him now with the pictures that I paint and I know no way to paint other than what he taught me then.'

BLAKELOCK RELIEF MEETING.

At a meeting in the music room of the Hotel Biltmore Monday last a movement was started to organize a permanent relief fund for the insane artist Ralph Albert Blakelock, his aged wife, his daughter Marian and son Douglas.

Mrs. Adams and Dr. Maurice C. Ashley, sup't of the Middletown (N. Y.) Hospital for the Insane, where Blakelock has been an inmate for more than 15 years, spoke, as also Carroll Beckwith and Harry Watrous, who gave reminiscences of earlier days when both knew the artist well; Mr. John G. Agar, pres't of the Nat'l Arts Club, and Mr. W. H. L. Edwards, former Ass't District Attorney of N. Y., who outlined the plan for the incorporation of the Blakelock Fund, Inc., with 15 incorporators.

Mrs. Adams stated that the object of the Fund was to remove the artist from the hospital as a public charge, provide him and his family with a comfortable home, and give him an opportunity, at least, to see whether or not he had lost his power. Dr. Ashley reported that, although Blakelock is hopelessly insane, he is harmless and can be safely left, unattended, with his little family; in fact, he said, the painter has been more or less insane for the greater part of his life. Blakelock is now 69 years old, but is in fairly good health.

The committee which will supervise the collection of the fund and distribution of the income therefrom will consist of Harry Watrous, Carroll Beckwith, John G. Agar, the heads of the Metropolitan Museum, National Academy and Brooklyn Institute, and perhaps one or two others prominent in art circles. It is hoped to raise about $50,000, the income from which is to be devoted to Blakelock and his family as long as they require it and, afterward, is to be used for the assistance of all worthy and needy artists.

All checks and donations should be made payable to the "Blakelock Fund," and forwarded to the Astor Trust Co., N. Y. City.

Blakelock Interviewed.

A correspondent of the "Tribune," who interviewed Ralph Albert Blakelock at the Middletown Asylum on Wed., says that while he never will be entirely restored to sanity, there is no question but that he can still paint. The artist said with some bitterness that he had been told that he should paint like Meissonier. He would like to see the exhibition arranged for his benefit, has a desire for money and an illusion that some wealthy man has paid him a fabulous sum for a painting.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

American Art Past and Present.

An important exhibition, partly retrospective of some three score paintings by American artists has been arranged by William Macbeth to remain to April 18, and fills his four exhibition galleries, at 450 Fifth Ave. The range is wide, from Stuart and Copley down, to the men of the present day. There are two Stuarts, a highly interesting bust portrait of the Rev. John Henry Hobart, Third Bishop of N. Y., and one of the Hon. Caleb Strong, Governor of Mass. The two examples of Copley's American period are portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Babcock. Of much more than ordinary interest is the portrait of Thomas Cole from the versatile brush of Asher B. Durand. By John W. Jarvis there is a striking portrait one of the best Jarvises ever shown, of Col. John Williams and by Matthew M. Jouett one of James G. McKinney.

Coming down to the middle distance, in the artistic perspective, there are two examples of Daniel Huntington, for many years President of the National Academy, a capital presentation of Isaac Ferris, Third Chancellor of the College of the City of N. Y., and one of Dr. John W. Francis.

There is a noble group of four landscapes by George Inness, including the gorgeous "Sunset, Montclair," that glory of greens and russets, "Tenafly Oaks, Autumn," and the delicate little "Springtime in N. J." The Wyants make a fine array and include the superior "Sunset Glow," "Opening in the Woods," "Passing Shadows," "Arkville Landscape," "Gray Day—Arkville" and "Avalanche Lake—Adirondacks."

Blakelock—now so much, and belatedly, in vogue, is represented by four of his finest works—all so rich in quality that they should be in the relief exhibition now in progress further up the Avenue. "The Mist and the Glow," loaned for the occasion is a glorious landscape and was sold by the Macbeth Gallery some years ago.

There is a small, pearly Homer Martin, "Stony Pond—Adirondacks," another and larger typical "Lake—Adirondacks" and a landscape with figure and by the late R. M. Shurtleff, a characteristic wood interior.

An interesting example of Wyatt Eaton is the "Three Generations."

Among the living men represented Paul Dougherty has an impressive glimpse over "Quiet Waters" and Frederick B. Williams, who has 3 examples, a wide view across "A Mountain Glen." Henry W. Ranger is finely represented by "The Edge of the Pond," "The Pond" and "Woods at Fort Lee." A capital A. P. Ryder, in quality like a Morland is "The Stable." Charles W. Hawthorne's "Provincetown Fisherman" is a strong but unlovely example. A moonrise is over Charles M. Dewey's "Landscape and Sheep" and there are two fine J. F. Murphys, "Morning over the Marsh" and "The Wood Lot."

Other living men well represented are Tryon, Davies, Brush, C. F. Ryder, E. Carlsen, J. A. Weir, Groll, C. H. Davis, and Sartain.

More Modern Art at Bourgeois'.

Cezanne, Van Goch and Seurat were strong men, but have passed. But Matisse, Duchamp and Crotti still live and having courage, as well as technical ability, more or less misdirected, pipe like the piper of Hamelin and are followed by many whose efforts in eccentricity interest to a certain extent though they rarely attract. Did they but follow their true Saints like Cezanne and Van Goch all would be well, but they are led by false prophets and beguiled by vain imaginings.

All this in preamble leads to the discussion of a display of painting, drawing and sculpture, "Arranged by a group of European and American Artists in New York," now on at the Bourgeois Galleries, 668 Fifth Ave., to Apr. 29. This, following close after the American Modernists show at the Anderson Galleries and the slight eruption at Macbeth's, shows that the very latest things in art which are becoming, shall it be said, almost academic in their strange forms, still persistently claim public attention.

Place aux morts! By Cezanne is shown a noble "Landscape," a road through a forest, a simple portrait, full of masterly suggestion of Madame Cezanne, and a drawing, "The Rocks." The Van Goghs are a lovely study of "Iris," remarkable for its quality; a "Still Life," and some most interesting pen and ink and crayon drawings, among which are "The Weaver," "Winter Landscape," "Garden at Nuenen," "Cornfield" and "Butterfly." By Seurat there is an impression of "Sunday at Grande-Jatte."

In order that the drop may not be too sudden it is in order to say that by Paul Signac, there is an indication of artistically disposed color spots, based on a view from the Pont Neuf in Paris. Odillion Redon shows a fine bloom of color over a herd of "Orphans," placed by his lyre, and an "Il-

The sculptures are three very clever simplifications of "Greyhounds," "Dog and Antelope" and "Hunter and Dogs," by Hunt Diederich, while Duchamp-Villon's gilded reduction to less than nature of a "Seated Woman" reappears and Duchamp presents "Two Ready Mades."

Others represented by paintings or drawings are Jean Crotti, Ravul Dufy, Arnold Friedman, Albert Gleizes, Marie Laurencin, Lewis B. Everett, Maurice B. Prendergast, Georges Ribemont, Deseignes and Joseph Stella, who shows colors under glass, as well as drawings.

Accepted But Not Hung Works Shown.

Half a hundred paintings, selected from those accepted but not hung, at the present exhibition of the Nat'l Academy of Design were displayed from Saturday to Tuesday, at the Lotos Club. The display was of good average quality, though it contained few works of great interest and emphasized the strong need of greater gallery space for the Academy exhibitions. The Lotos Club is to be congratulated on having performed a luminated Flower," which is a woman's head. Marcel Duchamp shows how a "Chocolate Grinder" became simplified to him from 1913 to 1914, by two views; tries to make you imagine "The King and Queen Surrounded by Swift Nudes," who have apparently disappeared behind the medley of plains, and has also a mysterious drawing of a "Celibate Utensil."

"The Leather Hat" is an incident in the view through a window suggested by Henry Matisse, who also is represented by a sketch of "Fruits." Among the drawings he has an interesting study of "Foliage," a couple of clever drawings, one a "Head of a Little Girl," and some interesting monotype, white sketches on black of heads and nudes. Walter Pach shows ultra simplicity and strength in his male and female portrait, and two landscapes, while Georges Roualt sends a wonderfully ugly head of a "Superman" and a landscape. Jean Metsinger, besides a curious still life, shows the sliced up remains of the heads of a nurse and another woman. In similar vein to the latter is Jacques Villon's demand that you shall find the "Portrait of Mr. J. B., Painter," if you can. A pen and ink "Nude" suggestion is all there is of Picasso but Picabia has a doughty follower in the mechanical drawing allegories in Morton L. Schamberg.

graceful act in arranging the display, for it is cold comfort to know only that a work is worthy to be shown.

William J. Beaulieu was represented by a spirited and effective large view in front of the Pennsylvania Station on "A Holiday." A life size and brilliant female nude seen from the back was by Christine Herter. It is remarkable for its drawing, modeling and the color and quality of the flesh. Guy C. Wiggins had a large and artistic view of "The Plaza in Winter." Capital is Harry F. Waltman's snow scene in "The Quiet Valley," which is, however, a little painty.

A strong portrait of Bonner with pipe and book is by Wayman Adams, and Paul Swan was represented with a rather stiffly posed but well painted "Portrait Group" of two boys. Carl Nordell's "Mother and child choosing the Gift" suffers from the same defect, but is also well painted. H.

Ledyard Towle showed agreeable, but not overstrong works in "The Convalescent" and "Blue and Silver." Vigorously handled and decorative in effect is Gertrude Fiske's figure, of an auburn haired girl called "Job's Tears." Constance Curtis had a cleverly handled "Portrait" in which the blue dress is notably well painted. By Hallie C. Fenton there appeared a "Draped Figure," which is well handled. Leo Meiziner sent an admirable self-portrait, rather low in tone, and Thomas Eakins a vigorous head of the late Charles F. Haseltine. Very striking in effect but with the paint laid on unpleasantly thick, is John Folinsbee's winter view of "The Bridge at New Hope."

A. C. Goodwin shows strongly artistic qualities in his picturesque winter scene at the "T Wharf, Boston." Sketchily effective is Edmund Greacen's "Docks in Snow." In the pointillist style is Carl Eric Linden's effective moonlit "Road to the Sea." Dorothea M. Litzinger showed picturesquely a "Lily Pond," through a screen of leaves. There is an excellent sky, and a good glimpse of rock and sea in Arthur T. Hill's "Montauk Point." W. A. Levy had a nice side face "Study" of a young girl and L. P. Skidmore a good view of "The Cargo Coaster." F. J. Mullaup has fine sky and atmosphere in "January Forenoon." Paul K. M. Thomas was represented by a refreshing sketch of "Connecticut Landscape," and Charles Basing by a strong view of the backs of some old houses at the coming of "Spring."

Others represented were L. F. Berneker, Olive B. Black, an attractive "In the Pasture," Matilda Brown, Matilda A. Brownell, Charles J. Chapman, Eliot Clark, Allan D. Cochrane, "The Silent Wood," Joseph B. Davol, "A Maine Fjord," G. W. Edwards, R. B. Farley, "Barnacle Cove," Florence D. Gotthold, Emile A. Gruppe, Birge Harrison, F. W. Hutchison, Clara T. McClesney, T. R. Manley, Marcus Herman, Hal Robinson, Mathias Sandur, L. P. Skidmore, H. C. White and C. S. Williams.

Shakespeariana at Public Library.

A remarkable collection of Shakespeariana is now on exhibition at the N. Y. Public Library and will remain until May 31.

A SLADE FOR MILWAUKEE.

There is reproduced on this page C. Arnold Slade's painting of "The Vendor of Cocoa Water," a scene at Biskra, Algiers, which has just been presented by President Samuel O. Buckner to the Milwaukee Art Institute for its permanent exhibition. Mr. Slade, who is at New Bedford, has sold five canvases there. He will divide his summer between Provincetown, Mass., where he goes next month and Ogunquit, Me., where he has taken a studio.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

THE BLAKELOCK BOOM.

If the case of the insane American artist Blakelock and his family, neglected for some thirty years by the art public, was not pathetic the present
"Boom" in Blakelocks would be amusing. The painter himself is now "come into his own" in deserved fame, through the sudden tremendous appreciation in the market value of his pictures through the sensational purchase of one for $20,000 at the recent Lambert sale—and his family is to have the financial aid they stand in need of. What a hysterical people we Americans have become! Here are worthy persons almost weeping over "poor Blakelock," some of whom never heard of him until six weeks ago, crowds, unaware until now of even his existence, thronging an exhibition of his pictures at a Fifth Ave. Gallery, at $1 a head, and collectors and dealers, who own examples of the man's art, tumbling over each other to display and exploit them.

In fact Blakelocks have become in a fortnight the "War Brides" of the American art market, and profits have been made, and will be made until the "boom" bursts, from the purchase and sale of Blakelocks that would have amazed the painter in his sane days of struggle with poverty.

How the spectacle must amuse such old and loyal friends of the artist as Carroll Beckwith, Harry Watrous and Leon Dabo. The comments of the two last on the spectacle, we publish this morning.

Had there been a little more consistent and continuous charity and assistance given, when it was most needed years ago, and since then by Blakelock and his family, and a little less hysteria shown now, our reputation as a people more volatile and excitable than the French were formerly considered, would not have been emphasized as the Blakelock boom now so emphasizes it.

THE ART BATTLE OF VERDUN.

The war of the "Modernists" and the Academics, which has waged in Europe, and especially in France and Germany, for the past decade, and which extended to America at the time of the Armory Show four years ago, has of late reached a climax in what may be called the art battle of Verdun.

During the past two seasons the "Modernists," with horse and foot, war correspondents and all, have been camping in the former Academic outlying fortress of Montross, Douamont one might call it, which they carried by assault two years or more ago. Since that time they have been preparing to assault and take the equally and even more ancient and academic fortress of Macbeth or Vaux, meanwhile, directing sporadic attacks at this or that conservative stronghold, and gazing yearningly from afar at the very inner Academy fort of Verdun itself.

With a whoop and yell the "Modernist" army, under the leadership of Gen. Arthur Davies, with Commissary General John Quinn in the rear, and with those valiant war correspondents, Henry MacBride, who also directs the fire of the "Sun" "75s" and Charles H.

Caffin, who manages the N. Y. "American" mortars, and F. James Gregg, who shoots in the air—captured the Vaux fortress of Macbeth. Great has been the rejoicing, and wild the enthusiasm in the "Modernist" camp. In last Sunday's Sun, war correspondent Mac-Bride, during a lull in the fighting, sent some shells from a distance from his Sun "75" into the Verdun Academy fortress, and from within that fort has come answering shells—one of which, from an Academician's gun, we publish
this morning.

As we go to press the invaders have been driven out of the Macbeth fortress, but threaten to recapture it. We shall see!

CORRESPONDENCE

THE DIVINE RIGHT OF CRITICS.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:
Dear Sir: As an example of fatuous egotism it would be difficult to equal an article recently published in the N. Y. Sun under the caption: "National Academy Lacking in Thrills." Asserting that the present exhibition "keeps to the low level that has been characteristic of the Institution since the outbreak of the War," the writer says of the picture that won the most important prize:
"It is absolutely undistinguished as a work of art." The prize was awarded by a jury of eight painters and sculptors of national reputation.

This type of meretricious criticism, merely expressing the antipathies of an individual, would call for no attention were it not the official utterance of an influential journal, and therefore, in a measure, a voice of authority destined to mould the opinions of that part of the public which is accustomed to take its judgments on art, even more than on other matters, from the daily papers.
Sweeping and unjust denunciations of this nature demand a protest.

Consider the amazing assurance of a person untrained in art who makes this statement: "Waving jury opinions aside"—that is, the opinions of twenty-five men of sufficient ability to be elected to the National Academy—"the three best pictures in the Academy are, etc." It is not the approval of the three pictures cited that is objectionable;
it is the assumption of final authority.

And who, pray tell us, appointed you to be a judge of works of art? What have you done to prove your fitness to be an art expert?

Let us examine the taste of this omniscient connoisseur. For those who read between the lines there are several illuminating passages. Speaking of an important picture by one of our most illustrious painters and a high officer in the Academy, he says:

"It is woefully disappointing. It is a labored, dull study of a studio model holding a book." Such impudence and bad taste deserve something more than verbal punishment.
Would a high officer in any society of physicians, surgeons, architects, or other body of professional men be subjected without a protest to such abuse from a person uneducated in those professions?

This complaisant dictator, describing one picture as "more to be commended than any in the display" again reveals his point of view.
After explaining at some length the merits of the picture he adds: "The color is by no means good as color, but its crudity as it happens adds to the effect of the burlesque." This frank admission of a preference for bad color and crudity is in reality an injustice to the picture he describes, the color of which is powerful, not crude.

The following excerpts throw further light on the critic's taste: "So featureless a show has seldom been seen. No new subjects—no thrills."

In the last sentence we have the key note.
This imitator of Bernard Shaw, while usurping the position of a dignified moulder of opinions, may be suspected of a native taste for Coney Island and the movies.
Sneering and destructive comment is an easy means of escape from the real purpose of criticism, which is intelligent and helpful analysis.

Happily there are several dissenting voices among the critics and there are reviews of the exhibition that are sane and just.

To inform himself regarding the work of the man in the place of honor, which is swept aside as "too pale and weak," the inflated critic has but to visit the Metropolitan Museum. A study of the artist's work will reveal a strong personality, combined with beauty of design, workmanship and color harmony that will command a high place in the art of all time. And here we come to the difference between the opinions of some journalists and those of a jury of technically trained artists. Radical art writers prefer the standard of our exhibitors to be, not that of the museums, but of the sensational newspapers. Fortunately, the National Academy does not exist to please the jaded appetites of a few journalists with a liking for rank, sensational subjects only.

Do they imagine the only purpose of pictures to be the decoration of bar rooms and sporting dens? Is the coal heaver, tenement house phase of art the only one worth exhibiting? These are often vigorous and interesting subjects, but some picture lovers prefer other and more ingratiating types to live with.

In recent years the walls of the Academy have been open to the best contemporaneous art of every school. The space is inadequate, but the community and especially its people of wealth may be criticised for that. In December the exhibition displayed the widest possible range of color contrasts and the best of the modern tendencies. Has the National Academy received any credit for that liberality?

Criticism from a large, dispassionate and widely educated viewpoint is alone worth reading. Destructive art writers with a taste for but one phase of art, no matter which, are incompetent. When they ignorantly defame men of great distinction and ability they are pernicious.

Member of the National Academy.
New York, April 3, 1916.

VEZIN ON "MODERN ART."

Members of the Salmagundi Club who crowded their picture gallery the other night to hear Frederick J. Gregg champion modernism in art carried away with them one distinct impression, and that was furnished in the remarks of Charles Vezin, former President of the club. The guest talked in generalizations, and was, it is said, more concerned in catechising the club as to its attitude toward modernism and its opinion of the relations of dealers and the public than in advancing arguments in favor of any cult.

Mr. Vezin had a clear notion that the meeting had been called to deal with post-impressionism, futurism and kindred radical tendencies. In addressing himself to the work of the extremists he roused the only excitement of the evening, for his speech aimed at a real target.

"There are many picture buyers in the country who know nothing of art," he said, replying to the question as to the reason for the patronage of new-fangled cults. "They buy pictures as they would clothes, not because they like them, but because they are the style. Such people would not buy the most beautiful gown in the world if it were in last year's cut.

"He who can sense the border line 'twixt sentiment and the sentimental," he said, analyzing the so-called advanced productions of modernism, "twixt the dramatic and the theatrical, between love and the erotic, between weakness and delicacy, between strength and brutality, is the artist. One does not care for piquant food when one is hungry. One likes caviar and the like when one has no appetite. Piquant art is for the jaded. Then comes the worse than piquant, the parallel of wormy cheese and putrid game.

"The taint of pseudo-Orientalism is over it all; not the Orientalism of Japan, China or India, or Omar or the Psalmist, but the jaded Orientalism from the salons and studios of London and Paris, the Orientalism of Oscar Wilde. Its atmosphere is laden with musk; its perfumes of Araby are from the barber shop; its 'rhythm' belongs to the lobster palace.

"The artist is supposed, above all things, to have imagination. These 'artists' are wanting in imagination not to see the evils they promote. Some do these things because they sell. There is no such easy road to free advertising as the salacious. With some it is a case of diseased mind, in which the artist lays bare his soul, exhibiting to a morbid or an adolescent public what should be hid from sight. And any interference with this soul-sick creature calling himself the exponent of liberty is met with the wire entanglement labelled 'freedom, art, culture.'

"Some years ago a great daily conducted a nefarious business through a 'personal' column. It saved its face by stamping the worst iniquities with 'object matrimony.' So these conductors of the personal columns of ethics have a big purple stamp which reads: 'This is art.'

LONDON LETTER.

London, Mar. 29, 1916.

As was to be expected, there has been considerable criticism of the action of the Trustees of the National Gallery in regard to the purchase of the Masaccio as well as of the de Hoogh, of which I have already written, and questions have been asked in the House as to why the purchase-money was not expended in War Loan. The answer given to the Secretary of the Treasury was that the pictures were paid for out of Trust Funds, expressly left for the purpose of purchasing works of art. This position with regard to the trustees of various public institutions is leading to some curious anomalies, for public opinion at the present time is all against expenditure on such purchases, whereas by the terms of the Trust, the Trustees are forbidden to apply their money to any purpose except that of the acquisition of pictures. Hence we find, in many instances, that sooner than brave the censure of the public and the disapproval of their local Councils, museums and galleries are simply hoarding their resources with a view to spending it "en bloc" after the War. Though their action is perfectly comprehensible in the existing circumstances, it seems hard that the full benefit of the money should not be enjoyed by artists and dealers at a time when it is sorely needed.

Sale of Whistler's Letters.

At the end of this month there will be a sale at Sotheby's of especial interest to admirers of Whistler, for there will then be dispersed a number of the artist's letters written to his friend, Mr. Thomas Way, and relating to the printing of lithographs executed for Whistler by that gentleman. Though the majority of the communications are brief, they are exceedingly interesting in view of the light which they throw upon the artist's methods.

Modern art experienced a severe slump a few days ago when, at the sale at Christie's of Mme. Blanche Marchesi's collection, prices commencing as low as 4½ guineas were paid for pictures bearing names well known in the New English Art Club circles. When on the same day Lord Leighton's "Cleoboulos," which in 1880 fetched 1,250 guineas, was put up, it brought no more than a mere 300 guineas; while Sir Edwin Landseer's "Highland Nurses" dropped from its price of 1,600 guineas in 1878 to a beggarly 340. This fall in prices, so far as these two pictures are concerned, has, in my opinion, very little to do with war conditions but is wholly attributable to the modification of public taste in art, which at present is opposed both to the highly finished in technique and to the obvious in sentiment.

Mr. Tom Mostyn, who, perhaps, enjoys the distinction of being the modern artist whose work is most freely exhibited in the Corporation Galleries of England and the Colonies, is to hold a "one-man" show at the Grafton Galleries early in April on behalf of the British Women's Hospital, while at the same time he is sending some important canvases to the Royal Academy. His last year's Academy picture, "Flight," which represented the exodus of the homeless from a burning village in Belgium, was bought for the Corporation of Liverpool by a citizen of that city who preferred to remain anonymous. It is not often that public spirit assumes so modest a form!

Sargent's New "Blotted Paint" Style.

Sargent, who, I am told, was at one time approached with a view to painting a portrait of the late Queen Victoria and who, finding the commission unsympathetic, excused himself on the grounds of want of suitable opportunity, is developing a somewhat new method in the pictures which he is showing at a current exhibition. This is on the lines of the "blotted paint" system, a style which has for many years obtained favor among modern French artists. There is no doubt that many convincing effects are to be gained in this way, but there is a restlessness and want of repose which is inseparable from it and which detracts very considerably from its value. But when an artist of the calibre of Sargent resorts to it, one has the comforting conviction that it will in all probability prove but a stepping stone to higher things and that it is by no means the last expression of his artistic faith.

Christie's, like every other business enterprise, is feeling the shortage of labor occasioned by the War, so that quite a large amount of the enormous labor involved by the forthcoming Red Cross Sale, is being borne by the heads of the firm themselves. Quite a considerable number of paintings and drawings by such artists of the British School as Gainsborough, Lawrence, Raeburn, and Landseer have been given by various donors, whose idea it has been that these should be purchased as gifts to be presented later to the nation. Whether such hopes of philanthropy are justified, remains to be seen.

By Manet and Degas.

Manet and Degas! Two names to conjure with; almost everything they painted or drew seems to live again in the glorious touch of their genius for selection and technique. It is a very "precious" little joint exhibition of their work that has been arranged by Mr. Georges Durand-Ruel in the gallery at 92 E. 57 Street, to April 29.

This time it is Degas who has the honors of the walls, although Manet follows fast and with perhaps more interest of personality. Nothing, it would seem, could be better in the way of painting than the Degas "Portrait of a Man" and the head of "La Savoisienne," while for an artistic impression his glimpse of a couple of race horses, just before the start, "La Champ de Courses," could not be bettered.

There are a couple of studies of dancers in oil and others appear in several of the pastels. Two of the more important examples in this medium show a maid combing her mistress' hair and a singer and the scrolls and necks of two 'cellos, just in front of the "Ballet de l'Africaine."

Now Manet seems, as the French say, to

More Modernists at Montross'.

There is one thing certain about the harp of the modernists and that is, it has not a thousand strings. Each little individual artistic lay is played on a few in strident tones. Here are Jean Crotti, Marcel Duchamp, Albert Gleizes and Jean Metzinger, fresh from the trenches of paint in the forefront of battle in the artistic arena of the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave. and arrayed against scoffers to April 22.

M. Crotti leads the four in audacity, and also in some ability. In addition to a number of canvases delicately colored in which Japanese suggestions of parts of women's faces and hands appear amid wavings of bandeaux, he has "A Portrait of Marcel Duchamp" ("Sculpture Made to Measure") which consists of a part of a wig, a silvered forehead and features outlined by wires. No. 1 entitled "God" is apparently a slap at Americans and a deification of baseball. A "Clown" shows disks, wire and glass eyes. No. 19 whose title is withheld is supposed to arouse curiosity.

Marcel Duchamp shows in oil two queer works, a "Landscape" and "Yvonne and Magdaleine Dechiquettes," and three draw-

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Mar. 29, 1916.

The pleasant idea of an exclusive exhibition of landscapes is being carried out at the Georges Petit galleries. It includes works by Degas, Daubigny, Maurice Denis, Flandrin, Guillaumin, Guillaumet, Lacoste, Lebourg, Le Sidaner, Marquet, Henri Martin, Maifra, René Menard, Claude Monet, Redon, Renoir, Alfred Roll, Roussel, and Vuillard.

Two pastels shown by Degas are exceedingly simple in composition and chiefly remarkable as studies in greenish browns and yellows. The examples of Monet are of very unequal interest. In one, entitled "The Hay-Cocks," the detail of the foliage presents itself to the eye in lines whose mechanical parallelism is almost obtrusive. In a view of the "Shore of the Seine" the foreground is choked with tangled marsh-grass and weeds, and if any grace of detail were possible with such a subject it is completely drowned in confused and muddy shadow.

Alfred Roll has painted a "Landscape of Blood," apparently a vision of Liège when the horror of the final German assault was at its height. The river, though partly masked by sullen swirls of smoke, seems to run full of blood, and the sun looks angrily down upon the scene through turgid clouds of ruddy brown. Roll has another picture in this show in the lighter scale of color with which we are not too familiar—"A Summer Day"—a woman and three girls in gay attire, spending a joyous hour in a glade of a forest. It has no value as being representative of life and is without worthy distinction in painting. Unfortunately, the president of the Société de Beaux Arts almost always produces the impression of striving after what, for him, is the unattainable. He has true artistic qualities, but they are evidently misapplied.

Two Fine Renoirs Shown.

There are four pictures by Renoir in this exhibition. Two of them, "Triel" and "Les Vignerons," are of extraordinary merit—which, however, cannot be well appreciated except at a distance. In the view of the river at Triel there is a quality of blue in the water which I have never seen in quite such excellence in any other painter. There is a fine dignity in the powerful cloud-massing, with scintillant tints of gray and gold, and the heavy, almost funereal foliage, still as the stillness of death, which overhangs the placid stream. The other two landscapes, painted in 1875 and 1877, are less distinctive.

Flandrin's "Valley of the Drac," painted with his usual solidity and strong relative arrangement of values, is also exceedingly satisfying in its depth and amplitude of perspective. Guillaumin has two idyllic scenes, full of delicate and poetical feeling, and rich in vibrative warmth. Le Sidaner proves again that he is best in the interpretation of half-lights and the mysterious objective effects twilight and dark. Of four canvases by Menard, the one depicting the "Parasol Pines" of Fréjus is the most characteristic and interesting. There is an admirable contrast between the sun-glow struggling with a showery mist and the dismal blackness of quaintly outlined trees.

Exhibition of the Cercle Artistique.

Works inspired by the war form one of the chief features of the exhibition of the Cercle Artistique et Littéraire, in the rue Volney. Among these are several forceful portraits: symbolical statuettes, like that of the wife of a soldier, who is fighting in the trenches, and her babe, full of a subtle pathos, more suggested than expressed, by Henri Gerber; "Souvenirs aux Héros," in marble and ivory, a young girl, draped plainly all in white, bearing a palm for a tomb of the fallen, by Levasseur; a bronze by Jean Hugues, "To Those Who Have Died for the Country," fine in pose and in the sublime calm of the visage; a picture of the Rheims cathedral after its devastation, rather unreal in color and indeterminate in detail; views of certain quarters of Paris at night under the military search-lights, by Alexandre Nozal; the interment of a lieutenant at the fighting front, with strong delineation and austere coloring, by J. F. Bouchor, official painter to the armies; and a powerful eau-forte by Eugène Cadet, representing the Kaiser, wooing the caresses of a skeleton-figure of death.

One of the most agreeable canvases is a portrait of a girl by Paul Chabas, entitled "Melancholy." There is also a charmingly peaceful interior by Frédéric Lauth, in the manner of the American painter Barlow.

Eric Tayne.

NORFOLK, VA.

The 2nd annual exhibition of works by modern Americans is on in the gallery, 226-230 Granby St., under the auspices of the Irene Leache Art Room. There are some 40 canvases, by Garber, Henri, Lie, Seyffert, Lever, Symonds, Harrison, Curran, Crouse, Frieseke, May Baker and Lena Brooke.

COTTON MATHER
Peter Pellem

At the Weston Galleries

impose himself and shows the maestria that was in his brush. Here is his copy of Titian's "La Vierge au Lapiu," in parts, although it seems heresy to say so, painted better than the original and a little reduction of Velasquez's "L'Acteur Tragique," which by the way is not painted so well. There are two bright pastel studies of "Mme. du Paty" and "L'homme Blond," a study of a woman looking into a mirror and a rapid sketch of the beach at Boulogne. "La Brioches," in which the cake appears with a rose, some fruit and a box is an apotheosis of still life and there are three flower studies in gouache. A "Rendezvous de Chats" is a design in gouache, afterwards engraved on wood by the master as a poster for his friend, Champfleury's book on domestic felines.

Bertus Pietersz showed several realistic paintings, in oil, of outdoor subjects in rural America, at a tea and musicale, which he gave in his Van Dyck studio, Thursday.

ings. Of these "The Virgin" is incomprehensible and "Pharmacy" is a delicate and quite understandable landscape, in which a couple of drugstore window bottles appear as ornaments to the distance. Albert Gleizes whose earlier work shows he once made some effort to represent natural objects has a number of painted puzzles, which the titles do little to elucidate. Jean Metzinger's little group includes a blocked up "Head of a Child," and some impressions of villages and landscape which appear something as they might if seen from an aeroplane.

Works of Mme. Lucas Robiquet.

A number of paintings by Mme. Lucas-Robiquet are on view at the galleries of Braun & Co., 13 W. 46. Besides several brilliantly handled portraits of women and children, there are attractive French single figure peasant subjects and several landscapes, some of North African scenes.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York) Looking back at the time I came to New York, I can see that it was then really a provincial town. Generally speaking, we were in a stage which might be described as innocent art. The great flow of public appreciation was in the direction of pictures that were frankly imitative. The reputation that stood the highest was Meissonier's. Very large prices also were paid for work by such men as Domingo, Vibert, and Gerome.

Mezzotints by Elizabeth Gulland.

An exceedingly interesting display is now on at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., of the complete work, in mezzotint printed in color, of Elizabeth Gulland, of England, which remains on view to April 15. As a token of her appreciation of her endeavors by the American public Miss Gulland has offered to present a complete set of her proofs to the print room of the Public Library. There are 13 numbers in the catalog and of 11 the whole edition has been sold. The most recent plates, all the copies of which are not yet disposed of, are those of Raeburn's "Mrs. Uguhart," owned by the Glasgow Corporation Gallery and published last fall, and the same artist's "Mrs. Stewart, of Physgill," which is about to be issued.

Miss Gulland's reproductions, several of which are shown in their various stages, are remarkably spirited and truthful and admirably colored. One of the destroyed copper plates is also on view. The earlier plates shown include those after Reynolds' "The Hon. Anna Bingham," "Lavinia Countess Spencer," "Viscountess Althorp," "The Age of Innocence," and "Lady Waldegrave and Her Daughter," Raeburn's "Mrs. Scott Moncrieff" and "Miss Emily Devismes," and Lawrence's "Mrs. Siddons."

French War Posters and Drawings.

There have been on view for the last few days in the studio building of Mrs. H. P. Whitney, at 8 W. 8 St., for the benefit of the American Hospital in Paris, a number of posters, drawings and engravings by French artists sent over by the Harvard Club of that city. The representation of Forain and Steinlen is full and of much interest, and largely satiric. There are also examples of Bulbot, Faivre, Jonas, Synave, Naudain, Leandre, Lacaille and Dumas. The posters are for various works of war charity, such as the "Journée de l'Orphelinat des Armées" and the furnishing of "Le Vêtement pour la Prisonnier de la Guerre." Another shows that "L'02 Combat pour le Victoire."

Walter Hunter, well known to the frequenters of the old Blakeslee Galleries, as one of the late Mr. Blakeslee's efficient gallery assistants, and now with the Ehrich Galleries—is also interested in the entertaining business, and furnishes instrumental and vocal talent on request.

CHICAGO.

Another event that has grown into a habitual milestone of the Art Institute's season is the exhibition of structural designs, pictures of period and modern buildings, drawings and modelings, installed under the auspices of the Chicago Architectural Society, and this show is now in progress, but was opened too late for any specific details in this issue of the ART NEWS. However, it is apparent at this early date that the "appeal" of the show repeats itself this year—that is, it falls far short of any other kind of creative work in attracting the interest of the general public. It is apparent that the crowds of laymen who happily throng into the Institute to enjoy pictures, sculptures, and art-crafts have little interest in any kind of architectural reflection—they hold their enthusiasm for the materialized architecture. But there are enough architectural artists, students and near-students to make the annual show an important event.

The Institute will give a variation in shows during the week of April 21 with the Newark Posters. On the 25th of the month, the Art Students' League will install its show.

Henry Frederic Guthertz has a collection of portraits by old English masters, and a number of landscapes and contemplative paintings, featured with the human note in figures, by noted men of the Barbizon school, at the Blackstone Hotel.

The exhib'n installed by the Artists' Guild in its quarters, the Fine Arts Shop, is interesting in that it reveals the continued force of the individuality of several members of the Chicago Society of Artists. Leon H. Roecker won the Fine Arts B'ld'g prize for skill of execution and coloring in one of his landscapes, with the human note as a feature. A. H. Schmidt captured an honorable mention with free-hand, distinctive paintings. Pauline Palmer has a breezily interpreted Gloucester coast painting, the mystery of the far horizon accentuating the buoyant spirits of the girls in the foreground. Anna L. Stacey has a figure piece, "Two Friends," which sustains her reputation for well executed portraiture and figure work. Walter Ufer, in his Southwest scenes, is true to the picturesque coloring that we have learned to identify with this sweep of our country.

C. F. Browne, Gustave Baumann, Victor Higgins, F. C. Peyraud, Ethel Coe, Sam Kennedy and Martin Hennings are preparing to go west on a painting tour.

S. Szukalski will install his sculptures in the Art Institute for exhib'n the last week of April.

Verheyden, a Belgian artist, not long from Paris, is here and will open a studio. He intends to make mural painting a specialty. Examples of his work are on show in the Marshall Field galleries.

It is told in art circles that Paul Schulze contemplates endowing a gallery of the Art Institute with representative paintings by leading American artists. It is said that Mr. Schulze owns a larger number of paintings by William Ritschel than any other collector of American canvases. He has a large private collection of American works and is continually adding to the assemblage.

H. Effa Webster.

DENVER.

Margaret George and A. Byron Olson, local artists, are showing some of their works at the Public Library. The former shows figure studies and sculptures, the latter some poster effects.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Adolph Berson is displaying more than 20 California scenes at the Rabjohn & Morcom galleries. At the Gump galleries is a landscape, "The Mountain Drive," by Thad Welch. Gottardo Piazzoni is completing a mural for the Girls' Club. The canvas measures 7 ft. long by 4 ft. wide and the theme is "Motherhood."

In the Oakland Museum a gallery has been given up to more than 40 pictures, including oils, crayons and charcoals, by Matteo Sandona. Included in the collection are a number of portraits of local society women.

C. C. Cooper has 3 Exposition scenes and Karl Schmitz a large decorative canvas at the Schussler galleries.

ST. LOUIS.

Among the acquisitions of the City Art Museum this month are examples of Gerard Ter Borch and Daniel Mytens. The Ter Borch is a small characteristic portrait of J. Graeff and the picture comes from the Achenbach collection in Dusseldorf. The other painting is a full-length of Charles I. A number of objects of Persian art were added to the Museum's collection, including ceramics, embroidered textiles, a Persian miniature painting and several pieces of ancient armor finely damascened with gold and silver. These specimens were a part of the Persian Exhibit at the Pana-Pacific Exposition.

PHILADELPHIA.

At a meeting of the Penna. Society, Sons of the Revolution, in the Penna. Historical Society rooms, April 3, a proposal to erect a memorial arch in Washington Square in honor of Gen'l Anthony Wayne was defeated and a proposal was substituted, providing for an equestrian statue on the new Parkway. A fund of about $13,000 has been contributed toward the project. The design was left to the Art Jury. The Society appropriated $200 to the fund now being raised by the Colonial Dames for a window in Valley Forge Chapel in honor of Martha Washington. This fund now amounts to $13,000. Armour's portrait of William Penn, a copy of which will be presented to the new super-dreadnought "Pennsylvania," was on exhib'n.

The Georgine Shillard Medal, given for the last five years by Mrs. Georgine Shillard Smith, was awarded at the Plastic Club Col- or Exhib'n to Mrs. Paula Himmelsbach Balano for her painting of "The Acropolis." D. Christian Brinton presented the medal and spoke on modern art.

The exhib'n of posters at the Industrial Art School is instructive. The nucleus of the show is 60 posters made for a competition celebrating the 250th anniversary of the founding of Newark, N. J. Also represented are F. Brangwyn, Hohlwein and Aubrey Beardsley. The "Phila. Today and Tomorrow" prize poster by Wade Lane is one of the attractions of the show, closing Apr. 9.

Some 50 oils illustrative of U. S. history, by J. L. G. Ferris, have been placed on exhib'n in the restored Congress Hall. Ferris has been engaged for about 20 years upon these historical canvases, ranging from Columbus's discovery of America to the close of the Civil War. The show will be open to the public until June 20.

The special exhib'n of "Fakes and Reproductions" of old china, glass, metal work, enamels, ivories, etc. at the Penna. Museum in Memorial Hall has educational value. It is the first of its kind held in this country. Among the objects shown are imitations of Chinese porcelains, Capo di Monte hard paste, Sevres hard and soft paste, English creamware, Meissen and other German porcelains, French stanniferous faience, Greco-Roman pottery, Tanagra figurines, Aztec pottery, Battersea and German enamels, German drinking glasses, pewter flagons, Hispano-Mauresque ware, Persian faience, Dr. Syntax plates, English lustres, etc. An amusing fact connected with the forgeries of works of art of this kind is that the imitations frequently happen to be better than the originals. Dr. Edwin Atlee Barber, director of the Museum, has arranged this unique display.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

At the Corcoran Gallery one exhibition will follow another until June, when the work of the Corcoran School students is annually displayed. The Redfield show to end April 9 will be replaced by an exhibition of Berryman cartoons. Early in May the Capital Camera Club will hold its annual exhibition in the Gallery.

In May two notable exhibitions are promised—one of industrial art in the Nat'l Museum, the other of paintings by the late John W. Alexander now at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh.

Janet Scudder has been commissioned to design and execute the official memorial medal for the Indiana Centennial in 1917.

Lucien W. Powell's oils and watercolors are on exhibition at the Shelby Clarke galleries, where there are also pictures by E. C. Messer and Hobart Nichols.

At the National Museum there is a display of more than 40 models by prominent sculptors, entered in competition for the $75,000 appropriated by Congress for a suitable design for the Francis Scott Key Memorial to be erected in Ft. McHenry, Baltimore.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The ninth annual exhibition of works by Indiana artists, which occupies four of the upper galleries at the John Herron Art Institute, continues to April 16. Altogether 114 artists are represented, with 197 pictures, 25 sculptures, and 40 examples of pottery, metals, and needlework. Some of the artists represented are Susan M. Ketcham, with a marine; Dorothy Morlan, "Winter. Coast of Maine"; H. Vance Swope, two colorful Hudson River scenes; Helen M. Goodwin, a decorative "California Pepper Plant," and Vogle Armstrong "Ohio River." "La Fontaine Carpeaux" is by Leon Makielski, who also shows portraits of the late Clarence Ball and J. A. Vanden Broek; Henry Macginnis shows "River Border," a good landscape; W. Victor Higgins a Taos Indian figure study and there are landscapes by Samuel B. Wylie, Fred C. Oliver, Will H. Stevens and J. M. Dennis.

An interesting feature of the current exhib'n is the "Fakers' Show."

BOSTON.

At the "Guild of Boston Artists," Mrs. Alice Ruggles Sohler, a talented young woman trained at the Museum's School, is holding an exhibition of her pictures. Mrs. Sohler's work is honestly "seen" and at times has considerable beauty. She draws well perhaps better than she feels color. The figure examples are marked by these aforesaid qualities and the exhibition as a whole is a good one.

J. Eliot Enneking, "a chip of the old block," as his friends call him, has a show of "small paintings," in a local gallery. There are 29 examples, all landscapes, with Mystic, West Chop and Noank, as places of inspiration.

In the Vose Galleries two good exhibitions attract. There is a display of work by deceased American painters in one gallery, and of very alive Americans in another. Albert Bierstadt's "Star King Mountain, California," is here as is George Inness' beautiful "Late Afternoon, Hudson River," a Wyant, "Adirondack Ravine," canvases by J. Foxcroft Cole, Thomas Robinson, Geo. L. Brown, Homer Martin, William Bradford.

In another gallery Paul Dougherty, Gardner Symons, Charles W. Hawthorne, Guy Wiggins, Lilian Genth, George Hallowell, H. D. Murphy, Gifford Beal, George M. Bruestle, Lawrence Mazzanovich, John Sharman, Philip Little, E. B. Waite and R. H. Nisbet, make the walls vivid with life and color.

Charles Emile Heil, who paints birds better than any American artists, save C. H. Denslow, has an exhibition of these beautiful examples with watercolors and pencil drawings in a local gallery. This young painter has fortunately attained recognition, both artistic and financial, while youthful enough to enjoy it. At the San Francisco Exposition he received a gold medal for his work, which, it is to be hoped, he will not consider any especial compliment, considering the manner in which the so-called honors were there awarded, as the ART NEWS has told.

In the Copley Gallery's front room, an exhibition of pictures by Mmes. Harold Peabody and A. H. Parker is scheduled for the near future. Old portraits by the early American painters continue in the large gallery.

The Fogg Museum of Harvard has on a special loan exhibition of drawings by Old Masters from the collection of John Pierpont Morgan of New York.

The discussion anent the Art Club selection of pictures, both for the annual exhibition and the so-called "Prize Picture," which is to receive $1,000 as a purchase price—continues. In the meanwhile the new "salon" in Leonard's Gallery attracts many visitors who are looking for the work of 10 men. Messrs. Carbee, Kronberg, Hardwick, Pierce, Lawlor, Graves, Copeland, Garrett, Hallett, Tompkins, all Art Club members, but not in their Club's Show. This collection is not, however, a "Salon des Refusees," but rather, a large bunch (200 or more) of the unsubmitted (not to say the unsubmitted!).

TORONTO.

There is always keen interest surrounding the annual salon of the Ontario Society of Artists, partly because it brings into prominence many of the younger artists, who might be said to have hardly arrived yet—and also because of the wideness of its choice of pictures—even the ultra-modern—the startling being allowed a place—a place by the way, which it is the fashion just now to refuse to those of a more moderate school. Impressionist work, as shown in its present pronounced form in the exhibition has completely superseded the older more finished style. And this year's salon in the art gallery at the Reference Library is no exception to the new rule.

Lawrence Harris' "Snow" is a disappointing contrast to the beautiful realism of his "Country Store" which won so many admirers a year ago.

There are several other large canvases equally unreal, depicting Autumn and Winter scenes and one of a garden in which the flowers are truly more than life size and startling in their coloring. A virile portrait broadly and crisply painted, of himself by Harry Britton is splendidly impressionistic and was evidently finished at one short sitting. Mrs. Britton shows "The Head of the Bay." Mrs. Mary H. Reid has painted a lovely garden with purple and yellow Autumn flowers. Owen Staples also has painted a garden with bright hollyhocks. Charles Simpson's "Harbour Scene" is effective, and Peter Shepherd and Owen Staples have painted the building of the big Bloom St. viaduct.

Frank Johnson is one of the most original and daring of Canadian illustrators, his work full of mystery and charm, and replete with energy. "Fireflies" is his chief picture. Special mention should be given to "Sheep Grazing" by Herbert S. Palmer.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

A Cosmopolitan Collection.

The collections of paintings and art objects formed by the late Daniel S. Miller, as already announced is to be shown from April 13 in the Hotel Savoy and to be sold there at auction under the direction of Mr. Samuel Marx, April 17-21.

The French pictures in the collection include examples of Fantin-Latour, Monticelli, Bouguereau, Henner and Marie Dietlerle. There are two exceptionally fine examples of Daniel Ridgway Knight and canvases by Berne-Bellecour, Grolleron, Roy, Carleneter and Chelminski. The leaders of the modern Dutch school represented are Kever, Tromp, Blommer and Evert Pieters; of the German, Bauman, Arnolt, Weber, Seifert, Kiesel, Richter and Eigler; of the Belgian, DeBeul, Seghers, Van Kuyck and Musin; and of the Italian, Maltolinni, Prodocinni Capobinchi, Ancillotti, Morosini, Andre, Otti and Zampighi.

Hoborg, Munthe, Lynch and Von Blaas are also represented.

The American painters represented are J. G. Brown, Boughton, McEwen and C. S. Pearce.

Rare Books and Fine Bindings.

A Shakespeare Folio is seldom offered for sale, but now no less than three, the first, second, and fourth, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries on Friday next. Perfect copies of these folios are practically unobtainable; they were printed in 1623, 1632, and 1685, the editions were small, and they were subjected to severe usage. These three copies are very much better than usual. The first Folio has only nine leaves in facsimile, the second, one of the tallest copies known, has only four, and the Fourth, a large and sound copy, has only trifling repairs.

There are some fine pieces of Americana in this sale, notably Smith's New York, Shepard's "Clear Sunshine" (1648), and "Two Voyages to New England" (1674). The sale will be notable also for the large number of fine bindings. Among the great masters in leather represented are Derome, Chamholle-Duru, Riviere, Padeloup, Breault, Root, Bayntun, Dubois, Ruban, and Roger Payne.

Andrew Freedman Picture Sale.

The most important picture sale of the near future will be that of the 52 pictures owned by the late Andrew Freedman in the Plaza ballroom Friday evening, April 14, next. The pictures will be placed on exhibition in the American Art Galleries this morning.

The Catalog of the collection emphasizes the high quality of the comparatively small collection as a whole.

Mr. Freedman's taste was for the examples of the Barbizon painters and their contemporaries and followers, although he secured a few modern Americans, and, fortunately for his heirs, three exceptionally good examples of the now most popular Blakelock. These are "Nymphs in the Forest," "Moonlight" and the "Edge of the Forest."

Porcelains and Embroideries.

There will be sold at the American Art Galleries on the after. of Apr. 14-15, the fine collection of old Chinese porcelains, jades, etc., of the late Edward Wassermann, which is particularly rich in Sang de Boeuf and other single color porcelains, there being notable examples of the famille verte. On the after. of Apr. 13, will be sold the Vitall Benguiat collection of XVI, XVII and XVIII century embroideries.

Persian Collection.

A very interesting and important Persian collection formed by Haji Ali Agha of Farce, Persia, is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries and will be sold on Thursday afternoon next by order of A. Izmirlian of New York. It consists of Persian miniatures, Mss., books, and bindings, many very old and beautiful; a remarkable VII century bronze bowl worthy of a place in a museum or the finest private collection, and 30 important rugs, among them a double face Ispahan woven for Zil-le Sultan, Shah of Persia.

One of Penn's Books.

One of the most important items in the sale of rare books at the Anderson Galleries on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday after. next is "The Second Punic War Between Hannibal and the Romanes," by Thomas Ross, printed in London in 1661, a royal folio in the original calf, with brilliant impressions of the plates.

The first 717 lots in the sale are from the library of the late B. F. Haddock of Philadelphia and consist of an unusually interesting collection of the best editions of standard works in English literature.

Remarkable Dickens Collection.

For many years Edwin W. Coggeshall of New York has been a buyer of literary rarities and now has a large and valuable collection of books, manuscripts, and autograph letters.

Old and Modern Works Sold.

The opening session Monday evening at the Anderson Galleries of the sale of a collection of old and modern paintings from Mr. William Macbeth, the estates of Florence B. Ruthrauff and Dr. R. A. Witthaus and Mrs. Joseph J. Little realized $4,371.

The second session Tuesday brought $7,505. Mr. Fenning paid $475 for Tournieres' "Comtesse de Malelieus." Mr. J. T. Drake paid $430 for Santvoort's "Portrait of Elizabeth Spiegel."

The final session, Wed., brought $7,540, which made the grand total of the sale $19,416. Mr. William Beck paid $420 for a "Flagellation of Christ," attributed to El Greco, and Mr. J. Topping $400 for Cotes' "Lady Caroline."

Mendonca and Others Sale, $32,935.

The third and final session of the Salvador de Mendonca and others sale, on the evening of Mar. 31, at the American Art Galleries, realized $19,740, which made the grand total for the sale $32,935.

Schultheis & Co. paid $875 for Thaulow's "Riverside in Winter," and Mr. D. George Dery $850 for Knaus' "Poppies."

End of Huntington-Bixby Sale.

The fifth and concluding session, Mar. 31, at the Anderson Galleries, of the Huntington-Bixby-Church sale realized $14,677.50, which made the grand total for the Bixby items $43,515 and of the whole sale $63,009.50.

Rosenbach & Co., of Philadelphia, gave $800 for the Mss. of Oscar Wilde's "The True Value and Function of Criticism: A Dialogue," first published in 1890 in the Nineteenth Century.

Mr. Gabriel Weis secured for $585 the Mss. of Trollope's novel "The American Senator." Mr. James F. Drake gave $405 for the first edition of Decker and Webster's play "West-Ward Hoe," London, 1607, and $280 for a first edition of La Fontaine's

"Fables," Paris, 1668. Mr. C. T. Walters paid $360 for a first edition of Marston's "The Wonder Woman, or the Tragedy of Sophonisba," London, 1606, and Mr. E. J. Courtland $300 for the first and only edition of "Everie Woman in Her Humor," London, 1609.

Jumel Napoleon Relics Sale.

The sale of the Napoleon-Josephine-Jumel relics at Silo's Fifth Avenue Galleries on Mar. 31 and April 1, brought $12,959. The amount for the first session was $2,295 and for the second $10,664.

Mr. W. E. Fuchs at the last session, paid $1,000 for a portrait of Madame de la Valliere attributed to Mignard. Mr. Lewis gave $725 for A. Eriol's large "Portrait of Madame Jumel, Her Daughter and Nephew" and immediately presented it to the Washington Headquarters Ass'n for the Jumel mansion coll'n.

It was announced that four lots of gold and diamond jewelry worn by the Empress Josephine at the Coronation, were withdrawn from the sale on instructions by cable from the French Government.

Stan. V. Henkels' Sale in Phila.

A rare "Mapp of Va., Md., N. J., N. Y. & New England" by John Thornton at the Sundyall in the Minnories and by Rob't Greene at ye Rose and Crowne in Budge-row, London (1681), in two states of the plate, 22x17 1/2, was sold March 31 at Stan. V. Henkels' Auction Rooms for $460.

Dunwoody Book Sale.

The two sessions Wed. of the sale at the American Art Galleries of the William H. Dunwoody and others sale of books, Mss., etc., fetched $12,107.75. Mr. Gabriel Weis paid $740 for a presentation copy by the author of the first edition of Burns, $680 for the first Kilmarnock edition of the same, $370 for a first Edinburgh edition and $132.50 for a "Tam O' Shanter."

On Thursday $8,384.50 was realized at two sessions which brought the grand total of the sale that far to $20,456.25. Mr. Weis paid $410 for a Poe Mss. a criticism of Estell A. Lewis' poem, "The Forsaken," for the Southern Literary Messenger.

Blanchard Print Sale.

At the American Art Galleries on Wed. aft. and eve'g was sold the first installment of the Japanese color print collection of Mrs. John Osgood Blanchard, the 469 numbers fetching $12,726.

Mr. Bernet, agent, gave $470 for Yeishi's "Extravagant and Luxurious Genii." Mr. Frederick W. Gookin paid $390 for Harund-bu's "A Musume Moso" and M. Seaman, agent, $370 for Toyokuni's "The Clothes Beating, Tama River." Miss Elizabeth Randol paid $330 for the same artist's "Seven Sages of the Bamboo Grove." Mr. F. J. Kovach $265 for Hokusai's "Sen pa Kai Sei," and Miss Francis E. Osborne $220 for the same artist's "Abe no Nakamaro." Mr. Howard Mansfield secured for $165 Shunsho's "A Lady, Her Son, Etc., Out Walking," and Mr. C. H. Chandler for $150 Hiroshige's "Fuikawa." Mr. A. Augustus Healy gave $135 for Kiyonaga's group of "Tea House Beauties."

The last session, Thursday, of the sale of the prints, brought $3,131, which made the grand total for the prints $15,857. The curios and bronzes brought $2,303.50. This made the grand total for the sale $18,161.

ANDERSON PICTURE SALE.

The 87 pictures by old and modern foreign and American painters forming the collection of Mr. John Anderson, Jr., were sold at auction in the Plaza ballroom Thursday evening by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby of the American Art Association for a total of $27,815.

The attendance was fair, but the bidding was slow, and only fair prices were realized. The majority of the pictures were of fair to good quality, but did not have very salable subjects.

A landscape by George Inness brought the highest figure of the sale, $2,050, from the Holland Galleries, and a "Harbor View" by the late George H. McCord brought a record auction price for this painter of $520, from Mr. Henry Schultheis.

The works fondly attributed by Mr. Anderson to Rembrandt, Raphael and Hubert Van Eyck, were announced as having been sold respectively to O. Bernet as agent for $2,500, to Mr. O. T. Chester for $200, and to Mr. Chester again for $2,000.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Thursday evening, with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices.

MANY ART WORKS BURNED.

At the fire Wednesday at 630 Fifth Ave., over 300 works by young decorators, entered in the Friends of Young Artists' competition, which closed Tuesday, were lost in the studio of C. S. Pietro, the sculptor, who also had about 35 examples of his work destroyed.

Also were destroyed the main exhibits in the collection lately shown at the former Blakeslee Galleries and donated for the benefit of young artists. The total loss is estimated at over $300,000.

Mezzotints and Sculptures at Goupils.

There is a display of the work of three woman artists, one etcher and three sculptors on view, to April 15, at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St. The etcher is Zella de Milhau, who shows a number of very artistic etchings in plain and in color, of farm scenes in Cheshire, England, along the coast cliffs and of bits of shipping. The same subjects are shown in plain and colored etchings, and while the rustic scenes are interesting, some of the best work is along the shore, notably a view looking from the downs over the cliffs.

The delicately designed and graceful art of Janet Scudder is shown in bronzes and terra cottas. There is a fine bronze of a little girl lifting up some sea weed. A little bronze cupid appears on a turtle and there is a dancing boy. A small bronze of the sculptor's trophy figure appears and the terra cotta female heads are most attractive. The chief work of Mme. Poupelet is the bronze seated figure "Femme a Sa Toilette," which belongs to the Metropolitan Museum. Two figures in excellent action show one woman starting in a race and another crouched for a jump. Inimitable in their way are the statuettes of birds and animals, of milch cow, cock and goose, of donkey, rabbit and cat.

The Martial Spirit of Hartley.

Full of gay color and the splendor of war in its brightest aspects are the recent decorative arrangements in paint by Marsden Hartley. He is showing, to April 22, at the Photo-Secession Gallery, 291 Fifth Ave., a number of his works recently arrived from Berlin. Though his recent display in that city aroused the wrath of some of the critics, Hartley most evidently was much impressed with the German army. He says in his exhibition leaflet that this Germanic group was originally intended to be part of a series, he had contemplated of movements in various areas of war activity. It will shock some of the writers on art to learn that, "There is no hidden symbolism whatsoever in them."

There is an engaging frankness about Hartley's artistic statements; his work, curious as it is, has often a decorative effect, which is quite impressive. Starting with the effect made upon him before the war by the mounted troops in a parade, he presents in agreeable color and with more or less successful ideas in design, works which by inanimate objects, such as iron crosses, aeronautic and other military insignia, flags, helmets, etc., recall events such as the death of an officer friend and the death of a charger, who is apotheosized in a horse's heaven. There is one composition, in which the statue on horseback of an early Prussian ruler appears surrounded by designs among which appear the words which in German signify Heaven and Hell.

It is not all very clear but the artist is perfectly well aware of what he is trying to represent, and he is certainly becoming more and more coherent.

Works by John Sharman.

John Sharman, a Bostonian, is showing a dozen landscapes in oil at the Cathedral Parkway Gallery, 2387 B'way. His small canvases are more successful than the larger ones. "A Summer Night" is effectively patterned and nice in tonal quality, but probably the broadly treated impressions of autumn landscape have more of nature in them. "The Freight Train" is water and smoke effectively treated, and has good atmospheric quality.

Pastels by Walter Griffin.

Walter Griffin is showing a number of pastels, chiefly of European subjects, at the studio of Paul Bartlett, 400 W. 23 St., which may be seen by the public on Saturdays throughout the month of April. These pastels, or rather colored crayon drawings, represent landscapes in Brittany and Norway and scenes in Venice. Among the most attractive of them are the "Peasant's Cottage, Longpre, France," the "Caucale Fishing Boats, Brittany," the "Peat Bog, Atang, Longpre," "The Fuss" and "Landscape near the North Fjord, Norway," "The Lattere, Venice" and the "Cathedral at Tours, France."

Portraits by Emil Fuchs.

There are now on view at the galleries of Jacques Seligmann and Co., 705 Fifth Ave., a collection of 25 portraits in oil by Emil Fuchs, a facile and decorative painter, concerned largely with surface indications, but apt in likenesses, who likewise shows four sculptures, two bronzes and two plasters. The bronzes are the effective group, "The First Lesson," a vigorous "Bust of an Artist" and the plasters busts of Mrs. Frances L. Wellman and "Little Mabel" both attractive.

Of the portraits in oil perhaps the most attractive is that of Mrs. Edwin Gould, in a Nile green dress.

Art Taste Not Swayed by War.

It is of interest to note that a canvas by George H. Smillie, donated by the artist for the benefit of the families of French soldiers, and purchased at a sale at the American Art Galleries, Mar. 31, was bought by an American with Pro-German sympathies.

NEW YORK, APRIL 15, 1916.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

FRICK BUYS HOUDON BUST.

It is currently reported in art circles that among other important sales of art works, made during the past few weeks for E. Gimpel and Wildenstein, with which house he is now connected, by Mr. Edward Brandus, was one of one of the most famous busts by Houdon. The sale is also reported to be almost a record one as to the price paid and to have only been exceeded by that paid by Judge Gary for Houdon's bust of his little daughter, purchased from Luveen Brothers two seasons ago.

U. S. OFFICIAL BURNS NUDES.

U. S. Collector of Customs Rivers McNeill a few days ago ordered burned two Japanese pictures owned by Jerome S. Blum, a Chicago artist, because the collector decided they were too obscene to be placed on exhibition. The pictures were more than 100 years old. Mr. Blum agreed to the burning of the pictures. It is said that an unofficial offer had been made for the prints by the Field Museum.

ARMLESS VENUS AS LIBERTY.

At a dinner, Apr. 8, at the Hotel Astor, a number of cartoonists and other artists and designers, as well as poster bill board men, pledged their support to the Committee on Industrial Preparedness of the Naval Consulting Board. The dinner was given for Howard E. Coffin, chairman of the committee by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The first of a number of preparedness posters has been painted by Mr. Flagg and shows the Venus de Milo, arrayed as the Goddess of Liberty, while above is the caption "Armless."

MORGAN TAPESTRIES SOLD.

It is announced that P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., have bought for between $1,800,000 and $2,000,000, from Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the 40 great tapestries collected by his father, and now at the Metropolitan Museum, where they will remain on view for a month. It is understood that Sir Hercules Read and Mr. Fairfax Murray, who visited this country two years ago, to appraise the tapestries, pronounced them worth $2,500,000.

The clou of the collection is the famous Mazarin Gothic tapestry, so called after the Cardinal, its former owner and thought by the "expert," Mr. George Leland Hunter to be the finest tapestry in the world. The subject is "The Triumph of Christ and the New Dispensation" and the date about 1500.

Another notable example is the Dollfus "Crucifixion," which is Early Renaissance and was made about 1525, the design by Bernard van Orley. This was formerly in the collection of the Duke of Berwick and Alva. A second Mazarin tapestry, like the first Gothic is the Saint Veronica, one of the series of 21, of the Knoke collection bought by Mr. Morgan. These include also "The Miracles of St. Claudius," "Ecce Homo," "The Lion Hunt," "Emperor Otto's Judgment," two Ancas and Dido panels, three Mortlakes, with van Orley designs, three XVII century Brussels panels, showing scenes from the life of Augustus Caesar and a Gothic example from the "Story of Man" series.

A group of tapestries after designs by Charles Coypel once belonged to the King of Spain and illustrate "Don Quixote." Three Beauvais examples from the Kann collection designed by Oudry show scenes from the comedies of Moliere.

SELLS ENAMELS AND BRONZES.

In addition to the disposal of his tapestries, it is announced that Mr. J. P. Morgan has sold to the Duveen Bros., the collection of enamels made by his father, as well as the greater part of the Renaissance bronzes. Five of the bronzes will be retained and placed in the Morgan Library. The Museum will further lose from exhibition, the great collection of miniatures, numbering over 800, which will be taken to the owner's country house at Glen Cove, L. I. The miniatures will be withdrawn from display May 1, as it is stated that Mr. Morgan and the Museum authorities fear that a longer continued exposure to the light would result in deterioration. The enamels and bronzes may not be removed for some time.

NEW ASSOCIATES ELECTED.

The following were elected associates of the Nat'l Academy at a meeting held Wednesday: Paul Bartlett, Charles L. Hinton and Anna V. Hyatt sculptors; and William Cotton, Jules Guerin, Lawton Parker, Guy Wiggins, Leopold Seyffert and William H. Singer, Jr., painters. Juries of Selection and Award for the two exhibitions of next season were also chosen.

FARLEY FOR DUNWOODIE.

Countess Anna Leary has purchased Pierre Tartou's Portrait of Cardinal Farley, said to be valued at $20,000, for presentation to the trustees of Dunwoodie Seminary. It will be an Easter offering and the gift is to be made on Easter Monday at a reception to be held at the Countess' residence.

FOWLES ESTATE DECISION.

Surrogate Fowler has decided that $200,000 of the $1,000,000 estate left by the late Charles Frederick Fowles of Scott & Fowles, who was drowned with his wife on the Lusitania, should be given to a sister of Mrs. Fowles. It could not be determined whether Mr. or Mrs. Fowles died first, and the executors asked the court for a construction of Mr. Fowles' will. The Surrogate, under the decisions of the common law, stated that it was apparent that the testator, Mr. Fowles, did not intend that the legacies which he left to his wife in the event of his dying first should go to his own next of kin, unless he long survived her.

PRINT SOLD FOR $10,000.

The "Portrait of Jan Lutma," an original etching by Rembrandt, etched in 1656, was

MADONNA AND CHILD.
Filippo Lippi.

In coming Riabouchinsky Sale.

SCULPTURE SHOW AT BUFFALO.

An exhibition of the National Sculpture Society will open at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo on June 1 and close Sept. 5. The jury consists of Herbert Adams, Robert Aitkin, Anna V. Hyatt, Albert Jaegers, Isidor Konti, Hermon A. MacNeil, Attilio Piccirilli and Adolph A. Weinman. Works will be shown in the galleries and part of the park space about the building.

ROCHESTER GETS FINE LINDE.

From the exhibition of Ossip L. Linde pictures at the Gillis galleries, Rochester, Mr. and Mrs. Lauriston L. Stone have purchased for presentation to the permanent collection of the Memorial Art gallery, "The Venetian Market Place."

recently sold by Albert Roullier to a prominent western collector for $10,000.

Jan Lutma was a goldsmith and sculptor, born at Groningen in 1584, who died at Amsterdam in 1669, and was probably a friend of Rembrandt's.

This subject is one of Rembrandt's greatest etched portraits, and this particular impression one of the finest in existence. Comparison has shown this proof to be much finer than the one of the same subject in the first state in the British Museum Collection. The size of the etched surface of the portrait is  $7\frac{3}{8} \times 5\frac{3}{4}$  inches.

Thomas Moran is leaving Pasadena, Cal., on Apr. 20 for the El Tovar Hotel, Grand Canyon, Arizona, where he will probably remain three weeks to paint.

FRAU HANFSTAENGL ON THE U. S.

"Frau Hifrat Edgar Hanfstaengel (mother of Herr Franz Hanfstaengel, the N. Y. art dealer of 543 5th Ave.) says the London 'Daily News' of Mar. 11 last, having visited America, thus related her experiences to a distinguished audience at the Prussian Ministry of the Interior (as reported by the 'Vossische'):

"Even the voyage to New York was not very pleasant. There were on board the ship only three persons who derived no advantage from the war. In New York itself anti-German sentiment was everywhere encountered. Hotels where prominent Germans were staying were boycotted by society. 'We do not care to live with these people under one roof.' After the sinking of the Lusitania the bias against Germans rose still higher and real hysterical excitement ensued. It is a fact that quite a distinguished-looking American spat in the face of a woman who was sitting in the electric car reading the New York 'Staatszeitung,' and could only be prevailed upon with difficulty to make an apology.

"It was extraordinarily difficult to get New York society, which lives in close touch with London, to understand Germany's position. London opinion and testimony were always referred to, in spite of the arguments that America's own history teaches mistrust towards England. The Belgian atrocities were firmly believed in, although correspondents sent to Belgium by certain by no means pro-German papers had been unable to find any support for the stories. The highest Government circles are animated by pro-British sentiments, and only members of the Army and the Navy are to some extent just to Germany."

BLAKELOCK REDIVIVUS.

The anticipated visit of the insane and veteran American artist, Ralph Albert Blakelock to the exhibition of his pictures now being held for his benefit at the Reinhardt Galleries—took place on Tuesday last and has been exploited at such great length in the dailies, that it needs no repeating today.

The artist was brought from the Middletown, N. Y., Asylum, where he has been for the past eighteen years, to the city by his physician, Dr. Ashley, visited the Reinhardt Galleries, inspected and commented interestingly upon his pictures shown there, met his old friend Harry Watrous and remembered him, and was taken on an auto ride, to lunch and the Metropolitan Museum, and later returned to Middletown.

Blakelock is a spare and shrunken man of 69, with good eyesight and fair vigor, giving no indication in speech or manner of his impaired mentality. Whether or not he is still capable of good painting remains to be proven. A good deal of what was written and published in the dailies of his visit to New York deserves the slang appellation of "Guff." There was nothing sensational in the old artist's visit to New York and while the result of such visit and its exploitation may have the good result of markedly increasing the fund being raised for himself and family, through the efforts of well intentioned persons, belatedly awakened to his long immurement in the Asylum and his family's poverty, there are those who criticize the exploitation of this visit as "American hysteria."

ART SCHOOL FREE OF DEBT.

Mr. Frank Tilford, president of the N. Y. School of Applied Design for Women has announced that the school is now self-sustaining and free from debt as the result of donations received recently amounting to $135,000. Among those who contributed were Mrs. Russell Sage, James B. Ford, J. P. Morgan and John D. Rockefeller.

'SPHINX' GIVES YOU THOUGHTS."

"But the most discussed nude in this Academy exhibition is certainly the 'Sphinx' by Sergeant Kendall," says an Italian writer who claims to be an art "critic" and "expert." "It is a painting expressing and illustrating an idea. Is the artist succeeding? From the philosophical point of view we think not. The 'Sphinx' is not so incomprehensible as the author wished it to be.

"Art is a means to itself, and no one will dare to accuse the Vatican Venus—that in the pose is not very dissimilar from the Kendall 'Sphinx'—to be too suggestive. In this painting the author, who affirms himself once more strong in drawing, has presented a painting which gives you thoughts."

CRITIC BOMBARDS ACADEMY.

"The annual exhibition of our National Academy, which is now open, it has been said is more academical than ever. Whether circumstances have conspired to prevent the sending of productions of a living quality to the galleries or whether it has been that the jury has been exceptionally stern it is impossible to say, but certainly the result is one to cause the thinking people who are compelled to attend the Academy to raise their hands in dismay. The two preceding academical shows were sad enough affairs in all conscience, but memory fails to suggest a previous academy that exceeds the present one in dullness.

"There is not a single picture in the exhibition that fires one to such enthusiasm that one rushes about the town exhorting one's friends to hurry up to see it. The tameness of the pictures is so pronounced that all the exhorting no doubt will be of the reverse character. Nevertheless most of the prominent academicians and their favorite pupils are represented in the show. The prizes are more numerous than ever, and with a single exception—Lawson's landscape is worthily honored—have been bestowed upon intensely commonplace pictures. It becomes a painful duty therefore to signalize the exhibition as equally official and stupid.

"So typical an academy would naturally invite one to define the term except that definitions of the word are no longer permissible in the best circles. Defining the term has developed into as fixed a form as has the academy itself, and besides all that one needs to know can be gathered from the dictionaries. One is allowed, however, to crystallize the whole academy into one or two concrete and representative examples. * * *

"J. Alden Weir, though president of the academy, is not usually academic. It is true that his landscapes are limited in range and that he seems to play over and over again the same tune, but the tune is a pretty one and he enters into the spirit of

it. When he painted his 'Follower of Grolier,' however, there is no doubt that he drifted into what Mr. Baker calls the academic 'state.' It is a most posed, unthought-out and wooden affair. If it can be proved that he painted it since his assumption of the presidency it will be an excellent document in the future against permitting any genuine artist to occupy the office.

A Changed Kenyon Cox.

"But Kenyon Cox is the Lord Leighton of our academy. Rightly or wrongly, the public mind has fixed upon him as the type of an American academical. Possibly in these days he is not so aggressive upon the juries as in days past, but the tradition of his former sternness is so fixed that he doesn't have to be. One heard of him and his juries as continually excluding something. At one time it would be a stirring work by George Luks, or perhaps a poetic morceau by A. B. Davies. One heard less of the brilliant talents that he was discovering and placing.

"The juries of course are not invariably the same, and occasionally some one with a drachma or two of red blood more than an academical is supposed to have permitted something with a little life and originality to be accepted. But no such individual graced the jury this year. Thanks to the absolutism of those who chose the pictures, there is nothing to consider but the fruits of the academy itself.

"In consequence I am forced to mention the names of Charles W. Hawthorne, F. Luis Mora and Ivan G. Olinsky. They are seldom referred to in these columns, because as much as possible the effort is made to fix the public attention upon profitable subjects. Certainly there is no temptation here to condemn for the mere pleasure of condemning, and for that matter I have not mentioned the Messrs. Hawthorne, Mora and Olinsky to condemn them. But they are academical fruits. They have been chosen, pruned, dieted, petted and be-medalled. Mr. Olinsky is the prize pupil of the academy schools. Mr. Mora is the product of the Art Students' League, and Mr. Hawthorne is the star pupil of Mr. Chase.

Pets of the Academy.

"No others seem so peculiarly the pets of the academy as these three. If the academy is truly conserving traditions then these three are our modern Hals, Titian and Velasquez in the flesh. Yet it is scarcely likely that either Mr. Cox or Mr. Weir as they sit with their friends of an evening ever grow heated in debate over the attainments of these young artists. What is there to debate in their work?

"No doubt some years ago when these young painters were quite young they dreamed fine dreams of the future when they were to be heroes, like Whistler and Monet and Goya. All students dream such dreams. Lord Leighton himself. I dare swear, dreamed such a dream. When late in life he realized that he was not a Goya but a rich Lord Leighton, very probably the riches helped assuage his grief. So, too, with our much pruned, much instructed young men. The teachings of the Academy have pretty effectually clipped their wings against lofty flying. But it has made them acceptable to the hoi polloi. They won't be greatly talked about, but they will become rich.

"Having spoken of these men, I suppose I should legitimately describe their contributions—but I cannot. I have the vaguest recollection of Mr. Olinsky's painting, some sort of a female three-quarter length I think it is, but at the time I glanced at it it never occurred to me that it would call for a notice. Mr. Hawthorne's has no place in my memory at all. A critic of course looks at everything, but soon learns to protect his poor head from unnecessary impressions. Mr. Mora's large canvas was seen. It was a very large canvas. Strangely enough it was an apotheosis of Goya! As Goya is in fashion this year I trust it will sell.

Cox's 'Truth' Scored.

"Mr. Cox's picture is called 'Truth.' Truth sits upon a stone well curb in a contorted position and holds up a mirror which reflects nothing. Truth's feet and hands are uncomfortably small and not a single joint in Truth's body articulates. Truth will never get up from her uncomfortable position, for as Mr. Cox has drawn her she cannot. Poor Truth! I have a vague recollection of a poem about Truth, read years ago. The poem was by Schiller. Two young men came upon a lonely temple. They were told it was forbidden to enter. It was the Temple of Truth. Nevertheless the young men forced an entrance. They saw the goddess, but Schiller adds, 'They never smiled again.' Has Mr. Cox been reading Schiller?"

ART BOOK REVIEW.

THOMAS GAINSBOROUGH. By William T. Whitley. 12 mo. London: Smith, Elder & Co.

This new biography of Gainsborough is not only a valuable addition to Gainsborough bibliography but an interesting contribution to the literature on the art of the Georgian period. The author has researched a fairly uncommon field for fresh material and handled his gleanings in a manner which might well tempt biographers of other artists to give attention to this source—a too often despised source—contemporary journalistic criticism. Mr. Whitley's labors have been productive of such important discoveries as the dates of execution of certain famous canvases—as "The Mall, St. James' Park" (recently purchased by Mr. Frick) the portrait of Mrs. Siddons, "The Market Cart" and the "Mrs. Robinson" of the Wallace Collection, as well as of new particulars concerning Gainsborough's rupture with the Royal Academy, which occasioned his permanent withdrawal as an exhibitor. Mr. Whitley's basic sources are the newspaper notices printed, and often written by Sir Henry Bate Dudley, Gainsborough's champion during the painter's entire London career, and the proprietor of "The Morning Herald." Prior to the entrance of Bate into Gainsborough's life, the period from the painter's birth in 1728 as detailed by the biographers Thickett and Fulcher is subjected to much inquisitorial scrutiny, especially the period that has to do with the painter's stay at Bath, where he occupied a house in the famous "Circus" as a neighbor of such personages as the Earl of Chatham and the Duke of Bedford, and where John Britton, F.R.S., saw much of him.

The journalist Bate, almost from the moment of Gainsborough's settlement in London in 1774, became the "good angel" of the man who was to enter a bitter rivalry with Sir Joshua Reynolds for leadership among portraitists. Bate continued to exalt the genius of the Sudbury man even after Gainsborough withdrew all his pictures from the 1784 R. A. exhibition because "the hangmen" refused to place his "Three Princesses" in a position desired by him. The author insists on the importance of the information furnished by Bate of Gainsborough's speedy preparation of an exhibition of his own on his withdrawal from the Academy, which he opened in July of 1784.

"The Mall" was one of the pictures in this exhibition, having been painted the year previously. To the R. A. of 1780 Gainsborough sent his portrait of Bate, where it provoked some merriment from its position as a pendant to Copley's "Major Montgomery" and by the side of Fuseli's "Satan."

The author offers a mass of good material on the circumstances of Gainsborough's death in 1788 and the sale of his pictures following. He gives also an interesting chapter on Gainsborough Dupont, and appends a series of letters from Gainsborough to William Jackson of Exeter, the musical composer, whose title to immortality was earned by a strange attack upon Haydn for his ultra-modernism. These letters show the painter of "The Mall" to have been a rather profane correspondent, the master of a terse and not very elegant pen.

Gainsborough may have been a rough hand with the pen, but with the brush his touch was velvet and gossamer.

JOSEPH PENNELL'S PICTURES IN THE LAND OF TEMPLES. Introduction by W. H. D. Rouse. Litt. D. Crown quarto, net $1.25. J. B. Lippincott Co., Phila.

As works of art Joseph Pennell's lithographs of Grecian temples, if not inspiring, are interesting as summary and clever representations in black and white of the great architectural remains of the Acropolis. How far they disprove the charge of a Boston authority that Pennell is "nothing but a ragtime sketcher" is a point about which even the most loyal admirers of Whistler's friend and biographer may disagree. The summariness of these black and whites will hardly be denied. The aid of photography is suspected, and the perfunctory touch of the man who feels sure he can "hit it" invariably with little effort is more than evident.

Undoubtedly the lithographs themselves have a quality of which there is no hint in the half tone reproductions, but even after one has inspected the lithographs it is impossible not to conclude that their scale and their number are not fully justified by their artistic merits. The effects of light and shade are no more likely to satisfy artists than the architectural details are to satisfy architects. The feelings of all having been "poured in the same mould" would be less acute were there 10 pictures instead of 40, and the monotony is not much lessened by the running comment of the artist which has the virtue of brevity. The book is well set and well printed.

THE ARTS IN EARLY ENGLAND, by Baldwin Brown, M.A. Vols. III and IV. John Murray, London. 21/ each.

These volumes, which after a considerable interval follow two similar books dealing with Anglo-Saxon art during the period preceding the Norman invasion, are concerned with the pagan period of Saxon art and industry. These are no mere compilations of facts already ascertained, but an extraordinarily thorough and comprehensive survey, based upon research, concerned not only with the manifestations of Saxon art itself, but also upon comparison with it of its contemporaries elsewhere. An exhaustive survey is made of Tomb Furniture, including the various types of arms and ornaments discovered in this connection, objects which are in the highest degree significant in determining with exactitude the characteristics of domestic arts at a given period.

The author refutes, in no uncertain way, the supposition that Anglo-Saxon art was derivative, owing its inspiration to Frankish models, and establishes in a convincing manner the fact of the native skill in design exemplified in the beautiful specimens still extant of the Kentish jewelry. Much light is thrown, incidentally, on the life and customs of our forebears, while the excellence and variety of the illustrations should be of the greatest value to students of design. There is little doubt that this work will maintain its place as the standard of reference for Early English Art for many years to come.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

McDowell Group Display.

Eight painters and a sculptor are represented in the current MacDowell Club display on at 108 West 55th St., to April 16 inclusive. There are so many weak canvases that anything fairly good shines. Some portrait arrangements by Carl van Buskirk are interesting—individual, and free and broad in treatment, although rather painty. In one clever composition the gay flowered background seems too broken up.

There are two nudes by the same man, in which the drawing is good, the flesh quality excellent and the arrangement pleasing. Greek in derivation, C. E. Polowetski's canvases are each different in technique. A large one in which a nude girl, bound, is shown in the hands of torturers is a typical Salon work. It is strong in a way, but the painter shows little knowledge of color relations, and while well drawn and composed it has no subtlety or charm—a typical French school study by a particularly apt pupil. The portrait of a "Lady in Red" shows knowledge, but is also commonplace. A still life by Dent Robinson is well painted.

Other exhibitors are G. P. Ennis, Charles Jaeger, Oscar H. Julius, Victor Julius, Tom L. Peers and Albert Jaegers, whose sculptures are strong in the conventional monumental way. How many painters we have and how few artists!

Watercolors at Daniel's.

A brilliant little group of watercolors is hung at the Daniel Gallery to Apr. 25. With most of the contributors form is but a secondary matter only suggested, and color is of much moment. Hayley Lever, with his suggestive method falls gracefully into the partly modernist line, and shows shore views here and in England which are notable for air, movement and color. John Marin has several bright landscapes, full of dash and suggestion, in one of which a large tree figures. Various daintily colored souvenirs of vaudeville acts are presented with much vivacity by Charles Demuth. Samuel Halpert and Man Rav both show landscapes which interest in effect of masses, but are rather indefinite in form. William Zorach has landscape work which suggests the Japanese while Marguerite Zorach sends among other examples one suggestive of a child's drawing. In this sleeping humans and animals are strewn over a landscape with a glimpse of water, and a crimson cloud is suspended Zepplin-like over the scene.

Illuminated Mss. at Bonaventures.

There are now on view at the Bonaventure Galleries, 601 Fifth Ave. to Apr. 29 a number of illuminated books, antiphonal scores and coats of arms, of the XV, XVI and XVII centuries. Among the known calligraphers represented is Nicolas Jarry, famous for his work in the reign of Louis XIV. The bindings, many of which are very fine, include examples of the Eves and Boyer. There are preparations for and prayers to be said during the mass, illuminated by Jarry. Notable among the Books of Hours, is one produced in Northern France, in the middle of the XV century and with 10 large miniatures of Biblical scenes. Another bound by one of the Eves, and dating from 1420, once belonged to a Mme. Thomas Le Tellier, who was Marie Pont St. Pierre. A large framed theological thesis is dedicated by Hardouin the Perefice de Beaumont, Archbishop of Paris, to Emmanuel Theodore de la Tour d'Auvergne, Duc d'Albert.

Important Museum Additions.

A beautiful work in marble of ancient Greek sculpture, an over life-size head of a young athlete, purchased last year from the Rogers Fund, has been placed on view in the Recent Accessions Room at the Metropolitan Museum, where it was first seen at the monthly press view on Apr. 7. This portrait of a handsome young boxer is, according to Director Edward Robinson who contributes a scholarly article on the bust to the Museum Bulletin, "undoubtedly an original Greek work of the fourth century B. C., executed under the immediate influence of Praxiteles, and probably by a member of his school. It evidently formed part of a full-length statue.

Another notable feature of the occasion was the opening of a new Egyptian room, whose features were commented on by Curator Albert M. Lythgoe. This room is the eighth one of the series and continues the representation of the twelfth and ends at the foundation of the eighteenth dynasty. Though many of the objects shown are familiar to visitors, an almost equal number are recent acquisitions, largely from the excavations in the pyramid field at Lisht, and gifts by Lord Carnarvon from his neighboring work at Thebes.

Here, not far from the statuettes of Sesostris I. shown last year, is displayed for the first time a remarkable figure of a man riding bareback on a black and white mare. This, in addition to being one of the earliest representations of the horse in Egyptian art, is the only known representative of a riding horse modelled in the round.

A modern sculpture, shown in the recent accessions room, is the inimitable marble of his baby girl by Paul Manship, which was recently presented by Mrs. Edward N. Dwight. Here are also shown the museum's recent purchases—the capital example by

Book Workers' Exhibit.

The Guild of Book Workers is holding its ninth annual exhibition in the rooms of the Architectural League in the Fine Art Building, 215 West 57 St.

While artistic bindings make up the greater part of the exhibit there are other features. There is an illuminated copy of Omar Khayyam done by Mme. Da Loria Norman and valued at $2,000. Marian Baldwin and Scapecchi also show finely illuminated letters and pages.

There are many designs for bookplates and title pages and exhibits of end papers, hand made. These are the papers that go just inside a book's covers. John F. Grabau, Emily Preston, Fanny Dudley, Helen Haskell Noyes, Harvey S. Chatfield, Florence Dowden among others show ornamental leather bindings.

Some of the exhibits are for sale. Visitors will be attracted by an exhibit of Easter cards.

Montclair Loan Exhibition.

The new Loan Exhibition at the Montclair Museum, consisting of works by Julius Rolshoven, William Couper, and Richard Hamilton Couper, will continue to Apr. 30. Mr. Rolshoven shows portraits, interiors, wood and garden scenes, fantasies, and one of his Tunis pictures. William Couper, sculptor, sends watercolor marines, "Impressions of the Azores and the Mediterranean." Richard Hamilton Couper, son of William Couper, is represented by Tempera Paintings, Oils, Monotypes and Colored Etchings.

Works by Arthur W. Emerson.

A painter of talent, Arthur W. Emerson, found inspiration for a number of brilliantly colored scenes at the Pan'a-Pacific Exposit-

Jongkind, a view of Honfleur; Konti's statuette of "Immortality," and various textiles. Also on view are two pencil drawings by Menzel, given by Mr. George Blumenthal, and a Chinese Sung funeral urn presented by Mr. S. Ma for Tonying & Co.

On the main floor was shown a remarkable model, faithful in every detail, executed by Mr. Dwight Franklin of the great hall of Penshurst Castle, England, in feudal times. A feature of great interest in the hall of arms and armor is the famous casque of Philip of Negroli, loaned by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. In an adjacent gallery are shown three paintings of men with armor purchased at the last Blakeslee sale by Dr. Bashford Dean, Curator of Armor, and placed on loan by him. It is interesting to learn that the picture by Sustermans has been identified as that of Cosimo II of Medicis, and the casque at his right curiously, as one which in the museum's collection. A second portrait by Van Noort has been identified as that of Ferdinand, Cosimo's successor, while one of Ferdinand of Austria is by Coello.

Miss Sweeny's Works at Folsom's.

There are now shown at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., a number of portraits in oil, pastel, red chalk and miniature by Sarah Catherine Sweeny. The oils number four and they are not impressive, that of three children being particularly uninteresting. In her pastel and red chalk drawings the artist has, however, real success, especially with children. Among the best examples which are drawn with spirit and excellent in character are those of Miss Edith O. Hawk, Mr. Herbert Gray, Mr. Robert Lansing, and Masters Harry Parish and Otto Rohme.

The Gorham Galleries

Important examples of sculpture suitable for presentation to retiring officers and directors of corporations

Theatrical Models at the Century.

William H. Lippincott, chairman of the Art Committee of the Century Association, has arranged in the art gallery, where it remains on view between one and five in the afternoon, to May 2, a highly interesting and instructive loan exhibition of theatrical models, sketches and drawings, made for stage settings, mainly for N. Y. productions.

The models are arranged behind glass in dark alcoves at either side of the room and lit up by electricity, the effects being in nearly every case most artistic and it may, without exaggeration be said, fascinating.

The water color sketches, besides works by the above, include examples of John Mazzanovich, Charles Graham and Walter Burridge.

At the Union League Club.

The monthly exhibition, at the Union League Club, arranged again as a group display by Harry W. Watrous, consists of 27 examples by five men. By A. A. Anderson, there is a large and charming outdoor picture of a young girl, seated on the grass, called "Betty." Seven admirable examples of landscape, portrait and still life, testify to the versatility of Emil Carlsen. There are seven works by F. S. Church, including the delightful "Flowers of the Sea," and "The Enchantress." Chief among the six examples of the admirable art of William S. Robinson are "Grey Cliffs" and "September." The delicate yet vibrant artistry of J. Alden Weir is seen also in half a dozen works, which include "Fall Pastures," "Visiting Neighbors" and "The Fishing Party."

PROVIDENCE.

Recent watercolors by Prosper L. Senat, nearly all scenes in Capri, Bermuda, and on the Dalmatian coast, are on exhibition at the Tilden-Thurber Gallery. Mr. Senat's work is most refined and delicate in color, and the decorative quality emphasized in every subject, and he is especially happy in painting sunlight and the sub-tropical atmosphere. Technically the paintings resemble oils, having a heavy impasto and one tone superimposed on another.

"A Relic of the Saracens" has a broadly painted sunlight effect with details of the architectural features cleverly suggested. "A Capri Pergola" has remarkable perspective in which the accessories are cleverly introduced to carry out the effect of increasing distance. "Old Mission of San Juan Capistrano" is a rich interior with glimpses of tropical vistas seen through a series of archways, and "Approaching Twilight—Bermuda" has a lovely sky with clouds of rose color delicately painted and drawn.

Portraits at City Club.

Six portraits are now represented at the City Club, 55 W. 44 St., by Dewitt M. Lockman, shows an interpretation of a vivacious blonde girl and one of a stately brunette, full of character and vigorous in brush work.

There are a brilliant example of Robert Henri and three typical characterizations of femininity and a low-toned picture of a girl at a piano by Wilhelm Funk. Luis Mora contributes a bust portrait of a Spanish girl, Gardner Soper, two pictures of women which have most of the fashion illustrator than the painter quality. Wm. Smedley's portrait of a sweet-faced young woman has charm.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger, Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

AMER'N PICTURES APPRECIATE

The picture auctions of the season—while not markedly successful thus far in the matter of prices and the bringing out of new collectors, have had one most gratifying feature—namely, the rise in values and consequent appreciation, of American pictures.

