BEHIND THE RUGS.

"A jury before Supreme Court Justice Goff almost saw an exhibition on Tuesday," say the N. Y. Sun, "of the process of treating Oriental rugs to make them look ancient, and of doctoring motheaten rugs to make them look as good as ever, as part of the evidence in a suit by Paul M. Allo, a well known oriental rug 'expert,' against Benguiat Bros., Fifth Avenue dealers.

"Allo, who was one of the head salesmen and rug experts in the Benguiat establishment for about fifteen years, sued to recover a commission of 1 per cent. on rug sales totalling $880,000 on the ground that he was engaged at a salary of $25 a week and the commission. The Benguiats contended that Allo was to receive only a weekly salary and no commission. The jury returned a verdict for $8,091, which was all Allo sued for, with interest, less $1,000 he admitted owing the Benguiats.

"In the course of his testimony Allo told of the immense profit to rug dealers through the employment of competent salesmen. He told of one Polonais rug bought in Paris for eighty francs, which sold in New York for $12,000. In another case the dealers bought an Indian rug for £50, and after making $400 worth of repairs on it they held it at $15,000.

Allo offered to name the purchaser of the $12,000 rug, but neither his attorney nor counsel for the Benguiats wished him to do so. He also testified that although his employers contended he was receiving only $25 a week they charged $500 a day for his services when he was engaged as an 'expert' on the collections of Charles T. Yerkes, Senator William A. Clark and Capt. Philip M. Lydig.

"Vital Benguiat, chief witness for the defence, denied that it was possible to make new rugs appear old so purchasers would be deceived. 'They could be told a mile away,' he said. This drew from Max D. Steuer, counsel for Allo, the statement: 'If they could be told a mile away a lot of you rug dealers wouldn't be in business.'

"Allo testified that new rugs were made to appear old through the use of pumice stones, which wore down the fabric. In certain rugs there were 800 knots to a square inch, and it sometimes took an hour to cover an inch in the ageing process, he said. In filling up holes in old rugs and making them whole again Allo said it was necessary to take the same number of stitches that were taken in the original, and then remove traces of repairs by the use of pumice stones.

"In the course of the trial the jury asked Justice Goff to excuse the jury while he offered certain evidence, because he didn't want the offer to appear theatrical. When the jury had filed out Mr. Steuer said that he had brought to court an old, damaged rug and intended to ask Allo to demonstrate the method of making it appear sound in order to prove that his services in rehabilitating old rugs into new were of a unique and extraordinary character. Counsel for the Benguiats objected and Justice Goff ruled out the exhibition."

MACMONNIES RETURNS.

Frederick MacMonnies, the sculptor, returned from France on Tuesday on the Rochambeau. He says he hid his works under the straw of his barn in Givernay and that they were overlooked by the Germans. His "Civic Virtue," for the fountain in the City Hall Plaza is stored underground in Paris. Mr. MacMonnies intends to make a long stay in this country and possibly again take up a residence here.

Comstock's Successor.

John S. Sumner, a lawyer who has been associate secretary of the N. Y. Society for the Suppression of Vice, has been chosen to succeed the late Anthony Comstock as secretary and director of the Society. He is a son of Rear-Admiral George W. Sumner, retired.

R. M. SHURTLEFF ESTATE.

Ropwell M. Shurtleff, the veteran American landscapist, who died January 6 last, left an estate appraised at only $17,375 to his widow Clara E. Shurtleff. Six pictures now at the Folsom Galleries are held to be worth $2,900, the principal one "In the Shadow of the Big Rock" having been appraised at $1,200. Three cases of pictures, valued at $7,700, stored in a safe deposit vault for about 10 years, have been darkened by dust and exposure. The majority of them will be destroyed.

HOMER FOR MINNEAPOLIS.

An important water color, "The Conch Divers" by Winslow Homer, one of his Bahama series, has been purchased from the Macbeth Galleries for the permanent collection of the Minneapolis Museum.

What Art Prices Teach.

In reviewing the work of Gunther Koch on "Art Auctions and Prices," the Cicerone remarks that a further advance in prices is to be looked for in the Aransatlantic market, adding:

"The Americans have only begun to buy; the love of art is constantly increasing the circle of its influence. The result of the war will be that instead of having to pay first class prices for third class articles, as has been the case of recent years, for various reasons a large number of first class works will appear on the market."

SIR HUGH LANE'S BEQUESTS.

A cable to the N. Y. Times says that Sir Hugh Lane, the collector and dealer who perished on the Lusitania, left $250,000. He

TO SHOW BESNARD'S DECORATION.

W. Francklyn Paris is hoping to get the consent of the French Minister of Fine Arts, to exhibit in the principal American cities, for the benefit of the families of French soldiers artists, Albert Besnard's large decoration for the Peace Palace at The Hague. The subject is "Peace by Arbitration."

DESTROYED HIS SCULPTURE.

Charles E. Alden who once worked under Augustus Saint Gaudens is living at New Bedford, Mass., making papier mache material for theatrical settings in an abandoned factory building, where he also lives and does sculpture between whiles. He points with something of sadness to a photograph of his statue of an old whaler with a boy by his side to whom he is telling "The Story of a Harpoon." This he had to destroy as he was unable to pay the cost of putting it in bronze for the City of New Bedford would not take it at cost. A local art club black-brought very low figures, some going at $7 and $9, due to the fact that many were too large for ordinary use.

Mr. Kraushaar was a large buyer of the carpets, wall coverings, chairs, etc. The very large Wilton carpets almost new, went for a song, as did also the electric light fixtures and reflectors. The Ehrlich galleries secured some crimson velvet velours wall covering and curtains to match, the coverings 4 feet wide and approximately 70 yards square, for $62.50.

STUART OR MATHER BROWN?