Not only have most of the pictures by early and modern American artists offered at auction since December last, brought good to unprecedentedly high prices, but they have more than held their own with old and modern foreign works and in some sales, notably the Lambert, surpassed the figures brought by the latter.

A landscape by George Inness brought the highest figure, $3,050, at the recent John Anderson, Jr., sale at the Plaza, while the almost sensational prices obtained for the Blakelocks, notably the $20,000 for the "Moonlight," at the Lambert sale, has resulted in a veritable boom for the insane artist's works.

Good examples of such painters as J. Francis Murphy, Bruce Crane, and of course Inness, Martin and Homer, have passed most of those paid for foreign pictures. At private sale the same story has been told. Winslow Homer's "The Gale," was sold for the record price, for an American picture, of $30,000 the other day to the Worcester Museum, and three examples of Gilbert Stuart and several of Sully have brought exceptional figures of late.

To what is this deserved rise in the value of American pictures due? Some argue that the war has brought it about. We are of the opinion that while the attention of American art lovers and collectors may have been diverted, to some extent, to home products in art as in other lines, by the war, and they were thus enabled to form the acquaintance of American pictures—this does not itself sufficiently account for their rise in value. We firmly believe that American pictures, especially of the safe and sane school, have finally won recognition on their own merits.

Nelson S. Bowdish, a landscape painter, died Apr. 3 at Skaneateles, N. Y., in his 85th year. He was a veteran of the Civil War and born at New Libson, Otsego Co. He leaves a daughter and son.

Robert Burns Wilson.

Robert Burns Wilson, painter and poet, a studio mate at Pittsburg of the late Nat'l Academy President, John W. Alexander, died Mar. 31, in St. John's Hospital, Brooklyn, at the age of 65. He was born at Parker, Pa. Alexander and Wilson made a trip one summer down the Ohio and on their boat being wrecked near Paducah, the latter settled in Kentucky, at Frankfort, remaining there for nearly 30 years. While in the South the artist painted "Ashes of Roses" and a "Head of Christ," which attracted considerable attention. Other works are "Little Bo-Peep," "Winter Sunset Gloaming" and "The Spirit of Indian Summer." Besides a number of portraits, including one of Mr. Henry Watterson, the artist produced marines and animal pictures. In addition to poetic contributions to the Century, Harper's, and the Atlantic, Mr. Wilson published two volumes of verse "Life and Love," which appeared a quarter of a century ago, and "The Shadows of the Trees." He is survived by a widow, who was Miss Anne Hendrick, and a daughter.

Enoch Rosekrans Vedder.

Enoch Rosekrans Vedder, architect, son of the well known painter, Elihu Vedder, who has long had a studio in Rome, died in that city of an affection of the brain on Apr. 2. His widow, Mrs. Angela Reston Vedder, is now on her way to Italy. Mr. Vedder was born in Rome in 1878, studied architecture in Paris and later in Boston. Nearly ten years ago he began the practice of his profession in N. Y. In 1914 he suffered a nervous breakdown and went abroad last December.

Jeremiah D. McAuliffe.

Jeremiah D. McAuliffe, an architect for the Board of Education and a member of the American Institute of Architects died in N. Y., Apr. 7, in his 55th year. He was born in Hartford, Conn., and is survived by a widow.

Charles M. Wemmell.

Charles M. Wemmell, known as an artist and collector, died in Brooklyn, Mar. 31, in his 77th year. He was born in this city and at the opening of the Civil War enlisted in the 71st Regiment of New York volunteers.

John Ley.

John Ley of Racine, Wis., who painted a life size portrait of Bishop Nicholson, ended his life in his studio by swallowing cyanide of potassium. He was 40 years old and studied in the Royal Art gallery in Copenhagen.

CORRESPONDENCE

Academician on Blakelock Case.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

I would be the last to decry the sincerity of some of those good people, who, even if belatedly, have rallied to the relief and support of that eminent painter Ralph A. Blakelock, nor am I in any way insensible to his great ability nor unsympathetic to his sad life history and his present needs, which bid fair to be well met. But I do not like the hypocrisy of others who have evidently apparently seized upon this opportunity, suddenly afforded through the rise in value of Blakelock's works, through a sensational high sale figure—to exploit themselves and their twenty years' late sorrow for the artist and his family and some of whom again doubtless have Blakelocks to sell.

Why have not the collectors who purchased Blakelocks for a song and who can now unload at great profit interested themselves in the artist's case all these years? Why these maudlin tears now? Does it need insanity in the case of an American artist, as it seemingly does a racy divorcee or a jewel of fabulous price stolen, for an American actress to gain a name—to touch the hearts and unloose the purses of American art lovers and collectors? If so must American artists of recognized ability and performance be declared insane and consequently have to make sensational copy for the press—to come into their own?

Yours truly,

Academician.

New York, April 17, 1916.

Department Stores and Blakelock.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

And now the Department Stores are roused to aid the veteran artist Blakelock. How touching! One offers an overcoat—another a hat, while still another promises to keep him shod the remainder of his days. How about his apparently hatless, coatless and shoeless condition these past eighteen years? Have his wife and children been shod and clothed and hatted? Oh the uses of advertising! What does the Artists Fund Society, which for some time past has been quietly and unostentatiously sending monthly contributions to the family of their disabled brother artist, think of it all?

Anti-Hypocrisy.

New York, April 16, 1916.

Chicago and September Morn.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Twice recently you have connected the hanging of Kendall's "Sphinx" at the annual American exhibition held at the Chicago Art Institute last November, with the treatment accorded by Chicago to Chabas' "September Morn." Without attempting to discuss the merits or demerits of Kendall's painting, may I suggest that the Chicago, which "shied" at September Morn, was not the Art Institute, but a 6-foot "copper" of Irish extraction, who objected to a display of artistic nudity in a shop window on one of Chicago's busiest corners.

While the reproduction of Cabas' painting was on display in this window, a half dozen youngsters were always hanging about. It has been shrewdly surmised that some one interested in the sale of the prints may have had to do both with assembling the crowd of daily onlookers and with reporting conditions to the police, thereby securing a very effective bit of advertising. Two printing establishments are reported to have worked overtime in running off sufficient prints of "September Morn" to supply the demand.

Respectfully Yours,

Chicago, April 12, 1916. C. H. H.

A BOSTON ART SAGE MUSES.

No Zeppelin that flew over Paris or London ever created any more excitement than that which affected the artistic heart of "dear old Boston," when it was found that the Art Museum had bought a Hawthorne! This news has circulated with bated breath, and not believed at first, but when it was found that the work had been purchased through dealers (none other than the Messrs. Vose) and it was rumored that a majority of the trustees thought it was by the famous author, long since dead, then it was easily understood. The surprising fact is that the trustees actually bought the canvas for "Cold Roast Boston," as dear old Tom Appleton, of blessed memory, called it, prefers amateur work by members of the "best" families.

"Yes, my dear! Wonderful talent, is it not? Her grandmother married a Mt. Vernon Pinkney, the one who went to England with Copley—yes, yes, he did die of drink, but it was quite the thing at that time, my dear. Everybody drank hard. No, my dear, they do not live together, who does in these days—the family temper you know, of course, we make allowances. But did you ever see such color?" "Muddy?" "Oh, my dear, temperament—temperament—" "The arm out of drawing?" "Ree-ally; perhaps—perhaps, but you know the dear girl has so much feeling; only people with such blood in their veins could do such things without a master. Positively no instruction, I assure you, my dear!" "Better if she had?" "Oh, my dear, you do not realize—the good old Bowdoin blood, you know," etc., etc., etc. Such conversations are often overheard in local galleries here, ad nauseam.

And Boston's best, some of them at least, really think that they know it all.

But there is a glorious lot of humbug in it, as is proved by a few of the very rich getting together and guaranteeing a couple of hundred thousand, and the promise of a third, if all went well, to get the curator of prints from the Louvre to come over and act as a buyer of pictures! And he certainly did act! After a while their eyes were opened, but not until he had bought some pretty rotten old stuff. Contemporary art has a pretty hard road to hoe at the Museum, and when it was announced that the Guild of Boston Artists had been invited to hold an exhibition there, all those who were not in the Guild got upon their hind legs and howled, not realizing that it was an entering wedge to get something alive into the Mausoleum.

The reason for the exclusion of contemporary art no one knows. The Museum of Fine Arts, its trustees, subscribers, and patrons, know nothing by demonstration of the work of the new men of N. Y., Philadelphia, Chicago, or the great middle west. Never has there been held within its walls before now, an exhibition of contemporary art. A few years ago an abortive attempt was made to have a show of the works of Boston artists, but the jury, or committee of selection made such a botch of it, and the hanging committee showed such favoritism, that any other project of the kind was killed for some time.

Speaking of that, and other hanging committees, why, in the name of common sense, should there be a sign upon the storm door of the Fine Arts Galleries in New York which reads "Pull"? Why advertise it? "It is all very well to dissemble your love, but why need you kick me down stairs?"

The Art Club exhibition here is disappointing. There are a few fine pictures, a lot of mediocre, and a few bad ones. And who can explain the selections of the jury of award? But then who ever can? Why leave out Yarrow's beautiful portrait, to say nothing of several landscapes? But, as the skunk said to the automobile: "Oh, what's the use?" It is a thankless task and no one is ever satisfied. The wisest thing to do is to drop awards and let pictures hang on their merits, for on their merits they will eventually live or die. No medal or award ever made a picture or an artist great, although it may help the sale of his pictures at the time. Time alone tells the story. Boston, Mar. 29, 1916. "Veritas."

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, April 5, 1916.
The sale of the rare furniture and bric-a-brac of the late Madame du Sommerard, chiefly inherited by her late husband from the founder of the Cluny Museum, drew a large number of connoisseurs recently to the Hotel Drouot, although few of the well-known collectors were present. The prices were not extraordinary and no very notable pictures were offered, save one by Isabey, which fetched only $230. A Louis XVI console in mahogany with bronze ornamentation was sold for $812.

At another recent sale Eighteenth Century engravings by St. Aubin, Baudouin and others secured only fair prices. Two, before the letter, by St. Aubin, were adjudged at $230 and two by Baudouin at $207.

At a third auction sale a small plaster cast by Houdon, representing Voltaire seated, the artist's original study for his famous statue of the philosopher, was bought for $1,130, a Sixteenth Century portrait by an unknown artist of one of the Italian schools. "The Daughter of the Doge," for $822, and two ancient gouaches for $204.

Posters, drawings, lithographs, pastels and watercolors, relating to the war, shown by the Harvard Club of Paris, a few days ago, prior to being sent to America for exhibition, excited much interest among native as well as foreign collectors. All the noted French caricaturists were represented. Steinlen, Léandre, Abel Faivre, Poulbot, Forain, Jonas, Synave and Hansi, and some of the eminent painters, notably Simon, Redon, Willette, Roll and Flameng. Realism, satire and pathos intensified are the dominant notes. Many of the drawings are immensely strong, particularly those of Forain, Faivre, Jonas and Steinlen.

Art Exports To Be Taxed?

Everybody in France who is interested in the art trade is, of course, earnestly opposed to the twofold proposition now before a parliamentary committee: to establish an official list of such paintings and statuary as are to be retained in the country by legal mandate because of their transcendent excellence, and to put a tax on the exportation of all objects of art. In the first instance it is represented that the state would be obliged to pay enormous sums in indemnity to the owners of embargoed pictures, statues, tapestries and furniture; and in the second, the projected task would be nearly impossible of accomplishment. It is pointed out that the catalog of the Louvre has not yet been completed, and that the collection in the Carnavalet Musée, in some respects the most curious in the world, and those in many provincial museums have never been cataloged at all. How (it is asked) can the state do, in reference to private collections, and thousands of single works of art scattered throughout the country, what it has not been able to do with reference to those in its own possession? The answer to this has not been given.

The proposal to exhibit at Toulouse some of the treasures of the Louvre which were sent there for safety in 1914, when the Germans were advancing upon Paris, has met with much timorous opposition. It is contended that for the ancient canvases the danger of irreparable damage is altogether too great. The most authoritative experts in art have taken this position. It is probable that the Toulousains will be obliged to content themselves with an exhibition of statuary alone, since it is conceded that with reference to that the danger would be far less.

Eric Tayne.

PHILADELPHIA.

The scenery of the Selkirk Mountains in British Columbia, the pueblos of the Hopi Indians in Arizona, the mesas of the Zunis in New Mexico, a number of sketches of old Spanish missions in California and some convincing studies of the Maine coast are shown in a collection of 48 watercolors and oils by Mrs. Mary Russell Ferrell Colton now on at the Plastic Club. The most attractive works shown are "Shades of Evening, Walpi, Arizona," "Illecillewaet Valley" and "Mount Sir Donald." A number of the canvases have already been sold through the efforts of Mrs. L. M. Davis, in charge of the exhibition.

Art Museum matters seem at a standstill pending the apportionment of the loan bill to be submitted to the vote of the people in May. The total sum to be asked for has grown from $86,000,000 to $114,000,000 and in the list the Museum appears for an appropriation of $1,000,000, a sum really not sufficient to carry it to completion as provided for in the plans as they now exist.

In the 44th annual report of the Fairmount Park Art Association is the architect's plan of the proposed development of the Schuylkill River front, including in the scheme the Ellen Phillips Samuel memorial.

Eugene Costello.

BOSTON.

Many of the gallery-trotters who went to view F. C. Frieseke's exhibition of paintings, at the St. Botolph Club the past week, received a severe shock. They had heard of him as a great genius, and knew that he had received the grand prize in the American section of the San Francisco Exposition. Imagine their surprise when they found Mr. Frieseke's pictures so bright and jolly and prettily made, so strong in those qualities that hit off the popular taste! Of course they hadn't expected a genius to be so fond of bright color and strong sunlight, so healthily preoccupied with the joyous side of life!

F. W. Allen's impressive sculptures divided honors with Mr. Frieseke's paintings at the Club exhibition. Among the most notable of the eighteen pieces exhibited was his well-known "Mother and Child," splendidly modelled and modern in spirit. Interesting, also, was the figure of "Orpheus," hesitating before his descent into Hades, and the torso of a dancing girl, lent by the Boston Art Club. Among Mr. Allen's portrait sculptures were such contrasting types as that of George von L. Meyer, Jr., and of the Rev. A. L. Rihbany—the latter a strangely gifted personality, only a few years ago a young Syrian immigrant, but now a Unitarian minister and an accomplished writer of English. Mr. Allen has made a well-characterized study of this unusual man.

Boston is also getting a taste of contemporary French art in the exhibition brought to America by the French Institute of the U. S., which has just reached the Art Museum. The result is that Bostonians have been comparing the work of Gaston La Touche, Lucien Simon, G. Picard, J. A. Munier, Paul Chabas (of "September Morn" notoriety), Joseph Bail and E. Friant with the work of local painters, and not wholly to the disadvantage of the latter! This may be due partly to customary local complacency, but partly, also, to the fact that the works of the Frenchmen, while technically competent and of no little charm (in spots), have no hair-raising marks of distinction.

Meanwhile, work native to the soil may be seen in J. Eliot Enneking's exhibition of little pictures at Cobb's gallery, and Alice Ruggles Sohler's show at the Guild of Boston Artists. Mr. Enneking has become an adept at rendering the New England landscape. Here is an example of a young painter of keen intelligence daily growing in technical facility and power to transcribe faithfully what he sees and feels. His "little pictures" are a pleasure to see.

Singularly efficient and interesting, also, is Mrs. Sohler's performance at the Guild, consisting mainly of portraits and interiors with figures. A product of the Art Museum School, of the comparatively newer crop, she continues to give a good account of herself in clever, thoughtful and seriously made work.

CHICAGO.

The Architectural exhibition held under the auspices of the Chicago Society of Architects, in the Art Institute, is more attractive than any previous annual exhibition. The Illinois Society of Architects, Illinois Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture, officials of the Art Institute, leading architects of the Eastern cities, and architects of the Pacific coast, co-operated in this display. Walker and Gillette, Mead and White, L. I. McKim, Ruth Dean, George S. Welsh, Myron Hunt and Okie and Ziegler, are the firms and individuals best represented.

Independents' Show.

The Independent Society of Artists is holding its first exhibition of some 300 paintings and a score of sculptures on the second floor of the Ohio Building. There are more than a hundred members of this society, and still the roster is growing without passing a jury. Examples from the exclusive and democratic societies are in line and every art society of the city is represented.

The Palette and Chisel Club is featuring paintings by Edgar Payne, Martin Hennings and sculptures by Maximilian Hoffman.

Jules Ratzkowski of Paris and Cairo has an assemblage of oriental and continental tapestries, bric-a-bras, chinas, and old furniture on exhibition in a Michigan Avenue studio, to be sold at auction April 18.

Walter Ufer is showing a score of his California and American landscapes at a local gallery where portraits of Carter H. Harrison and Mrs. W. W. Wardrop of Highland Park, will soon be shown.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Freedman and Other Sales.

The story of the Freedman picture sale and of the Wasserman porcelain sale, with prices, buyers, names, etc., will be told in next week's issue of the ART NEWS, April 22, as these occurred too late in the week for publication in this issue.

Daniel S. Miller Sale.

The notable art collection of the late Daniel S. Miller, a brother-in-law of the late Jay Gould and uncle of Mrs. Finley Jay Shepard and George Jay Gould, now on exhibition on the ball room floor and an adjacent suite of ten rooms in the Hotel Savoy will be sold at auction by Mr. Samuel Marx on Monday next, April 17, and the following four days, beginning at 2:30 each afternoon and 8 each evening.

The collection to be sold includes paintings of many schools, jades, rock crystals, faïences, Hispano Moresque plaques, Sevres and other fine modern ceramics, rare ivories, miniatures, old silverware, editions de luxe, fine prints and other artistic property, and there are also a number of small watercolors, dainty bric-a-brac, bibelots, curios, decorated panels, rich Limoges enamels, and numerous cabinet pieces.

Among the paintings are examples of Blommers, Kever, DeBock, D. A. Artz, P. J. Clays, F. Pieters, Fantin-Latour, Monticelli, Boudin, Bougereau, Henner, Marie Dieterle, Roybet, Jean Bertrand, Jules Dupre, Albert Lynch, Lenoir, Lerolle, Groleron, Berne-Bellecour, Chelminski, George Inness, Ridgway Knight, C. S. Pearce, L. P. Dessar, Humphrey Moore, J. G. Brown, J. B. Bristol, James M. Hart, W. de L. Dodge, C. H. Boughton, J. Moreau, Schreyer, Conrad, Kiesel, Joseph Bail, A. Vollon, Monchablon, W. McEwen, Hagborg and Toulmoche.

The books, many from the M. C. D. Borden collection, comprise those bound by Sangorski, Riviere, Tranz-Bougonnet, Pagnant and Adams. There are complete sets, bound in full rich, red levant of the works of Stevenson, Jane Austin, C. Dickens, Hawthorne, Bret Harte, Thackeray, Byron, E. A. Poe, Whitman, Kipling, Fielding and many others. Some of the special books are, Lossing's Field Book of the Revolution, The Countess of Blessington and the Constant edition of Shakespeare in Forty Volumes.

Some of the jeweled bindings are exceptionally fine. There is, for example, an ornate copy of Williamson's "History of Portrait Miniatures," in two volumes and inserted in each of the covers are seventeen miniatures, making sixty-eight. All are from the brush of Miss Currie, the noted English miniaturist.

The jeweled bindings are by such artists as Sangorski, Riviere, Tranz-Baugonet, Pagnant and Adams. There are illuminated Mss. of John Keats' "Ode to Psyche" and Tennyson's "Lady of Shalott." The "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam" is in an exquisite cover of rich levant on which in amethysts are the purple grapes of which the Persian tentmaker sang.

Dickens and Thackeray Collections.

Mr. Edwin W. Coggeshall of N. Y. has long been a buyer of literary rarities. His Dickens and Thackeray collections, many extra-illustrated books, and hundreds of important autograph letters are now on exhibit at the Anderson Galleries, to be sold there on the afternoons of April 25-27 next, inclusive.

The Dickens collection is the finest ever offered for sale at auction, here or abroad. Next to the Harry Widener copy now in a public institution, Mr. Coggeshall has the finest "Pickwick" known, which is to be sold with a page of the original Mss., of which only about 30 fragments are known. Mr. Coggeshall is the happy possessor of no less than 20 of Dickens' works inscribed and presented by the author. One of them was presented by Dickens to his son, another to Douglas Jerrold and a third to Thomas Carlyle. These association books are of extreme rarity and will be eagerly sought for. Nearly all of the works of Dickens are in this coll'n in their original condition, and Mr. Coggeshall has two or three copies of some of the more famous ones. There are three copies of the first edition of Oliver Twist, as well as the octavo edition in original wrappers, and four copies of the first edition of Sketches by "Boz," one a presentation copy and one with five signed pencil sketches by Cruikshank. Many of the other rare volumes contain original sketches. There are six by "Phiz" in the fine copy of the Pickwick Papers. Original Mss. scores of autograph letters, and 10 pieces of furniture from Dickens' house at Gads Hill are among the many other rarities.

Mr. Coggeshall had first editions of nearly everything Thackeray wrote, and a large proportion of these are in the original parts. Among the miscellaneous books are some that have been beautifully extra-illustrated. Mrs. Gaskell's "Cranford," Mrs. Jackson's "Ramona," and Irving's "Knickerbocker" contain hundreds of original watercolor sketches by W. H. Drake. The "Life of Irving" has been extended from 3 volumes to 7 and Irving's "Washington" from 5 to 13, but still more important is the set of "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War," extended from 4 to 25 volumes by the insertion of more than 1,700 engraved portraits, views, maps and autograph letters.

John Leech Collection.

The largest collection of books illustrated by John Leech and of his original drawings, made by Stanley Kidder Wilson of Philadelphia, was exhibited at the Grolier Club, N. Y., in 1914. As Mr. Wilson is universally recognized as the highest authority on the work of Leech was invited to write the introduction to the catalog. He has now consigned the entire collection to the Anderson Galleries for sale and it is now on exhibition to time of its sale, Monday aft. and eve., April 24. Books illustrated by Leech and bearing on his life and work fill the first half of the catalog, and among them are many very scarce items. The Life of Leech by Frith has been extra-illustrated and extended to four volumes by the addition of 287 etchings, colored plates and autograph letters, and another copy has been extra-illustrated and extended to five volumes by the addition of 700 caricatures, portraits, autograph letters, colored illustrations, and an original drawing by Thackeray.

The second session of the sale contains Mr. Wilson's wonderful collection of original drawings and watercolors by Leech. There are sixteen unpublished sepia drawings, twenty-five original pencil sketches, all the original drawings for "Funny Characters" and "Humorous Sketches," the exceedingly interesting "Disparate Sketches," twenty-four original watercolor and ink drawings which were formerly in the collection of Baron Von Benzon, and the thirty pencil sketches which formerly belonged to Mrs. Edwin Edwards in London. Among the many framed drawings and sketches is the "Race for the Derby"—the finest and largest Leech watercolor in existence.

Objects of Art Sale.

A large, miscellaneous and interesting coll'n of objects of art is now on exhibit at the Anderson Galleries preliminary to the sale on next Tuesday to Thursday afts., inclusive. The principal consignors are Mrs. Ralph Baggaley, of Pittsburgh; Mrs. Joseph J. Little, of N. Y.; Mr. Henri Picard, of Paris, and the Estate of Dr. R. A. Witthaus of N. Y. Bronzes, embroideries, rugs, tapestries, Oriental porcelains, old Greek and Roman art works, antique potteries and iridescent glass large make up the sale. There is a remarkable Ginori Majolica vase painted by Zoppi. An important part of the coll'n consists of animal heads, among them what is claimed the second largest moose head in the world and the finest head of a muck ox known, which should interest clubs and museums. The sale will also include a valuable coll'n of antique and modern furniture in rosewood, satinwood, violetwood and mahogany.

The Riabouchinsky Collection.

The collection of old masters brought some months ago to this country by Mr. Nicolas Riabouchinsky of Moscow and formerly owned by Prince Colinchef-Koutousoff, personal secretary to the Dowager Empress of Russia, will be placed on exhibition at the American Art Galleries on Apr. 21 prior to sale at the Plaza Hotel, Apr. 26. Among the artists represented are Moreelse, Cranachs, Mabuse, van Balen and Jan Breughel, Potter, S. van Ruisdael, Van Goyen, Pieter Breughel the Elder, Joos van Cleef, Sodoma, Lippi, G. van der Meere, Amberger, Dicosimo, Bazzi, Van der Goes de Bles, Patinir, Moroni and Poussin.

There will also be placed on view at the same time, prior to sale at the galleries, on the eve's of Apr. 26-28, a remarkable collection of views of N. Y. and other American cities.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York)
"It seems curious now, as one looks back, that pictures of the academic type, as well as the Salon pictures of the 'plein airists,' should have been received with so much favor, and that they should have brought higher prices than the work of the Barbizon painters which has justly become so valuable."

MR. FRICK'S HOUDON BUST.

The recent purchase, through Mr. Edward Brandus of E. Gimpel and Wildenstein by Mr. Henry C. Frick, of one of the most famous and important works by the early French sculptor, Houdon, exclusively announced in the ART NEWS last week, in the importance of the work and the almost record price paid for it as an example of Houdon's art, proves to be the most important art sale, with the possible exception of the transference to Mr. Frick of Gainsborough's painting "The Mall," of the current art season.

While neither the selling firm nor Mr. Frick care to give out any details of the transaction, which, in deference to their wish, the ART NEWS does not publish, it may be said that the work is a life size bust of a famous woman of Houdon's time, wonderfully executed, and notable, not only for the splendid pose and expression, but for the modelling of the accessories of flowered garlands around the lower part of the bust.

NO NUDE MODELS AT CAL. UNIV.

Moral censorship is in full reign at the University of Cal. at Berkeley. Its taboo has fallen on life models for the art classes. Petitions from students and professors were denied. The art classes in the graphic arts and architectural departments are getting along with clothed models and will apparently have to do so for some time. Representations were made to the college authorities that the work of the students was being cramped by the fact that life models could not be used. Back came the word that the rule would continue in force.

Some of the classes, such as that of C. Chapel Judson, professor of drawing, are furnishing themselves with their own models. But they are fully garbed.

MURALS AT HOTEL GRAMATAN.

Two mural paintings by Gerald Cassidy have been hung in the foyer of the Hotel Gramatan, at Bronxville, N. Y. One represents the scene of the deeding of the land where the hotel now stands by Chief Gramatan whose name appears on many old deeds in Westchester County, and the other shows an Indian leaning against the ruins of an old California Mission.

S. F. MUSEUM BUYS PICTURES.

Out of the legacy of $10,000 given by Alice Skae for the purpose of paintings for the Golden Gate Park Memorial Museum the Park Commission has bought pictures representing 32 Cal. artists. The canvases and etchings, which were selected under the direction of Comr. Earl M. Cummings, the sculptor, are intended to form the nucleus of a permanent coll'n.

The artists whose works have been purchased by the Skae fund are as follows:

Oils—Frank Van Sloun, Maynard Dixon, Maurice Del Mue, Bruce Nelson, Clark Hobart, E. Charlton Fortune, Carl Oscar Borg, Betty de Jong, Armin C. Hansen, Xavier Martinez, Amedee Joullin, Richard Partington, Gertrude Partington, Francis McComas, Will Sparks, Gottardo Piazzoni, Charles Rollo Peters, Theodore Wores, Aaron Altman, Charles D. Robinson, Giuseppe Cadenasso, Chapel Judson, Lee Randolph, John A. Stanton, Clarence Hinkle, Rinaldo Cuneo, Joseph Raphael, Henry V. Poor, Ferdinand Burgdorf.

Etchings—Robert Harsh, Armin C. Hansen, Gertrude Partington, Pedro J. Lemos, Gottardo Piazzoni, J. W. Winkler, Lee Randolph.

Boston Museum Report.

A deficit of more than $34,000 in the operation of the Boston Art Museum for 1915 is reported by Director Morris Gray in his annual statement for 1915, this deficit being met at present by using the principal of "unrestricted" funds. It is hoped to build up the administration fund to $1,000,000.

The number of visitors for 1915 was 267,211, as against 205,109 during the preceding year.

The running expenses of the Museum last year were $162,480.91, and the total of gifts and bequests $392,596.

COLLEGE ART INSTRUCTION.

Definite steps for determining just how much instruction in art there is in American colleges have been taken by an investigating committee of the College Art Ass'n. according to Prof. Holmes Smith, of Washington University, the chairman. Prof. Smith is sending out letters to every college, asking what art instruction they have. He will take steps to raise the standards in his gallery.

BUYS ANOTHER BLAKELOCK.

The tenor John McCormack, who recently bought Blakelock's "Spring Rock Cove" for $10,000, has now purchased for $4,000 his "Autumn Landscape," the profit of which was offered to the Blakelock fund by Scott & Fowles, of 590 Fifth Ave., who bought it at the Lambert sale for $3,300.

SARGENT PORTRAIT TO SON.

The will of the late Egerton L. Winthrop left his portrait by John S. Sargent to his son Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., with the request that he in turn leave it to his eldest son. He also receives a portrait of Gen. Hamilton, two Clodion statuettes and a painting by Walter Gay of an interior in the testator's home.

MACK LIBRARY TO MISS NASH.

The will of John Mack, a prominent sporting man, leaves his library, valued at $50,000, and his antiques, to his niece, Miss Florence Nash, the actress.

T. B. CLARKE BUYS HUNT CLUB.

Mr. Thomas B. Clarke, the well known art collector, has purchased the old Rogers Homestead used as a clubhouse by the Suffolk, L. I., Hunt Club, which was owned by Richard Newton, Jr. Trowbridge and Livingston are to remodel the Colonial house, which will be renamed Lindenland and used as a residence.

NEWPORT'S NEW ART BUILDING.

The Newport (R. I.) Art Association has recently purchased a large building in that city which they will use for current exhibitions and in time for a permanent art display. The money for the building, some $80,000, was raised chiefly by Mrs. John Elliot. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney has taken an active interest in the matter and has worked hard for its success. The committee on painting is Robert Reid, William H. Cotton and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. They are collecting art works for the next annual exhibition which will take place during the summer and which they hope to make one of the most important art events of the season. The growth of the Association, only started three years ago, has been remarkable, and proves that Newport society has evidently art love and taste.

ANOTHER STUDIO BUILDING.

The latest project for a cooperative studio building is being pushed by a group of artists who hope to erect a building suitable to the pockets of artists who have to depend entirely upon their art for a livelihood. The idea of the promoters of the scheme is to erect a building in a section of the city where land is not so expensive as in the fashionable quarters like 67th St. Halls and staircases will be of simple design, and everything will be inexpensive, but comfortable. The site to be selected will probably be in the vicinity of West 57th St. between Ninth and Tenth Aves.

HANFSTAENGL CLOSED BY GOV'T.

A famous German business which has been estopped from business in England, under the "Trading with the Enemy Act," is that of Hanfstaengel who for nearly 80 years have done the bulk of the art-reproduction business in London. Queen Victoria, who regarded German enterprise in England with favorable eye, allowed the firm the prerogative of photographing the pictures in the Royal collections and in the National Gallery, a privilege which at once conferred great distinction upon them and naturally led to other important undertakings.

So powerful did they become that anyone intending to reproduce an Academy picture, for instance, whether for a magazine or for advertisement purposes, was ill-advised to take any steps without first consulting them, for not only were their rights far-reaching, but they never hesitated to resort to costly litigation to vindicate them. A number of legal actions brought by them concerned theatrical rights as to tableaux vivants drawn from famous pictures as well as the right of illustrated papers to publish sketches of these, and in one instance a case was taken even as far as the House of Lords for settlement.

Indeed it is largely due to the zeal displayed by Messrs. Hanfstaengel for litigation, that the English law concerning pictorial copyright has now been so definitely formulated.

HERSHEY'S "NYMPHS" STORED.

In a storage warehouse in Harrisburg, Pa., there has been lying since last Autumn the fountain showing nude figures of three dancing nymphs, by the Italian sculptor, Giuseppe Donato, valued at $25,000, presented to that city some months ago by Mr. M. S. Hershey, the "Chocolate King" who built the co-operative town of Hershey, Pa. The City Commissioners had planned to erect the fountain at Front and Locust Sts., but have not yet provided the $4,500 necessary for the placing of the work. The city has been paying $230 yearly premium on a $20,000 insurance policy protecting the sculpture, but the Commissioners feel that they are not able to spare even the insurance premium on the renewal of the policy April 24.

STATE ART COM'N FOR VA.

Virginia has recently authorized the appointment of a state art commission, and will make this same commission a permanent institution. The commission is to be composed of an architect, a painter, a sculptor, the governor of the state and a layman, known to be a connoisseur of art. The functions of the commission are advisory, but it is understood that all matters pertaining to art are to be referred to it for consideration and report.

The legislature of North Carolina has during the past winter made a similar enactment.

A BLAKELOCK "MOONLIGHT."

One of the best of the veteran American artist Blakelock's landscapes is the "Silvery Moonlight," owned by Mr. John W. Young of Chicago, reproduced on this page.

Mr. Young, who has always been a warm admirer of Blakelock's work, and a firm believer in his ability and the ultimate value of his paintings, has been a consistent buyer of these paintings for a number of years and has sold a great many to Western collectors. He has interested himself in the movement to raise a fund for the artist and the support of his family and came on here to see the recent Blakelock exhibition at the Reinhardt Gallery. He is now organizing an exhibition of the works he owns and others that may be loaned, in his Chicago galleries, and wishes it known that he will give to the Blakelock fund or to Mrs. Blakelock any sum for which any pictures sent him for this display over the owner's fair limit of price, may be sold.

Mr. Young has a letter from Mrs. Blakelock, thanking him for the recognition of her daughter Marian's talent in painting, many of whose pictures he has sold without any profit to himself for her and recommending him to all owners of Blakelocks.

Blakelocks for Chicago.

The exhibition of works by Ralph A. Blakelock which recently closed at the Henry Reinhardt and Co.'s galleries here, has been transferred to the Chicago Galleries of that firm.

INNESS'S "LAND OF PLENTY."

The large and striking early example of the art of George Inness, reproduced on page 8, and owned by Snedecor and Co., a canvas 36 1/4 inches high by 49 3/4 inches wide, was painted about 1855 or '56. It was purchased by the late William A. Davies of Pasadena, Cal., formerly President of the Farmers and Manufacturers Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in the late sixties or early seventies from the old art firm of William and Stevens, with which firm the late John Snedecor began his business career, and which he left to found his own business in 1852.

The picture which comes from Mr. Augustus Davies of Pasadena, has all the American master's characteristics of composition, light, color and feeling for Nature, and is rich in quality and joyous in atmosphere. It has never been restored or touched up, as are so many pictures in any way, save for one necessary cleaning and varnishing. It is in its original condition, just as it left the artist's easel, only improved by the mellowing which time alone can produce.

It is interesting to note that the "Land of Plenty" was first shown in public in the old Snedecor gallery at 749 Broadway, Mr. Snedecor having been the first dealer here to encourage American artists by giving them the privilege of individual exhibitions

PURCHASE BY ART FIRM.

The firm of Messrs. L. & L. Milch, art dealers, have purchased the four story dwelling, 108 W. 57, adjoining on the east the Lotos Club. After alterations the firm will occupy the two lower floors for its business, while the upper ones will be studios and apartments.

APPRECIATIVE COLLECTOR.

A touching incident occurred recently in the studio of a New York artist, according to the N. Y. "Times." The artist had sold one of his pictures a few years ago to a Fifth Ave. dealer for $700 who had resold it to a private collector at $500 profit. The canvas was recently sold at auction for $750, and the purchaser, a woman, wrote the artist expressing her pleasure in possessing the picture and adding that her only regret was that she had not bought it direct from the painter and paid him the full price, $1,250, which it had cost the former owner. The artist was greatly touched by this simple tribute, and was about to return the note to its envelope when a check for $500, payable to the artist, fluttered to the floor.

A picture by Henry Lovins, who has 3 canvases on exhibition at the San Diego Exposition, has been sold to the Santa Fe Railroad and will be hung in the new offices at Phoenix, Arizona.

CHICAGO.

The Poster exhibition from Newark, N. J., now installed at the Art Institute, and which was noticed in the ART NEWS when first shown in Newark, is much liked by local art lovers.

A collection of paintings of Paris buildings and street scenes by the late Ferdinand Janin has been added to the architectural show. Janin is the young Frenchman who was associated with Burnham and Bennett in creating Chicago plan drawings. The paintings are loaned by S. A. Marx.

The first international exhibition installed by the Independent Society of Artists, an association of recent organization on the "revolt against the jury system" idea, is a success in the quality of a majority of the pictures on show, and in the attendance. It is a cosmopolitan show, and indifferent work in spots is expected in it—for even in iron-clad exhibitions bad art spots happen. Edgar Payne is happily exemplified in a landscape and a seascape, "Hills of Brown" and "Sea Bandits." Lillian Owen glorifies—if that were possible—the Chicago River in "State Street Bridge," "Where the River Branches," and other scenes of the river by which Clusman exploited his fame. Fay Barnes Powell contributes decorative panel and paintings, "The Beach" and "The Pines." Norman Tolston shows talent in his "Green Brooch," and there is good technique in his "Zebra Poster"—Tolston has buoyantly arrived in the poster field. Laura Stoddard, Charles V. Sutherland, Frank Wolcott, Vernon Thomas, J. Bland Sloan, George Rich, Jacob Richard, Minne C. Neebe, Olaf Olesen, Mrs. Ralph Mojeska, A. Lou Matthews, Gardner Hale, Elizabeth R. Scott, Margaret Baker, Jeanette Buckley, O. Irwin Meyers, Lyla Marshall and Paul T. Sargeant are among other artists represented.

Jerome and Lucile Blum have returned to their home here from a sojourn of several months in the Orient, and are giving an exhibition of paintings and sculptures done in Japan and China. Jerome Blum made quite a sensation about five years ago when he came from Paris and gave a show of very "independent" paintings. He still retains a distinctive expression in coloring, but has modified his palette. He has seven Japanese paintings in line, "A Street in Kyoto," "Madame Crysanthemum," "Outdoor Restaurant, Peking" and "Sunlit Canal," "Bridge at Soo Chow." Mrs. Blum shows ten statuettes, all graceful in line, including "The Dancer," "Japanese Peasant Woman," "The Little Mother," and "Korean Mother and Child."

The Swedish-American Art Exhibition will be installed at the Swedish Club, April 30.

Bronzes and sculptures from the Italian section of the Panama Exposition are on view in the Marshall Field galleries.

Pastels and wood-block prints by Elizabeth G. Colwell are on exhibition at Roullier's.

A group of Persis Kirmse's paintings of cats and dogs are a quaint feature at the Art Institute, this week.

Some 20 canvases were sold from Ben Foster's exhibition in the Art Institute during March, and three additional are under consideration.

"Bamboos in Wind and Rain," by Wu Chen, of the Yuan dynasty, has been acquired by the Art Institute.

H. Effa Webster.

PHILADELPHIA.

At the Penna. Academy a comprehensive exhibition of contemporary Swedish art numbering 241 works, and including oils, watercolors, bronzes and wood-carvings, is now on. Many of these have already been seen at San Francisco, but certain appropriate additions have been made replacing works that have been sold or withdrawn, thereby retaining the essential national quality of the group and its unique claim upon the attention of connoisseurs. The painters of the Scandinavian Peninsula have a different point of view of their art from that of most of the others in Europe, more wholesome perhaps, closer in its observation of natural phenomena, shown here very decidedly in many of the canvases, such as for instance, in Anshelm Schlotzberg's picture of "Swedish Midsummer Night," where the peculiar light of the midnight sun of northern latitudes glances across the objects in an apple orchard in full blossom.

That Sweden is the land of snow is the painter's opportunity and that it has not been neglected one sees here especially in certain canvases by Gustav Adolf Fjaestad entitled "Easter" and "Pool in Winter" beautifully harmonious in golden tints reflected on the snow and contrasted with deep purplish shadows. For the real indescendent color flashing from glacier and snowdrift and northern sky Miss Anna Boberg's canvases, "First Snow in the Mountains," "Glacial Lake" and "Arctic Night," show wonderful power of interpolation, the display of auroral light in the last named picture being most effectively rendered. A virile bit of brush work is the figure subject by Emil Zoir entitled "Potato Picking"—and another by Wilhelm Smith of "Fisher Folk." Well constructed portraits of Rector Schuch by Helmer Mas-Olle and of Professor Carl Curman by Emil Osterman deserve especial notice as does a "Dalecarlian Girl in Winter Costume" by Anders L. Zorn whose work is so well known to the American public.

Some good bronzes, imaginative in conception, are exhibited by J. H. Lundberg and artistic wood sculptures, cleverly humorous as character studies are shown as the work of Axel Petersson.

Eugene Castello.

ST. LOUIS.

Paintings by Robert Vonnoh and sculpture by Mrs. Bessie Potter Vonnoh, on view at the Museum.

Among Mr. Vonnoh's portraits shown are those of Dr. Talcott Williams, Charles Francis Adams and Daniel French. There also is a portrait of Mrs. Vonnoh.

Mrs. Vonnoh's share in the exhibit is a group of 32 small bronzes, charming in their delicacy and feeling. Mrs. Vonnoh, a native of St. Louis, is virtually self-taught, with the exception of three years spent in study at the Chicago Art Institute.

In addition there is on view a group of 14 portraits by Harrington Mann.

Luis Graner of Barcelona, Spain, and who has been in New Orleans for two years past, has an exhibition of his oils in the rose parlor of the Buckingham Hotel, St. Louis, until April 30.

Some recent purchases by the St. Louis Museum include a painting by F. Ballard Williams, "A Glimpse of the Sea," one by Henry W. Ranger, "New England Village," and Alfred Stevens's "Meditation," from the Reisinger collection.

BOSTON.

The exhibition now on at a local gallery offers a rather hard nut for timid and conservative Bostonians to crack, being the work of advanced modern Americans, including some of the New York "Independents." Of course, one wants to see the latest fashion in pictures, as well as to read the last novel and to hear the newest opera. But alack! Some Bostonians find a number of the modernists frankly depressing, and still others crude and violent. Non-academic, are they? Well, rather! George Bellows' "Harbor and Fishermen" is signalled out for dismal comment, because "leaden and slaty," but, personally, I consider it a strong and compelling work, as also Rockwell Kent's black and frowning canvas "Toilers of the Sea." Among the "violent arrangements" one would perhaps place Carl Gordon Cutler's "Girl in Blue Hat," with its startling color scheme of bright blue, yellow, and red—evidently intended as a tour de force, and cleverly executed. Interior decorators use the term "vogue" for these peculiar color combinations, when applied to house interiors, and declare that the public clamors for them. Mary Cassatt's "Apres le Bain," depicting a mother and child is a highly individual achievement, with nicely balanced color relations and values.

Charles W. Hawthorne's "Le Pegnoir Rose," an interior with the figure of a young woman, which does not impress the most captious as either "violent" or "dismal." Rather it appealed as a charming and satisfying canvas, with true dignity of tone, and worthy of the Isidor medal which it bore away at the Winter Academy last year. Randall Davey is represented by a sketch of a "Portuguese Baby," Robert Henri by the unflattered head of a "Workingman," Frieseke by an effective figure piece, "The Kitchen Door," Hayley Lever by a decorative "Spring in Devonshire"—to mention only a few characteristic pictures by these audacious modern breakers of academic idols.

A stranger visiting Boston a few years ago, after viewing acres of dead and foreign art at the Art Museum, innocently (or perhaps cynically) inquired if the "Hub" had produced no artists since Copley's time. With snail-like deliberation the Museum is beginning to announce to Bostonians and to the world that the town has had a few artists since Copley's time. I refer more especially to the Museum's recent purchase of Mrs. Adelaide Cole Chase's portrait study, "The Violinist," and William Paxton's study, "A Nude," both selected from the recent exhibition of the Guild of Boston Artists. The Museum has also bought Bela L. Pratt's charming and graceful statue of a young girl, and two red chalk drawings by Alexander James. This is certainly encouraging as the aftermath of the Guild exhibition. One might have predicted for it some such happy ending! As for the fortunate Frederic Bosley, consider how highly he is esteemed by his fellow artists! Headed by Edmund C. Tarbell, they have even made up a subscription and purchased for the Museum one of his recent paintings, "The Dreamer," which has aroused their admiration, but which, au contraire, the man in the street would consider distressingly queer and unsatisfying. Meanwhile, the noted and opulent connoisseur, Mrs. W. Scott Fitz, has presented to the Museum two more valuable Italian primitives—a Madonna and Child by Ugolino da Siena and a fourteenth century Florentine Madonna and Child, artist unknown.

Jerome Downes's show at the Copley Gallery has aroused much favorable comment. It is a most pleasing and interesting exhibition, by a young painter of considerable promise, comprising portrait studies and landscapes. Mr. Downes's treatment of character is unusually sympathetic, and he has a very subtle feeling for beauty in everything that he depicts.

Paintings, sketches, and pastels by the late Marcus Waterman, who has been called America's greatest colorist, make up an important exhibition now on at a local gallery. In subject the pictures range from New England to Holland, Normandy, Spain, and Algiers.

Recent events which caused a little stir in local art circles were John S. Sargent's visit to install his mural paintings in the Public Library, and the dinner given by the Copley Society in honor of John Wilson, the sculptor, who has given so generously of his time and talent, for ten years, as instructor of Copleyites. It is an encouraging sign of the times that they did not wait until Mr. Wilson was old and decrepit, or deceased, to honor him!

John Doe.

Frederick A. Bosley's canvas, "The Dreamer," recently shown at the Guild Gallery, has been purchased by subscription by a group of artists and art lovers, headed by Edmund Tarbell, and presented by them to the Boston Museum.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

Salmagundi Thumb-Box Sketches.

The annual exhibition of Thumb-box sketches, at the Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., is now on to Apr. 27 and is open free to the public afternoons and evenings. Already nearly $2,000 worth of the little works have been sold. The contributions grouped together of the 132 artists represented, fill completely the gallery space.

The Charles Vezin prize of $100 for the best sketch in the exhibition was awarded to a brilliant little landscape by F. de Haven, which has also been sold. The Frank S. Turnbull prize of $100 for the best group of sketches went to Guy C. Wiggins, for his five striking N. Y. views. The James W. Porter prize of $50 for the second best sketch was awarded to Edmund Greagen, for his attractive figure of a girl with a fan.

Others notably well represented are Norval H. Busey, M. J. Burns, Harry Roseland, Henning Ryden, Nathaniel Dolinsky, Edward K. Kingsbury, Herbert A. Morgan, Clarence K. Chatterton, Oscar Fehrer, Frederick J. Waugh, Geo. L. Nelson, Max Herrman, H. A. Vincent, Carl Rungius, Leon Kroll, S. R. Burleigh, Norward Mac Gilvary, Everett L. Warner, Walter Douglas, W. O. Sweet, F. Luis Mora, Alfred Hutty, F. J. Mulhaupt, C. F. Kellner, H. Ledyard Towle, Henry Mosler, H. H. Ahl, J. F. Brown, Eugene Castello and Lawrence Grant.

Valls' Paintings of Spanish Life.

A Spanish painter of considerable talent, Ernesto Valls, a native of Valencia, is showing at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., a collection of 40 odd oils, striking in color and effect and representing scenes of Hispanic life, many of them on bathing beaches. A number of the latter in the Sorolla vein, are, though effective and attractive, somewhat lacking in the values of the flesh against the light.

Among the best of these are the really brilliant picture of a little girl washing some dishes on the beach called "A Symphony in Blue" and "Giving the Dog a Bath." There are besides "Children Playing on the Beach," "Morning on the Beach" and "Evening on the Beach." Two good seashore scenes in more serious vein are "Launching the Boat" and "Mending Seines."

Large figure works handled with vigor are the single figure of a young woman in bridal dress called "The Orange Flower," "A Valencian Festival," "Two Friends," "A Valencian Christening" and "Preparing for the Festival."

Fine Color Effects by Worcester.

A painter of much ability, quite remarkable as a colorist is Albert Worcester, who is showing 19 works at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., to Apr. 29. Mr. Worcester, who is a pleinairist of the Pissaro School shows figure subjects of refined type, shore scenes and landscapes.

Among the figure subjects handled with much skill include "Girl in Blue" by a mirror, "The Miller's Daughter," "Girl in Red," at a breakfast table, a "Study" of a girl on a lounge, and a capital figure of a woman looking at herself in a handglass, and also reflected in a dressing table mirror. "Sunlight" shows a female figure laying out clothes in a landscape. An old woman is effectively shown in a "Normandy Orchard," and there is also "The Dancer," and a lively "Portrait of Miss H." Very artistic are the shore scenes "The Ship Yard," "Fishing Boats at St. Tropez," and "Quay at St. Tropez." Three landscapes are "The North Wind," "Afternoon" and a scene in the Elyreces.

Hero Aeronaut Artist's Exhibit.

A Russian artist, with a French name, Leon Gaspard, recently landed in N. Y., after most sensational war experiences, and is exhibiting a vivacious and brilliant series of 30 odd scenes from Russia and France in war times, at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave., to Apr. 29.

Such a calm unconcerned personality is Mr. Gaspard that one would never imagine that he, as a French aeroplane scout, fell with his craft some 1,300 feet at Ypres, and while his mechanic was killed, suffered himself only a hemorrhage of the lungs from the shock and a trifling injury to his right leg. That he escaped is wonderful, and that he was not shot, crawling as he did 6 hours to reach the French trenches, only 270 feet away, seems little short of miraculous. When the Germans entered Brussels, says his friend, Robert W. Vonnoh, who first met him in Paris 8 years ago, they swept him clean of pictures and funds.

But in France and Russia, where he went and painted with the army after he left the hospital, he painted, with great industry, and the result is a really remarkable series of scenes, chiefly of the lighter aspects of war and of the places and peoples in war times.

There is a "Sunday Morning," in a Siberian village, full of color and life, with very lively crowds. Fine in color and with many deftly handled figures is "La Kermesse," a Tryptich. Scenes of graver aspect are "Unhappy Travellers in Poland, 1914," "Refugees Leaving Lomza, 1914," "Russian Artillery in Snow" and "The Retreat of the Russian Army." There are "Typical Heads of Poland Refugees" and some "German Prisoners in the North of France." A strikingly picturesque example is "In the Carpathians Near the Firing Line." Character studies are "A Cossack's Mother," "Young Cossack," "Senagalese Soldiers," "A Serbian Soldier" and "A Little German Prisoner."

Municipal Art Society Show.

A display of much variety and interest, is that of work of members of the Municipal Art Society, now on at the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St., to May 5. It consists of architecture, painting and sculpture, and one section is devoted to the work of the Municipal Departments.

The sculpture exhibit includes the Fred E. Clark large group of "Music and Faun" for the Schenley memorial fountain at Pittsburgh which was first seen at the Architectural League display in Feb., a small replica of D. C. French's standing figure of Lincoln, Helen Sahlner's striking "The Spirit of Revolt," Angelica S. Church's effective "The Hunter," George T. Brewster's admirable relief head of Augustus St. Gaudens, Robert Aikin's graceful pair of lovers, and a large allegorical figure in low relief on a memorial panel to Jas. Wall Finn.

From the Lamb studios comes a three figure rose window of effective design and Ella Condie Lamb signs a figure of Music. A scene depicting the founding of Paterson is by Katherine S. Dreier. There is a snake charmer Oriental street scene by Louis C. Tiffany, a N. Y. street view in winter by Robert Henri, a wedding scene by Jennie Browncombe, a landscape by R. K. Mygatt, and a seacoast scene by Howard Russell Butler. A large figure by the late J. W. Alexander shows a young girl in a garden seat, while a female study head is by E. H. Blashfield. Some striking oil studies are by Charles Vezin. A tryptich by Salvatore Lacari for the Washington Irving High School depicts N. Y. in very early days. There are window and other decorative designs by William Laurel Harris.

The Peabody Institute has purchased out of the Rinehart fund Edward N. Berge's bronze figure of an Indian, entitled "On the Trail," and will present it to the city of Baltimore for erection in Clifton Park.

Sculptures in Bronze and Ivory.

Ettore Cadorin, an Italian sculptor of much talent, is showing at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave., to Apr. 29, a number of ivories carved in low relief on panels, as well as small bronzes cast by the cire perdue method and a couple of clay statuettes. The ivories, which are most delicate in effect, while handled with vigor, include portraits of the Queen of Italy, the artist's wife, Vicomtesse de Janze, and Signor Caruso. The ideal is shown in the quarter-length of "Tragedy" and a "Fifteenth Century Maid."

Two powerful figures among the bronzes are the nude figure of "The Belgian Girl," symbolical of her country's misfortunes, recently purchased by Signor Caruso; "Grief," also a female figure, and "Amazon Resting." There is a study of Isadora Duncan and a female figure in "Perplexity." An ideal figure of fine quality is "Toward the Light."

E. Raymond Holland, who graciously withdrew their exhibition from the galleries, to allow of the Blakelock Fund display, has had it rehung, adding four interesting canvases, of which "Fourth of July Night, Roton Point, Conn.," is quite a tour de force in color and effects of light, the many figures being in fancy costumes.

Three-Man Show at Goupil's.

There is now on at the Goupil & Co. Galleries, 58 W. 45th St., to May 1, a three-man show of much interest, consisting of sculptures by Edward Field Sanford, Jr.; monotypes, aquatints, etchings, drawings and pastels, by Prince Jean Paleologue, and oils by Paul Philippoteaux.

Mr. Sanford, who is a sculptor of ability, reaches the height of his powers in the really remarkable group called "Fortitude and Despair," two strongly modeled and fully expressive female and male figures. There is much expressiveness also, in the single female figure called "Fortitude." Well modeled and posed, but rather perfunctory, are the figures of "Hercules," "Pesagus" and "Ajax," the last being the best. In addition to several creditable portrait busts, there are also shown several well characterized and vigorously modeled figures of animals, the chief of which is a highly impressive, indeed monumental, figure in stone of a Great Dane.

Some of the monotypes of Prince Jean Paleologue are very artistic, especially the beach scenes such as the sunset at the "Mouth of the Thames," "On the Quai, Belgium," "Cliffs, Etretat," and "Sunlight on the Beach," various study heads, "Winter in the Trenches," and "Danseuse." Notable among the capital etchings are "Old House in Bruges," and "Amiens Cathedral," the dry points of Irving as A'Becket and a "Bathing Girl," and the aquatints "Reguinage near Bruges," "Etretat Beach" and "Old Street, Bruges." The most attractive of the drawings and pastels is the rather too delicate "Marquise."

The works of Philippoteaux, now residing in New Orleans, and well known as a painter of panoramas, are chiefly game scenes in Egypt, but include also a couple in Bulgaria and Brittany. The picturesque Egyptian subjects are handled with facile technical skill and are agreeable in color. They include "Arab Horsemen at the Trough," "Crossing the Nile" and "Village in the Plain of the Pyramids."

Works by the Late Andre Champollion.

An exhibition of works, chiefly scenes in India, by that sympathetic personality, Andre Champollion, grandson of the late Austin Corbin, and the distinguished Egyptologist whose name he bore, who was killed in action in France last year, is now on to May 1 at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. The transcripts of Indian architecture and life, while true in color and careful in statement are rather lacking in spirit and tame in effect. There is more quality in the few American and Riviera landscapes shown. The twenty odd portraits of different Indian types, male and female, are of much interest and considerable ethnological value. They are very well characterized.

Among the more important East Indian scenes are "The Burning Ghat, Benares," "The Bathing Ghat, Benares," "Hanuman Temple, Benares," "Hindu Temple and Sacred Elephant," "The Golden Temple, Amritsar" and "Palace Gate, Jaipur." Three character compositions are "Snake Charmers, Punjab," "A Conversation," and "Native Police, Bombay."

Four Groups at the Macdowell.

At the Macdowell Club, 108 W. 55 St., there is now on view to May 7, an exhibition of watercolors, pastels and drawings by four groups of artists. Among the exhibitors are Caroline B. Blommers, Horace Brodsky, John F. Parker, F. Tolles Chamberlain, C. A. Needham, Bertrand Rasmussen, Carl Springhorn, Randall Davey, Ben Ali Haggin, Robert Henri, Amy Londener and Henry Reuterdaahl.

Paintings by Lewis F. Herzog.

An artist of real talent and a fine colorist is Lewis Edward Herzog who is showing to May 15 at St. Mark's Hall, attached to the church of St. Mark's in the Bouerie, a striking little collection of 16 oils, chiefly foreign marines, shore scenes, and landscapes. There is, however, an American "Cavalry Charge," in fine movement, a "Scraggy Bit, Maine Coast," a glimpse along a woodland brook, "Golden Fall," and the effective "Silent Mere." The marines are handled with great vigor and are full of the spirit of the sea.

MR. SYMONS' ART MUSEUM.

There are Museums and Museums—the large public institutions and the few private ones, such as those of Messrs. Henry Walters of Baltimore, Henry C. Frick of New York and Mr. Joseph Widener of Philadelphia, for these collectors have extended their quest of the beautiful in art into so many diverse fields that their galleries, filled with varied treasures, richly deserve to be called Museums.

It is not often, however, that an art dealer, so extends his assembling of works and objects that his collections become so large and varied as to make his Galleries a real Museum. This Mr. Henry Symons who came from London two years or more ago has accomplished, and his handsome rooms at 12 East 45 Street are a veritable Museum—filled with pictures old and modern, porcelains and potteries of all periods and lands, old and modern furniture, bric a brac, old English and French miniatures, curios of all descriptions and rich furnishings and stuffs.

The art lover who can devote a few hours to the inspection and study of Mr. Symons' belongings will be richly repaid. There is no such collection of the kind, in scope and general quality in the country. To this art museum Mr. Symons has recently added two remarkable murals—ceiling decorations by James Thornhill, who his admirers, with reason, have called "the English Michael Angelo" from a certain manner of handling of masses and power of composition. It was Thornhill who painted the famous Colonna ceiling in old St. Paul's in London for Queen Anne. Among other pictures recently imported by Mr. Symons are two charming decorative still lifes by Desportes.

Among the old English furniture pieces in the Symons gallery are a fine old Four Poster bed with posts and head and foot boards painted by Angelica Kauffman, and a most unusual large Italian ebony cabinet, inlaid with tortoise shells from the collection of Lady Mary Charteris. Mention must also be made of the old Saxe and Meissen pieces among the porcelains, and especially of two striking figures in old Vienna ware. But the above mentioned objects are only the most notable of recent accessions, and there are hundreds of others worth study.

Americans at the Strauss Gallery.

Mr. J. H. Strauss is showing to May 3, at his gallery, 275 Fifth Ave., a second collection of works by American artists. The 16 works are by F. W. Kost, C. W. Eaton, W. J. Whittemore, C. J. Blenner, C. Yates, G. Symons, G. H. Bogert, J. S. King, E. Dufner, J. Turcas, J. Lie, C. C. Curran, H. Ballin, A. Helsby, J. T. Murphy and B. Foster.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

"FAKES" &amp; "REPRODUCTIONS."

"Agesilaus, the Lacedaemonian king, on being invited to hear a man who mimicked the nightingale to great perfection, declined, saying, 'I have heard the nightingale herself.'"

With this apt quotation from Plut-arch's Agesilaus, Dr. Edwin Atlee
Barber, Director of the Pennsylvania Museum Hall, Fairmount Park, Phila., opens the interesting and valuable Catalog he has compiled for an exhibition he has arranged for his Institution of old "Faked" and "Reproduced" porcelains, pottery, glass, stoneware, ivories, bronzes, brass objects, silver enamels and metal work.

Dr. Barber in both the arranging of his exhibition and the writing of his Catalog, has performed a great service to American art lovers and collectors and we could only wish that he had included "faked" and "reproduced" pictures and tapestries in the display.

In his preface Dr. Barber points out the fact, well known to all art appraisers and "experts," that the vast amount of spurious or wrongly attributed art works of all kinds now in the United States and Canada, began to flow in about 1840, with the beginning of travel in Europe—at that time possible only to a few—by wealthy Americans, who bought and collected without having had the opportunity of cultivation of art taste or the acquirement of art knowledge, and who were therefore an easy prey to the European dealers of the period, many of whom were not dishonest, but had little real art knowledge themselves.

These spurious or wrongly attributed works were brought home by the travelling Americans, and in time passing to their descendants—even when their original purchasers were aware of their character, became, through family tradition, original creations of noted masters. This influx continued almost through the last century, and even now, with better knowledge and more caution, has not wholly ceased. But the recession of the incoming flood left a large amount of bad art works in the country.

There have always been and probably always will be forgers of, and dealers in false art works, both respectively very skillful in making and disposing of false wares, and every American collector and art lover should take the now pleasant and easy trip to Fairmount Park, and see and study the remarkable display Dr. Barber has arranged. The purpose of the display Dr. Barber states "is the education and protection of collectors and the general public, as far as may be, against the wiles of the forgers, by exhibiting side by side, for comparison and study, genuine antiquities and their modern counterparts."

CORRESPONDENCE

Case of Frau Hanfstaengel.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:
If Frau Hanfstaengel, who you state is the mother of Herr Hanfstaengel, the German art dealer at Fifth Ave. and 45 St., this city—was correctly quoted by the German newspaper, the Vossische Zeitung on her return to Germany from a visit to New York this last winter which interview you published last week—to the effect that she found anti-German sentiment everywhere in New York, that hotels patronized by wealthy Germans were boycotted (presumably by Americans) and most astonishing statement of all, that a "distinguished looking American spat in the face of a German lady who was reading the Staats Zeitung in a trolley car, I wonder how Herr Hanfstaengel's American customers and patrons like these slanders, for they are nothing else, upon their country and countrymen.

I would strongly advise Herr Hanfsta-engel to caution his mother, if she really did utter these slanders, (I have seen no denial from him or his firm of the interview you published) not to repeat them.

Yours very truly,
American Collector.
New York, April 20, 1916.

Important Tapestry Collections.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS,

Dear Sir:
One of the New York dailies in commenting on the recent sale of the Morgan collection of tapestries, referred to that collection as "the only one of great importance" in the country. This, I regard as decidedly misleading. There are a number of tapestry collections in America of "great importance," among them those of Messrs. George Blumenthal, Harry Payne Whitney, John R.
McLean, H. E. Huntington, and Mmes.
John Lowell Gardner, Hearst, and H. McK.
Tombly. It is true that the Morgan collection is larger than any of these collections, and that it contains at least one piece,
I refer to the Mazarin tapestry, finer than any piece in any of these collections, and there is not the slightest doubt that among private collections it is the most important in the country. But to say that it is "the only one of great importance" is a very different thing, from saying that it is "the most important."

Certainly, even the casual observer, unacquainted with our great private collections, would hardly deny that the tapestry collection of the Boston Museum is one "of great importance." Also, there is at least one dealer whose collection of important tapestries is many times larger than the Morgan, and affords a better opportunity for the comparative study of tapestries of different weaves and different periods than is afforded by even the Morgan collection.

There are today at least fifty collections of tapestries in this country that might properly be described as "important." Some of these are important in quantity rather than quality, while others are important in quality rather than quantity. No collection that includes a tapestry like Mr. Philip Lehman's "Last Supper" after Bernard Van Orley; or Mr. George Blumenthal's "Crucifixion" also after Van Orley; Mr. Martin Ryerson's "Annunciation" probably after Mantegna; the "Life of the Virgin" and the "Adoration of the Magi" in the Altman collection at the Metropolitan Museum; or Mr.
George Blumenthal's two magnificent Early Renaissance "Mercury and Herse" tapestries; another owner's two Early Renaissance "Scipio" tapestries, rich with gold and with superb compartment borders of the type developed by Giulio Romano; Mr.
George F. Baker's three Beauvais-Bouchers, or the Gothic "Andromache's Lament" now in a New York shop, should be referred to as "unimportant."

Only recently the acquisition of a late Gothic "Prophecy of Nathan" from the famous "Story of David" series was justly hailed as adding St. Louis to the list of "Tapestried Cities." In New York and vicinity there are many tapestries which one never hears spoken of or referred to in print, but which are of sufficient importance artistically and historically, as well as in price, to entitle the collections to which they belong to the phrase "of great importance."

Very truly yours,
George Leland Hunter.
New York, April 18, 1916.

John Ross Martin.

John Ross Martin, for 42 years ass't sec'y and m'gr of the San Francisco Art Ass'n, died in that city recently, aged 79. He went West in 1852 and was one of the founders of the Ass'n.

THE ART PRESS AGENT.

Dr. Albrecht Montgela, art writer for the Chicago "Examiner," in commenting upon the recent story in the AMERICAN ART NEWS concerning a young sculptor who worked a little press agent "stunt" on the police and press of New York, declares that "the story is told with all the ridicule such a procedure deserves, and says it gives him for certain reasons great pleasure to make it known to a larger public." Further on the Doctor writes:

Fake Fire Report.

"It seems as if press agent stories to advertise artists and their work will soon become as legitimate as in the field of the sister arts, music and drama. Some time ago the report went through all the papers that a big canvas by a French painter had been destroyed in a conflagration aboard a certain steamer. The fact was, and the importer of course knew it, that the particular picture had not even left France.
But the public had to be prepared for its coming.

"The personal press agent for painters has recently made his appearance in Chicago. Not long ago I received an anonymous statement to the effect that a certain Chicago artist was going to have an exhibit.
In this communication the young man was referred to as the artist who paints different' and 'the Billy Sunday among the painters.' Not bad, what? And yesterday a gentleman who signs his name, but gives no address, wrote me that a certain landscape painter whose show at the Art Institute has just come to a close, sold eighteen of his pictures, from which truly extraordinary fact the gentleman draws the strange conclusion that this was the 'best one-man show that has ever been displayed in Chicago.' Sir, 'the backing of the art lovers in Chicago,' while it has meant much to the exhibitor in this case, has very little value,
I am sorry to say, when it comes to judging the artistic, not sentimental, value of works of art.

"Not by what Chicago backs, but by what it does not back, must the value of such backing be considered.

Press Agent's Purpose.

"The press agent's activity in this particular instance went even so far as to induce one of our afternoon papers to publish an editorial on the man's work. All this is very repugnant to the real art lover, because from the experience in other fields it has been shown that the press agent is used for creating interest in a person and his or her work quite apart of its merit."

[We heartily concur in what Dr.
Montgela has to say in his final sentence, for it must be apparent to all thoughtful observers that the press agent is entirely out of place in the domain of art. Publicity is most desirable for recognized art works, since they are a means to higher education;
but it is a debasement of art to exploit questionable and sensational achievements in the public press in the guise of genuine and accepted works of genius.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

James S. Patterson.

James S. Patterson, a well-known wood engraver, died Apr. 15 at Hackensack, N. J., at the age of 84. He was many years with Ringle & Co., of which firm his son, Mr.
John B. Patterson is treasurer.

Herbert H. Horne.

The news of the death at his Villa in Florence, Italy, of Herbert H. Horne, comes by cable to the ART NEWS via London.
Mr. Horne was the most eminent of critics and "experts" on the Italian quattro and cinquecento Primitives, and his death, which followed a long illness, is a great loss to the art world.

John W. Burke.

John W. Burke, a veteran writer, journalist and translator, died recently in a Jersey City Hospital having long resided in that city. He was born in 1847 and early in life evinced a remarkable aptitude for languages which made his services in his chosen profession of journalism most valuable. He could easily and accurately read, write and translate German, French, Spanish, Italian, Russian and other tongues. For a number of years, the veteran, who bore many ailments cheerfully and bravely, was a welcome weekly visitor to the ART NEWS office, bearing his sheets of art news from foreign lands translated from the art journals of Germany, France, Spain, Italy and Russia. His passing is mourned by the ART NEWS, with his family of a widow, six sons and three daughters. Always faithful, able and brave, "We shall not look upon his like again."

ART AND BOOK SALES PAST AND TO COME

Old Masters from Russia.

Of somewhat more than the usual interest is the collection of old masters brought to this country by M. Nicolas Riabouchinsky of Moscow, and to be seen from today at the American Art Galleries, until sale on the evening of Apr. 26 at the Plaza Hotel.

Besides the quality of the works themselves, their provenance, and the modesty of the claims made for them in several instances, speak for the genuineness in the main of their attributions. To many the gem of the collection is the truly beautiful "Madonna and Child" of Filippo Lippi, so fine in quality and so delicately artistic in its rich yet subdued detail which was reproduced in last week's ART NEWS.

Two "Altar Panels," one showing a sacrificial altar with figures and the other a male and a female figure, are set down to Gerard van der Meer. There is a group of "Peasants Fighting" by Breughel, the Elder, and by Jan Breughel and Hendrick van Balen is an attractive composition, "Madonna and Child with Angels."

Oshima Oriental Art Sale.

The important collection of antique Oriental art objects, procured in China by Mr. Kano Oshima during his recent annual research in the Orient for objects of exceptional beauty and superior quality, will be sold at the Fifth Ave. Auction Rooms, 25th St. and Fourth Ave., next Wed., Thurs., and Fri. afternoons, April 26-28.

The collection, as a whole, is one of the most interesting and attractive of its kind which has been offered this season. It will be on exhibit in the galleries of the Fifth Ave. Auction Rooms until the hour of the sales, 2:30 o'clock each afternoon.

Drawings by John Leech.

Mr. Stanley Kidder Wilson's (of Philadelphia) collection of original drawings by Leech and books illustrated by him is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries to be sold there on Monday afternoon and evening next.

Books illustrated by the artist and books bearing on his life and work fill the first half of the catalog. Among these are the Goldsbury Legends, first editions, with an autograph letter by the author; the first thirty-eight volumes of Bentley's Miscellany, with illustrations by Cruikshank and Leech, an extra illustrated copy of the Christmas Carol, etc.

The second session of the sale will contain Mr. Wilson's wonderful collection of original drawings and watercolors by Leech.

Tiffany Studio Rug Sale.

A collection of 145 old Chinese rugs and carpets are to be sold by direction of the Tiffany Studios at the American Art Galleries on the after. of Apr. 28 and 29. A number of the examples are of fine quality.

Dickensiana and Thackerayiana Sale.

The finest copy of "Pickwick" in the world owned by the late Harry Widener is in the Widener Memorial Library at Harvard, and the second finest copy now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, is the property of Edwin W. Coggeshall of N. Y., and is to be sold with his Dickens and Thackeray collection, Tuesday-Thursday after. next.

The Thackeray collection is not quite so large, but is extremely important, containing nearly everything that Thackeray wrote. Many of the books are in the finest possible condition, with original letters and drawings by the great novelist.

The collection of miscellaneous books which will be sold includes some very important volumes, notably those extra-illustrated.

Rare American Autograph Sale.

With the exception of a signature of Button Gwinnett, the late Howard K. Sanderson of Boston, had a complete set of "The Signers" and in addition a large collection of the autograph letters of the great Revolutionary soldiers and statesmen. His collection will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries on Tuesday next, April 25, and following the Sanderson collection and arranged under a separate alphabet in the catalog are autograph letters and MSS. from various consignors, all to be sold on afternoons May 1-3 inclusive.

Coming Sale at Christies.

An important sale of pictures, drawings and sculptures, owned by the late Thomas James Barratt, the proprietor of "Pear's Soap," will take place at Christies, London, on May 11 and 12. Among the 157 pictures to be sold are some of exceptional character, including a number of Constables; several good examples of David Cox; Landseer's well-known "Monarch of the Glen," 64 1/2 x 66 1/2, one of his finest works; and another Landseer, "The Twins," and a number of examples of Morland, Muller, Lawrence, Turner, Crome, Diaz, Gilbert, Greuze, De Heem, Kneller, Rolfe, Sartorius, Soulaacroix, Teniers, and Vincent.

Chinese and other Art Objects Sold.

The opening session of a sale of Chinese art objects at the Anderson Galleries, Tuesday, brought $2,489.50. A landscape painted in silk by Senri brought $200 from Mrs. R. F. Hughes. A square Kang-Hsi vase sold for $75 and a small Chien-Lung beaker for $62.50.

The second session, Wednesday, brought $2,509.25, which made the total for two days $4,998.75. Mr. Joseph Brummer paid $105 for a Corinthian amphora dating from 600 B. C. Mr. J. A. Conway paid $80 for three Tanagra groups.

The third and final session Thurs. aft. brought the total to $12,214.75. Mr. H. M. Harriman paid $800 for a XVI century Flemish tapestry; John McCormack, $400 for a gilt tapestry suits, Louis XVI style.

Wasserman Porcelains Sold.

The collection of Chinese porcelains of the late Edward Wasserman, was sold at the American Art Galleries, on Apr. 14 and 15, for $88,550 the first session fetching $15,052 and the second $73,477.50. At the final session Mr. Parrish Watson gave $5,000 for a tall Lang-Yao mirror glazed oxblood vase, once in the Richard Bennett collection.

Mr. Seligmann gave $3,000 for a large lapis blue jar of the Ming period, and $2,100 for a tall sang-de-boeuf vase. Mrs. C. Spreckels gave $2,400 for a pair of Ch'ien Lung parrots perched on rocks and $2,050 for two porcelain phoenixes. Mr. A. G. Henderson paid $1,950 for a pair of ginger jars and $1,025 for a rose du Barry vase. Mr. S. S. Henry gave $1,550 for a sang-de-boeuf bottle, and $1,325 for a powder blue vase. Mr. W. B. Delevan gave $1,200 for a pair of cranes standing on a rocky base.

At the opening session, Mr. E. I. Farmer paid $975 for a white jade incense burner, and Mr. Francis Welsh $580 for a pair of Japanese carved ivory tusk vases.

Barrow Library Sale.

The library of the late John Wylie Barrow was sold Apr. 14 at the Anderson Galleries and brought $21,272.05 in two sessions. Mr. Gabriel Weis gave $625 for first editions in 3 volumes of "Endymion" and other poems by Keats; $535 for "Pepys Diary," extended to 12 volumes by extra illustration; $525 for the 13 volumes of "The Annals of Sporting and Fancy Gazette," 1822-28, with plates by Cruikshank, Alken and Landseer among others; $375 for an autograph edition of Mark Twain in 25 volumes; $345 for Ackerman's "Repository of Arts," London, 1809-28; $340 for an extra illustrated Sloan's "Napoleon"; $285 for an extra illustrated Foster's "Dickens"; $250 for a limited edition of Whyte-Melville and $220 for a first edition of the "Finish to the Adventures of Tom, Jerry and Logic."

Miller Art Sale.

At the two opening sessions Monday at the Hotel Savoy, of the sale of the collections of the late Daniel S. Miller, held under the direction of Mr. Samuel Marx $9,253 was realized. F. Vichis marble figure, "The Dance of the Veils" brought $850 from Mr. Jesse Foote. Berlin and Waterson, of which firm Mr. Irving Berlin is a member, gave $400 for a French gilt bronze and gray marble clock set, $370 for two green onyx cylindrical pedestals, and $250 for a pair of Sevres Napoleon pedestal vases with panels by Desprez.

At the third and fourth sessions on Tuesday the total was $27,205.10. Mr. Berlin gave $2,600 for 40 volumes of Shakespeare, an extra illustrated Edinburg edition. He also gave $475 for the autograph edition of Bret Harte; $465 for the Edinburg edition of Stevenson, and $350 for the Sophocles edition of "The Drama."

Mr. Gabriel Weis paid $1,350 for an illuminated Mss. by Sangorski and Sutcliffe of some poems of Tennyson; $775 for the illuminated Keats' "Ode to Psyche" by the same, and $322 for the autograph edition of Mark Twain. Mr. George D. Smith gave $875 for the illuminated Mss. by Sagorski and Sutcliffe of "The Lady of Shalott"; $750 for the same firm's "Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," and $450 for a jewelled binding by the same of Quarles' "Emblems." Mr. J. D. Oppenheim, agent, gave $625 for the Connoisseurs set of Scott.

The fifth and sixth sessions on Wednesday fetched $13,275.50, which brought the total up to $49,736.50. The highest price paid for a picture at the evening session, was the $1,210 given by the Holland Galleries for Ridgway Knight's "Gathering Apple Blossoms." Mr. C. W. Kraushaar gave $500 for Bouche's

"L'Abreuvor," and $350 for Lerolle's "The Shepherdess." The Henry Schultze Co. gave $400 for Henner's female head.

Jades, Ivories and Porcelains.

The seventh session, Thursday aft., totalled $17,134 and was devoted largely to Chinese porcelains, jades and rock crystals. The highest price was $1,775, paid by George A. Smyth, agent, for an Imperial Rock Crystal base. Senator Clark bought a mutton fat jade vase at $750.

An extensive purchaser was Mr. E. J. Farmer, who bought a Cornelian vase for $250, another at $275, an Imperial emerald jade able screen for $775 and a Cornelian flower vase for $575. Mrs. J. Kayser paid $175 for a Malachite flower pot, and J. G. Oppenheim, agent, bought a mutton fat jade vase for $500, a white jade at $450, a large rock crystal vase at $575 and a fine rock crystal vase at $800.

The last session, Thursday eve'g, brought out some good pictures and a large attendance, but prices ruled low, and many bargains were obtained. Mr. Samuel Stern paid $3,650, the highest figure, for a fine example of Bouguereau. Mr. C. W. Kraushaar, the dealer, who sold most of his pictures to Mr. Miller, was the largest buyer. The total of the afternoon session, or $17,134, with that of the evening session, obtained for the pictures, or $28,678, added to the totals of the previous sessions made a grand total of $95,548.60 for the entire sale.

The list of pictures which sold for more than $100 with the name of artist, title, buyer and the price follows:

Table listing art sales with columns for artist, title, buyer, and price. Includes entries like E. Semenovskiy, 'The Siesta', Oppenheim, 110; A. Musin, 'Marine', Oppenheim, 110; Eugene von Blaas, 'Childhood', Mrs. Vess, 105; etc.

WIDENER BUYS TAPESTRY.

Mr. Joseph E. Widener has bought from P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., for about $600,000, the famous Mazarin tapestry "The Triumph of Christ and the New Dispensation," formerly in the J. P. Morgan collection and lately sold with other tapestries to the firm. This magnificent work was woven about the year 1500, and long belonged to the great Cardinal.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York) "The history of art is like a chain in which every age contributes some links. The Hobbema joins the Claude, the Constable connects with the Hobbema, the Barbizon with the Constable, and so on. Each new man has something of the past; the personal note which he contributes, coming from his own peculiar temperament and environment, distinguishes his link from the rest of the chain."

NEW HAVEN (CONN.).

The fifteenth annual exhibition of the New Haven Paint and Clay Club is now on in the main gallery of the Yale Museum of Fine Arts, a more advantageous situation than that offered by the Public Library last year. While the present show is, like former ones, of local interest particularly, there are perhaps more exhibits than usual, representative of the kind of art that appeals universally. Several canvases loaned by Mr. Burton Mansfield from his important collection of significant American paintings and several loaned by Mr. William S. Pardee lift the exhibition to an eminently serious plane, despite the fact that the number of immature and mediocre performances is large. It is the reviewers' duty, however, and should also be his pleasure, to especially look out for new talents that merit recognition and encouragement.

A head of an old woman called "Marie Jeanne" which has the look of being painted in Brittany is one of the best executed heads in the exhibition. The painter, Edith Barry also contributes a study of a girl outdoors "Martha" which is less good in texture. Huc-Mazelet Luquiens, who has shown promise in former years seems to be falling into conventionality with his portraits—"Master Charlton Ferris" and "John P. Cushing." His "Portrait Sketch" also is lacking in freedom and personality. Violet Sattig's "South Shore" in autumn is a notable small canvas by an unfamiliar worker.

The Mansfield loans include a fine George Fuller "Child in the Woods," an extremely beautiful little La Farge, "The Windmill," a dark rich "Marine" by Albert Ryder and a large, exciting, and colorful Elliott Daingerfeld, "The Grand Canyon, Arizona." A delicious little golden brown "Pagliacci," by George Luks; a figure group by Charles W. Hawthorne "The End of the Day," a woman and child with landscape called "The Golden Stream" by Arthur B. Davies and a view of "The Palisades" by George Bellows are the Pardee loans.

A portrait arrangement by Hugo Ballin, also loaned by Mr. Pardee, is an unusual production by a man chiefly known as a decorative painter. The exhibits of John H. Niemeyer, Emeritus Professor of the Yale School, are interesting and varied. Mr. Niemeyer, who recently returned from a protracted visit to Europe, contributes the most striking vision of a local subject, his "Early Candle Light" representing New Haven's historic "Green" in a light reminiscent of the Whistler nocturnes. His portrait of an aged negro "Daddy Macrum, 102 Years" is also striking as is his "Portrait" of a man in a blue morning robe reading a newspaper. "The Sealskin Muffs" by Josephine Paddock, a picture well known in New York, makes a fine impression here. The outdoor pictures of George Langzett and Carl Rungius have the outdoor ring. Two pictures by Elizabeth Wentworth Roberts, "High Noon" and "The Dark Sea Pool" are highly individualized renditions of outdoor motives.

Among other exhibitors are Annie Aldrich, Alice W. Ball, Jean Barhydt, Gerrita Benneker, Carl Blenner, Caroline Beau Bloomers, Clarence Braley, Charlotte Brewster, Walden Brown, Saxton Burr, Elsie Chase, Ethelyn Cobb, Constance Cochrane, E. M. Dawes, Max Dellfaust, Adelaide Deming, F. Usher De Voll, John L. H. Downes, Edward Dunfer, Mabel B. English, J. E. Enneking, Durant Felter, Grace Ferris, G. D. Goodwin, G. V. Grinnell, Constance Hertev, H. Hilborn, Ch. Hoffbaver, Marion Howard, W. M. Hubbard, Will Hutchins, J. C. Johansen, A. E. Jones, Mary N. McCord, Herman Marcus, F. T. Morgan, Frances Orr, Agnes Peton, Clarice Petremont, Harriet Philipps, Miriam Roberts, H. Soderstrom, W. E. B. Starkweather, Edwin C. Taylor, G. A. Thompson, and Geo. Thomson.

Paul Trumbull.

KANSAS CITY.

Some 51 oils and drawings are in the annual exhibition by local artists which will remain open to April 29. The exhibit is on a higher plane than last year's, although there are no striking individual works. Birge Sandzen of Lindsborg, Kan., is winner this year of the S. W. Moore prize of $100. Sandzen is a former student of Anders Zorn. Charles A. Wilimovsky, formerly a student under Chase and Johansen, is winner of the O. H. Dean prize of $50. Sandzen's is a colorful oil of the Grand Canyon, "The Hours of Splendor." Wilimovsky's "Missouri Trees" was shown at the Penn'a Academy this year. First honorable mention was given to "Violett Flagg," a portrait by Edward B. Ulreich; second honorable mention to "The Old Tannery" by Fern I. Coppedge, of Topeka, Kan.

Some 30 old masters from the Ehrich Galleries, New York, are at the Findlay

MINNEAPOLIS.

The April exhibition at the Minneapolis Institute consists of 25 pictures by Robert Henri. With the exception of two canvases they are all of carefully chosen models, representing types of people, especially suited to bold handling and high colors, of coarse features, as Ramon, the Mexican Po Tse (Water Eagle), the gaudily dressed Indian, forceful "squatter's" wife, all showing the powerful technique, masterly brush work and directness of Henri's method. There are also Gypsy camps and fortune tellers, Spanish and Chinese women, as seen in Southern California, and such types as Couse has depicted in his New Mexican studio. All the pictures are in very strong colors, and, unlike his earlier pictures, the backgrounds also are in deep blue, red, green, and yellow. The picture of the Irish boy Fi, owned by the Institute, would be interesting in this collection showing Henri's skill, ability, and virility.

A gift of a scholarship for the Minneapolis School of Art, for three years, $150, has just been made by the Tourist Club, to go to the dept of Applied Art. This school has again made a record for its poster work, five of the competitive prizes being won in the recent N. Y. Modern Art Society exhibit, by the same students who took the prizes here in posters for "Baby Week."

The remainder of the Dunwoody library, not sent to N. Y. for sale, was disposed of here, at a local book store, last week.

The Minn. State Art Commission, has offered $500 in cash prizes, for plans for a brick dwelling for city or town, not to exceed $2,500 in prizes. Two other such competitions have given plans for model farm houses, one of which is erected on the State Fair grounds.

At the same meeting Mr. Joseph Breck resigned his directorship of the art school, a duty he had assumed with the directorship of the Institute, at the request of the trustees. A permanent head of the art school will be chosen and Mr. Breck will devote all of his time to the institute.

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Minneapolis Museum an announcement was made that Mrs. John R. Van Derlip and Dr. Angus W. Morrison had increased their original gift of $25,000 to $50,000, for the erection of an art school building which was to be a memorial to their mother, the late Mrs. Clinton Morrison. The new art school, it is said, will be a model of its kind.

CLEVELAND.

An exhibition of bronzes and oils by W. G. Paddock and oils by Karl Andersen has just closed at the Gage gallery. "Golden Day" and "Children of the Borghese Gardens," formerly shown at the Carnegie institute were included among Mr. Paddock's oils, the former sculpturesque in feeling, and the latter charmingly primitive. Among several fountains exhibited were "Bay with a Sponge," "Bay with Ball," a bubble fountain designed for the children of Saginaw, Mich., "The Water Goddess" and "Drooping Flowers." Among the small bronzes were "Epicurus," "Pandora" and "Dancing Lights."

Mr. Andersen's prize canvas "The Heirloom" and his portraits of his two nieces, the Misses Constance and Eileen Creelman, shown under the title "The Sisters," with "The Young Mother" go from here to Detroit and his large canvas "Her Ladyship's Attendants" to the summer exhibition of the Cincinnati Museum by invitation. His own little sunny haired daughter figures in this and in "The Heirloom" and a small god-daughter of the Queen of Roumania is another of his successful child studies. Portraits of the small daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Ginn and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Abbott of this city attracted much attention during the exhibition.

Miss Mary Helen Carlisle is now holding a display of her garden pictures at this gallery.

At Korner and Wood's gallery Keppel & Co. of N. Y. have been showing several interesting plates by Edward Borein, the "cowboy etcher" whom they regard as one of their noteworthy "finds." Indian villages in New Mexico and other western scenes are strongly portrayed. Rare painter etchings made this display a fine opportunity for the study of black and white work.

Wilhelm Georg Reindel, who has just had two etchings purchased for the permanent display at the Chicago Art Institute, will hold an exhibition of 25 oils, mostly landscapes, and 45 etchings at the Guenther gallery, from April 24. Mr. Reindel is a member of the Chicago Society of Etchers. Jessie C. Glasier.

FREEDMAN PICTURE SALE.

The auction sale of the 52 modern pictures which formed the collection of the late Andrew Freedman held in the Plaza Ballroom April 14, resulted in a total of $115,850, while two records were broken—one by the fine "Cattie in Pasture" by the gifted daughter of Emile Van Marcke, Marie Dieterle, which sold for $8,900 to Mr. Seaman as agent, and the second by the rich virile landscape, "Sanderson's Creek—New Jersey" by the late Julian Rix, the American, and which sold to Mr. S. Birch for $1,300.

The bidding was good throughout and at times spirited, and Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, the auctioneer was in his best form. The good figures brought by the examples of Corot, Isabey, Ziem, Thaulow, Dieterle and Hapignies gratified collectors and dealers in modern foreign pictures of the schools of these painters, as they disproved some pessimistic opinions of late uttered that the work of these men and their fellows was declining in value.

The highest figure of the sale, $20,000, was paid by Mr. John M. McCormack, the tenor, for the large and fine landscape by Corot, "Nymphs Bathing." This canvas of Corot's middle period—before he began to produce what is known as his "silvery" landscapes, was purchased at the Mary Jane Morgan sale in 1886 by Knoedler and Co. for $9,000, who sold it to the late Alexander Blumensteil. After his death it brought only $7,700 at the sale of his pictures in 1906 where it was again purchased by Knoedler and Co., who sold it to Mr. Freedman.

The three examples of Blakelock brought somewhat disappointing prices, considering the recent "boom" in his works. The small "Moonlight," a study for his $20,000 canvas of the same title at the Lambert sale brought $1,300, the large landscape $2,500 from Mrs. Isabella Freedman, and the small "Nymphs in the Forest" only $310.

The large "Venice" by Ziem, an exceptionally fine example, brought $6,200 from Seaman as agent, and the large Thaulow $4,700, also from Seaman as agent, probably a record auction price for works by the dead Norwegian master.

The large and spirited Schreyer, "Arabs en Route," one of the most brilliant examples of this master ever offered at auction brought $10,600 from a Pittsburgh collector, through Mr. Bernet as agent.

The examples of Jacque, Dupre and Troyon sold comparatively low, but were not notable examples, although $8,700 given for the early and not impressive Troyon by Mr. Stephen Birch was a good one for its value.

The following is a list of the pictures sold April 14, with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable and the prices.

Ross Hall Maynard Sale.

The sale of the Ross Hall Maynard collection of Colonial antiques in Boston March 27-29, reached a grand total for the three days of about $35,000. A mahogany Chippendale bed brought $1,100; a painted satinwood table, in the manner of Angelica Kauffman, $1,050; a Hepplewhite escriptoire of 1780, $950; a mahogany Sheraton sideboard, $840; a Hepplewhite bookcase of 1775, $600; a Simon Willard hall clock, $500. Mr. W. W. Nolan paid $290 for the Aaron Willard shelfclock. A Dutch couch went to C. W. H. Blood for $400; two Dutch side chairs to Mrs. Morris Weithorn of N. Y. for $270; a walnut mirror of 1690 to Henry Vaughan for $420; a Royal Bokhara rug to Mrs. E. H. Sears for $260, and a mahogany and satinwood bureau and a Sheraton sewing table to Mrs. P. W. Whittemore for $200 each. A maple, pine and cherry six-legged chest of drawers sold for $300; a wing chair in walnut with duck feet brought $230; a Hepplewhite sofa went to Mrs. W. B. Wendell for $200; a Martha Washington mirror sold for $200, and a Hepplewhite dressing table and writing desk for $200.

First Shakespeare vs. Bacon Book Sold.

The hitherto undiscovered first book on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy brought $1,825 at a sale at the Walpole Galleries, 10 East 49 Street, March 10, when it made its first appearance in the auction room as a hitherto unknown book attributing the authorship of the Shakespeare plays to Lord Bacon and antedating all other books on the controversy by nearly a hundred years. It was bought by Mr. Ernest Dressel North.

The book published anonymously, although the author is supposed to be Herbert Lawrence, a surgeon, was published in London in 1769, with the title "The Life and Adventures of Common Sense: An Historical Allegory." It describes how "Wisdom" (Lord Bacon) went to London, and made the acquaintance of a "Person belonging to the Playhouse." "This man was said to have been a profligate in his youth, and some had been a Deer-Stealer," going on to narrate how this "Deer-Stealer" stole Wisdom's Common-Place Book, and commenced play-writing:

"How he succeeded it is needless to say when I tell the reader that his name was Shakespeare."

Up to the present time the first book that doubted the Shakespearean authorship of the plays, described in all bibliographies as being the earliest on the subject, is Cox's "Romance of Yachting," published in 1848, followed immediately by the better known work of Delia Bacon.

The appearance, therefore, of a book printed nearly a hundred years prior caused great interest among Shakespearean collectors with the astonishing price as stated above as a result.

IN THE STUDIOS.

A free class in mural decoration has recently been organized in the Beaux Arts Building, 126 East 75th St. The teachers are William Taylor and William Mackay. Arthur Crisp is chairman of the Education Committee. The classes which are open during the afternoon and evening were begun by the Beaux Arts Architects who have been conducting classes in architecture and sculpture for several years past.

LONDON LETTER.

London, April 12, 1916.

Crowds assembled at Harrod's recently to attend the sale of Owen Grant's furniture, the bulk of which was seized by enthusiastic buyers within an hour or so of the opening of the doors. There was no doubt about the genuineness of the occasion, and choice pieces, which a few weeks before had been marked in three figures, were bought in for a couple, while there was not an inferior item in the entire collection. Personally, I should have thought that it would have proved more profitable to disperse furniture of this calibre at Christie's, whose salesrooms' buyers are more accustomed to frequent. However, there was no doubt about the keenness of those who attended.

As an example of an opposite nature, that is to say, of works of art which, in a comparatively few number of years have changed hands at a figure representing many times the original cost, there must be quoted the case of a pair of old Italian bronze groups, bought at Driver's in 1865 for 25 guineas by the collector, Mr. Tulk, one alone of which was sold by his grandson at Christie's a few days ago for 1,100 guineas. This was a XV century figure of a horseman, probably by the Paduan sculptor, Andrea Briosco which stands no higher than 10½ inches.

Late Lord Scarsdale's $150,000 Rembrandt.

The death of Lord Scarsdale, father of Earl Curzon of Kedleston, which occurred a few days ago, calls to mind his famous collection of pictures, which contains a number of undisputed examples of Rembrandt's genius, including the fine "Portrait of a Man Seated in a Red-backed Chair," bought years ago for less than £200 ($1,000), but worth today at least £30,000 ($150,000). Among other important pictures are Giordano's "Triumph of Bacchus," a "Holy Family" ascribed to Da Vinci, a splendid Albert Cuyp, and a set of 36 Limoges enamels after Durer's engravings of the "Passion." When so many treasures are allowed to leave us for America, it is refreshing to be able to note a number of masterpieces still in the possession of one of our ancestral houses.

The retirement from the French Gallery of Mr. W. Lawson Peacock, for many years associated with Messrs. Wallis, has led to a dispersal at Christie's of a portion of their collection of modern pictures and drawings. The prices have not as a whole ranged high, some of the most satisfactory being "A Shallow Stream," by B. W. Leader, which fetched £204, "A Serbian Bard" by Joanowitch which was bought for £141, and "A Terrace at Tangier" by J. Lavery, sold for £78.

Under the title of "Some Recent Developments of Modern Art" an interesting exhibition is on at the Dowdeswell Galleries, 160 New Bond St. Happily, the art is not so "modern" as to be unduly disturbing, for the least advanced of us is by this name accustomed to the art of such painters as Sargent, while even Augustus John might be deemed classic as compared with certain eccentricities to which we are treated elsewhere. Taking into consideration the diversity of "modern developments" now existent, those responsible for the present selection have displayed discretion of no mean order, avoiding what is of a merely evanescent nature and restricting themselves to really significant manifestations of latter-day art.

"Show Sunday" Without Society.

"Show Sunday" passed this year without that social element which usually makes the function a fashionable rather than an artistic event, and many artists did not issue any invitations to view their Academy pictures. Nevertheless, there are rumors that the Spring Show is to be of exceptional interest and that it will reflect the storm and stress of war conditions in a more vital way than any exhibition we have had since the outbreak. At last we are promised a canvas which is to record our London illumined by the searchlights which at present form such an impressive feature of the city by night, Mr. Verpillieux having chosen Trafalgar Square as the subject of his study. There are to be two battle-pieces from the brush of W. B. Wollen, taken from encounters in the neighborhood of Ypres; and Gerald Moira is sending a picture of lady war-workers making bandages for the wounded. An interesting portrait of Emil Cammaerts, the Belgian poet, is coming from Hugh Riviere, and from the Hon. John Collier an election scene entitled "The Successful Candidate." Sculptors are finding exceptional difficulties this year in regard to the transport of their exhibits, and for this reason the sculpture section is likely to be more limited than in former seasons. Owing also to the shortage of wood and the general encouragement of economy, the use of heavy frames and mouldings for the pictures is out of favor, L. G.-S.

BALTIMORE.

A number of modern Japanese and Chinese potteries, lacquers and sculptures, purchased by Mr. Henry Walters at the Pan-Pacific Exposition, have been added to the Walters Gallery. There is one XVIII century French work, a terra cotta portrait bust of Marie Leczinska, attributed to Augustin Pajou. The wooden statue of a woman by a Japanese sculptor is also striking.

Other additions to the Gallery from the Exposition are a large pagoda of gold with damascene decoration; a statuette of beaten iron, "The Storm King in Peace," by Chazoburo-Yamada, two Chinese vases, a Persian bowl, a carved oviform vase with enameled landscape, by Sobei-Kinkosavi, and a family group, small ivory figures called "Rest." The Gallery will close for the season April 29.

Frances Evans is showing oils and sketches at the French War Relief headquarters, some of which are to be sold for the benefit of the fund.

The annual "fakir" exhib'n opened at the Charcoal Club March 20, with 20 to 25 canvases burlesquing some of the pictures at the recent Peabody display.

There is an exhib'n of etchings by Gobo at Purnell's galleries.

Reproductions of some remarkable war drawings by Louis Raemaekers were shown recently by the local branch of the Surgical Dressings Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Chas. D. Robinson's painting of Gen'l Grant's arrival in S. F. Bay has been sent to Washington, D. C., for exhibition. Other works by this artist will be sent East for display, and he will spend several months in Eastern cities.

E. W. Christmas has more than 40 of his canvases in the Castle & Cooke rooms. This artist won a bronze medal at the Expos'n for his "Christ in the Andes."

Dry points, pencil portraits and decorative drawings by Arthur G. Learned are shown in the Paul Elder galleries.

Charles Rollo Peters has some new pictures at the Taylor-Curtis Galleries, and a canvas by William Keith, attractive in color, is on view at the Gump Galleries.

Throngs of visitors are attending the new California Art Exhibition in the Memorial Museum in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco. Mr. M. H. De Young is one of the local art lovers and collectors who has been largely instrumental in bringing about the present fine show, which is supplemental to the recent displays in the Palace of Fine Arts on the exposition grounds—which is to be a permanent structure and home of art on the Pacific Coast.

Joseph Raphael has a fine exhib'n of more than 60 of his works at the Hellgen Galleries, chiefly scenes painted in Belgium and Holland during the past two years.

Francis Brugiere is showing oils with unique photographic backgrounds. He is

The exhibition of sculpture by Paulanship at the Peabody Gallery proved one of the best shows of its kind here during recent years. The display was large and included several of the best things the sculptor has yet done, all of which have been shown and noticed in N. Y.

Exhibitions of paintings by "The Six" and of a collection of Japanese prints under the auspices of the Handicraft Club have also been held in the Peabody Gallery.

"The Six" gave a particularly good account of themselves this year and each of the Baltimore women artists included in the group was well represented. They include Alice Worthington Ball, Marie de Ford Keller, Josephine G. Cochrane, Camelia Whitehurst, Maude Drein Bryant and Mary Kremelberg.

Miss Ball is at present represented at a number of important shows, including the Spring Academy in New York, the Arts Club in Philadelphia, the Home Club, Washington, the New Haven Paint and Clay Club and the Sweat Memorial Museum, Portland, Oregon.

An exhibition of wax medallions by Ethel Frances Mundy of Syracuse, N. Y., and one of prints by the Photographic League, a new organization devoted to pictorial photography, are on at the Peabody.

An exhibition of etchings by Gobo, whose work has been heretofore unknown in this city, at the Purnell Galleries has attracted much attention. W. W. B.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. ART CLUB.

Beginning nine years ago with a nucleus of four earnest women, the Birmingham Art Club, now numbering forty-five artists and art lovers, has just held its eighth annual exhibition, April 12-16. It contained specimens of wood-craft, metal-craft, decorated furniture, household, novelties, ceramics, oils, watercolors, miniatures, plaster-cast portraits and reproductions in wax.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, April 12, 1916.

A gallery on the Boulevard de la Madeleine has nothing but pictures of the late Henri Edmond Cross, some 100, on its walls. Cross was a member of the old Delacroix family, but anglicized his name in the early part of his career to escape invidious comparison with the great romantic painter who, with Gericault, led the revolt against the school of David in the first quarter of the last century. Cross died in 1910 and virtually all his works are in the hands of one dealer. They are typical of one of the most notable developments of contemporaneous painting, one, however, that is restricted to a small group of artists, who resemble each other in this particular alone. Nearly all present-day painters have devoted themselves very earnestly to the production of so-called vibrative effects in color, thereby intensifying the luminosity of the latter; but Cross adopted, to this end, a bolder and franker manner than most of the others. All of his paintings have, near at hand, the look of mosaics, but at a distance their brilliant notation softens and blends and its living quality is most obvious. Blacks and browns are entirely absent from his color-schemes. He used only prismatic hues. Everything that he touched became joyous. His late pictures are absolutely distinctive in character; yet prior to 1908, in spite of a unique method, the influence of such men as Claude Lorraine and Caneletti could not but be recognized, especially in his marine pictures, while not detracting in the least from the impress of his originality.

An interesting lot of XVIII and XIX century prints is to be sold this week at the Hotel Drouot. It has been assembled from various sources and is uneven in quality; yet contains many specimens of real value. It is especially rich in English colored engravings; but there are also some excellent ones in black and white. French as well as English. Among the artists represented are Bird, Cousins, Crawford, Skrimshire, Stevenson, Westal, Boilly, Debucourt, Delaunay, Moreau, Duffes, Moyreau, Larmosin, Boucher, Chapennier, Charadin, Fragonard, Greuze, Lawrence, Reynolds, Pater, Pigal, Morland, Pollard, Alkon, Singleton, Waltner, Watteau, Vernet and Vernier.

American Art Ass'n Exhib'n.

The second exhib'n of French artists at the club-rooms of the American Art Ass'n presents great variety, notwithstanding that they are all classed as neo-post-impressionists. By far the finest works are a still-life by Charles Dufresne, with an exquisite delicacy and tender harmony of color, and two very dark canvases, obviously best suited to serve as models for stained glass, by Dunoyer de Segonzac. Firmness and strength in design and a profoundly poetic sentiment in the latter are highly suggestive of Millet, with greater vigor than he ever displayed. Dunoyer's use of a Murillo brown in juxtaposition to rich and sombre greens is admirable. Henri Ottman has given great luminosity to an ugly female nude, whereof the harmony, however, is nearly perfect. Picart le Deux has a woman clad in leaden gray, with dull flesh-tints, and a shadow on the face which looks like a smudge. Grillon shows still-life that betrays a strong, but futile, desire to paint like Cézanne. His porcelaine is excellent; but his fruits, too, seem to be of porcelain, and that is rather unfortunate. André Basqué has two port scenes which are poems in color, but unsatisfactory in design. Roderic O'Connor, by sharp contrasts, has produced in a still-life picture a great vivacity of light; but, while attractive, it is also irritating to the eye. Fully half of the artists represented are engaged in war.

A delicious Corot, in his best manner, exhibited at a well-known gallery, is for sale for 80,000 francs.

A Cézanne, "The Two Sisters," was sold in N. Y. for a Paris art dealer recently for something over 100,000 francs.

Eric Tayne.

DETROIT.

Some 40 paintings by American artists are on exhib'n at the artists museum to May 1. Bellows, Lever, Lawson and Glackens, Schofield, Symons, Dougherty, Henri, Hassam, Weir and Chase are all represented.

The Detroit Museum has added to its permanent collection a painting by Richard E. Miller, "Summer Reverie," and two small bronzes by Paul Troubetzkoy.

OMAHA.

The Omaha Fine Arts Society has an exhibition at the Public Library of works by the following local artists: Augusta Knight, George Barker, Jr., A. W. Dumbier, Elizabeth Ferguson, Robert F. Gilder, Lillian Rudersdorf, Sara S. Hayden, Mary W. Lincoln, and Alice Cleaver. The picture receiving the largest popular vote will be purchased.

Recently Pierre Tartou received at his studio, 6 E. 46 St., and showed a completed and attractive three-quarter length pastel portrait of Miss Mildred Hughes, one of last season's debutantes.

At his studio, 236 W. 86 St., Ernest Ipsen is painting a three-quarter-length standing portrait of Miss Anna Leach. A black gown and sables add distinction to an interesting head. It is a dignified and well modelled work. He has just completed an unusually fine portrait of Miss Helen Ballard, a Boston society girl. A simple, frank presentation of a young girl, it is lovely in color and interesting in the simplicity of composition.

Karl Andersen, who spends the greater part of the year painting at his studio at Westport, Conn., has recently taken a New York studio where he will remain until the late Spring.

It may interest some of the original members of the erstwhile Society of American Artists, who have long believed that body dead, to know that it has never been abolished. Every time a meeting of the National Academy is called, it is followed by a formal recognition of the Society. Minutes are read and other necessary formalities adhered to.

Paul Bartlett has left his studio, 400 W. 23 St., and will remain in Washington, D. C., until late May. He is at work on the pediment for the South Wing of the Capitol. The composition, which comprises some eighteen figures and a number of animals, symbolizes "Peace Protecting Genius." His statue of Franklin has been placed at Waterbury, Conn. He also has under way a decoration for the facade of the New York Public Library which contains two figures, "Romance and Religion."

R. Bruce Horsfall, bird painter, naturalist and author, is in Oregon assisting in making a natural history survey of the State under the Fish and Game Commission. He has presented one of his original watercolors, life-size, of "Holboell Giebe," to the Portland (Ore.) Audubon Society.

Martha Wheeler Baxter, who suffered a severe illness this past winter, is recuperating at Biltmore, N. C., where she has again resumed her painting. She will probably return to her Sherwood Studio about May 1. Some of her watercolors are being shown with the Rotary exhibition of the Am'n Watercolor Soc'y and her miniatures with another Rotary exhib'n.

The Titanic statue of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney will shortly be placed in Potomac Park, Washington.

Colin Campbell Cooper, Emma Lampert Cooper and Rhoda Holmes Nicholls have just closed a successful exhibition of their work which was given at the rooms of the San Diego Art Guild. Three of the more important canvases were sold. The artists are painting views of the Panama California International Exposition.

Mrs. Ada M. Miller, a Kentucky artist, recently showed some watercolors at the Duluth (Minn.) Commercial Club. One depicts the first steel mill in Kentucky, and another is a view of the old Kentucky State Capitol.

Henning Ryden had an exhibition of his recent landscapes and portrait impressions at his studio, 32 E. 28th St. lately. Though initially a sculptor, Mr. Ryden has a nice sense of color and keen perception which help him to see and to make appealing notes of choice arrangements in nature. The exhibits are principally thumb boxes—"The Thaw" being the only large canvas.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Nott Allen gave a charming reception at their new home, 550 Park Ave., on April 16. A number of artists were present during the afternoon, among them Arthur T. Hill, Mathias Sandor, Stanley and Mrs. Middleton, Mrs. Carroll Beckwith and Henry Wechsler.

Harrington Mann recently completed an interesting portrait of Dana Pond at his studio, 33 West 67th St.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Ballin plan to leave New York for their summer studio at Westport, Conn., about May 1. The artist has had an unusually successful winter at his studio, 18 West 47th St., where he painted several portraits and made sketches for a mural decoration.

KENDALL DEFENDS HIS WORK.

Wm. Sargent Kendall, painter of "The Sphinx" at the Winter Academy, which has aroused so much adverse comment, led by the AMERICAN ART NEWS, has written the following letter to Harry W. Watrous, corresponding secretary of the Academy:

"Dear Watrous: In connection with the attacks which are being made on my picture, 'A Sphinx,' now at the Spring Academy, I should be very glad indeed if you would officially notify the art critics—or, better still, write to the newspapers—that Academicians all received notices this year asking them to use their red tickets in order to spare the jury the examination of so much work.

"This notice was my own reason for sending 'Sphinx' with a red ticket. I have never before used one except once in the case of a portrait. My pictures have invariably been submitted to the jury, and this one would certainly have been so, likewise, had it not been for the Academy's request. I am utterly astonished at the comment the picture has evoked. Redfield objected to it eighteen months ago at Washington, when there was no drapery; but I supposed that it was now perfectly acceptable, and had heard no rumor to the contrary from Chicago, where it was exhibited.

"There is no use in touching the matter, except as the use of the red ticket needs explanation. I think the Academy will be glad to make clear my position by a public statement as to the fact. Please believe me, with apologies for the trouble I am giving you, always sincerely yours,

"Wm. Sergeant Kendall."

"Yale University School of the Fine Arts,
New Haven, Conn., April 11, 1916.

(We are as much, if not more, surprised than Mr. Kendall is surprised, that his repellent picture should have brought out such a storm of adverse criticism from press and public. As it seems to us that if his "offence was rank" in painting such a decadent work and sending it anywhere for public exhibition, his lack of understanding as to how and why it has offended against the canons of good taste—we might almost say—decency—is amazing.

We are pleased to be informed that Mr. Redfield suggested the drapery which Mr. Kendall painted in before sending the canvas to the recent Spring Academy. He might have gone further and suggested the suppression or destruction of the work entirely—if he wished to conserve his fellow artists' former well deserved reputation as a painter of rare refinement and good taste.—Ed.)

GIFT TO PENN'A ACADEMY.

By the will of the late Sarah D. Cox, a former resident of Phil., who died March 31 at St. Heller, Isle of Jersey, England, the Penn. Academy will receive $5,000 after the deaths of several relatives of the testatrix, to be used toward the endowment of the School of Art.

HARD ON THE ACADEMY.

"In general, the closing Academy received more adverse comment than is usually the case. This was due partly to the fact that the exhibition was a weak display of its kind, partly because the outsiders who rarely or never are represented at official exhibitions, have developed so many exhilarating talents that the organization groups are forced to meet a higher standard, and partly to the fact that a few machine-like canvases demanded outspoken criticism. Of these, the painting called "A Sphinx," by Sergeant Kendall was the leader. Critics and public joined hands in literally pouncing upon this picture, editorials were written round it, and it was seized upon as a glaring example of the fallacy of the present use of the red-ticket system. In fact, no painting by a conservative Academician has lately received such widespread comment." Forbes Watson in N. Y. Evening Post.

NAT'L ACADEMY SALES, $27,790.

Mr. Perk van Lith, salesman at the Nat'l Academy, reports that the sales at the 91 annual exhibition of the National Academy which closed April 23, met with unusual success, 23 works selling for $27,790. Nineteen paintings were sold for $27,390; 2 sculptures for $175 and 2 miniatures for $225. The sales in April were: Lillian Genth, "Story of Priscilla," $2,000; Fred J. Waugh, "The Moon Path," $800; Bruce Crane, "December Morning," $500; E. Irving Couse, "The Leafy Screen," $300; Harry C. Johnson, "Miniature," $200; Helen Sahler, "The Dancer," $100, and C. A. McKay, "Study from Life," $75.

IN HONOR OF CERVANTES.

The trustees of the Hispanic Society of America have arranged in its building, 156 St. W. of Broadway, a highly interesting collection of books relating to Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, in commemoration of the Tercentary of his death.

BLAKELOCK AN ACADEMICIAN.

At the annual meeting of the National Academy of Design Wed. Ralph Albert Blakelock was advanced to full membership. Other members chosen were Arnold W. Brunner, architect, and Paul Manship, sculptor. The following officers were re-elected for one year: President, J. Alden Weir; Vice-President, Howard Russell Butler; Corresponding Secretary, Harry W. Watrous; Recording Secretary, Charles C. Curran, and Treasurer, Francis C. Jones. Elliott Daingerfield and Douglas Volk were elected to the Council of Directors for three years.

BARLIZONS FOR MUSEUM.

Two oils, valued at $39,500, by the will of Miss Sarah M. Spooner will go to the Golden Gate Park Memorial Museum, San Francisco. One of the paintings is entitled "Shepherd and Sheep," by Millet. The other is a landscape by Daubigny, valued at $22,500.

ROBINSON ANTI-MODERNIST.

In writing of "A New Greek Marble" in the April number of the Metropolitan Museum Bulletin, Director Edward Robinson gives his opinion of modernist art as follows:

"It should be a great event when a work of pure and tranquil beauty comes from the ancient Greek world to restless New York. The contrast which its eternal calm offers to our high-strung civilization is full of useful lessons, and should give pause for reflection upon the distance we have traveled in our artistic tendencies from the spirit which made such a creation possible. Especially is this true at the present moment, when the layman, if he gives it more than a passing glance, and allows himself to become absorbed by its influence, can carry away more than a transient distraction from the troubles of the outer world; and the artist may find in it a standard which will recall him to the days when beauty was the fundamental principle of art, as the expression of a people to whom the beautiful and the good were synonymous terms.

"In these last years we have seen many artists, both in Europe and in our own country, groping for some as yet undiscovered principle of art, turning their backs upon the established and well-trodden paths, seeking one that should lead them in an entirely new and untried direction, to find which they have discarded—so far as it was in their power to do so—all the old, established principles, upon the ground that these had been 'worked out.' Some of them, seized by the 'isms' with which the artistic world has been afflicted, and stoutly denying the truth of the old dictum that art is representation, that is, the re-presentation of some form of nature as the artist interprets or imagines it, have sought a field of expression unknown to the world before, vainly endeavoring to represent that which cannot be represented. Their reason or excuse is that for the artist of today variety of form has been used up by his predecessors, and he must find something new to express. But surely one of the chief lessons of Greek art, as of all the great arts of the past, is that form is infinite, and its possibilities can no more be exhausted than those of light and air and color. Those who now think otherwise have merely wandered from the path to which their art will certainly return, sooner or later, either under their own influence or that of their followers, possibly all the saner for the experience through which it has passed.

"Now it is one of the most important functions of a museum which attempts to serve the higher interests of a community like ours, that it should place before its public examples from the great ages in the history of art which will act as correctives to the tendencies that have been described, examples to which both artist and layman can turn as standards because their beauty appeals to both alike, and is known to have stood the test of time."

BUYS BOUGEREAU CANVAS.

Mr. N. M. Kaufman, president of the Congress Hotel Co., Chicago, purchased on April 24, Bougereau's "L'Admiration," for the reported sum of $30,000.

The canvas, which is more than five feet in length, was immediately hung in the hotel lobby. It was bought direct from the artist by R. G. Dun of N. Y. several years ago. Later he sold it to J. G. Snyder of Chicago.

W. A. COTTON WINS PRIZE.

The Boston Art Club awarded last week a $1,000 prize to William A. Cotton for his beautiful canvas "Russian Girl," shown at the Winter Academy exhibition. A fine landscape by Walter Griffin was second in the competition.

MULLER-URY PAINTS MRS. WILSON.

A. Muller-Ury finished on Wed. at the White House in Washington, a portrait of Mrs. Wilson, wife of the President. It will hang with those of other wives of Presidents in the Executive Mansion.

It is learned that John S. Sargent, who is at present in Boston engaged in placing some more of his decorations in the Library, finds the prospect of getting them from the Custom House and on the walls extremely slow. It is not likely that he will return to New York for some time.

THE WONDER OF MOTHERHOOD

Sherry Fry

Sold to Toledo Museum.

CHICAGO INSTITUTE SUIT.

William F. Tuttle, assistant secretary at the Chicago Art Institute; Thomas Waller and John Christopher, two guards, and South Park Policeman John McCormick, have been made defendants in a suit for $10,000 filed by Charles A. Kinney. Kinney, who is a postgraduate of the art school, was expelled in Feb. because he is alleged to have created a disturbance at a meeting of the students in Fullerton hall as was told in the ART NEWS at that time. The basis of the suit is alleged assault and false imprisonment.

MINNEAPOLIS GETS TWO OILS.

The Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts has just received two important gifts of paintings. Mr. James J. Hill has given an oil by J. V. Chelminski, the Polish artist, and Mr. Eugene J. Carpenter has presented a Marine by Paul Dougherty.

THAYER COLL'N FOR KANSAS CITY.

Mrs. W. B. Thayer, of Kansas City, has offered to the residents of that city her collection, valued at $50,000, provided they will house it in a fireproof building. The coll'n embraces pictures, old glassware, textiles, metals, costumes, and miscellaneous objets d'art. The Field Columbian Museum in Chicago and Missouri University were both desirous of having the coll'n.

RICKETTS GETS PICTURES.

A decision of the U. S. District Court awarding Mrs. Mary L. Pinckard possession of 36 paintings valued at $36,000 in her suit against Robb Roy Ricketts was reversed by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago last week, when it held that the pictures must be added to the assets of the Moulton & Ricketts Company, which failed two years ago with liabilities of $888,000.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*A Selected Group at Montross's.

Mr. Montross is displaying in his galleries, 550 Fifth Ave. to May 13, nearly half a hundred oils, watercolors and pastels by a selected group of American artists. Geo. Bellows makes a somewhat sensational appearance, even for him, with two portraits which though startling are remarkably life-like, of "Lucie," a blue-eyed young lady in a rose-colored dress against a green background and "Olivia," a green-eyed little girl in a riding habit. T. W. Dewing has one of his elegantly elongated ladies seated in "Rose and Black" in a high-backed armchair. Guy Pene Du Bois is almost as violent in statement as Mr. Bellows in his well-characterized portrait of "Mrs. Crogan."

Horatio Walker has a large and dramatic moonlight, "Lime Burners at Night," which is somewhat in the Blakelock vein. There is a fine sky on Alexander Schilling's "Lingering Twilight." A superb stretch of country is handled with great skill by Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., and is called "Winter Evening." There are four sensitive works by Ben Foster, especially notable among which is "Moonrise Among the Hills." A superb effect of light and color is seen in W. L. Lathrop's "Evening near the Shore." Eliot Dangerfield sends a poetic "Meadow Mists and Moonlight." By C. Bertram Hartman there is one of his decorative landscape fantasies called "The Mirror."

Others represented are Arthur W. Dow, Jonas Lie, Gordon M. McCouch and James Preston.

Among the watercolors and pastels are particularly notable examples of Childe Hassam, G. W. Tryon, Horatio Walker, James Preston, Jerome Meyers and Arthur W. Dow and George Hart. Other works are by Howard Coluzzi, Herbert Crowley, Eliot Dangerfield, T. W. Dewing, C. B. Hartman, Elmer McRae, A. Schilling and Max Weber.

Suitable for a Country Home.

The Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., have again at the opening of the spring and summer season, hung a gallery with a collection of pictures suitable for a country home.

One of the most interesting of the canvases is a large and fine example with many figures of men and animals "At the Ford," by Pieter Wouwermans. There is a spacious English "Landscape" view by J. B. Shaw, with a remarkably true effect of light breaking from behind storm clouds, and a gray afternoon view by Jan van Goyen, a Dutch "Harbor Scene." By Girolamo Romani (Romanino) there is a picturesque portrait of a middle-aged dignitary. Hoppner has presented in impressive fashion a figure of a county magnate, Sir Robert Wigram. The charms of the then Duchess of Portsmouth are deftly set forth by the facile and masterly brush of Sir Godfrey Kneller. Allan Ramsay is represented by a robustly handled picture of a sturdy English squire. By Magnasco there is an extensive landscape view with dramatic light and cloud effects and groups of small figures.

Four Groups at the McDowell Club.

The McDowell Club, 108 W. 55 St., closes its season as usual with a large and interesting display, numbering over 350 watercolors, pastels and drawings by four groups of artists. F. Tolles Chamberlin sends some brilliant drawings and etchings, among the former striking portraits of a Princess Colonna. Admirable qualities are shown by Charles Farley in some vigorously handled drawings and watercolors. Several strong watercolors are signed by Guillermo Bergnes and F. K. Detwiler has a capital group of foreign studies. F. H. Marvin shows excellent scenes in crayon in Venice and Paris.

Vigorous qualities are shown by Edith Louise Paddock in some nudes and landscapes and there is artistic spirit in the works of Edith Haworth. A most interesting series of drawings is by John Sloan and Henry Reiterdahl, Robert Henry, Randall Davey are also represented. Benjamin Greenstein has several works which are strong in character.

Other contributors are Caroline V. Blommers, Horace Brodsky, Robert Martin, John F. Parker, Heppie En Earl Wicks, George H. Ingraham, Elinor T. La Roque, Lucia D. Leffingwell, Charles Austin Needham, Alice W. Donaldson, Florence Dreyfous, Harriet M. Olcott, Catherine B. Stetson, B. Rasmussen, George M. Richards, Gertrude L. Richards, Hilda Ward, Nell Winters, Ben Ali Haggin, Amy Londoner, Marjorie Organ and Ethel M. C. Plummer.

Exhibition of Browning Mss.

Mr. Robert H. Dodd has an exhibition at Fourth Ave. and 30 St. of an extraordinary collection of original Mss. and association items of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Some of the more important Browning items shown are Charles Hayter's pastel portrait of Mrs. Browning, Leighton's pencil portraits, Robert Browning's Mss. of an unpublished poem, "Epps," "Last Word to E. B. B." and "Home Thoughts from Abroad." Mrs. Browning's Mss. include criticisms, "Poems Before Congress," "Sonnets from the Portuguese," and "Aurora Leigh." Letters from Carlyle, Rossetti, Swinburne and Tennyson to Browning, his personal copies of his works, corrected proofsheets, presentation copies of Mrs. Browning's books to her husband, and first editions of the works of both poets complete the exhibition.

Western Scenes by Leigh.

That sparkling craftsman and painter of usually dramatic scenes of life in the Far West, W. R. Leigh, is now making an exhibition of 23 works to May 20, at the Snedecor Gallery, 107 W. 46 St. A most striking group, full of action is "Bison Hunting." Other notable examples are "Buckling," "A Ticklish Undertaking," "Pony Express" and "Halt for the Night." A wolf picture is "Voice of the Desert." There is a certain pathos about the tethered horse that is "Waiting," while "The Sentinel" is dramatic in its feeling of solitude. A capital portrait is that of "A Navaho Chief."

Mrs. Watrous' Exhibit at City Club.

Elizabeth Nichols Watrous, an artist of much talent and with a remarkably virile technique is showing at the City Club to May 8, a dozen paintings. They include the dramatic life size figure of a woman with a gun, at whose feet lies a Russian helmet, with the title "Self Defense," and a much talked of nude. The female heads are most attractive and include portraits of Mrs. B. and Mrs. W., and an old lady called "The Duchess." Two senic genres are "Orphaned" and "In the War Zone."

Aerial Prints at Kennedy's.

There is now on view at Kennedy & Co.'s, Fifth Ave., a most interesting collection of plain and colored prints, chiefly English of the middle of the last century, depicting aerial and velocipede subjects. A number of these, intended evidently to be satirical, are strangely prophetic of the aerial fleets of the present day. Besides the flying machines and the passenger mortars and tunnels, there are views of Montgolfier and other balloons. The bicycle scenes, one of which shows a race with a mounted man, depict wheels propelled by the rider's feet. A notable series of etchings, many of them remarkable for the largeness and authority of their handling of architecture, are by W. Walcot. There are a few modern scenes in England and on the continent, but of chief interest are such subjects as "A Tragedy of Sophocles," "The Trojan Horse," "At the House of a Patrician," "The Baths of Caracalla," "The Atrium," "The Temple" and "Anthony in Egypt."

A bust of Gen. Joe W. Wheeler, paid for by subscription, by a number of his admirers, which is to be presented to the National Museum in Washington, was on exhibition recently at the office of Henry Clews, 15 Broad St.

Designs for Architect Certificates.

The N. Y. Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, through the courtesy of the State Board of Registration for Architects, showed recently in its rooms at the Fine Arts Building, 215 W. 57 St., the designs submitted in the competition for the design for the certificate of registration. The first prize design has a Greek frieze at the top; the second shows the inscription on an old slab amid ruins; the third has features of Classic design, while the fourth and most ambitious shows two well modelled male figures, both with extra small heads, at either side of the base. A number of the competitive drawings are of the illuminated text and decorative script type.

Dance in Line and Round.

"Drawings and Sculptures of the Dance" furnish the current exhibition at the Thumb-box Gallery, 29 E. 49 St. Those represented by interesting groups of drawings are Troy Kinney, Katherine Beecher Stetson, Van Deering Perrine, John Sloan, Margery Stocking, Maud Stumm, Mell Daniel and Edith M. Magonigle. The sculptures are by Saral Morris Greene, Malvina Hoffman and Katherine Beecher Stetson.

Allied Artists' Exhibition.

The following have just been elected members of the Allied Artists of America, whose annual exhibition is to open at the Fine Arts Building, 215 W. 57 St., on May 3: Ossip L. Linde, Robert Nesbit, Max Boehm, Louis Bernecker, Howard Giles, Andrew T. Schwartz, Robert Vonnoh, Gustave Cimiotti, Charles Raille, Mrs. L. M. Sterling, Ernest Ipsen, De Witt Lockman, Cullen Yates, Richard M. Kimble, John Follinsbee, Armin Hanson and Willard Paddock.

The third annual exhibition, as said above, will open with a private view on the aft. of May 2 at the Fine Arts Building, 215 W. 57 St. The display will be open to the public free from May 3 to May 25 inclusive. The Varnishing Day view will be held Tuesday morning.

S. C. Landscapes by Ashton Knight.

Ashton Knight made a one-day show at the Scott & Fowles Galleries, 590 Fifth Ave., on Wednesday, of a number of oils and watercolors he recently painted for Mr. Bernard M. Baruch at his estate, Hobcaw Barony, near Georgetown, South Carolina. Several of the works are of good size and in all, Mr. Knight has been especially happy in his presentation of the half-tropical scenery. Besides views of the estate, house and the shore there were woodland scenes with the picturesque moss and views in Georgetown, including some of the old Church. Particularly happy is the effect of sun drawing water in view of the Clam Bank.

Important Exhibition in Stockholm.

In the new Liljevalch Art Museum of Stockholm, Sweden, there is now on, an important exhibition of Sweden's "Big Three"—Anders, Zorn, Carl Larson and Bruno Liljefors, which comprises 135 oils by Zorn, 143 by Larson and 65 by Liljefors. Of especial interest to Americans is Zorn's portrait of Miss Constance Irene Morris of Chicago, daughter of Ira Nelson Morris, U. S. Minister to Sweden, a canvas completed last December. Larson is represented by the large "Midvintervlotet," "Magen Sjunger," "Hennes Hoghet Stora Syster" and portraits; Liljefors' pictures are of wild fowl and are considered the greatest by any living artist.

NOTES OF EXHIBITIONS.

A most interesting and creditable exhibition of work done by the pupils of the N. Y. Evening School of Industrial Art is on to May 6. It includes sketch class and other drawings, book and costume illustrations, jewelry designs, interior decoration, stained glass designs, modelling in clay, poster designs, expositions of the principles of decorative design, mural decorations and textile designs.

An exhibition of sixteen pictures of dogs, sometimes in extensive landscape settings, by Percival Rosseau, is on to May 6 at the Knoedler Galleries, 556 Fifth Ave. The dogs, mainly of sporting breeds, are excellently painted and in fine action.

Eleven attractive landscapes by Carl Eric Linden, are on view at the Gamut Club, 69 W. 46 St., to May 1. They are agreeable in color and effectively handled, some of them in a subdued pointillist manner. Among the titles are "The Melting Snow," "The Red Barn," "Nocturne," "The Cloud" and the "Blue Hills."

Carl Springhorn has on view at the galleries of George H. Hellman, 366 Fifth Ave., a collection of drawings in color and in black and white.

At the Caroline Lorillard Wolfe Art Club the exhibition this month consists of works by Caroline Geiger, Margaret W. Huntington, Dorothy Mitchel, Clara Mamie Norton, Ethel Louise Paddock, Josephine Paddock, Florence Seely, Martha Simkins and Harriet W. Titlow.

The Messrs. Lamb, have recently had on view in their studios, 25 Sixth Ave., several memorial windows to be unveiled at Easter. Among them were the Pellet window, showing the "Ascension," St. Paul's Church, Louisville Ky., the Bailey window, showing Defregger's "Madonna and Child," St. Paul's Church, Weston, W. Va., and the Trail window, of which the subject is Christ as the Good Shepherd, All Saints Church, Frederick, Md.

An exhibition of monotypes by Andre Artique is now on to May 6 at the Samuel Schwartz Sons & Co. Galleries, 290 Fifth Ave.

Shakespeare at the Grolier.

A very large collection of portraits of Shakespeare, and an exhibition illustrative of the text of his plays, is on at the Grolier Club, 29 E. 32 St., as its contribution to the tercentenary celebration. There are nearly 450 portraits and the splendid display of editions, includes the four great folios, one the copy Sir Sidney Lee chose for reproduction in facsimile.

At the Powell Gallery there is a remarkably interesting portrait of Lamartine by Henry Powell, Sr., father of the present owner of the gallery. It is an unusual work, finely modeled, dignified in pose and thoroughly good in execution, a splendid example of the art of the period it represents, a most representative American portrait and deserving a place in one of our leading museums. It may be seen at the gallery during the remainder of the season.

LONDON LETTER.

London, April 19, 1916.
The recent Red Cross Sale at Christie's has monopolized attention to the exclusion of other topics, though little of a particularly sensational character has occurred in the salerooms. The bidding for the "empty frames" given by various eminent painters with the promise of portraits to be executed later aroused as much enthusiasm as anything, 1,000 guineas being given for that contributed by P. A. de Laszlo, Mr. Charles Agnew being the purchaser. The Lavery frame ran this very close, fetching 850 gns., but there were some surprises in store on the other hand with regard to artists such as John Collier, whose frame, in spite of the very considerable vogue which he has enjoyed of late years, went for no more than 200 gns. The fashion for de Laszlo portraits just now was well exemplified in an amusing incident when a fashionable woman, evidently unaccustomed to frequenting salerooms, bid, with evident excitement and excitement, for the Lavery frame under the impression that it was that of de Laszlo, and having raised the bidding as high as 800 gns., only discovered her mistake just in time to withdraw. It is said that at the present time de Laszlo is the only artist whose income necessitates his paying the super-tax and that a certain duke is having the whole of his family painted by this much sought-after portraitist. Certainly these Red Cross sales provide a good deal of gratuitous advertisement, also, for our modern men, whose generosity in the bestowal of canvases is often subsequently well repaid.

Tom Mostyn Exhibition.

The Mostyn Exhibition recently opened with considerable success at the Grafton Galleries, visitors finding in the feast of color provided by his work a welcome relief from the general drabness of the past winter. Indeed, in canvases in which color arrangement plays so important a part, it is by no means easy to do justice to the artist in mere reproductions; yet something of the dignity of Tom Mostyn's compositions may be deduced from the illustrations which we are privileged to give in this issue. "My Master Hath a Garden" is the title of the terraced landscape, so characteristic of a certain portion of this artist's work, in which a sky of deep, rich blue forms a background to the stately trees. The foreground is all ablaze with brilliant flowers and foliage, but nowhere is there sign of life other than that of nature. "Isolation" is the title of the other illustration, in which a Cardinal in his robes of scarlet stands before the gaping figures of the crowd, a man removed by his position and his mentality from the comprehension of the populace. Both pictures possess that quality of artistic suggestion which always makes this artist's work of more than common interest.

Amor Wins Suit for Commissions.

The action brought by Mr. Albert Amor, the art dealer, against Baron de Forest for recovery of commission, regarding which I have already written, has now been concluded in favor of the plaintiff, the judge ruling that he made fair charges for the work which he had undertaken, both in regard to the valuation of the Baron's property and in the preparation of the catalog. Much of the art collection of Baron de Forest was inherited by him from the Baroness Hirsch by whom he was adopted. Following on the successful public subscription of funds with which to purchase for the nation the "Premier Matin" of the Belgian sculptor, Egide Rombaux, a committee of artists and collectors has been formed under the chairmanship of John Lavery for the purpose of securing in a similar way the splendid "Mother and Child" of the Serbian sculptor Ivan Mes-trovic.

CHICAGO.

The Palette and Chisel Club opened its first annual exhibition in the Institute April 26. This show illustrates the wide scope of the Palette and Chisel for it includes paintings, sculptures, pastels, posters, etchings, and all kinds of illustrative work. Gustave Baumann, the Chicago artist, who was honored with a gold medal at the Panama Exposition, is represented by wood-block prints and book decorations. John Carlson has paintings in line and likewise wall-paper decorations. Gordon Ertz and Watkins Williams present stage scenery and decorations. Wilson H. Irving, Jansson, Harry Engle, George J. Leideneck, Walter Ufer, A. H. Ullrick, John E. Phillips, Glen Shaffer, Sam Kennedy, David Hunter, Carl Grafft, Rudolph Ingerie, Louis O. Griffith, Theo. Lely, Max Gundiach, C. Louis Coy, Emory P. Seidel, among others are represented by landscapes and portraits. Carl Path shows hand-carved and painted screens, and H. L. Timmins, Felix Schmit, Chas. Simmons, Otto Hake, J. McCoombs, R. V. Brown, Gordon St. Claire, Hiram H. Thompson and Grant Tyson are to the fore with magazine and book illustrations, posters and decorative schemes. The interest in Ralph Albert Blakelock's pictures as a materialized interest in the artist has come like a tidal wave from New York to Chicago and the galleries are installing landscapes painted by him, loaned from private collections and others held by dealers, as a "benefit" addition to the fund for the artist's family. Mrs. Blakelock is in the city, and is the presiding genius of

OMAHA SOCIETY BUYS PICTURES.

At the annual dinner of the Friends of Art Society at the Hotel Fontenelle in Omaha, April 18, one of 13 valuable pictures exhibited in the ballroom of the hotel was purchased and presented as a contribution toward a public art gallery for the city. The Society has about 200 members who have pledged $125 each, or $25,000 in all, as a fund from which to purchase canvases for the proposed municipal art gallery.

PITTSBURGH.

On April 27 the collection of pictures from the Luxembourg, Paris, on exhibition last year at the San Francisco Exposition, were shown at Carnegie Institute; and at the same time another group of French paintings, from the Exposition, and some English canvases were hung.

Portland, Maine—Not Oregon.

In the ART NEWS of April 1 a gift of 18 pictures to the Art Museum of Portland, Oregon, was recorded. The report should have stated that the 18 pictures were the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Clifford Borwn to the Portland, Maine, Museum.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, April 19, 1916.
The gift of his unique art collection to the State by Auguste Rodin is an event of considerable importance. It has culminated only after three years of negotiation. The great sculptor wanted the State to have his art treasures, but only under his own conditions; and in this he was perfectly right. Preceding the war, there was a long, intermittent controversy in a part of the press as to whether Rodin should be allowed to retain his studio and suite of rooms in the XVIII century pavilion, near the Invalides, known as the Hotel Biron, so-called after a noble French family, which became part of the ancient convent of the Sacred Heart. Rodin has never quite lived down the hatreds which jealousy of his success raised up against him many years ago, and probably he never will. In art he is comparable to what Victor Hugo was in literature. Hugo also was never forgiven by the little men who had once presumed to be his rivals. From a Cabinet minister Rodin had a promise, legally binding the government, to cover his occupancy of the pavilion. So for the last five or six years he has remained there, rent-free. The convent, confiscated under the law dissolving the teaching congregation, has been mainly demolished, leaving little standing save the pavilion itself and the chapel. Rodin, now more than 75 years old, was not to be shaken in his purpose by petty journalistic persecution. He intended to perpetuate his collection by leaving it in the hands of the State, and he intended to remain in possession of the old convent pavilion for the rest of his days. Both wishes have been granted. The State by its minis-

PROVIDENCE.

The Art Club annual exhibition of painting and sculpture opened April 18 with a "Members' Night." The gallery presents a dignified appearance.

F. C. Frieseke is represented by a large canvas, "Memories." The seated figure in white and the accessories of bric-a-brac and drapery are all treated in this artist's individual manner, but a lack of realism in the leaden flesh tints is depressing. Wm. C. Loring is happily represented by his distinguished portrait, "Ke," which deserves the place of honor which it occupies on the east wall. H. Cyrus Farnum has never so well painted the hot tropical sunlight beating furiously down on white plastered walls as in his excellent canvas, "Biskra Market Place."

Mabel M. Woodward in "By the Window" treats successfully the problem of light and shade and her graceful sitter is well drawn and modeled in broad but conscientious fashion.

August Satre, whose work has been lightly considered heretofore because of his decidedly modern tendency, is receiving a degree of praise this year for his large "At the Dumps."

Other noteworthy pictures are the three examples of Harry A. Neyland of New Bedford, Mass., whose "Old Whaleship" is especially popular; the three typical New York scenes by F. Usher De Voll, which are all very spirited especially the "Coming Up the Harbor;" "The Goldfish" by Gertrude Fiske of Boston, agreeable in color but containing two carelessly drawn figures; "Distant Hills" by George A. Hays, "October Afternoon" by Edwin A. Cram, a deep-toned "Portrait of Miss T." by Kleber Hall; two excellent New England landscapes by John F. Weir, "Lamp Lighting Hour," a poetical treatment of twilight by "Antonio Crino;" "The Brook in Winter" by Stephen W. Macomber, a large freely painted picture, and "Making Tea" by Stacy Tolman.

At the Rhode Island School of Design, the two small galleries are filled with a show of portraits by American artists. There are 54 paintings and 37 miniatures all of unusual excellence.

The honors seem to be shared by Wm. Sergeant Kendall and Wm. M. Chase. The former is represented by "The Interlude," lent by the National Gallery of Art—a typical example, refined and tender, represents the artist in his serious and wholly admirable style, and makes the wonder grow that such an artist could have perpetrated "the repellent Sphinx." Wm. M. Chase in his life size portrait of Mrs. Eldridge Johnson well sustains his reputation.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.
Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-

will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best

services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any

The Burlington for April.
Roger Fry opens the April number of the Burlington Magazine, with a short account of tempera painting on panel, of S. Catherine of Alexandria, attributed to Bartolomeo di Giovanni, and owned by Mr. Henry Harris.
Lionel Cust writes at some length about Charles Nicolas Cochin "A French Artist in Italy in the 18th Century," and his sometimes naive comments on the works he saw. Campbell Dodgson discusses "Two Early Woodcuts in the British Museum" and Tancred Borenius a portrait of a man owned by Mr. P. Wilson Steer. He accepts Mr. Roger Fry's suggestion that it is by Giuliano Bugiardino.
Mr. G. T. Hill discusses, under the title of "Christus Imperator," Mrs.
Arthur Strong's lectures on Art and Religion under the Roman Empire.
The new Pieter de Hoogh at the National Gallery is written of by D. S.
Maccoll. In Roger Fry's lecture, "Art in a Socialism," he pokes fun at the American multimillionaire "who buys the finest that has come into the market, for twice as much as anyone has hitherto paid." The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B
Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

ACADEMICIANS AND MODERNISTS.

We give space, again this week, to the Academician who is disgruntled by the adverse criticism of the recent Spring Academy exhibition, made by that Apostle of the so-called "Modernist" painters, and critic of the New York Sun, Mr. Henry McBride.

In the "Merry War," now raging between the followers of old and accepted canons of the painters' and sculptors' art, and those who are madly pursuing the new and strange Gods of so-called "Modernist" art—which term includes "Post-Impressionists," "Futurists," "Cubists" and others, more or less fantastically named—and while heavy blows are being dealt by the respective protagonists, it is the part of wisdom for the AMERICAN ART NEWS to preserve strict neutrality, as far as possible.

Only, as in the great world and real war, if some overt and unprecedented act, such as the sinking of the Lusitania should be committed by either party to the warfare, would we be at liberty to abandon our neutrality.

Fiercely as Mr. McBride denounces the Academy and the art of certain Academicians, and relentlessly as Messrs. Kenyon Cox and our own Academician correspondent, fire upon him and his fellow critics of the Academy, and those whom they call "Old Fogies" and "Conservatives," it all stimulates public art interest and makes for good. We would, however, remind Mr. McBride and his fellows that the veteran Academy—whatever its shortcomings or defects of management, etc., may be—kept alive the long feeble flame of art in America, during a half century or more before "Modernism" was dreamed of. The old story of the boys and frogs is also pertinent to this occasion. The boys found vast amusement in throwing stones at the frogs, but didn't hurt the frogs.

Carroll Beckwith on "Modern Art."

At the recent annual luncheon of the Brooklyn Women's Club, Carroll Beckwith and Mrs. Gertrude Atherton were among the speakers. Mr. Beckwith, who described himself as an "old fashioned Academician," spoke on "Modern Tendencies in Art" and was not in favor of the cubist methods, although he felt kindly toward them. He declared the wave of modernism is nothing but a wave of laziness, inertia, and ignorance. On being further interviewed by a representative of the ART NEWS, he said:
"A fundamental necessity of all pictorial art is the obligation of comparatively correct representation of form. I do not mean by this, photographic correctness, but a presentation both of line and proportion that will meet with the approval and give pleasure to the cultivated eye and mind of the beholder. This, mark you, is entirely apart from color which is mostly emotion, while drawing is an intellectual accomplishment to be mastered, even by the most gifted, only by long and laborious study.
This is why artists, as a rule, collect drawings by masters. A collection of drawings shows a more cultivated taste than a collection of paintings.

"In the development of modern tendencies in art I find an obvious disregard of form, a negation of the beauty of line, a blindness to grace and beauty of composition, a disregard of aesthetic culture and the standards which the most gifted as well as trained producers in art of the past have bequeathed to us. It is this fundamental principle of my profession in which I find the modernist practitioner sadly lacking."

CORRESPONDENCE

Academician Scores Sun's Art Critic.

The second review by the Art Critic of the N. Y. Sun of the spring Academy exhibition, just closed, was reprinted in the AMERICAN ART NEWS in the issue of April 15th. Possibly this reviewer would feel abashed, if he were called upon to read his review at the forthcoming annual dinner of the National Academy. If he were to see the size and distinguished character of his audience, he might hesitate to repeat some of the expressions he used, a few of which will be quoted in another part of this letter.

One may call his attention to the fact that the National Academy includes among its members a large majority of the most talented painters, sculptors and architects of this country.

It is not fair, without further evidence, to believe that the attacks upon the Academy and upon individuals, made by this critic, are part of a propaganda for the exploitation of a group of radical and ultramodern painters. Certain it is, other artists are rarely mentioned with favor by some of the critics. It is not conceivable that our important newspapers consciously lend themselves to the press agent advertising of a few artists, to the detriment of the profession as a whole.

It would not be possible in a limited space to reply to Mr. Forbes Watson's able article in The Evening Post on the "Authority and Failings of the Academic System," in answer to the present writer's letter, entitled, "The Divine Right of Critics." Mr.
Watson's article served the purpose of diverting the discussion from the egoism and personal bias displayed in the review in the N. Y. Sun of the recent exhibition at the Academy to that of the flaws in the Academic System itself.

It is an open question whether any art reviewer or official art organization has the right to presume to finality of judgment?
The jury of eight painters and sculptors, whose opinion was so lightly and confidently set aside by the Sun's critic, certainly did not presume to infallibility of judgment. We may be sure they merely did their best and did it honestly; and it is safe to assume that they acted with entire freedom from pride.

"Self Constituted" Authority.

Let us consider this question of "self constituted" authority. Can this Jury of Awards be described as self constituted? It was elected by the vote of the National Academy as a whole; and there are about 250 Academicians and Associates in the Organization. The members receiving the largest number of votes are elected to be on the various juries. There is no possibility of collusion, secret understandings, or political connivance. There are too many antagonistic opinions for that. It therefore follows that this jury represents the consensus of opinion of the majority of those who voted at the election. This group of men does not claim to be incapable of error. Absolute perfection of judgment is for certain Art Reviewers and Critics and God alone.

On the other hand, is not the Art Reviewer a self appointed authority? The impression prevails that he elects himself.
Would the Art Critic of the N. Y. Sun, or any other professional writer, concede for a moment that an artist (appointing himself) was a better judge of literature than a jury of eight editors, novelists, poets and reviewers, chosen by the vote of the foremost writers of this country? If this artist, to continue the hypothesis, presumed to waive aside the decision of the hypothetical jury with the assertion that the subject of their choice was "absolutely undistinguished," and that the best was so and so, would the writers feel that the artist was open to the accusation of exaggerated egoism?

Rosen's Prize Picture.

It is quite conceivable that the prize picture by Mr. Rosen described as "absolutely undistinguished as a work of art" may appeal to a multitude of people still capable of receiving normal impressions. The beauty of design and the technical excellence of the picture, together with its feeling for nature on a cold clear day, would possibly surprise even this reviewer, if he were not so accustomed to a high average of winter scenes by our strong school of out-of-door painters. Compare that picture with the snow scenes of former generations and the reason for the award will be obvious.

Perhaps the necessity of giving the public what it wants in the form of sensational copy, combined with the jaded appetite that comes with excessive contemplation of art works, explains some of the inefficient art criticism of today. When the taste has become dull by a surfeit of highly seasoned food, condiments are usually needed to stimulate the appetite. The professional reviewer is tempted to assume that his personal and individual taste should be everyone's taste. If limburger cheese and garlic alone make the necessary appeal to him,

everyone should be taught to like them.
The likes and dislikes of every honest man seem to him to be the truth. There are among us certain less gastronomically gifted people who prefer American cheese.

If Critic Had Been on the Jury?

One must admit, however, that academies, juries and official bodies are imperfect and liable to error. Alas! it is neither practical nor possible for art reviewers to serve on art juries. Consider for a moment the vexation and trouble that might have been avoided if the N. Y. Sun's critic, for example, could have served on the jury of awards. He says, no doubt after much self questioning, "The prizes are more numerous than ever and with a single exception have been bestowed upon intensely commonplace pictures;" and again, "Waving jury opinions aside the three best pictures are," also, "There is not a single picture in the exhibition that fires one to such enthusiasm that one rushes about town exhorting one's friends to see it."

This vivid word picture reveals to the uninitiated an unsuspected phase of a dignified art reviewer's activities. Would it be amiss to suggest that a special costume such as college athletes wear for long distance running might be appropriate for the exercise of this function? Imagine the appearance of our streets if there were several such pictures to be seen.

One may remind these writers that there is an aesthetic as well as a moral conscience, and that criticism from a large, dispassionate viewpoint alone has value. No exception is taken to the praise that is bestowed upon the men mentioned, for most of them have proved themselves to be very talented. It is the constantly repeated laudation of these men and their friends only that is unfair. This leads to the conclusion that there is either a strong bias on the part of some of the art writers, or they have a limited artistic taste.

The following quotations from the reviews in the N. Y. Sun speak for themselves.
Of the juries, the writer observes, "Occasionally some one with a drachma or two of red blood more than an academician is supposed to have permitted something with a little life and originality to be accepted."

There were sixty men on the two annual academy juries, not including the juries of awards, of whose blood, opinions or anything else this reviewer must know very little.

And then follows this irrelevant but illuminating statement: "One heard of him
(Mr. Cox) and his juries as continually excluding something" (naturally as there is room on the walls for but one in four or five pictures submitted).

One may be permitted to ask why the N. Y. Sun, admittedly one of the most ably edited journals in New York, lends its pages to this trivial and irresponsible gossip on the subject of art apparently written to boom certain individuals.

The catalog of the present exhibition at the Nat'l Academy lists 90 exhibits by Academicians, 88 by associates, and 335 by non-members. Does this prove the Academy to be a close corporation, run chiefly for the benefit of its members? It would be advisable for destructive art writers to study the size, organization, and administration of the Academy before attacking it.

MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY.

New York, April 24, 1916.

OBITUARY.

Howard G. Cushing.

Howard Gardiner Cushing, portrait painter and an associate of the National Academy, died on Wed. of heart disease, at his home, 121 E. 70 St., at the age of 47.
He was born in Boston, the son of Mr.
Robert and Mrs. Olivia Dulany Cushing, and after graduating from Harvard in 1891, went to Paris and studied five years at the Julien Academy. He was elected an associate of the National Academy in 1906.
Though best known as a skillful portrait painter, Mr. Cushing, several years ago, did a series of mural paintings for the studios of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney at Roslyn, L. I. He also painted a portrait of Mrs.
Whitney's daughter, Flora. A number of his portraits were of his wife, who was Miss Ethel Cochrane of Boston. Among these were "A Woman in White," exhibited at the Academy several years ago; "Woman in a Silver Dress" and "Sunlight." Mr. Cushing was a member of the Somerset and Tavern Clubs of Boston, of the Players Club of this city and the Architectural League.

David H. King, Jr.

David H. King, Jr., the well-known builder, who was noted as a collector of paintings, died Apr. 20 in this city aged 67. He sold his first collection, which fetched nearly $273,000 at auction, in 1896, and a second one, chiefly of English, French and Dutch pictures, in 1905, the 70 works bringing $201,035.

ART AND BOOK SALES PAST AND TO COME

BOSTON.

Richard S. Meryman's exhibition at the Guild of Boston Artists has proved to be one of the most important of the year in point of quality. It has become almost trite to speak of the talented youngsters that the Art Museum School is turning out so freely, but it must be chronicled of Mr. Meryman that he is "another," and one of the cleverest. "Clever," however, is not exactly the term to apply to work so strong and sincere as his, both in portrait and landscape. Two very much admired but dissimilar portraits in the exhibition are those of Hugh Camp and Mrs. Matthew Hale and little daughter. There is a masterly presentment of Mt. Chocorua, Monadnock, and other phases of the New England mountain region as seen in winter. It is announced that Mr. Meryman is to begin service on an ambulance of the American Hospital at Neuilly-sur-Seine.

How carefully guarded are our art magnates these days! As carefully guarded as our financial magnates, or as royalty itself. The humble-minded art critics who were invited to meet Mr. John Singer Sargent at the Boston Public Library one recent morning didn't get a chance to interview him, after all. Not that Mr. Sargent wasn't there in the flesh; he was, but he had nothing to say; he had a spokesman (Mr. Benton, trustee). It must have been like reading the famous program of the play with Hamlet left out. Several times the art critics cheered up; the great man cleared his throat as if to speak, but Mr. Benton would not let him. Firmly and patiently he did all the explaining about the pictures that Mr. Sargent had come to install at the Public Library.

Joseph Lindon Smith ("Joe," as his friends familiarly call him) hasn't been to Egypt and India recently, to paint the old monuments which he has copied almost to perfection in the past. But he did take a little run down to Guatemala to paint the old Maya sculpture in Quirigua. His renderings of these ancient limestone bas-reliefs, which go back to the beginning of the Christian era, are now on view at the Copley Gallery, being among the best work, we believe, that he has yet done. Also on view at this gallery are pastels and watercolors by Caroline M. Parker and Marion L. Peabody. Mrs. Parker's subjects consist mostly of quaintly posed children and attractive bits of gardens, while Miss Peabody has some very effective portraits and landscapes.

The three men who awarded the famous $1,000 prize of the Art Club Exhibition to Mr. Cotton of Newport, for his "Russian Girl," although artists of the highest standing, were not Art Club members. It is hinted that the Art Club, as a body, is feeling a little sore over the final choice, and a little dubious about offering such a big prize again; while the art-interested public is both mystified (as usual) and thoroughly disgruntled.

PHILADELPHIA.

The remarkable collection of XVIII century English paintings formed by Mr. John Howard McFadden, has been loaned to the Pennsylvania Academy for exhibition, to continue through the summer. A subscription private view was held on Thursday afternoon, the proceeds to be used for the benefit of the "Fraternité des Artistes." Gainsborough's portrait of Lady Rodney, Lawrence's portrait of Miss West, Turner's picture of the Burning of the Houses of Parliament, important examples of the work of Reynolds, Raeburn, Romney, Hoppner, Hogarth, Morland, Crome, Constable, Wilson and others equally interesting as representative of the British School at its best, are included in the collection, about thirty-eight in all. The generous thought of the owner in giving the public an opportunity to enjoy the sight of these treasures will certainly be appreciated.

The Swedish Exhibition will be continued at the Academy until and including Sunday, May 7th, and in connection with the educational "raison d'être" of the exhibition, Christian Brinton, M. A., Litt. D., delivered a lecture last evening on Modern Swedish Art in the galleries.

The Second Annual Exhibition of Contemporary Etching is now being held at the Art Club, and so numerous are the prints that space could not be found for all of them. Those that are placed have been arranged in groups. Among the exhibitors are Childe Hassam, Thos. R. Congdon, Bertha E. Jaques, Mary Cassatt, Ernest D. Roth, Geo. T. Plowman, John Sloan, Earl Reed, Mathilde de Cordoba and Zella de Milhau. The exhibition has been organized by members of the Art Club assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Y. Brinton. Mrs. Bertha E. Jaques, secretary of the Chicago Society of Etchers is also in a great measure responsible for getting the collection together.

Gen. Hwang Hsing's Collection.

There is now on view at the American Art Galleries, prior to sale there on the afternoons of May 1-2, the very remarkable collection of antique Chinese porcelains and pottery, enamels, jades, snuff bottles and old Chinese paintings of General Hwang Hsing, first president of the Chinese Republic. There are a number of fine screens, the chief of which is Caromandel example in 12 leaves showing a Royal Visit to the Emperor. The porcelains are of great beauty, as are also the lacquers, while there are a number of very fine jades. The Chinese paintings are in a portfolio.

Books About Napoleon.

Miscellaneous books, including the Napoleon collection made by the late Sidney Wright Hopkins, will be placed on exhibit at the Anderson Galleries on Monday next, previous to the sale a week later. Pettit's Vision of Government, London: 1684, mentioning New York, which is apparently the first copy ever offered at auction; Chauncy's Discourse, Boston: 1766; Morgan's Anti-Paedo-Rantism, printed by Franklin in 1747; Livingston's Other Side of the Question, New York: 1774; a complete set of Valentine's Manuals; Burgoyne's State of the Expedition, London: 1780; Large Paper copies of American Statesmen Series and of the works of leading American authors, and books on Lincoln are among the interesting items in addition to the many books relating to Napoleon.

Sanderson Autograph Letters.

The late Howard K. Sanderson of Boston was a collector of autograph letters for many years and the most important part of what he gathered is to be sold on the afternoons of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, next at the Anderson Galleries. With the sole exception of Button Gwinnett, Mr. Sanderson had a complete collection of the "Signers," and many of the letters are fine. The Lynch, of course, is a signature, as the N. Y. Public Library owns the only autograph letter of the young signer that has ever been brought to light. Among this miscellaneous material the 17 Washington letters and documents are of first importance. Of these one relates to the family genealogy and Washington's efforts to ascertain the important facts regarding his ancestors. Another is of particular interest to N. Y. collectors, for it discloses the methods which Washington employed to maintain a spy in this city, shows how he paid him, how he should conduct himself so as not to arouse suspicion, and gives a hint as to the kind of information he wants regarding the plans and movements of the enemy. Original Mss. by distinguished authors; the autograph note book of Joseph Rodman Drake, one of the most important literary discoveries in many years; war letters by Hamilton, Greene, Jefferson, Lee and John Paul Jones; a document signed by Ethan Allen; and a war letter, by John Connolly, the Pittsburgh conspirator, are among the other treasures in this collection.

Collection of Chinese Art.

A large and varied collection of Chinese art, formerly the property of Capt. Enoch Berry of San Fran., is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries and will be sold on the afternoons of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, next. Many of the textiles, jewels, screens, mirrors, jades, lacquers, enamels and carvings will appeal to collectors. From other consignors come Chinese paintings and rugs and old silver and Sheffield plate. A Ch'ien Lung rug in rose color with a floral medallion in the center and a decoration of flowers in vases at each end, in lovely blue, yellow and pink shades, is an attractive piece. Most of the old silver in the collection was made by Bateman, Beldon, Hennessey, Burwash, Robbins and Barnard in London.

Second Coggeshall Library Sale.

A second and concluding sale from the Edwin W. Coggeshall Library is announced by the Anderson Galleries for the afternoons of May 15-17. The great feature will be the 600 autograph letters by Charles Dickens, the largest sale of the kind ever held in this country and probably in the world. Some 125 of the letters are wholly unpublished and will be offered as a single lot, so that the buyer, if he chooses, can take up with the Dickens heirs the question of publishing an entirely new book about the great English novelist.

Dickensiana and Thackerayana Sale.

The opening session Tuesday of the sale of Dickens and Thackeray collections and other rare books and autographs, from the library of Edwin W. Coggeshall, at the Anderson Galleries produced $37,189. Mr. George D. Smith paid the highest price, $5,350 for a first edition of "Pickwick Papers." This is an unusual copy, containing a page of the original manuscript, the four scarce addresses and 43 fine impressions of the illustrations by Seymour, Buss and "Phiz," otherwise Hablot K. Browne. The book was originally sold by Mr. Smith to Mr. Coggeshall for $5,520. Mr. Smith also gave $3,950 for a volume containing 16 letters by Lincoln, Grant, Farragut, Stanton, Halleck and J. C. Palmer. He further gave $1,260 for the Mss. of Dickens' speech at Gore House, Kensington, May 30, 1851; $1,000 for the Mss. of the "Dedication of the Village Coquettes," to John P. Harley, manager of St. James Theatre; the same amount for a presentation copy of the "Chimes" to "Charles Dickens, Jr. from his affectionate Father" and $650 for a copy of "The Old Curiosity Shop" presented by Dickens to Mrs. Smithson.

Mr. Gabriel Weis gave $3,800 for the "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War," extending from four to twenty-five volumes by the insertion of portraits, views, letters, signatures and documents. This was originally in the Augustin Daly sale, but had been added to by the last owner. Mr. Weis further gave $875 for an original edition of "Oliver Twist," a presentation copy from the author to Thomas Hill and with an inserted autograph letter, $775 for a first edition of "The Hated Man," a presentation copy from Dickens to Thomas Beard, $610 for a presentation copy of the first edition of "Our Mutual Friend," and $585 for a presentation copy of "Sketches by Boz."

The E. P. Dutton Co. paid $1,750 for a first edition of the "American Notes," a presentation copy from Dickens to Carlyle and with that writer's name on the fly leaf and $975 for a first edition of "Nicholas Nickleby" bound by Riviere, a presentation copy from the author to Samuel Rogers. Dr. A. S. Rosenbach secured for $1,000 a first edition of "A Christmas Carol," a presentation copy from the author to Albany Fonblanque, and $700 for a copy of the "Cricket on the Hearth" presented by Dickens to Mme. De La Rue. To Mr. Charles Sessler went at $790 the copy of "Pictures from Italy" that Dickens gave to Douglas Jerrold.

At the second session, Wednesday, $12,824 was realized. Mr. Gabriel Weis gave $1,425 for a XV century North of France vellum Mss., "Hours of the Virgin Mary," with 8 large miniatures, bound by Cloves Eve. Mr. George D. Smith paid $1,020 for an extra illustrated Irving's Washington; $950 for Dickens's narrative of "The Great International Walking Match of Feb. 29, 1868"; $460 for an extra illustrated Forster's Dickens, with letters by Dickens and Hablot K. Browne; $455 for an extra illustrated Pierre M. Irving's "Life of Washington Irving"; $370 for two chairs of mahogany, from Dickens's dining room at Gad's Hill; $305 for Helen Jackson's "Ramona," with watercolors by W. H. Drake; $285 for the copying book of "All the Year Round," with impressions of six Dickens letters to Charles Reade and others; $225 for Forster's Dickens, with two letters of the subject inserted; $220 for eight letters of George Eliot to Mme. Bodichou, bound by Riviere, and $205 for a letter from Dickens to Lord John Russell, giving an account of Douglas Jerrold's illness and death. The E. P. Dutton Co. paid $200 for "Cato Major" of Cicero, the first Franklin imprint, Phila., 1744.

The third and last session, Thursday, afternoons, totalled $11,035.85, making the grand total $61,048.85. Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. paid $1,225 for the first edition of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," with autograph letter of the author; $320 for the first edition of R. L. Stevenson's "Graver and the Pen"; and $250 for a pen-and-ink drawing by Thackeray of his daughters seated in a garden. Mr. Walter M. Hill, of Chicago, gave $740 for a presentation copy of "Mrs. Perkins's Ball" from Thackeray to Lady Duff Gordon; Mr. Gabriel Weis, $660 for Thackeray's "Second Funeral of Napoleon," showing rare etching of Napoleon by the author; Mr. W. T. Walters, $660 for an autograph letter from Thackeray to Mrs. E. B. Brownrigg;

Riabouchinsky Old Masters Sale.

An interesting picture auction sale was that of the 32 old masters of the early German, Dutch and Italian schools, owned by Mr. Nicolas Riabouchinsky of Moscow, Russia, and formerly the property of Prince Golincheff-Koutousoff, in the Plaza Hotel Ballroom Wednesday evening.

While the pictures were of a character not understood or appreciated by the general art public, so that the audience was the smallest at any picture auction this season, the event was of unusual interest to collectors of and dealers in old masters.

Mr. Thomas E. Kirby made a brief and felicitous address in opening the sale on the subject of "Old Masters and Doubtful Thomases." He told of the remark made by Mr. Catholina Lambert, just previous to his recent sale, which contained a number of old masters, to a friend who intended purchasing some of these at the sale, and who wished Mr. Lambert's opinion upon those he had selected. "I can bring you twelve 'experts,'" said Mr. Lambert, "and each one will have a different opinion." Mr. Kirby then told the audience that a collector he knew, who was present, wisely purchased old pictures that pleased him, regardless of their attributions. "If, after I buy an old picture," said the collector, "it is well proven to have a correct attribution, so much the better, but if critics differ regarding it I am none the worse off if the work pleases me."

While a number of the pictures undoubtedly sold very low, others brought good prices, and to those who know from experience that American art auction frequenters and buyers are rarely as wise as the collector of whom Mr. Kirby spoke, and fear to trust their own judgment or even that of the dealers they patronize on old pictures, the total of the sale was better than they had expected.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Wednesday evening with the numbers, artists' names, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York)
 "The feeling of a landscape-painter for his work is very difficult to describe. When I attempt to talk about it, as I seldom do, I feel somewhat, I fancy, as Stalky did in the Kipling story when the fat-headed Councillor came down to the school to present a flag. I can only venture to say how I work personally. Whether that would be of any help to another or not, I cannot say."

Thirty Keith Oils Sold.

The sale of 30 oils by the late William Keith consigned to the Anderson Galleries by the artist's son, Mr. Charles W. Keith, of San Francisco, through Mr. Curtis, an art dealer of that city, took place at the Galleries on the afternoon of April 22. This was the most important lot of examples of Keith that has ever come upon the market, with the result that the auction gallery was well filled with dealers and collectors. Owing to the absence of the art reporters of the dailies, a surprising innovation in N. Y. auction sales was not recorded. This was the direct participation in the auction by the dealer, Mr. Curtis, who, standing by Mr. Chapman, the auctioneer, on the rostrum, not only delivered a longer or shorter oration on each picture, before bids were called for, and as it came up, but presumably started several of the bids himself. It is questionable whether this innovation will be followed up in this city, and it is the general opinion among the frequenters of art auctions that the innovation was not particularly helpful to the sale. It is noticeable, as will be seen by the following list, that five of the pictures, three of which brought among the highest prices of the sale, were announced as having been sold to a Mr. R. C. Hughes.

Mr. Curtis told one interesting story relative to the painting, "Near San Rafael," which was sold to Mr. B. M. Barrett for $1,500, which was to the effect that the painting was executed by Mr. Keith in company with George Inness who painted the same subject at the same time, although neither man saw the work of the other until it was completed. When completed, the pictures were found to be almost fac-similes, save for the natural difference in technique of the two men.

The following is a list of the pictures sold April 22, with the numbers, titles, sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, and the prices:

1—Sketch, panel, 5 1/2 x 8, D. Calo & Sons...	$100

Leech Collection Fetches $13,407.75.

The sale in two sessions at the Anderson Galleries on Monday, of the John Leech collection of Mr. Stanley Kidder Wilson, of Phila., brought $13,407.75. Mr. George D. Smith paid $750 for 25 pencil sketches by Leech, including 8 of the series "Mr. Briggs and his Doings." He also gave $490 for an oil sketch by Leech of "A very Great Man," $480 for his pen and ink and watercolor drawing "The Race for the Derby, 1851"; $310 for "Hunting and Sports and Pastimes," with 25 reproductions in color of sketches in oil by Leech; $300 for 38 volumes of "Bentley's Miscellany," with illustrations by Leech and Cruikshank; $205 for the Leech watercolor "Hunting the Hounds," $200 for the first edition of Surtees' "Plain or Ringlets," $180 for 7 volumes of sporting novels by Surtees, illustrated by Leech and others; $160 for an extra illustrated edition, with a letter by the author, of Dickens' "Christmas Carol"; $130 for Surtees' "Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour," illustrated by Leech, and $118.50 for Surtees' "Handley Cross," illustrated by Leech.

Mr. Gabriel Weis paid $430 for Frith's "John Leech, his Life and Work," extra illustrated with nearly 700 prints; $215 for an album of original sketches for Punch, and $167.50 for the first edition of the "Ingoldsby Legends," with illustrations by Leech, Buss and Cruikshank. Mr. James F. Drake secured for $410 the watercolor by Leech, "Lay of St. Gengulphus," and for $310 16 sepias by Leech of "Our Fido and his Adventures." Dr. Rosenbach gave $245 for Leech's pencil drawing of "The Old Customer."

Old Views and Maps Sold.

The first session of a sale of old views and maps at the American Art Galleries, Wed., brought $2,085. Mr. Hill Tolerton of San Francisco gave $100, for an early view of that city, corner of Montgomery and California Streets, 1853, and $75 for the "City and Harbor of San Francisco, Oct. 31, 1849." Mr. J. H. Jordan paid $60 for an aquatint of Washington in 1835 and Mr. Grammercy, $52.50 for "West Point from Phillipstown, 1831."

The second session, Thursday, brought the total to $5,988.50. Mr. L. E. Ellis gave $515 for the 1835 "Broadway, Looking North from Canal Street"; by J. Hill and Kennedy & Co., $375 for Bennet after Chapman's 1836 aquatint "From the Bay near Bedloe's Island," and $360 for Ganst's engraving of Howdell's Southeast view of New York City.

Oshima Oriental Art Sold.

At the Fifth Avenue Auction Rooms on Wed. aft., the first session of the Oshima Oriental art sale fetched $5,413. Mrs. Herman Frasch gave $250 for a pair of Imperial jade flowering plants in gilt bronze jardinières. Mr. R. T. Oliver paid $145 for two pairs of jade table screens, and Mr. S. S. Wolff, $72.50 for a hawthorn ginger jar. Mr. Elwell paid $70 for another hawthorne jar and $67.50 for a bronze censer. Countess del Drago gave $50 for a bronze statuette of Kwan-Yin.

The second session, Thursday, brought $6,928, which made the total that far $12,442. Mr. E. H. Hubbard gave $925 for a Chinese palace carpet, and Mrs. Herman Frasch $310 for a pair of cinnabar lacquer vases.

Books, Drawings and Autographs.

A sale of books, drawings and autographs held by Scott and O'Shaughnessy at the Collectors Club, Thursday, fetched $3,109.80. Mr. George D. Smith gave $712.50 for a first edition of "Pictures from Italy," given by Dickens to d'Orsay, and Charles Scribners Sons, $92.50, for a set of Dickens' "Christmas Books," bound by Riviere.

CANFIELD ART VALUATIONS.

A transfer tax report filed Thursday with Deputy State Controller, Boardman, gave the following as the value of the former art properties of Richard A. Canfield: Porcelains, $12,915; books, $834; antique furniture and objects of art, sold for $159,999; other furniture, $7,075; paintings sold for $10,379; collection of Whistler lithographs, $5,000; portrait of Mr. Canfield, by Whistler, $3,000, and bronze Bacchante by MacMonnies, $250.

IN THE STUDIOS.

A special exhibition of original cartoons by Clifford K. Berryman is on view to May 4 in the new special exhibition room of the Corcoran Gallery of Art at Washington.

Max Bohm, who returned to this country last summer after several years' residence abroad, intends to remain in New York.

Orlando Rouland's recent portrait of James Lane Allen was placed last month in the public library at Lexington, Ky., the author's native town. The artist will soon begin a portrait of Irving Bacheller. At his studio, 130 West 57 St., are a number of landscapes and several portraits of children.

F. S. Church recently completed a portrait of Mr. Grant B. Schley, of Far Hills, N. J. Mr. Schley's favorite dog is depicted seated at his feet.

E. L. Henry's "Street Scene in Old Johnstown," recently purchased by a well known collector, is one of his largest canvases, has a number of figures, and represents costumes and vehicles of 1862. The old residence of Judge Cady, as well as his portrait, is faithfully recorded, and also that of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The old Caydetta Hotel is also accurately recorded.

Miss Clara T. MacChesney, who has been for several months on the Pacific Coast teaching and painting, returned some weeks ago to her Chelsea studio, where she shows a number of portraits and landscapes.

Colin Campbell Cooper and Emma Lambert Cooper have been in California all winter and have painted in Santa Barbara, San Diego and several other places. They will not return to their Gainsborough studio until autumn.

Thomas R. Congdon and Mrs. Congdon have gone to their summer home, "Villa Vose," at Campbells, New York. Mr. Congdon will begin at once the erection of a large "plein air" studio, a garage and remodel his barn into a studio for his class in out-of-door painting.

Coulton Waugh has on view to May 1, in the Pink Room of the Band Box Theatre, East 57 St., several pen and ink drawings of somewhat wierd design, but showing cleverness. They are in the Aubrey Beardsley vein, and inspired by the Oriental antique.

ACADEMICIANS DINE.

Over 150 National Academicians and guests were at the annual dinner at Delmonico's Thursday night. Among the speakers were Mr. Edward L. Morse, son of S. F. B. Morse; Mr. Morris Gray, president of the Boston Museum; Mr. Edward Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum; Mr. A. Augustus Healy, president of the Brooklyn Museum, and J. Alden Weir, president, and Harry W. Watrous, corresponding secretary of the Academy.

Mr. Alexander Tooth, the art dealer of London, who failed in January, 1915, as told in the ART NEWS at the time, on a recent application for discharge in bankruptcy, was allowed, previous to the granting, a month to satisfy a judgment of £300 ($1,500).

GETS MACOMBER ARMOR.

Boston, May 4, 1916.—The new Cleveland (Ohio) Art Museum, to open June 6 next, will probably have as a feature of this opening the well known collection of armor, formed by Mr. Frank G. Macomber of this city and a Trustee of the Boston Museum.

The collection recently sold to the Cleveland Museum en bloc by Mr. Macomber has some 600 numbers and is considered second only in scope and value and importance to the Riggs collection, recently given to the Metropolitan Museum.

TO BUY MARSHALL'S LINCOLN.

An association of prominent men has been formed for the purpose of purchasing and presenting to the nation, the late William E. Marshall's portrait from life of Lincoln. The work, the Marshall-Lincoln Association intends to purchase, is owned by the artist's brother, Mr. Oscar Marshall, of Newark, N. J., who has agreed to sell it for $15,000 on condition that it be purchased by public subscription. Mr. G. Petit Le Brun, the secretary of the association, announces that no subscription in excess of $10 will be accepted. Among those on the Advisory Committee are Postmaster-General Burleson, Lieut.-Gen. Nelson A. Miles, J. Alden Weir, president of the National Academy, Mr. Hudson Maxim, and Maj.-Gen. Charles F. Roe.

DUVEENS BUY FURNITURE.

The purchase by Duveen brothers of the famous Chabrierès-Arles collection of French Renaissance furniture and art effects, which is stated to be valued at over $1,000,000, is announced. It is said that negotiations have been going on for four years with the heirs of the late Paris and Lyons merchant. Many of the pieces were shown at the Retrospective Exposition, held at Lyons in 1877 and at the exhibition in the Petit Palais in Paris in 1900. The collection contains about 250 objects, including a few pictures of the XV and XVI centuries, some arms, clocks and watches; bronzes and faience. It will be shortly brought over and will be exhibited for a few weeks at the Duveen establishment.

FINE TAPESTRY FOR MINNEAPOLIS.

Mrs. Charles J. Martin of Minneapolis, has presented the Art Institute of that city, with one of the finest tapestries of the Morgan collection, recently purchased by P. & W. French of this city. It was woven in 1470 and shows the story of Esther and Ahasuerus. It remains at the Metropolitan Museum until June, when it will be shipped and hung with the Charles Jarius Martin Memorial Collection.

CHAMBERS FINDS A TURNER?

The Cincinnati Times-Star is responsible for a story to the effect that the novelist Robert W. Chambers recently identified a picture in the Weston Galleries, No. 622 Lexington Ave., this city, as one of "St. Michael's Mount-Cornwall" by Turner.

Mr. Weston, who was much astonished at Mr. Chambers' discovery (?), secured the picture from the son of a New Orleans colored man named Wilson, who, before his recent death, in that city, had been in the habit of visiting New York yearly to dispose of old pictures, which he procured from old houses in the "Creole City." Among some pictures which he left here in a storage warehouse on his last visit was this canvas. This colored man's son learned by accident of the fact that his father has left pictures here and coming on tracked them, and sold this picture to Mr. Weston. It is said to have come from an old Southern family who did not know it could be attributed to Turner.

The canvas has the signature "J. M. W. T." but even with this Mr. Weston, who cleaned the canvas, was in doubt as to whom to attribute it, until Mr. Chambers called and declared it to be the work of Turner.

It may interest the younger Wilson to know that his father also left some old pictures with the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and that they can be seen at its office.

GERMAN LUSITANIA MEDAL.

A special cable to the "Sun" from Paris says: "The 'Figaro' gives with illustrations representing the obverse and reverse sides, a description of a medal which Joseph Reinach found in the numismatic catalog issued by Schulmann of Amsterdam.

"The catalog begins with medals struck by the central European Powers from 1914 to 1916, with the prices. Twelve celebrate the Austro-German Alliance, thirty Von Hindenburg, ten the Crown Prince, one Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, eleven Von Mackensen, four Von Kluck, seven Admiral von Tirpitz, and five Count von Eppelin. Then comes 'The Torpedoed Lusitania,' a satirical medal by K. Goetz.

"One side of the medal shows a crowd of passengers before a ticket window where a skeleton sells tickets. Around the medal are inscribed the words 'Business Above Everything; Distribution of Tickets at the Cunard Line.'

"The other face shows the vessel sinking into the waves with the inscription 'No Guarantees, Great Steamship Lusitania Sunk by German Submarine.' The price is seven florins. The medal is bronze.

MORGAN COLL'N AT MUSEUM.

Mr. Edward Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum, has announced that, with the exception of the miniatures, the Morgan loan collection will remain on exhibition as it is at present until May 29, when the galleries will be closed, to facilitate the delivery of such parts of the collection as are to be withdrawn and the rearrangement of the remainder.

NOT TO DO CLEVELAND MURALS.

Henry G. Kellar was to have furnished the new Cleveland City Hall with mural paintings, the contract being awarded for $25,000, by the late Baker administration, without competition. The artist has now cancelled his contract for $1,000 and Director of Service Bernstein regards the settlement as very satisfactory to the city. It is not on record what the artist thinks about it.

GOLDMAN'S PAINTINGS AT BOSTON.

The Fogg Museum at Harvard, has now on view a special exhibition of old Dutch masters loaned by Mr. Henry Goldman of this city. They are Rembrandt's "Saint

NOTABLE ART SALE.

As the ART NEWS goes to press, the news comes of the purchase by the Kleinberger Galleries of Paris and New York of the well-known and valuable collection of French and Flemish Primitives of Mrs. Chauncey J. Blair of Chicago. The collection came from the old Chateau of St. Roch in the south of France—that of the Comte de Montbrison. It includes examples of those quaint old masters among the Primitives, Cornelis de Lyon, the St. Severin master, the Maitre du Moulin, and Mabuse, together with several examples of Francois Clouet. The sale is a most important one.

CLEVELAND MUSEUM TO OPEN.

The new Art Museum of Cleveland, O., will be opened June 6 with an inaugural reception which is to be an invitation function. The inaugural exhibition will include art treasures from the leading public and private collections in the country, and is to remain open three months. Several donations will be announced.

The Society of Cleveland Artists, numbering fifty, is holding its spring exhibition at the Gage Gallery. At the Guenther Galleries Wilhelm Georg Reindel, painter and etcher, is holding the most important exhibition he has yet shown, consisting of 47 etchings and more than a score of landscapes in oil.

Among the etchings are several exhibited by invitation at San Francisco and a number more, recently shown at the Chicago Society of Etchers' last exhibit at the Chicago Art Institute. In his paintings, Mr. Reindel combines strength with great delicacy of tone.

OMAHA BUYS PICTURES.

The Friends of Art Association of Omaha, having $17,000 to spend for works for the projected art gallery, have bought Douglas Volk's "Pioneer Mother and Child" and the Dutch painter Gorter's "Autumn Scene." The two paintings which led in the voting, but were considered too expensive, were Jules Breton's "The Vintage," held at $10,000 and Le Sidanier's "Venetian." The Omaha Friends of Art already owned five paintings, three of which are in the Museum at the Public Library.

FEDERAT'N OF ARTS CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the American Federation of Arts will be held in Washington, May 17-19, and the chief subject of consideration will be "Art and the People." Among the speakers are to be Senator Newlands, Mrs. Herbert Adams, Director Edward Robinson of the Metropolitan Museum, Margaret E. Sawtelle, J. G. Butler, Jr., Henry Turner Bailey, Samuella Crosby, Mary Powell, Paul Grummann, Grosvenor Atterbury, George E. Kessler, Paul W. Bartlett, Ralph Adams Cram, J. M. Fitzgerald, William Laurel Harris, C. R. Clifford, Cass Gilbert, Herbert Adams, Alfred Noyes, Horatio Parker, William M. Chase, and Augustus Thomas. On the evening of May 18 the John W. Alexander Memorial meeting will be held in the Corcoran Gallery, where the exhibition of his works is held.

CHARGE FRAUD IN BANKRUPTCY.

Fred D. Jackson and others of the firm of Jackson and Semmelmeier, art dealers, of Chicago are charged with attempting to conceal assets in bankruptcy, by William H. Moore, Jr., of Los Angeles, who filed a bill in the United States Court Apr. 29. He says that within four months of the time the firm went bankrupt Fred D. Jackson transferred $10,000 worth of pictures to the Gift Shop, 1008 Wilson avenue, for a consideration of $7,000 and that he bought an interest in the art shop, all this in an effort to cut down his bankruptcy assets.

ARRESTED FOR PUBLISHING NUDES

The Society for the Suppression of Vice on Wed. caused the arrest of Editor Sewell Haggard, and business manager William J. Johnson of Hearst's Magazine, for publishing Adolph Brutt's nude sculpture "The Night," recently exhibited at the National Academy. They were released on $500 bail and were given time to prepare a defense.

LAURIK HEAD S. F. MUSEUM.

It is announced that J. Nilson Laurik has been appointed Director of the new San Francisco Museum of Art, which was established May 1 in the Exposition Palace of Fine Arts. Mr. Laurik has begun the work of assembling a new collection for the museum, and of procuring extensions of time for the works which form the Post-Exposition Exhibit. The new director arrived in San Francisco two years ago, after a tour of Europe as a special commissioner for the Exposition Department of Fine Arts. He is a Norwegian who studied art at the Antwerp Academy. He came to the United States in 1901, and became editor of "American Art," published in Chicago. After service as art critic of the N. Y. "Evening Post" and the "Times," he went abroad, and on his return became assistant art director at San Francisco.

FIRE ON MR. T. E. KIRBY'S ESTATE.

Fire destroyed, Monday morning, at Bedford Hills, N. Y., the carriage house, stables, garage, ice houses and employees residences on the estate of Mr. Thomas E. Kirby of the American Art Association, the damage amounting to between $15,000 and $20,000.

EXPOSITION ART AT PITTSBURGH.

A display of European art, including the principal exhibits from France, Belgium, Italy, and Germany at the Pana-Pacific Exposition opened April 27 at the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh to continue two months. The German paintings returned to Pittsburgh, having been first seen there at the international exhibition in 1913. The Swedish collection will be placed on view May 14 and the group of paintings by English artists collected by Harrington Mann will also be shown.