The reproduction in the September issue of the Burlington Magazine of London of a portrait of William Harwood which Mr. Lionel Cust in an article in the same number attributes to Gilbert Stuart, and argues must have been painted between 1780 and 1789, when Stuart left London for Dublin, has had an unexpected and valuable result in bringing to the attention of both English and American collectors—the work and history of another early and strong American artist—almost unknown to art lovers—namely Mather Brown.

This result has come about through the questioning by Mr. Charles Henry Hart, admittedly the best authority on early American painting, of Mr. Cust's attribution to Stuart, of this portrait which he claims is by Mather Brown. Mr. Cust has been communicated with on the subject and his reply to Mr. Hart's questioning is awaited with interest.

Meanwhile a paper by Mr. Hart entitled "Notes on Gawen Brown, Clockmaker and His Son, Mather Brown, Painter," communicated to a meeting of the Massachusetts Historical Society, of which he is a member, Nov., 1913, is timely and interesting and is herewith republished:

"The presentation to the Society last December of the watch of Rev. Mather Byles, made by his son-in-law Gawen Brown, leads me to give some further data concerning Gawen Brown, who is sometimes misnamed 'Gendon Brown.' His first wife, Mary, died May 28, 1760, aged 31, and was buried in the Granary Burying Ground, Tremont Street, Boston. They had children baptised in the Old South in 1757 and 1758. But Elizabeth Adams was not his second wife as stated. He was a widower but three weeks to the day when he was married to Elizabeth Byles, daughter of Mather Byles, by whom he had one child, born October 7, 1761, and named for his grandfather, Mather Brown.

"This son went to London in 1780, received some instruction in painting from Benjamin West and became, if not a great, a well-known portrait painter, having among his sitters Thomas Jefferson, of whom in 1786 he painted a portrait for John Adams, which is now owned by Mr. Henry Adams of Washington, D. C., and was engraved for Bancroft's History of the United States. The artist's receipt for painting this portrait is pasted on the back of the canvas and the price paid him was six guineas. Contemporaneously he painted a portrait of John Adams for Jefferson, which, with a replica of Jefferson's own portrait and one of Tom Paine painted for Jefferson, have disappeared, although they were both in the exhibition of paintings at the Athenaeum, in Boston, which opened May 1, 1812, as appears by the supplement to the catalog headed, 'The following were collected by the late President Jefferson,' in which they are numbered 311 and 316 respectively. Trumbull wrote from London to Jefferson in Paris, 'Brown is busy about the pictures. Mr. Adams is like—yours I do not think as well of.' The latter has however great historical importance as it is the earliest known delineation of Jefferson's face. A portrait of John Adams's daughter Abigail, who was the wife of Colonel William Stephens Smith, painted by Brown in 1787, is in the old Adams house at Quincy, Mass., and a self portrait of Brown, which he had sent to his aunts Mary and Catherine Byles, was sold at auction in Boston, April 4, 1908, and is now in the possession of Mr. Frederick Lewis Gay of Brookline, Mass. Brown exhibited at the Royal Academy, London, for fifty years; some of his portraits and historical compositions have been engraved, and his heads of John Howard and of Sir Francis Buller are in the National Portrait Gallery, London; but he was not very successful, and we have doleful accounts of his last days, although his obituary in the Gentleman's Magazine styles him 'Historical Painter to His Majesty and the late Duke of York.' He died in London, May 25, 1831.

made many legacies to his family and gifts of pictures to various British galleries, the chief beneficiary being the Dublin National Gallery, of which he was once director.

Since March 15, the Vienna Museum of Art History has been reopened to the public on a restricted scale, on certain days. Owing to the number of the officials called to the front, the hours of opening has had to be shortened.

The Royal Porcelain Collection at Dresden has been again opened to visitors, as well as the Sascon Historical Museum.

The famous gilded bronze horses which for a century have adorned the principal portal of the Cathedral of St. Mark, at Venice, have been removed from the city to a place of safety because of the fear that they might be damaged by hostile aviators or war ships.

The Milwaukee painter Richard Lorenz who died Aug. 8 left an estate in excess of $7,500. There was no will.

balled him and to get even he got together a class of mill lads and taught them free, enough art in a year or two to form a rival show. His unique signature is three doughnuts and a cup of coffee. In addition to being a sculptor, Mr. Alden is according to the Boston "Journal" a painter, inventor and trick bicyclist.

BLAKESLEE FURNISHINGS SALE.

The fixtures and furnishings of the Blakeslee Galleries, No. 665 Fifth Ave., were sold at auction Tuesday morning last by the American Art Association, by order of the administrators, the lease having expired. Mr. Otto Bernet acted as auctioneer. There was a fair attendance, chiefly of dealers, notably Messrs. Charles W. Kraushaar and R. C. Vose of Boston, who were the chief purchasers, while the Ralston, Ehrich and Reinhardt Galleries were represented.

The prices obtained, considering the conditions, were on the whole, fair, although probably not over 10% of the original cost, while many bargains were obtained.

The total of the sale for 143 numbers was $2,446.50. There were 44 picture frames sold, some very handsome, which

OLD RUGS AND MINIATURES.

"Persian rugs have always been known, but the earlier weaves, the great monuments of Persian work in this field, have only recently been given a just appreciation of their full value. The greatest collection of rugs is owned by the Emperor of Austria, and has been described in a book commonly known as 'The Viennese Publication.' This book, published through an Imperial subsidy, contains some of the most remarkable examples of lithography known, having caught and reproduced on a small scale the delicate shadings and color-tones and the intricate patterns of the carpets in this collection. The Kent-Shmavon collection included a number of examples of the Isapanan or Herat rugs, which have obtained considerable popularity in America.

"The dating of Persian rugs presents a difficult problem, even for the most expert, as but few are dated, and designs are traditional, and reappear again and again through several centuries. It is, however, an easy matter to distinguish the XVIII century and later productions from those of the three preceding centuries. The highest development of Persian carpet-weaving was reached in the designs which had animals and human figures as the decorative motive. This has won for them the common, but slightly inaccurate, name of 'hunting-rugs.'

Patterns on Rugs.

"Unlike the Occident, where textile arts have frequently been arrested in their development through the introduction at too early a stage of naturalistic motives in imitation of paintings, in Persia and the East in general, the animals and human being were not introduced as a motive until a well-developed stage in decorative art had been reached. 'This fondness for the narrative motive,' Mr. Friedley once wrote, 'is the inevitable expression in terms of art of the imagination and poetry that entered so largely into the lives of the Oriental.' Viewed from a distance the patterns of many of the large rugs seem at first to be overlaid and give a feeling of restlessness. But it should be remembered that these carpets were used to sit upon, and the eye, at this close range naturally took in but a small part, which, although connected with the whole design, was in itself a complete composition.

"For this reason the patterns on even the largest carpets were generally of the same scale as those of the small rugs. The varied, rich motives continually change slightly in color or line, so that an impression of infinity replaces the optical weariness which would result from the monotony of a constantly exact repetition, and yet the whole pattern is held together by a wonderful rhythm of both line and color.

The Austrian Emperor's Rugs.

"The great majority of the best Persian miniatures date from the period between the XV and XIX centuries, but the art reached its highest development in the XVI century, the age of the Bokhara school. These miniatures are beautiful as mural decorations, and the enlightened connoisseur is today turning his attention to the Persian field in preference to Occidental art.

"Recent excavations in the sites of ruined cities in Persia and Mesopotamia have brought to light the unique charm of the early Persian pottery. Such cities as Rakha, Rhages and Sultanabad were overrun and destroyed in the thirteenth century, and considerable quantities of faience, exquisite in its shapes and colors, have been found among the ruins. Due to long burial in the earth, the pottery found in Rakha and Sultanabad especially has acquired a beautiful iridescence. Unfortunately, a complete and unchipped piece of pottery is a very rare discovery, but a small group of experts in Paris have acquired a remarkable skill in piecing together fragments and repairing the less damaged vessels. Their best work is, indeed, so cleverly done that only the trained observer can discover the patching."

Research in Miniature Painting.

"It is only recently that a general interest has been taken in the wonderful art of Persian miniature painting; and as science and collecting usually go together, Dr. F. R. Martin, one of the best connoisseurs of Persian art, has just given to the public the results of his research along these lines in an authoritative publication, at the moment when the Museum has received a most generous gift of Persian Mss. from Mr. Alexander Smith Cochran.

"The great period of the Timurids (1369-1494) is represented by a Koran copied in 1427 by Ibrahim Sultan, the grandson of Timur, a brother of Baisunghar, who was one of the first influential bibliophiles of the Orient. These men and their father, Shah Rukh, who has been called 'the founder of the most elegant style of book production of Persia,' created a new type of book, unsurpassed as to paper, illuminations, and covers. This Koran has naturally no illustrations, but the writing and the simple border with flowers and arabesques have the impressive, robust character of the school. An example of book illumination of this period is the Nizami of the year 1449-50, by an artist not of great refinement, but of vigor and entertaining variety. The design shows Chinese influence, still much in the style of the earlier Mongolian miniatures of the fourteenth century. The colors appear at first profuse and almost offensive in their vividness, but a closer study shows them to be a nice expression of the artist's temperament, and not without brilliant ideas and imagination."

"Of the Cochran Collection, the greatest work is undoubtedly a Nizami Ms., with fifteen miniatures, illuminated by Mirak. This artist was the contemporary and pupil of Bihzad, and founded the Bokhara school. Writing in another issue of the bulletin, Durr Friedley, a colleague of Dr. Valentiner, and with him one of the greatest authorities in this field of art, calls Mirak 'the Carpaccio of the East.'

Fineness of Technique.

"The work of the Persian illuminators was done with an incredible fineness of technique never equalled by any other people. The most conspicuous qualities of their work were the brilliance of color, the lack of shadow, and the way in which the color surfaces were broken up. Their entire decorative conception has had a marked influence on the most modern school of painting, just as at an earlier date the Persian inlay and metal work gave rise to a school in that field of decoration in Venice.

"Washington Allston, in writing of Mather Brown to Dunlap (History of the Arts of Design in the United States, I. p. 228), says, 'I have heard that he was the son of a celebrated clock-maker—the maker of the Old South clock, in Boston, which is said to be an uncommon piece of mechanism.' And he was. On July 23, 1768 Gawen Brown presented a petition to the Old South that having made a suitable clock for public use, a number of inhabitants desire to purchase the same by voluntary subscriptions, provided it may be put up in the temple. It was nearly four years before action seems to have been taken on the proposition, as not until March 30, 1774, a committee was chosen at a Town Meeting to purchase the clock of Gawen Brown and have the same fixed in Old South, for which, on April 4, 1774, Brown was paid eighty pounds. Gawen Brown died Aug. 8, 1801, at 82.

"Copley painted a portrait of Elizabeth Byles Brown in 1763, which must have been shortly before her demise, June 6, 1763, if Gawen Brown married Elizabeth Adams on Oct. 19, 1764.

"The data for this note have been gathered from various sources and it is the first time that an accurate account of Mather Brown, the painter, has been given.

DUTCH AND SWEDISH ART AT FAIR.

One of the finest and most comprehensive of the foreign sections in the Fine Arts Section at the Exposition is that of the Netherlands. The standard is exceptionally high and the installation both beautiful and harmonious.

That the quality of Holland's work is appreciated is shown in the number of awards given that country in painting, the graphic arts and sculpture.

Among the oils are two fine canvases by the late Johannes Blommers, remarkable for their rich color and splendid technique. A dignified and serious work entitled "Amsterdam Timber-Port" by G. H. Breitner, the winner of the Grand Prix of the Netherlands, is most pleasing in its soft tonality; and in sharp and direct contrast there is a spirited and well handled study, "Spanish Cafe," by Isaac Israels (son of Joseph Israels). "Old Woman reading the Bible," by Hobbe Smith, is a splendidly painted canvas—full of fine feeling and well expressed by the artist. Other fine examples of Modern Dutch Art are shown by David Bantz, Arnold Mari Gorter, Johan Hendrik von Mastenbroch, Willem E. Roelofs and W. B. Tholen.