DIRECTOR WYER GOES OUT JULY 1.

A despatch from Muskegon, Mich., says: Raymond Wyer, director of the Hackley Art Gallery, will sever his connection with the local institution July 1, the culmination of a battle between two factions on the board of education, the victorious faction being opposed to the policies inaugurated by the present gallery director since practically the beginning of his work here.

ALLIED ARTISTS' THIRD DISPLAY.

Considering the fact that they accept themselves as well as hang, selection of place alone being made by lot, the third annual show of the Allied Artists, now on to May 25 at the Fine Arts Building, is a creditable one. With the material at hand in the 396 exhibits and placing by a committee, the general effect would naturally have been better.

The centre of honor, in the large Vanderbilt Gallery, has fallen by chance, somewhat happily, to Oscar Fehrer's decorative figure of a young woman seated on the stone steps of a woodland path. The figure is somewhat lacking in relief, but the whole is well handled in broad summary strokes and the color is of good quality. A second, and not so successful example, shows a young woman seated pensively, with chin resting on hand. Two highly successful examples of Ernest Albert are an off coast marine, "Misty Morning, Ogonquit," and a snow-covered mountain road, hung apart but as pendants, on the same wall. Very striking is a large view across a valley, called "The Hush of Fall," by G. Cimiotti, with two, not very happily introduced, female figures at the foot of a huge tree. Timely in subject is Frank Tenney Johnson's group of three "Mexican Bandits," seated smoking in the moonlight by their horses. This is effective, but much finer in quality is the same artist's group of oxen, lying at night by a prairie schooner. A large decorative Italian landscape, with several figures, in "The Garden of the Lake," does credit to R. S. Bredin. Capital is H. A. Vincent's group of fishing boats by a dock at evening. Alexander Grinager shows a good "Portrait of Arnolf."

A strong little group of male and female portraits by H. S. Hubbell includes a brilliantly handled picture of a Japanese mother and child. Alton S. Clark signs a sparkling winter sunshine effect on a New England colonial country mansion. Broadly handled and with well kept values is a portrait by H. L. Hildebrandt of a gentleman, seated out of doors, enjoying a cigar and a mint julep. Two spirited coast scenes, one with storm-tossed trees, and the other with a number of small sail off shore, are by Lester D. Boronda. H. Ledyard Towle sends an excellent portrait of two young men, "Jerry and Leigh," in cut of door costume. There is great verity of effect in Glenn Newell's midsummer picture of a mill and mill stream.

Portraits and Landscape.

Naturally posed and vigorously handled is DeWitt M. Lockman's seated figure of a well-known woman art writer. Two effective cattle subjects, one with a strong effect of sunlight are by Edward C. Volkert. Paul King sends a couple of gray green pictures in the J. Alden Weir vein, which are highly attractive, one a dock scene with catboats. "Memories," a girl by some flowers, and a bright ballet scene, are by Arthur Crisp. By Arthur J. E. Powell there is a striking winter scene with a group of horses by a water side. In a different vein is R. M. Kimball's winter road side at "Moore's Mills," which is fine in color. A well realized, sober male portrait of Mr. Cyrus Sulzberger, is by Leo Meilziner, who also has a charming figure in pastel of "Else," a young girl with hanging blonde hair. A strong autumn landscape and an airy summer view across to a stretch of water are by Frank A. Bicknell. F. Edwin Church has a Renoiresque picture of a baby in a high chair with an orange. Walter C. Hartson signs a large and vigorous view of a rocky brook.

A highly decorative scene in Stuyvesant Square is by Eliot Clark. Christine Morton sends a striking figure of a girl in fancy costume and a well lit nude. Some firs on "Sand Dunes" have furnished a good material for the vigorous brush strokes of Roy Brown, while a winter mountainside and a summer view over a lake, well represent Gustave Weigand. A pretty girl in white is attractively brushed by Arthur Spear, who also sends his effective three-figure café scene. Sunlight over a snow-covered road, with brilliant colored foliage, make up an effectively handled canvas by Alton S. Clark.

In the South Gallery.

As is somewhat unusual the outer gallery makes the better general effect. Here among the first to catch the eye is Armin C. Hansen's storm-tossed sea, with a tug "Crossing the Banks." He has also a San Francisco dock scene with fishermen. Louis F. Berneker sends his effective and graceful moonlit group of wood nymphs and a three-figure nude group in woodland sunshine called "Lilies."

A blue-eyed young woman, made very picturesque in a light blue costume and holding a fan, is by Edmund Greacen, who also has a portrait of "Nan," a little girl with her doll. Very vivid and true is the effect of Cullen Yates' "Indian Summer" mountain landscape. So is that of W. R. Leigh's striking picture of an Indian boy goatherd with his charge in "The Land of His Fathers." B. Gutmann shows good performance and much promise in two groups of peasant heads in church, and in a breakfast table group of a mother and child. A sprightly sketch of a young woman seated on a dock is by Irving R. Wiles. The distance recalls Lhermitte. R. F. Maynard has rather too suavely pictured a young girl with her violin. Just how ugly a well-painted nude with an attractive face can be made is shown by W. H. K. Yarrow, who also sends a capital portrait of a nice old lady posed on the selfsame sofa. John F. Folinsbee is represented by an effective group of four landscapes, two of which are snow scenes. By Chauncey F. Ryder there is a remarkably well painted sky over "The Desolate Hillside." W. B. Closson has pictured well an unusual subject in a peacock "Pluming Himself."

An impression of great solidity is made by the methods by which Charles Reiffel paints his landscapes, his two examples being likewise fine in color and vivid in effect of light. E. L. Ipsen's golfing girl and cat is effective if rather undecided in textures. A large landscape "In the Green Mountains," with a spacious sky, is well handled by Andrew T. Schwartz. A third Alton S. Clark shows a lady seated in a ball dress, and a fourth, an effective city view in winter. Brilliant in color is E. H. Potthast's beach scene with many figures in full sunlight. Not so fine in quality are his two smaller contributions. There is considerable sparkle in H. Giles' picture of a young woman walking through the woods. Attractive types of a mother and child are found in G. L. Nelson's quite effectively painted and very well colored composition, "Memories," a female figure effectively handled against the light and a Venetian study represent Robert H. Vonnoh. Two delicate evening scenes, a sunset over snow and a marine, are the best of the four contributions of Birge Harrison.

Sketches and Studies.

The large collection of sketches and studies in the middle gallery forms as last year an attractive feature of the display. Here are also shown sculptures by Lindsey Morris Sterling, one a relief of a youthful Pan.

Notable are examples of Benj. D. Koopman, G. L. Nelson, Arthur Crisp, one toe dancer inimitable, George Elmer Browne, Frank Tenney Johnson, G. Glenn Newell, Oscar Fehrer, R. W. Vonnoh, Abrinager, Jules Turcas, Eliot Clark, Christina Morton Clark G. Voorhees, H. S. Hoffman, G. Cimiotti, E. Albert and H. S. Hubbell.

Co-Operative Mural Workshop Show.

The Co-Operative Mural Workshop, Miss Katherine S. Dreier, president, now established as "The Ark," in commodious quarters at 311 Fourth Ave., is holding to Monday, a most interesting display of its own and other producers' art handicraft. The display is shown amid picturesque backgrounds, arranged by the Workshop's Interior Decoration Department, under Misses Katrina Kipper and Maud Sherwood.

There is a large display of quaintly artistic painted furniture made at the Workshop, from designs by Miss Dreier and Miss Margaret Owen. Much of this is peculiarly adapted for country home use and decoration. A display of Slavonic China, with antique Bohemian designs and bright in color, comes from the decorative work-rooms of the Jan Hus Neighborhood House. A rich group of ornamental and useful objects of silver and copper, do credit to the design and workmanship of Miss Marie Zimmerman.

There are also a group of Batik work hangings and draperies designed by Miss Cooper, various mural designs worked out in color by the Co-Operative Workshop artisans, and a number of artistically interesting photographic studies by Mrs. Walter L. Ehrich.

Group Display at Folsom's.

Five painters are making an interesting display at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. Edmund Greacen shows one graceful deftly brushed portrait of a young woman with a fan, and another of a little girl, and two river views, one a very artistically handled effect, "Hazy Sunlight," looking across the North River and the other a scene close to the docks, as well as a couple of pastel figure studies.

Arthur Crisp besides a sober and agreeable picture of a girl in "The Blue Jacket," shows a pretty girl standing in "The Sunny Breakfast Room," an effect of "Sunshine and Shadow," "A Decoration" and some bright pastels of ballet dancers. D. Putnam Brinley groups a lot of color masses, with some effect, until they represent a "Connecticut Farm," and George Macrum handles with largeness and simplicity among other scenes, one of the tall buildings in Park Row; a view at Douarnenez, and a little "Procession," passing along the foot of French coast mountains.

Among E. Varian Cockroft's group of works is prominent a decoration in which one lanky nude woman and a half nude companion both with purplish flesh, figure. "The Tired Model" shows reclining an unlovely copper colored nude woman, and in another work three yellow skinned Oriental women disport themselves al fresco, as to garments. The artist also shows a "Landscape" and "My Aquarium."

Wood Block Prints in Color.

The directness of statement, the simplicity of composition, and the purity in the use of color make artistically produced prints from wood blocks, peculiarly attractive. Of the latest American productions in this line, the Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., is making a display to May 31, which is comprised of 138 works by 20 artists. It is not too much to say that many are admirable and all of interest. With the prints are shown examples of the wood blocks used for the printing.

Rudolph Ruzicka shows in simple colors and dignified line several N. Y. views and one of Pittsburgh. Margaret Patterson has picturesque scenes at Cape Cod and in Belgium. Charming are the flower subjects of Edna Boies Hopkins. Florence Wyman Ivins found capital inspiration in the dancing of the Russian ballet. Attractive are the Japanese subjects of Elizabeth Colwell and very artistic the series of landscapes, some with houses of Gustave Baumann. Charles W. Bartlett sends from India a quite remarkable little series of views with cleverly introduced figures.

Others represented are Dean Babcock, Herbert M. Baer, Michael C. Carr, Arthur W. Dow, Gordon Ertz, Eliza D. Gardiner, Ada Gilmore, Mary B. Jones, Tod Lindenmuth, Ethel Mars, Mildred McMillen, Juliette S. Nichols and B. J. O. Nordfelt.

Frederick Keppel & Co. have arranged, for the People's Art Guild, an exhibition of engravings, etchings and wood-cuts by old and modern masters, which remains on view to June 2, at the University Settlement, 184 Eldridge St.

Miss Foote's Group of Portraits.

A score of portraits by Mary Foote, now on view at Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., to May 13, are several of them most interesting, but would have more effect if the collection were smaller. The artist has a vigorous technique, catches a likeness well and colors agreeably. Several of the examples are of well-known artists. There is a full-length figure of Madame Yorska, and other more or less familiar faces are those of Frederick MacMonnies, Stephen Haweis, and Mme. Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Other notably successful works are those representing Messrs. Elisha Dyer Hubbard, Umberto Coletti and John de Koven Alsop, Miss Elsie Seeger and Mrs. H. W. Foote and her son.

Landscapes by Theodore Pembroke.

Theodore K. Pembroke's exhibition of landscapes at a Gallery in the Hotel Plaza, is meeting with deserved success. Dramatic quality, combined with richness of color and good execution distinguish the works in the display. He sees Nature with a poet's eye. The display is uniform in quality, and some of the works that most strongly appeal are "The Lone Oak," "Sleepy Nature," "The Guards of the Meadow," and "Glory of an Autumn Wood."

William J. Potter, who spent some years abroad, is holding his first individual show since his return, at 140 West 46 St. The exhibition includes dock scenes and shore pictures, painted at St. Ives, England, and are faithful records of the locale. The artist, however, has infused a personal note and a trace of poetry and romance into the subjects. His color and composition are good. Always a student of nature, more particularly of marines, his last work shows a remarkable advance over any of his previous efforts.

LONDON LETTER.

London, April 24, 1916.

The recent Red Cross Sale offered some wonderful opportunities to the dealers on the days on which the less important lots were offered, for the small attendance of the outside public on these occasions, has left the field open to the trade, which has, in consequence, been able to acquire many interesting and valuable items at exceedingly advantageous prices. This has been especially noticeable in the case of jewelry, both modern and antique, much of which, so far as the minor pieces are concerned, fetched considerably less than might have been the case, had they been sold across a shop counter. It seems as if some reserve should be placed on the articles, in order to obviate the fall in prices resulting merely from unsatisfactory attendance, for there is no doubt that in a number of instances gifts went for sums totally inadequate to their value.

The opportunity has recently occurred of acquiring for the nation the 20 oils and watercolors by Rossetti, purchased from the artist by Mr. George Rae and representing much of the finest work executed by the famous Pre-Raphaelite. These pictures have been offered by the trustees of the late owner to the National Art Collections Fund, with the idea that they should not be separated, but should be acquired intact for the nation and, if possible, housed in the Tate Gallery. With this in view, special concessions are to be made in regard to price and although the collection has been valued at about £15,000, the sum of £9,695 will be accepted under present wartime conditions. Of this Mr. Arthur du Cros has already offered £3,000 and it is greatly to be hoped that the remainder will before long be forthcoming. It is rumored that a ready market might be found either in America or in France and that should the necessary funds not be raised over here, buyers in both these countries will be only too anxious to secure the pictures. These include such famous works as "The Beloved," "Monna Vanna," "Paolo and Francesca," "Venus Verticordia" and several others painted during the period when Rossetti's genius was at its richest and most decorative point.

Royal Society's Watercolor Display.

Once more the Royal Society of Painters in Watercolors is holding an exhibition but this time echoing a little more definitely than on former occasions the warlike tones of latterday existence. A thing that should be of especial interest, but which somehow fails to prove so, is Claude Shepperson's "Homecoming," a design intended for the Edinburgh exhibition in aid of the soldiers and sailors blinded in the war. Here indeed is a theme, rich in all kinds of emotional possibilities, one indeed whose scope it would be a difficult task to exhaust, but the artist, gifted as he undoubtedly is, has unfortunately perceived but a fraction of all that it might include. Another watercolor by the same artist, depicting aeroplanes in flight is more successful, the gliding motion of the aircraft being surely and strongly felt. But for sheer mastery and facility there is, of course, nothing to approach Mr. Sargent's "Guidicca," a brilliant representation of astonishing actuality. When one has said this, however, nothing remains, for the picture makes practically no appeal whatever to the emotions and leaves behind it no feeling beyond that of astonishment at its extraordinarily clever technique.

The establishment of official guides to our museums, inaugurated shortly before the war, has been abandoned as part of the national economy crusade, but it is encouraging to note that owing to offers of voluntary help the work will still be carried on, members of the Art Teachers' Guild having generously come to the rescue.

Forain's War Cartoons and Etchings.

A particularly interesting exhibition, now being held at the house of Mr. Campbell

Dodgson, Keeper of the Prints at the British Museum, is that of war cartoons and etchings by Jean Forain, whose lithographs, though exhibiting a somewhat different outlook from that of his famous Dutch contemporary, Raemaekers, are no less poignant in expression and trenchant in satire. Forain's art is perhaps more subtle than the Dutchman's, compelling the spectator to look less upon the actual horrors of warfare and touching his sensibilities by means which call for greater powers of imagination. As a draughtsman, the Frenchman is at the summit of his art, achieving unerring effects with the simplest arrangements of line, and with striking economy of means producing a composition which is expressive in the highest degree. These cartoons represent Forain to the Londoner in a different light from that in which we have been accustomed to know him, for hitherto we have been most familiar with his intimate scenes of Paris boulevard life, depicted in a much lighter vein of satire. The greater theme has discovered in Forain a greater artist.

A most generous and acceptable gift has been made to the city of Bath by the collector, Captain Huth, who has presented a portrait of Henry VIII by Mabuse, another of the same monarch by Holbein and a portrait of James I by Paul van Somer. This is indeed a regal gift and one which our own National Portrait Gallery would by no means have disdained.

The failure, owing to the war, of negotiations in Italy and Russia for the purchase of "Old Masters" was the reason given by the art-dealer and advertising agent, Mr. de Conlay, for his recent bankruptcy, in which

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, April 24, 1916.

"Marcel Lenoir is a painter of today who is coming into his own." He has long been known as an "artists' artist," that is to say, one whom his confrères, but not the public, have known how to appreciate. For years Rodin has had in his personal holy of holies, the private den to which only a few of his friends are admitted, whole walls, covered with drawings and paintings by Lenoir. Denys Cochin, cabinet minister and man of universal culture, one of the keenest connoisseurs in France, and reputed to be extremely wealthy, has steadily bought Lenoir's work, while unthinking gazers at pictures have passed it by, unknowing. Lenoir is now but little past 50, but his fine, poetic face, deeply marked, framed in unruly, greyish brown hair, has the look of three score and ten. It is probable that a malady of the chest will end his days. He has helped to deepen its clutch upon him by his absolute absorption in art.

Lately an exhibition of a half-hundred or so of pictures by Lenoir has drawn half of cultured and art-loving Paris to a small gallery in the Rue La Boétie, and almost everything that he showed there was sold at once. This is another evidence of the fact, much noticed of late, that the French public, despite the stress of war, is buying liberally of contemporary productions in painting and sculpture. The dominant feeling of the rich Frenchman seems to be that, while he should set the example of legitimate economy in the necessities of life, he is rendering the nation a real service in contributing all that he can to sustain its esthetic pre-eminence.

Sales - Engravings.

Further lots of interesting engravings have been sold at the Hotel Drouot of late. The prices appear to me to be far below the average of what prints by the same artists, and in equal condition, usually fetch in America. Three fine examples of Boilly were sold for $44, $43 and $40 respectively, a good impression of the great work of Debucourt, "Les Courses du Matin," for $48, and two prints by Pollard for $224. On another day "Le Gouter Champêtre" and "Le Départ d'une Foire," by Jubier, after Huet's paintings, fetched $275; an engraving after Goya, "Le Supplicie par le Garrote," a subject full of revolting horror, first impression, $244; and a superb portrait of Turenne, after de Champagne, by Vanteuil, $241.

The stock of Heilbronner, a bric-à-brac dealer of the Quai Voltaire, whom the war forced into bankruptcy, produced no important prices, though many of the objects sold were of peculiar value. A silver Louis XVI soup tureen brought $432. At another sale $1,720 was paid for a Louis XV Aubusson tapestry, representing a pastoral scene, and $640 for another, adorned with a landscape and figures. Eric Tayne.

ST. LOUIS.

The City Art Museum will display two exhibitions during the current month, one of a group of paintings of the older schools, lent by the Ehrich Galleries of N. Y., including examples of John Crome, Goya, Lawrence, Largilliere and Tintoretto, the other of the collection of paintings, miniatures and sculpture by the members of the Guild of Boston Artists which is making a circuit of the country.

The Vonnoh collection and Miss Maury's exhibition of pastels have both proven popular and sales have been made from both shows.

Two accessions have been made to the permanent collection of the museum, a uoloaga and a Dougherty. The Zuloaga is "The Philosopher," and the Dougherty his "After the Gale."

The displays now on at the Noonan-Kocian Galleries include a group of artistic photographs by Miss Williamina Parrish, a collection of twelve portraits in oil of prominent St. Louisans by Mr. S. D. Rogers and a group of small sculpture by Caroline Risque, a local sculptress of more than usual promise.

The paintings and sculpture entered in the competitive exhibition at the Artists' Guild are still on view. This "St. Louis Salon" is stimulating a great deal of healthy interest in local art and artists. J. B. M.

his liabilities were calculated at over £6,000 and his assets as under £1. Had these negotiations been duly carried through, Mr. de Conlay stood to make a profit of about £12,000, and had apparently regulated his expenditure accordingly.

The Statue of Queen Victoria, executed for British Columbia by Albert Bruce-Joy has been given a temporary place till the conclusion of the war, in the courtyard of the Royal Exchange. The figure gives a most dignified and gracious presentation of the Queen in the early days of her accession, arrayed in all the accessories of state robes and regalia. It is a handsome and impressive piece of work. L. G. S.

KANSAS CITY (MO.).

Mrs. W. B. Thayer has announced the gift of her large collection of textiles, potteries, fashion plates, to the Fine Arts Institute here. The collection is valued at $75,000 and contains many rare Oriental porcelains, Egyptian, Chinese, Japanese, Persian, Indian and many French and Italian rarities from mediaeval courts. The collection includes a group of marionettes, costumed to represent different European periods and peoples. Curious basketry from Central America, the Philippines, and the American Indians are also in the collection. When the Atkins Museum building is built, it will house the collection.

Mrs. Thayer also plans to give her paintings as a loan collection during her lifetime, finally to go to the Institute or the Atkins Museum. The collection includes three Winslow Homers—two watercolors, one of the Gulf stream group—and examples of Inness, Sorolla, Richard Miller, Henri, Mesdag, Carlsen, Anna Boberg and Dougherty.

Arthur Crisp has received a commission to paint a series of decorations for the new Robert Treat Hotel in Newark, N. J., to be in place by May 10.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger, Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

ARTISTS' SALE PERCENTAGE.

The movement to effect legislation, inaugurated by the Authors League, providing for a life interest for artists in their work is growing. The N. Y. Sun Sunday last published a symposium with artists and others on the subject, which made good reading.

Among those who wrote and talked on the subject were J. Alden Weir, Cecilia Beaux, Alexander Harrison, Mrs. W. Astor Chanler, Henri Caroderville, Jules Pascin, Arthur B. Davies, Paul Bartlett, Janet Scudder, Jo Davidson, A. Coomaraswamy and John Quinn, lawyer and Commissary General of the so-called "Armory" group of "Modernist" painters.

The proposed law will give, if enacted, 2% on the increased valuation of his work to an artist, during his lifetime, or to his heirs, after his death, and the recent sale of Blakelock's "Moonlight" for $20,000, and the following "boom" in his works has started the agitation. The same law was to have been enacted in France, just as the war broke out, and this enactment is probably only postponed there until the end of the conflict.

Of those who took part in the Sun's symposium Messrs. Weir and Bartlett are sceptical as to its feasibility, Miss Beaux is optimistic, Mr. Davies likewise, as are also Mrs. Chanler, M. Caroderville, Janet Scudder and Jo Davidson. Mr. Coomaraswamy is mildly in favor of the proposed law and Alexander Harrison, while doubtful as to its practicability, considers agitation of the subject a good thing.

It remained for the lawyer Mr. John Quinn to state frankly that the proposed legislation, in that it would make the artist dependent upon auction sale results, is distasteful, and to suggest the practical alternative of taxing all art sales and auctions and to thus create a fund, out of which pensions could be granted by the State to all deserving artists. He does not believe it would be possible to obtain the enactment of a law setting aside 2% to artists from the amount secured by dealers or at auctions from appreciation in the value of their work.

We are inclined to agree with Mr. Quinn in his well considered argument as to the probable difficulty of enacting the proposed law but wonder, at the same time, how his suggestion will strike our worthy art auctioneers and collectors? Will Messrs. Kirby, Anderson, Silo, Hartman, Clarke and others, and those owners selling through them, view favorably the deduction of 2% from the amount brought by artists' works at their sales?

CORRESPONDENCE

A Chicago Protest.

Chicago, Apr. 28, 1916.

Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Your issue of Apr. 15 last, mentions the fact that "two Japanese pictures owned by Jerome S. Blum" were recently ordered burned by the U. S. Collector at Chicago because of alleged obscenity.

Permit me to go into this matter in some detail, as it involves the right of a minor official to decree the destruction of masterpieces.

Mr. Blum, who is, as you know, a Chicago painter of repute, bought a few antiques, chiefly paintings and works of sculpture, during a recent visit to China and Japan, and sent them home in four packing cases. In one of these cases an assistant deputy inspector, one John R. Ford, found the two works in question, which were a Japanese scroll, or malsimono, twelve feet long, with eight figures, and a book of eight Chinese paintings. Mr. Ford pronounced these works obscene, and threatened to destroy the entire case, with all its other treasures, unless Mr. Blum would sign a paper permitting him to burn the pictures.

Mr. Blum offered to paint out any objectionable details, but was refused. He then called in Dr. Laufer, of the Field Museum, one of the world's leading experts in this specialty. Dr. Laufer pronounced the works masterpieces of their period (both seventeenth century), among the finest he had ever seen, whereupon Mr. Blum offered to present them to the Field Museum, for preservation in its most secret and discreet archives, if the collector would release them. This also was refused.

The collector of the port, Mr. Rivers McNeil, sent the pictures to his superiors in Washington, and was instructed to proceed "according to law," which, being interpreted, meant, in this case, according to his discretion of the official interpreter of the law. In the end, the efforts of the owner, the "experts" and others were unavailing; Mr. Blum was compelled to consent to the destruction of the paintings, in order to save the other contents of the case which contained them.

I submit that a law which puts the power of life and death over masterpieces of art into the hands of a petty government official—one who hardly knew that there were nude statues at the Art Institute—is a law which the artists of this country should protest against with a loud voice.

I did not see Mr. Blum's pictures, but I am informed by competent witnesses that they were both serious exotic poems in art, no more obscene than Montaigne, Rabelais, and countless other long accepted works of great literature, or than many drawings by great masters, including a portfolio of Rembrandts in the Louvre.

That a couple of myopic inspectors should have the power to veto the Field Museum's acceptance of works of great art, because the artists of old China and Japan did not measure up to their primes and prisms ideals, is a situation so absurd as to be incredible.

It is to laugh!—but meantime masterpieces have been destroyed.

Yours truly,

Harriet Monroe.

Chicago, May 1, 1916.

[While we agree in general with Miss Monroe's argument, and on her presentation of the case, sympathize with Mr. Blum and the Field Museum, the calm acceptance, by Chicago, without protest, of Sergeant Kendall's abominable and repellent picture, "The Sphinx," rather weakens our confidence in that city's judgment as to what is decent or indecent—we won't say "obscene"—in painting or literature.—Ed.]

The Old Lady in a Black Cap.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,
In this serious life which we are forced to live I suppose we must allow ourselves our little joke.

But the statement in the catalog of pictures which belonged to my old and dear friend, Mr. Lambert, to the effect that Lot 327 was sold to him by my firm "as a Franz Hals," is a lapsus calami. The original invoice ran as follows:

"August 15, 1899.

"Portrait of an Old Lady with Black Cap and Frill, signed with monogram, FI. 36½ by 29 inches."

I am glad it brought $1,800, which shows a very handsome profit upon the sum paid for it.

Yours faithfully,

Charles Dowdeswell.

April 25, 1916.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

Chelsea Art Gallery.

A neighborhood art gallery was opened Tuesday night, under the supervision of the Chelsea Neighborhood Association, at 296 Ninth Ave., facing Chelsea Square. The purpose of the gallery, which was inaugurated formally, is to illustrate the relation of the arts to industry and commerce. The May display is composed of scenes of N. Y. designed for use on post cards. In June and July, posters will be shown; in August and September color prints; in October, sculpture; in November, public school work; in December, a display of the work of neighborhood painters and in January, arts and crafts. Mr. Thomas Benton is in charge of the gallery which is open afternoons and evenings of weekdays and on Sunday afternoon.

Coulter's "Burning the Blue Light"

Under a moonlit sky, on a sea but lately calmed from the toss of tempest, a sailing ship lies dismasted in W. A. Coulter's powerful canvas, exhibited during the week at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., and called "Burning the Blue Light." The calmness of the scene is in strong contrast to the helplessness of the large craft. The water flooded with light is well rendered and particularly happy is the effect of moonlight breaking through the still heavy storm clouds drawing off.

Lithographs at Keppel's.

There is now on view to May 20 at Frederick Keppel & Co.'s 4 E. 39 St., a most interesting collection of foreign and American lithographs, 111 in all. Mr. Carl Ziggrosser signs a short and informing introduction to the catalog. The list of artists represented includes Delacroix, Menzel, Daumier, Gavarni, Raffet, Millet, Diaz, Calame, Hervier, Isabey, Prout, Corot, Whistler, Fantin-Latour, Legros, Toulouse-Lautrec, Forain, Le Sidanier, Ludwig von Hoffman, O. Fischer, C. Larsson, E. van Muyden, M. A. J. Bauer, Storm van's Gravesande, G. Spencer Fryse, H. Becker Shannon, Bolton Brown, G. H. Story, Sterner, Pennell and George Bellows.

Little Gallery Show.

An exhibition has just opened at the Little Gallery, 15 E. 40 St., of designs and work from Mr. C. R. Ashbee's "Guild of Handicrafts," at Campden, Gloucestershire, England. All the work shown is by men now fighting at the front. The pieces to be shown are mostly metal work, enamels, jewelry and silverware in the shape of table service, tankards, ecclesiastical objects and trophies. Many of the designs are by Mr. Ashbee, who is now lecturing in this country.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Bendann.

Mrs. Pauline Bendann of Baltimore, widow of David Bendann, the well known dealer, died Apr. 16 at her home in that city, after a short illness. Grief over the death of her husband a year ago is thought to be largely responsible for her death.

Frederick N. Reed.

Frederick Newland Reed, architect, died Sunday at his home in Montclair, N. J. He retired several years ago on account of ill health. Born in Boston, he studied at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and graduated in the class of 1891. After opening offices in N. Y. he became a member of the Architectural League. He is survived by a mother and brother.

William H. Smith.

William H. Smith, a retired architect, died suddenly in New York, on Apr. 14, at the age of 70.

MINNEAPOLIS BUYS SCREENS.

The Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts has purchased for $20,000, from the Kelekian Galleries, 709 Fifth Ave., two large screens by Yeitoku, representing "Spring" and "Autumn."

August Franzen gave a luncheon in honor of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree on Sunday last in his Gainsborough studio. The guests were Sir Herbert Tree and Miss Tree, Miss Elsie Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. L. K. Anspacher, Miss Martha Hedman, Mr. Melville Stone, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Wood, and Mrs. Dudley Allen.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Cotton gave a reception at their studio, 1 West 64th St. last week. A large gathering of friends enjoyed seeing several recent portraits, among them a striking presentment of George Barr McCutcheon, the noted author. Among the visitors were Helen Watson Phelps, Louis Valliant, DeWitt Lockman, Hugo and Mrs. Ballin and John Fox, director of the Brooklyn Art Institute.

CHICAGO.

At the exhibition now on at the Art Institute, Violet Oakley's studies for the Harrisburg State house, her frieze "Divine Comedy" cartoon and several of her brilliant color-drawings are praised by visitors.

Claude Bragdon's drawings and Edward S. Campbell's fine loan collection of sketches of French gardens, are features of the display as are other works by Otis and Clark, Frederick Perkin, Henry J. Schlack, J. M. White, Tallmadge and Watson, Joe. McCarthy, A. S. Alschuler, Howard L. Cheney, Elmer Gray, Brydges and Somers, Cecil Baker, Purcell and Elmslie, Holms and Fliin, Wilhelm Bernard, Lawrence Buck, Chatten and Hammond, Frank Chase, Percy T. Johnstone, Garden and Martin, J. B. Dibelka, Holabird and Roche, Marx and Vigeant, and Childs and Smith.

Jessie Arms Botke's sketches for tapestry are an attraction. The Art Institute school provides frieze decorations, by Elizabeth F. Gibson, for Lake View High School. Roy C. Bodett and John Alstrom of the evening school are represented in architectural drawings.

Special mention should be accorded the drawings for Chicago's prospective Grace church, by Bertram G. Goodhue of N. Y., one of the most effective in the display.

The Academy of Rome sends work by a young Chicagoan there under scholarship, Eugene F. Savage, a mural decoration, "Idealism." In "The Tomb of a Famous Painter," Savage as painter, W. L. Ward as architect, and B. Neel as sculptor, have produced a collaborative problem.

The annual exhibition of paintings and sculptures by Swedish-American artists is now installed at the Swedish club house—and an interesting show it is. Charles Hallberg shows marines, and Arvid Nyholm and Alfred Janssen are at their best in several oils.

Elkhart Park and its field-house is holding its first annual Spring show of paintings. The Municipal League contributes many attractive canvases, and the Municipal Commission loans several pictures purchased for public education in art.

Walter Ufer, Carl Krafft and Edgar Payne have arranged exhibitions now on tour in the middle West. These shows were installed in Peoria and St. Louis, are headed north and will soon be installed in St. Paul, Minneapolis, and other Minnesota cities.

Several local artists are painting the picturesque scenery of Brown County, Indiana, Nashville being the center of rugged landscape. Lucie Hartrath is there painting Spring foliage, grasses, and early posies.

William Penhallow Henderson and Mrs. Henderson have leased their house, "Pennasanta Wood," Lake Bluff, to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Waterman of Phila. They have closed their studio in the Tree building and will soon journey to Santa Fe, New Mexico, where they will remain in this southwest town for several months.

The Art Students' League has installed its annual exhibition in the Art Institute. H. Effa Webster.

BUFFALO.

No less than four important exhibitions are on in the Albright Gallery; the Childs Hassam collection of oils, watercolors and etchings; Antonio Barone's pictures; the annual exhibition of the Buffalo Society of Artists, consisting of pictures and sculptures; and, finally, a remarkable collection of baskets and hats from the Philippines.

PHILADELPHIA.

The celebration of the Shakespeare Tercentenary was the occasion of the opening of a Loan Exhibition of Shakespeareana, Apr. 29, at the Pa. Academy, comprising a remarkable collection of rare quartos, folios and other books, prints and play-bills associated with the life and works of the Bard.

Among the first editions interesting to bibliophiles was a quarto owned by Mr. C. C. Harrison "The Excellent History of the Merchant of Venice," printed by J. Roberts, 1600, a set of four folios, loaned by Mr. George H. Earle, printed in 1623, 1632, 1663, 1685 and the first collected edition of Shakespeare's sonnets and poems, dated 1640, octavo, and containing Marshall's copy of the Droeshout portrait of the author, also lent by Mr. Earle. A rare quarto, "Henry the Fifth," dated 1608, the third edition and another, undated, but believed to be an edition of 1611, bearing a forged signature of Shakespeare's name by William Henry Ireland, were lent by Mr. Horace Howard Furness, Jr., who also contributed a model of the Globe Theatre, Shakespeare's playhouse in London.

A number of rare books known to have had bearing upon the poet's work, others interesting as being contemporaneous, are on view, notably a rare copy of Roger Ascham's "Toxophilus," published in 1545, formerly the property of Edward VI and containing his signature in two places and a copy of "Coryat's Crudities," published in 1611, owned by James I and bearing his arms stamped upon the covers.

The exhibition was organized by a committee of which Mr. John Ashurst was chairman and Dr. A. S. Rosenbach secretary. The 10th annual exhibition of the Ceramic League was held at the Plastic Club, Apr. 28 and 30. The Mitcheson Memorial Prize was awarded to Mrs. J. P. Ingram for the best "fish set," with special mention to Mrs. A. S. Biddle.

The University Museum has been presented by Miss Lydia T. Morris with a valuable collection of Roman glass, coins and Alaskan specimens assembled by her brother, the late John T. Morris. Most of the glass objects are articles to contain toilet preparations used by women of that day, and date from about 200 B. C. to 500 A. D. They were found in tombs in Northern Africa, Pompei, Egypt and Syria.

In reply to certain adverse criticisms contained in letter to the "Public Ledger" dated April 20, signed by Huger Elliot as supervisor of educational work, Boston Museum, Mr. John Frederick Lewis comes to the defense of local art institutions in a letter published in the "Ledger" of May 1. The attack is not directed toward the Pa. Academy, of which Mr. Lewis is the head, yet, with a wounded sense of civic pride, he comes forward to refute statements too sweeping in their character to be quite just.

The Loan Exhibition of Mr. John Howard McFadden's collection of the British School of Painting of the XVIII century at the Penn. Academy is most effectively hung in the North West Gallery and includes 36 examples, Raeburn heading the list with seven, including the fine portraits of "Lady Elibank" and "Master Thomas Bisland." The Romneys number six, including portraits of "Mrs. Crouch," "Mrs. Ackell," "Miss Finch," a sketchy head of "Lady Hamilton," and a wonderfully real "John Wesley." The position of honor is held by Gainsborough's "Lady Rodney," the epitome of aristocratic elegance.

English landscape art of this period can be studied here in the works of Constable, whose "Stour Lock" seems a thoroughly typical canvas, in the "Blacksmith Shop" by Crome, the "Manchester Coach" by Morland, "Going to the Hayfield" by David Cox, "Tivoli" by Wilson and "Burning of the Houses of Parliament" by J. M. W. Turner. Eugene Castello.

An exhibition of 26 American landscapes by Milton Mayer is now on to May 8 at the New Rochelle Public Library.

BOSTON.

A discriminating taste and judgment in matters artistic, the determination to set only the best and choicest examples of art before its patrons, has always been noticeable in the management of the Vose Galleries, where two current exhibitions of exceptional worth may now be seen, a collection of a dozen oils by American and European artists, in one gallery, and a "two-man" show, by H. D. Murphy and Ettore Caser, in the other.

In the works of Messrs. Murphy and Caser there is a surprisingly unmodern feeling for beauty, and each of these artists has a decorative sense which he uses to considerable advantage.

Albert Sterner is showing pastel portraits and drawings at a local gallery, which leave to doubt in anyone's mind as to his ability to draw well. It is no reflection on Mr. Sterner's ability as an artist to say that he has a special knack at portraying pedigree, and one knows what this means in Boston! No wonder that pedigree likes to sit to him for its likeness!

The Art Museum has again been favored with a valuable gift, namely Thomas Sully's famous "Boy with the Torn Hat," which has just been donated by Miss Belle Greene and Mr. Henry Copley Greene, in memory of their mother, Mrs. J. S. Copley Greene. The picture, by the way, has so long been a loan to the Museum, that no doubt many of the public believed it the Institution's own property.

Two drawings by William M. Hunt, made as preliminary studies for his mural painting of "The Discoverer" in the Albany, N. Y., State Capitol, are exhibited in a local gallery.

This gallery contains also a group of landscapes in watercolors by W. H. Smith, with watercolors by Margaret Patterson, H. H. Clark and Caroline H. Rimmer, and pastels by Mabel J. Wilkers.

There is unusual distinction in the loan exhibition of one hundred of the best drawings by the Old Masters, from Mr. John Pierpont Morgan's collection, at the Fogg Museum.

Pictures by F. C. Frieseke and sculptures by F. W. Allen are on exhibition at the St. Botolph Club.

Etchings of London by W. Walcot, of Rome in color, by Dante Ricci, and others by Malcolm Osborne are on view in a local gallery.

John Doe.

NOTES FROM OTHER CITIES.

The annual exhib'n of the Portland (Me.) Soc'y of Arts is on at that city.

Some 46 miniatures cut from chorals and missals, purchased at the Hoe Library sale, have been presented to the Fogg Museum, of Harvard University.

The art gallery of Newcomb College, New Orleans, has acquired a landscape and several pastels by Theodore Robinson and a landscape by F. Usher de Voll.

An excellent statuette of Mayor Davis of Cleveland has been done by Max Kalisch, of that city, who has commissions to execute heroic figures for the National Capitol at Washington.

At the Perkins Gallery, Colorado Springs, there is now on an interesting display of 100 pictures by local artists.

Birge Harrison's picture, "St. Michael's, Charleston," has been purchased for $1,000 by Mr. J. G. Butler, Jr., pres't of the Mahoning Institute, Youngstown, Ohio.

Carl Olaf Erickson, of Minneapolis, has given one of his landscapes to a local hospital.

William R. Leigh's Western pictures are on view at the Beard Galleries, Minneapolis.

Miss Margaret T. Jackson, ass't director of the Minneapolis Institute, has resigned and will come East to pursue her art studies.

Some 65 pictures by leading contemporary Spanish artists have just been placed on exhib'n at the San Diego (Cal.) Exposition.

The Am'n Watercolor Soc'y rotary exhib'n is on at the Memorial Art Gallery, Rochester.

The Women's Club of Des Moines (Iowa) is to erect an art gallery with an auditorium seating 750.

A coll'n of paintings and etchings by Alfred Philippe Roll was on display to May 1 at the Telfair Academy, Savannah, Ga.

EARLY CHINESE RARITIES.

In the artistic Galleries of Lai-Yuan & Co., 557 Fifth Ave., there is now an exhibition of early Chinese porcelains, potteries, jades, bronzes, and stone statues of unusual rarity and interest. These are exceptionally well displayed—the porcelains, potteries, and smaller bronzes in cabinets whose fronts are old lacquered screens, in themselves worthy of close study.

The assemblage of bronzes, large and small, is most varied and valuable—perhaps the finest of its kind yet seen in New York. In the same gallery with the bronzes is a female head of black stone, wonderful in expression and truthfulness of modelling and a unique flower shaped Sung vase, with a gold and silver patina of rare beauty. The early porcelains include two richly decorated T'ang bowls, and some Yuan and Sung pieces, notably an exquisite Claire de Lune vase. There are also in the gallery some hard paste T'ang pottery, several cut white Sung vases, and some rare jades, including a tall, carved, narrow placque, the symbol of power, a Chou jade knife with old bronze handle and a curious terra cotta bird with a human head.

AN APOSTLE OF BUDDHA At the Lai-Yuan Galleries.

In another gallery there are shown a number of fine stone statues and a carved stone Shrine—with Buddha seated on a throne with the figures of four attendants on the sides and four or five angels above on the obverse, and on the reverse the figure of a seated Buddha and the forms of trees above. This is dated 559 A. D. and a long description, stating the piece was offered by Liou So Tang the 6th day, 6th month, second year of Yung Ting, or 559 A. D.

But the clou of the exhibition is a large, striking and impressive figure in pottery of a Lohan or Apostle of Buddha—one of five similar figures, of which one is in Toronto, another in Philadelphia, still another in Boston and the fourth, purchased by the Metropolitan Museum just before the war is in Berlin, waiting the war's end, to be shipped here.

This Lohan is the last one, considered to be complete, of the set that was discovered in the cave near Icheou in Chihli Province, and has come from China during the last few years. This is the very same figure that was known to be hidden in some city in Chuhli Province.

The expression of this Lohan is remarkable; and the costume and way in which the hands are placed adds greatly to its beauty. The height of the figure with stand is 49 inches; its width 25 inches; and the stand is 27 inches high.

Boston's Portrait of Prof. Hooper.

The Brooklyn Museum has on exhibition a fine portrait of Prof. Franklin W. Hooper, for 25 years Director of the Brooklyn Institute and who died August 1, 1914. The picture has been purchased by the Trustees from the artist, Joseph H. Boston, who must be congratulated on having painted a lifelike and sympathetic portrait, and at the same time, a splendid picture, considered as a work of art.

The artist's own affection for Prof. Hooper, and intimate acquaintance with him, led him to produce this work and submit it to the Trustees, with the result that it met their immediate approbation.

ELMIRA (N. Y.).

An exhibition of etchings by contemporary etchers has been on the last fortnight in the Arnot Art Gallery. During May, there will be held the third annual exhibition of watercolors. This exhibition comes to Elmira from Rochester where it has been shown at the Memorial Gallery.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York) "When I came to New York, American art was at its lowest ebb. The old Hudson River School, or the American Dusseldorf, which had been popular and fairly successful, had become thoroughly discredited, with the result that the two leading picture houses, Goupil and Schaus, had entirely given up the handling of American art."

Mrs. Ben. Thaw and Others' Sale.

Of great interest is the collection of paintings owned by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw and others, now on view at the American Art Galleries and to be sold at the Plaza Hotel on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and at the galleries on Thursday evening.
Besides a fine array of American paintings, including several Twachtmans, there is a notable gathering of English and Continental old masters, a number modestly put down as attributed. Among those represented are Beechey—"The Stanley Children," Rubens' "The Arrival of Bacchus," Del Mazzo, "Portrait of a Spanish Lady," Coello "Dona Katarina de Braganza," Kneller "Lady Catherine Wyndham," Mignard "Portrait of a Lady," Allston, Blakelock, Bonington, Chase, Constable,
Copley, Gainsborough, Fortuny, Greuze,

PIGOT LOSES PICTURE SUIT.

The suit brought by Mr. John Pigot, the Brooklyn dealer, against Mrs. McNulty, a wealthy art lover of Scranton, Pa., to recover some $3,750, less $1,000 paid on account, for seven watercolors, four by the American, John Wesley Little, and three by Adrien Moreau, the Frenchman, and Folchi, the Italian, and which was tried in Brooklyn last November, only to result in a disagreement of the jury, was retried in Brooklyn again this week, and this time resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Pigot will appeal.

The suit was really one on a contract, but again, this week, as at the former trial of the case, a lot of evidence as to values was permitted to be introduced.

The result was presumably a surprise to both sides.

The judge's charge to the jury was favorable all through to the plaintiff, Mr. Pigot. He told the jury that no misrepresentation or fraud was proven, and in fact it was disproven, so that the jury should not take into consideration what Mr. Pigot paid or what he received for the pictures. He also told the jury that if it was for him to decide he would give a verdict for the plaintiff, Mr. Pigot, but that he had to leave it to the jury. He said there was no question to his mind that the transaction had been any other than a strict business transaction.

Mr. Pigot proved that the artists, Adrien Moreau, Salvador Folchi and J. Wesley Little, were artists whose reputation was both national and international.

BLAKELOCK CORP. CHARTERED.

Justice Delahanty, of the Supreme Court, signed last week papers incorporating the Blakelock Fund. Among the incorporators are President Weir of the Nat'l Academy; Robert W. de Forest, of the Metropolitan Museum, and A. Augustus Healy, of the Brooklyn Institute. The first meeting of the incorporators was held Tuesday at the offices of Edwards and Murphy, 26 Liberty St.

The following officers were elected: President, John G. Agar, president of the Nat'l Arts Club; Vice-President, Harrison S. Morris of Phila.; Secretary, Mrs. Van Rennselaer Adams, and Treasurer, Dr. George F. Kunz, president of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society. Mr. Emerson McMillin and William Ordway Partridge were added to the list of incorporators, which includes Col. Charles Elliot Warren and Messrs. Rodman Wanamaker, Frank L. Humphries, Cass Gilbert, D. C. French, Herbert Adams, Carroll Beckwith and E. H. Blashfield. A gift to the Blakelock Fund, by Mr. McMillin, of $1,000, was announced.

TO BE TRIED IN SPECIAL SESSIONS.

At the Jefferson Market Court Apr. 5, it was decided that the trial of Sewall Haggard, editor, William H. Johnson, business manager, and Kirke B. Johnson, advertising manager of "Hearst's Magazine," charged by the Society of the Prevention of Vice, with a misdemeanor, on account of matter published in the May number, should be tried in Special Sessions. Counsel for the defense argued that books and photographs he had bought and a novel, were more dangerous than the matter complained of which consisted of a photograph of a sculpture group, a drawing by Henry Hutt, parts of a story by David Graham Phillips and a sketch in a cigarette advertisement.

A LAWRENCE FOR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. E. W. Shields of this city has presented to the Fine Arts Institute a portrait of John Philip Kemble, the actor, in Sheridan's "Pizarro," by Sir Thomas Lawrence. The portrait is heroic in size and is in its original frame. It was done in 1799 when Kemble was appearing at the Drury Lane Theatre with his sister, Mrs. Siddons. The painting was hung at the Royal Academy in 1900 and was for a time a part of the Peel collection at Drayton Manor. Mr. Shields bought it in New York at the first Blakeslee sale last year.

LINCOLN STATUE FOR TOPEKA.

The school children of Topeka, Kan., and a few business men, have collected $3,000 to purchase for that city Robert Merrill Gage's statue of Lincoln. It is of bronze, heroic in size and will be placed on a granite base in the State House grounds. The sculptor who studied in N. Y. is a native of Topeka.

EVANS POMPEIAN STUDIO.

Rudolph Evans, a sculptor, lately returned from abroad, who recently purchased the house, 71 Washington Place, has commissioned his architect, Robert Cowie, to erect on the ground floor, a Pompeian studio with an exhibition gallery, 100 feet deep, a pool of water and a niche for sculpture. The five-story studio building will also have a roof garden. On the ground floor the space between the exhibition gallery and the pool will be used as a studio.

BUYS ANOTHER TAPESTRY.

Mr. Joseph E. Widener, of Phila., who recently bought the great Mazarin tapestry has now secured another of the Morgan examples from P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St. This is Bernard Van Orley's "The Crucifixion" and the price is said to have been about $200,000. The Dollfus "Crucifixion," as it is often called, was woven about 1525 and was once part of the collection of the Duke of Berwick and Alba.

TRASK FOR BUSINESS.

It is reported that Mr. John E. D. Trask, Fine Arts Director of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and who was thought to be slated as Director of the projected new San Francisco Art Museum, a post, as told elsewhere, just given Mr. J. Nelson Laurvik, is going into business and will abandon the Field of Art Directorship.

EXPOSITION ART MEDALS.

The few artists represented at the recent Panama-Pacific Exposition who did not receive medals, have the laugh on their fellows now, as there is universal complaint, not to say indignation, at the weak and inartistic character of the medals recently received. These bear on one side the figures of two men, and on the other, representations of the California and other building at the Exposition. An artist recipient says, "they are without grace, form or void."

MEMPHIS' NEW ART GALLERY.

The Brooks Memorial Art Gallery in Overton Park, in Memphis, has been completed and will be turned over to the Park Commission in June. It is a gift of Mrs. Bessie Vanci Brooks in memory of her husband, the late Samuel H. Brooks. The building, designed by James Gamble Rogers of N. Y., measures about 90 by 100 feet, is of white Georgia marble, and cost over $100,000. Miss Florence McIntyre was designated sometime ago by the Park Commission as custodian of the building. She is one of the organizers of the Memphis Art Association, which will arrange a suitable exhibition for the opening of the Brooks Memorial.

TO FINISH WORK OF SIMMONS.

The Lewiston Journal states that the late sculptor, Franklin Simmons left a colossal, ideal composition of great promise, unfinished. One-half of the faces of the figures were modeled, and, at the request of the executors, a famous sculptor has addressed himself to completing the composition, which yet remains in clay, and may be reproduced in marble if the custodians of the collection think advisable. The sculptor did not wish any unworthy work remaining in his Italian studio to be sent to the Portland Museum, and so provided in his will. Mr. Carroll S. Chaplin, one of the executors, will go to Italy as soon as the war is over, and take personal direction of the shipment of the contents of the Simmons studio to Portland. As there are colossal works and rare marbles, the installation of the Simmons collection in the Portland Museum will be an important event. A large part of the estate of the sculptor was left to found a school of art in Portland, and the Journal estimates that from $35,000 to $45,000 will be available for this purpose. A special gallery will be devoted to the display of the Simmons' sculptures.

THE DUVEENS WIN AGAIN.

The Duveen Brothers have successfully defeated the third effort of Mrs. Charlotte Springer, to collect a commission of $20,000 for some tapestries sold by the King of Spain through Prince Francis de Bourbon, to the late Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. Mrs. Springer claimed the King had promised her the sum to make the sale, that Mr. Morgan had referred her to the Duveens for their inspection and appraisal, and that they dealt directly with the King. The defendants claimed in their demurrer, upheld by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, that Mrs. Springer had not shown that the King had refused to pay her the alleged commission.

W. A. CLARK BUYS REMBRANDT.

Former Senator William A. Clark has lately made two important additions to his collection, a Rembrandt and a Raeburn, both purchased from Henry Reinhardt & Son, 565 Fifth Ave. For the Rembrandt, "Portrait of a Man," he is said to have paid about $180,000, and for the Raeburn some $150,000.

The Rembrandt, which is reproduced on this page, is a well known picture, formerly owned by M. Charles Sedelmeyer, the veteran Paris dealer. It measures 37 inches in width, by 47 in height, was painted in 1635 and is reproduced in Dr. Bode's standard work. The pose of the figure, half turned to the spectator, is unconventional, with one arm resting on that of the chair and the other holding a cane. The background is of grayish brown and the costume, relieved by the white ruff, is black. The subject who is about 60, is very trim looking, his ruddy face contrasting finely with his closely cropped white hair and beard.

Senator Clark's Raeburn is a portrait of the artist's daughter, a brunette of about thirty, who is shown in half length standing, in a white dress and yellowish cloak, in a landscape. Until recently the chief of Mr. Clark's few old masters were Gainsborough's portraits of Lord and Lady Dustainville. The most notable among his fine collection of modern works is Fortuny's "The Choice of a Model," for which he gave $42,000 at the William H. Stewart sale in 1888.

THE MILCH'S ARE INCORPORATED.

Messrs. L. A. and E. Milch of 1025 Lexington Ave., incorporated on Apr. 22, under the name of E. and A. Milch, to sell oils, engravings and other works of art.

FRENCH ART TO BE HONORED.

(By International News Service.)

Paris, May 10.—In connection with William Randolph Hearst's campaign to have the people of California acquire the French Fine Arts Palace at the Panama-Pacific Exposition as a permanent monument to French artistic genius, Fine Arts Minister Dalimier has sent the following letter to C. F. Bertelli, manager of the Hearst Bureau in Paris:

"I should be very happy, indeed, to have our Fine Arts Palace at San Francisco rendered permanent. I therefore very sincerely applaud the flattering and sympathetic initiative taken by Mr. Hearst and, in the name of the State, express to you my gratitude."—N. Y. American, May 11, 1916.

THE PERSONS RESPONSIBLE.

Among recent incorporations at Albany is the following: Art Critic Co., Inc., magazine, $6,000; D. St. Cyr, J. A. Quaro, S. Buffardi, 117 West 48th St.

C. A. SLADE'S WORKS DESTROYED.

The destruction of the ammunition plant at Maybrook, N. Y., on Apr. 25, resulted in the regrettable loss, in the fire that followed, of several paintings by C. Arnold Slade. In the large freight depot there was a great deal of material for the Allies. Mr. Slade's case was on the way to exhibition in Milwaukee, and its destruction resulted in an utter loss of four years' work, there being no insurance. It contained the pictures "Christ Entering Jerusalem," "Christ in the Temple," "Departure of the Fleet" and "Toilers of the Sea." Mr. Slade valued the works at $3,000 each.

REMBRANDT GALLERIES AFFAIRS.

Mr. Charles Aelter of the Rembrandt Galleries, 2172 Broadway has filed schedules, showing liabilities of $7,938 and assets, $507.

At Samuel Schwartz's Sons & Co.'s Galleries, 290 Fifth Ave., there is now on an exhibition of monotypes by Andre Artque.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Chinese and Egyptian Art.

Two very important and interesting collections are now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, one of them of Chinese art to be sold by order of Thomas Jefferson Ryan, Esq., of New York City, and the other a collection of Egyptian and Persian art, consigned by Mr. Azeez Khayat of N. Y.

Many bronze mirrors of the Han dynasty in the Chinese collection will attract attention for the pieces are very rare. The old paintings are also unusually interesting, and the porcelains are numerous. Among other objects in the sale are two large Flemish tapestries in very fine condition.

Mr. Khayat's consignment is notable for the iridescent glass, the Persian potteries, a few Babylonian tablets, the Roman bronzes, the antique watches, and a number of necklaces of Egyptian beads. There is also a small selection of Persian rugs. These collections will be sold on the afternoons of Friday and Saturday next.

Dickensiana and Thackerayiana.

More than a hundred and thirty letters in the sale at the Anderson Galleries, May 16-17, from the Edwin W. Coggeshall collection, were written by Dickens to his sister-in-law, Georgiana Hogarth, and they are mostly unpublished. One hundred and twenty-five additional letters to Wills, which are wholly unpublished, will be offered as a single lot, so that the purchaser can take up the question of issuing an absolutely new book on Dickens. These letters were written from France, Scotland, and all parts of England, and mainly while Dickens was on his reading tours. They cover a period of more than 20 years, beginning in 1846. They show Dickens's daily life, and abound in the frankest criticism of many of his contemporaries. Quite a number of the letters to Miss Hogarth were written from America.

In addition to the Dickens material this sale contains some very important Thackeray Mss. and autographs, and some of his original drawings, which will enable the many Thackeray collectors in this country to fill out their collections. There are several first editions of Thackeray's books to which autograph letters have been added.

All this property comes from the library of Mr. Coggeshall, who has also consigned for sale a most interesting collection of original portraits. Among these is an unpublished watercolor portrait of Dickens by his friend Walter Henry Watts, who was a miniature painter of great ability. The three-quarter length portrait of Thackeray was painted in watercolors by Edwin D. Smith. Two colored crayon portraits of the Brownings are also of the highest interest. They were executed by Lowes Dickinson, shortly after the Brownings began their life in Italy. A life portrait in pencil of Lafayette by St. Aubin, is another valuable item. An original pen-and-ink sketch of the State procession on the day of the coronation of Queen Victoria has been increased in value by the autograph inscription by Thackeray. There are also silhouette portraits of Carlyle, Scott and Charlotte Brontë, and a full-length drawing of Disraeli by Maclise.

COMBINATION PICTURE SALE.

(First Session)

The first session of the combination sale at auction under the management of the American Art Association, of some 280 pictures, with few exceptions, oils owned by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, of New York, Pittsburgh and Newport, Messrs. Alexander Morten and Charles Beers, Mrs. Joseph Carlisle, Mr. P. E. McMahon, the dealer, the estate of Mrs. John E. Cowdin, and various private persons and an Executrix was held at the Plaza Ballroom Tuesday evening, when 93 pictures, mostly oils, brought a total of $20,450.

This sale, probably the last important one of pictures of the now closing art season, was held at the latest date in the Spring, for one of the kind, that can be recalled, but with fairly cool weather attracted a fair sized audience.

The feature of the first session, conducted by Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, was the offering of no less than seven examples of the refined art of the dead John H. Twachtman, all formerly owned by Mrs. John E. Cowdin. The value of this painter's work has been steadily appreciating of late years, and so there was good competition for the canvases—one "The White Bridge," bringing $2,075, the highest figure of the session, from Mr. William Macbeth. The other Twachtmans all sold well. A Whistler watercolor brought $450 from Mr. Bernet, as agent. Other American pictures sold well, notably examples of Arthur B. Davies—one for $420, Theodore Robinson—one for $510 to Mr. Wheeler, son-in-law of the late George A. Hearn. A good Bolton Jones brought $490, an Ochtman $470 and a Rehn marine $300, while two Bruce Cranes sold for $230 and $300 respectively and some Hssams very low.

The old pictures sold, with few exceptions, were owned by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw and were announced, for the most part, as having been secured by agents and brought what appeared to be very low prices for their attributions. A so-called Greuze fetched only $140, for instance. The highest figure for an old picture was $550 and this was said to have been given by Mr. Bernet, as agent for a work attributed to Domenichino.

Mr. Kirby poked fun at one solitary example of the "Modernist" Americans, a puzzling arrangement entitled "The Skyrocket," by Middleton Manigault, expressed his surprise at its being in the sale and wondered as to how it got into Mr. Morten's collection, from whence it came. He also expressed surprise when a bid of $10 was made for it and more when it was sold to Mr. Daniel, the dealer and firm believer in the painter's art, for $55. It was evident that Mr. Kirby is not friendly to the "new school."

(Second Session.)

At the second session Wednesday evening, the attendance was larger than on Tuesday, and a total of $42,250 was obtained by Mr. Kirby and Mr. Bernet, as the former had to retire from the Rostrum, through hoarseness before the sale concluded—for the 89 pictures offered.

The prices were good, but not high on the whole and there were few dealers and collectors present. It was evident from this fact, and the languorous bidding, except at intervals, that it is late in the season for a lively picture sale, but happily this was the last important one this season.

The group of 30 interesting early American pictures, owned by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw—with two exceptions, portraits, from which much had been expected evidently did not meet the fair owner's hopes, as the majority were announced as having been sold to the Madison Ave. dealers, Clapp and Graham, which would indicate that they didn't wander far from home. Shakespeareana, etc., at Princeton.

Three special exhibits were held during the week at the Princeton University Library. In one is shown a biography, illustrated with pictures of places, made famous by Shakespeare, facsimiles of his birth record and will, a cast of the head of the bust in the Stratford Church, etc. A second display is of the Garrett collection of illustrated Mss. of the XIII-XVI centuries, with facsimiles of some 20 earlier Mss. to illustrate the history of the art of illumination. A war collection consists of an Iron Cross, a French war cross, a pennon of the Death's Head Hussars from the Battle of the Marne and about 100 French, British and Italian posters of heroes, past and present, battlefields, war sufferers and refugees.

NOTES OF EXHIBITIONS.

The May exhibition at the Catharine Lorillard Wolfe Art Club, 802 Broadway, consists of works by the following members: Ida Becker, Theresa Bernstein, Lillian Crittenden, Caroline Geiger, Emily Dunham Hall, Anna F. Morse, Katherine Milmoë, Therse Milmoë, Clara Mamre Norton, Marjorie Pegram and Sylvia Rafter.

The Independent School of Art, 1947 Broadway, gives an exhibition of drawings and paintings by members of the School today and tomorrow.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Phila. Chapter, American Institute of Architects and the T. Square Club 22nd Annual Exhibition is now on at the Art Club. Elaborate and well executed drawings and models of proposed works and photographs of those already erected in way of structural, decorative and landscape architecture, give one a very comprehensive view of the progress made in the art during the last year in America. The applied arts are also represented by sketches and paintings of decorative designs and by a collection of works carried out in wrought iron, art tiles, and stained glass.

Probably the most interesting object, locally, is a large model about 15 feet long of the proposed development of the east bank of the Schuylkill River known as the "Ellen Phillips Samuel Memorial" already described in a former issue of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and the combined work of Edgar V. Seeler, architect, and Charles Grafly, sculptor.

A number of beautiful drawings, in perspective of buildings, including Grace Church, Chicago, and a Pasadena, Ca., residence, are by Bertram Goodhue and have decided charm as pictures. Day and Klauber also show some well rendered designs of buildings for Wellesley College and Cornell University. The work of a thoroughly equipped architect is seen in the designs for the Detroit Library, a competitive drawing of the "Scott Memorial Fountain," and a

GERMAN LUSITANIA MEDAL.

The story of the bronze medal, struck in Germany to celebrate the sinking of the Lusitania, which first came in a cable to the New York "Sun," and which story was republished in the AMERICAN ART NEWS last week, was read so much with surprise that letters and messages expressing doubt as to the truth of the story and even containing indignant protests against its publication, have been received at the ART NEWS office.

It is thought best therefore to confirm the accuracy of the "Sun's" cable which has been substantiated by mail advices to the ART NEWS, to publish today reproductions of the medal from actual photographs made in Holland of the original.

The medal is listed, as was told last week, in the Numismatic Catalog issued by Schulmann of Amsterdam as "The Torpedoed Lusitania," a satirical medal by Karl Goetz. The medal is of bronze and is sold at seven florins. Its reverse side shows a crowd before the window of a ticket office inscribed above "Cunard Line" while the face and upper half of a skeleton handing out tickets is shown in the window. On the obverse side the Lusitania is depicted sinking stern foremost with large guns mounted on her foredeck. The inscription is "Great Steamship Lusitania Sunk by German Submarine." The rim of the medal is inscribed "Business before everything—Distribution of tickets at the Cunard Line."

The Gorham Foundries give to the casting of life size, colossal, and small statuary that painstaking and sympathetic handling which alone insures the most successful result.

Particular attention is being given to the patining of statuettes.

The Gorham Galleries are a continual exposition of everything new in contemporaneous sculptures.

A most attractive exhibition by Fred Dana Marsh of objects designed by him for country house and garden ornamentation is now on at the Arden Studios, 599 Fifth Ave., to May 16. The objects range from weather vanes and flower boxes, to bird houses and porch rugs, and are shown as far as possible in suitable surroundings.

capital perspective drawing of a New York Bridge, by Cass Gilbert.

Designs for the entrance to Schenley Park, Pittsburgh, show excellent planning of architectural features and landscape gardening on the part of Horace Wells Sellers and H. Bartol Register. One of the local attractions is a drawing of the front of the new Franklin Bank by McKim, Meade & White and Furness, Evans & Co. Academic work in architectural design by students of the University of Penna. and Carnegie Institute are shown. A very picturesque Italian villa for H. H. Rogers, Esq., at Southampton, L. I., is by Walker and Gillette of New York.

Art tiles are from the Enfield Potteries, a complete collection of wrought iron door furniture, grilles and railings are shown by Samuel Yellin and artistic stained glass by Nicola D'Ascenzo.

There will be an exhibition of Advanced Modern Art at the McClees Gallery beginning May 18th, mostly examples of post-impressionistic art and some of "cubistic" tendency. It will include some of the most noted contributors to the new ideas.

The Graphic Sketch Club will hold an exhibition of the work of its students in the Club Studios, 715-719 Catherine St., May 21-June 11. Eugene Castello.

KANSAS CITY.

At the City Club there is an interesting exhibition of 50 of S. Arlent Edwards' color prints.

WASHINGTON.

The prospectus of the newly organized Arts Club states that it was formed to bring into association those devoted to painting, sculpture, architecture, music, literature and the drama, to promote co-operation between them and to further interest in these arts in the capital city. The idea of its promoters is rather to make it a national, than a local affair. The club will include in its membership men and women, active and lay members, voting for a board of men governors, the women also voting for a women's advisory board. Artists are invited to donate pictures to the first auction sale, the proceeds to be applied to the furnishing of the clubhouse, the pictures will be exhibited before the sale at the New Willard Hotel. The President of the Men's Board is H. K. Bush-Brown and the vice-president of the Women's Advisory Board is Sarah Munroe. Michael Jacobs is the chairman of the Art Committee, and the corresponding secretary is Mr. W. H. Windom.

The artists now represented are: A. T. Van Laer, L. Ochtman, F. J. Murphy, W. L. Lathrop, E. Dangerfield, W. G. Bunce, C. H. Davis, F. K. Frieske, C. Hassam, C. W. Hawthorne, E. Carlsen, L. P. ## BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger, Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

A NEW ART DIRECTOR.

The news of the appointment of Mr. J. Nelson Laurvik, the Norwegian art writer and assistant to Fine Arts Director Trask at the recent San Francisco Exposition, as Director of the projected San Francisco Art Museum, comes as a surprise to the American art world, as it was generally understood that Mr. Trask himself was virtually slated for the position. As the San Francisco dailies make no mention of Trask in their long eulogies and elaborate biographies of Laurvik, are we to assume that Trask "has been lost in the shuffle?" While we have had differences of opinion with Mr. Trask in the past, and hold no brief for that gentleman, and while we have no prejudice against, nor enmity towards Mr. Laurvik, we would have preferred to have recorded the choice of the former, rather than of the latter, to the new and responsible post.

For, in addition to his qualifications of experience and knowledge, Mr. Trask is an American, and it would seem that at this critical period in the Nation's history when if ever Washington's old admonition "Put none but Americans on guard tonight" should be remembered and observed, that even in the matter of the appointment of a Museum art director, an American born and trained man should be preferred to that of one whose birth "fell in alien lands aside."

GOOD RULES FOR COLLECTORS.

The following excellent rules for art collecting are given by Mr. John Anderson, Jr., in the catalog of his picture collection. They are so sensible and wise that they are worth remembering:

"Cultivate individual taste and knowledge by study and experience."
"See and study as many good paintings as possible."
"Judge a painting by what it is—not by the name it bears."
"Only a great artist can produce a painting of great quality."
"Distinguish between originals, copies and replicas—shun copies, but remember that replicas are often better than originals."
"Refuse paintings that lack quality—genuine works will possess it."
"Avoid paintings with an artificial note."
"Do not countenance monstrosities in art."
"Admit no picture to your collection not uncontestedly genuine; if one has inadvertently crept in, discard it promptly without regard to money loss. Make it up on something else."

CORRESPONDENCE

Marshall's Portrait of Lincoln.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

It would be interesting if you would follow the announcement, in your last issue, of the proposed purchase for presentation to the government of William E. Marshall's portrait from Life of Lincoln, with the proof that that Marshall's Lincoln is an original life portrait. Mr. Marshall did not make this claim himself for the portrait on his well known steel plate engraving. The inscription reads "Painted and Engraved by William E. Marshall." On the contrary, it seems to be well established that it was painted after Mr. Lincoln's death and consequently is not a life portrait.

In "American Engravers and their Works, by W. S. Baker, Philadelphia, 1875" we find on p. 109, in the notice of Marshall, "In the winter of 1860, he went to Boston to engrave the head of Washington * * * and after its completion went abroad to study painting. While busily engaged with the brush at Paris, in 1865, he heard of the assassination of President Lincoln and immediately returned to his native country for the purpose of engraving his portrait, the picture to be painted by himself." And a contemporary notice of the engraving upon its publication, says "he had seen Mr. Lincoln, but once or twice, but he had studied his character and fully appreciated the great qualities of the man. When asked by his friends what portrait he would take for his model, he promptly answered, 'None! I will paint my own portrait and engrave from that.' And he did so. In the year and a half that has elapsed since Mr. Lincoln's death he has painted his portrait and engraved it, etc."

I was so well satisfied that Marshall's portrait of Lincoln was not a life portrait that I excluded it from my introduction to the catalog of "Portraits of Lincoln," exhibited at the Grolier Club, N. Y., in 1899, and the life portraits of Lincoln are so few that none should be admitted to that high rank, except upon unquestionable proof.

Against the Modernists.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

I have read attentively your announced neutrality, in your issue of April 29, in regard to the controversy between our academicians and the modernists. I sincerely hope that you may yet, openly uphold, the true, beautiful and inspiring art of our academicians and their fathers, against the extreme modernist critics.

The experiments, I should say, the research of the modernist have failed to produce anything worthy to be considered as art. Moreover, should the so-called new art exist through another number of years without opposition we would be bound to witness the worst degeneration, art in general, ever suffered.

In order to obtain the desired result of opposition against the issues the public should be enlightened properly on the subject; all the art magazines should contribute vigorously to that end.

Very truly yours,

Prosper Guerry.

A Far Western Tribute.

AMERICAN ART NEWS,

Dear Sirs:

The perusal of some copies of the Art News loaned by a friend has convinced me that, by reason of not being a subscriber, I have been missing a great deal of valuable information, and also a lot of amusing correspondence.

The column marked "Correspondence" with its various opinions, and answers pro and con about the same, is in itself worth the price of the magazine.

Enclosed please find check for a year's subscription.

Yours very sincerely,

Another Tribute.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:

Herewith my renewal for the ART NEWS. To say that I am pleased is putting it mildly. Although never expecting to be a collector, there is nothing more welcome to me than perusing your paper, following the ART NEWS and especially the auction sales.

Hoping your paper may continue to improve and more subscribers become listed, all the time.

Yours truly,

Albert Doezemor.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

Color Etchings at Goupil's.

Some members of the British Society of Graver Printers in Color, are now exhibiting to May 30, at the galleries of Goupil & Co., 58 W. 45 St., nearly eighty prints from their recent plates. As in the case of color prints from wood blocks, there is an individual and very decided charm in these color etchings, which are mainly highly decorative in effect.

Nelson Dawson shows three marines, one of sail beating against "A Headwind up the Channel," and another a view of "Scarborough in Twilight." W. Giles, whose color is of beautiful quality and whose lines have a fine sweep, has, among other works, a highly picturesque "Central Corsica—The Last Gleam," and views of Stonehenge, in early morning, and of the Florentine Ponte Vecchio. Among some delicately artistic plates by Mrs. Giles, are a Stonehenge view and "The Passing of the Flowers."

In the large manner, with broad masses are Miss E. Kirkpatrick's "Castle Rock Edinburgh," "The Outgoing Fleet," "Early Morning, Venice," and "On the Lagoons." F. Marriott has various effective views, in "France, Italy and Belgium." Birds are handled aptly by Allen W. Sealy and G. W. Rhead has various poetic figure groupings in the Burne-Jones manner.

Others represented are W. Douglas Almond, T. Austen Brown, Mrs. E. C. Austen Brown, H. J. Casey—a superb "Moonlight," Miss M. Deane, A. Hartley—notably "Jardin du Grand Trianon," Miss R. Heriot, E. C. Laurensen, Sydney Lee, W. Monk—"New York from Governor's Island," and "Statue of Liberty," Hilda Porter, Annie French, and Th. and R. Roussel.

Some Portraits by Goldbeck.

As a portrait painter Walter Dean Goldbeck has gained in refinement and not lost in strength, while he has improved in quality. All this is shown in his second display, now on at the galleries of Henry Reinhardt & Son, 565 Fifth Ave., to May 22. The best of his pictures of women, among the twelve examples displayed, are those of Mrs. William J. Schieffelin, natural in expression and unstudied in pose, and Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, picturesquely arranged in full face, in an old-fashioned chair, costumed in green against a background of red. Mrs. Arthur C. Train, Mrs. Courtland Bishop, and Misses Anne Morgan, Louise Morris and Teresa Fabbri are also sympathetically pictured, the last before a somewhat insistent purplish blue background. A quasi poetic profile is of Jan Paderewski. Mr. Warren Leeds is shown also in profile, seated with clasped hands in an almost square canvas. This is a thoroughly satisfactory work. There is also a lifelike half-length of Dr. Joseph Muir in outing shirt, and an effective profile in olive and browns of Mrs. Ernest Schilling. Mr. Arthur C. Train is shown with document in hand, in the act of propounding, the expression and attitude being well attuned.

Poster Art Exhibitions.

Four national exhibits of American poster art will be made of the originals entered in the $2,200 industrial poster competition for a design for the national electrical celebration next autumn. The contest will close June 1. The prizes are offered by the Society for Electrical Development, an educational institute of the United Engineering Societies, New York City.

The Poster Committee Chairman Mr. J. Tyrone Kelly, announces that the works of Eastern and Western artists will be arranged in separate exhibits and that designs submitted by art students and high school pupils will comprise two additional individual exhibits. It is proposed to hold these exhibitions in libraries and galleries from Boston to San Francisco and to extend the time for these displays up to the close of America's Electrical celebration, Dec. 2 to 9.

The prizes are the largest yet offered for poster work in the U. S. The winning emblem will receive $1,000, the second prize is $500. That design, the popular favorite at preliminary exhibits in Boston, New York, Pittsburg and Chicago, will receive $300. The best original done by a student of an art school will be divided into five prizes for the school will be awarded $200 and $200 additional designs entered by pupils of art classes in the high schools of America.

The authorities who will judge the posters for the committee will be: Dr. James P. Haney and Messrs. John Quincy Adams, Arthur F. Wiener, P. L. Thomson, Henry L. Doherty and Herbert S. Hous.

School of Fine and Applied Art.

The annual exhibition of the N. Y. School of Fine and Applied Art will be held at the studios, 2239 Broadway, cor. 80 St., from May 17-23, 10 A. M. to 6 P. M. and Friday, Saturday and Monday evenings.

LONDON LETTER.

London, May 3, 1916.

In my last letter I referred to the projected purchase, by the National Arts Collections Fund of the eleven Rossettis belonging to the Rae family and the importance of these paintings as a national asset. Since then the scheme has come perilously near to destruction, for in consequence of its premature publication in the press, through the indiscretion of a certain society lady, the offer was at one time in danger of being withdrawn altogether. Matters have, however, now been satisfactorily adjusted and the National Gallery, in spite of the exigencies of war time, is to be the richer by a very valuable addition to its treasures.

Three names have been added during the last week to the ranks of the Royal Academy Associates, namely those of D. Y. Cameron, Maurice Greiffenhagen and Bertram Priestman. The general feeling about all three elections is entirely favorable, a state of affairs which cannot with truth be said to have existed in many instances. Indeed, the foreground of painting would appear to be coming into its own nowadays at the hands of the Academy Council, and though we may look forward for many years to come to seeing the well-worn copybook type of picture predominating on its walls, yet the more advanced school is rapidly becoming refreshingly frequent.

The Layard Portraits Again.

Once more the question of the Layard pictures is before the public, this time in the form of an appeal brought by the nephew of the late Sir Henry Layard, against the decision given in the courts last year to the effect that certain pictures could not be regarded as portraits coming within the terms of the will. These pictures included fifteen dating from the XV to the XVIII centuries among which was a Bellini, depicting the Sultan Mahmud II and inscribed to the effect that the monarch had himself sat to the painter. The discussion as to what actually constitutes a "portrait" led to some interesting points, it being contended that a painter such as Andrea del Sarto, who frequently used his wife as a model, could by no means be said to have executed merely a series of portraits, though, to take a more modern instance, the question could hardly be so readily settled in regard to the pictures for which Lady Hamilton sat. In an opinion quoted by the counsel for the appellants, the presence of a halo at once removed a figure from the sphere of a human being, so that no picture in which this accessory appeared could reasonably be said to be a portrait! Put since halos went more or less out of fashion with the XVI century, this method of distinction no longer held good in regard to works of this and later date!

Similarly it was contested that special care bestowed on features constituted a portrait, whereas special care expended upon expression produced an ideal study. This, though interesting, could hardly be said to be helpful but more practical assistance was afforded by Sir Edward Poynter who definitely classed a number of the pictures as collector's pieces and others as non-collector's, that is to say, he classified some as of special interest to the testator's family and others as being of more general value. Decision, on which will depend the extent to which the National Gallery is to benefit, was adjourned.

Saw Academy as a Duty.

An amusing contention has been made in the House of Commons to the effect that the majority of visitors to the Royal Academy go each year out of motives of duty, rather than in the search for pleasure, and that they should therefore be exempted from payment of the new tax on amusements! This ingenious plea has not, however, been allowed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has ruled that exhibitions of pictures, whether by a Society or a private individual, will be liable to the tax unless they come within the scope of entertainments provided for partly educational or scientific purposes. This decision threatens to prove extremely hard, in regard to shows given by the dealers, who anticipate diminished attendances in consequence of the imposition. In some instances the proprietors of galleries intend to endeavor to keep up the standard of attendances by paying the tax themselves and maintaining the entrance fee as before, but in any case their revenue from this source is likely to suffer materially. The latter course will, however, have the advantage of leading to a larger sale of catalogues and a greater probability of sales than will obtain if the public are asked to pay the increased fee, it being impolitic on the part of dealers to adopt any course, which involves a decrease of visitors to their galleries. The funds of public and corporation galleries, which depend largely on their admission fees for the expenses of their permanent collections, are likely to suffer very seriously.

L. G.-S.

CHICAGO.

The Palette and Chisel Club's first annual exhibition, at the Art Institute, closed in a blaze of glory, and the Art Students League's annual show was also lauded with special success. The annual national display of oils, watercolors and miniatures is installed in the several galleries, too late for detailed notice in this issue of the ART NEWS. There are 360 examples in the assemblage, including a rotary exhibition of watercolors and miniatures. There are 25 large landscapes in oils, by William Ritschel reflections for the most part, of California scenery. There is also an assemblage of watercolors by Alexander Robinson; a part of which were shown at San Francisco.

The Swedish-American Artists' exhibition at the Swedish Club scored a success. Arvid Nyholm's portraits enhanced his fame. Flower pieces by Ada Eveander and Bessie Hellstrom were praised for their naturalness. Ava de Lagercrantz's "Viking's Daughter" and Christian von Schneidau's portraits had vivid characterization. Birger Sandzen, of Lindsborg, Kan., is a startling colorist and C. Raymond Johnson is a close second.

Other artists who make up the 65 examples are Carl E. Wallin, Einer Bergsten, Rose Torey, Emil Gelhaar, Einer Soderwall, Carl Eric Linden, Olaf Grafstrom, Henrik Hillbom, Carl Ringius, Lisa Johnson, Ben Hallberg, John F. Carlson, Alfred Janssen, and Charles Hallberg. Sculptures by Agnes Fromen, Frank G. Gustafson, and Karl F. Skoog deserved the approval they received.

The Blakelock Exhibits.

The exhibitions now on at Reinhardt's and Young's Galleries draw more public interest daily and the fund for the benefit of this artist and his family is constantly increasing. Several Chicagoans have loaned canvases to the Reinhardt show. The Young gallery is fortunate in its loaned examples and Mr. Young has several Blakelocks of his own in line. There are ten canvases by Blakelock's daughter Marian, also on sale at the Young gallery for the benefit fund. The Young collection has 81 oils and including several sketches by Blakelock. This show will be continued through today.

There is a small showing of Blakelocks at another local gallery, including the Hackley Gallery's "Ecstasy," the only Blakelock shown at the San Francisco exposition. Paintings contributed by Chicago artists to the Blakelock fund have been installed in this gallery for sale, this week.

Oils, by George Inness, J. Francis Murphy, and Bogert, are on view at the American Galleries. At the Thurber and Anderson galleries masterpieces by European and American artists are featured. At Roullet's, there is a fine collection of mezzotints and etchings by European masters—and an assemblage of etchings by Pennell, including prints from new plates.

Enoch and Edna Vognild have closed their studio in the Tree Building and are painting the Saugatuck scenery, Michigan—and Pauline Kelley is with them.

H. Effa Webster.

CINCINNATI.

An art event of local importance is the opening reception this week of the first Cincinnati McDowell Club exhibition. The collection, beautifully installed at the Art Museum, has a quality and a real freedom of individual expression, characteristic of the ideals of this young society. The artists represented are: Elizabeth Nourse, Duveneck, Farney, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Hopkins, Edward C. Volkert, John Rettig, Herman Wessel, Dixie Selden, Mrs. W. J. Alexander, L. H. Meakin, Paul Eschenbach, Ernest Haswell, William Hentchel, Mrs. K. Schoepf, Mrs. M. W. Schaeffer, Mrs. Bellamy Storer, Lillian Whiteker, Stuart Todd, Helen Howell, Herbert French, Alfred Elzner and Norbert Heermann.

Mr. Heermann's new studio in the historic old Ogden Building, the former workshops of Buchanan Reed, Twachtman, Farny, Duveneck, Sharp, Rebisso, Noble, was recently opened with a reception, at which a group of paintings, by his friend Abel Warshawsky was shown. While here, Warshawsky painted portraits of Prof. Deutsch, Mr. Harry Levy, the son of Judge Hoffheimer and Mr. Emery Barton.

The former Cincinnati William J. Baer is holding at present his first "one-man" show of portraits painted in oil in the Museum. The artist, to whom the city more or less owes our Blum Room came on himself and has been much feted by his friends.

L. H. Meakin's present "one-man" show at the Museum is of special interest through a number of powerful paintings of Cincinnati, featuring the dominating new skyscraper, and all painted from the same place Norbert Heermann.

BOSTON.

The Guild of Boston Artists has been holding a "one-man" show by the veteran John J. Enneking—painter, philosopher, and controversialist. "The Fighting Enneking," as one critic calls him, keeps up a doughty battle with paint, as well as with words, and some of his canvases are fairly modeled in pigment, and heavy to lift, though far from ponderous in the effect they produce upon the beholder. Mr. Enneking has a definite philosophy of painting which may be summed up in the words of "Unity of Sensation." His aim is simplification and elimination, and in achieving it he spends months and even years, of patient work, to say nothing of quantities of paint! One of the finest examples he has accomplished in this line is his "December Thaw," the picture of a sluggish stream flowing through a winter frost. Another example, intensely simplified and instinct with feeling, "is "Morning," in which the pale red light of the sunrise is suggested on distant heights.

At a local gallery Leo Mielziner's clever portrait drawings in sanguine, charcoal, and silver point, and some lithographs are shown. Among the subjects, of whom the artist has made very fine portraits are Prof. Felix Adler, Mrs. Felix W. Warburg, Mrs. Jacob Schiff, Mr. Philip Sawyer, and Prof. Frank Jewett Mather. At the same gallery are Joseph Pennell's drawings and lithographs of wartime London, which in spectacular effects outdistance anything that he has yet produced. The big Zeppelins, hovering over the city like birds of evil omen, and the flaring searchlights give one shivers and thrills of excitement.

The Boston Art Club was the early bird when it induced John S. Sargent to "submit" to an evening reception in his honor last week! The affair was as distinguished and exclusive as the Art Club could make it, and really was "pulled off" with much éclat. There were present such personages as Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Pres. Fairbanks of the Museum, Major Higginson, and Mrs. McCall, the wife of the governor, together with many lesser lights; and the evening ended with supper and dancing. If Mr. Sargent was bored he did not show it.

The Copley Gallery is exhibiting a variety of interesting pictures. Rosamond Tudor's group of paintings has some unusual motives, as, for instance, the landscape with two gamesome satyrs, and the landscape with a nude boy. Among other pictures in the gallery are the equestrian portrait by Emily Burling Waite, Ernest Ipsen's splendid full-length portrait of Miss Helen Bullard, and some charming winter landscapes by George Noyes.

John Doe.

PROVIDENCE.

Charles C. Curran is represented in the current display of the R. I. School of Design, by a rich deep-toned portrait of "Mrs. B.," conscientiously painted and Chas. Vail Flagg's portrait of "George L. Chase" is dignified. A dramatic note fittingly dominates the portrait of Otis Skinner who is portrayed in one of his many romantic roles.

A singularly pathetic and touching canvas is contributed by John Elliott in a "Portrait of Julia Ward Howe." This was painted when Mrs. Howe was nearing ninety years old and suggests the poise and nobility of character which always associate themselves with this remarkable woman. At the same time the painting strikes a note of sadness which lingers not unpleasantly in the memory.

At the Prov. Art Club, Mr. Percy F. Albee has been showing a series of recent decorations painted in tempera. Mr. Albee, who is a local artist and still a young man, has elected to follow the mural painter's calling and his friends are predicting a brilliant future for him basing their relief on the original and distinctive tendency shown in several important commissions, already executed. Mr. Albee's most important work in this exhibition consists of five large panels representing the "Industrial Arts of the Fifteenth Century"—printing, joinery, metal-making, majolica, and weaving. The whole series is decidedly interesting and is a spirited and ambitious work.

Wm. Alden Brown.

MOBILE.

The oil and watercolor loan exhibition at Battle House has aroused so much interest that funds have been pledged to assure an annual display. The artists represented are C. W. Boyle and E. Woodward of New Orleans and the Spanish painter, Luis Graner. The display was arranged by Mr. and Mrs. John A. Wetzel.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, May 2, 1916.

One of the most distinguished Parisian critics, Roger Milès, publicly declares that the proposed law forbidding the sale to foreigners of works of art officially classed as deserving of special preservation will have the certain effect of killing the market abroad for French art and thus of favoring the producers of art in other countries, to the detriment of those of France.

"Those who would ostensibly constitute themselves the protectors of art," M. Milès truthfully says, "are usually just the people who are least qualified for such a rôle." He points to the fact that French works of art sold abroad often return to this country, and that its museums have never failed by reason of the freedom enjoyed by the commerce in art to enrich themselves continually. Certainly the Louvre, the Institute of France and the City of Paris itself have received in the last fifteen years many entire collections of extraordinary value.

On the other hand, the Comte de Camondo, a representative collector, exults over the prospect of such a law, as tending to eliminate the competition of Americans possessing enormous wealth in the French art market. He balks, however, at the idea that the State is competent to determine the value of any work of art, or that it has any right of search in private galleries, to discover art treasures, which shall be classed as too valuable for exportation.

Another collector declares that works of art gain in interest the more they "circulate," and that their value increases accordingly. "If many are exported from France," he adds, "many are imported also."

M. Veil-Picard, who owns more Fragonards than other private collectors in Europe, opposes the law because it limits the freedom of the art-dealer and places the art-lover in a very awkward position, if he should be forced to sell. "As to the official cataloging of private collections," he says, "I do not favor it, I have no confidence in 'experts.' I defy any one to prove that a picture is true or false, and I do not admit the right of a government, through its agents, to appreciate or depreciate an art collection or a work of art."

The women painters and sculptors are now having their 34th annual exhibition in the George Petit Galleries. Four hundred and thirty-five works are exposed, among them two pictures by Elizabeth Nourse, representing types of maternity, with her usual reserved tenderness and quiet, but very personal sense of color-harmonies; a strong portrait of a girl by Emma Chadwick; an interesting interior by Mme. Ullmann-Bloq, and a remarkable head of an ingénue by Mrs. Smith-Champion. The flower and other still-life pictures are in greatest number. While the majority of them are of indifferent merit, a few are really of striking quality, such for instance, as those by Marie Lemaire (forcibly reminding one of the work of the better-known Madeleine Lemaire); Mlle. Madeleine Boisguillaume, who produces wondrously soft watercolor effects; Mme. Léontine Darriet, whose depicting of old-blue faience, with a background of rich carved wood, has an almost unrivalled individuality, and Mme. Eugénie Faux-Froidure, who puts immense strength and reality of color into her gilly-flowers and buttercups.

The women-artists have been busy, too, with war-subjects and in some instances with commendable results. In sculpture, Mlle. Blanche Laurent presents with great simplicity and depth of feeling, a soldier's widow pressing her young boy to her bosom, and Mme. Anne de Mortemont, Dowager-Duchess of Uzès, has moulded the head of a Red-Cross nurse which may be said to be typical in expression of the patriotic kindness and devotion of the women of France.

The Rodin Museum.

The Rodin Museum is now created and will soon be an object of pilgrimage for visitors to Paris. In the collection are several of Rodin's most important works, which he has been disinclined to sell, many Roman, Greek and Egyptian antiquities, XIV and XV century sculptures, old pictures, porcelains and bronzes, and hundreds of small objects and fragments which are curiously archaic. The whole is estimated to be worth about $1,000,000. There will probably be a secret room in the Rodin Museum, like that in the National Museum at Naples, to which only special admission will be had, and where art of the sort which is too free for the shrinking gaze of modern Puritanism will be closely guarded; for it is well known in the inner circles of Paris that the old sculptor has always had a strong penchant in this direction, and that some of the things he himself has created are hardly fit for public display, even in tolerant France.

Eric Tayne.

An exhibition of the work of Northwestern artists from the St. Paul Institute was held recently at Omaha.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York)
 "It is said of Teniers that, being ordered to copy some masterpieces for Philip, he succeeded so well that it was difficult for his contemporaries to distinguish between original and copy. If this is true, it would be practically impossible to differentiate them to-day. And to all intents and purposes one would be artistically as valuable as the other."