Among the prints are three superb etchings by M. A. J. Bauer, entitled "The Holy Camel," "A Damascus Bazar," and "An Oriental Prince." In these three prints this master-etcher has attained the height of technique and great beauty of composition.

Well rendered, full of charm and entirely different in character is the work of Th. Van Hoytema, whose "White Heron" has attracted much attention. Two impressions of this print have already been sold.

The sculpture of the Netherlands is best represented by the three fine bronzes of Charles Van Wyk, whose work, in character and subject, is somewhat similar to that of Constantin Muenier, and executed with great sincerity.

The Manager of the Holland Section, Mr. G. E. De bries, has been exceedingly active and successful in interesting the public in the art of his country and has sold many fine works to both collectors and private buyers.

The Swedish Pictures.

The Swedish Section affords an opportunity to see the modern art of Sweden at its best, and has also been exceptionally fortunate in the receiving of awards. Many artists are represented in the eight galleries of this section, but the work of Liljeffors, Schultzberg, John Bauer, Fjaestad, Carl Larsson and Anna Boberg may be said to show the strength and variety of the exhibition.

To Bruno Liljeffors was awarded the Grand Prix of his country for painting, and his four fine canvases most amply fill the largest gallery of the Swedish Section. This artist has found particular inspiration in the study of bird-life in the open and his rendering is at once virile and convincing. Mr. Anshelm Schultzberg, Swedish Fine Arts Commissioner, gives as his contribution nine beautiful works, showing his country in varying moods and seasons. He is especially noted for his winter scenes, and a most happy handling of the artist's favorite theme is shown in his "Winter in the Forest."

An entire room is devoted to the work of Gustav Fjaestad, an artist as remarkable for his versatility as for his strength. He gives us not only many canvases, full of both vigor and delicacy—of grey mountains, misty fogs, and soft quivering light, but has produced stunning tapestries with much the same effect as his paintings, and also some unique furniture. There is always a touch of mystery about the work of Fjaestad, lying perhaps in his very unusual and interesting technique and in the poetic nature of his subjects.

The work of John Bauer, who has with brush and color so beautifully translated the fairy tales of his native land, proves fascinating alike to both young and old, and his exhibition is never without an admiring devotee. With his truly magic touch and masterful handling he takes us back to our days of dreams and fairies and gives us at once, not only a beautiful work of art, but an old-world legend. His "Hut and Goblins," "The Magic Plant" and "Humpe and his Mother" are extremely clever renderings of the old folk-lore tales.

In Anna Boberg Sweden possesses an exceptionally strong painter. Her work is vibrant with life and color and shows deep study and an intimate knowledge of her subjects. Her "Huts and Boats" is particularly pleasing, and was one of the first paintings sold in the Swedish Section.

Last to be mentioned, but among the first in point of excellence, comes the work of Carl Larsson, to whom was given a Grand Prix for his drawings and etchings. There is always a particular charm and distinction about the work of this artist, whether it be a large and ambitious decoration or one of the delightful interiors we have known in "Der Haus in der Sonne." His absolute sincerity of purpose is felt in each and every drawing and his color, always under perfect control and in complete harmony, gives added beauty and satisfaction. The Carl Larsson room is one to which one goes back again and again for rest and inspiration.

Sweden, shows much that is good in the graphic arts, but her artists in this line do not seem to have produced as important works as her painters.

On the whole, however, it may be said that the Swedish Section is one of the most interesting and instructive in the Department of Fine Arts. M. J. Coulter.

LONDON LETTER.

Sept. 29, 1915.

An interesting instance of the manner in which Sculpture may minister to Science is illustrated in the "Sculpture Department" of the London General Hospital at Wandsworth, where a number of prominent sculptors (among them Mr. Derwent Wood and Mr. Wilcoxson) are acting as Red Cross Orderlies. The services of these artists have been employed in the preparation of beautifully executed plaster-casts of injured limbs, so minutely copied and so accurately carried out that the makers of surgical instruments and of anatomical splints are enabled to produce with the minimum of trouble the required supports. Naturally each individual sculptor has brought to bear upon his task greater skill and elaboration than is actually necessary for the information of the instrument-maker, with the result that a series of the most minute and delicate anatomical studies has been prepared.

So little that is authentic is known of the life of Thomas Gainsborough that the forthcoming publication by Smith, Elder of Mr. William Whitley's illustrated biography of the artist is awaited with very considerable interest. This volume, which has occupied its author for many years, is the first work of serious research written on the subject, and throws a great deal of valuable light upon a career which hitherto has been practically a closed book. Some idea of the detailed manner in which the biography has been treated may be inferred from the fact that no less than ten exhaustive chapters have been devoted to the period of Gainsborough's life in London, of which until now only the barest details have been known, while for the first time the story is told of his famous portraits of Mrs. Siddons and "Perdita" Robinson as well as of the beautiful Mrs. R. B. Sheridan, whose full-length picture is in the possession of Lord Rothschild. In fact, the book will differ altogether from the common run of monographs in that it is not a compiled rechauffé of other biographies but a work of original research composed for the most part of new material, establishing the dates, hitherto unknown, of important canvases yet not disdaining to recall many an amusing anecdote and scrap of gossip about contemporary men and manners.

It is unfortunate that a book which has entailed such immense labour should have been compelled to make its appearance during the War.

Notwithstanding the fact that a great number of our treasures have been removed from English public museums and galleries, there still remains a vast quantity of irreplaceable works which one would rather not see exposed to the visitation of Zeppelins. We are always a little inclined to shut the stable door after the departure of the thoroughbred, and questions are being asked on all sides as to the reasons of the authorities for not having already removed to safer quarters such priceless possessions as, for instance, the collections of Greek vases, Egyptian sculptures and the unexceptional Rubens of the National Gallery. Mr. Charles Ricketts is calling public attention to the dilatoriness of those responsible in the matter, by means of letters to the press, and asserts that had it not been for the warnings given by Sir Claude Phillips, the situation would have been treated with even less precaution. It is curious that we should be so wanting in foresight seeing that not only have the Parisians exercised the greatest wisdom in regard to the safeguarding of their own collections, but even the enemy, by removing from Brussels all the finest of the antiquities found there, have themselves set us the example of timely care.

By the death of Lieut. Lord Spencer Douglas Compton in action, Watts' famous picture of "Love and Death" passes to his sister, Lady Loch, while as many as three Titians, as well as an Albert Durer and a Raphael are among the other bequests. The Watts canvas has so endeared itself to our people and its autotype reproduction is such a common feature of English homes that one has grown accustomed to thinking of it as a sort of national possession—the finest tribute that could possibly have been paid to the artist, one of the most spiritual and exalted thinkers of the 19th Century. A man like Watts belonged as much to the country at large as does any of the most prominent of our statesmen or philosophers and one feels that there is as much need for the "municipalisation" of his achievements as for any other great public possession.

The Message of Greek Art, by H. H. Powers. The Macmillan Standard Library. N. Y., 50c.

This is an intelligent historical and critical exposition of the work of Grecian sculptors from the days of the Kingdom of Minos, 3000?—1500? B. C., to those of the Dispersion and Transfusion at Alexandria, Rhodes and Peigamon. The illustrations are numerous and not hackneyed.

A NEED OF THE METROPOLITAN.

(By the Second Viewer.)

The Metropolitan Museum is a great and comprehensive institution. But its very greatness exposes the more noticeably one weak link in its chain of collections. This weak link is unfortunately the very department in which the studios or even the casual visitor (and especially the foreign visitor) might naturally look for particular strength—namely the department of early American paintings. Year after year, friends of American art have waited patiently to see a development of this sadly unrepresentative and unimpressive section. All but in vain, for while from Morgan, Altman, Hearn and other sources, have come a wealth of Dutch, French, British and contemporary paintings, only an occasional and usually feeble acquisition is noted in the defective and deficient early American collection. To be more explicit—one is positively ashamed to observe that the most important of American museums possesses but one single important example of the art of America's great old master—Copley. The one example is a pastel and exquisite though it is, it certainly inadequately represents the painter who is the very rock bottom of our early American school.

THE ART OF C. A. SLADE.

C. Arnold Slade, perhaps the most prolific of young modern American painters, and certainly the most energetic, began the season with a large and important "One Man" show in the handsome galleries of the Phila. Arts Club in that city last Saturday. The display, after a fortnight in Philadelphia, will go to Terre Haute, Milwaukee and other American cities in turn.

While a notice of the exhibition appears elsewhere in the Phila. letter in this issue, it deserves added passing comment for marked improvement over the artist's former work, versatility, facility and general promise. That Mr. Slade's art is liked and appreciated by American collectors is evidenced by the support given it by such collectors as Mrs. J. Gardiner, of Boston, who, already the owner of several of his paintings, motored all the way from Boston to the artist's summer studio at Provincetown, Mass., last August and purchased three more examples. Her nephew, Mr. John Gardiner, also has bought several Slade paintings, and from the present show in Phila. Mr. William Grange alone has secured five canvases.

The present display has no less than 70 numbers, including two very large Acad-

There should be at least five or six oils of Copley. New York must hang its head in shame when it contemplates the noble display of colonial American art made by the Boston Museum or even the Pa. Academy. In Boston one always finds not five but twenty-five examples of Copley, many of them new loans constantly replacing other loans. And Gilbert Stuart splendidly represented in Philadelphia fares better in New York, although even the show Stuaris of the Metropolitan, the portraits of the Spanish Ambassador, Juanes, and his wife have been assailed on the score of authenticity. The Avery Gibbs-Channing Washington is of course very fine, and certain other Metropolitan Stuaris are of interest, but certainly none other than the Washington have the importance of the General Knox at Boston.

The Metropolitan needs building up in the art of Colonial America, and especially it needs strong, genuine examples of the great portraits of John Singleton Copley and Gilbert Stuart. Their works are to be obtained and much more reasonably now than they can be obtained ten or even five years hence. Other museums are making such acquisitions. It would be interesting to know why the Metropolitan is not doing likewise.

emic figure compositions, "Christ and the Money Changers" and "Le Depart," the last much the best, several smaller figure compositions with good stories, of which "Jeunesse," three children sporting on a sunlit sea beach is too close an imitation of Sorolla. "His Comrade's Story," in which a wounded French soldier tells to a bereaved mother and sister in a Brittany hut the tale of his fellow's death, was reproduced in the ART NEWS last Spring. "Les Nouvelles" three French girls seated and discussing war news, is a good composition and a portrayal of a young French soldier dead on the battlefield, with the mystical figure of the Savior standing near with outstretched arms, has a timely and sentimental appeal. This last canvas is notable for the admirable drawing of the soldier and its faithfulness to detail in costume, etc.

The rest of Mr. Slade's canvases are landscapes, townscapes with figures, done at Biskra, Algerian character type portraits, marines painted along the rocky Maine and the sandy Mass. coasts, and a few Venetian scenes and American winter landscapes. It is rare to find an artist who can range so skillfully through landscape, marine and figure work, and the man's versatility is really remarkable.

The story-telling faculty is strong with Mr. Slade, but his best work is really done in portraiture, in which he well renders expression and character, in his tonal and luminous Venetian scenes, his high-keyed, sunlit Algerian landscapes, and especially in his marines. "Looking Down—Perkins Cove," which in color, feeling and dash indicates a future as a marine painter.

There is a certain thinness of color, hard at times, and a stiffness in the large figure works, which mars their general effect.

The artist, now that he has proven his facility and versatility might well "slow down" in his output, for there is danger of too much productivity and an atmosphere of haste about his work in general which spells danger, if persisted in. J. B. T.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art works of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially, to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

PROTECT VENICE ART.