Third Session.

The third and concluding session Thursday evening brought a total of $9,985, which, with the totals of the first two sessions or $63,200, makes a grand total, with $357.50, deducted for seven pictures sold the first two sessions to a Mr. T. Silvester, and not claimed, $72,827.

The pictures sold were unimportant and brought low figures for the most part. A portrait by an unknown artist, said to be of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, brought only $55 from Mr. Flattau, the auctioneer.

The pictures which brought $100, or over, were:

- 189—Attributed to Rodriguez, D., "Head of a Man," 14x13, G. Eddinger..... 175
- 200—Zuccherro, F., "Mary, Queen of Scots" (Panel), 19x16½, J. H. McDonald, Agt. 260
- 208—Fortuny y Carbo, M. J. M., "Roman Model," 22½x16½, McDonough Galleries... 240
- 209—Attributed to Lely, P., "Lady Anne Ashley" (Panel), 22½x16, G. Eddinger... 160
- 210—Mytens, J., "Portrait of a Lady," 22x18, J. H. McDonnell, Agt. 280

Art Students League Exhibits.

The Art Students' League, 215 West 57th St., opened its annual exhibition of paintings and drawings, Thursday. The exhibition is to remain open to the public until today from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m. and from 8 to 10 p. m.

STUDIO NOTES.

Mr. Alexander Hudnut, who donated the prize for the best watercolor in the watercolor exhibition this season, has decided to leave the selection of the prize winner hereafter to a jury of art critics, instead of artists.

Teresa Bernstein has made a number of unusual stained glass designs at her Holbein studio during the winter, which she expects to exhibit this spring at the Catherine Lorillard Wolfe gallery, at Grace House. She has also painted several large decorative canvases interesting in design and color.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland Hinton Perry gave a charming reception at their Tenth St. studio last week to show a recent portrait of Mrs. Walter Pulitzer, whose blond beauty has been so much talked of in New York during the past three years. The work is an excellent likeness and reveals the artist's ability for portraits in color, as his sculptures have in bronze and marble. It is his purpose now to devote the greater part of his time to painting, and five portrait commissions which he has on hand will keep him busy during the summer.

E. H. Potthast has had a successful winter painting and has sold a number of his attractive beach scenes.

Augustus G. Heaton of the Carnegie Hall studios has lately been entertaining W. Abranowitz, a Russian artist, long a resident of Paris, who is going to take a studio in this city.

Howard Hildebrandt will leave his studio, 27 W. 67th St., about May 15, for his summer home at Silvermine, Conn.

At the Metropolitan Museum.

The chief feature of the "press view," at the Metropolitan Museum Thursday, was the display of a recently acquired work by John S. Sargent, bought of the artist from the Arthur H. Hearn Fund. It is the very distinguished, and in character, thoroughly Gallic, full-length portrait of Mme. G. (Mme. Gauthereau) shown at the Salon in 1884 and lately seen at San Francisco and now known as the "Portrait of Mme. X." Among the other accessions and loans shown, was a highly interesting "fresco" by William Blake, "Elijah in the Fiery Chariot," and a fine Chinese rug of Ming design, both being purchases.

AN ART AUCTION ROMANCE.

When, during the second session of the combination picture sale in the Plaza Ballroom Wednesday evening, May 10, last, Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, the auctioneer, announced that the picture entitled "Portrait of Two Sisters," by the old American artist G. P. A. Healy, and which was one of the most admired of the collection of American portraits formed by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw—had been withdrawn from the sale—a murmur of surprise and disappointment ran through the large ballroom.

The charm and beauty of the two young girls, the sweetness and softness of color, and above all, the rare refinement of the work, had greatly attracted visitors to the exhibition preceding the sale, and the disposition of the canvas had been awaited with unusual anticipation by dealers and collectors. As Mr. Kirby gave no reasons for the withdrawal of the picture, curiosity was heightened, and it gratifies the ART NEWS to now tell the story, which may well be called "a romance of the art auction room."

The "Two Sisters" is a double portrait of the wife and sister-in-law of a well-known and prominent New York attorney, members of an old and esteemed Rhode Island and New York family, painted when children, and highly prized in the family. Some years ago the picture disappeared, more or less mysteriously, and could not be traced, despite diligent efforts to so trace it, and had been given up as lost. The Sunday previous to the sale, May 7, the aged mother of the "Two Sisters" who was visiting her daughter and son-in-law, the attorney above mentioned, in N. Y., noticed a reproduction of the long lost picture in a Sunday page story of the coming sale.

She was naturally agitated and excited and her son-in-law at once proceeded to reclaim the canvas, if possible. Fearing that by some slip in bidding he might lose the valued picture at the sale, he called upon Mrs. Thaw and explained the curious chance that had brought the canvas to the knowledge of its former owners. Mrs. Thaw was much interested, and after some consultation, on the afternoon preceding the sale offered to withdraw the work, and permit the attorney to have it on virtually what he felt its possession was worth to the family, or in other words to "set" his own figure on the canvas.

So the matter was arranged, the picture was withdrawn, and now hangs on the wall of the attorney's drawing room to the delight especially of the aged mother of the two fair young girls, whose grace and beauty Healy so well portrayed.

A LONG ISLAND ART UTOPIA.

A group of well-known artists, architects, sculptors and painters, is to create "An American Versailles" on the North Shore of Long Island, on Manhasset Bay, just south of Port Washington. Thomas Hastings of Carrere and Hastings has drawn the plans, and Owen Brainard of the same firm will have charge of the engineering details. The three largest fountains are to be created by Frederick MacMonnies, Paul Bartlett and Robert Aitkin, and they, as a committee, will have charge of all the sculptural features. The mural and other interior decorations will be in charge of J. Alden Weir, president of the Academy, Edwin H. Blashfield, Frank V. Dumond, Maxfield Parrish and Jules Guerin. Penrhyn Stanlaws is president of the organization, and Walter Russell, director-general.

The grounds of the "Dominion of Versailles," as it is called, include about 180 acres. An elevation is to be crowned with an adaptation of the Palace of Versailles which will be half a mile from the water's edge. This great building, 1,200 feet long, will rise, exclusive of the lowers from eight to sixteen stories, and will contain a large ball room and restaurant. A sub-street under the Chateau will have shops and there will be a great organ.

Persons living at the Chateau may have their own servants, or hire those from a regular staff as required. Other features will be a casino, theatres, out and indoor, yacht club house, school building, athletic club and tennis house and a bathing beach. The estimated cost is a bagatelle of $30,000,000 and the chateau is to be the home of 1,000 or more co-operative owners. The cost of a unit of space would be $10,000 or more.

The drawings of the project are on view afternoons and evenings to May 27, at the Fine Arts Building, 215 W. 57 St.

PA. ACADEMY BUYS GREAT SULLY.

The striking portrait of John Hogg, an old New York actor and publican, by Thos. Sully, in the collection of Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, and which many critics consider one of the best works of the artist, and certainly his best man's portrait, announced as sold at the second session of the combination picture sale in the Plaza Ballroom last week—to Mr. Otto Bernet, as agent—was really purchased by the Pa. Academy. The canvas brought the record price, $2,550, at auction, for an example of Sully.

Mr. EVANS TO GIVE UP PROPERTY.

It is announced, in connection with the difficulties of the drygoods firm of Mills & Gibb, of which he is president, that Mr. William T. Evans, the well-known patron of American Art, will give all his real estate in an endeavor to save the situation. He is said to have offered the transfer of his entire and large holdings of N. Y. City property.

A FRANS HALS DISCOVERED.

There has been discovered in Utrecht (Holland), in the collection of a private owner, where it has remained unknown for many years, an unusually fine example of Frans Hals.

The panel measures 11.2x13.2 inches and the subject is a half-length of a laughing boy with half-opened mouth, flat nose, thin eyes, a hair-lock on the forehead, clothed in a dark jacket with wide white collar. Through a slit in the jacket part of the shirt is seen. The boy is the same that the artist portrayed when older in years on the panel in possession of Mr. James van Alen, Rushton Hall, Kelting, England, reproduced in a number of "The Studio," in 1904-05, and is of the same period as the laughing boys in the collections of Mr. Quincy Shaw of Boston, Mr. E. Warneck of Paris, Mrs. Elkins, Philadelphia, and in the Museum of Dijon.

The painting will appear in one of the art sales to be held within a short time in Amsterdam.

A NEW SAN FRANCISCO GALLERY.

Mr. Hill Tolerton of San Francisco, who is on a visit to this city, has purchased a lot at 540 Sutter Street, San Francisco, next to the Vickery, Atkins & Torrey Galleries and is erecting an art establishment to cost $15,000. This he expects to open Sept. 1, with an exhibition of sculptures by Paul Manship and a collection of modern paintings. On the lot, 26 ft. wide by 138 ft. deep, the new building, designed in the style of the Italian Renaissance by William C. Hays, will rise two stories, the upper floor being of mezzanine height. The facade will be ornamented by two sculptured plaques by Herman McNeill, and a glass dome will be the roof. Inside an Italian courtyard will reproduce that of the Italian building at the late Pana-Pacific Exposition. There will be four galleries. One, the largest, will be devoted to paintings. In another there will be etchings and engravings, while in a third will be displayed fine books, chiefly on art, Mss., autograph letters, etc. The principal gallery, which will be 24 ft. wide by 50 ft. long and 28 ft. high, will be arranged so that it can be used as a lecture room.

Mr. Tolerton is also preparing to publish a history in two volumes of old San Francisco. The text of this work, which will contain 400 illustrations, several of the originals for which were bought by Mr. Tolerton at recent sales in this city, will be by Mr. Michael Williams, lately organizing secretary of the new S. F. Art Museum.

J. W. ALEXANDER MEMORIAL.

At a memorial meeting to be held on May 28, the anniversary of his death, to the late John W. Alexander, announcement will be made of the details of a permanent memorial to be erected under the auspices of the Fine Arts Federation.

The committee in charge met May 12 to decide upon the form of the memorial. It was decided that it should be a bronze tablet bearing a portrait of Mr. Alexander or some other design, with a suitable inscription. Eventually the tablet will be in the permanent building for the United Art Societies which it is hoped will be erected and to which Mr. Alexander devoted so much of his time and energy.

Requests are being made to the members of the societies forming the Fine Arts Federation of New York for subscriptions of $5 to form the nucleus of the fund. Frederick S. Lamb, 14 Gramercy Park, is treasurer.

The special committee is composed of John G. Agar, chairman; Edwin H. Blashfield, F. H. Bosworth, Jr., Arnold W. Brunner, H. A. Caparn, E. Irving Couse, Kenyon Cox, C. C. Curran, Daniel Chester French, Charles Dana Gibson, Richard Howland Hunt, Alexander Mackintosh, H. Bolton Jones, Frederick S. Lamb, E. V. Meeks, J. Alden Weir and William Laurel Harris.

CARNEGIE GIFT TO ARGENTINA.

A library of 10,000 volumes devoted to the United States has been shipped to the Museo Social Argentino of Buenos Ayres, as a gift of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Dr. Peter H. Goldsmith, of the American Association for International Conciliation, assembled the collection and has been charged with its delivery and installation in a hall set apart for it in the Museo. The opening and presentation of the library will take place July 4.

DISMISS MAGAZINE CASE.

On May 12 in the Men's Night Court, Magistrate Nolan dismissed the case brought by the Society for the Suppression of Vice, against the editor and business and advertising managers of Hearst's Magazine, on the ground that the features complained of in the May number were not objectionable under the law.

Mr. W. M. Voynich of London is on the St. Louis due to-morrow and will be at the Waldorf-Astoria for a few days.

A young husband of the N. Y. modish world, who has been fitting up a new town house for his bride, when asked recently how the dove-cote was progressing, replied: "Quite well, thank you. Thus far I have been able to keep Elsie de Wolfe from the door."

KEY MEMORIAL AWARD.

The Secretary of War, on Wed. approved of the award of the Jury in the Competition for the Francis Scott Key Monument to be erected by the Government at Fort McHenry. The first prize went to Charles H. Niehaus, sculptor, and E. V. Warren, architect, the former of N. Y. and the latter of Brooklyn.

The second prize was awarded to F. H. Packer, sculptor, N. Y., and Albert R. Ross, architect, N. Y. Third prize to Henry Herin, sculptor, N. Y., and Evarts Tracy, architect, N. Y., and fourth prize to J. Massey Rhind, sculptor, N. Y., and Albert R. Ross, architect, N. Y. Honorable mention was awarded as follows: First, C. A. Heber, sculptor, N. Y., and Armstrong & De Gelleke, architects, N. Y.; second, J. E. Fraser, sculptor, N. Y., and Albert R. Ross, architect, N. Y., and third, Edward Berge, sculptor, Baltimore, and Albert R. Ross, architect, N. Y.

STOLEN ART COMING TO U. S.

A recent press letter from Rome says: "The recent robberies of valuable paintings from St. Peter's Basilica at Perugia and Etruscan gold jewelry from the Museum of Corneto, as well as thefts of minor works of art from small churches in Tuscany, are suspected to be due to the increased demand for Italian works of art abroad, and especially in America."

"In fact, despite the war art dealers in Italy are doing a profitable business. Many American buyers for museums and collectors in the United States are now in Italy. An ancient statue has been sold for $160,000 in Rome, two figures by Donatello have fetched $200,000 in Florence, and similar big deals in paintings and sculptures have been made in Venice and other cities.

"It is admitted that business transactions in works of art with American buyers have been aboveboard and legal, but it is believed that art dealers' agents resort to robbery to satisfy their customers."

ALLIED ARTISTS' SHOW.

(By the Second Viewer.)

Hats off to the Allied Artists! for they have made the four corners of the Vanderbilt Gallery "jump" with color. They may be the "poor relations" of the Academy but they are out in gay regalia this spring, with their upwards of 400 pieces, painted, drawn, and modeled. The paintings make a lively impression. The color as a whole is much fresher than that of most Academy shows, and perhaps—all the cruder. Yet, although there are fewer "black" spots, and fewer old foggy productions, the level of the allied artists, on strict artistic grounds, is decidedly lower than that of the usual Academy. How could it be otherwise since they are, no matter how tartly they disavow it, mainly academic aspirants, revolvers, and—what is feebler—even imitators of academic weaknesses. And it isn't by their tongues, or by their pens, but by their brushes that they will convince of their right to distinguished and distinguishing consideration.

The exhibition this year makes a better impression upon the eye than upon the mind. It "looks" well. But once away from it, no salient work remains stamped upon the memory, at least no work seems important enough to efface the recollection of that feature of last year's exhibition—Rudolf Evans' fine bronze of "Frank Vanderlip, Jr., and Dog." However, it must be said that George Laurence Nelson's portrait of his wife and son is a serious performance and worthy of high commendation (despite a certain conventionality of technique) as a composition and for its really fine color quality.

Helen Turner's pictures with the exception of "The Evening" also are notable, at least for certain "nice" qualities of paint as in the little portrait of an "Old Man," and in the head of "Miss B." The method of hanging by drawing lots for position has worked out fairly well for the general appearance of the show, although certain painters—Robert Vonnoh, for instance, drew disadvantageous corners for themselves.

The show is not overburdened with snow pictures—or "surfs"—for this relief much thanks. Arthur Powell's "Bit of Old West Farms" does not offend, it is simple and looks as though the man had really seen the thing in nature. One notices a number of magazine illustrators have turned painters and with the usual sad results for color. Frank Tenney Johnson's "green" moonlight Mexican things have a certain tropical interest, however. Charles Reiffel's landscapes are noticed, especially the green one "On the Top of the Hills." Reiffel's portrait by H. S. Hubbell (shown earlier with the "Eclectics" at Folsom's) is here with a group of portrait studies. Howard Hildebrandt and Ledyard Towle also contribute portraits, the former an effective outdoor picture of H. B. Thayer.

A landscape with figures by Cimiotti and an upright "Garden of the Lake," by R. Sloan Bredin are rather frankly decorative, not too formal to be considered as essays in realism. Serious efforts at imaginative composition are not to be found—realism according to the examples of impression is the order. Oscar Fehrer's figure with landscape "On the Steps" is slightly Van Goghish and slightly reminiscent of George Luks' big park picture. De Witt Lockman's portrait of Mrs. Redgrave is interesting as a design but it lacks resonance in color and delicacy of characterization. Facile as usual is Chauncey Ryder in "The Desolate Hillside," dainty, too dainty is Edmund Greacen in "Portrait in Blue," and sickly in color is Benjamin Kopman in 5 pictures that seem trying to combine the tone of Hawthorne with that of A. P. Ryder.

A good word is due Richard Maynard for his well studied if rather ingracious full-length "Signorita Lolita" holding a violin. Some crude force of painting distinguishes Howard Renwick's "Lola" a Spanish looking in green seen against vivid yellow. Nisbet, E. Albert, Voorhees, Eliot Clark and Lester Boronda send their usual sort of thing, while Crisp Roy Brown, Arthur Spear, Wiegand E. Elmer Browne, Harry Hoffman and G. Glen Newell are true to their "accepted" virtues. Other allied exhibitors are W. H. K. Yarrow, I. Folinshie, W. B. Closson, A. T. Schwarz, E. L. Ipsen, O. S. Clark, E. Pieotto, Turcas, W. H. Singer, E. H. Potthast, H. Eilee, P. Cornoyer, Armin Hansen, E. B. Barr, L. Berneker, C. Yates, W. R. Leigh, B. Gutman, I. R. Wiles, Birge Harrison, Leo Mielziner, R. M. Kimbel, H. Nichols, G. E. Church, F. Roulant, F. A. Bicknell, J. H. Boston, Paul Kius, A. Grinager, H. Hoffman, E. C. Volkert, H. Vincent, Christina Morton, Walter Hartson and Lindsey M. Sterling, the sculptor.

The Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., which so often has something of interest to show, has now on a "Retrospective Exhibition" by the Fakirs. Among the 100 "Fakes" are works by John F. Carlson, Charles C. Curran, Keyon Cox, James Montgomery Flagg, Cecilia Beaux, Irving R. Wiles, Henry Oliver Walker, Hilda Parton, Samuel Woolf, Mary E. MacMonnies, Sidney Dickinson, Charles Wright, G. C. Goodwin, Carleton Wiggins and Mrs. I. N. Stokes. A number of the "fakes" are caricatures of the artists own works. Of the paintings 88 are owned by Mr. Samuel J. Shaw, head of the Fakirs, who has been collecting them for nearly 20 years. Two prizes of $25 each were awarded, the honors being equally divided between Samuel Woolf for his grotesque presentation of Israel Zangwill and Sidney Dickinson for his amusing satire "New York vs. Milwaukee."

Interesting School Display.

The New York School of Fine and Applied Art, of which Frank Alvah Parsons is president, and Susan F. Bissell, secretary and treasurer, is holding on four floors, at its home, 2239 Broadway, to May 23, an exhibition of the winter work of the classes. The display, which is well worth a visit, is open from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M., and from 7 to 10 P. M., on this and Monday evenings. The showing of the life classes in oil, in sanguine and in charcoal, is excellent, particularly interesting being the short time and memory sketches. There are portrait studies in oil, in color and black and white, as well as composition designs and illustrative work. A feature is made of commercial work, there being a fine array of posters, much interior decorative work, and many designs for stage and other more or less fantastic costumes. Among the group exhibits is one of the childrens classes.

N. Y. School of Applied Design Prizes.

The annual exhibition of the N. Y. School of Applied Design has been on during the week, at its building, Lexington Ave. and 30 St. The display is as usual of much interest. Prizes have been awarded as follows:

Elementary Department, $50 scholarship, given by Mrs. Dunlay Hopkins; Alice Lane Jones.

Silk Department, $50 scholarship, given by Mrs. Charles R. Flint; Florence Tifield.

Wall Paper Department, $50 scholarship, given by Miss Frelinghuysen; Oga Jobs.

Antique, $50 scholarship; to Harriet L. Ecelesnie.

Illustration, $50 scholarship, given by Mrs. Reeve-Merrit; Dorothy Ferguson.

Architecture, $50 scholarship, given by Thomas B. Clark; Katherine Thomas.

A stone tablet to Mrs. Dunlay Hopkins, commemorating the founding of the school, by her, in 1892, was unveiled on Monday.

At the Daniel Gallery.

A summer exhibition of works by American artists, at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., includes works of Ernest Lawson, Man Ray, W. J. Glackens, Hayley Lever, Samuel Halpert, Marsden Hartley and Bror Nordfeldt. Notable among the Lawsons is a bridge scene; an unusual Lever is a landscape, and the Nordfeldt is an artistic view over a valley. The Glackens example is agreeable and in the Renoir vein.

At the National Arts Club.

There is now on view at the National Arts Club, to May 26, a loan exhibition of English posters, in connection with the London underground railway system. From May 17 to 20 eight sculptured wood-panels by Karl von Rydingsvard depicting scenes of pioneer life in America were shown and following these were placed on view to June 2, the bookplate drawings, submitted in the Shakespearean book plate competition held under the auspices of the Shakespeare Birthday Committee. From June to September there will be open a Members Sketch Exhibition.

Recent Works of Jonas Lie.

A brilliant series of oils by Jonas Lie, 17 in number, are now on view to May 27, at the Knoedler Galleries, 556 Fifth Avenue. They flare a little, are somewhat insistent but are remarkably effective. Among the fishing scenes, near shore, and a few landscapes, appear three huge flower compositions handled in bravoura fashion. The large "Autumn Fleet," which was at the fall Academy reappears, and there is a fine snow scene, "The First Ray." "The Return" is a dock scene with fishermen, loaned by Mrs. William Hurd Hill. "To Meet the Day" has a brilliant crimson sky, over a wide stretch of blue and green sea.

Japanese Prints in Brooklyn.

In the print department of the Brooklyn Museum there is now on view to June 11, a fine display of Japanese color prints, numbering one hundred, which have been recently acquired by the institution. Of Hiroshige there are 15 examples, one a view of Fuji, being, it is said, unique. Others represented are Hokusai, by ten examples, Shunsho, Toyoharu, Koriyasu, Kiyonaga, Yeishi, Shunzan, Shunyei, Toyokuni, Toyohiro, Shunsen, Yeisen, Hokujo, Torii Kiyomssu, Okumura, Masanobu, Torii Kiyoshige and thirty-six others.

SCULPTURE SOCIETY AT BUFFALO.

The National Sculpture Society has arranged an exhibition of American sculpture to be held under the auspices of the Buffalo Fine Arts Academy in the Albright Art Gallery from June 1 to Sept. 4.

The idea of such an exhibition originated with the late Karl Bitter, but his untimely death temporarily postponed the actual realization. The closing of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco offered a felicitous opportunity to carry the idea into effect, and Miss Cornelia B. Sage, Director of the Buffalo Gallery, was quick to seize it.

All the Albright galleries will be cleared of paintings and the grounds will also be paced at the disposal of the sculptors. The sculpture from the Panama-Pacific Exposition will stop at Buffalo and many other pieces have been solicited. The exhibition will consist of medals, plaques, sculpture in bronze and marble, plaster and other material, wood and ivory carvings, sculptures in precious metals, portraits, allegorical statues and groups, ad works of decorative or monumental character.

SALE TO BENEFIT FAMILY.

The artist and poet friend of J. W. Alexander, Robert Burns Wilson, when he died recently in Brooklyn, left a widow and a young daughter unprovided for. His friends John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, the sculptor Partridge and Raymond Hyde, among others, have arranged for their benefit, an exhibition and sale of a number of works he left, which has just opened and is to continue to June 6th at the Snedecor Galleries, 107 W. 46 St. Mr. Wilson made a specialty of watercolors, but painted as well animal and marine subjects as well as portraits in oil.

Leaves Portrait to Museum.

Mrs. Catherine M. Dresser, who died on May 2, left a portrait of her grandfather Stephen Allen, Mayor of New York, to the Metropolitan Museum. She directed that if the museum declines the picture it should be offered to the city, and if the city also declines, the picture is to go to the Historical Society.

James Portrait by Sargent for London.

Henry James left his portrait by John L. Sargent to the National Portrait Gallery, with proviso that in case of non-acceptance, it should go to the Metropolitan Museum in this city.

Thomas Moran, who has been at El Tovar, Grand Canon, Arizona, will shortly be at the Schuyler, 57 W. 45 St., for ten days, prior to going to his Easthampton studio for the summer.

"THE BLAKELOCK SITUATION."

"At this writing," says Mr. William Macbeth in his Art Notes for May, "the Blacklock situation is just a bit mixed in the minds of that public that knows about the gifted artist and his pictures.

"That steps are being taken to provide for him greater comfort than he can receive in a public institution, and for the support of his family is highly praiseworthy.

"To make arrangements for the sale of pictures he is expected to yet produce is, to say the least, somewhat premature. Make him and his family comfortable as far as can be done, say I, and await future developments in a very sad case.

"I have heard and read many comments on the present enormous profits being made by dealers on Blacklock pictures. To clinch the argument the fact is pointed out that in recent auction sales pictures fetched many thousands of dollars that cost their owners fewer hundreds. The benefit to the dealer in these transactions is not very apparent and none has cited particulars to prove it. To substitute 'collector' for 'dealer' might clear the situation.

"In spite of all the befogging charges there should be no hesitation in stepping forward with contributions. I do not think that either collectors or dealers will fail in doing what is really practical."

TO FREE MISS BLAKELOCK.

There is a movement on foot to have released, from the Hudson River State Hospital at Poughkeepsie, Marion Blacklock, the artist daughter of Ralph Albert Blacklock. Her works done at the asylum, have a ready sale, but as an incompetent it is difficult for her to market them. Chicago art patrons have taken steps in the matter.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values,
both here and abroad; our appraisals are
made without regard to anything but quality
and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons
and the public from ignorant, needless and
costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakelee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of
the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger,
Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

THE LATE ART SEASON.

The deferred arrival of even Spring warmth, much less early Summer heat, which in normal years is apt to come at this time of the year if only for a brief period, has thus far prevented the usual exodus of the members of the modish world to the country, and has thus benefited the galleries, studios and especially the auction rooms, which last have never held important art and literary sales so late in the Spring, and with such a measure of success. Just so long as cool weather prevails, the city's attractions will prevail over those of the country, and correlatively dealers, artists and auctioneers will have customers.

Our Calendar of Sales and Exhibitions is again surprisingly long this week, and there is still opportunity, before the Summer flitting, for collectors and art lovers to secure much that is good, and at moderate figures.

We keep pace this week, and will for still another week, with these late season activities in the American art world, and our readers will find the present issue replete with interesting news.

A GOOD MAN GONE.

In the passing of William H. Powell, whose obituary we publish, with sincere regret, elsewhere in this issue, a good man has gone from the New York art world.

For so many years the quiet little gallery and artists' material shop, conducted by William H. Powell on upper Sixth Ave., has been the Mecca of New York artists, even of those who did not have studios nearby, and probably no man in the trade had as many acquaintances and warm friends among artists of the city. He numbered also among his friends many a collector and art lover, who, like the artists, appreciated his kindly and loveable nature, his true knowledge of art and his taste and discernment.

So the passing of William H. Powell is the passing of a friend, and one whose place in the Metropolitan art world cannot be filled. He died just after finishing his march as a patriotic citizen and a "Christian Soldier" in the Preparedness parade last Saturday, and his end was peaceful. To his widow, also the artists' friend, we extend our sincerest sympathies and our every wish for her success in the carrying on of the work her husband so well conducted.

The old Greek epitaph applies with peculiar fitness to William H. Powell.
"Here wrapt in happy slumber—Cleon lies "Asleep—not dead—the good man never dies."

WAS IT A "FAKE"?

"A portrait of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, signed with the name of John S. Sargent, but not guaranteed to have been painted by that artist, was bought for $110 by C. Watson, agent, at the sale of foreign and American paintings that ended Apr. 28 at Hiram H. Parke's galleries, Broadway, near 21st St."—N. Y. World.

HARRISON S. MORRIS AGAIN.

Seizing the opportunity afforded by the publication of a rejoinder by Mr. John F.
Lewis, President of the Pa. Academy—in a Phila. local journal, to the statement, also published, made by a Mr. Huger Elliott, a Bostonian, to the effect that "Art was dead in Phila."—to get once more into the limelight, Mr. Harrison S. Morris, former Manager of the Pa. Academy and later American Art Director at the Rome International Art Exposition of 1912, rushes into print in the Phila. Ledger in a column letter and proceeds to pay his compliments to President
Lewis and his management of the Pa.
Academy and other art institutions with which the latter is officially connected.

With that modesty which is one of the most pronounced characteristics of Mr.
Morris—he discourses on "the brilliant record of the Academy in its annual exhibitions (inferentially when Mr. Morris was Manager) and says that "the tradition of great annual shows in Phila. does not die easily." Then he throws an amusing sidelight on the method of the Art Critic of the New York Herald (Mr. Gustave Kobbe) in writing up an out-of-town exhibition as follows:

"I was amazed at the critical notice of the exhibition before last in the New York Herald. It might have been reprinted from one of those eulogies of the great shows of the past. Mr. Lewis himself had been most apologetic for this weak and unrepresentative exhibition. But the New York Herald critic spilled out his abundant adjectives just as usual. So, I wrote to him,
'Is your judgment failing or did you write without seeing the show?' He acknowledged, with jocund remorse, that he had not been to Philadelphia at all, but 'wrote from memories of other days.'"

As the Herald has been very kind to Mr.
Morris this "show up" would seem to be a bit ungracious.

Mr. Morris fails to mention that the annual exhibition—that of 1915—which he so much derides, was the one immediately following the war's outbreak, which event took from it necessarily a distinguishing feature—namely the presence of works by American artists resident in France and England. Is it, therefore, entirely fair for Mr. Morris to make the comparatively less strong annual display of 1915, a chief count in his attempted indictment of Mr. Lewis and the Academy management?

But Mr. Morris cannot apparently see straight where the Academy or its present management are concerned. He has never recovered from the shock of losing the management of the veteran institution, and, although the ART NEWS holds no brief for Mr. Lewis nor the Academy—it is not its opinion that "Art is dead in Phila." even if Mr. Eliot, who Mr. Morris informs his readers is "The husband of Elizabeth Shippen Green." (My what ructions there must be in the Eliot household over the raising of such a question by Mr. El) so believes.

The entire matter is really local and a "tempest in a teapot." Mr. Eliot, by his seemingly ill-considered and unjust statement, has produced, however, a situation, of which Mr. Morris has taken advantage to vent his spleen against the Academy management and to jump once more into the limelight, from which he speedily retired after the Rome Art Exposition.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Significant (?) Omission.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Can you explain the entire absence—alone of all the Fifth Ave. Art Dealers' Galleries—of any American flags or decorations of any kind on the fronts or in the windows of the galleries of Hanfstaengel & Co. and Arthur Hahlo during the great Preparedness Parade on the Avenue last Saturday?

This notable omission is looked upon by the art trade as rather significant of the attitude of the proprietors of these galleries towards the American character of Saturday's event.

American Art Dealer.

New York, May 16, 1916.

(We are unable to gratify our cor-respondent's curiosity. Possibly the recent republication in the AMERICAN ART NEWS of Frau Hanfstaengel's (mother of the dealer) comments, in the German Vossische Zeitung, on the attitude of New Yorkers towards Germany in the war, may explain why Hanfstaengel & Co. did not decorate their establishment or hang out the American flag during the parade.)

We understand that Mr. Arthur Hahlo, despite his name, is an American born and like Mr. Hanfstaengel is a graduate of Harvard. His failure to display the National colors, therefore, is beyond our understanding.—Ed.)

OBITUARY.

William H. Powell.

The well-known dealer in art and artists' materials, William H. Powell, died suddenly, May 13, shortly after he had finished his march with the great preparedness parade.
He died in his wife's arms, in his store, 683
Sixth Ave., to which he had been carried from the ranks. Mr. Powell was the son of the capable and popular historical painter and member of the National Academy, William Henry Powell, and was fifty-one years of age. His ambition was to become an artist, but his father died, when he was still young, and he became clerk and librarian at the Cooper Union, and afterwards secretary to the late former Mayor, Abram S. Hewitt. There was great sorrow at the news of his death, for his kindly nature and unfailing assistance to young

Irving R. Wiles

artists, to whom he often offered the hospitalities of his galleries for exhibition purposes, made him hundreds of friends.

Over thirty years ago Mr. Powell started in the art business, using but half of the present store, selling newspapers and stationary and maintaining a library. The business grew rapidly, and now two floors are occupied. It will be continued by the widow, who was Miss Adelaide Henry, a sister of Mrs. H. C. Redding, well known in art circles. He is further survived by Mrs.
Frances Lloyd, a sister, a painter, as well as her son now with the British army. Mr.
Powell had a very wide acquaintance, among artists of this and the past generations, and from his father he heard much of Albert Gallatin, Alexander Dumas and Washington Irving, who had sat to him, and of Lamartine and Eugene Sue, who were his friends.

Thomas Wallis.

The death is announced from London, of Thomas Wallis, once a leading figure in art circles and senior partner in the company which carried on the well-known French Gallery. The business still continues at Pall Mall, but Mr. Wallis retired in 1910, when in his 73 year. In his early days he was an engineer and worked in Australia. He returned to England in 1862 and went into his father's art business. It was he who started the late Sir W. Q.
Orchardson, on the road of success, awarding a prize of £100 to his picture "The Challenge," which brought ten times that sum, at the Quilter sale, a few years ago. By order of Queen Victoria, Meissonier's famous work, "La Rixe," was first shown in England at the French Gallery.
It originally appeared at the Paris Universal Exposition in 1855, and was so much admired by the Queen and the Prince Consort, that the Emperor Napoleon III purchased it for 25,000 francs and presented it to the former. When Mr. Wallis purchased Fortuny's "The Spanish Wedding," the Queen had Mr. Wallis bring it to Windsor for her inspection. From Prince Napoleon, he bought Meissonier's "Napoleon in the Campaign of Paris," and Ruskin paid him 1,000 gns. for it. Thirteen years later Ruskin sold it to his great astonishment and joy at Christie's for 5,800
gns. Though the auctioneers usually paid in a month, Mr. Wallis gratified the writer, by handing him a check for the amount.

W. Irving Jenkins.

W. Irving Jenkins, who owned one of the most valuable collections of steel-engravings in the U. S. and was a retired banker, died May 12 in Clinton, Mass., at the age of sixty-seven.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

London, May 10, 1916.

We were promised a "War Academy" this year but the promise has not been fulfilled. That is not to deny that there are canvases in plenty depicting certain military incidents, portraying numerous officers in khaki, and even dealing with current events in a becoming allegorical form, but taken as a comprehensive whole, the heroic spirit, the martial attitude are noticeably absent.

A place of honor is given to Mr. Olivier's "Merville, December, 1914," a large canvas commemorating the meeting of the King with President Poincaré and General Joffre. This unfortunate canvas, though no doubt it will please a large section of that public which loves a picture to be a record rather than a work of art, is everything that a historic painting ought not to be, and has all the appearance of the artist's having principally aimed at correctness of detail in uniforms and overcoats, leaving all dramatic significance entirely out of his artistic calculations. Such an achievement, is to say the least of it disappointing for, given an inspiring theme, a mediocre treatment means a waste of valuable opportunity. Mr. Frank Brangwyn, too, despite the excellence of his "Poulterer's Shop," a magnificently decorative grouping of fruit and game, is far less at home in his "Mater Dolorosa Belgica," a composition arranged on the lines of a "Pietà," but lacking that intensity of feeling and insight which one instinctively looks for in a subject of such scope.

A War picture, which at least has the merit of being exceedingly good to look on is Mr. Moira's "War Workers," in which a band of nuns is pleasantly engaged in the sunshine on work for the forces. Here the artist has known how to blend his figures and their occupation into a harmonious whole, avoiding the error of making them merely items in a catalog, while at the same time keeping them in a well balanced relation to the composition. But perhaps the most imaginative and poetic war picture comes from Mr. Clausen, who in his "Youth Mourning," has struck a note which appeals at once by reason of its utter simplicity and sincerity. In the foreground is a single figure, that of an exquisite nude, bowed to the ground beneath its load of sorrow. The distance is sown with little white crosses, emblems of youth's companions who have fallen, and so delicately treated that they have the appearance of so many flowers blossoming in Elysian fields.

Sims and Sargent.

Mr. Sims is a man who troubles himself neither with war nor with peace, with life nor with death, for his pictures, delightful scraps of fantasy that they are, are frankly not concerned with this world, but with another that exists in this artist's imagination and which is faery rather than human. His "Iris" is a joyous, inspiring piece of work, exhibiting passages of pure, clear color, while his "Clio and the Children, 1915," in which a company of children are grouped around the Muse of History with her bloodstained scroll, is drawn with all that delicacy and subtlety so characteristic of his art.

We miss this year the Sargent masterpiece, for on this occasion only a couple of circular designs for mural decorations bear this distinguished name. These are in the classic vein and though effective, can hardly be called imposing. Now in place of the general rush, as in former years, to find the Sargent portraits, the average visitor is concerned to discover the latest Lavery and this year he will not be disappointed as to quality, for Mr. Lavery's portraits of Miss Elizabeth Asquith and of "Hazel in Black and Gold" are both distinguished achievements, excellent as regards color and notable in regard to brushwork. From Mr. Orpen come also several portraits, all displaying that lighting of the figure from both sides, to which this artist is so much addicted and which is at his hands so admirably effective.

In reference to the canvases exhibited by the President, Sir Edward Poynter, I propose to enter into no detail, for they are occupied with the classical and Shakespearean subjects of every former year, while much the same may be said of the works of Mr. Waterhouse who adds still another to the endless list of yearning maidens which he has already produced. One cannot help feeling just now something of a sense of affront at this divorce of art from actuality, though on reflection one must admit it to be preferable to an artificial output based upon an actuality but imperfectly realized.

The sculpture section is hardly up to its usual level, though interest attaches to the "Nurse Cavell" of Sir George Frampton and to "The Kiss" of Hamo Thornycroft, one of the purchases made by the Chantrey Bequest.

LONDON LETTER.

May 5, 1916.

An interesting outcome of the recent Red Cross Sale is the commission given by a committee of the Society to William Orpen to paint the scene in Christie's during the auction. The picture is intended for presentation to Messrs. Christie in token of appreciation of the great services which they have so generously rendered to the cause of our wounded soldiers and sailors. The artist attended the sale assiduously, in order to make the requisite sketches and it is anticipated that the canvas will contain a number of interesting studies, not only of members of the firm but also of habitual visitors to the rooms.

The month of April witnessed the death of two important figures in the art world, both of them men who commanded the greatest respect for the disinterested assistance which they were at all times ready to give to the cause of Art. One was Mr. W. C. Alexander, the patron of Whistler and father of the original of the famous portrait of "Miss Cicely Alexander," the other was Mr. Herbert P. Horne, an architect as well as a man of letters. Both of these gentlemen were distinguished for their scholarship and knowledge as well as for their inborn appreciation of things beautiful, while in each case all suggestion of pretentiousness was conspicuously absent. The last years of Mr. Horne's life were spent in Florence, where he was occupied in the preparation of an exhaustive work on the life of Botticelli.

Some Spring Exhibitions.

There are several Spring Exhibitions running just now, which are of more than common interest. Of these mention should especially be made in connection with the orn exhibition at Colnaghi and Obach's at 144 New Bond St. The present collection contains a number of portrait studies of exceeding delicacy and beauty. These drawings display greater reticence than did his earlier etchings, while it is observable that the artist has attained greater breadth and variety in the means which he adopts to obtain his luminous atmospheric effects. The enforced absence of color seems to impose fewer limitations on the art of this etcher than on that of any contemporary craftsman in this medium.

Another noteworthy exhibition is that at the Leicester Galleries, where the fine bust of the novelist, Mr. Joseph Conrad, executed by the American sculptor, Mr. Jo Davidson, is on view. The work is excessively modern in spirit and full of a nervous energy which makes it particularly attractive. Mr. Davidson has thrown convention to the winds and produced a bust which in addition to being a living presentment is also an artistic achievement.

Amusement Tax Again.

In my letter of last week I spoke of the way in which the new Amusement Tax was likely to work in regard to the exhibitions held by the dealers, and this week I am able to state that through the agency of the Imperial Arts League, a movement has been set on foot with the object of removing the imposition of the tax from shows of this kind. The grounds on which the appeal is being made is, that these exhibitions in addition to their educational importance, have the effect of encouraging contemporary art and act in a great many cases merely as channels by means of which art productions may be sold.

In the case of art society exhibitions, the show is often held through the generosity of individual members, the receipts by no means covering the expenses involved, so that the addition of a tax resulting in a decrease of attendances must necessarily have a tendency to shut down the exhibitions altogether. As regards the municipal galleries it is cited that in the case of the Liverpool Art Gallery, admission receipts dropped in 1914 from an average of £3,000 to £500, a portion of the deficit being made up by a few public-spirited citizens. The petition contains many very influential names and is headed by Sir Edward Poynter, President of the Academy.

Mr. Herbert Cook, whose name is well known as a collector of works of art as well as a writer on the Old Masters, has recently been appointed in conjunction with Mr. L. Harcourt, to the post of Trustee to the National Portrait Gallery. His famous collection at Doughty House, Richmond, was formed by his grandfather, Sir Francis Cook and contains many items of great rarity and interest. Mr. Cook is a member of the Committee of the National Art Collections Fund.

IN THE STUDIOS.

Glenn Newell has left the Van Dyck where he painted all winter, and has gone to his Dover Plains, N. J., studio for the summer.

Marion Swinton will probably be detained in New York and its vicinity the greater part of the summer as she has organized a class in painting which she proposes to take to Morsemere, the Palisades and the city parks, three times a week until October. She expects to paint portraits in her Van Dyck studio until June.

Recent portraits by Eugene Speicher are a full-length of Mrs. Franklin Kalbfleisch of Cleveland, O., and Mrs. C. H. Matthaissen and Mrs. Ralph Matthaissen of Irvington, N. Y. He is now at work upon a portrait of Mrs. Walter Davis of Portland, Me., which he hopes to complete by June, when he will go to Woodstock for the summer.

Jerome P. De Witt, who moved from the Van Dyck this winter to the Clinton, 253 W. 42 St., has been much occupied with portrait work. Among his recent sitters were Mrs. Phillips Linn of Uniontown, Pa., and Miss Miller May of N. Y. He expects soon to begin a group portrait of four members of a Southern family. This work will doubtless detain him in New York until late June. He will spend the remainder of the summer in Maine.

William R. Derrick plans to spend the summer at Mohonk, N. Y., where he will remain until the late autumn. He has had an unusually successful winter, having sold a number of his paintings to collectors.

Louis Valliant is painting three decorative panels for the home of Mr. Lafon Allen of Louisville, Ky. He recently completed a group of grisaille panels for the entrance hall of an apartment house in N. Y. He plans to spend the summer at Washington, Conn., leaving about June 1.

George Lawrence Nelson, whose "Mother and Son" group appears on page 3, is making strides in portraiture. Since his return from Europe a few years ago he has won recognition from artists and art patrons. He has long been an exhibitor at the National Academy and Allied Artists displays. His work reveals an honest determination to portray character. His color is fresh and good taste emphasizes his choice of subject and arrangement.

Martin Borgord, the gifted painter, who has spent the past ten years in Europe, principally in Holland, where he has a studio, returned to this country last month, owing to the Government's call to return and renew his citizenship. He is now at Lyme, Conn., where he will paint until July when he expects to return to Holland. Before leaving America, however, he will arrange for an exhibition of his work next season at one of the leading galleries, when art lovers will have an opportunity of seeing a new and refreshing group of paintings. He paints in a high key, has a joyous palette color and his subjects are as interesting as varied.

Mrs. Clara Lathrop Strong is working, in her studio at Marshfield Hills, Mass., on a large mural painting for the Congregational Church of West Barnstable, Mass. It is to be placed in August, when the church celebrates its 300th anniversary. Mrs. Strong will open a New York studio in the fall.

Mr. William Conant Church issued invitations for Wednesday and Thursday of this week, to view at the residence of the artist, 109 E. 39 St., his portrait painted by the Princess Lwoff-Parlaghy. Other portraits shown were those of Mr. John Burroughs, Hon. Joseph H. Choate and Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn.

At the N. Y. School of Applied Design for Women on Monday, a tablet was unveiled commemorating the founding of the institution in 1892 by Mrs. Dunlap Hopkins. This memorial was erected as a tribute to Mrs. Hopkins by the Advisory Committee of the School.

Charles H. Davis will spend the summer at Mystic, Conn.

Henry W. Ranger and F. Ballard Williams are spending a few weeks painting at Noank, Conn. They will return to their New York studios next week to remain until June 1 when they will leave town for the summer.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, May 10, 1916.

The public is in danger of becoming greatly fatigued with a surfeit of war pictures. A sympathetic attitude towards men who are fighting for their country has led, until the present, to a tolerance towards mediocre and sometimes inferior art which would be decidedly injurious if it were to last. The beginning of a reaction is manifest; but people will continue more or less to buy pictures illustrative of the war, merely because of that fact, be they good, bad or indifferent. Some exhibitions that are forced upon public attention, however, appear impertinent because, while hopelessly amateurish, they have not the excuse of giving aid and encouragement to artists serving in the army.

There is on the south side of the Seine what is known as the Latin Quarter Association. Mostly directed by American and English women, it gives afternoon teas at which gossip about the war flies about in an entirely irresponsible way, and it occasionally shows pictures, many of which might more wisely be hidden. Except Mr. Oberteuffer, the city landscapist, who fared so unjustly at the hands of the Panama Exposition jury, artists who have proved their title to distinction have fought very shy of sending anything to this association. On its walls at present is hung a rather interesting display, however, though devoid of any really salient features. There is a whole gallery of portraits of French, British and Belgian soldiers, all painted by Miss Julia Théophylactos. Fabius Lorenzi, an artist who was "mobilized" early in the war, contributes water-colors interpretative of things which he has seen in the battle zone. Among other exhibitors are Miss A. H. Holt, Miss Violet Mège and Miss Ruth Morley.

The ancient art of Japan and China is finely represented in an exhibition in an aristocratic mansion of the old Faubourg Saint-Germain quarter and the profits are to be used to restore the farms and villages of Alsace, devastated by the war. The most notable collectors of France have contributed to it, among them the Comtesse R. de Béarn, the Princesse de Murat, the Princesse Eugène de Murat, the Comtesse de Valencia, the Marquise de Ganay, David Weill, Baron Henri de Rothschild, Edmond Guerin and Gustave Schlumberger. The marvels shown include archaic Chinese bronzes, austere and elevated in style; Chinese, Japanese and Korean pottery, strikingly simple in form and beautiful in substance; jades and crystals; rings astonishingly clever in their fashioning; sword-hilts, minutely wrought; sumptuous screens, in the decoration of which there is an incomparable nobility; Chinese portraits of the first century of the Christian era, as meticulous as those of Holbein, but with a breadth of treatment and a magnificence of color which were unknown to him, and curious specimens of far-eastern wood-carving.

A controversy has arisen as to whether the so-called "new art" in France is principally due to German influence or not. Many persons are already writing anxiously about the character that French art is likely to assume after the war. On one side are those who contend that all the so-called "new art"—due to "Cubism," "futurism," etc.—should be rigorously eschewed as fraught with the infectious seeds of esthetic degeneracy. On the other side are those who vehemently deny that the Munich school had anything to do with the search after untried effects, of which this "new art" is the symptom, and that this search and its manifestations have already had a beneficial effect even upon conservative painters, though they will not confess it. It is frankly recognized by many artists and critics that the greatest danger to the future of French art is not innovation, but stagnation.

Eric Tayne.

George Breustel will leave New York about June 1 for Gloucester where he will paint until the late autumn.

A number of prominent American artists now here from abroad, plan to spend the summer in California and on the Pacific coast. Walter Griffin, a member of the American colony of artists in Paris, left this week for the West, and while en route, for the coast, will tarry for several days at the Grand Canon, Arizona. From thence he will continue on his trip to San Diego, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, and San Francisco, where he is represented by a characteristic group of paintings at the California Art Exposition. He will sketch on the coast this summer and will probably give an exhibition of his pictures here upon his return in the autumn.

During his recent stay in New York Mr. Griffin occupied the studio of Paul W. Bartlett, who has been dividing his time between this city and Washington, D. C.

 "My conception of a great picture, which I am still ardently trying to realize, is one that has the enthusiasm, the vigour and spontaneity of a sketch, with the ripeness of thought and colour, together with a subtlety that only comes from much labour. Oddly enough, none of the labour involved in this repetition of painting in and out is lost. The surfaces change, but the effect that which is covered up, in some intangible manner, still remains."

Rare Books to be Sold.

The library of the late Samuel B. Snook of Upper Montclair, N. J., two important consignments from London, and the collection of a Philadelphia gentleman, these last cataloged separately, are on exhib'n at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale on the afternoons of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next. In addition to standard sets, Riverside Press publications, fine copies of the Impartial History and Bever-ley's Virginia, and some remarkable examples of the work of the binders, Derome,
Roger Payne, Root, Riviere, Sangorski & Sutcliffe, and Zaehnsdorf, the sale contains many extra-illustrated volumes of unusual interest. The illuminated Mss. of the Fetes Galantes of Verlaire, for example, with nine miniatures, is in a jeweled binding.
Cornwall's Lamb, with miniature portraits of Charles and Mary Lamb, each in a frame enriched with amethysts, is bound in full crushed levant morocco. The Edinburgh edition of Stevenson is in full crushed levant morocco, and the twenty-six volumes of Mark Twain, with original drawings, watercolors and portions of the original Mss., is the finest set ever offered.
The Delphine Latin Classics, from the Valpy Press, are in 141 volumes. Mark-ham's Life of Halifax is extra-illustrated and includes the only known copy of the Oxford Oath. One of the most elaborate productions in the whole history of color printing is the facsimile of the Book of Hours of Anne of Brittany. Among the early books is that by Galileo proving the rotation of the sun, Rome: 1613, the only copy that has ever been offered for sale in America.

Etchings and Engravings.

An important collection of etchings and engravings consigned by Mrs. Joseph J.
Little of N. Y., the estate of Dr. R. A. Witthaus, the estate of William M. Franklin, and other owners will go on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries on Thurs. next, preliminary to the sale on the eve'gs of May 25-26.

The sale includes examples of the work of Buhot, Cameron, Corot, Delff, Haden, Millet, Rembrandt, Van Leyden, the Little Masters,
the American etchers, like Bellows, Bacher, Parrish, Platt, and Mielatz, and many of the famous artists in mezzotint, with S. Arlet Edwards at the head of the list.

A very fine extra-illustrated copy of Memorials of the Order of the Garter will interest historians, genealogists, and particularly the collectors of rare prints. Among the line engravings in these volumes are works by Ceccil, Elstracke, de Passe, Hollar, Loggan, Van den Querborn, Vorsterman, Supderhoef, Delff, Van Dalen, Drevet, and many others. Among the mezzotint engravings are works by Beckett, Faber, Simon, Smith, Houston, Frye, Spooner, Turner, Phillips, Meyer, and Reynolds. This very remarkable collection was made in 1858 by Sir George Young, Garter King of Arms.

Books on Music to be Sold.

The library of the late John T. Garvey of Utica, which will be sold at the Anderson Galleries on the afts. of Monday and Tuesday next, is notable for the large number of books on music which it contains, and for the interesting letters of musicians, including Liszt, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Offenbach and Paganini. The coll'n of books on the violin and the great performers on that instrument is the largest that has come on the market in years.
In addition the sale contains first editions of English and American authors, books of general literature and some rarities in early English, including a fourth folio Shakespeare, the first folio of Paradise
Lost, and Grafton's Chronicle, London, 1569.

More Dickens and Thackeray Items Sold.

The sale of the second part of the Dickens and Thackeray collections, from the library of Edwin W. Coggeshall, opened Monday, at the Anderson Galleries, $15,846.75 being the total of the session. Mr. Gabriel Weis gave $1,775 for the Mss. of two sketches in Thackeray's "Our Street," called "The Lion of Our Street," and "The Dove of Our Street." Mr. George D. Smith paid $1,650 for the Mss. of Thackeray's "The Bumpshers" and the original draft of "Jolly New-boy, Esq., M. P.," containing a couple of small pencil drawings. To Mr. Smith also went for $875 Edwin D. Smith's large three-quarter length portrait of Thackeray, and for $810 an antique Italian shellshaped reliquary, with locks of hair of Milton and Mrs. Browning. The former was given to Browning by Leigh Hunt and was owned in turn by Samuel Johnson and Joseph Addison and the latter by his then wife-to-be. Mr. Smith also gave $530 for "William Makepeace Thackeray at Clevedon Court," with 16 lithographs after Thackeray drawings, privately printed about 1860, together with a letter from Thackeray to Sir Henry Cole, of the South Kensington Museum, in regard to his prospects as an artist, and $385 for a first edition of "Rebecca and Rowena, a Romance upon Romance," with a letter of the author to the illustrator Richard Doyle.

He paid $355 for Walter Henry Watts' watercolor head of Dickens; $325 for a page of the Mss. of "The Adventures of Philip on his way through the World;" $320 for Thackeray's "A Street View in Constantinople," drawn as a frontispiece to, and laid in a first edition of "Notes of a Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo;" $310 for the Mss. of the first nine pages of Thackeray's Lecture on George I., as delivered on the American tour and dictated to his secretary, Charles Pearman; $300 for a first edition of "The Adventures of Philip," with a page of the Mss.; $230 for a first edition of "The Newcomers," with a letter of the author to the publishers about the illustrations; $210 for a "Malise's full-length pencil portrait of Disraeli;" $210 for a first edition of Theodore Martin's memoir of Prof. Aytoun, with an inserted letter to him from Thackeray; $210 for a Thackeray pen and ink of Queen Victoria's Coronation procession; $205 for a letter from Thackeray to Doyle; $205 for two pencil drawings by Thackeray for "The Virginians," representing Washington and Braddock; $200 for St. Aubin's portrait of Lafayette as a young man; $177.50 for a letter of Charlotte Bronte to W. S. Williams referring to Thackeray and "Jane Eyre"; $160 for a letter of Dickens to Georgiana Hogarth, his sister-in-law, and $155 for a letter from Charlotte Bronte to Mr. Williams, containing a criticism of George Lewes' novel, "Rose, Blanche and Violet."

Mr. Henry Malkan secured for $825 portraits in colored crayons, by Lowes Dickenson, of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, made shortly after their marriage. Mr. J. M. Patterson paid $505 for a letter of Thackeray to Mrs. Macready, wife of the actor, referring to a reconciliation dinner with Dickens. Mr. Charles Sessler gave $410, for a first edition of "Lovel the Widower," with an inserted page of the Mss. To Mr. James F. Drake went at $380, a first edition of M. A. Titmarsh's "Our Street," with a page of Mss. Mr. M. Martin gave $177.50 for a silhouette of Scott by Edouart.

The second session, Tuesday, produced $11,470.50. Mr. Smith acting for a collector paid $4,150 for 125 unpublished letters of Dickens to William Henry Willis, his sub-editor on "Household Words" and "All the Year Round," which contain much exceedingly interesting material. Mr. Smith also gave $206, for a letter written by Dickens shortly before his death and alluding to a good night's rest brought on by laudanum. For a letter from Boston, signed only with initials, he gave $122.50. For another initial letter he paid $102.50, and the same amount for a Dickens Mss. list of 16 titles, being suggestions for title of "Household Words." On a separate sheet there was a quotation from Longfellow. For a letter to Wills, signed by initials, Mr. Smith gave $101.

The third and final session, Wed., produced $5,609.50, which made the grand total of the second part of the Coggeshall sale, $32,934.75 and of the whole sale, $93,935.80. Mr. Smith gave $60 for a Dickens' letter from Boston, $51 for one referring to Wilkie Collins, $50 for another from Folkestone, sharply criticizing Thackeray, and the same amount for a second Boston letter. For another $60 was paid.

Locke Books and Prints.

The books and prints collected by Chas. E. Locke were sold Wed. at the American Art Galleries for $1,373. Mr. Gabriel Weis gave $35 for an edition definitive of Balzac's "Comedie Humaine;" Mr. R. Fridenberg $32 for a view of "Near Fort Montgomery" from the Hudson River Portfolio, and the Cooper Union $30 for an edition of the works of Jane Austin and the same amount for Adams' "Ruins of the Palace of Diocletian."

Philadelphia Art Sale.

During the first four sessions of the sale of objects of art, furnishings and paintings belonging to the estate of Jane C. Vansant, deceased, at the Phila. Art Galleries, which began May 11, $444 was paid for 12 Lenox Plates, assorted panel paintings by C. H. Pohl mat gold borders. Twelve Dresden Plates, assorted portrait centers, medallion and holly decorations signed by Wagner fetched $300 and 12 Royal Vienna cups, saucers and covers, with decorations by the same artist were sold for $372. Twelve Royal Copenhagen plates, landscape borders, went for $132 and 12 Royal Sevres plates dated 1844, turquoise blue and gold decoration, for $144. Two Sevres porcelain vases, pink and gold decorations, were sold for $100 each. Twelve English China plates turquoise blue borders, center panels with views of Venice by T. E. Dean, went $192. A pair of Minton pate-sur-pate vases were sold for $110 and a Japanese bronze floor lamp, with a dragon vase, fetched $170. The sale is being conducted under the management of Mr. Reed A. Walmer with Mr. George L. Hamilton, formerly connected with the Hotel Bellevue Stratford as assistant manager.

Important Sale of French Art Objects.

An important collection of French art is now on exhib'n at the Anderson Galleries. One of its most important divisions consists of decorative French furniture representing the styles of Louis XIV, Louis V, Louis XVI and the First Empire. The cabinets, writing tables, commodes and salon suites in Aubusson and Gobelins tapestry are particularly important. There are many objects of art, including bronzes and marbles, clock sets and miniatures and a large piece of Aubusson tapestry, as well as many reproductions of famous pieces in the National Museums and chateaux of France. This coll'n was brought to the U. S. by M. Jules Ratzkowski, an official commissioner-appraiser of Paris and Cairo. The coll'n will be sold on the after. of May 27, May 31, and June 1, and will be the last important art sale of the season at these galleries.

Amsterdam Picture Sale.

The art collection of W. J. van Randwijk of The Hague was sold by Muller & Co. in Amsterdam last month. Josef Israels' "Mother's Solitude" brought $15,625, and his "Twilight," $5,210; Jacob Maris' "Evening," $5,835; "The Mill," $3,625, and "The

BLAKESLEE DEFICIT $283,839.

A transfer tax report on the estate of the late Theodor R. Blakeslee filed Wed., shows that he left debts and administration expenses of $683,687, and total assets of $399,848, leaving a deficit of $283,839. The debts, including the endorsement of notes, amounted to $594,800, and the administration expenses were $80.51. Included among the assets were results of first sale of paintings, $258,816, second sale $68,976, private sales $24,810, and unsold $205. The deposits amounted to $24,457 and the notes and claims to $22,480.

Included in the personality was a check of $9,000, from Mrs. Benj. Thaw, for Van Dyck's "Christ the Conqueror," being a balance of account in full; and a payment of Joseph S. Auerbach of $2,500, for one-half interest in Lawrence's "Kemble as Rolla." Among the promissory notes is one made by Stanford White for $3,095 and appraised as of no value, being barred by the statute of limitations. Among the pictures sold at private sale were: Raeburn, "Portrait of Mrs. Cadell," to Mr. Paul H. Mabury, $10,000 and DeKoninck "Head of a Dutch Gentleman," to same, $3,000; Lawrence, "Mrs. Siddons," delivered to Mr. T. B. Walker in settlement of a claim for $3,500, and Drost, "Portrait of a Man With Black Hat," to the Ehrich Galleries, $3,750.

English creditors held claims of $333,130, the largest, $158,935, to A. Wertheimer. To Mr. Charles Sedelmeyer of Paris was due $93,000 on notes and to Mrs. Catholina Lambert of Paterson, N. J., $10,000 on a note.

ANCIENT PALACE FOUND.

Dr. Clarence W. Fisher, director of the Eckley B. Coxe, Jr., expedition of the University of Pa., reports from Egypt, the discovery of a palace next to the Temple of Moses, on the Nile. In the new palace, which shows that it once suffered from fire, he has found many valuable objects, in what he believes to have been a throne room, including gold earrings and necklaces, several bronze lamps and a bronze wheel, evidently from a chariot. But the most important find was several fine doorways, one enlaid with something like faience and the other with gold.

SOCIETY OF ARCHITECTS ELECT.

At the recent annual election of the N. Y. Society of Architects, held at the United Engineering Building, James Reily Gordon of N. Y. was elected president, Adam E. Fisher, of Brooklyn, first vice-president, Edward W. Loth, of Troy, second vice-president, Mr. William T. Towner of N. Y. secretary, Oscar Lowinson, treasurer, and Edward Wehrin of N. Y., financial secretary. Nearly 200 new members have been chosen during the last year.

STONE MOUNTAIN DEDICATED.

On May 21, Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, Ga., was dedicated by the Daughters of the Southern Confederacy, as the site for the colossal sculptural memorial by Gutzon Borglum, which is expected to cost between $1,600,000 and $2,000,000.

WASHINGTON AT WEST POINT.

A replica of the H. K. Bush Brown equestrian Statue of Washington in Union Sq. N. Y., the gift of an anonymous donor, a veteran of the Civil War, was unveiled at West Point, May 19, near the parade ground.

Appointed to the Art Commission.

Mr. Charles H. Sherrill, who organized and acted as marshal of the recent "Preparedness" parade, has been appointed a member of the Municipal Art Commission by Mayor Mitchell, to succeed Mr. Frank R. Lawrence resigned. Mr. Sherrill is an authority in his chosen art line, that of ancient stained glass.

GREAT MARBLES FOR MUSEUMS.

The new Cleveland Museum to open June 6, has purchased from the Canessa Galleries, the famous Greek first century, B. C. marbles, found in Boscoreale near Pompeii.

There is a Basin in Parian marble decorated with moldings and garlands, in which two handles, decorated with small palms, stand out horizontally. The Basin is poised gracefully on a status—a caryatid representing a little laughing satyr. This all rests on a base of black antique. At the four corners four small Parian marble columns, each bearing a double head, representing the family of Bacchus. There are tables in Parian marble, the legs resting on two bases in gray marble, and at the sides of the legs, two figures of bearded monsters on lion's claws. In the center of each leg, within a crown of leaves, two goats stand erect on their hind legs, striking each other with their horn.

These six pieces of sculpture were

ART AT ALLIES' BAZAAR.

One of the most interesting features of the coming Allies' Bazaar, at Grand Central Palace, will be a booth to be devoted to "The Orphelinat Des Armees." All kinds of toys, clothing and every necessity appropriate for a child, from birth to the age of twelve, will be on exhibition and sale for the benefit of the fatherless children of France, sons and daughters of soldiers killed at the front. Among the most valuable assets which the committee has collected are a number of Della Robbia and Donnatello plaques, colored by some leading American artists, including George DeForrest Brush, F. Ballard Williams, W. A. Coffin, Carroll Beckwith, C. T. Chapman, W. T. Smedley, Harry Watrous, Childe Hassam, Albert P. Lucas and Samuel Andrews. Mrs. Carlton T. Chapman is on the committee, and will be grateful for any donation from artists or their wives who wish to contribute articles for the cause. She may be found at her Sherwood studio.

A VERMEER FOUND IN BOSTON.

A remarkable discovery—that of an original example of Vermeer of Delft, has just been made in Boston, where in the house of Mr. Morris Gray, a Trustee of the Boston Museum, the picture has hung for many years. The canvas was secured in Europe by Mr. Gray's father in 1830, as a Van Mieris, and Mr. Gray, until recently, had always taken this attribution as the correct one.

An English art writer and authority, now here, while recently visiting Mr. Gray at once, after seeing the canvas, pronounced the work a fine example of Vermeer. The subject is a "Woman at Her Toilet," a nearly full length presentation of a young woman, standing before her toilet table, clothed in the characteristic short Vermeer jacket in scarlet, and handling a string of pearls. The floor is tiled with rectangular slabs similar to the picture of a like subject in the Wallace collection, London, and the light falls from the usual upper dormer window. The canvas, while it needs cleaning, is in a good state of conservation.

A FINE JOSEF ISRAELS.

In the Galleries of Mr. John Levy, 14 East 46 St., there is now an exceptional example of the late Josef Israels, "The Madonna of the Cottage," reproduced on this page.

The picture was formerly in the collection of the late Joseph Jefferson and was sold at the sale of this collection, Apr. 27, 1906, by the American Art Association, in the old Mendelssohn Hall to Mr. J. D. Pratt for $19,500.

In 1892, Mr. Jefferson selected out of the many great works from Israel's brush, "The Madonna of the Cottage," as representative of the best period of his painting. The title is suggested by the picture of the "Madonna," which hangs upon the wall of the lowly fisherman's cottage, in the dim light. The artist compares the Virgin and Christ Child with the young Dutch mother, bathing the first-born infant. The fond mother bending over the fat, chubby babe, tenderly held in her lap, is gently drying the little one after the bath. An arm hangs loosely over her hand, and the little foot and leg are drawn up as if in fear of the water. The mother wears a loose white cap, a pale blue homespun dress, a coarse apron, and clumsy wooden shoes. One foot rests upon the red-tile floor; the other is firmly planted upon a low stool. Close by her side is a chair, with a towel thrown over the back, and a bowl of water upon the seat. The figures are lighted by the glow of a fire in the open hearth, and also by a window which does not appear in the picture. Except for a few simple ornaments and a clock on the mantel, the room is otherwise empty.

Joseph Jefferson corresponded with Josef Israels upon the merits of this work, and received as a gift an autograph copy of the artist's "Travels in Spain." Upon the flyleaf, Mr. Jefferson wrote of his appreciation of the Madonna picture, as follows:

"This book is a precious gift bestowed upon me by the author, Josef Israels, a great painter and a simple but charming writer—one of his greatest works has adorned my library for many years, and my family and myself have been delighted and even comforted by its charming presence." J. Jefferson.

Palm Beach, Fla., Dec. 25, 1901.

AT SAN FRANCISCO'S MUSEUM.

Director Laurvik, of the San Francisco Art Museum, has secured the loan of the E. Curjel collection of 50 old Japanese paintings, and the retention of the works of the Italian futurists and of the Finnish artist, Axel Gallen-Kallela. Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst has agreed to lend her magnificent collection of tapestries to the Museum. It has never been publicly shown.

JUDGMENT AGAINST ART PAPER.

Among the recently recorded judgments in N. Y. County, is one of $138.79, against Dr. Salvatore Buffardi, editor and publisher of the "Art Critic," by Fleming and Reavely, printers.

brought to light recently in the excavations made under the direction of Mr. Canessa, in the neighborhood of Pompeii, and are the decorations of the Peristyle in the Villa of Rectina, wife of Cessius Bassus, the lyric-poet and friend of Pliny.

SALES AT THE ALLIED ARTISTS.

At the third annual exhibition of the Allied Artists, which closed Thursday at the Fine Arts Building, the salesman, F. K. M. Rehn, was able to announce sales of over $4,000, more than double last season's results. The sales include Louis F. Berneker, "A Nocturne," $900; Jules Turcas, "The Salting Stone," $650; "Indian Pond," $200, and "Early Spring," $150, and G. Elmer Browne, "Rocks and Surf," $200. Sketches, fetching in all, $1,825, were sold. These are by Messrs. Volkert, Boronda, Giles, Hubbell, Greacen, Weigand, Cimiotti, Leigh, Follinsbee, Hildebrandt, Hartson, Newell and Hansen.

Silas Dustin is painting at his studio near Westport, Conn., where he has lived for several years past.

The artist's booth will also be a noteworthy feature. The contributors will be W. A. Coffin, Henry W. Ranger, F. Ballard Williams, DeWitt Parshall, Carlton Chapman, Gifford Beal, Henry G. Dearth, F. Dumond, Bolton Jones, Henry Mosler, Childe Hassam, J. A. Weir and Richard Maynard.

MR. DE VOYNICH'S PLANS.

Mr. Wilfrid M. de Voynich, who has been at the Waldorf-Astoria, since his arrival from London last Sunday, leaves for Washington today to superintend the removal of a portion of his valuable art collections, illuminated Mss., missals, etc., which have been stored at the Congressional Library, during his absence abroad. On his return here early next week he will start on a western tour, during which he will lecture at various mid-western universities. He has brought with him on his present trip from England, which will last ten weeks, a further large selection from his collection of illuminated Mss. and precious books. Mr. de Voynich sails for England in August and will return again in November for the winter.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

A Sculpture by Davidson.

A spirited and highly artistic sculptured panel in low relief, of "The Dance," by Jo.
Davidson, who recently returned from England, intended for the decoration of the Neighborhood Playhouse, is on view at the galleries of Henry Reinhardt & Son, 565 Fifth Ave., and will remain to June 3. The highly individual incised treatment of the three female figures recalls the work of the early Egyptians. The attitudes are graceful and not at all conventional.

Summer Show at Folsom's.

Twenty-one pictures by Americans, chiefly landscapes, furnish the summer show at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. Henry Golden Dearth's "Boulogne Harbor" is brilliant and Turner-esque, while his "Moonlight, Fontainebleau" is most impressive. Also of particular note are H. Van der Weyden's
"The Flock," L. Mazzanovich's "Fields of Azure," Norwood McGilvary's "Valley of Twilight," and Edmund Greacen's "Hazy Sunlight." Others represented are H. R.
Poore, C. P. Gruppe, W. H. Singer, De W.
Parshall, H. L. Hoffman, C. S. Chapman, E.
Warner, W. C. Fittler, R. M. Shurtleff and E.

ALEXANDER WYANT

By ELIOT CLARK

Octavo. Illustrated in color and photographic. Limited edition of 300 copies on Dutch hand-made paper at $12.50 net.

The first adequate estimate of the great American landscape painter. This volume is characterized by a sympathetic appreciation of Wyant's art and a happiness in the elucidation of its essential significance that will help one to a new understanding of its characteristic charm. It will be recognized at once as indispensable to the student and collector as well as the admirer of American art.

prints illustrating portraiture of the Colonial and Revolutionary periods, loaned by Mr. Charles Allen Munn. The exhibition offers, also, a review of the activities of early American engravers. Much of their work is exceedingly crude, although some of the mezzotints exhibited are of a high order of excellence.

Shown at the Photo-Secession.

A small exhibition, on to June 18, at the Photo-Secession Galleries, 291 Fifth Ave., consists of drawings by Georgia O'Keefe, watercolors and drawings by C. Duncan, and oils by Rene Lafferty. Miss O'Keefe's drawings of various curious inanimate objects—in one case in conflagration and in another in a stalagmite state—are carefully presented and artistic in quality.
Messrs. Duncan and Rafferty's contributions showing some artistic intentions, express nothing in particular.

Teachers College Exhibit.

At the Teachers College, Columbia University, there is on view during the day until 12 M. Saturday, an exhibition of art works, including color-prints from lineolum blocks—a new method of printing in color;
lettering, costume design, house decoration, pottery, art metal, jewelry, photography and painting in oil, watercolor, tempera and colored chalks.

American Historical Illustrations.

The exhibition illustrating the history of American illustration, from 1870 to the present time, lately shown at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and now somewhat amplified, is on at the Municipal Art Gallery, 16 St. and Irving Place, to June 30.

An exhibition of drawing, painting and pottery by students of the Arts High School was held Thursday afternoon, at the Ethical Culture Society Building, 2 W.
64 St.

The 57th annual exhibition of the Woman's Art School of Cooper Union was opened on Wed. evening with the usual reception, and continued during Thursday and Friday.
On Thursday evening the exhibition of the Night School of Art was held.

Western landscapes by J. Bond Francisco of Los Angeles, are on view at Healy's Gallery, 711 Locust St., St. Louis. A big canvas shows the Grand Canon of the Yosemite. There are also various views of the San Gabriel Valley.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The two exhibitions for May consist of the Painters of the Far West represented by Dangerfield, Foster, Groel, Couse, Moran, Potthast, Symons, Wendt, Ballard and Williams; and 60 posters from the recent competition held in Newark, N. J.

Miss M. T. Jackson, asst. director of the institute, tendered her resignation, which was accepted with regret, and left the 1st of May for the East to pursue further studies.

Director Jos. Breck has returned from Philadelphia, where he addressed the annual meeting of the College Art Club.

A very clever and successful carnival of the Shakespearean period was recently given by the students of the Art School, an organization called the Palletites, for a scholarship fund.

One of the choicest additions to the Museum is the picture secured by the Dunwoody Fund, "Portrait of an Ecclesiastic," a stately painting by Giovanni Battista Moroni (1520-1578). It is a fine character study, of a dignified Church official.

M. C. Wells.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Etchings and lithographs from the Sen-felder Club, London, of which Joseph Pen-nell is president, form the May exhibition at the Art Museum.

PHILADELPHIA.

The leading art auctioneers have important sales listed well into June. The Mc-Fadden pictures will remain on view through the summer at the Pa. Academy and the "Fakes" and "Reproductions" at Memorial Hall will also remain on view there.
It would seem to be in order now for a syndicate of artists to organize a similar exhibition of forged canvases of both old and modern masters.

An exhibition is now on at the McClees Gallery of "Advanced Modern Art," comprising 32 works of the newest tendency, incomprehensible many of them, yet interesting as human documents, claimed by their authors as expressions of aesthetic emotions and not as photographic representations of natural objects, as is explained by one of the exhibitors in the preface to the catalog. Crotti, Stella, Schamberg, Sheeler, and Sayen have already exposed at the Forum and Armory Exhibitions in N. Y. and have been fully discussed in the press notices.

A bright little exhibition of the works of members of the Graphic Sketch Club its 18th since its foundation by Mr. Sam'l B. Fleisher, is now on there. Most of the exhibitors are of foreign birth or extraction, but have become through their art converted to American ideals and ways of thinking, as this assemblage of paintings, sculpture and commercial designs plainly shows.

Remarkably good is the display of sculpture in bronze, plaster and clay, mainly by artists bearing Italian names. Among these Aurelius Renzetti exhibits a number of virile portrait busts, that of Mr. Harvey M. Watts, art critic of the "Public Ledger," being one of most real. Luigi Maraffi is represented by several compositions that one would wish to see executed on a larger scale, such as a well conceived figure he entitles
"The Stone Carver." A capital portrait bust of Leopold Seyffert, the portrait painter is shown by Pietro Ciavarra. Albin Polasek exhibits a sketch for a fountain in which Neptune figures as the "Musician of the Sea."

The painters contribute much to the credit of the school, and are already considerably to the fore in leading picture shows. A fine portrait of Mr. Fleisher by Lazar Raditz holds the place of honor. He also exhibits a well colored portrait of Mrs. Raditz and pictureques "Girl in a Kimona." Joseph Sacks contributes a full length portrait
"Miss Helen Fleisher" that is quite successful. A "Portrait Study," by H. A. Pinkovitz of a woman with a fan is happy in character and Cesare Ricciardi shows both portraits and landscapes of excellent quality. A flock of "Swans" is the subject of an unusual but attractive canvas by Benjamin Kelman. Luigi Spizzirri shows some cleverly handled portraits in pastel, notably one entitled "Poet of the Art Students." The work of the students of the academic year is shown separately on the walls of the school rooms above and scholarships and cash prizes were awarded to the most promising aspirants.

CHICAGO.

The sale of Mrs. Mary Blair's valuable collection of French, Flemish and Italian primitive paintings which it was hoped might become a permanent acquisition of the Art Institute, has caused the greatest regret to Chicago's artists and art-lovers.
It is the usual case of not knowing just what a treasure is while it is within reach.
However, M. Kleinberger, the fortunate purchaser of the Blair primitives, is giving local connoisseurs the privilege of viewing the collection in his suite at the Blackstone Hotel. Among the pictures on view here for the first time, are Clouet's "Francis, son of Francis I of France"; Mabuse's "Portrait of Eleanore of Austria." Toungnet's "Portrait of Rene, King of France," Barth de Bunyan's "Portrait of a Lady," and Lorenzo di Credi's "Portrait of a Gentleman." Mr. Kleinberger will leave soon, but Mr. Glenn Hall will be in charge of the paintings for several days, so that the exhibition here will be continued.

The annual watercolor exhibition is still attracting visitors to the Art Institute.
The exhibition's close will be celebrated by a dinner in the Institute, given by the Chicago Society of Artists, the Palette and Chisel Clubs, and the Municipal Art League.

August Petrytle, a local artist, has finished six murals for the Lawndale National Bank. Four of these are nine feet square and four others nine by twenty-four feet. The subjects are the "Landing of the Pilgrims," "Statehouse at Springfield," "National Capitol, Washington," "Wolf's Inn and Fork of the Chicago River," and "Resurrection of Chicago."

Paintings by Bella Ormo, a Hungarian artist, are now on exhibition in the Oriole and Gift Shop at Riverside.

A collection of paintings by George Inness is on exhibition at a local gallery.
Etchings by American artists are on show at Roullier's, with new prints this week.
At Thurber's there are works by European and American artists, and some valuable mezzotints and etchings recently from Paris.

Mrs. Pauline Palmer is planning to spend the summer on the Atlantic sea-coast, painting. She will be in Provincetown, Mass., in July. The Staceys, Anna L. and John F., will go to the Pacific coast again this summer. Mrs. Stacey is recovering from pneumonia and will rest in a sanitarium before painting in the open. Lawton Parker is in Paris. Louis Betts is expected to return from New York, this week, to execute a portrait commission.

FALL RIVER.

An exhibition of twenty-one modern paintings is now on in the new art room of the Fall River Public Library under the auspices of the Art Club of the First Congregational Church. The gallery in which the paintings are placed is of dignified proportions and offers an ideal setting for the pictures.

"The Meadow Oak," by James M. Hart is especially popular. "Still Life," by Wm.
M. Chase is most attractive and two canvases of "Fruit," by R. S. Dunning are desirable examples of a type of picture very popular a score of years ago and especially so in this city where Dunning resided.

Other notable works are "Wind & Moonlight," by E. Daingerfeld, "Landscape," by W. M. Hunt, "Hills and Winding River," by Gardner Symons, and "The Robe of Cold," by Robert H. Nisbet. G. H. Boughton is represented by his ever-popular "Hester Prynne" and by several other examples including a tender and poetic landscape.

The Rotary Exhibition of the Providence
Water Color Club will open shortly at Gay's Gallery coming here as soon as its successful exhibition closes at Danielson, Conn.

BOSTON.

Art shows still bloom here, in infinite and fetching variety, notwithstanding the lateness of the season. The second annual spring exhibition of the Guild of Boston Artists, ushered in most auspiciously by a "Sargent tea," surprises even the friends of the association by its comprehensive scope, a feature owing partly to the recent taking in of new members. One of these new members, Arthur P. Spear, introduces himself with "Waiting," a sympathetic and skillful rendering of an old couple waiting for the train, with birdcage in hand. Another new member, Giovanni B. Troccoli, in his "Portrait of a Lady," contributes a study of prim New England character that delightfully contradicts his Italian name.

It almost goes without saying that Charles H. Woodbury's mammoth marine called "The Rainbow," hung on the end wall of the rear gallery, dominates the exhibition, by its size, its subject-matter, and its masterly execution. Tarbell has a figure study of uncommon beauty ("Dreams"), loaned by Miss Georgina Cary. Frank W. Benson's "Tree Shadows," is a landscape of distilled yellow sunlight shimmering—one might almost say melting—through the green leaves of trees. One notes also Arthur Goodwin's fascinating and idealized presentment of good, old T Wharf; Mrs. Perry's presentment of an engaging child ("Convalescent"); Louis Kronberg's dancer ("Yellow and Blue"), painted with her back turned to the spectator—excellent in color and ably rendered; Frederick Bosley's characteristic study of two figures, "Emily with Eleanor"; W. M. Paxton's brilliant and loosely painted picture of a girl ("The Blue Book"), daring (as always) in color arrangement; Richard Meryman's "Monadnock," a landscape in "concentrated" form, lacking in details, but suggesting much by its brevity of means; J. J. Enneking's "unified impression," "A New England Hillside"; and Philip Hale's individual handling of "White Roses."

Among the sculptors two new members appear—John Paramino and Bashka Paef—the former with his "Portrait of Elizabeth" (the daughter of Bela L. Pratt), and the latter with her likeness of Miss Jane Adams. The miniature painters of the guild also make a good showing.

A large and varied assortment of pictures—many bearing the names of foreign artists—which recently passed through an auction sale at Copley Hall, was announced as "having come from a single residence in the Back Bay!" A bewildered gallery-trotter, in viewing the collection, remarked that the residence referred to must have been a pretty big one! John Doe.

PROVIDENCE.

At the Rhode Island School of Design, a collection of 14 paintings by Monticelli is now on view. These glowing canvases, while at variance with modern theories of "values," supply rich food for the imagination and offer a wealth of color. "The Peacock Garden" and "The Pet Dove" are the most important examples shown. Among the others are "The Christening Party," "On the River-Bank," and "The Burning of Sodom."

On May 12, the Rotary Exhibition of the Providence Water Color Club opened with a reception by the Ladies' Art Club at the public library at Danielson, Conn. An exhibition and sale of paintings and sketches by the late George W. Whitaker is now on at the studio formerly occupied by him for over twenty years. Romantic landscapes in great variety and reflecting a diversity of moods are grouped effectively with fruit compositions and marines on every wall and in every corner of the studio and the eagerness with which they are being acquired by collectors speaks eloquently of the esteem in which Mr. Whitaker and his works are held. Wm. Alden Brown.

NEW HEAD FOR ART SCHOOL.

The announcement was made recently by the Board of Trustees of the Fine Art Society, that the Minneapolis Art School, will have for its new director, F. C. Ramsey of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Ramsey has long been interested in the progress of art schools. Born in Britany, of American parents, he lived abroad for some time. After his return to America he studied at the Pa. Industrial School, Phila., for two years, then at the Pa. Academy, winning the Cresson Scholarship which gave him years of travel abroad, where he remained studying and painting from 1894 until 1908. On his return he was curator of schools at the Pa. Academy, until 1912, when he became business manager of the Fine Arts Dept. of Carnegie Inst. Mr. Ramsey will assume his new position in July.

A community party, to the number of 1500 from the Commercial Club spent one evening last week at the Art Institute. Another such party of the musicians and their friends was at the Inst., May 24. M. C. Wells.

BLAKELOCK MONOGRAPH.

Under the title "Blakelock, his Art and His Family," Mr. J. W. Young, the well-known Chicago dealer, has issued, in connection with the display of that artist's works in his galleries in the Stevens Building, 17 N. State St., Chicago, an interesting monograph, illustrated with reproductions of pictures, as well as by portraits of the artist, his wife and a son and daughter, and views of their home. The foreword is by Mrs. Blakelock, who is shown seated by two of her husband's paintings. The main body of the text, by Mr. Young, introductory to the catalog, is of much interest, the personal note being dominant. A section is devoted to the artist's daughter, Marion, several of whose pictures are in the exhibition.

ROCHESTER.

The Memorial Art Gallery is showing this month the collection of paintings by twelve American artists, which has been going the rounds of the museums this season, and the collection of paintings and miniatures sent

The Gorham Foundries give to the casting of life size, colossal, and small statuary that painstaking and sympathetic handling which alone insures the most successful result.

Particular attention is being given to the patining of statuettes.

THE ANNUNCIATION.

By Masolino.

"It is now fourteen years," says Mr. Tancred Borenius, in the May Burlington Magazine, "since Mr. Berenson drew attention, in the columns of the 'Gazette des Beaux-Arts,' to the remarkable picture of The Annunciation, by Masolino, discovered by him in the collection of Earl Wemyss at Gosford House, Longniddry. No reproduction of the picture has, however, up to now been published, and the accompanying illustration will therefore be welcome to the readers of The Burlington Magazine, all the more so as the picture itself has recently been sold to America. Judging from the evidence of style, it would seem as if the picture had to be classed with the earlier ones among the surviving works by Masolino; the figure of the Virgin reminds one, both in the type of face and the drawing of the hands, of the Madonna in the gallery at Bremen, which bears on the frame the date 1423, and is one of the earliest of the works by Masolino which have come down to us, although as a matter of fact executed at a time when Masolino was nearly forty years of age. On the other hand, the Gothic sinuosity of line in the figures contrasts vividly with the massiveness and classical simplicity of line of the figures in the fresco of The Annunciation, by Masolino, in the chapel of S. Catherine in the church of S. Clemente at Rome, possibly executed some time between 1428 and 1431 (reproduced in Dr. Toesca's scholarly monograph on Masolino, Bergamo, 'Istituto d'Arti Grafiche,' 1908, p. 123). The picture is very gay and brilliant in color, and in the angel's superb robe of deep red brocade, embroidered with a pattern of large golden roses, we see exemplified the tendency towards the rendering of modish dress which is characteristic of the naturalistic movement of the early 15th century both north and south of the Alps, and which finds expression also in the fresco of S. Peter Resuscitating Tabitha in the Brancacci Chapel and in Masolino's later frescoes at Castiglione d'Olonia. From this point of view it is of some interest to compare the present picture with a rendering of the same subject by an artist of kindred tendencies—the puzzling Annunciation in the collection of the late Sir Julius Wernher, the work of a painter under the influence of Jacopo Bellini."

NEW BROOKLYN ART SCHOOL.

Hamilton Easter Field is to establish a new art school in Brooklyn on Columbia Heights. The house at 106 Columbia Heights has been purchased, and also one below it in Furman St., whose roof serves as a backyard. The Furman Street house, which can be entered through a capola, which juts up on the lawn, will be used as a workroom for the students. The Columbia St. house, originally occupied by Col. Roebling, after he became too ill to be on the Brooklyn Bridge he was building, and from which he directed its completion, will be known as Ardsley House and will be fitted up for students who wish to live near the studios.

Schofield An Allied Aviator.

W. Elmer Schofield, who some time ago, joined the British army, according to a letter from Parker Newton now here, is now Lieutenant in command of an anti-aircraft section which has left for the front in France. The section consists of over 50 men, a junior officer, telephonist, telegrapher, chauffeurs, mechanics, gunners, interpreters, motors and motor lorries for the guns, etc.

"All the men in the section," says Mr. Newton further, "are from Cornwall, England, and as the artist painted many years in Cornwall it seems appropriate that he should command a body of brave men from his beloved county."

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT
SUMMER ISSUES.

After this issue, the AMERICAN ART NEWS will, as usual during the summer, appear monthly until Saturday, October 14 next, when the weekly issues will be resumed, and a new volume will begin.

The regular summer monthly issues will be published on Saturdays, June 17, July 15, August 19 and September 16.

THE MAY BURLINGTON.

The frontispiece of the May number of the Burlington Magazine is a reproduction of Masolino's tempera painting on panel, of "The Annunciation," lately owned by the Earl of Weyness, accompanied by a few words by Tancred Borenius who announces that it has been sold to America. Sir Martin Conway writes of the French primitive Jacquemart de Hesdin and C. E. Cecil Tattershall describes "A Set of XVI Century Vestments," three of the four lately given to public institutions by Sir Charles and Lady Waldstein. The Cope went to South Kensington Museum, one dalmatic to the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, and the other to the Metropolitan Museum, the Chasuble being retained. G. F. Hill continues his "Notes on Italian Medals." George Leland Hunter writes of the "Scipio Tapestries Now in America," two examples being reproduced in color. G. Baldwin Brown talks of "Pre-historic Art," W. R. Lethaby of "The Broderers of London," and Raphael Petrucci of "Rapput Painting." The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

ART SEASON CLOSES.

With the end of May the American art season, unusually long prolonged this year, will definitely close. We publish our last weekly issue today, and as announced elsewhere, will, as usual from now until October 14 next, publish only mid-monthly—as there will not be sufficient of art news to justify a weekly issue during the summer.

The season has been, not only an unprecedentedly long but curious one, most active in the way of exhibitions and auction sales, and has been varied by brief and alternating periods of activity and dullness in galleries and studios.

Good fortune has come to some artists and dealers—fair to others and disappointment to still a larger number. But, on the whole, business in the art trade and among the artists has been far better than for two preceding seasons for let it be remembered that 1912-'13 and 1913-'14, the seasons before the war, were not prosperous ones, in and to the art trade.

The first of the flood of European art treasures has begun to flow in and every sign points to a lively and prosperous season, to open next Autumn

ART BOOK REVIEW.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PAINTING. By Ralcy Husted Bell. Putnam's. $1.25 net.
This unillustrated volume takes the reader through a series of rather tedious studies in the origins of painting, the work of the Egyptians, Etruscans, Greeks and Romans, through Gothic, Renaissance and Northern schools to the painting of France and Spain concluding in such strangely sequential chapters as "Modern Painting," "The Secret of Stained Glass," "The Secret of the Old Masters" and "Ideals." The author makes no acknowledgment of authorities in his preface, but his quotations, made copiously in the course of his argument, are conspicuously from Pliny, Sir Joshua Reynolds ("Discourses") and Reynolds's fellow councillor of the Royal Academy, James Barry. Barry's R. A. lectures might often be profitably consulted for historical information, as well as sound criticism on Greek art. It was Barry who noted the "modernity" of Parrhasius the painter-philosopher of Athens.