Art treasures in Venice have been covered with wood, concrete and steel to protect them from destruction if the city is bombarded from sea or sky, says a recently returned visitor.

The lions of St. Mark are thus shielded from attack, he said, and paintings which,
because of their antiquity might be destroyed by concussions, have been padded
and incased in iron boxes.

EDUCATION IN ATTRIBUTION.

The educational value of attributions
by authorities, in that they frequently bring out information regarding Old Masters and long dead artists, or historical details of value, is well proven in the discussion, now under way between Mr. Lionel Cust, the accomplished English art critic and authority, and an editor of the Burlington Magazine, of London, and Mr. Charles Henry Hart, the eminent American authority on early American art and artists, over the attribution by Mr. Cust to Gilbert Stuart of a portrait of William Harwood, reproduced in the September Burlington and on our front page this week.

Through Mr. Cust's attribution of this work to Stuart, Mr. Hart throws an interesting light on the career and work of the almost forgotten and yet strong early American painter, Mather Brown, some of whose portraits are undoubtedly figuring as Stuarts in English and American collections today.

The progress of the discussion as to the authorship of this strong portrait will be watched with keen interest by connoisseurs in both England and America.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE WORSHIP OF UGLINESS.

Under this heading, the N. Y. Times recently published an interesting letter from Carroll Beckwith, in which the veteran artist says in part—

"A published letter from L. Govett calls attention to the neglect of our art schools in not emphasizing in their curriculum that branch of art cultivation embraced in aesthetics. His criticism seems to me both timely and just. For several years past it has been borne in upon me that the graduates from our best art schools were seriously lacking in those higher moral and intellectual qualities, the development of which should have been as carefully nursed
as the technical facility of the hand and the eye.

"Authoritative guidance is unquestionably lacking in all of our art schools. The dignity of the Royal Academy, and the high respect in which the Directors of the Ecole Nationale des Beaux-Arts are held, has a restraining influence upon the student,
which saves him from being led astray into the hopeless paths of so-called 'Modernism'
or 'Art Nouveau' that have shipwrecked so many men of talent. In view of the pernicious and monstrous developments, or rather perversions, which the misguided schools of painting and sculpture have undergone in recent years, it would seem to me right at this moment that our serious
art schools, such as those of our Academy of Design and Art Students' League, should establish courses of aesthetics which the students in all the departments should be required to attend. In other words, classes where good and bad taste should be demonstrated, where beauty and grace should be defined, in contradistinction to the ugly.
In past years art students were required to study the antique. Inevitably they absorbed from the contemplation of the Greek
a sense of proportion that was beautiful, of refinement, of grace which became a part of their artistic equipment, and unconsciously their works were always tinged
by the great art of the past.

"I am aware that this recommendation will not meet with the welcome of the present-day art student. He wishes his freedom from the 'academic,' to paint the thing as he sees it; and as he realizes that to 'épater' the public is one of the short roads to prominence, he selects an instructor who does not require much drawing and teaches that to be strong is to be brutal."

After quoting at length from a recent discourse by Leon Bonnat, published in the Paris La Renaissance to the general effect that "only by the study of form and the purity of drawing, humanity has been enriched by countless chef d'oeuvres," Mr.
Beckwith concludes as follows—

"I cannot disassociate in my own mind
the monstrous aberration of Germany in the present war with this awful development in my own profession. Some two years ago, in a picture dealer's shop in Paris, Vollard by name, I was horrified to find the entire collection composed of the most extreme works of the Cubists, Fu-turists, Pointillists, and all the insane schools of mental maniacs. I remarked to the dealer my horror and asked if he ever sold them. Raising his shoulders he replied, 'I take three carloads of them to Germany every Spring and Fall and sell every one.'"

Why Are Pictures "Great?"

August 30, 1915.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS,

Dear Sir:

Many years ago I became interested in oil painting. Certain pictures attracted and held me—others made no impression. Often those that interested, appeared no better technically, than those that did not. I asked myself, Why was this? Living in a remote section, away from art centers, I naturally turned to books. I read them faithfully, with a real earnest desire to learn. But I found out little or nothing.
About the only value most of the books
had, lay in the illustrations. Why are Corot's, or Rembrandt's or Inness' pictures great?
What is in them that makes them masterpieces? If there is a book that tells you this,
I have not found it. Descriptions of the pictures, more or less good as literature,
technical terms about light, shadow, color,
lines, etc., tell you nothing about the fundamental thing, without which there is nothing. The very thing I wanted to know was not said. I wanted to know, not about color, or light, or drawing; I wanted to know why it was that these things used in a certain way were art, and not used in that way were rubbish. What was the difference, what was it made it art? Well I did not find out.

Later I talked with persons who knew about pictures, and not but little further.
There was plenty of talk but not much light. It was a mystery to me, for I know they were able to judge that they knew the true from the false. One said it was inspiration, another that it was imagination, another that it was emotion. This did not help much. The picture was there on the easel, a thing alive; glowing with beauty; we felt its mastery, but we could not tell it.

Is it meant to be told? In the great scheme of things, is it intended that words should spell out the secret? Is there not another language, which cannot be printed,
and is not that the reason it has not been printed? It seems to me this must be true.
Is not the soul of art, translated to the printed page, much like the soul of music when it is transferred to the scroll? It is not there. Only signs and figures are there, not music, not art. It is untranslatable.
One art may serve another art but it cannot convey it.

And so we come to the bottom of it. No one can describe a song so as to make you hear it, to realize it, to feel it; no one can put in prose the poet's words without losing the magic; no one can tell you about, or describe a picture, without leaving out the very thing that makes it a picture.

And as no one can tell you why it is that a melody of Chopin is wonderful, however much they may talk about it, and say this and that, so no one can tell you why Corot's or Inness' pictures are wonderful. It is not explained or told, by saying it is because they are beautiful, or because they inspire emotion or stir the imagination. These things are only results, not the cause.