Mr. Bell's discovery that Christian painting "was born in the gloom of the Catacombs," is interesting even if his critical remarks anent the masters who brought about the flowering of Christian art are summary and trite. His notes on "Cis-Rheinish" painting are rapidly inadequate and are rendered entirely worthless by the author's indulgence of nationalistic feeling provoked by the present war. Durer and Holbein are of course saved by their monumentally established immortality. French and Spanish painting fare little better than German. "Tonalism" in landscape art which is associated with the work of Henry Ranger and his sympathizers, receives approving consideration, while the exciting incursions made by "post-impressionistic" are not noticed at all.

followers of Cezanne and Vincent Van Eogh
The chapter on "Modern Painting" deals with English painting from Hogarth in a manner provocative of at least "distemper." The "snappy" critical estimates will one day one imagines face their author to some confusion. Retiring in a chapter on "Ideals" Mr. Bell quotes Rodin and notes a promising state of affairs suddenly arrested by the explosion of "the machinery of civilization. Ideals of art immediately passed into red eclipse." "The impetuosity of this age shall not be stayed" we read and "art, avoiding all signs of the superflux of pain, shall preserve only the fadeless beauty of things that fade, since

"Time dissipates to shining ether the solid angularity of facts."

THE FRESCOES IN THE SISTINE CHAPEL, by E. March Phillips. John Murray, London, 1/.

In this small but exceedingly practical volume the author has aimed at connecting and co-ordinating the principal facts concerning the Sistine Frescoes, so as to furnish the visitor with a means of appreciating the wealth of artistic achievement with which he is confronted. This unpretentious little book, while not aspiring to treat its subject exhaustively, yet cleverly avoids the guide-book impression which so often mars productions of this nature, and handles its data so attractively as to be likely to encourage its readers to subsequent reading on more advanced lines. All who are familiar with the overwhelming effect of the vast scheme of decoration in the Vatican, will readily appreciate the assistance which a well arranged volume such as this, is able to afford the visitor.

L. G.-S.

NIGHTS.—ROME, VENICE, LONDON, PARIS. By Elizabeth Robins Pennell. Crown Octavo. $3 net. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.
Mrs. Pennell's new book is interesting chiefly because of its allusions to certain important personages in the world of art, of whom there is, unfortunately, scant record in literature. Particularly welcome are her personal recollections of John Donoghue, the purest and ablest of all "neo-Greek" sculptors, an American classicist whose tragic death followed circumstances similar to those which led to Blakelock's present pathetic plight. Her description of Donoghue, "big, handsome and gay," wandering about Rome in hopeless search for a model beautiful enough to help him realize his masterly "Young Sophocles" (Chicago Art Institute), is clever and entertaining, while she equals Donoghue's own naivete in talking of his beauty by adding her own dainty feminine tributes to this Narcissus "come to life again."

The ponderous figure of Elihu Vedder succeeds the exuberant one of Donoghue in the memories of Rome, the "Vedder of Omar Khayyam" says. Duvenceck is the prominent figure of the nights in Venice, Whistler being absent—blonde Duvenceck, the prodigious worker who still had time to lounge, the American who knew his Munich as well as he did his Paris and his Florence, the one person who could "launch" a visitor properly in the city of canals. Remnants of a tradition of Ruskin's Venetian holiday in the company of that glorious little wife he lost to Millais—Euphemia Grey—hover around these nights in Venice, out of which, however, only one figure towers, and that is Duvenceck. One should commend Mrs. Pennell for clarifying her literary form by projecting such characters as Donoghue, Duvenceck and Henley from the mass of personages, more or less distinguished, happily met in the leisure moments of thirty years. Editor Henley, whose head as interpreted by Rodin appears in reproduction is the most completely portrayed individual emerging from any of these recollected nights. His voice, "roaring down all opposition" at the Thursday gatherings in London, in the rooms in Buckingham Street, "well packed and pleasantly smoky," was finally stilled by the same silencer that finished the outpourings of Henley's Thursday attendants—Aubrey Beardsley, Bob Stevenson, Henry Harland and Phil May.

The Whistler nights, of which one may read quite completely in the Pennell "Life," were won, we are told, at great price. The irrepressible one drove all other callers away, for it was Jeems's "resounding knock at the old battered door" that was permitted to triumph.

With the "Nights in Paris" the author concludes touchingly, noting the first spring time when the Salon has failed to open and asking—"Am I to Lose Paris? Who can say, when the echo of shells and bullets is thundering in my ears?" It is under this suspense that the author "clings to the remembrance of Paris nights," almost beginning to believe that "youth exists for no other end than to supply the incidents that age transforms into memories to warm itself by."

ESTIMATES IN ART.—By Frank Jewett Mather, Jr. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50 Net.

Professor Mather's title to his new book, "Estimates in Art" is not altogether happy. It savors too much of appraisal. Mirus a preface, this volume has the limited appeal of many recent books of its type. For it is a potpourri of appreciative essays on the art of selected masters of various schools—an odd enough selection—well written certainly, but lacking any very illuminating matter in a field which is so enormous as to offer rich opportunity to one who desires to cast revealing rays either for estimation or appreciation.

The succession of papers on Claude Lorraine, Botticelli, El Greco, Goya, Rembrandt, Verner of Delft, Sorolla, Eugene Carriere, G. F. Watts, La Farge and certain artists of China and Japan produces a strange line of development terminating where it might better have begun. The remarks on Chinese and Japanese art based upon facts "taken," as the author says "at second hand," are the liveliest in the book and bear out the author's admission that the "thrills evoked" by these works are decidedly not second hand. To Americans, this book should be of particular interest on account of the chapter that deals with John

La Farge who is "estimated" here very highly, especially as a designer of stained glass.

One could "marvel" with this author "that the fame of La Farge is not greater." The chapter on Watts is of interest also. These two men stand apart from their artistic brethren of the last century—two great modern eclectics.

The chapter on Vermeer is replete with references to Philip Hale's admirable book on the painter of Delft which contains, this author considers, "the most elaborate stylistic analysis ever applied to any artist." Morrice's book on Eugene Carriere furnishes the cause of a study of the painter whose type of picture was characterized so cleverly by Whistler, while that on Sorolla by Aureliano de Beruete, Rochefort, Huneker and other, with the Hispanic Society's exhibition, gives rise to a characterization of the dashing and facile Spaniard as "a virtuoso rather odd and diverting than really worth while." As a whole, the book is unprovoking; indeed the only thing about it that irritates, is that it lacks an index.

OBITUARY.

James F. Keresev.

James F. Keresev, dealer in Oriental rugs, carpets and tapestries, at 2 W. 47 St., died May 21 at his home in Jersey City, at the age of fifty-two. With his brother, Mr. John T. Keresev, he established his business 15 years ago in Fifth Ave. Five years ago the late J. Pierpont Morgan bought five Burgundian tapestries of Mr. Keresev, which he presented to the Metropolitan Museum. Mr. Keresev was formerly a leather merchant, with the firm of Bullard & Co., of which his father was a member. He was considered an "expert" on Oriental decorative art and was often called upon by the government to make appraisals of rugs, carpets and tapestries. He is survived by his widow, three sons, two daughters, two brothers and one sister.

Mrs. Lucy Alexander.

The cable announces the death in Florence, on May 20, in her 105th year, of Mrs. Lucy Alexander, who had lived in that city many years and left an estate valued at $5,000,000. She was the widow of Francis Alexander, an artist, and the mother of the artist and author, Francesca Alexander. She formerly lived in Boston and was born at Cambridge. She was interested in a number of charities and paid especial attention to families in reduced circumstances, giving an annual pension to forty such families.

George W. Hewitt.

George Wattson Hewitt, of Hewitt and Hewitt, architects, died in Phila. May 12, aged 74. He was the designer of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, the Phila. Bourse, the Bullitt Building and the Episcopal and Hahnemann Hospitals.

FAMOUS PICTURES REPRODUCED.

The Ladies' Home Journal has begun, with its May issue, the publication of a series of finely colored reproductions of famous pictures in notable American collections.

Those selected for the first series are the Cowper, or Panshanger, Raphael Madonna, Rembrandt's "The Mill," Van Dyck's "Marchesa de Cattaneo," and Vermeer's "Woman Weighing Pearls"—all from the Widener collection of Elkins Park, Pa.

The Ladies' Home Journal is to be congratulated on this novel enterprise for a publication not distinctively an art one, and while of course these first reproductions, and doubtless those of other great pictures from other noted American collections to come, have been reproduced in direct art publications both here and abroad, some in the AMERICAN ART NEWS, these former reproductions have not, as a rule, been in color.

The Home Journal reproductions are not only worth preservation for their art value, but are most educational and will give many thousands a knowledge of great canvases which, with the curiously un-American exclusive policy of most of our leading art collectors in shutting out the public from their galleries, they might otherwise never obtain.

PRINT COLLECTORS' QUARTERLY.

The opening article in the current number of the Print Collectors' Quarterly is by Robert J. Wickenden and devoted to Millet "A Jupiter in Sabots," as Gerome called him. It is most interesting and largely concerned with the circumstances of the master's settling at Barbizon. George S. Hellman discusses the drawings by American artists at the Metropolitan Museum, and William Aspinwall Bradley tells of "Some French Artists During the Siege."

LONDON LETTER.

May 17, 1916.

Miss Elizabeth Asquith, who enjoys the distinction of having had her portrait painted by many of our foremost artists, is arranging a show of Sargent's portraits at the Grafton Galleries in June. Her own picture, and that of her brother Anthony, will be among the 40 canvases shown, while those of other society notabilities, such as Lady Diana Manners, Lady Elcho and Lady Anglesey, will be included. The exhibition should be of peculiar interest, in view of the fact that it is the first comprehensive collection of this artist's work, which has been seen. The proceeds are to be given to the Arts Fund of which Miss Asquith is the chairman. The Lavery portrait of Miss Asquith is, it may be remembered, one of the best Academy pictures of this year.

Some Naval Critics.

Apropos of the Academy, some fierce criticism on the naval war pictures, has been given by naval experts, who have not been slow to point out in the most scornful terms, the various unconscious inaccuracies perpetrated by impressionistic artists. Indeed the marine painters are now suffering much the same drastic treatment, which in former years was meted out by that trade journal "The Tailor and Cutter," whose sartorial expert never failed to delight us, with his scathing comments on the clothes depicted in the various portraits exhibited. Nowadays the marine painter must be able to stand a minute examination in all the points of a dreadnought, the methods of a torpedo and the funnels of a cruiser, for the naval pictures of the present year of grace are to go down to posterity as historic records and must be infallible in detail.

The "International" opened last week with a private view of exceeding smartness and chic. Indeed it was a difficult matter to fix one's attention on the pictures, seeing that there was so much that was bizarre and "voyant" among the audience. Still there was considerable rivalry in the corner gallery, wherein a "Venus" by Leon de Smet, and a "Panel for Commerce," by Alfred Wolmark, were among the most modern of a number of ultra-modern designs and compositions. The panel, as far as one may decipher it, is intended to convey an impression of men displaying for inspection some brilliantly colored carpets, both men and wares forming a sort of conglomerate design which is not a little confusing.

An exceedingly original subject has been chosen by W. Nicholson in his "Hundred Jugs," in which he has cleverly depicted with the greatest skill, the various surface lights, tints, and lustres of a variety of pottery and porcelain, producing in the end an uncommonly able piece of work, though by no means one which satisfies the most exacting aims of art. William Strang, A. R. A., who is but moderately well represented this year at Burlington House, had evidently reserved his best work for the International for here are two delightful studies, painted with that superb directness of touch and clearness of color which always make his work stand out with such magnificent distinctness from everything in its vicinity. Though no longer, owing to present conditions, so "international" as formerly, the exhibition shows signs of a vitality no less robust than in years gone by.

An interesting sale at Christie's will be seen next week when the French terracottas collected by Henry James Pye, the poet-laureat of George III, are to be dispersed. The poet was evidently a man of nice taste in matters of art for the figures have been selected with the most fastidious judgment. They include a signed group by Clodion, others by Marin and a beautiful Bacchante bust.

Notable Hals Found.

The latest "find" in the picture-world is that of a Frans Hals, which has just been sold for 4,150 gns. to Mr. Evan Thomas, presumably for a client, its existence only having been discovered a few days prior to the deal. Indeed, the picture when cataloged last week for a sale near Windsor Forest was described as by an "unknown" artist but keen examination at the public view brought to light the initials "F. H.," the date 1640 and the words, "aetatis suae 56." The news soon spread among the dealers with the result that they attended in force at the sale and bidding proceeded briskly.

This is one of the most striking Hals portraits which has ever changed hands in this country and depicts a man of apparently great intellectual quality, regarding the spectator with the true Hals smile. The house from which the picture was sold is that occupied in the early part of the XIX century by the American financier, Joshua Bates.

NOTES OF THE STUDIOS.

Mr. C. S. Carstairs, of M. Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., sails for England on the Nieuw Amsterdam on Monday.

F. N. Tonetti, the N. Y. sculptor, recently returned from the war front in Europe. He is endeavoring to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded from flies and invented an extensor for use in setting broken bones.

The exhibition of paintings of Alaskan scenery by Leonard M. Davis, closed May 20, at the Museum of Natural History. Eight works were sold to N. Y. collectors. The display has been followed by another of pictures by Z. H. Pritchard, which represent submarine life of the Pacific coast.

Bryan Lathrop, the wealthy real estate dealer, who died recently in Chicago left his collection of Whistler etchings, said to be one of the best in the world, to the Art Institute of that city.

Carlton Chapman's spirited historical marine, one of the best he has painted, "The Engagement Between the U. S. S. Enterprise and H. B. M. S. Badger, off the Maine Coast, September 5, 1813," has been on display during the week, in the show window of the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave.

as a gift from Chicago artists. He will lend his house in the Latin quarter for the purpose. Over $6,000 has been collected in Chicago for the fund.

Adele Watson, of 20 W. 10 St., leaves shortly for California, where she will prepare for an exhibition of her work to be held at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., to open Dec. 1.

Gordon M. McCouch, some of whose pictures have lately been on exhibition at Montross' Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave., is now painting in Switzerland.

At his studio, 27 West 67th St., Howard Hildebrandt has been holding an exhibition (closing today) of recent portraits. Among the works shown are presentments of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allen, the former one-time Governor-General of Porto Rico. A picture of Miss Delite Wooley, the debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Connell Wooley, is also one of the admired works. In the portraits displayed the artist not only showed an honest determination to obtain character but every one bore evidence of sincere study and knowledge.

Francis Jones, who has been ill most of the winter and has been with his brother, Bolton at Montclair, is happily convales-

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, May 18, 1916.

The artistic event of the fortnight was the opening of the exhibition of Belgian painting and sculpture, under the auspices of both the Belgian and the French governments. The collection contains a few things that were rescued from the German invasion, such as the heroic bronze group by the late Constantin Meunier, "The Fire Damp," first shown in the Paris Salon and afterwards placed in the Brussels Museum, and some of Victor Gilsoul's landscapes; but nearly all of the works have been executed since the artists were forced to flee from their country, to find hospitality in various other lands. Certain of the pictures are graphic notes of this exile, like P. Paulus's views of the Thames, of a building in course of erection in London, and of Saint-Paul's Cathedral, Albert Baertsoen's "Waterloo Bridge" and "The Thames in Winter," Alfred Bastien's "The Thames at Chelsea," and Charles Michel's "Le Pont Royal" and "Morning near the Louvre."

Scenes of Belgium.

But the majority of the pictures are scenes in Belgium, evidently only painted in the last few months from studies made before the war. In all there is a dignity and surety of execution, a repose of manner and a candor and sincerity, worthy of the noble nation which has preferred destruction to slavery. The Belgians, even before the war, had shared in all the intellectual commotions and in all the evolutions of modern thought; yet Belgian art today is nearer the soul of the great "primitives," naive and at the same time observant and reflective, intense and expressive, than it is to the optimistic reveries, the splendors and magnificence, the triumphant orgies of color, of light and of life, of a Jakob Jordaens, or the rollicking and jovial village feasts of the Teniers. The spirit of Millet is likewise more present in Belgian than in French art of the present. It is the twin brother of the literature which found its culmination in Maeterlinck and Veahaeren.

There is very little here that directly bespeaks the agony of a nation. A few paintings suggest the home-sickness of the exile. But the Belgian artists are apparently too proud to draw profit either of fame or of fortune from the tragic ills of their country, or to glorify, before the great climax of reparation, the imperishable deeds of their heroes.

This exhibition, taken in connection with the two rooms at the Luxembourg Gallery that are filled with Belgian paintings, may be justly regarded as amply representative of the nation's contemporary achievements in art. Meunier's group, "The Fire Damp," shows a mother leaning above her prostrate son to learn if life remains. It may be regarded as fortuitously symbolizing Belgium, gazing in mute horror upon the work of her murderous foe. A newer work of Meunier, on a smaller scale, in bronze, is "The Prodigal Son," one of the best of the many conceptions of that subject. It has great intensity of sentiment, and strength and justice of expression. A bronze statuette, "Salomé," by Marnix d'Haveloose, is also worthy of marked attention, as an interpretation of the neurasthenic degeneracy and the weird oriental psychology that Oscar Wilde and Richard Strauss had already interpreted with equal truth in other mediums. A bronze head of a man, by G. Minne, is distinctly Rodinesque, and does not fall very short of the best work of the master.

Some Notable Works.

Among the paintings, Baertsoen's "Canal at Ghent," Emile Claus's "The Golden Highway," a road that glows in the reddish yellow glory of autumn foliage, fallen or ready to fall, and of an intense sunlight; Alfred Delaunoy's "Chapels of the Church of Saint-Pierre at Louvain," austere in atmosphere and marvelous in the fidelity of the stone hues and the delicate richness of the light which is sifted through painted windows; Frederic Léon's landscapes in the Ardennes, reposeful, with solid harmony of coloring and much nicety of detail; Victor Gilsoul's vivid picture of the village of Mannekensvere on the Yser, vigorous and intense in execution; Eugène Laermans' typical groups of Flemish peasants, boldly, but very simply delineated, and strongly characterized; Theodore van Rysselberghe's nudes, which are notable achievements in vibrant luminosity; and Emile Wauter's figure of a Gypsy woman in shackles and his landscapes in Morocco and Egypt, are unquestionably the most important among the paintings. This exhibition would be successful in New York.

Pierre Goujon, the first member of the French Parliament to be killed in the war, had formed an excellent art collection, which he has left by will to the Louvre. Among the pictures were some watercolors by the sculptor Barye; a good example of Toulouse-Lautrec, "Le Dos de Feu," and a characteristic one of Van Gogh, "La Guingette" ("The Grogshop"). Eric Tayne.

 "Theoretically, art is something in life seen through a glorified vision. It is not an exact reproduction of the thing seen; for that would be photography. The true expression is a personal equation placed somewhere between academic rendition of photographic accuracy, and a vague suggestion of what is represented. Both extremes are unsatisfactory."

English and American Autographs Sale.
On the afternoons of June 5 and 6, the last autograph sale of the season will be held at the Anderson Galleries where the collection goes on exhibition on Monday. A number of important autograph letters by members of the Old Congress, "Signers," and Revolutionary soldiers and statesmen are in the sale. Among the Civil War material are some remarkable letters by Generals Sherman, Lee and Jefferson Davis, which throw new light on the war. The literary material includes fine autograph letters by Hardy, Lamb, Meredith, Samuel Johnson Scott, Stevenson, Thackeray and a hundred others, and there are Mss. of unusual interest by Aldrich, Austin, Blackmore, Bryant, Hay, Hogg, Holland.

Sale of French Art.

A large and important collection of French art brought to this country by M. Jules Ratzkowski of Paris is on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale this afternoon May 29 and those of 31 and June 1. The decorative furniture is in great variety, representing the Louis XIV, Louis XV, Louis XVI and First Empire periods; writing tables, commodes and salon suites in Aubusson and Gobelins tapestry, particularly interesting and appealing, to a large class of collectors. There are many exquisite reproductions of famous pieces in the national museums and chateaux of France. This will be the last important art sale of the season here.

Sale of Phelps Library.

will be sold there on the afternoons of June 7-9 inclusive. There are many books on the war now raging in Europe, an unusual collection of books relating to famous clubs and other social organizations in the United States and England, and interesting works on history, literature, music and other subjects.

Sale of Rare Americana.

A large collection of books relating to California and other western states and containing many other important items of Americana, to which Mrs. William L. Bull of New York has added her collection of the publication of the Grolier Club is on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries and will be sold there on the afternoon and evening of Friday, June 2. It is many years since those who are collecting rare books on the Far West have found so many treasures in a single sale. There is some important autograph material in the sale, and among the Civil War material is the excessively rare Provisional Ritual of the Order of Lincoln and the first edition of the Debates with Douglas which Lincoln inscribed and presented to a friend.

Locke China and Furniture Sold.

American Art News

VOL. XIV., No. 35. Entered as second class mail matter, N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, JUNE 17, 1916.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

FAMOUS ITALIAN MSS. SOLD.

An American literary collection has just been enriched through the addition to it of a volume of great Italian mediaeval Mss., with numerous paintings by Giotto. This work is of exceptional interest and importance to the students of art generally and of paintings in particular, a real gem of Italian art. It will be reproduced, photographed and a book will be written on it by eminent scholars.

The manuscript was sold by Mr. Wilfrid de Voynich of London, during his present visit to the United States. He left with his collection of Mss. and books on Wednesday last for Phila. where he is stopping at the Bellevue-Stratford before proceeding to Chicago next week. The price paid for this treasure is not divulged but it naturally corresponds to the importance of the work. It is one of the most expensive manuscripts ever sold, the price being one above six figures. Mr. de Voynich will return to N. Y. in early July.

CLEVELAND'S NEW MUSEUM.

Cleveland, June 9, 1916.

At the opening of the Cleveland Museum of Art, which included afternoon exercises and an evening reception at the building in Wade Park, June 6, the garden sculptures acquired through recent excavation and presented by Mrs. John Huntington, with other sculptures, pottery and ancient glass given by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wade, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph King, Mrs. L. E. Holden and others, were seen for the first time, in the place of honor in the domed rotunda of the building.

A series of eight tapestries from the Barberini palace, telling the story of Aeneas, and given by Mrs. Dudley P. Allen as a memorial to Dr. Allen, with the rare examples of armor recently given by Mr. and Mrs. John L. Severance, are displayed in the court of tapestries and armor. The Holden collection of Italian art, containing fifty early works from the Jarves collection, is another munificent gift. Gold ornaments and other examples of renaissance art and a collection of tapestries and embroidered linens and other textiles are gifts from Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wade.

The nucleus of a fine collection of Oriental art has been acquired through the Worcester R. Warner fund and the John Huntington permanent collection includes many examples of ancient Egyptian art. Among the inaugural loans, which will be kept through the summer, are many treasures from the Freer collection, lent by the Smithsonian institution. Gifts and loans of single objects of value are numbered by hundreds.

In the Gothic gallery XII to XV century work in wood, stone and tapestries includes loans from the Blair collection. Mr. Edward Drummond Libbey of Toledo lends several portraits by Rembrandt, Franz Hals and Velasquez, a Constable, a Gainsborough and a Reynolds. The Ehrich Galleries have sent English portraits of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and R. C. and N. M. Vose contribute fourteen fine Monticellis, and the Hackley Gallery, Muskegon, Mich., a Rousseau, a Hoppner, a Raeburn, and Whistler's "Study in Rose and Brown. There are four other Whistlers and six Innesses, four of which are loaned by Mr. George Ainslie of New York.

The Hurlbut collection, owned by the museum, contains many works of XIX century American painters. Loans from the Vose, Holland, Ehrich, Knoedler and Macbeth galleries bring the number to fifty. The exhibition of paintings by contemporary American artists contains 121 entries, landscapes, portraits, marines and figure works. The Corcoran, Copley and Worcester galleries are well represented in the loans and private collectors have been generous.

William M. St. John, whose will was filed for probate June 4, left $10,000 to the Metropolitan Museum.

SIR C. HOLROYD RESIGNS.

(By Cable to the AMERICAN ART NEWS.)
London, June 14, 1916.

Sir Charles Holroyd has been compelled to resign the directorship of the National Gallery owing to ill health. A great controversy is going on as to who is to be his successor. An important and newly discovered "St. Peter" by Rembrandt has been purchased by Mr. Herbert Cook.

IRELAND'S NEW ART DIRECTOR.

R. Langton Douglas, the well-known English art dealer, and an authority on certain phases of early Italian art, having been one of the editors of the new edition of Crowe and Cavalcaselle's standard work on Italian art, has been appointed Director of the National Gallery of Ireland.

TO HEAD CHICAGO INSTITUTE.

The report that George William Eggers, art instructor at the Chicago Teachers' College is slated to succeed the late W. M. R. French, as director of the Chicago Art Institute, is not taken seriously by Dr. Montgelas and other Chicago art authorities. Mr. Eggers went to Chicago from Brooklyn, where he studied at the Pratt Institute, ten years ago. Since the death of Mr. French, two years ago, the secretary of the Institute, Newton H. Carpenter, has been acting director.

MR. LEHMAN'S BELLINI.

That discriminating American collector, Mr. Philip Lehman of New York, has been fortunate enough to secure in Italy an exceptionally fine and well known example of Giovanni Bellini, entitled "The Madonna of the Strawberries." This characteristic and representative example of the art of the great Venetian master is a worthy addition to Mr. Lehman's choice collection of Old Masters. The picture was obtained in and brought home from Italy by Mr. Lehman's son.

MR. DUVEEN'S GENEROSITY.

Mr. Joseph Duveen has placed the sum of £10,000 at the disposal of Viscount and Viscountess Esher in London for the purpose of repatriating and helping wounded and stricken Territorial soldiers of the County of London. The fund thus founded is to be called "the Joseph Duveen Fund," and Lord Esher has asked Mr. Duveen to assist him in controlling the use of the same.

HOUDON BUST OF LA CLAIRON.

The marble bust of a famous woman by Houdon recently secured by Mr. Henry C.

NEW CLEVELAND MUSEUM OF ART

Opened June 6th.

PRINCETON HONORS WEIR.

At the Princeton Commencement this week, J. Alden Weir was given an honorary Master of Arts degree, and his name was presented as follows: "J. Alden Weir, master of arts; president of the National Academy of Design, repeatedly honored here and abroad, who studied under Gérôme, and is described as a painter of vision and refined distinction, ever improving in method and adapting the most modern technique with simplicity and safety, free from all tricks of affectation, to depicting noble conceptions."

PROTESTS STATUE DESIGN.

John Ross Key, an artist, and the oldest grandson of Francis Scott Key, has written an open letter of protest against the accepted design for the monument to be erected to him and the soldiers and sailors who participated in the battle of North Point and the attack on Fort McHenry. He claims that the design shows misconception of the spirit and intention of Congress and is void of the patriotic feeling it should express and perpetuate.

NOW THE "MAN WITH MANDOLIN."

The correspondent of the Sun, in a cable under date of June 12, understands that the Metropolitan Museum of Art has paid 6,000 francs ($1,200) for a picture from an exhibition of the modernist school now being held at Mme. Bongard's ateliers entitled "A Man With a Mandolin."

Frick is of "La Clairon," the celebrated actress of the time of Louis XVI.

La Clairon was Claire Josephe Hippolyte Leyris de Latude, who was born in Flanders in 1723 and died in Paris in 1803. After her retirement from the Theatre Français in 1743, she became at 50 the favorite of the Margrave of Anspach.

SAYS WAR WILL SEND ART HERE.

A recent Associated Press correspondent from Berlin says: "The war probably will lead to the further transfer of Europe's art treasures to the United States, in the opinion of Prof. Wilhelm von Bode, general director of the Royal Museums at Berlin. Prof. von Bode gives several reasons: that the war is making a great increase in the wealth of many Americans, and that the breaking up of several of the great private collections in America, including that of the late J. P. Morgan, and the acquisition of many of their choicest pictures by public art museums, will tend strongly to develop the demand for good art works. Prof. von Bode says that in this way the public collections of New York, Boston, Washington and Chicago, together with dozens of cities not yet identified with art in an international sense, will become fully equal to those of European cities.

"This fresh demand for art works in the United States, Prof. von Bode says, will strike Europe at a time when people on this side will be forced to sell in order to get money to pay their debts.

MR. HILL'S ART TREASURES.

The late James J. Hill's art treasures were many and the choicest of them all are his pictures. His collection of works of the Barbizon School and those akin to it, is probably the finest in the country. The following is as complete a list of these works as it is possible to obtain:

FRENCH DECORATIVE ART SHOW.

M. Jean Guiffrey, French commission to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, according to a cablegram published in the "American" June 7, announces that a permanent exhibition of French decorative art will be opened in New York in Dec. This, M. Guiffrey says, is an outcome of the popularity of the French art palace in San Francisco and is designed to increase the artistic ties between the U. S. and France. The exhibit is to be completely changed every four months, and it is hoped to get all exhibits entered duty free, except such as may be sold to American collectors.

LUSITANIA MEDAL PRE-DATED!

One of the most interesting exhibits is shown by Mrs. Charles Greenough in the Anglo-American booth at the current Allies' Bazaar. It is a bronze medal struck in Berlin, to commemorate the sinking of the Lusitania, lent to Mrs. Greenough by a member of the British Admiralty. The date of the disaster, as shown on the coin, was May 5, 1915. The Lusitania was sunk on May 7 and this is held by the British authorities to be absolute proof that the Lusitania sinking was planned in Berlin, and that medals had even been struck to commemorate the deed before it had been committed, although the plans had miscarried to the extent of the ship being sunk two days later than scheduled.

Raymond Wyer to Go to War.

Mr. Raymond Wyer, director of the Hackley Art Gallery, at Muskegon, Mich., whose term expires in July, will then leave for England to tender his services to the British Government. He will be accompanied by his family and hopes to return to this country in the fall, and deliver a course of lectures on art.

The Exhibition of Sculpture held by the National Sculpture Society under the auspices of the Buffalo Fine Arts Academy, at the Albright Art Gallery, to open today, was the idea of the late Karl Bitter of New York. The president of the National Sculpture Society, Herbert Adams, the committee originally appointed by Mr. Bitter, composed of Adolph A. Weinman, Robert Aitken, and the director of the Albright Art Gallery, Dr. Cornelia B. Sage, wishing to carry out Mr. Bitter's wishes, decided to develop and present a real sculpture exhibition, not the usual affair in which the sculptors play but an incidental part. The exhibition is not a retrospective one; but its purpose is to give the public an opportunity to see a collection of contemporary American sculpture of the very highest order. The only works of deceased sculptors shown are those of Mr. Bitter, and one or two others who have died since the exhibition was first proposed.

The collection consists of original works of sculpture in all its branches: Medals, plaques, small and large sculptures in bronze, marble, plaster and other materials; wood and ivory carving, objects of sculpture in precious metals, portraits, allegorical statues and works of decorative or monumental character. Nearly all works of importance shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, amounting to four hundred in number, are included and in addition five hundred made since the Exposition by American sculptors of note, have been gathered for the occasion.

Besides all the work accomplished by the general committee, Adolph A. Weinman and Robert Aitken have done Buffalo and the Albright Art Gallery a great service, in giving three weeks of their valuable time and in coming to the Albright Gallery to install this great display.

The Albright Gallery and the grounds are finely adapted to the display. Those connected with the exhibition feel especially indebted to the Buffalo city officials who generously co-operated in giving the use of the park for the display of monumental and decorative examples.

ART AT ALLIED BAZAAR.

American artists who have contributed works to the Art Gallery of the Allied Bazaar, now in progress at the Grand Central Palace are Luis Mora, Henry S. Hubbell, Clark Voorhees, Dodge McKnight, George E. Browne, Arthur Crisp, E. Potthast, H. G. Dearth, Phillippe Boileau, Elliot Daingerfield, J. A. Weir, Jules Turcas, Wm. A. Coffin, M. J. Rougeron, D. Lockman, C. Warren Eaton, Wm. Walker, H. R. Butler, Bolton Jones, Louis Brackevelt, Francis Jones, G. H. Smillie, A. Powell, R. W. Van Boskerck, Charles C. Curran, H. Prellwitz, Walter Griffin, André Castaigne, Edith Prellwitz, Charles Cottet and John Fallinsbee.

Charles Duvent, the well-known French artist, has on exhibition a series of water-colors, splendidly executed and with much feeling. Each subject represents a scene in the present war, and the ruins of many beautiful cities.

Etchings at Kennedy's.

A fine display of some 40 etchings by Charles E. Platt, largely scenes on the New England coast, is on view at Kennedy & Co.'s, 613 Fifth Ave. They are all early proofs of the plates.

American Paintings at Knoedler's.

The ninth annual summer exhibition of American paintings, at Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., is an attractive one, consisting of 49 works. Particularly notable are an 1861 Inness "Medfield, Mass.," C. T. Chapman's "The East Indianman," G. de F. Brush's figure of an Indian "In the Dark Forest," J. A. Weir's "The Old Sentinels of the Farm," Paul Dougherty's "Late Afternoon," John S. Sargent's "A Tyrolean Crucifix," J. H. Twachtman's "Morning Glory, Yellowstone Park," Lilian Genth's "He des Nymphes," Douglas Volk's "The Dawn," W. Sartain's "Yon Craggy Height," Gari Melcher's "Summer Home," Emil Carlsen's "Old Sycamore," H. R. Butler's "A Foaming Sea in Sunlight," H. W. Ranger's "Twin Trees, Rathburn Pond" and F. S. Church's "The Flamingoes."

Summer Show at Montross's.

At the Montross Galleries, 550 Fifth Ave., there has been arranged a summer show to remain through the month, of works in oil, watercolor and pastel, by American painters, many of whom are noted for their advanced tendencies. George Bellows is represented by a striking figure of a young girl with a pink veil; E. Daingerfield has an effective moonlight on hay ricks. A breezy scene with boats on a bay is by Reynolds Beal, while a pointillist scene in an orchard is artistically handled by James Preston. "Wisteria" is a decorative garden effect, with a girl and parasol, by Karl Anderson. Among others represented are Ben Foster, Eugene Higgins, A. Schilling, J. A. Weir, C. B. Hartman, Allen Tucker, H. C. White, Horatio Walker, John Lafarge, Max Weber, T. W. Dewing, D. W. Tryon, Gifford and Reynolds Beal and Jerome Meyers.

Retrospective Display at the Arlington.

The Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., have on an interesting retrospective exhibition of American art. Notable among the 60 odd pictures are W. J. Hays' "The Third Alarm," Theo. Robinson's "The Home of Monet," Irving R. Wiles' "In the Garden," C. M. Young's "The End of the Lane," J. H. Twachtman's "Venice" and "River Scene," Percy Moran's "Divided Attention," F. K. M. Rehn's "The Approaching Storm," G. H. Boughton's "Scene on the Upper Hudson," Wordsworth Thompson's "Conway Meadows, N. H.," Winslow Tomer's "The Zouave," William Hart's "In the Scottish Highlands," K. van Elten's "The Sunlit Valley," F. Hopkinson Smith's "A Glimpse of Venice," F. B. Williams' "The Old Oak," and Samuel Colman's "Towboats on the Hudson."

Pictures at the City Club.

A dozen American pictures form the current display at the City Club, 55 W. 44 St. Included, are F. C. Frieseke's "The Garden in October," Ivan G. Olinsky's "The Pot of Basil," F. J. Waugh's "Heavy Surf," Max Bohm's "Bread upon the Waters," C. W. Hawthorne's "The Market Woman," James Knox's "Central Park," and examples of Carroll Brown, R. M. Shurtleff, W. H. Howe, Ben Foster, W. G. Bunce and C. F. Ryder.

Stage Settings by John Wenger.

There have been added to the current group display of American paintings, at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., three decorative models of stage settings by John Wenger. The principal one is arranged for dancing and the others for a concert and an out-of-door entertainment.

Montclair's Exhibition.

The summer exhibition of paintings by artists of Montclair and vicinity which is open to October at the Montclair Museum includes works by F. B. Williams, F. J. Waugh, C. W. Eaton, George Inness, Jr., H. R. Poore, W. J. Baer, T. R. Manley, James King, W. N. Hasler, G. Cimiotti, R. Sloan Bredin, W. J. Aylward, W. Couper and R. H. Couper.

NEWPORT ART ASSOCIATION.

The fifth annual exhibition of the Newport Art Association will be held in its galleries in Touro Park, July 11-25. Works will be received July 1. The Jury of Selection and Award consists of William Cotton, John Elliott, Robert Reid, Helena Sturtevant and Gertrude V. Whitney.

BITTER'S STATUE OF ABUNDANCE.

A graceful and unconventionally posed bronze statue of "Abundance," by the late Karl Bitter, has recently been placed on its pinnacle atop the large Pulitzer fountain, on the Plaza opposite the Fifth Avenue and 59 St. entrance to Central Park. The nude female figure, which is the last work of the sculptor, bends slightly to carry the basket of the fruits of the earth, which it seems about to empty. That the work satisfies the eye and the understanding at the height at which it is placed, betokens no mean artistic achievement.

WASHINGTON ON THE ARCH.

A dignified marble statue, heroic in size, of Washington in uniform by Herman A. MacNeill, has been placed on the eastern pedestal of the arch in Washington Square. As a background at either side of a shield the hero is flanked by figures of Fame and Valor. A second group showing Washington as President will be placed on the western pedestal.

NEW YORK'S INDIAN MUSEUM.

A plot of ground at the northwest corner of Broadway and 155 St., has been presented to the Museum of the American Indian, by Mr. Archer M. Huntington, one of the Council of the adjacent American Numismatic Society, with the understanding that a suitable building will be erected within a short time conforming architecturally with the group already existing in the block bounded by 155, 156 and Broadway, and erected through the same gentleman's interest and including the structures of the Numismatic, Hispanic and Geographical Societies. The new building will have a frontage of 65 feet, will be four stories in height and will be occupied by the collection of Indian relics formed by Mr. George G. Heye, valued at $500,000 and including 400,000 specimens. The museum will be devoted to solving the mystery of the origin of the prehistoric races of the Western Hemisphere.

ALEXANDER MEMORIAL MEETING.

A memorial meeting, in honor of the late John W. Alexander, was held at the Fine Arts Building on May 28. Resolutions were approved, for a permanent memorial in the form of a bronze tablet to be placed in the National Academy, for a collection of photographs of the painter's works, to be exhibited throughout the country, for the foundation of an Alexander medal, and urging further activity in the project for a building for the United Art Societies. The speakers were John G. Agar, president of the National Arts Club, Commissioner of Education, John H. Finley, John Drew and Cass Gilbert.

JOAN OF ARC MEDAL.

A medal in honor of the memory of Joan of Arc by Allan G. Newman, a young American sculptor, has been issued by the Circle of the Friends of the Medallion. This work of medallion art, the twelfth for which the Circle is responsible, bears upon the obverse a profile portrait of the Maid of Orleans, and upon the reverse a symbolic figure of France, with appropriate inscriptions on both sides.

MORGAN LOAN EXH'N CLOSED.

The exhibition of the Morgan loan collections closed May 29 at the Metropolitan Museum prior to the removal of the large number of objects that have been sold. Besides what has been given to the Museum, valued at some $10,000,000, it is thought that $15,000,000 worth of objects will remain on view.

Award of Municipal Art Society.

The Municipal Art Society, according to its bulletin, has awarded the prizes in its recent competition, at the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, for an elaborate naval reviewing stand, as follows: First prize, Robert Pallesen; medals, R. K. Harris, H. M. Kennedy, H. S. Kirschenberger, S. Y. Ohta, R. O. Derrick, R. D. Murray, E. E. Weihe and A. Brown, Jr.

The Cleveland Museum has purchased Theodore K. Pembroke's fine landscape "The Guards on the Valley."

J. W. ALEXANDER LEFT $417,651.

The appraisal of the estate of John W. Alexander, filed Tuesday, amounted to $417,651. The residuary estate of $402,047 was given to his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Alexander in trust, provision being made that it go, at her death, to their son, James W. Alexander, 2nd. Mr. Alexander pictures and studio furnishings were appraised at but $6,884. His portraits of Thurlow Weed and Andrew Carnegie were appraised at $510 each. Other valuations are "A Summer Day," $400; "The Gossip," $350; "Joseph Jefferson as Bob Acres," $300; "The Butterfly," $300; "June," $300; "Mother with Baby on Sofa," $250; "A Flower," $250; "Study of Girl with Roses," $250; "Study of Juliette Very," $200, and "Portrait of E. A. A.," $150.

WILLIAM WALTON'S WILL.

The will of William Walton, filed recently, bequeathed the Century Association a collection of his illustrated art and other works, published by George Barrie of Phila. These include "A History of Sculpture," "Mythology," "The Army and Navy of the U. S.," and volumes on the Paris Exposition of 1889 and 1900 and that on the Chicago Exposition of 1893, as well as a number of books by French authors translated by him. For rebinding the books $100 is left. The executors are Carroll Beckwith and A. W. Calliston, Jr. Bequests are made to an aunt, Mrs. Robert Purvis of Norway, Pa., and Mrs. Carroll Beckwith, and the former receives the residue of the estate, if any.

Mrs. Gellatlys Art Collection.

An appraisal of the estate of the late Mrs. Edith Rogers Gellatly, wife of Mr. John Gellatly, filed June 5, showed that her collection of works of art was valued at $118,712. Among the paintings and their appraised values are: H. D. Martin "Wild Coast Near Newport," $8,000; Piazzetti, "The Magic Mirror," $3,500; J. F. Murphy "Landscape," $3,000; J. W. Dewing, "La Peche," $3,000, and A. H. Thayer, "In White," $2,500.

BOSTON.

With the gradual dispersal of the artists to the country and seashore studios—for every self-respecting Boston artist "has one"—an academic hush has settled over the city. Aside from a peep into the studio of Bela L. Pratt to view his completed statue of Nathaniel Hawthorne, destined for Salem, one has for contemplation only drawings of the old masters, bought from the income of the Francis Bartlett fund, shown at the Art Museum. In viewing these drawings, one is constrained to believe that the Museum has made a discriminating purchase.

Meanwhile, the Museum School has been making a creditable showing of its pupils' work. A little ripple of genuine excitement was aroused by the discovery of young Mr. Ercole Cartotto's advanced and workmanlike productions, displayed in the master's studio of the school. Some of the portraits which Mr. Cartotto showed, although marked unfinished, "got over the footlights" in a remarkable way. But the young artist pulled off his biggest success with his silver-point drawings. Silverpoint portraits, as one knows, are again coming into vogue. The young man's handling of this difficult medium has revealed in it possibilities which one did not know it possessed. The painting and sculpture classes of the school showed a high average quality. Especially noteworthy in the department of design were Miss Lucy Conant's designs for stained glass windows, with their admirable richness and sparkle of color.

Reverting for a moment to Mr. Pratt's model for the statue of Hawthorne, one notes with pleasure that he has succeeded in realizing the dual personality of his subject—the practical, forceful side of the novelist's nature, combined with his dreamy idealism. The likeness is based on a photograph taken in the sixties, and the novelist is represented, hat in hand, as seated on a rock by the seashore, gazing intently seaward, there being a tradition to the effect that Hawthorne was in the habit of doing this at twilight, while planning his romances. Mr. Pratt is also at work on a large figure of Alexander Hamilton, commissioned under the Ferguson bequest for Chicago.

Again, apropos of matters academic, the Museum has just received another valuable gift from Mrs. W. Scott Fitz—a little Italian primitive of the Crucifixion, attributed to Lippo Memmi, who died in 1357. The picture shows Memmi's greatness as a painter. In its tragic seriousness and intensity it is as interesting a specimen as is the joyous Madonna by Fra Angelico which Mrs. Scott presented to the Museum in 1914.

John Doe.

TOLEDO.

The transient exhibition at the Toledo Museum is composed of 85 paintings by American artists. This exhibit will hang through August. Six prize winning canvases are included in this collection, and many of the artists represented have never shown in these galleries.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey A. Bromley of Toledo have presented to the Museum a group of pencil drawings and sketches by the late Frank C. Bromley, a painter of much promise, who died in 1890 in his 30th year. At the age of 19 he was the youngest American to have his paintings exhibited by the Paris Salon. He studied with Messonier.

John F. Carlson's magnificent winter landscape, "Woodland Repose" that has been on exhibition at the Mohr galleries, was purchased by Dr. Julius Jacobson for the Museum. The members of the Art Klan, who have been located in the Nasby tower for the past four years, have outgrown their tower studio.

Frank Sottek.

CHICAGO.

Although the art season is waning, the Art Institute and the galleries are exhibiting recently installed works—and the Institute is promising especially interesting loan-collection shows during the summer with occasional special assemblages and one-man presentations. The annual show of the work of the Institute's students is now shown in several galleries, and an unusual number of excellent examples are on the walls.

The University of Chicago is having a show of French impressionists, the grouping arranged by Richard Offner. Cazin, Manet, Renoir and Monet are exemplified in some of their best work. There is also a group of paintings by Whistler. This is the first of a series of loan collections from private galleries which the University has arranged for.

The Artists' Guild is featuring paintings and prints by Gustave Baumann, Alfred Juergens, Mary Butler and Leo H. Roecker. At the Anderson Galleries there is a collection of paintings by Sydney Adamson, an English artist. There are scenes from Constantinople, Russia, Tangier and Algieras in oils; and of Turkey, Odessa, and Tangier, in watercolors. In the collection are ten good portraits.

The unusual collection of "Lincoln" pictures, in painting, etching, and drawing at Young's is attracting throngs of transient

PHILADELPHIA.

In order to afford to the parties interested an opportunity of passing judgment, upon the plans of the proposed Art Alliance Building, designed by Hess, Cram & Ferguson of Boston, and which the projectors expect to occupy a location opposite Rittenhouse Square, copies have been sent to a number of the leading art, musical and literary societies in Philadelphia, who will most probably make the building their headquarters. A model, prepared from the architects' plans has been on public view for some weeks past at the "Today and Tomorrow Exposition" in the Commercial Museum. This model shows a building seven stories in height, giving on the Walnut Street front, by an open court surrounded by an enclosure of buildings two stories in height, triple gabled and half-timbered in Elizabethan style over the main entrance and treated as an arched cloister on the inside, running around the court.

A main auditorium seating about one thousand persons, a smaller one for chamber music, a ball room, a skylighted art gallery and a restaurant is provided for in the plans. It has been announced by the committee in charge that last week a total of $100,000 had been received from members or conditionally subscribed and that since then, additional subscriptions of $65,000 have been acknowledged.

In aid of the building fund there will be visitors in the city as well as local admirers of portraiture. These, with the Blakelocks, Bundys, and other paintings by American artists provide scope further enjoyment.

The Palette and Chisel Club shows groups of paintings by members, with prints by George Wentworth. The Reinhardt Gallery is attractive with an assemblage of European and American works.

Elizabeth Gibson is busy with her commission of murals for the Lake View High School. Nellie V. Walker is in her Midway studio modelling two commissions in sculpture. She will soon go to her studio in the artists' colony at "Eagle Nest," on Rock River, this state, where Lorado Taft, Ralph Clarkson, Charles Francis Brown, Oliver Dennett Glover, and other painters and sculptors have summer cottages.

BALTIMORE.

Art students of Baltimore have an unusual opportunity for continuing their studies into the vacation period, the Maryland Institute for the first time in its history having opened a Summer School.

This proceeding is in line with that a few years ago of the Johns Hopkins University and the Peabody Conservatory of Music and was adopted in response to many requests. The enrollment is surprisingly large and the indications are that the experiment will prove a complete success.

C. Y. Turner, director of the Institute, is in charge of the Summer session and its faculty consists of members of the regular staff. It will continue for a month or six weeks.

MR. LEHMAN'S "ST. VERONICA."

The exceedingly beautiful and valuable "St. Veronica" tapestry from the Morgan collection, reproduced on this page, which Mr. Philip Lehman, one of the most cultured collectors of N. Y. has recently acquired from P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., is ascribed in its design to Quentin Matsys. It originally formed part of the famous collection of Lord Sackville at Knole Park and is thought to have been made in Brussels, at the opening of the XVI Century. The same artist is said to have designed the very similar work "The Mass of St. Gregory," which figures in the Spanish Royal collection. The tapestry, woven in gold and silk and wool, is 11 feet high by 11 feet 1 inch wide and has a late Gothic border of fruits, flowers, foliage and birds. The subject shows how the Roman Emperor Vespasian was cured on kneeling before the sacred handkerchief of St. Veronica, on which the face of the Savior had been miraculously reproduced after its use, while bearing his cross at Calvary. This tapestry is held to be third in importance of those which originally formed the Morgan collection.

PROVIDENCE.

Although the art season is about closed, there is still much activity in local galleries and studios. At Tilden & Thurber's, paintings by W. C. Fidler are on view, consisting of twenty-one examples. The collection affords an excellent opportunity for study of the work of this painter who belongs to the period of Inness and Wyant.

At the Prov. Art Club, a memorial exhibition of work by the late W. Staples Drown is on to October.

Over one hundred paintings are hung, embracing several important loans and a large number from the estate.

"Moonrise at Tewkesbury," loaned by the Prov. Art Club and "An Irish Lane," loaned by Frank L. Pierce, are excellent examples. Other important canvases are "Village at Evening" and "Harvest Moon" very delicate and subtle in feeling and typical of the artist who loved to paint the long English twilight hour. The collection includes many of the English and Irish cottages, and a number of landscapes painted in Florida.

The Prov. Water Color Rotary Show is still at Danielson Conn. and a subscription fund is being raised for the purchase of a painting for the Danielson Public Library. A painting by Clara Maxfield Arnold has also been purchased from this exhibition. George A. Hays has sold his large pastoral canvas with cattle entitled, "Distant Hills."

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT
SUMMER ISSUES.

The AMERICAN ART NEWS will, as usual during the summer, appear monthly until Saturday, October 14 next, when the weekly issues will be resumed, and a new volume will begin.

The remaining regular summer monthly issues will be published on Saturdays, July 15, August 19 and September 15.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger, Andrews-Canfield, and the Catholina Lambert Picture Sales, is now ready.

NEW CLEVELAND MUSEUM.

It is greatly to be regretted that the opening of the new Art Museum at Cleveland, Ohio, should have fallen on the same day, June 6 last, as that appointed for the first assemblage of the Progressive and regular Republican hosts for the Presidential Conventions in Chicago.

This unfortunate clashing of dates, and the natural devotion of space and interest by the newspapers of the country to the Convention news, never of more universal public interest, resulted in the almost complete ignoring of the Museum's opening by the press of the country—as we have said, a most regrettable occurrence.

The same conflict of interest prevented, or had something to do with preventing, the attendance at the Museum's opening exercises of the art writers and critics—who it will be remembered were present in force and as personal guests, at the opening of the Toledo Museum some four years ago—and whose presence there made the Toledo Museum and its beauties known to the general art public, as they would not otherwise have been known.

Those Museum Directors, and the few other collectors and art lovers, who attended the opening of Cleveland's new art Palace—were more than surprised at its beauty and effectiveness of architecture—the loveliness and appropriateness of its site in Wade Park, and the taste and skill shown in the arrangement and lighting of its galleries—and especially by the size and importance of the white marble structure—which make it, if we are not mistaken, the second only in size (for the Chicago Art Institute and Pittsburgh Carnegie buildings are not distinctively Art Museum buildings), to the Metropolitan Museum of New York, in the country.

The architects and the Director, Mr. F. E. Whiting, deserve the greatest credit for the designing and planning of this new and most important addition to American Art Museums and the City of Cleveland is to be warmly congratulated upon the possession of such a structure and such an Institution for the furtherance of art interest, not only in Cleveland, but the country.

It has taken Cleveland, the sixth city in population in this country, some thirty years to fully awake to the importance of local and national art education and interest, and she has lagged sadly behind Buffalo, Toledo, and even some smaller cities of the West and Middle West in this awakening. But it has come at last, and in her new Museum, Cleveland steps into the first rank of American cities whose citizens have learned that art education and cultivation must be provided for by any city which does not wish to remain crude and provincial, in tone and atmosphere, as far too many mid-Western and Western cities so remain today.

The illustration on the first page will give a good idea of the dignified and inspiring character and effect of the new Museum, and our correspondent's letter, in another column, reviews briefly the remarkable display of art works

—some owned by the Museum and others assembled, through loans, by Director Whiting, which signalizes the opening of the Institution. In a later issue we hope to describe the new Museum more fully, as well as its contents, but meanwhile we again congratulate Cleveland and its citizens on their Museum, the generous donors of the funds which enabled the building to be completed, and of the treasures which it contains, and lastly the architects and the Director, on the fulfillment in such measure of their long labors, hopes and desires.

CORRESPONDENCE

Trask vs. Laurvik.

To the Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.
Dear Sir.

If the report of Mr. Laurvik's appointment as director of the projected San Francisco Art Museum be true, I wish to echo your lament. Your main objection seem to be "nativistic," but Mr. Laurvik is not only an alien but a sponsor for alienist art. Unless he has completely changed his point of view since he controlled most of the exhibitions at the National Arts Club, N. Y., and there eulogized the "aberrationists," his appointment would be nothing short of a calamity. If Matisse were appointed director of the Metropolitan Museum it would mean to New York what the appointment of Mr. Laurvik would mean to San Francisco.

To place "Modernists" at the head of our public art institutions is like putting in charge of our great public hospitals, faith healers who think the germ theory "academic," antisepsis "Victorian," cleanliness hypocritical, conscientiousness self-righteous, devotion to duty fantastic.

Whether Mr. Trask has "played favorites" or not I cannot say. He certainly made out a good case for himself in his widely circulated "retort courtoise" to my critical questioning on the politics of art in 1914. But were the worst true that has been said of Mr. Trask, if he did "play favorites," it was within the circle where all are deserving. He never favored the purveyors of evil dreams.

The fact that Mr. Laurvik is sincere, enthusiastic and a good fellow would not mitigate the calamity of his appointment.

Charles Vezin.

New York, June 12, 1916.

OBITUARY.

Helena deKay Gilder.

Helena deKay Gilder, a painter of talent, widow of Richard Watson Gilder, long editor of the Century Magazine, died May 28, at her home in this city in her 70th year. She was a sister of Charles deKay, a daughter of Commodore deKay and a granddaughter of Joseph Rodman Drake, author of "The Culprit Fay." Mrs. Gilder studied art in Dresden and afterwards at the Cooper Union. It was at her home, where the Authors Club also had its inception, that the Society of American Artists was founded. Flowers, portraits and ideal figure works were the subjects she chose. Her two sons are Rodman and George deKay Gilder and her three daughters, Francesca and Rosamond Gilder and Mrs. Dallas D. L. McGrew.

Charles Pryer.

Charles Pryer, banker and publisher, died June 8, in his 69th year. His collection of arms, armor and coins was one of the finest in the country.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. C. T. Loo of Lai-Yuan & Co., 557 Fifth Ave., sails today on the Touraine for Bordeaux and will return in October.

Mr. Georges Durand-Ruel, of 12 W. 57 St., sails for France June 24, on the Lafayette.

Mr. Edward G. Kennedy, of Kennedy & Co., has retired from active business and is now travelling in the West.

Mr. Du Parc, of Chichon Brothers, will sail for London with his family on the Noordam, June 28.

Mr. Edward Brandus and family will sail for Bordeaux, en route to Paris, on the Lafayette, June 24.

A SILHOUETTE OF J. E. D. TRASK.

In the June number of Arts and Decoration, the editor, Guy Pene Du Bois, pays attention to former Director J. E. D. Trask, of the Art Department of the Pana-Pac. exhibition, as follows, under the head, "Who's Who in American Art."

"We may have begun this strictly art department with a reference to politics a good many times prior to this beginning. We will probably do this wilfully again and again. We will never do it again with so much justice. Mr. John E. D. Trask, who was Director of Art at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, is only equaled by his best friend, Mr. E. W. Redfield, as a politician in American art.

* * *

"Mr. Trask talks a little or a lot, depending upon the person addressed, in the same manner that Mr. Redfield plies his brush—we mean broadly and calmly. Great artists have souls too sensitive to maintain a comforting spirit. Mr. Trask, because of a sedate wisdom, knows that material success and sensitiveness are not synonymous. Lacking nerve we may be sure that nerve will never fail us. Mr. Trask goes ahead. The talk about him, and there is always some, bothers him a little. He is not overfond, among others, of Mr. James B. Townsend. However, there is no need to rake up either old grudges or old magazine articles. The past is past. Mr. Trask can smile in a large way and does, not infrequently, though we have seen that smile contract a little. But that is a secret so difficult of verification that it need go no further.

"He was once American Commissioner at an exposition, to which Americans were invited to send pictures, at Buenos Ayres. Mr. Redfield must have been awarded a prize there, too. The pictures were somewhat late in returning to their rightful owners. Buenos Ayres is not especially near to those art centers of the United States inhabited by its painters. Some of them were more put out by the delay in the return of their pictures than by the wear and tear coincident with the distance they (the pictures) had traveled. Artists have strange souls. If Mr. Trask has a soul, it is not more evident than the one so completely hidden beneath the bronze form of the statue of William Penn with which he has one or two other things in common.

"Artists tell us that when he visits their studios in the capacity of judge, to select their pictures for exhibition he reminds them of Mr. Daniel Garber (who should live at New Hope if he does not) in the same capacity. We have never met Mr. Daniel Garber in any capacity. We hope—no, this is really quite ridiculous. Artists with respect to their own works are always radicals, and radicals are always more wrong than mugwumps. Besides, if what they say is true, it would turn a fact into an illusion, a truth into a farce; we cannot lend our ears to the babel of the innocents, to the prattling prejudice of painters. There is conviction to be rooted out of a calm smile, solace in the breadth, be it only of waist, of a large man. We prefer to believe that the expositions over which Mr. Trask presides are representative. We cling to our books of fairy tales, continue to believe in Santa Claus—do not tell us that he is a German atrocity.

"Mr. Trask, like his friend, Edward W. Redfield, is a great politician. Mr. Redfield hung a room with his own pictures at the Panama-Pacific International Art Exposition. Mr. Trask did more than that, he hung the entire exhibition. It may be that he is the greater politician. We do not know. We cannot in any case see that to be a politician in art or elsewhere is necessarily to be wicked. It is said that if Mr. Trask had not possessed himself of a certain father-in-law, and of mastery of the game of politics, art circles would never have heard of him. But that also is ridiculous. Without a commission from the Pope would Raphael have painted the Sistine Madonna? Perhaps, but at least it would have had another name."

NEW LAFAYETTE MEMORIAL.

The Municipal Art Commission has approved of the monument to Lafayette provided for by the will of Henry Barteau, designed by D. C. French, and to be set up at the Ninth Street entrance to Prospect Park, Brooklyn. The memorial, shortly to be unveiled, shows Lafayette in Continental uniform on a bronze tablet in bas-relief. He stands by his horse, which is held by a negro groom. The figures are of life size and at either side of the tablet will be two granite seats.

Mr. Charles H. Graff, until recently manager of the Katz Galleries, which passed with an auction sale last month, has become associated with Kennedy & Co., of 613 Fifth Ave.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. James P. Silo, Jr., the last week in May.

LONDON LETTER.

June 6, 1916.

A decision has at last been arrived at with regard to certain of the pictures left by the late Sir Henry Layard and which his family claimed to be "portraits" and so not to be included among those intended for the National Gallery. The Court of Appeal has now ruled that these are not "portraits" as meant by the terms of the will, and they will therefore pass into the possession of the nation. They include a Bellini, a Vandyck, and a Giorgione which is attributed by many critics (as most Giorgiones are) to Titian.

Another important addition to our national collections, is the Sargent portrait of Henry James. This has been bequeathed by the late novelist to the National Portrait Gallery with the proviso that should it not be accepted by the trustees, it is to be handed over to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. As the portrait is one of great merit it seems unlikely that it will fail to find a home in England.

The Red Cross Sale's Effects.

The Fine Art Trade Journal, I observe, has seen fit to question the authenticity of the statements made in one of my previous letters regarding the slump in business experienced by the dealers subsequently to the Red Cross Sales at Christie's, and that they assert that they "would like to know the evidence on which the allegations are based!" There is no difficulty in satisfying the wishes of this admirable publication, for the writer of the paragraph has but to prosecute a few enquiries on his own account in the neighborhood of Bond Street and St. James Street to have every statement made by me fully corroborated and even amplified. Indeed, the damage to the trade temporarily inflicted this year by the great sale at Christie's has, I am told on the best of authority, had an even greater effect on business than had that of last year. The proprietor of a well known picture firm complained to me the other day that the invitations to a show, sent out by him shortly after the conclusion of the sale, did not bring half a dozen persons to the private view, whereas a similar number issued on previous occasions had never failed to draw a crowd. This falling-off, he admitted, might be partially due to other causes but in his opinion the recent sale was for the most part responsible!

Famous Landseer Sells Well.

When it became known that the famous Barratt Collection was to be put up at Christie's this season, conjecture immediately became rife with regard to the probable price which would be fetched by the various well-known pictures and "The Monarch of the Glen" in particular received no little discussion on this score. It was largely predicted that a colossal fall in value was to be witnessed in regard to the Landseer, for at the present moment it is the fashion to decry this artist's achievements and to vote them as belonging to the obvious and out-of-date. Anticipation was, however, hardly realized, for bidding commenced at 2,000 gns. and did not finish until 5,000 gns. had been offered by Sir Thomas Dewar. This price, although it represents a decrease of 1,900 gns. on that paid by Mr. Barratt at the Cheylesmore Sale in 1892, was exceedingly satisfactory for it happens that this was the price which its late owner prophesied would be fetched whenever the picture should be put up at auction.

Italian Etchers' Show.

The Italian "Associazione Italiana Acqua-fortisti e Incisori" who represent the foremost engravers and etchers in their own country, have been invited by the Royal Society of British Artists to exhibit in the Spring Show and the largest of the Suffolk Street rooms has been accordingly given over to their work. In this instance the Italian craftsmen are represented by work of the highest degree of technical dexterity and ample evidence is given of their capacity for breadth of handling and of their capability for bold and definite treatment of the themes chosen. But further praise it is not possible to give, for there is a general lack of personality in the exhibits and one would even have felt inclined to pardon a slight defectiveness in style if one might thereby have gained in general significance.

Quite an exceptional Sale Catalog, is that published in connection with the forthcoming sale at Christie's of Mr. S. E. Kennedy's collection of Chinese Porcelain the dispersal of which is to take place on the 21st and 22nd of this month. This catalog contains, in addition to a number of photogravure illustrations, several reproduced in color.

An important event in July will be the sale at Hodgson's in Chancery Lane of a portion of the Broadley Library. There are many fine extra-illustrated works, including a number containing colored plates of particular merit. The second part of the sale is to take place in October. L. G. S.

ITALIAN ART NOTES.

Rome, June 1, 1916.

At Ravenna, Austrian aeroplanes recently dropped bombs on the church of St. Apollinaris; fortunately, however, the church itself was not struck fully, the damage being confined to a part of the ancient portico. This damage, luckily can be repaired, thanks to the fact that a reproduction of the mosaics was made some time ago, and all the fragments of the ruined colonnade and materials of the mosaics are still there. One cannot say, therefore, that the injury is so very great; but how serious and irreparable it would have been if the bombs had fallen some yards further on and had struck the nave!

The General Director of Antiquities and Fine Arts, Comm. Corrado Ricci, in a recent interview, said: "One dared to call a barbarian the man who built this church, that Theodoric, who, dominating our country, strove to respect the Roman traditions and to act in conformity with Roman ideals. What would he say now if he could see this barbaric deed?"

The importance of this monument is universally known. Although it lost the mosaics of the apse a month after its construction, it still conserves the mosaics of the walls which, in addition to their artistic splendor, present a unique historical interest, owing to the fact of their uniting the Romanic work of Italian artists, with that of the Byzantines. The latter began their work on the church, immediately after its consecration by the Archbishop Agnello. The representations of the martyrs and Virgin on these walls are recognized as among the most notable and splendid creations of mediaeval mosaic art, and are, altogether, a marvel of decoration.

The well-known professor—Dominico Ficalci of Arezzo, is now developing a great work on the celebrated frescoes in the choir of the church of S. Francesco, where Piero della Francesca has represented the "Legendo Aurea"—the Story of the Cross.

At Arezzo, they are making some remarkable restorations in the church of S. Domenico (A.D. 1200), as well as the picture of S. Maria della Pieve (1400); other restorations have been commenced on the magnificent windows of the Nunziata, painted by Guglielmo di Marsiglia; at Bologna the frescoes in the sanctuary of the Madonna of S. Luca; at Piacenza in the church of S. Francesco; at Cremona in the Vodri Palace.

Lately there was a notable discovery of a painting by Gian Domenico Tiepolo, as the result of some restorations, made by Prof. G. Facciù, in the palace of the Countess Porto at Vicenza. This beautiful picture, representing S. Rocco, was found in an attic, and after being restored has been placed in the precious collection of this patrician family. The authenticity of this painting is also confirmed by Dr. G. Forolari, Director of the Royal Galleries of Venice.

HORNE'S GIFT TO FLORENCE.

Milan, June 1, 1916.

Through the death of Herbert Horne, the distinguished English connoisseur and collector of Italian art, and author of numerous valuable works on Botticelli and other artists, the Italian Government has become the legatee of Horne's splendid palace in Florence, together with its valuable collection of old masters and works of art. In addition to painting and sculpture, Mr. Horne was a great student of architecture, and he was able to put his taste and knowledge to good advantage in the restorations which he had carried out on his own house in Florence, the palace attributed to Giuliano di San Gallo, at the corner of Via dei Fossi and Via dei Benci which he purchased some years ago.

The furnishing of this palace, and the arranging of his art treasures in the various rooms, was still under way at the time of his death. It was his wish that the labor to which he had dedicated his life and his fortune should not be in vain, and he, therefore, left the palace and its contents to the Government on the condition that the foundation should bear his name and that the collection should serve as a sort of museum for the study of art-history. Horne bequeathed his entire wealth in Florence to the Government for the maintenance of this foundation, and the residue of his estate in England, the interest of which was to be enjoyed by his brothers during their lifetime, is to be devoted to the same end. The legacy consists of a very large collection of paintings, majolica, bronzes, drawings, etc., of inestimable value. Amongst the drawings there are some by Raphael, Rubens, Vandyck, Tiepolo, Salvator Rosa, etc.

ART AT SAN DIEGO EXPOSN.

The recently rehung gallery of Fine and Applied Arts of the Southern Cala. Building at the Panama Cala. International Exposition at San Diego has 75 canvases, chosen out of a possible three hundred, submitted by the resident representative artists of the Southwest, and passed by a jury composed of five members from the Cala. Art Club of Los Angeles, the largest organized Art Association in southern Cala.

Among the landscapes are excellent examples from the brushes of William Wendt, Benjamin C. Brown, Hanson Puthuff, L. H. Sharp, Detlaf Samman, Maurice Braun, Franz Bischoff, Carl O. Borg, Carl Yens, Aaron Kilpatrick, Gerald Cassidy and other members of the Cala. Art Club. Portrayals of Indian life are shown by Joseph H. Sharp, Cala. flowers by A. H. Valentein, Marines by Miss Charlton E. Fortune, Detlaf Samman and Frank W. Cuprien, and portraits and figure works by Jean Mannheim, Helena Dunlap, Donna Schuster, Guy Rose and John Rich.

Sculptures are shown by Julia B. Wendt, Maud Daggett, Elizabeth Edmond, Annetta J. St. Gaudens, Andrew Bjurman, Caspar Gruenfeld, Marco Zim, and Edna Schofield, and miniatures by Mabel Packard, Alice Lodovici, Mary Harland, Mrs. Laura M. D. Mitchell, Rosa Hooper, and Mary Benton of the Cala. Society of Miniature Artists, and Minerva Chapman, formerly president of the American Society of Women Artists, Paris, France.

In the Applied Arts section are textile fabrics, designed and executed by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Johonnot, craft jewelry by Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Donaldson, Rose Connor, and Mrs. Fred Bacon; wrought copper by Pelee Didier, Adolph Lesovsky, and repousse portraits by Adolph Feil.

Interesting pottery comes from Frederick H. Rhead of Santa Barbara and Cornelius Brauckman; decorative tiles from E. A. Batchelder of Pasadena; and hand illumined parchments by Robert Wilson Hyde.

The curator of this gallery is Mrs. Maude Deverell Foster, formerly of Chicago.

CONNECTICUT ART NOTES.

The portrait of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, by Carlos Baca-Flor, which has been in the artist's hands for some time, undergoing restoration, was recently rehung in the Morgan Museum in Hartford. The picture had become affected by the severe heat a few summers ago and was removed from the wall after the nature of its injury had been made known to the directors by James Britton, while on a visit to the museum. The tar color used by Baca-Flor had "run" during the excessive hot spell.

The historic Webb house of Revolutionary fame is being decorated with mural paintings of Revolutionary scenes by Paul Korder, Louis Donlon and Edwin Yunk of Hartford. The famous homestead was purchased some time ago by Wallace Nutting.

Recent exhibitions in Hartford have included those of Oscar Anderson's marines at the Athenum Annex; A. E. Jones' landscapes and I. F. Wenworth's cattle-pieces at their respective studios, and William Bradford Green's paintings at the Wiley Gallery.

HOE ART APPRAISED.

An appraisal of the estate of Robert Hoe filed June 7, valued his etchings, engravings and other prints at $34,524, objects of decorative and industrial art, $78,072, paintings, $152,540, Japanese and Chinese pottery $167,930 and objects of European art, not including paintings and statuary, $395,712. Five tapestries were valued at $15,000 and clocks and barometers at $24,340. The sale of the library, at the American Art Galleries, netted $1,910,610.

ART WORLD WEDDINGS.

Clarke-Ferguson.

Miss Elsie Ferguson, the actress, was married Wed. at the St. Regis to Mr. Thomas Benedict Clarke, Jr., banker and son of Mr. T. B. Clarke, the well-known collector of American and Oriental art.

Haggin-Roche.

Ben Ali Haggin, who recently inherited some $10,000,000, married early in the month Miss Helen Roche, long popular on the stage as Bonnie Glass. This is his second marriage.

Ely-Weir.

Miss Caroline Alden Weir, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Alden Weir, was married on June 7 in the Church of the Ascension to Mr. George Page Ely of Old Lyme, Conn.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, June 5, 1916.

In spite of the fact that Europe is bleeding, as it were, at almost every pore, people continue to die peacefully in their beds, instead of on the battlefield. Some sales of collections of art objects and curios that have taken place at the Hôtel Drouot of late make one doubt that France is being so greatly impoverished by her dreadful ordeal as many have supposed. The estate of Madame Emile Gaillard has yielded some extremely notable prices. A small piece of Flemish tapestry of the XV century, representing the procession of the Magi, fetched $8,500, double the minimum price demanded. A large Faenza plate of the XV century, bearing the arms of the great Mathias Corvin, King of Hungary, and made expressly for him, was sold for $5,650. Twelve years ago this piece, at a public sale, was adjudged at $10,200. A basin of Valence faience of the XV century, for which $3,000 was asked, fetched $6,800. The highest price brought by a painting was $6,160 for "The Turkish Butcher," by Decamps. It was sold in 1904 for $9,700. The same artist's "Flight into Egypt," which was sold for $3,700 in 1904, brought $1,500, and the "Blond Enigma" of Ricard (the head of a young girl), $2,500, just half its valuation in the last decade.

Art for the Mutilated.

Re-education of the mutilated soldiers, with the object of opening new ways of livelihood for them, and—what is more—of giving them a new interest in life, has taken very largely an artistic direction. All of the poor fellows, who possess the least artistic talent, are pushed zealously along this road, and some of the results of this patriotic and philanthropic effort, are already quite wonderful. An exhibition now in progress is proving very successful. Several of those who have contributed to it like André Jacques, for instance, who has lost his right arm, were already well known before the war.

More important, of course, from the esthetic point of view, is the exhibition at Georges Bernheim's new gallery in the rue La Boétie of pictures and sculptures by many of the foremost artists in France for the profit of the association known as the "Foyer du Soldat Aveugle"—the "Blind Soldier's Fireside." Three well-known American artists, Walter Gay, Julius Stewart and Eugene Paul Ullman, are among the exhibitors. Mr. Gay's subject is the hallway and staircase of the Longfellow mansion at Cambridge, and it is certainly one of the best pictures that he has ever painted. Mr. Ullman's still-life is slightly aggressive in coloring, but decoratively charming. Mr. Stewart presents a carefully wrought portrait of an anonymous young girl. Roll, the president of the Junior Salon, shows also a very literal portraiture of a young girl, with much greater sincerity and more decisive execution than are his wont. Roche-grosse has a "story-picture" of a most touching character, "The Pity of the Roses"—a blinded soldier, wandering alone in the garden of an infirmary, gropingly fondling the flowers that seem, with comprehending tenderness, to reach up tenderly to receive his caress.

Joseph Bail, Maurice Bompard, Paul Chabas, Raphaël Collin, Cottet, Flandrin, Victor Gisoul, Guillaumin, Harpignies ("the ever young"), Helleu, Jean-Paul Laurens, F. Lauth, Lhermitte, Claude Monet, Picasso, Renoir, Saint-Germier and Vuillard are all characteristically represented. What I said in a former letter about the freshening influence of the world's crisis upon the work of the elder painters is fully confirmed in this exhibition.

Again the Humorists.

The perennial Salon of the Humorists is again open, but this year, in spite of the most valiant efforts of the popular purveyors to laughter, it is rather sombre. The wit is mostly of the savagely mordant kind, at the expense of the foci of France, and the irony and sarcasm are so deeply felt that they border closely upon the sinister.

Still it should be said to the everlasting credit of French taste that there is little of the gross and vulgar in any of these assaults with pencil and pigment. There are a great many realistic war sketches, mostly battle-views and glimpses of life in the trenches or near-by. Steinlen depicts the arrival of soldiers in Paris on furlough, with his usual vigor and melodramatic expressiveness. The Alsatian satirists are conspicuous. islin shows the Kaiser in the guise of Lohengrin, drawn through a sea of blood by two swans whose beaks resemble those of Franz-Josef and the Bulgar Tsar, towards a shore where Death stretches forth fleshless arms to welcome him. Hansi covers the German types of face and figure with his usual ridicule. Some of the French artists rally their countrymen and their countrywomen who remain far from the real shocks of war upon their smug censoriousness towards those directing the fighting force of the nation. Abel Faivre is excellent in this sort of satire.

Eric Tayne.

FROM ART TALKS with RANGER (G. P. Putnam's Sons, Publishers, New York)
"Of course, the real value of any work of art is in the thought. A noble conception lamely expressed is worth a wilderness of examples of watch-making art. This, however, is only a personal contention. There are plenty of others to take the other side. It is still the old argument: the poetic against the academic."

With stories from the entire field of art, ancient and modern, profusely illustrated with full page typo-gravures, the May number of "Art and Archaeology" appeals to lovers of the beautiful.

Dr. Edgar J. Banks contributes the third of a series of articles on the "Seven Wonders of the Anvient World," the third "Wonder" being "The Statue of the Olympian Zeus." The first of the series of two articles on "The Sculptor Myron in the Light of Recent Discoveries," by George H. Chase has eight illustrations, and considers the "Discus-Thrower" (Discobolus). Prof. W. H. Holmes writes of "The Oldest Dated American Monument" ("A Nephrite Figurine from Mexico"), and of some "Guatemalen Pottery."

Mr. Dan Fellows Platt discourses on the seventh of his "Lesser Known Masterpieces of Italian Painting," the "Kneeling Angel" of Bernardino Luni, and there are many other interesting articles, notes etc.

Worcester Museum's July Show.

The Worcester Museum will have a special exhibition of pictures by contemporary English artists during July. The institution lately acquired by purchase "The Gale," by Winslow Homer; portraits of William Carpenter and Mary Carpenter, by Ralph Earl; "The Presentation," by Benjamin West; "Madonna and Child and St. John," by Francesco Francia; "Portrait of a Painter," by Vittore Ghislandi; eight pieces of Chinese porcelain from the J. P. Morgan collection; 25 engravings by St. Memin; Japanese prints by Hokusai, Hiroshige and others. Two gifts from the late Henry Wolf consist of proofs of his wood engravings of Gilbert Stuart's "Elizabeth Tuckerman Salisbury" and Hogarth's "Selina, Countess of Huntingdon."

The 700 posters entered in the first national $2,200 prize poster competition of the Society of Electrical Development will be exhibited free at the Anderson Galleries, 284 Madison Ave., during the week of June 19. The designs will be shown later in Boston, Pittsburgh and Chicago.

The estate of William E. Norton, the old marine painter, who died Feb. 28, was recently appraised at $4,485, which goes to his daughters, Gertrude M. and Florence E. Norton.

Carroll Beckwith recently presented the Flower Hospital, an oil portrait of a French peasant woman, to be disposed of at private sale.

William M. Chase was, on the occasion of the recent commencement, created Doctor of Laws by N. Y. University.

S. L. Landeau, who recently returned from France where he resided 24 years, is to hold an exhibition of his paintings in the Public Forum (Chapel) at East Aurora, N. Y. The fifty pictures were recently shown at Buffalo and the Detroit Museum. They include the "Prayer for the Lost at Sea," which received a gold medal at the Salon, as well as several French peasant and classical subjects.

Orlando Rouland has just painted portraits of the well-known novelist Irving Bacheller, the veteran editor of Harper's Magazine, Henry Mills Alden and of Mr. Vinton Liddell, of Charlotte, N. C. He will spend the greater part of the summer at Onteora in the Catskills where he has taken George Reid's Studio Cottage "Bonnie Brae." He will later go to his place on Peconic Bay.

The just opened annual exhibition of "Recent Additions," in the Print Gallery at the Public Library, consists of works of old masters and modern men, of a group of accessions to the Avery collection and various miscellaneous items. Of the Stauffer collection only a few prints are shown, it being the intention to make a special exhibit of it later on.

Miss Louise J. Smith, for some years Art Instructor at the Randolph-Macon College for Women of Lynchburg, Va., one of the best educational institutions in the country, is to give a course on the History and Appreciation of Art at the Metropolitan Museum. Miss Smith studied art in New York and later spent seven years in the European Galleries.

Mrs. Ethel Quinton Mason of Buffalo, who had charge of the French Pavilion at the San Francisco Exposition, and who later directed the travelling display of the French pictures shown at the Exposition, and now at the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh, has joined the official force of the Detroit Museum as a general assistant to the director, Mr. C. E. Moore.

The City Arts Commission of St. Paul proposes to connect the Cathedral and the Capitol, with a parkway in honor of the late J. J. Hill.

Francis Girardin's bronze group, "The Rape of Proserpine," long sought, it is said, by the French Government, is now owned by Mrs. O. P. Shiras of Dubuque, Pa., and is now at the Carnegie-Stout Public Library in that city.

Arthur T. Hill recently sold his important canvas "A Woodland Sunset" to well known collector. A number of well-composed canvases painted at East Hampton, L. I., during last summer and autumn, are displayed at his studio, 33 West 67th St.

A sale of autographs and other Mss. in two sessions at the Anderson Galleries, which ended June 6, fetched $3,085.55. Four Washington letters sold to Mr. J. A. Wilson for $170, $155, $150 and $135.

Mrs. Thaw's Temple Paintings.

Mrs. Benjamin Thaw's collection of Chinese temple paintings, sold at the American Art Galleries, May 26, brought $4,540. Mr. S. Culin paid $130 for a XVII century example.

Books and Autographs Sold.

At the first session Monday of a sale of books and autographs at the Anderson Galleries, $3,028.75 was realized. Mr. R. J. Flick gave $410 for a first edition of "The Humorist," with 40 colored etchings by George Cruikshank. A set of first editions of Jane Austen brought $310 and a copy of the St. Dunstan edition of "Pickwick Papers," one of 15 on vellum, $200. Mr. Gabriel Weiss paid $175 for a set of first editions of Wilkie Collins and Mr. E. Tomkings $137 for a Queen Elizabeth autograph attached to a military document.

The second session, Tuesday, resulted in $2,416.75. A Kelmescott Chaucer, illustrated by Burne-Jones and William Morris brought $310. Mr. Gabriel Weiss gave $275 for a set of first American and English editions of Henry James. Mr. C. A. Munn paid $250 for a copy of Bartolozzi's engravings of Holbeins portraits of personages of the Court of Henry VIII. The Scribners gave $155 for a set of Henry James on handmade paper, and Mr. A. E. Nolan, $61.50 for the Mss. of Hawthorne's "Our Old Home."

At the last session, Wednesday, the grand total of the sale reached $7,957.50. Mr. Weiss gave $400 for a set of "The Presidents of the U. S.," with autographs and engravings inserted. Mr. Smith paid $260 for a set of first editions of Thackeray's Christmas books.

Sale at the Collectors' Club.

At a sale held June 8 and 9 by Scott and O'Shaughnessy, at the Collectors' Club, 30 E. 42 St., Mr. George D. Smith paid $450 for "A Plain Narrative of Thomas Brown Le," Boston, 1760. He also gave $355 for Josiah Priest's "The Captivity and Sufferings of Gen. Fregift Patchin, etc.," and $230 for J. Franklin's "A perpetual Almanack," Newport, 1727-30. Mr. Robert H. Dodd gave $320 for "The Constitution of the Old Tontine Coffee House," N. Y., 1796.

Sale of Bacon's Works.

At a sale in London on May 25, at Sotheby's, Mr. George D. Smith secured for $2,025, the collection of Bacon's works formed by the late Dr. G. W. Steener, of Liverpool. He also gave $950 for a 1640 edition of Shakespeare's poems. The sale totalled $12,780.

Pictures Sold at Christie's.

A sale of modern pictures and drawings at Christies in London, on May 26, totalled $100,000. The Agnews gave $3,412 for Turner's "Castle of Chillon," and $3,150 for his "Lake of Thun." Golden & Fox gave $2,626 for Millar's "Cymon and Iphigenia," and Mr. Martin, $2,362, for Cyp's "Portrait of a Youth."

Mezzotints Sold in London.

A sale of mezzotints held at Christie's in London, June 5, resulted in $15,000. Mr. Colnaghi gave $765 for "Charms of Morning," after Marin, $682 for Cousins' "Countess Gower," after Lawrence, and $656 for Young's "Mrs. Hunter," after Hoppner. Mr. Ellis paid $764 for the 13 "Cries of London."

Sale of Americana at Heartman's.

A sale of Americana at Heartman's on May 31 produced $2,017.80. Mr. George D. Smith gave $126 for Mather's "The Blessed Hope and the Glorious Appearing."

Lawrence Collection Sale.

At a sale of the Sir Trevor Lawrence collection, held in London, on May 29-June 1, at Christie's, Mr. Harding gave $10,500 for two upright French tapestry panels, showing respectively the triumphs of Silenus and Ceres. A Louis XVI library table brought $3,045. The total of the sale was $126,630.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT SUMMER ISSUES.

After this issue, the AMERICAN ART NEWS will, as usual during the summer, appear monthly until Saturday, October 14 next, when the weekly issues will be resumed, and a new volume will begin.

The remaining regular summer monthly issues will be published on Saturdays, Aug. 19 and Sept. 16.

ART SALE TO OPEN SEASON.

When Professor Volpi of Florence, Italy, who brought over last Autumn a number of Old Masters of the early Italian school, including two handsome canvases which he attributed to Titian, and which came to be known as "The Volpi Titians," sailed away in early May for his home in Italy, he left these, with some art objects, from his well-known Avessanti Palace in Florence, on storage in this city.

Word now comes from Florence that he has virtually dismantled the Avessanti Palace in that city of its artistic contents, has shipped some 53 cases already to New York containing these, and that the remainder of his collections will soon follow.

It is also reported that the collections brought and to come from Florence, together with the pictures and art objects Prof. Volpi left in storage here, will be sold at auction by the American Art Association, and that the sale which will be an important one—may open the art auction season in America of 1916-'17.

GERMAN ESTABLISHMENT CLOSED.

The London Gazette announces that the London business of Emil Werckmeister, trading as the Berlin Photographic Co., 149 New Bond Street, is to be wound up under the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1916.

N. Y. House to Close Also.

The Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., of which Mr. Martin Birnbaum is N. Y. representative, has decided to close its N. Y. branch establishment. This news comes swift on the heels of the closing of the London house by the British Govt. under the trading with the enemy act. The reason given out here for the N. Y. closing, which will occur in a few weeks, is difficulty of obtaining stock from Berlin on account of the war. It had been the intention of the N. Y. branch to leave its present quarters for others and a removal sale has been in progress. Whether the stock will be disposed of privately or by auction has not been decided as yet. The N. Y. establishment has had a successful career for a number of years and has held a number of very interesting exhibitions of sculptures, paintings, drawings and prints.

COLLEGES HONORS PAINTERS.

At its recent 216 commencement Yale College made the painter John Singer Sargent, a doctor of laws and the sculptor Herbert Adams a master of arts. The Henry Howland prize of $1,500 for literature went to the late English poet Rupert Brooks, Mr. John Jay Chapman, poet and essayist, was made a doctor of letters and Frank Miles Day, Yale's supervising architect, master of arts.

Havard College also made John S. Sargent a doctor of arts and Edward Sandford Martin, author, a master of arts.

Amherst College made a doctor of laws of William C. Brownell, well-known as a writer on art.

MR. WIDENER'S DONATELLOS.

The two most remarkable pieces of sculpture ever brought to this country are the examples of Donatello, recently purchased by Mr. Joseph E. Widener of Philadelphia from P. W. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., and reproduced on this and another page.

These great works of the Italian Renaissance, are a truly beautiful bust of St. John and a noble full-length figure of David, both of which were formerly in the possession of the Martelli family of Florence. The St. John is said to have been modelled from one of the young Martellis. It is interesting to note that Donatello's mother was in the service of the Martelli, and they were thus in an intimate sense his patrons.

The works were allowed to leave Italy by the Government, as the family presented to the Museum, known as the Bargello, a third example of Donatello, a walking figure of St. John. It is said that both the father of the present owner and the late J. Pierpont Morgan were anxious to purchase the works now in America.

"FAKE" FURNITURE SUIT.

New England collectors and dealers in antiques and "period" furniture are eagerly awaiting a decision from Judge Murray, of the Boston Municipal Court, in a suit brought by Mr. Ross H. Maynard, a collector of antiques, against Rosenthal & Alpert, dealers in antiques, on Charles street, Boston, to recover $1,550 which Mr. Maynard paid for an upholstered settee and ten chairs and for silverware. Mr. Maynard alleges that this furniture was falsely represented to him as genuine "Chippendale." Judge Murray has the case under advisement.

The case has attracted widespread attention.

The reliability of the average "antique," and the ability of collectors and dealers to tell the real from the "manufactured" goods are matters of great interest in this New England territory, so rich in Colonial relics.

BOUGHT FOR AMERICA.

Thackeray Turner, chairman of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings, recently wrote the London "Times"

NOTED FRENCH ART SOLD.

Three of a small and choice lot of early French pictures, from the well-known collection of the Viscomte de Chabert of Paris, a charming and most representative bust portrait of the Chevalier de Billaut by Fragonard mentioned in de Nolhac's volume "Les Oeuvres de Fragonard" and reproduced on another page, and two characteristic panels "Spring" and "Autumn" by Boucher, from the old Due de Broglie's collection, and which were brought over in May by an agent of the Viscomte, were recently sold here, it is reported to Mr. Wm. Salomon of New York, through a certain wine merchant, for $36,000, the Fragonard for $20,000, and the Bouchers for $8,000 each.

The remaining three pictures, which may soon go to the new Cleveland Museum for exhibition this summer, are the finest examples of Largilliere ever taken out of France. They are the full length portraits of the Baron and Baroness de Prangius and the celebrated oval bust portrait of "Mme. de Parabere" and are especially well known to art lovers. The last two were shown at the well-remembered "Exposition des Cents Portraits des Femmes" in the "Jeu de Paume" in the Tuileries gardens in Paris in 1909. The portrait of Baron de Prangius was shown at the Leipzig Exhibition.

SARGENTS FOR NAT'L GALLERY.

The cable on July 2 announced from London that Mr. Asher Wertheimer, the Bond Street dealer, had decided to bequeath his remarkable gathering of Sargent portraits, nine in all, to the National Gallery. The works are all of life size and painted between 1898 and 1902. The portrait of Mr. Wertheimer was shown at the Sargent exhibition at the Boston Museum and was at the Royal Academy in 1898. Its companion, a portrait of Mrs. Wertheimer, was at the Royal Academy in 1904. "The Daughters of Asher Wertheimer, Ena and Betty" was the sensation of the Academy in 1901. There are also portraits of the two sons, Alfred and Edward, who died young men. "The Children of Asher Wertheimer," seen at the New Gallery in 1902, shows two younger daughters, Essie and Ruby, and the youngest son, Ferdinand, now an officer in the British Army. Another group picture shows Conway Wertheimer with his sisters Alma and Hylda. There are also single portraits of the two young women and an unfinished portrait of Edward Wertheimer, who died before it could be completed.

MRS. DIXON BUYS TAPESTRIES.

Mrs. Fitz Eugene Dixon, who was Miss Eleanor Elkins Widener of Phila., daughter of the late George D. Widener, has purchased from P. H. French & Co., 6 E. 56 St., the five Morgan Gobelin tapestries, which formerly belonged to the King of Spain, for approximately $500,000. They picture the story of Don Quixote and were designed by Charles Coypel. The subjects are "Guided by Folly," "Don Quixote Mistakes a Serving Girl for Dulcinea," "Don Quixote Pays His Respects to the Duchess," "Don Quixote Served by the Ladies" and "Sancho Panza Leaves for the Island of Barataria."

OLD MORSE PORTRAITS SOLD.

Interesting and well conserved portraits of Elkanah Watson (1758-1842) and of Mary Watson, daughter of Elkanah Watson, who in 1820 married General Aaron Ward of Ossining, N. Y., were recently bought by Mrs. Suzan Randall Bacon of Goshen, N. Y., a descendant of the Watson family from Prosper Guerry the restorer.

ST. JOHN
Donatello

Bought from P. W. French & Co., by Mr. Joseph E. Widener.