And so I have come to the very unsatisfactory conclusion that the only way to learn pictures is to study the pictures themselves; that they speak their own language, and there is no other; that one person cannot hand it on to another; that all one ever gets from a picture, as from a poem or other work of art, is the result, the effect of it; that as to the original cause, the thing that gives it life eternal and makes it glorious, it is no more definable or get-table than Divinity itself, of which I sometimes think it partakes. The man who created it can no more tell you what it is than the mother can describe the spirit of the being she has brought into the world.

Art can never be defined; words cannot tell what it is. All we know is, that it is a something that charms and delights those who have eyes to see it, and hearts to receive it.

Very truly yours,

S. L. Kingan.

Tucson, Ariz., Sept. 30, 1915.

Copley Not a Pupil of West.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: I notice in the October Burlington Magazine the statement in a signed article by Lionel Cast that "Copley was a pupil of West." This is incorrect. Copley was in no sense a pupil of West, as Stuart,

Trumbull, Morse, Leslie and Sully certainly were. West sought to "sponsor" Copley's entrance to the R. A. exhibitions, but in this matter he moved only after Sir Joshua Reynolds himself. Before he ever saw West, and it was in London that he first saw him, Copley had to his credit a series of portraits painted in Boston which placed him in a position to teach rather than to receive instruction from Benjamin West.
West himself testified to his countryman's genius by recommending Copley to the King and Queen as the painter qualified to paint the Royal Princesses. The group executed by Copley has been one of the art treasures of Buckingham Palace for more than a century.

Respectfully yours,

James Britton.

N. Y., Oct. 7, 1915.

ART TREASURES IN DEMAND.

"It has been noticed of late as a curious sequel to the war and its economic effects,"
says a Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post, "that the price of Old Masters and valuable works of art has been rising. Moreover business from the dealers' point of view as regards obtaining important pieces for sale has been exceptionally difficult. One might almost conclude from the reluctance evinced by owners to part with their art treasures, and from the high prices they fetch, that there is a great deal more idle money lying about than would be supposed from the outward aspect of the financial markets. Once or twice recently I have dropped in at the Hotel Drouot to see what was doing in the public auction rooms. I have found that the sales, although considerably reduced in volume, are very well attended, and, most surprising of all, one saw the smaller fry among the professional dealers actively bidding for lots of quite inferior interest well up to their full value.

"The causes of these apparent paradoxes are somewhat complex. On the one hand, regarding the higher classes of works of art, I have had the privilege of receiving the personal experience and views of Mr.
J. P. Labbey, one of the leading New York dealers, who is just completing a somewhat disappointing buying trip in Europe.
The opinion in America, he said, was quite unshakable that one had only to come over to Europe with some hundred thousand dollars in cash to be able to buy anything conceivable, up to the Venus de Milo, at a thief's bargain. The actual facts Mr. Labbey has found to be very much the contrary.
Even professional dealers are not the least inclined to liquidate their stocks for anything but fully conventional trade profits.
To cite a specific case. There was one particular picture coming up for sale that Mr. Labbey had marked down as his. He was prepared to go to £2,500 for it, which he considered a high bid even in normal times. It fetched over £3,000. He cabled for instructions, and next day approached the purchaser with an offer of 10 per cent.
higher, which was laughed at. America itself, he asserts, even with its present trade boom, is not yet prepared to pay the prices for pictures Europe is paying today, although the contrary is usually the case.
Private owners of valuable things in England or France do not appear to evince
the smallest desire for converting their treasures into ready cash. Among the reasons for this in the first place is that French art dealers are almost always possessed of ample capital, and are by no means forced to turn over their money rapidly, and of course there is the fact that over here we are not personally so hard pressed for ready cash as some would like to make out.

"These reasons, however, do not explain
the willingness to sink money in purchasing works of art, even at high prices. I have found other suggestions, the most significant of which is that many people with idle capital are endeavoring to ambush it in the tangible form but intangible value of, say, pictures which, while being standard commodities in the markets of art,
would escape, as they think, any compulsory action by governments in borrowing capital for the purposes of war loans. This reason seems to go deeper into the heart of things than any of the others.

CHICAGO.

The Artists' Guild is past the experimental consideration of whether "it pays" to organize and establish an association of local artists with "permanent quarters" as it has "arrived" as a material success, as well as a source of delightful and beneficial comradeship. Its quarters in the Fine Arts Building is a Mecca for art lovers, and a cheerful market place for paintings, sculptures, and hand craft products. Its roster carries sixty-seven regular members, fifty-two associate, and several life members. The Guild will inaugurate its season on Oct. 11, in its quarters, with an exhibition of paintings by members. The Fine Arts Building prize awarded to the Society of Western Artists for several years, has been shifted to the Guild this season and will be awarded to the best painting included in the initial show. The change was made because the Western Artists' Association has left Chicago out of its annual circuit. The Guild's jury includes Lawton Parker, Frederic C. Bartlett, Frank Peyraud, Lucie Hartrath, C. F. Browne, O. D. Grover, all members. There are in the Guild galleries this week three sculptures by Emile Zetter. One is the portrait bust of a child of marvelous delicacy in the execution of the head and shoulders. "The Dancer" in bronze, and "La Source" in marble.

The Art Institute's setting for the annual Arts-Crafts show is a surprise in artistic colorings. The material, especially dyed, for the walls of one gallery has a ground color of gray-tan and over it is scattered foliage and flowers in bright hues. Another gallery is paneled in checkered effects of gold and blue. In the gallery where the sibil Carter laces are installed there are panels with white grounds scattered with black decorations—the products of American Indian craftsmen, and presented by Mrs. Bayard Cutting, Jr.

The examples of early American domestic art are interesting, notably the Mrs. Emma Hodges collection of patch-work quilts in "patterns," one "The Circuit Rider" made of pieces of material presented by the widows, spinsters, and housewives to the circuit parson.