The bust of St. John, which like the figure of David, is of Cararra marble, is life size and 16 inches high. The David is five feet high. Many think the St. John simply a portrait. The tunic of goatskin, however, under the cloak which covers the left shoulder, suggests that it is intended for a St. John.

NEWARK'S COLLEONI STATUE.

The copy by J. Massey Rhind of Verrocchio's famous Venetian equestrian statue of Bartolomeo Colleoni, given to Newark by Mr. Christian W. Feigenspan, at a cost of some $70,000, will shortly be unveiled in Clinton Park. The Italian Ambassador will make an address.

calling attention to the fact "that the finest house in St. Albans, No. 1 St. Peter St., originally owned by the family of Kentish and afterward by Van de Muelen, the Dutch painter, in the 13th century, with all its Elizabethan fittings, including the fireplaces, paneling, etc., has been sold for removal to America.

"Mr. Turner calls attention to the matter in the hope that some means may be devised of preventing the removal."

CANFIELD APPRAISAL WRONG.

Surrogate Fowler, on July 21, handed down a decision that the transfer tax appraisal of the estate of Richard A. Canfield is incorrect. A collection of furniture appraised by an expert at $65,175 was later sold for $159,999, and assessed at that figure. The Surrogate holds that the estimate of the expert should have been the basis of the tax appraised.

C. S. Pietro is making a bust of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt.

NEWPORT ART ASS'N'S DISPLAY.

The Newport Art Association opened Tuesday last its new quarters on Bellevue Ave. with its fifth annual exhibition. It is a hopeful sign for American art that such a handsome building, costing many thousands of dollars, is to be devoted to exhibitions of contemporary art in the Summer Capital of the country. Eventually, the Association hopes to house a permanent collection of representative American art in its new building.

The current display is a good one, well worthy of the imposing building. The seven large galleries are hung with some 140 pictures. Local artists are represented but most of the works have been especially "invited."

The Committee of Award, consisting of William Cotton, Helena Sturtevant, Harrison Morris and John Elliott, awarded the Morris Prize of $100 for the best picture in the show to Daniel Garber's engaging "Janis," shown at the last Winter Academy, when it won the Second Altman Prize.

To Jonas Lie's canvas "Morning," a glowing bit of color, was awarded the Richard S. Greenough Memorial Prize of $75. Mr. Lie also shows a brilliant still life, "Roses." "Waiting" is the rather misleading title of William K. Yarrow's portrait of an old lady seated on a curving backed horsehair sofa against a quiet gray background. To "Waiting" was given the Shaw-Safe Prize of $50 for the best portrait in the show.

The Hunt Prize of $25, offered by Mrs. Livingston Hunt, is to be awarded by popular vote.

Hugo Ballin shows his handsome picture which has been seen before, "The Lute Player." A picture full of promise by a young artist is "The New Model," by R. H. Ives Gammell. Henry Salem Hubbell shows his "Mother and Child" and Ernest Lawson is represented by two distinguished canvases, "The Creek" and "The Garden."

Carl J. Nordell, shows an interesting portrait called "Elinore." One of the most charming exhibits is a black robed woman holding in her lap a young baby, called "Dressing Genevieve." Leopold Seyffert has a strong canvas, "A Woman of Segovia, Spain," and Miss Lydia Redmond an interesting "Girl in Red" against a red background.

John S. Sargent is represented by three canvases: "Portrait of a Boy," "Portrait Sketch of Miss Fairchild," and a dashing sketch of Edwin Booth. To William Cotton for a spirited portrait entitled "Imogene" go the honors of the show. "Imogene" hangs next to the Sargent group of pictures and may be said to more than hold its own for brilliancy of color and spiritual intensity of characterization.

Mmes. John Elliott, Marsden Perry and others who worked for the establishment of the Art Association have succeeded in impressing upon the public that modern American art is beautiful and desirable—and should be fashionable. L. K.

POLAND SPRING'S SUMMER SHOW.

The 22nd annual summer exhibition of paintings and sculptures opened in June at the Poland Spring Art Gallery, South Poland, Maine, and will continue until Autumn. The collection includes 128 oils, 28 watercolors and pastels, 22 miniatures and 31 sculptures. Among the painters represented are W. M. Chase, A. Graves, D. Blaney, J. A. Weir, Robert Reid, F. W. Benson, J. DeCamp, Bolton Jones, C. C. Curran, C. H. Woodbury, J. C. Beckwith, G. Symons, R. W. Vonnoh, C. Hassam, F. L. Mora, L. Kronberg, E. L. Warner, C. P. Gruppe, I. H. Caliga, W. M. Paxton, P. Little, C. Wiggins, Ava de Lagercrantz, I. R. Wiles, C. J. Nordell, Alice H. Annan, L. L. Kaula, A. W. Ball, E. V. T. Watson, Mary B. Titcomb, Jean N. Oliver, J. G. Brown, E. L. Major and Anne D. Blake.

Among the miniaturists are Laura C. Hills, Marie J. Streen, Sally M. Cross, Mary H. Tannahill, Jena N. Oliver, Bertha Coolidge and Evelyn Purdie. Those who have sent sculpture include Gertrude V. Whitney, with her head from the Titanic Memorial, Anna V. Hyatt, G. Borglum, T. Brock, Anna C. Ladd, Lucy C. Richards, Bela L. Pratt, Bessie P. Vonnoh, Janet Scudder, James E. Fraser and A. P. Proctor.

BUFFALO SCULPTURE SHOW.

A truly remarkable display of statuary has been arranged by the National Sculpture Society, with the aid of Director Sage, and the sculptors Adolph A. Weinman and Robert Aitkin, at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo. They had also the efficient assistance of the local decorative landscape gardeners, Bryant Fleming and Harold Olmstead. The exhibition opened June 17. One hundred and sixty-five artists are represented by 900 examples, among which, some 400 were at the Pana-Pacific Show.

In Delaware Park, in the center of the approach to the gallery, is a colossal equestrian statue of Kit Carson. As either side are Karl Bitter's Lowry memorial panels. To the right of the driveway entrance is a figure of Anne Hutchinson and on the left a reproduction of the monument at Germantown, Pa. Attilio Picirelli's figure of "The Outcast" and D. C. French's Princeton student from the Earl Dodge memorial at the University, are at the gallery's entrance. Not far off is Albin Polesek's "The Tower."

Notable in the galleries are St. Gaudens' Shaw memorial, D. C. French's "The Spirit of Life" and Melvin memorial; Robert Aitkin's "The Fountain of the Earth," and his Gates Memorial, James E. Fraser's panel of Harry Payne Whitney's children; Karl Bitter's Tappan memorial and Louisiana Purchase monument; D. C. French's Alice Freeman Palmer memorial; Anna V. Hyatt's Joan of Arc; Helen Farnsworth Mears' "The Fountain of Life," and A. A. Weinman's lectern for a Pomfret, Conn., School. There are also works by Herbert Adams, Frederick Macmonnies, Chester Beach, Charles C. Rumsey, Anna Glenny, Edward McCarton, Charles Neihaus, Sherry S. Fry, H. McNeil, Edith W. Burroughs, Charles Grafty, John Boyle, Paul Bartlett, John Gregory and Allan Newman.

In the medal room are works by Weinman, Aitkin, Flanagan, Fraser, Hering, Adams and Grimes.

EARLY PENNSYLVANIA ART.

The dedication on June 17 of the new building of the Bucks County Historical Society at Doylestown, Pa., was also the occasion of the offering of public inspection of a remarkable collection, assembled by Mr. Henry C. Mercer, of art and archeological objects, having reference to the early history of Pa. and more particularly to the arts of the first settlers in that vicinity. The building was planned and donated by Mr. Mercer at a cost of about $100,000, is constructed throughout of reinforced concrete, contains, besides the Museum Hall, twenty rooms for the purposes of the society.

The building is 115 feet in height and the cupola that forms the apex of the roof has for the decorative feature a metal figure of a rain-making Indian.

The collection of objects of applied art includes among others, a very unusual display of ancient cast-iron stoves and stove plates, many of them brought from Germany by the original settlers. They also carried on the industry of faience and tile-making and decoration, using the local clays for the body of the work, quaintly drawn and colored illustrations of Bible stories, giving a pictorial interest to these unique specimens.

Mr. Mercer, who has been honored recently with the degree of Doctor of Science, by Franklin and Marshall College, has succeeded in evolving, from the study of these tiles, a modern industry in the manufacture of ceramic decorations that have been used extensively in the State Capitol at Harrisburg, the New Traymore Hotel, Atlantic City, and a number of notable private residences. He has donated an endowment fund of $125,000 for the maintenance of the building and the collections.

RYDERS IN BOSTON.

The Vose Gallery in Boston has been showing a remarkable group of paintings by the veteran colorist Albert P. Ryder, whose pictures are extremely rare and difficult to secure.

The examples shown are of characteristic size and type and of unusual importance. The celebrated little composition of "Joan of Arc," the famous "Silver Moonlight," and the wonderful little fantasy "Like a Fairyland" are included. The "Joan of Arc" gives a rare measure of Ryder's gift of composition, his peculiar power of draftsmanship and his magnificent color sense. The maid of Orleans is shown as a Shepherdess tending her sheep. The maid is clad in the humblest of garments and her expression indicated rapt anticipation of the vision which is to reveal her mission as a militant leader. The color of the picture is of the utmost refinement, yet not lacking either solidity or vigor. The "Moonlight" is a marvelously successful attack of the problem of painting light upon light, the moon being relieved upon a luminous bank of warm ivory grey clouds.

SAINT LOUIS.

The City Museum opened recently its annual Summer Loan Exhibition. Instead of the general collection as assembled in previous years, the exhibition this season embraces only paintings by the Barbizon Masters. Corot, Rousseau, Diaz, Daubigny, Millet and others are well represented. Among the St. Louisians who have made this exhibition possible are Messrs. W. K. Bixby, George W. Brown, Peyton T. Carr, Daniel Catlin, Thomas R. Collins, Dwight F. Davis, Lionberger Davis, Mmes. Benj. W. Clark, J. T. Davis, Breckinridge, Long, J. L. Mauran and Messrs. Louis Werner and Charles Wiggins. The Museum is also displaying at present a group of marines by William Ritschel, and a travelling exhibition of paintings and sculpture by St. Louis artists, organized by the Art League.

MEMPHIS MEMORIAL GALLERY.

The first exhibition at the beautiful new Brooks Memorial Gallery recently completed at Memphis, Tenn., was opened July 10 and will continue until Oct. 15.

The director of the gallery is Miss Florence McIntyre, secretary of the Memphis Art Association. Included in the collection are Childe Hassam's "Rainy Day," owned by Mrs. D. P. Hadden and Roche's "Headlands," owned by the XIV Century Club. The loan display also contains Waugh's "Rocky Headlands," Lever's "Mackerel Fishing Boats," and Carlson's "Morning Mists" and "The Brook." It was the plan, at latest advices, of the Business Men's Club, to present Carlson's "Morning Mists" to the gallery. Beginning Nov. 6 there will be an exhibit of American art from the Mabeth Galleries, to be followed in January by one from the Rouillier Galleries. Then, in February, will come a display of foreign works to be followed in the early spring by a one-man exhibit, that of John F. Carlson.

At the dedicatory exercises of the building, given by Mrs. Bessie Vance Brooks, in memory of her husband, the late Samuel Hamilton Brooks, City Attorney Charles M. Bryan accepted for the city and Bishop Thomas F. Gailor made an invocation and dedicatory address. Speeches were also made by Col. Robert Galloway and Miss Frances Church, president of the Memphis Art Association.

The building of Georgia marble cost $115,000 and measures about 90 x 100 ft. The architect is James Gamble Rogers, of this city.

PORTLAND'S SUMMER SHOW.

The summer exhibition of the Portland (Me.) Art Society at the Sweatt Museum, opened July 1 and remains to Sept. 18. It consists of 32 canvases. Among the exhibits are Robert Vonnoh's "Reverie," Max Bohm's "The Promenade," Edward B. Redfield's "Sleigh Bells," Douglas Volks' "Canadienne," Albert Graves' "Peonies," Childe Hassam's "Early Spring in New England," Philip Little's "An Upland Meadow" and Walter Griffin's "Apple Blossoms."

PITTSBURG.

Art Director John W. Beatty of the Carnegie Institute announces the election of Mr. Robert B. Harshe of Oakland, Cal., as Assistant Director of the Department of Fine Arts. Mr. Harshe has been until now Director of the Oakland (Cal.) Museum, but is now due here to take up his duties. He was the Assistant Chief of Fine Arts at the San Francisco Exposition and is a graduate of Missouri University and was an art student at the Chicago Art Institute, Columbia University, and Art Students League of N. Y.

The Art Director of Carnegie Institute announces the re-hanging of the Humphreys Collection of American paintings. The collection will be on view for an indefinite period.

The Swedish Collection which formed a part of the Founder's Day Exhibition has been withdrawn and sent to Detroit in accordance with the itinerary arranged by Mr. W. H. Fox, Director of the Brooklyn Museum. This collection attracted 17,456 visitors in the 24 days on which it was on exhibition here.

The important collection of paintings, bronzes, and medals, owned by the French Nation from the Luxembourg, Paris, brought from the Panama-Pacific Exposition by the Carnegie Institute under a contract with the French Commissioner of Fine Arts, is still on exhibition in the Institute galleries. It is probable that the collection will be shown at the Albright Gallery, Buffalo, and the Chicago Art Institute.

A $25,000 GIFT TO THE MUSEUM.

At the June press view at the Metropolitan Museum it was learned that Mrs. Russell Sage had contributed $25,000 for providing a permanent installation of the collection of early American decorative art, which includes the Bolles collection of furniture she gave in 1909. The list of accessions and loans announces that she has made six other gifts, including ceramics, jades, jewelry, coins, textiles and costumes. In the Recent Accessions Room were shown also five family portraits by Blackburn and Huntington, given by Mr. Sylvester Deering of Utica. The Blackburns, all painted in 1754, show Margaret Sylvester, wife of David Chesebrough, and daughter of Brinley Sylvester of Shelter Island, her sister Mary, wife of Thomas Dering, of Boston, and Thomas Dering, himself. The Huntingtons represent Ella Virginia Bristol and Nicholl Havens Dering.

A most interesting gift made by Mr. Emil Pares, the dealer, is of a fragment, showing St. Paul in a pulpit, which was missing from the splendid Spanish altar piece in alabaster, given by the late J. Pierpont Morgan in 1909. It was announced that the Morgan tapestries recently bought by Mr. Joseph Widener, Mrs. Fitz Eugene Dixon and Mrs. Amory Carhart, will remain on loan through the summer and perhaps longer. It was also stated that the Museum had purchased from P. W. French & Co. the earliest tapestry of the Morgan collection, the Small Crucifixion of the 13th century. Director Robinson announced that since the closing of the Morgan collection on May 29, the present Mr. Morgan had selected certain material to be placed on view in the Morgan Memorial at Hartford. This consists of European ceramics, Venetian glass, Renaissance works in silver, ivory and other materials, as well as a collection of Roman glass and pottery, which was not shown at the Metropolitan.

The features of the July press view on Wed. in addition to the recently purchased Morgan tapestry were a recently purchased portrait by Malbone, the miniaturist, of himself, and a huge overmantel by Grinling Gibbons, which was secured from Holme Lacy, the seat of the Scudamores. Another recent purchase shown was the bronze of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's bust of a Spanish peasant. Recent acquisitions are also two Chinese Sung bowls, an XI Century Persian Rhages bowl and a bronze Chinese sacrificial bowl of the Tang dynasty. A gift from Mr. C. T. Loo was an early Chinese Ming statuette of a seated man; twelve Staffordshire plates were bequeathed by Mrs. Mary Leask, and an Armenian XIII Century book of the Gospels was given by Mrs. Edward S. Harkness.

MUSEUM'S TAPESTRY PURCHASE.

The Metropolitan Museum has done something quite out of the ordinary, in purchasing from P. W. French & Co., 6 East 56 St., a remarkably fine and very early Gothic tapestry of "The Crucifixion," which was one of the most interesting of the great series loaned by the late J. Pierpont Morgan. This work, of unusual historical importance, is said to be the oldest French tapestry known, dating from about 1300, and was displayed in the Recent Accessions Room at the press view on Wednesday. The only pieces of earlier date are the XIII Century examples at the Cathedral of Halterstadt and Guedlingburg in Germany. This piece therefore is held to be the sole example, which bridges the gap from these Romanesque pieces, and the rare product of French art of the XIV Century. The inspiration of the quaint design of the museum example is deeply religious, simple in types, figures and draperies. Only about ten colors are used in all, the background of dark blue being studded with stars. At either side of the crucified figure are the Virgin Mary and St. John the Evangelist carrying a book. By these are two crowned female saints of the royal or princely type, one by the Virgin, Saint Catherine of Alexandria, and the other probably Saint Margaret of Antioch.

Arts Club Summer Show.

At the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St., there is on, to Sept., a large collection of sketches and studies by painter members. Notably well represented are George Elmer Browne, Birge Harrison, Guy C. Wiggins, Irving R. Wiles, Charles Vezin, H. S. Hubbard, Edmond Greacen, Jules Turcas, A. T. Hill, Leon Dabo, Thomas R. Manley, Ella Condie Lamb, Arthur J. E. Powell, Paul Cornoyer, Edward Dufner, Helen M. Turner, E. W. Deming, Marion Boyd Allen and Thomas W. Ball. Others who show works are Douglas Volk, who sends "A Bunch of Lilies," for the War Fund Library, E. L. Warner, G. Glenn Newell, H. S. Hubbell, R. W. Vonnoh, Oscar Feherer, W. R. Derrick, Cullen Yates, F. S. Lamb, G. A. Traver, Clara T. McChesney, Jane Peterson, Harriet S. Phillips, G. W. Picknell, Elizabeth G. Baker and Jennie Browncombe.

BOSTON.

An endurable summer city is Boston,—with pleasant little summer exhibitions. At the Museum there is a loan exhibition of prints from the collection of Mr. A. W. Scholle of New York, installed in the galleries of the print department, to remain until Sept. 1. This collection is notably rich in Whistleriana, Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Duerer, and Schongauer are also represented by examples.

The Copley Gallery has a miscellaneous summer exhibition of noteworthy canvases. For example, two early Copleys, portraits of a young man and his wife; while the place of honor is given to an interesting study by John Trumbull for his large picture "The Sortie from Gibraltar," an admirable example of Trumbull's exact and craftsmanlike methods of preparing his big paintings, and his veracity, in contradistinction to his lack of pictorial and color senses. Among the moderns in this exhibition is Willard L. Metcalf's "Johnnie-Cake Hill," a long time loaned to the Museum, and landscapes by E. C. Tarbell, George Noyes, and Charles W. Hudson, and last, but not least, a sombre but feeling little summer land-

Snedecor's Summer Show.

A very interesting summer show of American paintings has been arranged at the Snedecor Gallery, 107 W. 46 St. William R. Leigh is represented by his latest work, a dramatic Western scene called "The Narrowing Circle." There are besides examples of note by J. Alden Weir, Homer D. Martin, R. A. Blakelock, Bruce Crane, Hal Robinson, Charles R. Peters, Charles Melville Dewey and Robert W. van Boskerck.

American Poster Art Display.

Modern American poster designs, gathered for the first time, comprised the second recent exhibition at the Chelsea Neighborhood Art Gallery, 296 Ninth Ave. The neighborhood gallery, which has been established to encourage art in Chelsea Village, has a special section devoted to the work of Chelsea artists.

Leaders in the poster art of today were represented in the exhibition, and C. Berttram Hartman, George Bellows, William Zorach, Herbert E. Martini and Winold Reiss were among those represented. Ada Raab, K. S. Lamb, J. H. Ruff, S. M. Scofield and B. Patterson were the neighborhood artists represented, and a corner of the gallery was set aside for drawings by the children of the Chelsea district who have been using their pencils to draw familiar scenes about the neighborhood.

Dr. I. Wyman Drummond, chairman of the Neighborhood Association's Art Committee, and Thomas H. Benton, secretary of the gallery, are planning monthly changes for the gallery in order to present as many phases of art as possible to the neighbors.

scape by William Morris Hunt, entitled "Charles River."

At a local gallery a lightsome show of watercolors and pastels imposes no heavy burdens on the summer sightseer. Yet to the discriminating taste it presents a most interesting diversity of watercolor methods. Surely there are aquarellists and aquarellists! The late Ross Turner's still life of Mexican majolica and his "Bermuda Wedding" are admirable in their spontaneous and unlabored expression. It is a far cry to George H. Hallowell's oddly attractive tonal studies in purple and violet, always forcing upon the beholder some vital bit of truth in spite of their element of the weird and unreal. One notes also two neat and well-made Mexican examples by Dodge McKnight, a pictorial studio interior with figure entitled "Idleness," by Jean Nutting Oliver, pieces by Elizabeth Spalding, and Ruel Crompton Tuttle (who exploits our much-prized "Esplanade, Boston," with all the flavor of a rediscovery), and some miniature landscapes—studies in color, evidently by Henry Hunt Clark, Margaret Patterson's Spanish piece, "On the Muella, San Pedro," and Louis Kronberg's smartly painted "Pierrot et Pierrette," are also worthy of note.

Richard Recchia, the sculptor, has finished a medallion portrait of the late Curtis Guild for the State House—a finely characteristic head. He is also at work on a memorial tablet to Sam Walter Foss, author and librarian, to be placed in the Somerville (Mass.) Public Library, of which the late Mr. Foss was librarian.

CHICAGO.

The "Great Bridge," connecting the Art Institute with its Michigan Avenue section—to be flanked with galleries for the accommodation of art works now in the Institute store rooms and for collections to arrive from Europe in the near future, is nearing completion. The construction of the new Field Museum in Grant Park, south of the Institute, in which there will be much larger scope for historic collections than in the old Museum in Jackson Park, is also rapidly proceeding. This increase of facilities for accommodation for art works gives this city a promise of remarkable activity in permanent and transient exhibitions within a few months. Although the old Field Museum is rich in antiques, it is so far south of the center of the city that its advantages are not appreciated by the public, and are almost unknown to the crowds of transients always here.

The galleries in this dull season still have some notable paintings on view. At Reinhardt's several new European paintings are shown, and at other local galleries there are new American and foreign works. At Rouiller's a new collection of etchings by American artists and some fine Zorns are on view. There has been no quietude in the Young Galleries—what with the Blakelocks, Bundys, Innesses and examples of other American artists.

In the Studios.

Lorado Taft, Nellie V. Walker, George E. Ganiere and Leonard Crunelle are in town, busy with commissions in their Midway studios. Miss Walker is modeling "Courage with the Torch of Life," to be set in the open court of St. Luke's Hospital, donated by the Society of Ex-Internes in memory of internes who have lost their lives in service for the hospital. The figure is six and one-half feet high, a youth partly draped, holding a torch aloft. This figure is to be cast in bronze, on a granite pedestal, on which the names of the perished ones will be carved. Ganiere is putting finishing touches on a statue of Anthony Wayne for Fort Wayne, Ind. "Mad Anthony" is mounted upon a mettlesome horse and carries a drawn sword. Crunelle is finishing the statue of the late George F. McCullough, for some years a prominent citizen of Muncie, Ind. The memorial will be set in a Muncie park. Taft is bestowing some finishing strokes to the medal for James Whitcomb Riley, but he is giving the greater part of his time and work to the stupendous Midway sculptural decorations under the auspices of the Ferguson Fund, and he is doing some of this work this Summer in his studio at Eagle's Nest, on Rock River. SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT SUMMER ISSUES.

The AMERICAN ART NEWS will, as usual during the summer, appear monthly until Saturday, October 14 next, when the weekly issues will be resumed, and a new volume will begin.

The remaining regular summer monthly issues will be published on Saturdays, Aug. 19 and Sept. 16.

THE JUNE BURLINGTON.

Of more than usual interest is the June number of the Burlington Magazine, containing as it does an account, by Paul J. Cels, of a newly discovered early Rembrandt, an extremely fine "St. Peter," owned by Mr. Herbert Cook. It is more attractive than the three pictures of the same model, reproduced with it, at Stockholm, Cassel and in the collection of Mr. G. C. W. Fitzwilliam at Peterborough. Mr. F. M. Kelly has a scholarly first collection of "Shakespearian Dress Notes." C. H. Collins Baker has a rather sharp criticism of "The Cataloguing of the National Portrait Gallery." Roger Fry writes of "Rossetti's Water Colours of 1857," examples of which were recently acquired by the Tate Gallery. "Thomas Chippendale, the Evidence of His Work" is by Herbert Cescinsky. There is a review of the works of "Herman Rode" in Sweden, with which there is a fine color plate among other illustrations. The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

ART DEALERS AS JUNKMEN.

According to a special cable to the Herald from Paris, Mr. D. G. Kelekian, the well-known dealer in and collector and connoisseur of the early art of the near East, has been decided by the Paris courts to be responsible, under the laws governing the sellers of old junk. These stipulate that the books recording the purchase of such old junk sellers must be inspected and endorsed by the Police, and that they must wear a similar badge to that worn, under legal enforcement, by the street vendors and hawkers of old junk.

Against this decision Mr. Kelekian, who is supported in his action by a syndicate of Paris art dealers, has very wisely decided to appeal.

The Herald publishes a number of interviews with art dealers here and in Paris, who, of course, express themselves as naturally amazed and amused at this Paris incident. One foreign dealer, however, having a branch house here, has either been misquoted by the Herald reporter, or is grievously mistaken when he is made to say that "You know, of course, that in this country, dealers in art, etc., are classed as second hand dealers. We have to obtain a license, and the police must have access to our books. Seven days must elapse before a sale of picture we have purchased, but, of course, that is to preclude the possibility of our receiving stolen goods, I suppose."

There was an attempt made by the Board of Aldermen last winter to revive an old ordinance compelling art dealers and auctioneers to comply with the regulation this misquoted or mistaken dealer details in the Herald, but the attempt was soon abandoned when the attorneys for the leading art dealers proved the injustice and absurdity of classing reputable art dealers with pawnbrokers, for it was to lessen the opportunity for the purchase and quick after sale of stolen property by these gentry that the ordinance was first enacted. It is to be presumed that the Paris courts will, like the N. Y. Aldermen, be speedily convinced of the absurdity and injustice of their recent surprising ruling.

OBITUARY.

James Sant.

James Sant, who was principal painter in ordinary to Queen Victoria, died in London July 12, at the age of 96. He studied at the Royal Academy and was a pupil of John Varley and Sir Augustus Calcott. He was a member of the Royal Academy from 1870 to 1914, when he resigned. A collection of his works painted for the Countess of Waldegrave was shown at the Paris Salon in 1861.

Gaston Maspero.

Gaston Camille Charles Maspero, the distinguished French archeologist and historian, died June 30 in Paris at a meeting of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, of which he was secretary. He was born in 1846. In 1880 he began the founding of an archeological institute at Cairo, and became general director of Egyptian museums and excavations. In 1899 he was made a professor in the College of France.

Frank Vincent.

Frank Vincent, author of "The Land of the White Elephant," died June 20 in this city in his 69-year. He was born in Brooklyn, studied at Yale and presented his valuable collection of Indo-Chinese antiquities to the Metropolitan Museum.

F. K. Trowbridge.

Frederick Kellogg Trowbridge, formerly of Vermilye & Co., bankers, who owned one of the finest private libraries in the country, died in this city June 26. He is survived by a widow and son.

Thomas Eakins.

Thomas Eakins.

Thomas Eakins, painter and sculptor, one of the most notable figures in the American art world, died June 25 at his home in Phila. at the age of 72. He was a member of the National Academy and in 1876 became chief instructor in the Schools of the Pa. Academy, afterwards founding the Phila. Art Students' League. He also lectured at the National Academy in this city. Mr. Eakins was born in Phila. July 25, 1844. After graduation at the Central High School he went to Paris, where he studied painting under Bonnat and Gérôme, and sculpture under Barye and Chapu. He spent several years abroad in study and travel, being especially stimulated by his sojourn in Spain. At the opening of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 he returned to Phila. Eleven years ago he took the Proctor prize for the best portrait at the Natl. Academy. A medal of honor at Chicago in 1893 and an honorable mention at the Paris Exposition in 1900 were followed by gold medals at Buffalo and St. Louis, the Temple gold medal at the Pa. Academy and a gold medal at the American Art Society in Phila. in 1907.

Notable among the paintings of Mr. Eakins, which are marked by strong structural qualities and great sobriety and strength of technique, are "The Chess Players" at the Metropolitan Museum, the "Clinic of Prof. Gross," at Jefferson Medical College, Phila.; the "Clinic of Prof. Agnew," at the University of Pa., Phila.; a portrait of Cardinal Martinelli, at the Roman Catholic University of America, and "The Pathetic Song" and "Cello Player" at the Pa. Academy. His sculptures include the equestrian statues on the Brooklyn Memorial Arch and reliefs on the monument at Trenton, N. J. He was also the designer of the female head on the silver dollar.

The artist's "The Crucifixion" was at the Pana-Pacific Exposition. A portrait of President Hayes is at the National Gallery in Washington. Among other portraits are those of Charles L. Fussell, Mrs. Talcott Williams, Mrs. Stanley Addicks, Dr. Leonard, Charles A. Dana, Prof. Rowland of Johns Hopkins and Prof. Barker of the University of Pa. Mr. Eakins is survived by his widow, Mrs. Susan H. MacDonald Eakins, also a well-known artist who won the first Mary Smith prize at the Academy of Fine Arts, and by his sister, Mrs. William Crowell. He bequeathed an estate of less than $100,000, three-fourths to his widow and one-fourth to Mary Adeline Williams, a friend of the family.

Christian Klackner.

Christian Klackner, one of the most popular men in the American picture and print trade, died July 4, at his home and place of business, 7 W. 28 St., at the age of 66. He had long been ailing from heart weakness. He had a branch house at 20 Old Bond St., London, and was the principal American publisher of prints. Mr. Klackner, who is survived by a brother, Mr. John Klackner, and a nephew, Mr. John C. Klackner, was born in New York, and while still a boy entered the employ of M. Knoedler & Co., then at Broadway and Ninth Street, and studied art at the same time at the Cooper Union. He remained with the firm where his elder brother was bookkeeper, 20 years. He became a traveling salesman and when the firm was at 22d Street and Fifth Avenue, was in charge of the wholesale print department. He was greatly liked by the trade as well as by individual buyers. In 1883 he started in business for himself in 17th Street and a few years later was able to buy the house in W. 28th Street, where he died, altering it for his offices and galleries, as well as for apartments and studios. In one gallery he had a notable collection of American paintings, reproductions of many of which he had published.

He was the publisher of Meissonier's "1805" etched by Jules Jacquet and "The Stirrup Cup" by P. A. Rat. He reproduced by photograph, photogravure and in engraved and etched line works by many American painters, including Winslow Homer, Thomas Moran, Mrs. Percy Moran, Julian Rix, J. G. Brown, E. L. Henry, J. M. Tracy, Jennie Browncombe, and Elliot Daingerfield. Mr. Klackner maintained a photogravure plant, publishing also mezzotints in color. He was a member of the Print Sellers Association of London and of the Catholic, Lotus, Dunwoodie Country, and N. Y. Yacht clubs.

Christian Klackner.

"CUPID AND PSYCHE" AT YALE.

A feature of Yale's late commencement week was a masque of "Cupid and Psyche" at the Art School followed by an Italian Renaissance costume ball. The masque celebrated the 50th anniversary of the founding of the school, and was written by Mr. John Jay Chapman, the music being by Prof. Horatio W. Parker of the Yale School of Music. The Wirt Winchester Fellowship, which gives the holder a year's art study abroad, was awarded to Olaf Carl Malmquist.

Mr. Kirchner's Disclaimer.

The following letter has been received from the representatives of Rudolph Kirchner, a well-known Austrian artist, lately a resident of Paris, but who has been in New York for about a year past, and concerning whom some statements were sent by the Paris correspondent of this journal, and published in the same April 29 last: Editor American Art News,

Dear Sir: The letter from your Paris correspondent published in your issue of April 29 last, contains among other objectionable statements regarding Mr. Rudolph Kirchner, the artist, some particularly annoying and utterly detrimental, in view of present conditions, and utterly unwarranted and false, intimating that he had been a spy in France during the time of the outbreak of the war, and used moveable electric lamps so as to attract the enemy, and that his said conduct led to an alleged surreptitious departure on his part from France. Every one of these statements is absolutely false: Mr. Kirchner left Paris voluntarily in August, 1915 (after fifteen years' residence there), a full year after the outbreak of the war, and meantime, though he was born of English parentage and sympathies by repeated contributions for the benefit of France at numerous French Bazaars held in Paris for the benefit of the Paris Red Cross and other similar institutions, and in other ways, being dated by your correspondent, moreover, at a period antedating the war, whereas, in view of the sudden outbreak of hostilities, his alleged action could not have had any such intention or result. He is not and never has been a German spy. Mr. Kirchner left Paris openly, and was provided with a pass by the Prefect of Police dated July 24, 1915, which he has shown to us. His Austrian birth and antecedents did cause a certain amount of unpleasantness for him, particularly on the part of jealous rivals who are, apparently through your columns, endeavoring to injure him here also. Yours Very Truly, Kohler and Kohler.

New York, June 15, 1916.

[The story above alluded to and complained of was sent us by our Paris correspondent, and inadvertently published by us in good faith, and was based on somewhat similar publications in the Paris newspapers. We have no other knowledge concerning the matter, and had no desire to injure nor spread erroneous reports concerning Mr. Kirchner, and accordingly publish the above letter.—Ed.]

LONDON LETTER.

London, July 5, 1916.

An interesting discovery has recently been made of the finished study painted by the late Sidney Cooper for his famous "Cattle, Early Morning on the Cumberland Hills," the original of which is in the possession of the Nation. The copy, which disappeared under mysterious circumstances some years ago, was found among a heap of rubbish by the artist's son, Neville Cooper, who has for some years past carried on the business in Duke Street, St. James', formed in the latter part of the eighteenth century by that John Smith who achieved artistic immortality with his invaluable "Catalogue Raisonné," a book which has since served as a basis for many another catalog of the same type. It is interesting to note that John Smith commenced his career as "carver and gilder to his Majesty" in Swallow Street and gradually developed his business until he eventually launched forth in Bond Street as a picture-dealer. The newly discovered copy is signed and differs very little from the Academy picture which in 1847 was pronounced by its painter as the finest work he had yet produced.

New National Gallery Director.

Several names have already been suggested as those of possible successors to Sir Charles Holroyd, whose indifferent health compels him to relinquish his directorship of the National Gallery after ten years' tenure. Among those whose knowledge and experience would qualify them for the position are Professor C. J. Holmes of the National Portrait Gallery, and R. C. Witt, Secretary to the National Art-Collections Fund, while as usual, a host of applications is being sent in by the numerous lesser men, who make it a practice to forward their names in connection with each and every post of the sort which may at any time happen to be vacant. The usual term of office for Director of the National Gallery is five years and it is eloquent of the esteem in which Sir Charles Holroyd is held that he was asked to serve for double that time. He served as Keeper of the Tate Gallery for nearly the same period.

Exhibitions now on.

There are a number of interesting exhibitions running just now, most of which bear some relationship to war events. Notable among these is the show of Italian war pictures at the Leicester Galleries, which includes a series of paintings executed on the Italian front by Ludovico Pogliaghi on the authority of the Italian Government. These record with a fine realism the achievements of the Italian soldiers in the Alps, achievements which rival in sublimity the heights among which they were performed. The war caricatures, of which there is a representative collection, contain much that is not only technically admirable, but also cleverly appropriate to the subject which has inspired them. Those of Sachetti in particular illustrate excellently that combination of the amusing and the repellent which is the surest weapon of the satirist, his ironic comments on current events never failing to reach the mark and impress the spectator with a sense of the horror which lies behind. Gabriele Galantara is another draughtsman of fine calibre whose scorn and hatred of all that is mean and petty finds a noble expression in several cartoons of great distinction, in artist himself and are mostly of society which a fine feeling for color helps to emphasize the effect of the general composition. The exhibition as a whole bears eloquent testimony to the latterday spirit of the Italian nation.

Another exhibition which reflects War in particularly uncompromising manner is that of the London Group at the Goupil where C. R. Nevinson gives a picture of wounded soldiers which spares us nothing of the horror of the thing itself.

Sargent's Portrait Drawings.

All London is flocking to The Grafton Galleries to see the collection of Sargent portrait drawings and many a lovely lady is regretting that she did not have her portrait painted by the eminent American before he registered his decision to perform no more portrait work. The selection of these forty drawings was made by the women, reflecting rather the brilliant, social side of portraiture than the more serious and intellectual. Indeed it is in regard to this aspect of portrait-painting that Sargent is most successful, for when engaged on depicting a man such as the late George Mederith or Sir W. B. Richmond, his art is less satisfying and complete. One of the most subtle of the drawings is that of Mme. Réjane, in which the actress as well as the woman is marvellously suggested. Judging by the interest which is being displayed in the exhibition, its proceeds should add considerably to the exchequer of the Arts Fund.

The late Lord Kitchener was well known as a keen and shrewd buyer of Chinese porcelain and only a few days prior to his death commissioned Frank Partridge to buy for him a little Yung-Chin bowl at the Kennedy Sale at Christie's provided it went for a moderate price. Apropos of this sale, prices ruled high, the important pieces fetching equally important figures. The "Nubian Slave Girl," of which I wrote in my last letter and which I am told on good authority is more probably a representation of the goddess Kuan, fetched 1,100 gns., while 900 gns. were given for a magnificent famille-noire Kang He bowl. Equally satisfactory prices obtained in the case of the various Kien-Lung porcelains the leading dealers showing great keenness to acquire both these and the Ming enamels at three-figure prices. It is interesting to note that some twenty years ago Sir Joseph Duveen sold the black "Slave Girl" to Mr. Kennedy for £500, since when efforts were made by Mr. Pierpont Morgan to acquire it from the latter at a sum which apparently was insufficient to induce him to part with it. The total of the two days' sale was £27,371. L. G. S.

CLEVELAND.

Museum men of note, visiting the new Museum here invariably make the statements: that never did an American art museum open with such important permanent collections on display, and rarely, if ever, were so many valuable loans secured for an opening exhibition.

Some 18 choice examples from the collections of Charles Freer, loaned by the Smithsonian Institution, make Gallery X a Mecca for connoisseurs in Eastern art. These include a painting in full color on silk of the Tang Emperor Chao-Liehn, a landscape in ink on silk, of the Five dynasties, a head of Kwanyin in black rock, same date; bronze wine holders and vases, a wooden statue of a Bodhisattva in dried lacquer, two others, carved and gilded; two pair of screens and several sculptures.

The screens are a pair of six fold, representing the pure Tosa school, subject "Yoshino Valley in Cherry Blossom Time" and a pair of fourfold, in ink, "Landscape in Snow," by Soga Shubun (XIV Century). Among the marbles is a "demon" or temple guardian, having a human body and lion's head, carved from black rock, of the Wei dynasty. Two hawks in black basalt, sacred to Ra, are Egyptian antiques included in this display.

A rare collection of "surimono" or special prints, which Japanese art patrons were wont to order as souvenirs on feast days and other rare occasions, owned by Messrs. W. S. and H. B. Spaulding of Boston, occupies Gallery XI. Among these is a series of twelve prints by Hiroshige, not to be duplicated. These include river, seashore and village scenes. Hokusai, Shuman, Hokkei, Seiko, Shinsai and Gakutei and other artists are represented in this collection. Temple ornaments and screens loaned by other collectors, are also shown.

A remarkable Chinese tapestry loaned by Mr. John L. Severance of Cleveland is another Oriental treasure. This was made by order of the Emperor Ch'ien-lung to simulate a French tapestry which he admired. The subject is "The Birthday Festival of the Emperor." Designed as a present for Louis XVth of France, it was never sent, perhaps because of the death of the old emperor. The number of stitches to the square inch range from 700 to 1,100 and, although the border is a copy of the French tapestry, the remainder is purely Chinese.

Woolen tapestries from the Blair collection are among the Egyptian antiques, of which the museum also owns a number.

In connection with the display of Colonial art are shown many pieces of XVII-XVIII Century silver from the collections of Messrs. Dwight Blaney and Hollis French of Boston and George S. Palmer of New London. The Gorham Company loans a replica in bronze of Houdon's Washington in marble in the capital at Richmond, Va. Among the paintings of that period are "Paul and Silas in Prison" by Washington Allston, loaned by the St. Louis museum; a portrait of Mary Carpenter by Earl, loaned by the Worcester Art Museum; seven portraits by Gilbert Stuart and others by Benjamin West, Sully, Peale and Trumbull, loaned by private collectors.

Among early Dutch and Spanish paintings in this opening exhibition are a St. John and a Virgin by El Greco, from the Ehrlich Galleries; three by Frans Hals, from Mr. Edward Libbey of Toledo; two portraits by Rembrandt of himself and one of "Saskia" as Minerva, a Rubens, Velasquez's "Man with Wine Glass" and many scarcely less noteworthy. Corot, Diaz, Harpignies, Manet, Millet, Monet, Monticelli, Puvis de Chavannes, Rousseau, and others supplement the museum's acquisitions in the French gallery. The Vose Galleries of Boston have loaned twelve fine Monticellis. In early English portraits the range of loans is wide and many excellent examples of early American landscape work are shown.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, July 5, 1916.

I am in possession of a piece of news of peculiar interest to the artistic world; but I am much in doubt of its escaping the censor and arriving intact in America. However, as it concerns a device which, I am told, the Germans have already begun to imitate and as I shall give no specific details, I cannot see that its publication would be at all indiscreet.

There are 600 French artists—all the able-bodied ones, it is said—mobilized for the carrying on of a vast system of what, for lack of a better descriptive name, may be called out-of-doors scene-painting, and they work in enormous so-called "studios"—in reality open yards—in the Belleville quarter of Paris, just inside the northeastern section of the old fortified enceinte. The objects which they paint are all of natural size—trees, houses, churches, towers, villages, towns, fortresses, parks of artillery, stacks of munitions, aviation-sheds, railway trains, camps, regiments of men reposing, etc.

For months the French have been using this out-door stage scenery near the hostile front to mislead and deceive the enemy. It is only lately, I believe, that the German air-scouts have begun to suspect the deception practised upon them, and even since they have been thus forewarned, it is not easy for them to distinguish the false from the real features of a landscape. You can imagine, therefore, what degree of skill is shown in devising the former. What other result could there be when all the talented young painters of France are employed in the work? Since I called attention some months ago to the number of artists who had been killed or wounded in battle, virtually all the members of the profession have been withdrawn from service under arms, to perform this other service which the military authorities regard, it is said, as of equal importance. The slang military term that has been invented to designate it is "camouflage." Great secrecy has been observed with regard to it. "We hardly use any brush," said a well-known artist to me, "that is smaller than a broom!"

Notable Art Exhibitions.

The Cercle Artistique in the rue Volney has been holding a reminiscent exhibition which included works by some eminent French artists of the last half-century: Benjamin Constant, Bouguereau, Henner and others, as well as of many contemporaneous ones, such as Carolus Duran, Paul Chabas, Cormon, Vollon, Bompard, Guignard and Lenoir. Among the artists exhibiting at the Bernheim Jeune gallery for the benefit of a war charity are Charles Thorndike, Maurice Denis, Steilen, Guillaumin, Rodin, Luce and Marquet. A hundred paintings, drawings and lithographs by Eugène Carrière, exhibited in the Avenue Malakoff, have attracted considerable attention of late, and there are indications that the vogue of this artist is growing.

Fair Art Auction Prices.

The sale of the collection of the late Baron de Schlichting during the present fortnight has produced some rather fair prices. An 18th century "Juno," of French school, brought $200; a "Young Girl With a Dead Bird," school of Greuze, $540; a "Portrait of a Woman," school of Nattier, $490; a group sculptured in ivory (18th century), "Psyche and Cupid," $370; an incense-vase in white marble, adorned with chiseled bronze (Louis XVI.), $2,000; a wall clock, 18th century, signed Gudin of Paris, $1,210; a Flemish tapestry, with figures, 17th century, $9,000.

Why Was Oberteuffer Shut Out?

George Oberteuffer, who has chiefly distinguished himself as a painter of outdoor Paris, especially of the borders of the Seine, is having a private exhibition of some sixty of his works, mostly of recent date, although a few were done a year or so before the war. Oberteuffer is an artist whom artists appreciate, and this makes all the more notable, although it may also in part explain, the exclusion of anything bearing his signature at the Panama-Pacific exhibition. In artistic circles here this has been a subject of comment for the last year and a half. I do not know how much, if any, of the subdued scandal which it created found vent in America. Oberteuffer might have made loud protest and would have found many willing listeners. He has preferred, however, a modest silence.

The committee that was responsible for the acceptance or rejection of pictures from this side of the water was headed by Walter MacEwen, who with other of its members is identified with the Society of American Artists in France, which for years has assumed a species of exclusive representative right. The younger set of American artists living abroad resent, with some justice, this "snobbish" attitude, which unfortunately has largely imposed on the French public and the French artistic authorities. As a matter of fact, whatever progressive energy there is the American art colony in France is chiefly found in men who are not members of that society, and who, under its rules are not eligible to it because they are not yet in possession of certain medals.

In justice to Mr. Trask, who personally invited American artists abroad to send their best work to San Francisco, it must be said that he expressed deep regret at the treatment accorded by the Panama-Pacific committee to certain of the more individual of the men who had accepted his overtures in a frank spirit of confidence and trust.

I am in a position to announce that the Society of American Artists will not be allowed much longer to pose as the only really representative body of American painters and sculptors in France. Another society, on a more independent foundation, will be formed about the time the war closes, or soon after.

But to return to Mr. Oberteuffer's exhibition. It has attracted some of the most eminent French critics. In all of the 60 canvases the artist's well-known strength and celerity of execution are strikingly evident. In many is apparent a new movement on his part, a happy tendency to greater finish and to a degree of ideality which he has lacked in the past. These two qualities, added to his great native powers, ought to give to his future work an increasing excellence, and may carry him even to great heights of performance. No one has caught more characteristically than he the ever-varying aspects of Paris in the vicinity of the Seine; and he has also produced some Breton and Norman canvases whose freshness and justness of conception are quite remarkable.

Thorndikes and Ullmann's Display.

A simple exhibition of paintings which does not profess to have any philanthropic or even patriotic object is a rarity just now. Such a one is open at the gallery of Bernheim Jeune, near the Madeleine. Two Americans, Charles Thorndike and Eugene Ullmann, are conspicuous in it. All of the artists are of the so-called "advanced group." Thorndike, who is driving a hospital-ambulance on the Verdun front, brought down from there recently a forceful painting, which he made under fire, of devastated trenches and shattered groves—a landscape which is in itself a mute note of horror. He has already returned to his heroic, self-chosen task.

President Wilson recently gave sittings to Jo Davidson, for a bronze bust, which the sculptor is modelling in this city. Mr. Davidson says he endeavored to catch "the subconscious self of the President."

DANNAT TO FRENCH ARTISTS.

W. T. Dannat recently sent from Monte Carlo, to Leon Bourgeois, president of the Fraternite des Artistes, his check for $3,000 for that fund. This sum was the net profit of sales of his works at the exhibition held at Gimpel & Weldenstein's galleries in this city last season.

ART AND ARTISTS.

Hans Kownatski has been showing, this week, at his studio in Carnegie Hall, a recently completed and effective seated portrait in white of Mrs. Dr. Arpad Gerster, a sister-in-law of the singer Etelka Gerster. A striking profile head is a portrait of Baron E. von Klegdorff, who as a singer, is called Franz Egenieff and resides at Beverly Hills near Los Angeles. A successful first essay at sculpture is also shown by Mr. Kownatski. It is a half length, nearly nude, life size female figure. Various landscapes are souvenirs of a recent stay in California.

The summer exhibition of paintings by American artists, at the Syracuse Museum, consists, in addition to the permanent collection, of 26 works, by Harry L. Hoffman, Rachel Bulley, Helen M. Turner, Theresa F. Bernstein, William L. Lathrop, Thomas M. Pierce, Jane Peterson, and Emil Carlsen.

Richard Kimball who spent 15 years in Munich, returned to this country, indefinitely, after the outbreak of the war and took a studio at 130 W. 57th St., where he has painted a number of interesting landscapes. He recently returned from Moores Mills, Mass. and brought back several attractive canvases. It is his purpose to go to Gloucester for the summer, where he will paint landscapes and shore subjects.

Herman Marcus, a gifted young landscape painter, son of the well known jeweler of that name, has decided to join the art colony at Mystic, Conn., where he will paint until the late autumn. He is interested in arranging an exhibition of the artists of that locality some time during August.

Will Rau has just completed the mural decorations for the Hotel Wallick, 43rd St. and B'way. The seven large murals represent three hundred years along Broadway showing it as an "Indian Trail," in "The Dutch Period," "The English Period," and the four "Colonial Periods" (1830-1861) and "The Present," to 1916. The murals are handled in a high key in flat tones, and the decorative scheme is old ivory. Mr. Rau will soon leave town for his Sullivan Co. studio in Jeffersonville, N. Y.

Frank Townsend Hutchens's "Poplars in Normandy" has been purchased by a group of art patrons in order to start a permanent art gallery in Davenport, Iowa.

George Bogert has arranged to lease the whole top floor above the new Milch galleries, which will be opened in the autumn, on W. 57th St., next door to the Lotos Club.

Robert Nisbet has had an unusually successful winter, having made a number of important sales. He will spend the summer painting at Gloucester, Mass.

Alpheus Cole has recently painted a delightful portrait of "Little Giff" the three-year-old son of Gifford Beal. He has had a successful winter with genre pictures and portraits.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Nott Allen are at Bellport, L. I., where they have taken a cottage for the summer. Mr. Allen expects to do some portrait work and outdoor sketching.

D. Maitland Armstrong and Mrs. Armstrong are at their place at North Hatley, Quebec.

Theodore Fabricius, Danish landscape artist, passed through New York recently on his way to the Mexican border where he will paint a landscape to be called "America."

MUSEUM DIRECTORS MEET.

At a meeting July 6, at the Chicago Institute the Association of Museum Directors was organized. The following officers were elected: President, Newton H. Carpenter, Art Institute, Chicago; vice-president, Joseph Breck, Art Museum, Minneapolis; secretary and treasurer, Miss Cornelia Sage, Albright Gallery, Buffalo.

WORCESTER'S FINE COPLEY.

The July number of the Bulletin of the Worcester Museum is unusually interesting. It reproduces as a frontispiece a remarkably fine Copley, a "Portrait of Mrs. Samuel Phillips Savage," which has been recently purchased as well as two quaint portraits by Ralph Earl, which it owns. They represent William and Mary Carpenter. There are two views in the Children's Room.

CHICAGO'S NEW ART CRITIC.

Dr. Albrecht Montgelas, art editor of the Chicago Examiner, and who has brought a needed, refreshing accomplished and able method of art criticism and reviewing to the "Windy City," is in charge of an Art and Literary Sunday Supplement, which the Examiner has recently inaugurated and which is attractively edited and printed.

It is to be hoped that Dr. Montgelas will be able, through his able work in this Supplement and in the daily Examiner, to influence the Chicagoans to at least modify their seeming idea that all of art interest and value in the entire world, both ancient and modern, is centered in the "Art Inst."—which admirable institution as it is in many ways, is after all, a local organization and about as provincial and parochial in its management—as is Chicago in its art views and ideas.

OLD MASTERS of the English, Dutch and Italian Schools.

MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 4 BERKELEY STREET, LONDON, W., is acting as private agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

RECENT FOREIGN ART SALES.

Sale Part V Huth Library.

The sale of the fifth portion of the famous Huth Library began July 4 at Sotheby's in London. It was the thirtieth day of the sale and $17,130 was realized. Mr. George D. Smith gave $1,800 for a first edition of a "Manuel of Prayers," dedicated by the Bishop of Rochester to Thomas Cromwell; John Wayland, 1539. This, said to be the only perfect copy known, brought $600 in 1868. Mr. Smith gave $750 for a German version, first edition, Strassburg, 1483, of the travels of Johannes de Mandeville, $205 for "The Travels of Marco Polo," Da Sessa, Venice, first edition, 1456; $200 for an Italian version of Mandeville's Travels, first edition, 1480, and $120, for one of two copies known, of Maltie's "Remedies for the Diseases in Horses," Purfoot, London, 1594.

On July 5, $5,225 was realized. Mr. H. Stevens gave $2,000 for a first edition of Increase Mathers' "History of the War with Indians in New England," $800 for a book of 1635, bearing on the boundaries of Penna. and Maryland and $725 for Martyr's "The Decades of the Newe Worlde or West India."

On July 6 Mr. Smith gave $4,000 for a first edition of Milton's "Comus"; $3,000 for a second edition of "The Mirror of the World," printed by Caxton; and $500 each, for a first edition of "Paradise Lost," a first edition of "The Mirror for Magistrates," 1559, and a first edition of Merlin's "Prophecies." Mr. Quaritch paid $2,825 for the only copy known of "The Merry Devil of Edmonston," a play attributed to Shakespeare, and $2,375 for a first edition of "Lycidas."

At the conclusion of the sale of the fifth portion of the library on July 7, $12,298 was realized, making the total $78,200 and the grand total to date $909,335. A rare edition of the comedy "Mucedorus," to which Shakespeare is thought to have contributed one scene of forty lines, brought $1,025. Morley's "The Triumphs of Oriana," fetched $445, and a first edition of Sir Thomas More's "Lyfe of Johan Picus, Erle of Myrandula," $410.

Porcelains Sold in London.

The first day's sale, at Christies in London, June 21, of the Sidney Ernest Kennedy collection of Chinese porcelains realized $85,000. A pair of powdered blue Kang-He beakers brought $18,085. An inverted pear-shaped Kang-He famille noir bowl $4,725 from Mr. Reid, and a pair of famille verte figures, $4,460. For a pair of Keen-Lung beakers $3,935 was given and for a pair of Kien-Lung famille rose dishes $3,780 by Mr. Coureau. A set of three powdered blue Kang-He vases brought $2,205.

At the second session, June 22, 149 lots fetched $75,000. Mr. Jackson gave $3,465 for a set of the 8 Chinese immortals and Mr. Dawson $3,255 for a famille verte Kang-He dish. A pair of enamelled egg shell lanterns brought $2,940, from Mr. Weston and a pair of inverted pear-shaped Ming vases $2,362, from Mr. Gorer. Mr. Dickenson gave $2,152 for a pair of figures of geese and Mr. Sparks $2,100 for a pair of Kang-He parrots. Many of the lots were bought for America.

Early English Portraits at Christies.

On July 7 at Christies, in London, a sale of early English portraits and other works brought $125 for 160 lots. A portrait of a gentleman by Reynolds fetched $5,250 and a portrait of a boy $2,730. A Fragonard landscape brought $3,360.

Old Masters Sold at Christies.

At a sale of old masters from the collections of Sir John Gorst and others on June 23 at Christies in London, 741 lots fetched $100,000. Raeburn's "Portrait of Andrew Dalzel" brought $3,935. Mr. Holmes paid $3,755 for Hals' "Youth Holding Jug and Lighting a Pipe." Mr. Glen gave $3,675 for Robert's "Classical Building by a Stream."

Mr. Vicars paid $2,100 for Raeburn's "Portrait of Capt. Alexander Ker." Mr. Freeman gave $1,890 for Hoppner's "Portrait of William Pitt." Mr. Harriss paid $2,625 for an early Flemish school "Madonna." A drawing by Blake, "The Resurrection" brought $520.

Penn Relics Bring $75,000.

A collection of family portraits and Mss., in the possession of descendants of William Penn, was sold at Christies, in London, on July 10 for $75,000. Beechey's portrait of John Penn, a grandson of William Penn, brought $6,300. While Romney's portrait of the same was bought by Knoedler & Co. for $709. Highmore's portrait of William's son, brought $2,625, and his picture of Richard, the third son, $2,205. Burns' letter to Mrs. Dunlop brought $600 and William Penn's family Bible $575.

Mss. Sold at Sotheby's.

At a sale of letters and other Mss. at Sotheby's in London on May 29, $345 was paid for the author's own copy revised and augmented by him, of Swinburne's "The Heptalogia." The Mss. of his "A Nine Day's Wonder" brought $250 and 11 of his letters $240. A collection of letters, including several from Rossetti and Swinburne, fetched $500. Sixteen cards written by Mark Twain to his publishers and other similar material brought $70 and two Stevenson letters $200.

The Big Poster Show.

The exhibition of the works submitted in the Poster Competition of the Society for Electrical Development, which was held at the Anderson Galleries the week opening June 19, was a great success. All the exhibition rooms were filled, the effects of the design and color being most inspiring. While the work of the individual designers was of much interest, the school exhibits were especially good. The prizes aggregating $2,200 naturally stimulated to best effort. The display, after leaving N. Y., started on a tour embracing Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Boston.

DOUGHERTY-CLARK.

Miss Marian Averell Clark, the singer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Crawford Clark, was married at her home in this city, on June 17 to Paul Dougherty, the well-known marine painter. The couple who first met in Paris left after the ceremony on a motor trip and have since gone on a tour of China and Japan, intending to return by way of Honolulu. Mr. Dougherty who has a studio at 30 E. 57 St., is a son of Mr. J. Hampden Dougherty former Water Commissioner.

WHITE-CHANLER.

Miss Laura Astor Chanler, sculptor and painter, daughter of Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, was married June 19 at Geneseo, N. Y., to Lawrence Grant White, architect son of the late Stanford and Mrs. White. Mr. Lawrence White is a graduate of the Paris Ecole des Beaux Arts.

MURPHY-UMBSTAETTER.

Herman Dudley Murphy, instructor in drawing from life at Harvard, was married June 22 in Arlington, Mass., to Mrs. Nellie Littlehale Umbstaetter.

SWAIN-BRADLEY.

Miss Margaret Hinchley Bradley, daughter of Susan H. Bradley, was married on June 25 to Roger Dyer Swain, Capt. and Adj. of 1st Mass. Regt. Field Artillery, by the Chaplin of the regiment and passed under bower of swords two days before Capt. Swain left for the border with his regiment.

Mrs. Helen Cossitt Juilliard left by her will filed June 23 an estate of over $5,000,000. One-quarter of her residuary estate goes to the Metropolitan Museum.

The remaining regular summer monthly issue will be published on Saturday, Sept. 16.

MORGAN ART APPRAISEMENT.

The appraisal for the transfer tax of the estate of J. Pierpont Morgan, finally completed, now some two years and four and a half months after his death in March 1913, values his gross estate at $78,149,024, less by some $25,000,000 than it had been supposed total. The result also proves that Mr. Morgan was less wealthy than a number of his contemporaries, for example, John Jacob Astor, John S. Kennedy, E. H. Harriman and Anthony N. Brady.

Among the bequests in Mr. Morgan's will to personal friends and employes were $50,000 to Miss Belle de Costa Greene, who has so efficiently managed and continues to manage the Morgan Library in East 36 St., and $10,000 to Miss Ada Thurston, Miss Greene's assistant.

The Art Collections Appraisals.

It is in the appraisals of the art and literary collections of Mr. Morgan that the readers of the ART NEWS will be most interested.

The value of the collections reached the total of $20,531,609, or nearly one-third of the entire estate. The valuations submitted by the various expert appraisers selected by agreement between Lewis Cass Ledyard, Jr., attorney for the Morgan executors, and counsel for the State Controller, were:

Miniatures, (as appraised by James B. Townsend)	$418,170
Chinese porcelains (as appraised by Thomas E. Kirby)	2,178,320
Paintings, (as appraised by Roland F. Knoedler)	3,637,200
Tapestries, rugs, furniture, snuff-boxes, art objects, &c., (as appraised by Emil Baumgarten)	2,822,000
French porcelains, (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	213,150
Dresden porcelains, (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	531,650
Watches, (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	174,450
Jewels and jewelry, (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	249,600
Ivories, carved wood, marble, terra cotta, stone, Renaissance bronzes, ancient bronzes, early enamels, objects in glass, metal, ivory, and stone, Limoges enamels, faience, majolica, silver objects, and ancient jewelry, (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	4,666,365
Books, manuscripts, and prints, (as appraised by Thomas C. Kirby)	4,096,666
Drawings and sketches (as appraised by Walter L. Ehrich)	302,970
Glass, bronzes, statuary, Roman and Byzantine jewelry, carvings in wood and ivory, &c., (as appraised by Thomas Ward)	1,135,700
Foule collection, (not appraised, but sold by executors shortly after decedent's death for 500,000 francs) at 5.17%	96,618
Duplicates in library, (not appraised, but sold by executors) for	8,750

Value of the Pictures.

The pictures loaned by Mr. Morgan before his death to the Metropolitan Museum, and which, with the exception of the Fragonard panels, since sold to Mr. Frick for more than a million still remain there—the great Raphael having been given the Museum—were valued by Mr. Roland Knoedler, as appraiser, in March, 1913, at a total of $3,637,200. The list with Mr. Knoedler's valuations follows:

NEW NAT'L GALLERY DIRECTOR.

Charles J. Holmes, landscape painter, director, keeper and secretary of the National Portrait Gallery since 1909, and former editor of the Burlington Magazine, has been appointed Director of the London National Gallery in succession to Sir Charles Holroyd, retired on account of ill health. Mr. Holmes who was born in 1868, the son of the Rev. Charles Rivington Holmes, at Stratton, Cornwall, is the author of a number of works on art and occupied the chair of the Slade professorship of art at Oxford from 1904 to 1910. Among his books are "Constable and His Influence on Landscape Painting," "Notes on the Art of Rembrandt," "Pictures and Picture Collecting" and "Hokusai."

SMITH BUYS AMERICANA.

Mr. George D. Smith, on Aug. 14, the day before the opening at Sotheby's in London, of the three days' sale of the collection of Americana, from the library of Britwell Court, owned by the late S. R. Christie-Miller, bought it for about $300,000. Some American collectors and dealers had gone to London for the sale. The most valuable item, in the collection, is the major and minor voyages of DeBry to America, in 52 volumes and said to be worth $20,000. "A Brief and True Report of the Newfoundland of Virginia," by Thomas Hariot, 1585, is valued at $15,000; a description of a farewell to Sir Francis Drake, 1558, at $10,000. At $8,000 is valued "New Mexico, Otherwise the Voyage of Anthony Espeio," at $7,500 "A Discovery of the Bermudas," by Sir Thomas Gates, 1610, and at $7,000 "A True Report of the Late Discoveries and Possession of the Newfoundland Landes," by Sir George Peckham, 1583, and "A Voyage Into New England," by Christopher Levett, 1628. Mr. Smith hopes to sell the library as a whole.

MISS SAGE DOUBLY DECORATED.

Miss Cornelia B. Sage, director of the Albright Gallery at Buffalo, has been signally honored by the French government and the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts. The first has made her an Officer d'Instruction Publique, while the second has given her its decoration, which is awarded for the first time to a woman.

DIRECTOR FOX HONORED.

The King of Sweden has conferred on Mr. William Henry Fox, director of the Brooklyn Museum, the order of the North Star. Mr. Fox represented Sweden on the jury of art awards at the Pana-Pacific Exposition. He also organized the tour of the Swedish art exhibit.

NEW ANDERSON BUILDING.

A project is under way to erect a 22-story building at the N. W. corner of Madison Ave. and 40 St., where there is now a four-story one under lease to the Anderson Galleries, who are understood to be negotiating for the purchase of the land from the owner, Mrs. Lilian B. Hyde. The proposed building, the architects being Starrett & Van Vleck, is to cost almost $400,000 and be of limestone and terra cotta.

GIVES CA D'ORO PALACE.

Baron George Franchetti, the Italian banker, has given to the nation, the famous Venetian palace, known as the Ca d'Oro, which is one of the greatest ornaments of the Grand Canal. With this "golden house" goes a superb collection of paintings, books and old furniture. The pictures include Van Dyck's "Portrait of a Gentleman," Mantegna's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," Titian's "Seated Venus," and Signorini's "Flagellation."

BERLIN PHOTO. CO. NOT TO CLOSE

The ART NEWS is requested to state that the N. Y. branch of the Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., is not to close as erroneously reported, nor will it move, as originally intended, from the present location.

LOUIS DUVEEN'S KITCHENER GIFT.

Mr. Louis Duveen, who telegraphed from Paris a bid of $13,125 for the famous Kitchener letter, and lost it has now most handsomely sent the London Lord Mayor the same amount for the memorial fund.

The Hoentschel Collection.

One of the most important of Mr. Morgan's purchases of collections en bloc was that of the famous Hoentschel assemblage of mediaeval furniture, wood and marble statuettes and statues, church furniture and vestments, velvets, tapestries, etc.—in fact a museum of antiques in itself. This was secured, like the majority of Mr. Morgan's art treasures, through and by Mr. Jacques Seligmann of Paris, after prolonged negotiations with its German owners. The exact price paid for the collection has never been disclosed. The list of objects in this famous collection, with the appraiser's (Mr. Ward's) valuations is too long to publish in the ART NEWS, but the principal items as appraised, total some $225,000.

Valuation of the Miniatures.

Mr. Morgan's collection of miniatures, while the valuation of $418,170, finally placed upon it by the appraiser, Mr. James B. Townsend, who had the assistance here of Mr. Horace Townsend, the English authority, long resident here, and also as to the records of Dr. George Williamson, of London, the best known authority and writer on the subject, and who was given carte blanche by Mr. Morgan to form the collection and prepare the elaborate catalog de luxe—will be a surprise to many who knew the much greater sum paid by Mr. Morgan for the treasures. It is, however, in scope, variety, and the number and quality of its representative examples, the finest in the world. The collection has only recently been withdrawn from exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum, owing to the already noticeable deterioration of several of the works painted on ivory, from the American extremes of temperature, and the feared further deterioration of these and other examples. The earlier miniatures, painted on vellum, and often on the backs of playing cards, for it is not generally known that the use of ivory for miniatures did not come in until the late XVII century—have not been injured by this climate.

The appraising of the miniatures and the determination of their validity in many instances, was perhaps the most difficult task set for any of the appraisers of the Morgan collections, for as the majority of the Morgan miniatures are by artists or attributed to artists long since gone, and some are centuries old, and as almost all these artists had clever pupils and imitators—especially in France—it is often impossible to determine absolute authorship. Mr. Morgan took especial delight and pride in his miniatures, and their assembling, and came to have good knowledge himself, through study of his treasures, but he was in many instances deceived—not unnaturally, and while there are few miniatures that can be called spurious in his collections, there are a number wrongly attributed, and for which he paid fictitious values. Then too the knowledge on the part of owners or of dealers in miniatures that Mr. Morgan would see, and possibly buy, good miniatures, and especially those by certain artists, boomed the miniature market in general and the works of certain men in particular, so that from the strict commercial viewpoint, which must be that of the honest appraiser—values far below Mr. Morgan's purchase price had to be given to a number of the "paintings in petto," which pulled down in a drastic way the anticipated total, and the total which Mr. Morgan paid out. The foolish stories and estimates of value, published by inexperienced persons during the past few years on the collection, and its value deceived the art public also, and this fact has added to the now general disappointment at the—too many—surprisingly low appraisal of the miniatures.

It is impossible, as in the case of the articles in the Hoentschel collection to publish a full, or even at all complete list of the valuation of the 800 or more miniatures which form the Morgan collection of these gems of art. Such a list is any way misleading as the value of the frames—and perhaps a third of the miniatures are in costly frames, a number set with precious stones, and the value of these had to be added to that of the "little pictures" they surround. These frames are, in many instances, themselves works of art in design and execution and Dr. Williamson, who designed most of them, employed several expert jewelers and gem setters to make them, all at a large cost. The frame of one miniature, in particular, which in itself is worth about $50 at the most, cost some $7,000. The catalogs de luxe of the collection were autographed by Mr. Morgan and sent to all the Crowned Heads of Europe, as well as to a number of personal friends, and are said to have themselves cost some $50,000 to $75,000, to prepare and publish.

Some of the works have a sentimental rather than an art value, as, for example, the little and beautifully framed portrait of Christina Rossetti by her husband Dante Gabriel Rossetti, which is not a miniature at all but a painted daguerotype. The only American miniature in the collection, if it is by an American, is a claimed portrait of Franklin, and is not by Trumbull—although a good work. It is strange that Mr. Morgan did not secure a single example of such fine American miniaturists as Malbone, Fraser, Peale, et al.

The highest valuation of the miniatures was $7,500 for Hans Holbein's splendid portrait of Mrs. Pemberton. There are only seven works appraised at more than $3,000 each, in addition to the Holbein of Mrs. Pemberton, and one of the Baroness Dachenhausen by Auguste Cameray at $5,500, as follows, portraits of Mme. du Barry and the daughter of the Earl of Ormond by Richard Cosway, valued at $4,000 and $3,050, respectively, a portrait of Mary, Duchess of Richmond and Lenox, by Jean Petitot and Jacques Bordier, $5,000; Jean H. Fragonard's "Portrait of the Artist's Son," $3,200; and a miniature of the Emperor Nicholas and his brother by Jean F. Vollier, $3,575.

Tapestries, Furniture and Decorations.

A total valuation of $2,822,000 was given by Mr. Emile Baumgarten, as appraiser, to the tapestries, furniture and decorative pieces owned by Mr. Morgan, some of which have since been sold as recorded in the ART NEWS. The largest figures were placed on a set of five Gobelin panels, or Gothic tapestry by Von Room ($175,000), three Beauvais tapestries ($150,000), a XVI century Flemish weave ($45,000), two more of same period and weave ($40,000) each, an early XVI Brussels weave ($50,000), one of same period and weave "The Crucifixion" ($50,000). A set of XVIII century French tapestry covered carved gilt furniture is valued at $225,000, and another such set (XVIII century at $136,000) a French console table, VIII century, at $30,000, a French XVIII century Secretary at $40,000, a Louis XVI Commode at $45,000, a bronze clock by Falconet at $30,000, a mahogany Regence writing table at $25,000, two cases of art objects at $72,250, a collection of 66 XVII century English and French boxes of gold, porcelain and other materials, at $160,000, some 70 English and French boxes, in gold and other materials at $115,000, 40 pieces Louis XVI Carnet de Bal and other objects $30,000 and a similar one of 116 pieces, $87,000.

Porcelains, Watches and Jewelry.

The Oriental Porcelains, one of the most important features of the Morgan collections, were sold to Duveen brothers, who had sold most of them to Mr. Morgan last winter for an announced price of $3,500,000, and their valuation is not given out by the State. Mr. Thomas E. Kirby and assistants appraised these. The more important French porcelains, as also the Dresden pieces, are appraised as follows:

Eugene Travis, and Mr. Kirby and assistants really did most of the work of appraisal) the appraisers, is $4,960,666. The appraisers in a note of appreciation appended to their report say:

"The Morgan Library is of such magnitude and importance that even as early as 1908 The London Times, in an editorial article referring to an article upon the library by its special correspondent, said: 'The description furnished by our correspondent is that of the most wonderful of all collections formed that of the most wonderful collector of our times, perhaps of any time. The making of such a library has never been possible until the present time. It is the outcome of the age of millionaires. These gentlemen of vast means abound in America, and there are a few of them in Europe. One out of ten has taste; one out of a hundred has genius. Frick and Widener come under the former category, but the man of genius is Morgan.' 'It is as difficult as it is impossible to measure in money and figures anything which touches as does the Morgan library the souls of men,' said the appraisers. They said that the library contained 12,856 titles and 19,197 volumes of books, 1,088 titles, and 1,335 volumes of manuscripts, and 1,098 prints."

The Aldine Press publications total, according to the appraisal, $5,300, the James Toovey collection of general literature, $144,907, the Theodore Erwin collection, $123,196, the selection of early printed books from the libraries of William Morris, Richard Bennett, and the Earl of Asburnham, $538,645, the Manuscripts, $2,094,755, several items, such as Blake's "Book of Job" ($35,000) Bruce's "History and Croniklis of Scotland 1536" ($6,000), Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" first edition 1676 ($5,000), De Foe's "Robinson Crusoe," first four editions ($1,000), and Shakespeare's works, first edition, 1623 ($15,000); total, $221,220.

The Bibles and Church Service books total $136,757, and include a first edition of the Gutenberg Bible at $27,000 and two volumes of the Vulgate—the first Bible with a date, 1462, at $18,000. The Incunabula which include Boethius' "Consolation of Philosophy" 1478 at $10,000, Casalis' "Game of Chess" second edition at $10,000 and Malory's "Morte d'Arthur" Caxton press 1485 at $37,500, total $184,375. The five etchings by Rembrandt in the collection are valued as follows:

ART AT NEWPORT.

The prizes at the recent and fifth annual exhibition of the Newport Art Association were awarded as follows: The Harrison Morris Prize of $100 for the best picture in the show went to Daniel Garber's "Tanis." The Richard Grenough Memorial Prize of $75 for the next best picture in the show was given to Jonas Lie's landscape, "Morning." The Shaw-Safe Prize of $50 for the best portrait went to William K. Darrow's "Waiting." The Hunt Prize of $25 was awarded by popular vote to "Portrait of Mrs. Percy Chase," by Mary Brewster Hazelton, of Boston.

Several important sales were made. "The New Model" by R. H. Ives Gammell was sold in the early days and also a landscape by Charles P. Gruppe. A sculpture by Anna Coleman Todd, "The Sword of France," and a small bronze by Louise Allen were among other things sold. The exhibition closed July 25.

The Council of the Art Association, John Elliott, William Cotton, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown and others, recently elected as President of the Association Harrison S. Morris of Philadelphia. Mr. Morris, who has a summer place in Jamestown, R. I., was formerly director of the Pa. Academy.

William Cotton's successful exhibition at the Association closed Aug. 7. The collection numbered but six oils, several of which have been seen before, and included the brilliantly colored portrait "Mrs. Cotton." But it is in two of the new canvases, both portraits, that Mr. Cotton had demonstrated his arrival among the "strong"

(Gordon) and daughter, occupying the place of honor. In the portrait of Hudson Maxim, the head, with its crown of white hair stands out sturdily from the background. The portrait of Earl Stetson Crawford is an excellent likeness in a nice composition; while that of the Earl of Kintore, suggesting, as it does, qualities, both aristocratic and forceful, leads one to infer it to be also an excellent representation of the man. Mr. Roosevelt's exhibition closes Aug. 25.

WAR ART AT BAR HARBOR.

A most interesting and important exhibition of French, English and German War proclamations, orders, posters, medals, etc., a collection made by Mrs. Edith Wharton, the American author, now in Paris, and sent by her to her relative, Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, was given two days this week at the Triangle cottage. The display was to have been held in the Young Women's Christian Ass'n building here and had been so advertised, but at the last moment two women of the society, one the daughter of a German and the other of strong German proclivities, who have been supporters of the local Y. W. C. A., objected to its being held there, despite the wish of the donor of the building, Mrs. John S. Kennedy that it should be held as advertised.

The sensation created by the opposition of the two women, who call themselves Americans, was such, however, that the display was all the more a success and was crowded.

The most interesting and novel picture of the exhibits were one of the original proclamations calling for the execution of

NEW BROOKS MEMORIAL ART GALLERY
Memphis, Tenn.

painters. His "Young April," a lovely young girl, is done in a manner that is strong yet not disquieting and without any sacrifice of the sensitiveness which has hitherto characterized this painter's work. It is, however, in the portrait of George Barr McCutcheon that Mr. Cotton's high water mark is reached. In the to him new medium of pastel the artist shows himself particularly happy in delicacy of handling and achieves results with a surprising economy of means. Except in the two little nudes shown the painter has used the paper itself in a striking way, both as background and as an integral part of the things delineated. The pastels have proved so successful that Mr. Cotton is to hold an exhibition limited to pastels, pastel portraits and drawings in New York early in the Winter.

On Aug. 3 a highly successful fête was held on the beautiful shaded lawn on the Association. The Pomfret Dancers, a quartet of young women trained by Miss Beatrice Stevens, the painter interpreted Beethoven in "classic" dances. A large sum of money was added to the treasury by the sale of tickets, flowers and refreshments.

One of the most interesting events scheduled for the Association is the exhibition Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney is to open Aug. 26. Mrs. Whitney will display not only her own sculptures, but her large collection of French and American pictures.

Mary Helen Carlisle has been holding an exhibit of garden pictures and miniatures which closed Aug. 14. Mrs. C. L. Poillon is showing an interesting collection of her wares from the Poillon Pottery at Woodbridge, New Jersey, together with a few sculptured pieces by Miss Eugenia Starnard.

S. Montgomery Roosevelt opened his exhibition at the Association Aug. 14th, with a large tea which was well attended. There are but seven canvases on view, a large portrait of the Hon. Mrs. Beresford (Kitty

Edith Cavell and some of the original medals struck in Germany to celebrate the sinking of the Lusitania and an Italian steamer; the Zeppelin medal, showing on the reverse Zeppelin dropping bombs on London, with the city in flames, and on the obverse a portrait of Count Zeppelin; another picturing President Wilson on one side as "Pontifex Maximus" crowned with laurel, and on the other Uncle Sam sitting on a pile of cannon balls and holding out a cannon in one hand and a submarine in the other; still another showing a Scotch soldier in kilts and King George beseeching the aid of a Balkan soldier; and lastly and most significant, one called "The Bomb," blank on the obverse and on the reverse showing a bomb bursting and striking down a squad of Allied soldiers—the apotheosis of modern savagery. Needless to say these medals were all struck in Germany. It is to be hoped that the display can be shown in the larger cities next season.

Mr. Albert Gallatin has arranged, as last summer, an interesting exhibit of fine prints from his collection in the Print Room of the Jesup Memorial Library.

Under the management of Mr. Kilgour, Paul Manship is giving an exhibition of his sculptures in the Jesup Library. The work of the Neo-Assyrian sculptor is attracting great attention and interest here and several of the young sculptor's best known and most representative works are shown.

THE MYSTIC EXHIBITION.

The Mystic Conn Art Association will open its third annual exhibition today. Three rooms of the large school building will be devoted to the display which is usually one of the most important of the summer shows. Among the exhibitors are J. Alden Weir, who sends a landscape, Gardner Symons, Child Hassam, Haley Lever, Emile Carlsen, Richard Miller Charles W. Hawthorne, Frederick Frieske and Charles H. Davis. These works are loaned by the

A tea room will be run in connection with the exhibition where the social element will gather and discuss art and generally promote the interest of the exhibition.

THE PROVINCETOWN SHOW.

A summer exhibition, by members of the artist colony, is now on in the town hall at Provincetown, Mass. There are pictures, sketches, etchings and wood block prints. William Halsall shows "Surf" and Charles W. Hawthorne two sketches made in Sicily. A Bermuda scene and a winter landscape represent E. Ambrose Webster. Four sketches of groups of Concord women, serving for the war sufferers, are by Elizabeth W. Roberts. G. A. Beneker sends "By the Sunny Window"; Oscar Fehrer a portrait of a young man; John O. Siebert a portrait sketch of "Mrs. J."; T. Lindenmuth "A Shipyard"; H. Crawford Smith "A Wharf"; Kendall Saunders "In the Sun Porch"; and Edith Catlin "Return from the Mass." Others represented are C. Arnold Slade, Harold P. Brown, George E. Browne, Howard E. Smith, Sarah Munroe, Regina A. Farrelly, David Ericson, Elizabeth H. Hoyand, Frank M. Desch, F. H. Marvin, Oscar H. Gieberich, Adolph W. Blondheim, Ross E. Moffett and the Zorachs.

At the Public Library.

Dr. Frank Weitenkamp, chief of the arts and prints division of the Public Library has added to the summer exhibition, a collection of chiaroscuro prints, reproducing artists' drawings. Also to be seen at the library are a collection of specimens of writing on baked clay and stone from Egypt, Babylonia and elsewhere; Hebrew gold and silver amulets, Biblical scrolls and Oriental Mss.

MALBONE PORTRAIT COPY?

It is claimed that the portrait of Malbone, said to be by himself, recently purchased by the Metropolitan Museum, is only a copy, the only self portrait being in the Corcoran Gallery. It is stated that on the back of the Museum picture a slip of paper conceals the words "Copied by Sandford Mason." The museum authorities have so far made no official denial of the allegation.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT SUMMER ISSUES.

The AMERICAN ART NEWS will, as usual during the summer, appear monthly until Saturday, October 14 next, when the weekly issues will be resumed, and a new volume will begin.

The remaining regular summer monthly issue will be published on Saturday, Sept. 16.

THE JULY BURLINGTON.

Bramantino's "The Adoration of the Magi," part of the Layard bequest to the National Gallery, is reproduced as a frontispiece, in the July number of the Burlington Magazine. The text is by Tancred Borenius. O. C. Gangoly treats of "Southern Indian Lamps" and Lionel Cust tells of a "Portrait of Mary, Queen of Scots," recently acquired by the Natl. Portrait Gallery. H. Clifford Smith describes, "An Italian Lacquered Table of the XVII Century" and Robert Ross tells of the volume from the Oxford University Press, reproducing the frescoes at Ajanta in India. Mr. Borenius reviews the fourth part of the 7 volume of Prof. Venturi's great work on Italian painting. Archibald G. B. Russell, Croix Rouge, treats of the exhibition of Heraldry at the Burlington Fine Arts Club and E. W. Tristram writes of "Kitchener and the Victoria and Albert Museum." "The Charing Cross Bridge" is by D. S. MacColl. The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

MORGAN ART APPRAISEMENT.

We give all possible space in this issue to the story of the appraisal of the art collections of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, which has finally been given out by the State officials, with the valuations, in most instances, of the individual items in the vast and varied assemblage of art works which make up the entire collection—save those of the Oriental porcelains, sold last winter to Duveen Brothers.

The story was published in full detail in the N. Y. Times, with its accustomed enterprise on July 29 last, after our July issue had been published, and for some of the information given by the Times we are indebted, and herewith make our acknowledgments.

But a great daily such as the Times, with the necessary haste of preparation and the natural lack of knowledge of subeditors and reporters of a somewhat technical subject, cannot give the intelligent art reader and lover the more clear, correct and consistent story and the carefully edited lists of objects, as an art publication, with its special knowledge and sources of information. And so we trust our story and lists will be found valuable as information and as a record of the appraisals of the art treasures of the foremost of modern art collectors.

There will undoubtedly be much surprise felt and expressed at both the totals and individual valuations placed upon the Morgan art treasures by the several appraisers, and much questioning, both of their knowledge of the subjects they were individually given to pass upon, and of the commercial and art values they have placed upon the objects they appraised. It must be remembered that some of the appraisals were made nearly two years ago, and others sometime ago, and that there have been sensational events deeply affecting art values and which in several instances have lowered and in others raised prices since these were made. It must also be remembered that Mr. Morgan as a collector of world-wide fame, despite his own knowledge and taste, which were rarely good in a man whose life had been largely devoted to business affairs until his last years, had acquired such fame as a collector of vast wealth that, even with his judgment and knowledge, and the advice of such expert and faithful friends as M. Jacques Seligmann and others, was not infrequently induced to pay higher sums for his treasures than would have been asked or expected from the ordinary collector, and that, spurred by the allurements of collecting, he would frequently, of his own volition and dislike of bargaining, especially when an object attracted him, pay higher than had he been willing to wait.

The fact that there is little that could be called spurious and, save in the miniatures, little that can be called wrongly attributed, in his collections, is more surprising than the undoubtedly too high and exorbitant figures that he gave or was induced to give for some objects, and which, when carefully and honestly appraised from the strict commercial viewpoint, largely reduce, in some cases, the anticipated values of his possessions.

And Mr. Morgan ignored also the commercial side of collecting. He did not buy to sell at a profit, but for his own pleasure, and despite the recent sale of some of his art properties, undoubtedly with the idea of leaving his possessions to the Metropolitan Museum, whose inspiration and upbuilder, as well as whose President he was for years. He had the pride of possession and was spurred on by rivalry at times, no doubt, but differing from the majority of his American art collecting contemporaries, he collected for his own pleasure and education and made his collecting his chief recreation and hobby. "We shall not look upon his like again."

The figures published by the N. Y. papers, and which we republish in this issue, of the fees allowed by Surrogate Fowler, and presumably paid, to the several appraisers must be taken with a grain of salt, without reflection on the newspapers. There is a story, both art and political, regarding the appointment of these appraisers and the arrangement of their fees, and which will be published some day, to the surprise of the community. Suffice it to say that the appraisers themselves, on the whole, performed their arduous task with care and honesty.

NEW SUN LIKES ART NEWS.

The writer on art topics for the New York Sun, which has lately changed ownership and management, and who, we understand, has been taken from the Musical and Dramatic desk during the dull summer season and placed in charge of that of the regular art writer for the Sun, now on vacation, has paid, in a way, the AMERICAN ART NEWS a compliment by filling about half the space of the page which we assume he is directed to occupy with art news and criticism, in the Sun of Sunday, August 6 last, with news of the summer art exhibitions at Newport and elsewhere, which would appear to have been transferred almost bodily, even if paraphrased here and there, from the July issue of this journal.

But the action of "Mr. Munsey's young man" is a doubtful compliment, inasmuch as he failed to give a word or line of credit to the AMERICAN ART NEWS for its energy in collecting the above mentioned and other news of interest to the art world that the Sunday Sun published, and especially for its foresight in providing material in a dull midsummer week for art writers short of material, and forced to fill a certain space to secure a needed roll at the next payday to provide cooling beach breezes or other summer delights.

We wonder if the new owner of the Sun approves or likes this sort of thing. A similar proceeding on the part of an art writer for the N. Y. Herald a short time ago, when called to the attention of Mr. Bennett, then here, was promptly and editorially disapproved and apologized for by that gentleman in the Herald.

OBITUARY.

Henry B. Taylor.

Henry B. Taylor, for a time Secretary of the AMERICAN ART NEWS Co. died at his apartments in this city on August 10, aged 60, very suddenly. He was born in this city, and was a member of the N. Y. Stock Exchange, and later of the Consolidated Exchange for a number of years. Of recent years he had been connected with the Johns-Manville Co. He was one of the oldest members of the Calumet Club. He married a Miss Elizabeth Struthers, who survives him. Although not directly connected with the art world, he had many friends among art lovers, and was a man of rare taste and discernment. Blessed with a peculiarly sweet amiable and generous disposition, "Harry" Taylor had a host of friends, and the sorrow at his passing is heartfelt and sincere.

George R. Bruenech.

George Robert Bruenech, a watercolor painter, died in Toronto, Canada, July 22, at the age of 65. He was born at St. Malo, in France, where his father was British Consul. He studied under Murchiani, Paul Rossert and at the Colarossi Academy in Paris. In 1872 he went to Canada, entered the civil service and for 20 years was a member of the Royal Canadian Academy. Mr. Bruenech's work attracted much attention from the Princess Louise when she was in Canada. It also received favorable recognition from the royal families of Sweden and Norway, his picture of the "Midnight Sun in Norway," hanging in the Royal Palace at Stockholm.

Lance Thackeray.

Lance Thackeray, writer, painter and illustrator, died at Brighton, England, Aug. 11. He gave exhibitions at the Leicester Galleries in London in 1908, at the Fine Art Society in 1910, and at the Walker Galleries in 1913. Mr. Thackeray, who resided for some time in Egypt, was the author of "The Light Side of Egypt" and "The People of Egypt." He was a member of the Arts and Savage Clubs of London and of the Turf Club of Cairo.

Cyrus C. Cuneo.

Cyrus Cincinnatto Cuneo, an American member of the Royal Institute of Oil Painters, died in London July 28. He was born in San Francisco of Italian parents and studied in Paris and under Whistler. He had much success as an illustrator and had exhibited portraits at the Royal Academy. He is represented in the Liverpool and other public galleries and was a member of the Langham Sketching Club.

Eben D. Jordan.

Eben D. Jordan, Boston merchant and patron of music and the fine arts, died Aug. 1 at his summer home at Manchester, Mass., at the age of 59. He established in Boston the Jordan Art Gallery and gave it works by Reynolds, Lawrence, Trumbull, Stuart, Couture, Decamps, Diaz and Leloir among others. Mr. Jordan had many works of art in his city and country homes. One of his most prized was a picture he purchased for $1,000 from his savings when he was 16.

J. S. Crompton.

James Shaw Crompton, the Liverpool painter and illustrator, died in July. He exhibited at the Royal Academy and the New Gallery, but most of his work was for book illustration. He belonged to the Selborne Society and was a member of the Langham Sketching Club.

W. D. T. Travis.

W. D. T. Travis, said to be the last of the Civil War artists, died July 24 at Burlington, N. J., at the age of 77. During the war he drew for periodicals and later did a series of 35 views of the Army of the Cumberland. He lectured for several years and then established himself at Burlington, where he painted among other works "The March of Mortality," "Heavenward," and "Heralds of Calvary."

James G. Moulton.

James G. Moulton, formerly a member of the art firm of Moulton & Ricketts, died at his home in Chicago July 17, following an illness which began with the $1,000,000 failure of the firm in 1914. A son, David Moulton of Chicago, and a brother, Frank Moulton of Boston, survive.

Mrs. Launt Thompson.

The death was announced on July 21, as having occurred at Florence, Italy, of Mrs. Maria Louisa Potter Thompson, widow of the distinguished American sculptor Launt Thompson, sister of the late Bishop Henry Codman Potter, and daughter of the late Bishop Alonzo Potter. Mrs. Thompson, who had resided in Italy some 40 years, became a Catholic in 1905. Her two daughters were educated in a French convent.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Aug. 6, 1916.

Great satisfaction is felt in art-circles at the announcement made by Mr. Asher Wertheimer, of his intention to bequeath his famous series of Sargent family portraits to the nation. Such a gift represents an addition to the national art treasures, of which it is impossible exactly to gauge the value at the present time, for not only are these works of art of the finest quality, but they mark the inception of a new period in the career of an artist, who is bound to go down to posterity, as one of the most vital forces in the art of modern times. In these days when we have grown accustomed to the brilliant artistic mastery of John S. Sargent, it is something of an effort to recall to mind the sensation caused by the portrait of Mr. Asher Wertheimer himself in the Academy of 1898, when interest was divided between the splendor of the achievement, and the audacity which had inspired it. The nine life-size pictures exemplify Sargent's treatment of childhood, youth and middle-age, in a way which exhibits not only his technical mastery of paint, but also his inimitable grasp of character and temperament. It is supposed that the bequest will form the basis for a Sargent Room at the National Gallery of British Art at Millbank, which already contains several notable canvases by this master.

For the Aid of Artists.

An art which owes its recent revival to the desire of Lady Kinloch to afford a means of livelihood to artists impoverished by the war, is that of painted furniture, copied from English and Italian models, dating from the XVIII century. This work, which is of the highest quality, and combines great charm of line and color with much elegance of design, bids fair to become an important and permanent industry, and it is interesting to note that many of the finest examples produced at Lady Kinloch's studio have already been acquired by American patrons, quick to appreciate its beauties. It is hoped that familiarity with this work will have the effect of weaning the public from their present inclination towards inferior productions of antique furniture at exorbitant prices.

A branch of collecting which makes a less extensive appeal than many others, is that which deals with decorated spurs, articles which, however, afford much scope and interest for the enthusiast on account of their historic value as well as of their intrinsic beauty. One of the most notable collections of spurs in private ownership, was sold this month at Christie's where Mr. James' 133 examples passed in bulk to Mr. Whawell for the sum of 530 guineas. These specimens ranged from Roman times to the XVIII century, and included some fine examples of XVII century English work in gilt bronze decorated in champlevé enamel. Mr. James was the author of "The Book of The Spur," the standard work on the subject, written half a century ago and illustrated by George Cruikshank.

An interesting departure in art quarterlies is marked by the appearance of the first number of "Form," a luxuriously-produced and artistically-illustrated magazine, which seems to have chosen an unfortunate time for its inception. Both letterpress and illustrations are of an exceedingly high order, though the plates lose much of their value through being of so large a size that they have to be issued in folded form. An imposing array of names is affixed to the contents.

Mr. F. J. Larkin, who was one of the first of our young men to join the colors, and who, after months in the trenches, received his discharge owing to the serious illness of his father, has once more joined the army and is at present a member of the Officers' Training Corps, stationed at Lichfield.

The New National Gallery Director.

It will be remembered that in my July letter I prophesied that in spite of the wild guesses which were being hazarded as to the probable successor to Sir Charles Holroyd in the Directorship of the National Gallery, the actual choice would lie between Professor C. J. Holmes, then Director of the National Portrait Gallery, and one other. The appointment of Professor Holmes has now been confirmed to the satisfaction of the art world in general, for it would be difficult to suggest a more suitable recipient for the post. After occupying the position of Slade Professor of Fine Arts at Oxford, the new Director for some years filled the position of Editor of the Burlington Magazine, at the same time devoting much time both to the publication of several books on art, as well as to the production of much original work in landscape-painting in watercolors. He possesses in a quite remarkable degree the unusual combination of profound knowledge with marked tact and faculty for the management of both people and affairs, a characteristic which should stand him in good stead in his new position. L. G.-S.

BOSTON.

A fascinating collection of reproductions of ancient Cretan art is on view at the Fogg Museum at Cambridge. These reproductions were given to Harvard by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, in memory of her son George Griswold Van Rensselaer, 96, the copies having been made by an Athenian firm. Frescoes, vases, and statuettes are included in the collection, the originals of which were excavated within the last fifteen years. The art of these people was so advanced that it suggests the futurism of today. There are frescoes here whose designs might have been conceived by Bakst. And the clothes that the Cretan ladies wore—as revealed in the fascinating statuettes and figurines—how curiously modern and Parisian! It is not so much the skilful technique of their art as it is the up-to-date-ness of costume, the suggestion of modern fashionableness, that is one of the most thrilling discoveries about these relics of a long-buried and ancient race.

The Boston Museum is showing in one of the Evans Memorial galleries an interesting loan collection—portraits by Smibert, Blackburn and Copley of James Otis, the patriot, his wife, and several of his relatives by marriage. The fine and dignified portrait of Otis, with its pleasant and animated face, is attributed to Smibert. Copley was most likely the author of the picture of Mrs. James Otis, the daughter of Nathaniel Cunningham, of whom Copley bought the property on Beacon Hill that became his famous farm. It is a most attractive portrait of a dark-eyed, dark-haired Colonial lady, who was tall, slender, and queenly in carriage. Scarcely less notable is the portrait of Mrs. Otis's aristocratic mother, Mrs. Cunningham. The Museum has also received as a loan the portraits (made by each other) of Alexander and Archibald Robertson, the two gifted Scotch painters.

The galleries of the Guild of Boston Artists were reopened August 7, after being closed for renovation. The summer exhibition opened last May has been enriched by a new painting by Edmund C. Tarbell. This is a portrait of a family group of three—or should we say four?—a father, mother, little boy, and a toy horse. It is a very unconventional portrait in arrangement, but painted with fine simplicity and good taste. A striking new addition is Frank W. Benson's "Sunlit Room."

The following artists are represented by new paintings in place of others withdrawn: Lilla Cabot Perry, by her able "Portrait of Miss Hellier," W. W. Churchill, by his studio interior, "The Model," Philip Little by his large and spirited painting, "The Herring Dipper," Marie Danforth Page by the "Portrait of Marcia."

John Doe.

NEW GROLIER CLUB.

The architect Bertram C. Goodhue on July 20, filed plans for the new home of the Grolier Club, at 47 and 49 E. 60 St. The cost of the clubhouse will be $50,000. The building, which will be of four stories, will be ready in about a year.

THE RODIN STUDIOS.

The Rodin Studios, represented by Lawtown Parker, recently bought the Inverness apartment, at the S. W. corner of Seventh Ave. and 57 St. The plot is 100 x 115 feet and on it will be erected a 14-story apartment and studio building, from plans by Cass Gilbert, costing $1,000,000.

CLEVELAND MUSEUM'S GIFT.

The first gift of the Cleveland Art Association to the Cleveland Museum is Henry G. Keller's painting "In the Sand Pit," which is now in the gallery of contemporary American art and won a silver medal at Munich in 1902.

MUSEUM BUYS A PARLOR.

The Metropolitan Museum recently bought the parlor of Marmion Mansion, the famous Lewis home in King George County, Va., which dates from the XVII century. The heavy oak panels were decorated in 1783 by a Hessian soldier, who, wounded, was nursed at Marmion.

FOR A NEW LOUVAIN LIBRARY.

A movement of Belgium literary men is under way to reestablish the ruined library at Louvain. Writers have been requested to send copies of their works.

"THE VINTAGE" for Omaha.

The sale was announced July 20 in this city of the very important Jules Breton "The Vintage," the purchasers being the Friends of Art Association of Omaha, who intend it for the museum of that city. The picture, painted for Comte Duchatel, the scene being laid on his estate, Chateau-Lagrauge, Medoc measures 5½ feet wide by over 3 feet high.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Aug. 5, 1916.

The commencement of the real calm of summer has witnessed quite an extraordinary number of minor art sales, all the more remarkable because it is war time. The auctioning at the Hotel Drouot of the collection of rare furniture and decorations which had belonged to the American antiquary, Mr. C. F. Williamson, who perished in the destruction of the Lusitania. In a very few instances the prices surpassed expectations. A set of salon furniture, upholstered in tapestry of the Regency period, the wood carved and gilded, brought $4,200; a piece of Flemish tapestry of the same period, nearly six feet by four, a green landscape with tall trees, $326, and two Louis XV sofas, $400 each. At another sale five large pieces of Flemish tapestry, dating from the latter part of the XVII century, brought the total of $8,260; a commode by Topino (Louis XVI), $9,000; a piece of Aubusson tapestry (Louis XV period), a pastoral scene, $3,600; two pieces of XVIII century tapestry, figures and animals, $6,700.

The Williamson Sale.

The sale of the paintings and engravings in the Williamson collection developed the fact that some of the most striking pieces were copies. An instance was "Venus and Cupid," after Boucher, the price of which, $39, gives a relative idea of the value of much of the rest. The Payen collection, the sale of which extended over several sessions, was productive of rather more notable results, among which I would mention the following: Boudin, "The Seine at Quilleboeuf," $1,000; "Landscape at Portrieux, Brittany," $330; Henner, "Magdalen Reading," $260; Jongkind, several Holland scenes, an average of about $600 each; Gaston Latouche, "The Reading of the Role," $600; Monticelli, "The Encounter in the Park," $380; Pissaro, "Market at Dieppe at the Entrance to the Church of St. Jacques," $1,000; "Ship Basins at Dieppe," $620; Sisley, "The Seine at St. Mammes," $1,100; "Springtime in the Woods," $910; "The Church at Moret," $600; Alfred Stevens, "The Steamer's Departure," $720; Meissonier, "Study of an Officer of the First Empire," $32; Zeim, "The Tower of St. Jean at Marseilles," $340; van Gogh, "The Tempest," $422; Rosa Bonheur (a drawing), "Recumbent Lioness," $18.

Alphonse de Neuville's "Prisoners of War in 1870" was sold recently at the Hotel Drouot for $370, and a still-life by Antoine Vollon for $210. Edouard Detaille, the other famous military painter whose death is of comparatively recent date, bequeathed a large number of his works to the museum at the Invalides, where they have been placed in a gallery by themselves. Among more important ones are the "Chevauchée vers la Gloire," which was painted for the Panthéon; the "Distribution of Flags at the Longchamp Review, July 14, 1880," (possessing a distinct historical value because it depicts many of the important personages of the time, including President Grèvy and Gambetta; "Napoleon at Friedland," (affording an interesting study for the connoisseur in comparison with the great painting by Meissonier), and the magnificent canvas, "The Obsequies of General the Comte de Damrémont before the Breach at Constantine" (Algeria—1837). There are also numberless smaller paintings, water-colors, pastels, studies and drawings, and a large series of military uniforms, trappings and equipments.

Acquisitions by the national museums in the past year were not very considerable, as may well be supposed, in view of the great drain upon the country's resources for other purposes. In the list figure (for the Louvre) a reliquary by Jaucourt, $5,000, an Egyptian statue of the Nineteenth Dynasty, $6,400, a piece of sculpture from the church of Ste. Croix at Parthenay, near Poitiers, dating from the twelfth century, $10,000; and (for the Luxembourg) a portrait by Bonnat, $6,000, a portrait by John Sargent, and various specimens of Chinese art.

Recent Exhibitions.

Among the few exhibitions of note in Paris since the commencement of the summer that of mural decorations by José Maria Sert in the Arnold Seligman Galleries has left a deep impression. The artist has a distinct style, which is yet highly characteristic of Spain. We have here the blended effect of the modern and the mediaeval influences. The panels are eighteen in number. One series of fifteen will adorn the dining hall of a chateau in Spain. They are strikingly bold in design and the composition in every instance is imposing. The coloring has the sumptuousness of Rubens. The subjects seem all to have been drawn from the same realms of fancy in which Amadis de Gaul, the Faerie Queen of Spenser, Don Quixote and, lastly, the Heroes of Grimm moved and had their being. The other series destined for the residence of a British lady of rank, consists of three large and irregular panels. Briggs Davenport.

THE AGENT IN ART.

The revival of the Art Agent as an intermediary in the private sale and purchase of Works of Art is of recent occurrence, and there is every indication that for some time to come it will play an important part in the affairs of the Art Market.

In the opinion of Mr. Arthur Ruck, this return to the earlier relation between private buyers and private sellers of Works of Art is traceable to a variety of causes. Among these must be reckoned the fact that a great number of the important Works of Art still in private possession belong to members of the aristocracy and to others of distinguished lineage, whose ancestors were collectors and connoisseurs in the art of their own and of earlier times and whose collections have been handed down from one generation to another.

War Taxes and Art Collectors.

This class of owner, while possessing many an example of the highest quality, is in no way forced to realize, although at the same time every picture worth, let us say, £10,000, represents a potential income of something like £500 a year, lying untouched. The increased taxation of recent years, combined with the certainty of a still further burden to be borne in the years to come, together with the incalculable stress of the present crises, have very naturally caused a number of these owners to entertain very seriously the idea of parting with some of their treasures, provided they find themselves in a position to obtain good prices privately without the risks attending auctions and without the unwelcome accompaniment of public criticism on their private affairs. These conditions they are able to ensure through the medium of a trustworthy agent, a medium which obviates all risk of the value of a really fine work being depreciated through unfavorable circumstances of sale, such as may easily occur in the auction room from causes such as the inclusion of a Work of Art among inappropriate items or the absence from one reason or another of suitable bidders on the particular date of sale. From the moment that an owner is obliged to buy in his own picture to prevent its changing hands at an inadequate figure, its selling price is ruined for many years to come, for adverse sale records naturally tend to depreciate its sale value.

This uncertainty in the result of auction sales of Works of Art makes the private sale all the more desirable in the case of collectors who have been forced by the stress of present financial conditions to eliminate as far as possible the element of chance from all such undertakings.

Buyers' Point of View.

And now let us consider the point of view of the buyer. What chance has the wealthy collector, who is satisfied with nothing less than examples of the finest quality and by the rarest Masters, of obtaining such from the usual channels? Far less chance than he who would be satisfied even with fine examples of Masters of lesser importance, because every day sees a diminution in the number of really fine specimens of any period or school which find their way into the open market. In consequence collectors must now and in the future look to a trustworthy Art Agent to put them into touch with the Collections which embrace the objects of their quest, secure in the knowledge that if, as in the case of Mr. Ruck, that agent is able to back his judgment with the opinions of the leading authorities and experts in every school, all risk in purchase is reduced for them to the irreducible minimum.

New Art Buyers.

Mr. Ruck, who has for many years been in touch with the principal Collectors in Europe and America, finds that the redistribution of wealth which has been brought about by the War, has produced an entirely new class of Art buyer and thus materially increased the Agent's opportunities for disposing of really fine and authentic Old Masters. For this reason as well as on account of the possible slump in prices later, owing to a probable increase of Works forced on the market through war conditions, the present would appear to be the most favorable time to sell. In consequence of the expansion in his business and for the better convenience of both Vendors and Purchasers, Mr. Ruck has now removed from Clifford Street, London, to spacious premises at No. 4 Berkeley St., Piccadilly, W., a fine old residence adjacent to the Berkeley Hotel, where he has converted and adapted a number of beautiful and stately rooms into Galleries for the display of important Pictures, rare pieces of Furniture, China, Bronzes, etc., from Private Collections. Connoisseurs could not better employ a spare hour than in viewing here the many fine objects so well displayed in surroundings where every opportunity is given for careful examination. Mr. Edward Brandus and family have been spending some weeks at Biarritz, France, and are now touring in the Pyrenees.

Mr. D. H. Kelekian is at the Thousand Islands.

At Kennedy & Co.'s, 613 Fifth Ave., is now on view a most interesting group of sepias and India inks by Frank W. Benson depicting wild duck, geese and swans. They are not alone highly artistic but remarkably true to nature.

It was incorrectly stated in the last issue that Mr. Louis H. Ralston, of the Ralston Galleries, had taken a cottage at Lake Placid with another person. Mr. Ralston and his family alone are occupying the house.

The Ralston Galleries, 569 Fifth Ave., are closed the first of Aug. and will reopen on Sept. 5.

The Kelekian Galleries, 709 Fifth Ave., which have been closed for the summer, will reopen Sept. 5.

ART AND ARTISTS.

John S. Sargent has gone to the Rocky Mountains on a sketching trip and will not return to Boston until Sept.

The Pa. Historical Society was the purchaser, at the recent sale of Penn relics in London, of portraits of Granvill John Penn, and the founder's second wife, Hannah Callowhill Penn.

An historical exhibition showing the development of painting and sculpture during the 100 years of Indiana statehood is held in connection with the centennial celebration.

On Aug. 2 Paul W. Bartlett's pediment group emblematical of the democracy of the U. S. was unveiled at the Capitol in Washington. The central figures show Peace protecting Genius.

Gustave Brock of Copenhagen, Denmark, and Mrs. Brock recently arrived at the Arlington Hotel at Narragansett Pier, where the former is to paint a portrait of Mrs. John H. Hanan.

Pierre Tartoue has been painting a portrait of the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Thompson of Yonkers. Mr. and Mrs. Tartoue have gone to Murray Bay, Canada, where they will stay with Col. Wood of Ottawa, whose two daughters are to be painted by the artist.

C. Scarpitta, of 37 W. 39 St., recently returned from Arkville, N. Y., where he finished the model for a bronze bust of J. Francis Murphy, one of a series he is doing of American artists. He had also made busts of Emil Carlson and James M. Fry.

A group for presentation by the Italian War Relief Society to its patroness Queen Elena represents "L'Angiolo de la Misericordia." The sculptor has recently been elected a life member of the Milwaukee Art Society, the only other one being the Dutch painter, Pieters.

J. Massey Rhind is making a bust of Col. Roosevelt for the National McKinley Memorial Building at Niles, Ohio. There will be in the collection busts of all the members of McKinley's cabinets, as well as of others closely associated with him.

A. Y. Jackson, one of the most prominent artists of the younger generation of Toronto, Can., was wounded at the front in France early in June, but not dangerously.

John Barnard Whittaker, for over 40 years professor of art at Adelphi College, Brooklyn, retires Sept. 1 on a pension with the title of professor emeritus. He was 80 on Tuesday.

Victor Hecht is sketching at Bar Harbor.

A. Muller-Ury is at the White Sulphur Springs, West Va., where he has gone to paint portraits of Mrs. Barker Gummere of Princeton, N. J., and her daughter Margaret.

Mr. Eland, whose portraits on vellum were shown at Scott and Fowles last season, is holding an exhibition at the Malvern Hotel, Bar Harbor.

Martin Borgord, the Norwegian painter, who returned to America in the spring, spent the summer painting at Lyme. He left for Europe last week to join his friend W. H. Singer, also an artist of ability, at the latter's salmon fisheries at Olden, Norway. Before leaving New York he arranged to hold an exhibition at the new Milch galleries in West 57 St. during the coming season.

Robert H. Nisbet is painting at his studio at South Kent, Conn., and has not been at Gloucester, Mass., as reported.

GIVES REGNAULT TO MUSEUM.

The feature of the monthly press view at the Metropolitan Museum, Aug. 10, was the announcement of the presentation by one of the trustees, Mr. George F. Baker, of Regnault's famous painting "Salome," which was on view in the gallery of recent accessions. The picture was purchased by Mr. Roland Knoedler for $105,600 at the Marquise Landolfo-Carcano sale in Paris in 1912, and offered to the Louvre, which was an under bidder, for that amount. The picture, which was a feature of the recent fair for the Allies, is a most notable addition to the museum's collections. A Bristol cup and saucer, which are a portion of a tea service presented to Edmund Burke by the manufacturer, is a recent acquisition. Other purchases shown are five Mexican or South American spurs, a Chinese vase, a Korean bowl and a French tric-trac counter of the XII century. A Chinese stone statue, a seated Kuan-Yon loaned by Mr. Philip Lehman is shown among the sculptures.

LIE-SONTUM.

The news became public in mid-July that Miss Inga Sontum, a Norwegian dancer, well known in this city and Newport, was married July 1, in his studio, 2 E. 81 St., to Jonas Lie, the well known painter. Mr. Lie is also a native of Norway but has lived in this country since he was thirteen. His first wife, likewise a Norwegian, went with him to their native land on his first trip back some years ago, when he painted a number of landscapes. The present Mrs. Lie has maintained dancing classes in this city.

Scandinavian genius still emphasizes the exuberant spirit of art in several galleries of the Art Institute—and especially does the Zorn assemblage of etchings appeal to the artists and strollers touring the big building. The oil portrait of Arthur Caton by the Swedish master has been added to the collection, through the courtesy of the Chicago Club. The Swedish show will be followed by the exhibition of forty-six paintings by English and Scotch artists. Harrington Mann, of London, has assembled them and they will be installed by him on the 25th.

Alfeo Faggi, the Italian sculptor, has gone to his native land to join the army. A collection of his attractive sculptures is still at Roullier's.

Clyde Glinster Chandler's Memorial to the late Captain Sydney Smith has been shipped to Dallas, Texas, where it will be set up. Miss Chandler calls her group "The Gulf Cloud." It is to be placed on a marble pedestal in the middle of a basin thirty-five feet in diameter, and from the wings of the figure representing "The Cloud" a misty spray will be showered.

John F. Stacey is painting landscapes along the shores of Lake Michigan, in Wisconsin, and "the other half of the family," Annie L., is painting the portrait of a summer visitor, Miss Miller, of Texas, in the Wisconsin Park resort.

Pauline Palmer now is painting sea-shore scenes and figure pieces at Provincetown, Mass.

J. E. PARSONS ART COLLECTIONS.

The appraisal, made public July 27, of the estate of John E. Parsons, valued among a number of paintings, Schreyer's "A Swampy Country Road" at $1,500 and Israel's "Fisher Boy Wading with Baby on His Back," at $3,500. Other valuations were: Lely, "Earl of Kildare," $1,800; Lely, "Countess of Upper Ossory," $1,400; Romney, "Lady Hamilton," unfinished, $1,500; Clay's "Marine with Fishing Vessels," $1,460, and Rembrandt Peale, "Senator Joseph McIlvaine," $1,000, and "Mrs. Joseph McIlvaine," $1,000. Among a large collection of snuff boxes, watches and other objects of art a George IV coronation box was valued at $600. Two rugs were appraised at $1,000 each and books at $4,909.

MRS. BOWDOIN'S PAINTINGS.

The appraisal of the estate of Mrs. Julia Irving Grinnell Bowdoin, valued her paintings at $5,330 and her books at $3,754. An album of 80 letters of American historical personages was valued at $1,000 and so was one of a 100 letters of kings, queens and other celebrities and another of Washington Irving Mss. A painting of "St. Praxide Squeezing Blood of the Christian Martyrs Through a Sponge," attributed to Guido Reni, was valued at $3,000, a portrait of Mrs. Bowdoin by Porter at $200, and one by R. G. Emmett at $500.

ALL FOR GERMAN SOLDIERS FUND.

The will of Paul Hutt, known on the stage as Paul Conchas, filed, Aug. 5, left the contents of his apartment, including works of art, to the Blind Soldiers Fund of Berlin, or if such a fund does not exist, for the improvement of the condition of blind German soldiers. To the same purpose goes half of the residuary estate, in case the actor's son does not reach the age of 25. The other half in such a contingency, is left to the International Artists Lodge of Berlin.

MRS. VEILLERS' ART BEQUEST.

The estate of Mrs. Elizabeth D. Veiller, left to her sons Bayard, Frank and Lawrence, consists largely of works of art. A Botticelli Madonna went to Mrs. Margaret Veiller, a Ruysdael to Mr. Frank Veiller and works of Millet, Michetti and Rico to Mr. Lawrence Veiller.

WITTHAUS ART OF LITTLE VALUE.

The appraisal of the estate of the late Dr. Rudolph A. Witthaus, published in July, showed that many of his works of art were copies and sold for small prices. The value of his Stevenson Mss. was fixed at $31,461 and that of Kipling at $4,101. Works on angling were valued at $3,452 and medical volumes at $5,991.

MRS. GILDER'S ESTATE.

Mrs. Helena de Kay Gilder, painter and widow of Richard Watson Gilder, left personal property valued at $90,000 to three daughters and two sons, according to her will filed July 14.

RECENT LONDON SALES.

Mauves Sold at Christie's.

A sale of old and modern paintings at Christie's, in London, on Aug. 5, produced $50,000. Mauve's "Tending Sheep" brought $3,780, "Group of Cattle," $2,205, and "Cattle Resting" $1,855.

Burns Mss. Sold in London.

The collection of Burns books and Mss. of the late J. J. Greenshields, of Lanarkshire, was sold in London at Sotheby's on July 18 and 19. A subscription prospectus, the only one known, for Burns' "Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect" brought $1,375. An autograph poem, an early draft of the Dumfries "Election Ballad," fetched $1,100 and a letter to the playwright Sutherland $1,000. For a Mss. poem, the prologue for William Wood's benefit night, $490 was given, and the same amount was paid for a letter to McMurdo, chamberlain to the Duke of Queensberry. A letter of introduction fetched $750. Among other items at XIV century Welsh manuscript belonging to the late Sir Bernard Bosanquet fetched $2,000 and an old book of Welsh poetry $345. A first edition of the Waverley novels fetched $750 and a first edition of "The Vicar of Wakefield," $400.

Pictures Sold at Christie's.

On July 28, at Christie's in London, the pictures and drawings owned by the late Mrs. Golding Palmer were sold. The Agnews gave $17,850 for Gainsborough's "A Peasant Driving Cattle," $13,125 for his "Going to Market," and $3,412.50 for Guardi's "The Church of Santa Maria della Salute and Dogana, Venice." Mr. A. Wertheimer paid $6,300 for Liotard's pastel "Le Dejeuner." Among other pictures a Goya portrait of a lady fetched $17,325 from the Agnews.

A Whistler "White Girl" Sold.

One of Whistler's "White Girls" was sold in the Way sale at Sotheby's in London, on July 24, for $10,500. "A Cloudy Sky, Venice," brought $375. A Da Fabriano tryptych brought $4,700. The sale totalled $19,810. At Christie's the Falconer sporting prints and drawings fetched $25,000. Nine prints of the Beaufort Hunt brought $1,575.

Boxall Collection Sale.

Works for the Sir William Boxhall, Watts Duncan and Archibald G. B. Russell collections, were sold at Christie's in London July 30. Smith's mezzotint of Romney's "Henrietta, Countess of Warwick" fetched $1,650. Green's "Countess of Harrington" after Reynolds brought $1,500 and C. Read's "Elizabeth, Countess of Hamilton and Argyle," by Finlayson, $1,000.

Turners Sold in London.

The Huth collection of pictures sold at Christie's in London, July 14, fetched $125,000. Turner's "Lake Lucerne" brought $7,875; his "Dawn after Wreck," $4,200; his "Antiquary" $1,522, and his "Falls of Schaffhausen," 1,155. Mr. Clark gave $2,730 for Jan Steen's "Party of Merry-makers," and M. Knoedler & Co. $1,115 for Sargent's "Orchestra Rehearsal."

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

With this issue the summer monthly series of the American Art News closes. The weekly issues will be resumed on October 14 next, when new Volume XV will begin.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The largely increased cost of production of this journal during the past six months, due to the great and unprecedented rise in the price of paper and metals, which has almost doubled our printing charges, and which does not seem likely to diminish, makes necessary an increase of the yearly subscription rate to $3 ($3.75 to foreign countries—$3.35 to Canada) beginning with the first weekly issue for the season on Oct. 14 next, which issue also will mark the beginning of new volume No. XV. Subscriptions at the old yearly rate of $2 will be received up to Oct. 14.

ART INSTITUTE'S NEW HEAD.

Mr. George W. Eggers, has been appointed to the important post of Director of the Chicago Art Institute, to succeed the late and lamented Dr. French, the position having been filled since Dr. French's death, two years ago, by Mr. Newton W. Carpenter, Secretary of the Institute, as acting Director.

Mr. Eggers is a resident of Chicago, thirty years of age, who has for the last ten years taught design at the Chicago Normal School to prospective high school teachers. Before that he was a student at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, where he had taken a two years' art course. He has been in Europe once.

Commenting on the appointment of Mr. Eggers, which has caused and will cause great surprise in the American art world, Dr. Albrecht Montgelas, art-literary critic of the Chicago Examiner, in a long article, published in the Art and Literary Supplement of that journal, Aug. 29, last, says in part:

"It (the appointment of Mr. Eggers), is an event which in its far-reaching consequences, considering the importance and the position of our Art Institute, affects the art life of the greater Middle West, and, in a way, of the entire country.

"At the time we reported its probability it was vigorously denied by the parties chiefly concerned. It was dismissed as ridiculous, as incredible, by all who have an interest in the progress of Chicago as an art center in this country. It was not so lightly dismissed, although not less feared, by all those who were familiar with the government of the Art Institute and the frame of mind of its 'first chief,' Mr. Charles W. Hutchinson.

"I know of at least one person who had the courage to call upon the 'first chief' in the matter and put before him the wishes, the hopes and the fears of the art community of this city. It was of no avail, as little as were my feeble efforts to point out in various articles the obvious qualifications which any art director, and in particular the director of the Art Institute of Chicago, ought to possess.

"The 'first chief' had his way and the Art Institute, over the signature of Mr. Carpenter, the business director, announces the appointment of Mr. Eggers, as director."

Dr. Montgelas then details the reasons for the general opposition to Mr. Eggers' appointment—namely, that "he is without experience in Museum Directorship, is simply a 'man who will take orders,' is not an art 'expert,' and that as the art critic of the Chicago Evening Post, tersely states, 'without experience in the field of directorship of a great Museum, Mr. Eggers has received an appointment on the theory of potential values.'" This laconic analysis of the situation would seem to be well founded, by the statement of the "First Chief" President Hutchinson, if he is correctly quoted: "Mr. Eggers is a young man, he will grow with the Institution, and we can direct him along our policies."

Dr. Montgelas says that "the new Director's position is not an enviable one, in that he cannot claim authority or respect from the staff of 'seasoned' men under him, because everyone of them knows that he comes to rule over them without any past experience or reputation, earned in a field in which they, at least, from experience, have an insight, and who will realize that he is simply registering the will of the 'First Chief' and his fellow-Trustees, without any independence of authority of his own and for the probation time of one year at that." (It would seem that this brief probation period is a saving clause in this remarkable incident.—Ed.)

While expressing the hope that Mr. Eggers will disappoint the "First Chief" and his fellows, as to his lack of authority and independence, and will prove that he has more than "Potential Value," Dr. Montgelas concludes his article by shrewdly observing: "I am forced to admit that the suspicion forces itself on the naive mind that the probation is meant more for deciding as to the new man's ability of following out instructions than to his ability of giving them."

GREAT PRINT SALE COMING.

A large force of catalogers and appraisers is now at work on the noted collection of prints and literary material, owned by Mr. Frederick R. Halsey of this city, preparing it for its coming sale at auction early in the coming season by the Anderson Galleries. The sale will be the most important of its kind since the dispersal of the Brayton Ives and Hoe collections.

Spurious Blakelocks Story Again.

To swell the seemingly unending tide of "slush" about the happily changed conditions of Ralph Blakelock, the veteran insane artist, lately removed from the Middletown State Asylum to an Englewood, N. J., cottage, the old old story of a flood of spurious canvases bearing the artist's signature was recently again published in a leading N. Y. daily.

The new discoverer of this flood of "fakes" is said to have stumbled upon some painter in Brooklyn "connected with the Brooklyn Museum," who, the story runs "appears to be acting as an agent for crafty

NICKERSON ART BEQUEST.

The will of Miss Lyra Brown Nickerson of Providence, R. I., filed Sept. 6, divides the residue of her estate, amounting to nearly $3,000,000, in equal shares, between the Rhode Island School of Design and the Providence Public Library. Several art works are given to the Providence Art Club and others are left to relatives and friends.

DUTCH ART AT CAPETOWN.

Word was recently received in London of the safe arrival at Capetown, Africa, of three vessels with $400,000 worth of pictures, secretly shipped from London to form the National Gallery of South Africa. The collection was purchased in 1913 from the late Sir Hugh Lane by the Rand Magistrate Max Michaelis, and consists of 68 XVII century Dutch pictures, the art of Holland having been at its zenith at the time of the foundation of Capetown. Besides the exceptionally fine Franz Hals "Portrait of an Old Woman" from the Kann collection, the collection contains among other works, a Rembrandt.

NEW STUDIO BUILDING.

A 14-story studio apartment and hotel building at the S. E. corner of Washington Square S. and Thompson Street, is to be owned and operated by painters and sculptors on a cooperative basis. The cost is estimated to be $400,000 and is to be style Gothic. The Washington Square Studios Syndicate includes Carl J. Blenner, Edmund W. Greacen, Frank T. Hutchens, Charles Shakelton and Albert Jaegers.

PROF. VOLPI'S RETURN.

Accompanied by his wife and two daughters, Prof. Elia Volpi of Florence, returned to N. Y. Sept. 5 on the Giuseppe Verdi to complete his plans for the coming sale by the American Art Association, already announced in the ART NEWS of July 15, of the interior fittings and art objects contained in his Avazzanti palace in Florence. He says that part of the contents of the palace has already been shipped and that the remainder will soon arrive. He values the collection at $500,000.

ANOTHER STUDIO BUILDING.

A 14-story studio apartment is to be built at the S. W. corner of 59th St. and 6th Ave. by John J. Hearn and Harold C. Matthews. Schwartz and Gross, the architects, estimate the cost at $800,000.

NEW MILWAUKEE LAYTON GIFT.

Mr. Frederick Layton's new gifts to Milwaukee are a $10,000 wing to the art gallery which bears his name and 56 oils and watercolors, the former of the American and the latter of the English school.

BLAKELOCK LEAVES ASYLUM.

Ralph Albert Blakelock was removed on Sept. 5 from the Middletown State Hospital for the Insane to Lynwood Lodge, a private sanitarium near Englewood, N. J. He is on a six months' probation. A studio has been arranged for him in the grounds, in which has been placed a piano. The artist was delighted with the change of surroundings and the arrangements made for his comfort and pleasure and it is hoped that his mental condition will improve.

POTTER MEMORIAL PULPIT.

The $30,000 memorial pulpit to Bishop Henry Codman Potter, given by Mrs. Russell Sage, to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine was dedicated Sept. 10. On the six sides scriptural scenes are carved; statues of Isaiah and St. John are on the staircase and figures of great preachers, in small niches at the angles of the hexagon. They are of St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Jerome, St. Gregory, St. John Chrysostom, St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, Latimer, Bossuet and Phillips Brooks.

BEAUX ARTS INSTITUTE.

The Beaux Arts Institute of Design was granted permission, Sept. 1, by Justice Mulvan of the Supreme Court, to purchase from the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, the property at 126 E. 75 St., which has been altered from a stable, into exhibition and class rooms, at a cost of $13,000. The property was purchased by the Institute, of which Mr. Henry Hornbostel is president, for $77,3350. Classes open Sept. 18.

FREEDMAN PICTURE APPRAISAL.

The transfer tax report of the estate of Andrew Freedman, was filed Sept. 1. It is interesting to compare the appraisal of his pictures made by Knoedler & Co., with the prices obtained at the sale, under the auspices of the American Art Association at the Plaza Hotel on Apr. 14 last. The following shows the valuations and prices obtained for the principal works:

art dealers," and it is reported, has informed the District Attorney of the discovery.

If the discoverer will call at the ART NEWS office, he or she will be shown an excellent example of the Brooklyn painter's work and if he or she had read this journal of late years, they would have learned that the painter in question has frankly produced many pictures, for the most part small ones, in the manner of Blakelock—has sold the same at low figures to customers, and has never made any mystery of his art or work, neither has he signed Blakelock's name to his pictures, nor is he responsible if said name has been so signed by unscrupulous dealers or others.

The story is not a new one—but apparently anything connected with poor old Blakelock nowadays seems to have a news, and possibly an advertising, value in certain quarters. It is growing wearisome.

Muirhead Bone, the distinguished Scotch painter and etcher, has been appointed official war artist by the British Government.

NEWPORT ART ASS'N DISPLAYS.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's exhibition of sculpture and painting opened in the galleries of the Newport (R. I.) Art Association, Aug. 28, with a large attendance.

Some 24 examples of Mrs. Whitney's own work are shown, including the head of a Spanish peasant, in bronze, recently purchased by the Metropolitan Museum. A reduction, in bronze, of the fountain which Mrs. Whitney is to do for the New Arlington Hotel in Washington has been set up in the grounds of the Association. Three graceful male figures hold aloft a plaque entwined with leaves and grapes, from which water pours. A large plaster cast of the artist's Aztec fountain, also on the lawn, dis-closes Mrs. Whitney's skilful handling of simple, architectural lines.

The pictures, which, with the remainder of Mrs. Whitney's own works, comfortably fill all the galleries, consist of some forty paintings, etchings and drawings by foreign and American artists.

In the first gallery the place of honor has been given to a large canvas by Lucien Simon, "The Park." Near it is a delightfully glowing "Laughing Child" by Robert Henri and the "Girl with Parrot," by George Bellows, shown at the last Winter Academy. This picture has a curious quality of leaving an image of greater brilliancy in the mind of the beholder than a second glance shows it actually to possess.
In the same room is a large "Snow Scene"
by Bellows, having both force and delicacy.
There is a small canvas by George Luks,
"Old Woman with Goose," and an early Tarbell, "Irish Lad," a race horse and jockey.

Mrs. Whitney has a spirited and charming portrait, in bronze, of her small daughter, and a group entitled, "Paganism Immortal," somewhat Rodinesque, but full of the artist's own delicate imagery and sense of poetry. There is also a figure in plaster,
"La Chinoise," full of mystery.

A model of the well-known Titanic Memorial figure has been placed most effectively on the broad upper stair-landing and its curious calm is thrown into relief by a huge canvas of Robert Chanler's called
"The Flames"; a black background against which licking tongues of flame form a grotesque and unquiet pattern.

In the second gallery are shown some of the smaller pictures. There are a number of Whistler etchings, including the "Venetian Doorway," a recently purchased pastel by William Cotton, called a "Russian Profile," and a drawing of Kubelik by Cecilia Beaux. There is a rarely charming watercolor by John La Farge, and watercolors by Howard Pyle, Maxfield Parrish, Tony Nell, Dulac, and Bakst.

The large gallery contains a portrait of Miss Flora Whitney by the late Howard Cushing, in which the child's brown hair and alert sunburned face are contrasted with the pale, clear yellow of the luxurious sofa, and the clear blue tones of the background.

Robert Henri's portrait of Mrs. Whitney, which is cataloged, is not shown. Charles Hawthorne's "Offering" and Frieseke's palely pretty "Before Her Appearance" have been seen before. The Italian, Ettore Tito, is represented by two widely differing canvases, "The Train," in which pale smoke from a passing train fills the upper half of the picture; and a strong, richly colored fantasy full of fauns and nymphs, called

"At Play."

There is a characteristic Manet, a sturdy old laborer smoking a long stemmed clay pipe; the brilliant Gaston La Touche's "Anatomy Lesson," full of happy sparkle; an Oriental head by Albert Besnard; while Antonio Mancini is represented by a vigorously presented portrait of a laughing bon-viveur and there is a handsome sketch by Frank Brangwyn. Ernest Lawson is represented by three landscapes.

The show closed Sept. 5.

Watercolor Display.

The Watercolor Exhibition occupies the Association Galleries, to Sept. 20. Some 150 watercolors and pastels and about 30 miniatures are shown.

The Committee of Award, Harrison Morris, Louisa Sturtevant and William Cotton, gave to a charming, high-keyed study of a child, "Winnifred Hunt," by Hilda Belcher, the J. Stewart Barney Prize for the best watercolor. The Lawrence L. Gillespie Prize for the best watercolor by a local artist went to an unusual seascape by William Drury called "The Dawn Wind." The Mrs.
Stewart Duncan Prize for the best landscape was awarded to Gifford Beal's "Under the Willows." The Dr. Bolling Lee Prize for the best miniature of a lady went to a frankly done portrait by Bertha Coolidge
"The Green Coat."

Other exhibitors, whose work must be mentioned, are Childe Hassam (three pastels), George Luks (two pastel landscapes), Sergeant Kendall (two pastels in his usual hard manner), Birge Harrison, Colin Campbell and Anthony Dyer. William Cotton has two sincere and delicate pastel portraits. Ruth Payne Burgess, W. C. Emerson, Charles Gruppe, W. Staples Drown, H. Cyrus Farnum and F. M. Lamb are others who contribute to the satisfactory exhibition.

Artists at Newport.

Ethel Frances Mundy, of Syracuse, recently held an exhibit of her eleven colored wax medallion portraits at the Art Association. At the same time, Count Arnaldo Tamburini showed a small group of well painted portraits in oil and pastel, and C. Biesel had a display of his excellent watercolors, mostly marines and harbor views. Mr. Biesel's art grows better and more attractive all the time. He has caught the true flavor of Newport's picturesque and quaint old docks and shipping, and the fine effects of surf on Newport rocks and beaches.

Robert Van Boskerck, whose summer studio is at Wakefield, R. I., is a new artist member of the Association.

De Witt M. Lockman was in Newport recently, installing his lately completed portrait of Mr. E. C. Knight.

Eizo Kondo, of Tokio, gave a talk on Japanese Colorprints in the Ass'n galleries on August 21, illustrating his remarks with examples of prints from his collection, which he will show for two days.

G. Howard Hilder, who has one of the Association Studios, recently held there a highly successful exhibition of his aquar-elles. At present he is showing some charming Florida scenes.

Augustus Heaton has rented one of the studios belonging to the Association.

S. Montgomery Roosevelt, while in Newport, sat to Alexandre Zeitlin, the Russian sculptor, for a bust to be cast in bronze.

THE STOCKBRIDGE EXHIBITION.

The eighth annual exhibition of the Berkshire artists, is now on at the Casino at Stockbridge, Mass. Although there is nothing particularly striking in the display, it is of even excellence, and has many well-known contributors.

The Emmets are all represented, with portraits by Lydia Field Emmet; Leslie Emmet, and Mrs. Ellen Emmet Rand. Wilfred von Glehn, who married an Emmet, sends a fresh watercolor of Venice, of luminous quality, while Rosina Emmet Sherwood is represented by one of her charming premier coup aquarelles, "In the Garden," a group of two women seated, in a garden, while a small boy in white sailor-suit, rests at their feet.

Dines Carlsen sends a small, delightful oil still-life, "The Persian Plate," while his father, Emil Carlsen, has a night picture with figures, "Moonlight and Lamplight."
Theresa Bernstein presents two small pictures with groups. Two portraits by Mary Foote have a technique, which becomes more interesting each year, but one conveys the impression of too many color combinations, while the other lacks them. Both are well drawn and posed.

Matilda Brownell shows two good still-lives and a well-constructed man's head.
Frederick Crowninshield, as usual, has virile oils and watercolors, one of the latter is quite remarkable, "Vallambrosa," rows of pine tree trunks, done entirely in flat washes, with lights left between. Marie O. Kobbe has a number of attractive pastel drawings of children; "My Nephew," and "Portrait of a Lady," beautifully mellow in color, and interestingly posed.

There are a number of good miniatures, as usual, by Margaret Foote Hawley, and Martha Wheeler Baxter, the latter contributing also pastel portraits. Lucille A. Hinkle is a new contributor, and sends several miniatures broadly treated.

Walter L. Clark's tender "Portrait," of an old lady and Margaret Fitzhugh Browne's figure compositions, are sympathetic renderings, worthy of mention. Mr.
and Mrs. Blommers are new names here,
and well represented.

Gardner Symons has several good, decisive landscapes and Ben Foster presents three tender ones. Walter Nettleton, Clarke Voorhees, M. Merritt Post, and A. T. Van Laer are represented by some of their good familiar landscapes. F. Luis Mora sends a well-painted picture of "Jeanne Cartier," less interesting than usual. Mary MacCord has a "Sunny Garden" in broken color.

There are too many good pictures to mention in limited space. Chauncey F. Ryder, Francis Day, William L. Corrigan, Robert Nisbet, Robert Reid, Robert Hamilton, and Leon Gaspard, with his Russian peasant scenes and others, are also represented, and the impression is given of a first-class
exhibition.

The sculpture is exceptionally good. A sensitive bust portrait of Miss Longman is by Daniel Chester French, and a statuette of a seated "Abraham Lincoln," by Augustus Lukeman, Malvina Hoffman and Chester Beach each present several figurines;
while there is a lively head called "Peggy," by Evelyn B. Longman. Two new and promising sculptors represented are Emily Winthrop, and Margaret French, daughter of Daniel C. French.

There is not a strikingly poor example in the exhibition, which is composed of the work of a goodly company of serious-minded men and women. Max.

EAST GLOUCESTER (MASS.)

An unusual number of well known artists spent the summer here and at other places in Cape Ann.

Cecilia Beaux has, as usual, been painting in her large studio at Eastern Point. Frank Duveneck has been on Rocky Neck with E.
L. Kelyn from Cincinnati, and Guy Wiggins has spent much of the summer at Rockport.

Louis Kronberg who occupied the Rhoda Holmes Nichols Studio, has painted his usual ballet girl subjects. George L. Noyes with a large class has been busy on Rocky Neck. Many of his studies of the harbor and boats, have been painted from this point. Eben Commins has had a successful class, and his studio in the fields, has been the centre of interest for many students.

A feature of the art season has been the Sunday afternoon receptions, given to artists and others by Alice Preble Tucker de Haas, in her delightfully situated studio on the rocks, above Niles Beach. Mrs. de Haas has made several strong pictures of her favorite subjects, of water, sky and rocks, in which she excels.

John Sloan has had a large class, and a studio in the town, and has a variety of brilliant subjects as the result of his work.

Haley Lever and Randall Davey have had a cottage on the Heights, just above the town.

jects.

Martha Walters in the Parmento Studios has been occupied with pupils, and has painted figures out of doors.

Jean Nutting Oliver has been painting local subjects, specializing in child figures out of doors.

Alice Annan, watercolor painter has shown a number of her favorite twilight subjects, which she expresses so well. W.
J. Buhler is another hard worker, and no one excels him in his knowledge of boats, and harbor life. Henry B. Snell has been painting with his usual strength and charm.
Florence Snell has divided her time between Rocky Neck, and Rockport, and has done much good work. Agnes Richmond has been much occupied with pupils, and has painted some strong figure subjects,
out of doors.

Among other well known artists who spent the summer here were Alice Schille, Clara Madera, Theresa Bernstein, W. J.
Little, H. F. Lohr, Ethel Paddock, R. D.
Wadsworth. Other members of the Art Colony were Anna Londener, Mrs. J. M.
Cook, Mrs. L. A. Weiss, R. A. Weiss and Mrs. A. H. Townsend.

W. J. Potter worked on Rocky Neck, and made delightful studies of the distant town,
and old buildings.

The Bungalow on the Lathrop Place, has been occupied as a studio-residence by Marion Monka Chase whose watercolor studies of local subjects are strong, and true. J. C. Cook a local watercolorist exhibited his attractive pictures several times at the Hawthorn Inn.

A number of sculptors, notably A. H.
Atkins, Louise Allen, Charles Grafley, Anna
Vaughan Hyatt, Anna Coleman Ladd, and Mrs. Hubbs are well represented in the new "Gallery on the Moors," the building erected by Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Atwood, as an exhibition room for East Gloucester Artists.

This handsome building, designed by Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston, will greatly increase the interest in local art. F. W.

WHAT IS GOING ON IN ARTIST COUNTRY COLONIES

THE LYME EXHIBITION.

The annual summer exhibition held during the last week in August by the colony of painters at Old Lyme, Conn., has come and gone and proved to be the most successful in many years, both in point of attendance, and of no less importance, in that of sales. If anyone has any lingering doubts of the financial success of the show let him drop in some evening at Miss Florence Griswold's, the big colonial house with the white pillars that Willard Metcalf made famous by his picture, "May Night," now in the Corcoran Gallery.

"Miss Florence's," as the place is familiarly and affectionately known, has long been the center of the art life of Lyme, the home of many of the artists, and rendezvous for all the rest. It is an unwritten law there that any painter who sells a picture or sketch in the exhibition shall tie him forthwith to the village store for "Post Office Panatelas," or to the seething metropolis of New London, 15 miles distant, for a more exotic brand, but in any case it means cigars for the whole crowd, and since the show a perfectly scandalous amount of tobacco has been going up in smoke.

As you enter the hall there is Henry R. Poore, whose picture of two hounds was sold the very day the display opened, and you have hardly passed the time of day with him before he takes a weed out of a bulging pocket and hands it to you with the remark:

"Ahem. Try this cigar, won't you? It's not—ahem—half bad."

You escape from him by telling him that your doctor has positively forbidden you to smoke, and out on the porch you find another successful exhibitor, William H. Howe, more familiarly known as "Uncle" to all of the habitués.

He promptly produces a box of Porto Rican cheroots, saying: "I want your opinion on these cheroots. No? Well, try 'em later. Put the whole box in your pocket—a very good little cigar for the price—something like the ones I used to get in Holland. I remember one day when I was in Laren—" but you have the wisdom of the serpent and, pulling out your watch, you utter a sudden exclamation of surprise and excuse yourself.

Perhaps you can sidestep Everett Warner's box of cigars, but certainly not without an argument, and you have still to reckon with Frank Bicknell. Having successfully run the gauntlet so far you cannon into George Bogert. It is no use. You may as well give up and take a cigar at his expense. Tell him you will take it home to the children, tell him anything that comes into your head, but you will simply have to accept a cigar, because Bogert was entirely sold out at the exhibit, disposing of his picture and all four of the sketches which composed his group.

Taken altogether there is a distinct atmosphere of nicotine and prosperity at Miss Florence's, and it is no place for anyone who objects to the smell of tobacco smoke.

Some Pictures in the Exhibition.

If any visitor went to the show at the Library with the idea of seeing nothing but Old Lyme landscapes, there was a surprise in store for him. The exhibitors are all affiliated with the town, but many spend their winters elsewhere, and geographically the subjects range from Platt Hubbard's Hawaiian mountain scene, and William S. Robinson's imposing group of birches on the Maine coast, to William Chadwick's "Almond Trees, Rome." There were fishing boats at Cancale, France, as seen by Walter Griffin, and a Dutch garden by Martin Borgard, a newcomer in the colony this summer.

Yes, there was certainly variety, and even "Andy," the faithful janitor of the town library, was almost jarred out of his customary stocism when he borrowed the delivery wagon from the village store and drove out to assemble the pictures. He has seen some strange things in the fifteen years that the exhibition has been held, but when he got a good look at the picture that he was carrying out of Harry Hoffman's studio he almost dropped it. Andy's first thought was that he was carrying a picture of a long green snake of the non-refillable, three-star, bottled-in-bond variety.

"It sure did give me a turn," he said. "I never expected to see anything like that in Lyme. Now if it had been in Saybrook it would have been different, but this is a dry town."

"That's not a snake, Andy," answered Hoffman. "That's a green Moray, a kind of eel. I was painting in the Bahama Islands last winter, and you can see stranger

"Andy" drove by Edward F. Rook's studio without stopping, and turning to his companion on the driver's seat, remarked:

"We've allus counted on Rook, and he sartainly will be missed. Too bad he aint sending anything to the show this year, but I heer he aint had time to finish a single picture this summer, because he's been so busy lowerin' the top to his automobile to make it look like a 1917 model."

Pictures Sold at Lyme.

A complete list of sales at the recent Lyme exhibition is as follows: Pictures in the main gallery, "The Dutch Peasant," Martin Borgard, $600; "Moonrise, Manomet," George Bogert, $400; "Evening at Trepied, France," William H. Howe, $450; "Lifting Fog," Will Howe Foote, $300; "The Hounds," Henry R. Poore, $350; "Along the River," Everett L. Warner, $250; "October Hillside," George Bruestle, $125; "Fifth Avenue, N. Y.," Guy Wiggins, $100; things than that without taking anything stronger than buttermilk."

Both strange and beautiful, the artists thought when they looked at Hoffman's group of submarine panels made from sketches done in a glass-bottomed boat in Nassau. Said one of them: "He has sounded a new note, and made a genuine hit in the field of pure decoration."

After "Andy" had loaded these deep-sea panels into the wagon he drove on, and picked up by way of contrast a couple of down town New York pictures by Guy Wiggins. Then he proceeded to sandwich in some typical Lyme landscapes by Edward Gregory Smith and Clark Voorhees, and filled up the wagon with dogs and live stock by Poore. Did I say filled up? No, not quite. There was still room for Robert Tolman's attractive portrait of little "Pattie" Burr. It seemed a shame to put her portrait in right next to those ferocious hounds and those horned cattle. Still if it had been "Pattie" herself she would not have minded for she is old enough to have learned that the painted animals won't hurt her unless the color comes off on her dress. She knows all about wet paint, because she is the little daughter of George Burr, who sent a charming group of garden sketches to the exhibition.

The exhibition included 53 pictures and perhaps 150 sketches, and you may rest assured that "Andy" had to haul more than one load in collecting it. One trip took him as far afield as Hamburg, a village five miles away where George Bruestle and Wilson Irvine are painting. On the way back and a small bronze by Bessie Potter Vonnoh, $65. In the gallery of sketches upstairs, 28 sketches were sold for a total of $1,970 as follows: H. L. Hoffman, 3; Howe, 4; W. S. Robinson, 3; Carleton Wiggins, 4; Warner, 3; Bogert, 4; Will Chadwick, 2; Matilda Browne, 2; Frank Bicknell, 1; Bruestle, 1, and Foote 1.

PROVINCETOWN ART COLONY.

Of the numerous art colonies which have grown up the past few years in the eastern states of the Union, that at Provincetown, Mass., at the "tip of the Cape," is undoubtedly the most unique, most flourishing and most alluring. Life in Provincetown during the summer months is more suggestive of some corner of Europe beloved of artists, especially Brittany, than can be found anywhere in the States. The rambling narrow streets, the quaint old houses and tumble-down wharfs, the fishing boats of varied-built and multicolored sails, the old-fashioned gardens, the careless informality of life, the comparative remoteness of the place and, above all, the wondrous colors of sea and sky—all combines to fascinate the art-lover and artist.

Small wonder, therefore, that Charles W. Hawthorne, the real artist discoverer of the place's possibilities for painters, and who now makes the town his permanent home, has been followed thither by a number of well-known American painters, art teachers and their flocks of students—by wealthy art amateurs of painting, and by art lovers in general.

For Provincetown is Brittany and the Latin quarter combined. Everyone paints—it is an epidemic in the place—young and old men and women, millionaires, grandmothers and grandsires, and even boys and girls.

The annual summer exhibition, held in the Town Hall, was the usual success and many sales were made. The pictures were noticed in the August Art News.

But the real event of the season at Provincetown, was the Minstrel Show of Aug. 24, held in the same Town Hall, and organized by the Beachcombers' Club of artists, and which raised over $600 to insure the future of the picturesque and attractive little clubhouse on Knowles Wharf, which the club has had built. The program of this remarkable show will be found below. The dinners and rehearsals which preceded it, and which kept the town in a state of excitement for a week previous, will not soon be forgotten by those fortunate enough to be in Provincetown at the time, among them the editors respectively of the International Studio and the AMERICAN ART NEWS, who were most hospitably received and entertained, and made honorary "Beachcombers." Such a feast as was the club dinner of Aug. 22 with six-foot "Jack" Siebert of Washington, "Hawthorne's little pupil," as master of ceremonies, George Elmer Browne as "leader of the glee," Oscar Fehrer as general utility man, C. Arnold Slade as assistant cup bearer, C. W. Hawthorne as "the benevolent master" of the wine cellar, and "Robinson Crusoe" George Senseney as chief toastmaster. It was a wild evening and the rehearsal for the Minstrel Show, which followed at the Town Hall, was wilder.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

With this issue the summer monthly series of the American Art News closes. The weekly issues will be resumed on October 14 next, when new Volume XV will begin.

THE AUGUST BURLINGTON.

The frontispiece to the August number of the Burlington Magazine is a reproduction of Ford Madox Brown's "An English Autumn Afternoon," recently presented to the Birmingham Gallery, by the Public Picture Gallery Fund. With it is a short article by Sir Witworth Wallis. Campbell Dodgson has a scholarly account of Breu's "Calumny of Apelles." W. R. Lethaby signs the first article of a series on the "English Primitives." Oswald Siren writes of the two Donatello sculptures recently sold by French & Co. of N. Y. to Mr. Joseph Widener of Phila. He holds the bust of St. John to be by Desiderio di Settignano. Lionel Cust's continuation of his "Notes on Pictures in the Royal Collections" is devoted to a supposed self portrait of Raphael at Windsor and Roger Fry reviews sympathetically Ezra Pound's memoir of the late advanced sculptor Gaudier Brzeska.

With the Monthly Chronicle are reproduced two of the collection of Sargent portraits, recently presented by Mr. Asher Wertheimer to the National Gallery. They are those of the donor and his wife. The text is by Charles Aitkin. Copies of this and other issues of the Burlington may be obtained from the American Agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St., N. Y.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The largely increased cost of production of this journal during the past six months, due to the great and unprecedented rise in the price of paper and metals, which has almost doubled our printing charges, and which does not seem likely to diminish, makes necessary an increase of the yearly subscription rate to $3 ($3.75 to foreign countries—$3.35 to Canada) beginning with the first weekly issue for the season on Oct. 14 next, which issue also will mark the beginning of new volume No. XV. Subscriptions at the old yearly rate of $2 will be received up to Oct. 14.

OUR FIFTEENTH BIRTHDAY.

With this issue, the last of our summer monthly series, Volume XIV of the AMERICAN ART NEWS closes, marking the close also of twelve years of successful publication and steady growth of the journal, under its present management, and of fourteen years of publication, if its two years previous publication as "Hyde's Weekly Art News" are counted. The first of the weekly issues of the coming season, which will mark the beginning of new volume No. XV, will be published Oct. 14 next.

Fourteen years of successful publication of an art newspaper in these United States, where art interest, while steadily growing, is still comparatively limited—and during a panic year (1907-'08) and the four or more years of business depression which followed that fateful year, and now over two years of a war in Europe, which nearly stopped all art business from or with France, England, Austria, Italy and Germany, in which art loving countries and centres the AMERICAN ART NEWS has come to be known and widely read as the authority on and recorder of art happenings in America, we modestly consider no mean achievement.

During these panic and war years we have seen several art periodicals in America, and many in Europe, cease publication, and we have witnessed the passing of numerous, some well established, American and Foreign art houses. That the AMERICAN ART NEWS has been enabled during these hard and strenuous times, not only to continue publication, but to steadily grow in circulation and influence, is due to the continued and consistent patronage and support of our thousands of readers and subscribers and our many advertisers, who, we believe, have thus continued their support, from the conviction that while some may not have agreed with our opinions at times, all have recognized our honesty of purpose in both upholding and aiding in building up art interest in America, our support of honest dealing and art endeavor, and our frank, and, we hope, courageous denunciation of fraudulent art and dealing, and of cant and hypocrisy in Studio and Gallery. We begin another year therefore, which promises to be a most prosperous one to art interests in America, with hope and confidence.

ANONYMOUS SKUNKS.

"Every editor who has positive opinions and the courage to express himself unequivocally, is sure to be the recipient of scurrilous communications, always anonymous, inspired either by ignorant stupidity or by malignant envy. "Poor anonymous skunks! If it affords you pleasure, why go ahead. Our waste baskets are numerous and capacious."—Dr. W. J. Robinson in The Critic and Guide.

HARRISON MORRIS IN NEW ROLE.

In a somewhat caustic criticism of what he or she evidently considers a somewhat dictatorial attitude on the part of certain prominent organizers and directors of the new Newport Art Association at Newport, R. I., towards exhibitors in the galleries, the Saunterer in Town Topics of Sept. 7 says: "It will require all the diplomatic powers of the new Director Harrison Morris, to smooth things over and bring them to a pleasant basis again.

It is to be feared, oh Saunterer, that any reliance on the diplomatic qualities of Mr. Morris will be ill founded. If there is any quality that eminent gentleman lacks it is diplomacy. Ask the officers of the Italian Government, who managed the International Art Exposition at Rome of 1911, where Mr. Morris was in charge of the American Pavilion, what they think of him as a Diplomat, and if he can bring himself to talk on the subject of Mr. Morris, which is doubtful, interrogate President John L. Lewis of the Penna. Academy.

LEST WE FORGET!

Parker Mann, writing to the N. Y. Sun from Arkville, N. Y., states that some statements on the famous Evans-Clausen case in an article published by that journal anent Blake's recent transfer from the Middletown Asylum, were not entirely accurate, and gives the facts in the case, having been a witness at the trial, as follows:

"Evans accused Clausen of selling him two pictures falsely attributed to Homer Martin. When shown at Clausen's galleries, before Evans bought them, they were considered by all who saw them to be not only genuine but very fine examples of Martin's work. There was a delay of some years between the time of the accusation and arrest of Clausen and his trial. This resulted in such injury to Clausen's reputation that he was driven into bankruptcy. That is, he was severely punished for an alleged crime before being tried for it.

"The trial resulted in a failure to convict, the jury disagreeing eleven to one in favor of acquittal. Evans announced his intention of having a new trial, but as stated, the matter was settled out of court."

CORRESPONDENCE.

About the Museum Sargent.

Editor, AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir: The fluctuations and changes of conditions, opinions and estimates, in the art world, have been as startling of late years as those in world politics. What a satire is the story of Blake's rise to fame! What daubs of modern painting have eclipsed the works of Alma Tadema and Gerome! The latest astonishment to me, as a veteran of the profession, is the purchase of Sargent's Madame X by the Metropolitan Museum and the praise now lavished upon it.

It was years ago the master's second exhibit at the Paris salon. His first was a portrait of his instructor, Carolus Duran, and was hailed as the work of one born to fame. But the next year brought the usual reaction, as evident, in the profile portrait named. As a chance for society recognition and patronage, it was no doubt a precious opportunity to an ambitious young portraitist, one destined to paint many a "daughter of an hundred earls," but the much-enamelled and made-up aristocrat was, artistically no fit subject for Sargent's daringly conscientious brush, and the impression the picture made, when exhibited, was so disappointing to his friends and the public that he shed tears.

I personally stood before the picture one day, when not only sundry passers-by made regretful or jocular remarks, but when Carolus Duran himself came up with a friend and giving an unhappy shrug, spoke of it as a failure. "Oni, il failli, cette année." Yet the picture after long years, has, with the fame of the painter, drifted out of its very questionable status into the sunlight of respectability and honor, and the final glory of purchase by the Metropolitan Museum. A. G. Heaton. Carnegie Hall, Sept. 5, 1916.

OBITUARY.

Henri Harpignies. Henri Joseph Harpignies, who has been aptly called the "Michael Angelo of landscape" so grandiose are his interpretations of its beauty, died at St. Prive, France, Aug. 28, in his 98th year. He was the last link in the chain of "The Men of 1830" which included Rousseau, Corot, Diaz, Millet, Dure and Daubigny. With Corot he went to Italy in 1860. Harpignies was born in 1819 at Valenciennes and overturned with his bent for art, the plans his parents had made to fit him for an engineering career. They finally, after he had duly graduated as a civil engineer, allowed him to go to Paris, where he became a pupil of Achard, from whom he imbibed his strength of drawing and composition and his remarkable ability in the effective disposition of masses. The painter spent two years in Italy painting on his return to France, some children in landscape settings. His first Salon exhibit was in 1853 and he made his first notable success there in 1861. In 1877 came his decoration with the Legion of Honor, of which he later became a commander, and in 1886 a medal, for "Le Soir dans la Cam-pagne de Rome," bought for the Luxembourg. In 1897 his exhibit, "La Solitude" brought him the Salon Medal of Honor. There were also several honors won by him at foreign displays.

Harpignies was a secretary of the Society of French Artists, which manages the "Old Salon" and one of the original members of that exclusive body the Societe des Aquarellistes Francais. A large landscape panel from his brush is one of the decorations of the Paris Opera House. His pictures figure in all the principal Foreign and American public and private galleries. His "Moonrise" has been owned by the Metropolitan Museum since 1886 when it was presented by the Paris dealers, Arnold & Tripp to whose order it was painted the previous year. The artist took great pride in the sumptuous table he kept and up to his death was able to smoke his dozen pipefuls a day. He had an apartment near the Luxembourg in Paris, a fine winter home near Nice and painted otherwise chiefly in the Department of the Loire.

Harpignies' art remained virgile to the last and a sensation was caused when, adopting a new medium, he exhibited at the age of 90 in 1910 a number of charcoal drawings in a Paris gallery.

Frederick Pollard.

The veteran print connoisseur, Frederick Pollard of Panton St., died in London, the latter part of August, in his 91st year. He was the oldest of London's print sellers, and nearly 70 years in the business. He was born in London and had an ancestor who was speaker of the House of Commons. He had a wonderful knowledge of early XIX century London.

James Connell, Sr.

James Connell, Sr., founder of the London art firm of that name, died in Glasgow, Aug. 14, at the age of 84. He retired from the Bond St. house, now conducted by his sons, some years ago and did not leave Scotland when the firm established its headquarters in London.

Benjamin Day.

Benjamin Day, the inventor of a process of shading illustrative drawings, known by his name, died Aug. 30 at Summit, N. J., aged 78. He studied art in Paris, was for many years with Leslie's and Harper's Weeklies.

RECENT RUSES IN ART MARKET.

London, Sept. 5, 1916.

It is almost in the nature of a truism to assert that there is hardly a profession which lends itself so readily to "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain" as that concerned with the disposal of works of art, nor any class of buyer so readily gullible as that concerned with their purchase.

It follows very naturally that fresh inventive genius is constantly being brought to bear on the transactions of the art-market and that not a season passes but witnesses some new and ingenious ruse, devised with the object of securing first-rate prices for fourth-rate wares, for arousing the cupidity of collectors on behalf of articles of fictitious merit, and for claiming authentic pedigrees for works, over whose origin it would be more desirable to draw the veil. Damaging as tactics such as these might, at first sight, appear to be to legitimate trading, the expedients practised by the "crooks" of the trade have more often than not, the effect of causing the disillusioned client to forsake before long the wiles of the lesser fry for the security of dealing with creditable and responsible firms of good standing, for as the burnt child fears the fire, so a buyer once deceived, is likely to abjure in the future the temptations spread for him by the "outside" man.

Women as "Go-Betweens."

Perhaps the most curious feature of the illicit side of latterday art-dealing, is the prominent way in which women figure in its "shady" transactions. Women who enjoy the entrée into good society, leave no stone unturned to discover which of their acquaintances is desirous of parting with a family heirloom—or at least prepared to consider an offer at an advantageous price. Armed with this valuable knowledge, the next step is to go the round of the dealers, and without any sanction from the unfortunate owner, to offer them the picture or bronze at a price very considerably in advance of that which he would be prepared to accept. Should the negotiations prove successful, it is an easy matter to concoct a tale of a personal friend anxious to buy on the owner's terms, the difference between the sum he accepts and that actually paid, finding its way into the "lady's" purse, together with a tidy little commission from both sides.

But here allow me to give a word of warning to the owners of works of art to confide their intentions to no feminine friends, for in the majority of cases dealers are far too wary to pay "fancy" prices, no matter how enchanting may be the aristocratic pedigree of the work offered, and the only result of "my lady's" industry is effectually to stamp the work as "hawked," and permanently to lower its market value, so that eventually it will only fetch a sum considerably less than would have been the case had its sale been conducted in a more discreet and dignified manner.

An amusing side to this aspect of feminine activity was disclosed to me only a few days ago by a dealer who had been offered by an enterprising woman, three pictures which had actually been entrusted to him by a client for sale. Needless to say the price which she was asking was nearly double that placed upon them by the dealer.

An Ancestor's Portrait.

It is popularly supposed that the majority of underhand tricks of the trade are concerned with spurious and "faked" works, but as a matter of fact, the genuine work of mediocre merit which technically places the vendor beyond the arm of the law, is far more acceptable for crooked purposes, lending itself in a most accommodating manner to ingenious "booming" and unscrupulous inflation of price. A recent deal of which the intricacy of detail and clever inventiveness are deserving of a better cause, was concerned with a picture of this type, a genuine Old Master of inferior quality, which happened to be a portrait of an ancestor of a certain English nobleman, and of which the actual market value was about £500. A letter was written by the dealer to this nobleman, acquainting him of the existence of the portrait and offering, without naming any price, that it would be sent to his country house for this inspection. Before time had elapsed for the receipt of a reply, the picture was despatched and in a couple of days' time there followed a second letter from the dealer, expressing regret that since it was offered at the sum (now for the first time stated) of £3,000, an offer of £5,000 had been made by another client. Strictly speaking, this statement was true, for by means of representing the picture as a family heirloom in the nobleman's collection, the dealer was able to interest some credulous buyer (probably a wealthy American) in it. Having brought negotiations to this point, the dealer by means of a generous tip, ascertained from the ancestral butler the times when his lordship was apt to be absent in town, took his client down to the country-seat to view the work in what was supposed to be its lawful home and triumphantly "pulled off the deal."

And now comes the master stroke! In order that no uncomfortable revelations may subsequently arise, the nobleman is himself made a party to the transaction, the dealer representing that in consideration of his foregoing his prior right to the picture, he shall be given half the difference between the price at which he was offered it, and that at which it has been bought. It is not in human nature to refuse a clear gift of £1,000, so the nobleman is richer by that sum and the dealer by £3,500!

Copying of Art Works.

Another remarkable feature of up-to-date criminology in art is the quickness and facility with which valuable works may be copied. Quite recently a well-known collector of bronzes was asked by a friend in all good faith to lend him one of his choicest statuettes for a few days as he was expecting a week-end visit from a friend who was a great enthusiast in the same direction. The request was complied with, but before the bronze was returned, its owner, to his amazement, received a call from a man who brought with him for sale what appeared to be the collector's own bronze. Much perturbed, the collector telephoned at once to his friend to ask if his bronze was still in his keeping, only to be assured that this was the case.

What had transpired was that accurate drawings had been taken of the bronze by the visitor and within three days copies had been put on the market! Ignorant of the ownership of the original but recognizing the collector as a man much interested in the particular type of bronze, the "faker" had fallen into the trap of offering the copy to the possessor of the original an accident which speedily led to his arrest. So does Providence sometimes protect the art-lover!

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Walter Ehrich, of the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., has returned to town after a trip to Algonquin National Park, Canada.

The Scott and Fowles Galleries, 590 Fifth Ave., reopened for the season on Monday last.

E. F. Bonaventure, 601 Fifth Ave., arranged in his show window, for the Lafayette celebration, a historical display. There were busts of Lafayette, Washington and Franklin, a standing figure in oils of Washington attributed to Charles Wilson Peale, several miniatures, and various other souvenirs.

Mr. C. F. L. de Wude, for some two years past, "expert" and picture restorer with M. Knoedler & Co., is leaving the firm to go into business as the English say "on his own."

Mr. Eugene Glaezer, of Jacques Seligman & Co., 705 Fifth Ave., sailed from Bordeaux for N. Y., Sept. 9, on the Lafayette.

Mr. C. T. Loo, of Lai Yuan & Co., who has been spending the summer at St. Jean de Luz, Brases Pyrenees, in the intervals of his business in Paris, sails from Bordeaux for N. Y. on the Rochambeau today.

Mr. F. Kleinberger and family and Mr. Edward Sperling and family, who spent part of the summer at Paul Smith's, Adirondacks, have returned to town.

Mr. Percy Boswell has left the service of the N. Y. Herald, for which journal he has been the reporter of happenings in the local art world for some two years or more—and is going into business "on his own."

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Hart have left their camp in the Adirondacks for the Virginia Hot Springs.

Mr. Augustus Le Fevre, formerly and for many years connected with the Fifth Ave. Art, where he was one of Mr. James P. Silo's most efficient lieutenants, and who has been with Snedecor and Co., for some time past, has resumed his connection with the former house.

ANOTHER ART AUCTION HOUSE.

Mr. Edward P. O'Reilly, long with the Fifth Ave. Art Galleries, opens this week three large galleries to be known as the Plaza Art Galleries, at 59 St. and Fifth Ave., where, under his personal supervision, there will be held public art exhibition and weekly art auctions.

MEDICI SOCIETY, AM'N BRANCH.

An American branch of the Medici Society, Ltd., of London, has been established in Boston. It will be maintained as a separate organization, but represent the London Society. Mr. Benjamin Curtis will be managing director at the same time continuing his directorship of Messrs. Curtis and Cameron.

ST. LOUIS.

The City Art Museum opened Sept. 3 its eleventh annual exhibition of selected paintings by American artists made up of 158 canvases by 141 artists, a collection highly representative of the present development of American painting. Many of the choicest pictures from the winter exhibitions of the Pa. and National Academies are included, together with other specially invited canvases from artists' studios and public and private galleries.

Among the more notable works are "Tanis" Daniel Garber, "Torn Lingerie" Frederick C. Frieseke, "Winter" Joseph T. Pearson, "Leetle Canadienne" Douglas Volk, "East Window" Childe Hassam, and "Clearing New Ground" Elliott Daingerfield. Ernest L. Blumenschein contributes his "Chief's Two Sons" and "Wise Man, Warrior and Youth." Jonas Lie, Emil Carlsen, Guy C. Wiggins, Hayley Lewis and Charles Melville Dewey are also well represented.

The development of portrait painting in America is exemplified in works of Robert Henri, Wayman Adams, Lydia Field Emmet, Philip L. Hale, F. Luis Mora, Leopold Seyffert, Camelia Whithurst and others.

Among many other contributors to the exhibition may be mentioned H. W. Watrous, George Bellows, F. W. Benson, F. G. Carpenter, Ettore Caser, Mary Cassatt, Charles H. Davis, Ben Foster, Birge Harrison, Sergeant Kendall, George Luks, Morris Molarsky, E. W. Redfield, Albert Rosenthal, Gardner Symons, William Wendt, Robert Vonnoh and Cullen Yates.

PREPAREDNESS POSTER PRIZE.

The Preparedness Bazaar Committee, which will hold a fair at the Grand Central Palace, Dec. 14-21, for the benefit of relief organizations devoted to the army, navy and National Guard, has announced that a prize would be given for an "American Preparedness Poster." There will be inducements for professionals, students and public school pupils.

AT THE MODERN GALLERY.

For the opening of the season, at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave., Mr. De Zayas has arranged an interesting display of modernist paintings, drawings and sculptures, and African negro sculptures. It is somewhat difficult to determine which are the more ugly. In his drawing of a boy, and his etchings, quite remarkable in their way. "The Two Friends" and "Salome" and the drawing, "In the Manner of Redon, Guys and Lautrec," Picasso is quite understandable. The "Figure of a Woman" is in the usual block and plane style. Similar are Picabia's "New York," "Catch-as-Catch-Can," seen before, and "Music Is Like Painting." Manolo shows a strong drawing in sanguine "Head of An Old Woman" and a bronze relief vigorous in character. Others represented are Brancusi, an unformed ovoid marble, "Head of a Child," Braque, Cezanne, Derain and Rivera.

CRECHES AT THE ALLIANCE.

There are on view to Oct. 15, at the rooms of the Art Alliance of America, 45 E. 42 St., a pair of "Creches" representing "The Adoration of the Shepherds" and "The Adoration of the Magi," intended for church or house use, and executed by three members of the Alliance, Wm. Horatio Day and Misses J. M. Lawson and H. Saussy. They are gracefully disposed, effectively modelled and agreeably colored, but seem a little too widely spaced. The stable is partly enclosed by the rising walls, typical of the new church built upon the ruins of the old, of a Gothic building. The shepherds personify Youth, Manhood and Old Age. The same ages appear in the Magi. The Christ child here is shown about a year old, and through the ruins of the roof, rises a cross formed of part of the timbers.

DEALER CHAIT MUST REFUND.

As a result of the findings of the referee, Louis Wendel, Jr., by an order filed a few days ago in the Supreme Court, Sabbatia Chait, dealer in jades and Chinese porcelains, and a member of the firm of Voron & Chait, 418 Madison Ave., must pay his partner $36,257 and costs of over $5,000. It is alleged he failed to turn over to the firm moneys received. Mr. Wendel, who heard the case for nearly two years, says that while Mr. Voron is unable to write and can only read printing, Mr. Chait is a man of learning. Commodore Robert E. Tod, the banker, bought goods amounting to $216,026 and Mr. Chait accounted for only $199,823. Goods bought of the London dealer, Mr. Gerald Brockelbank for $15,267 were charged at $21,262 to the company. It is stated that Mr. Chait also withheld small sums, took as his own property a black beaker, for which the company paid $2,429, and neglected to account for $500 on two pottery figures bought back from a customer.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Sept. 6, 1916.

One of the most interesting art movements in France at present is that for the replacing of the ecclesiastical furniture, symbols and utensils destroyed or pillaged in the regions invaded by the Germans. The value of thousands of these objects lay not so much in that of which they were composed, or in their artistic merit, even, but in their antiquity and rarity. As a matter of fact, it will be impossible to produce duplicates of the more remarkable. Their loss can be only partly repaired, if at all, in the true sense. The most that can be done, aside from imitations of form and style, will be to reflect something of the artistic spirit of the particular times in which they were created. There will, of course, be many endeavors, the results of which will be extremely banal. On the other hand, the difficulty of the task is attracting talent of a high order, and France seems really on the eve of an extraordinary revival of ecclesiastical art. This would be one of the few blessings in disguise of the Great War. Venerated altar furnishings, chalices, tabernacles, besides wonderful sacerdotal vestments and ornaments that had been worn by generation after generation of priests and prelates, have either been burned and defaced, or have gone to enrich private and public collections in the land of the invader. But already the organized effort to replace them, encouraged by some of the best authorities in art in France, is bringing forth notable fruits.

Revival of Liturgical Art.

There is even the question of creating a new style in liturgical art—a style to be peculiarly French. This is because the German influence was too strongly felt in much of this field that had been produced in the years just preceding the war. Crying colors and outlandish designs, attributed to the school of Munich, offended the finer taste. At a competitive exhibition of liturgical art, lately held at the Museum of the Decorative Arts, reminiscences of this style were so apparent that they provoked an outburst of indignant protestation.

The most active central agency in the revival of liturgical art seems to be the Societe de St. Jean, which is almost overwhelmed with gifts of money and offers of collaboration. Maurice Denis, the painter, is one of its chief promoters. That there is felt to be great need of energy and sacrifice is not to be wondered at when it is considered that there are no less than three thousand five hundred churches and chapels in France, destroyed in the war, which are to be rebuilt and refurbished. The resources of modern architectural talent will here also be put to the test.

A unique piece of early XIII century art has been saved from the debris which had fallen from the interior walls of the cathedral of Rheims, under the German bombardment. It is what is known as the "Rheims candelabra," a relic of intensely curious interest and was found in a heap of half-calcined rubbish in the crypt. It is not fully intact, but can probably be restored, with the aid of the plaster cast of the original which is in the Museum of Comparative Sculpture at the Trocadero.

The sculptured head of a young man, attributed to Phidias, has been presented to the Louvre museum. It came in to the possession of the donor, Mlle. Louise de la Coulonche, through the founder and first director of the French school at Athens, M. Ame Ire Davelny, is said to have fallen from the freize of the Parthenon, and was given to him by King Otho, the Bavarian prince, whom the Greeks deposed in 1862.

Redon's Death a Great Loss.

M. Jacques Zoubaloff has just added to his gifts to the city's museum in the Petit Palais, a collection of representative works of the painter engraver, Odilon Redon.

Few French painters of the last half-century had so distinct and peculiar a personality both in his character and in his works as Redon, who passed, only a few weeks ago, vainly hoping to the last that his son, who is at the war, would return to receive his dying embrace. Redon was like Corot in that he followed absolutely his own impulses and his own intuition in art, indifferent to the dicta of others. He seemed not to recognize the existence of any tradition nor any academic routine or any official sanction for art. His works in black and white were more abundant than his paintings, and expressed more largely the finer essence of his talent. The weird tales of Poe inspired him to wonderful efforts, as did those of Flaubert, the Book of Revelations, the "Haunted House" of Bulwer-Lytton and the paintings of Goya. In three classes of subjects which he painted idealistic landscapes, flowers and figures possessing a spiritual symbolism, he evinced a mystical sympathy with nature which was his especial and supreme gift. In these, his sense of color is extraordinarily refined and delicate; but to many eyes not strictly real. Briggs Davenport.

Paintings loaned from the private collection of Mr. Charles L. Hutchinson are attracting art lovers to the Institute. In the group is the splendid "Beata Beatrix," Paintings by Corot, Dias, Fromentin, and Daubigny are shown, as also examples of Benson, Ranger and Baron Leys. In the McCormick loan collection, are landscapes by George Inness, also a Peg Woffington by Hogarth and examples of Constable, Troyan, Rousseau, Marcke, Ziem, Henner, Gainsborough, Schreyer and other artists. The exhibition of works by contemporary British artists continues an attraction in the Institute. Harrington Mann has this in charge.

The season at the Art Institute will open with the annual exhibition of applied arts, Oct. 12. The usual prizes will be given.

The Atlan Ceramic Club will hold its annual exhibition with the arts crafts show, and this club will give a $10 prize for the best original over-glaze conventional ornament entered by an outside exhibitor. Mrs. J. Ogden Armour will give a $100 prize to the best entry of pottery and glassware.

Mr. George W. Eggers, appointed acting director of the Art Institute for a year, will begin his duties in early October.

An exhibition of flower pieces in oils by Magda Heuermann, at Roullier's, has unusual exhibits executed with much skill. Miss Heuermann also has paintings of bits of Japanese landscapes featured with Japanese dolls on the walls.

At Young's gallery there is an inspiring show of American paintings, including four fine Bundy landscapes, and an exceptionally fine landscape by Frank Benson, with a fine figure piece by this artist.

Paintings by modern European masters are featured at Reinhardt's, and in an adjacent gallery are several landscapes and a few figure canvases by American artists. H. Effa Webster.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The principal event last month was the opening of the new Hill Tolerton galleries in Sutter St. The artistic building is of somewhat unique design, modelled on the Italian building at the Pana-Pacific Exposition. It has an open air court in the rear of the main salesroom at the front of the structure. An arched passage way leads from the street to the rear of the building and about the court is an overhanging gallery. Besides the spacious Exhibition galleries there is a room devoted to rare books. In the principal gallery, the ceiling is made picturesque by heavy beams, and the illumination comes through glass panels set in it. On the second floor are several rooms with views of the court. Some of these have large and picturesque fireplaces.

Among the Fall exhibitions, at the new establishment, will be one of early French and another of early Spanish masters. There will also be an exhibit of etchings and engravings, and a display of sculptures by Paul Manship. Another feature will be an exhibition of rare books made by one of the best known N. Y. collectors.

Vickery, Atkins and Torrey are showing monotypes by the French artist Artigues and lithographs by Robert Steil, depicting workers on the rivers Elbe and Volga. Portraits by Orselli are shown at the Courvoisier Gallery and canvases by John Frery at Rabjohn and Marcom's Rooms.

At Mr. H. Taylor Curtis' new William Keith Gallery are works by Guerin, F. W. Stokes and C. H. Woodbury. There are paintings by Clark Hobart at the Helgesen Galleries. Mr. Willard E. Woren has recently opened an art establishment at 312 Stockton St.

BOSTON.

Nothing could be more static than art in Boston, as far as exhibitions are concerned. September being "between seasons," the summer exhibitions (already mentioned in this column) are still "on" at Vose's, the Copley Gallery, etc. A retrospective look in at the Copley Gallery reveals that Ernest Ipsen's full-length portrait of a fair-haired young lady has been replaced by a new painting by Marion Boyd Allen. This large and ambitious canvas might be called a "boudoir scene," depicting, as it does, two comely young ladies in dainty and intimate negligee. One of them sits reading a letter (presumably aloud), while the other lounges in a half-reclining attitude at her knee. Behind them is the mahogany dressing table, in whose mirror one may see reflected the floor, with its warm-toned rugs. There is some good, vigorous painting in this canvas, with excellent handling of light and shade.

Also, one notes some new acquisitions at a local gallery, a group of landscapes by Miss Emily Groom, a Milwaukee painter, who studied at the Chicago Art Institute and in London with Frank Brangwyn. Her work is attractive and shows decided promise.

All local art-lovers are looking forward with genuine anticipation to the exhibition of cartoons by Louis Raemakers, in Copley Hall, October 2 to 7, for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund. The display is to be sponsored by a committee composed of prominent Bostonians.

John Doe.

LOS ANGELES.

Through the efforts of Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, editor of Los Angeles Times, the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art has acquired the loan of 38 canvases representative of foremost eastern artists. Mr. J. E. D. Trask, personally selected the paintings for the exhibition, many of which gained recognition at San Francisco, and they will remain here until October.

Richard E. Miller has been spending the summer in Pasadena.

Mr. and Mrs. Colin Campbell Cooper have been touring Cala. this summer. A number of days were spent sketching at picturesque Laguna, a famous sketching ground for local artists. They are now temporarily at San Diego.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick MacMonnies have been visiting the latter's mother, Mrs. John P. Jones here this summer.

Robert Henri spent the summer in and about Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he painted the Pueblo Indians of that region and other interesting Western types.

The Department of Fine and Applied Arts of The Museum of History, Science and Art will open its winter season, Octomanent homes and studios and live there during the greater part of the time to say nothing of Old Lyme, whose popularity increases with the seasons, New Canaan, Silvermine, Wilton, Woodstock, Mystic and Noank—all artists' retreats.

It is at Sangatuck that Hugo Ballin has built, in the heart of a wooded estate, a home and studio, informally Italian in architectural design, whose broad porticos overlook the Sangatuck River, which runs at the foot of his property. And here in his spacious studio he has painted numerous mural decorations, portraits and composition pictures during the past six years.

In Sangatuck also, Joseph Lichtenauer has built a fine residence and studio, where he paints portraits and decorative subjects from May until November. James Frazer, the sculptor, and Mrs. Frazer, also a sculptor, are hard at work here also. Wilfred Evans, an able English figure painter, who recently arrived from Italy, where he spent many years, has found Sangatuck a haven of inspiration. And here Silas Dustin has painted landscapes for several years.

Arthur Dove, who went abroad several years ago, and was caught by the "ismists," and returned with a collection of disks and cubes of color symphonies, may be found any day at his Sangatuck home working at his "depressionistic" art and superintending his chicken farm betimes, and here Karl Anderson paints his high-keyed, sunny canvases. Four well known illustrators, Henry Raleigh, Frederick Steele, Ernest Fuhr and Angus MacDonnall work at their Sangatuck studios during the greater part of the year.

At Westport, Osip Linde zealously works with his summer classes and his pupils do him credit. During the winter months he paints most of his pictures.

At Silvermine, L. Mazzanovich is considered one of the leading artists, it is here that he painted the majority of his landscapes which so interested New Yorkers when exhibited at the Montross Galleries a few seasons ago. Hubert Baer, Ralph Williams, the mural painter, K. Stewart Lawson, Jack Morris, landscape painter, and Mrs. T. N. Prizen, portraitist, are also members of this interesting community.

It is at New Canaan that Putnam Brinley has recently completed his beautiful house, studio and gardens, which for individuality and charm surpasses anything in his vicinity. At Wilton, William Emerson, who paints dreams in color, works the year round. Noank has been the happy painting ground of Henry W. Ranger ever since Lyme, of which he is said to be the discoverer, became too crowded for him.

Woodstock, fairly "carved out of the wilderness" and cultivated by such painters as Bolton Brown, Leon Dabo, John Carlson, Alethea Platt and others, more than ever this year, abounds in summer schools and other art enterprises until it fairly "sizzles" in art industry. L. M.

ELECTRO POSTER PRIZES.

The following awards were made in the recent Poster contest of the Society for Electrical Development whose exhibition attracted much attention in this and other cities last spring:

$1,000, Harold von Schmidt, San Francisco, Cal.; $500, John A. Bazant, Bronx; $300, Vincent Aderente, N. Y.; $200, Edward Staloff, Jersey City; $100, Harold H. Kolb, Somerville, Mass.; $50, William E. McKee, Jr., Hollywood, Cal.; $25, Armand Morela, Brooklyn; $15, Ruth M. Jameson, Buffalo, N. Y., and $10, Edna E. Crowley, Chicago, Ill.

In all 781 designs were entered in the contest, including 214 posters, the works of high school students, 194 done by students of art schools, and the remainder by professional N. Y. artists. High school students entered 82 designs, the largest entries being Washington Irving High School 22, Wadleigh High School, 11, Commercial High School of Brooklyn 10, and De Witt Clinton High School, 9.

A Son to Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin on Sept. 8, at their summer home at Roslyn, L. I. Mrs. Haggin was Miss Bonnie Glass, the dancer.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

The Montclair Art Museum has been reopened with a loan exhibition by artists of the town and vicinity. Miss Catherine Inness, formerly secretary of the picture committee of the Macdowell Club has been chosen curator of the museum, succeeding Miss Helen K. Taylor.

A portrait of Robert Emmet has been discovered in Boston, under a painting of a woman, by Mr. C. E. Merrow of Boston.

Several pictures by George Inness were recently left by the will of his sister-in-law Mrs. Catherine K. Inness to whom he had presented them, to her granddaughter, Mrs. Ruth Berkeley-Kuschke.

The spacious studio of the late Karl Bitter at Weehawken, N. J., which is now to rent, is built on a plot of ground which measures 200 ft. along the Palisades. The house has been rented to Henry Reuterdahl, the illustrator.

The seventh annual exhibition of the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh, will open in the galleries of the Carnegie Institute, Oct. 21, and continue to Nov. 22. The jury meets Oct. 13. A room will be devoted to the work of George W. Sotter.

Prince and Princess Paul Troubetsky sailed for Paris this week to remain three months. The trip is made for the benefit of the health of the Princess.

A. T. van Laer has just closed a successful exhibition of 25 canvases in his large and handsome studio at Litchfield, Conn. The exhibition was visited by representatives of the neighboring towns and four important pictures were sold. Mr. Van Laer will have a studio in New York the coming season.

The college course in the History and appreciation of Sculpture and Painting which has been taught this summer at the Metropolitan Museum, by Miss Louise J. Smith, Professor of Art in Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Va., has