The Nike Club has sold its collection of paintings by local artists, paid its current bills, gathered cash due the organization, closed its affairs, given the $2,000 cash-on-hand to the founding of an art scholarship in the Art Institute School—and disbanded. This scholarship provides not only the student's course, but all the advantages the Institute offers to students, including lectures. The paintings sold at higher prices than were paid for them which demonstrates the general rise in prices for local art. Some of these were "In a Vineyard," by Pauline Palmer; "A Roadway," Anna L. Stacey; "Kelley Lake," Bertha Manzler; "The Golf Cape," Allen Philbrick; "A Street Scene," William Schmedtgen; "When the Sunflowers Bloom," Netta Nixon; "A Boy," A. E. Albright, and "The Subway," A. E. Fleury. The Club was founded by Dr. Frank Gunsaulus and a group of young women in 1887.

Adam Emery Albright recently gave a private view of his work during the past summer amid Pennsylvania's wildest scenery, in his studio at Hubbard Woods. The paintings are characteristic and picture children with landscape settings.

Helen Parker has been appointed assistant instructor at the Art Institute for parties and individuals touring the galleries. She will also inaugurate a private class for children in the "Appreciation of Art." Mrs. Herman J. Hall remains in the Institute as chief instructor. Two or three more docents will be added to the staff on account of increasing requests for qualified guides by visitors touring the galleries.

The Art Institute school will soon begin the publication of a magazine with the title, "The Art Student," devoted to art and art news, applied art and all industrial art, and to local art interests. It will be liberal in policy. Dean Keane reports larger classes than ever. The mural department has commissions sufficient to cover a year's work by the classes.

FAKE ANTIQUES THEIR TOPIC.

A conference of U. S. appraisers, at the Public Stores Wednesday, decided that stricter examinations were necessary when "antiques" are entered, claimed to be 100 years old, as free of duty. It is alleged that large quantities of "fake" antiques have been brought in, especially pictures, bronzes, marbles, curios and furniture. Assistant Appraiser James Fay of the Art Division declared that the Govt. was being robbed of thousands by false representations.

SALE OF NAPOLEON PRINTS.

Stan. V. Henkel's of 1304 Walnut St., Phila., will sell on the afternoons of Oct. 20 and 21 a remarkable collection of engraved portraits of Napoleon and members of his family, together with scenes from his life, there being a number of battle scenes, the whole the property of a Southern gentleman.

PHILADELPHIA.

The season of local picture shows was inaugurated Oct. 2 by the Press View of seventy oils at the Art Club, the work of C. Arnold Slade. The canvases vary in size from several square yards in area to small sketches of a few square inches of painted surface, but all are none the less worthy of attention as giving evidence of a remarkable degree of versatility of talent combined with excellent technical facility. The largest of these works, such as the one entitled "Christ and the Money Changers" and "Le Depart," the latter an incident of life of the fishermen at Etaples, crowded with well drawn and colorful figures, suggest in a certain measure the conventional academic exhibition canvas, yet they are well composed, conscientious and carefully studied. A note of touching pathos is sounded in the effective canvas, entitled "His Comrade's Story," already reproduced in a previous number of "The American Art News."

The artist makes a powerful appeal to the religious sentiment evoked by the tremendous struggle for life now proceeding in France by his well conceived picture, "Come Unto Me All Ye that Labor and Are Heavy Laden and I Will Give You Rest," in which the appearance of the figure of Our Lord on a corpse-strewn battlefield forms the motif of the design.

The subjects of some of the moderate sized works are drawn from scenes about Etaples, where the artist spent some time recently within sound of the cannonading at Arras, only thirty miles away. The gorgeous color pageant of the Orient plays its part also in the variegated display in sketches of Tangier, Jerusalem, Stamboul and Biskra. A number of heads of local types peculiar to the far East give additional interest to the show and finally we must not forget to record a number of charming notes of the picturesque in architecture shown in the artist's sketches of canals, time-stained palaces and arched bridges of old Venice.

Some time in the coming season there will be held here, in a gallery not yet decided upon an exhibition of the works of Alexander Robinson, well known as a water color and pastel painter of decided force and original methods. Letters have been received from him in Paris stating that he has been obliged to discontinue his painting classes on the Continent and will be coming to America for an exhibition tour.

Important additions to the collections of material in the Egyptian section of the Museum of the University of Pa. have been made possible through the efforts of Mr. Clarence S. Fisher, curator of this department and now directing the excavations on the site of ancient Memphis, undertaken by the Eckley B. Coxe Expedition. Before beginning work at Memphis, a site was secured, through the Department of Antiquities of the Egyptian Government, on the Royal Cemeteries, surrounding the pyramids at Gizeh. Discoveries made here, in the course of six weeks' work of excavation, include an offering table, bearing inscriptions containing the names of Khufu and Khepra, builders of the first and second pyramids and of a third mysterious King Dedefra, unknown as yet to antiquarians. The digging at Memphis has been proceeding since the 13th of March but now temporarily halted on account of climatic conditions will be resumed this Autumn. Numerous small articles, consisting of about four thousand specimens of scarabs, amulets, gold and silver rings, necklaces and other objects of personal adornment, a painted statuette and a number of sculptured heads executed in sand and lime stone, were unearthed and will form an interesting ensemble when exhibited with the famous Sphinx of Rameses II, already an attraction of the Museum and the subject of a former article in the AMERICAN ART NEWS. These objects were found in the ruins of the Temple of Seti I, ruler of Egypt at the period when Memphis was the Metropolis of this part of the world.

A recent acquisition also is a series of eight Chinese paintings of the Sung dynasty, among them a landscape by Hsu Shich'ang on a piece of silk 8 ft. 8 in. by 8 ft. 5 in. and three remarkable stone statuettes of the Wei and Tang dynasties. Mr. Martin Van Straaten, of London, who lost his life in the Lusitania disaster, loaned to the Museum before his departure four Seventeenth Century tapestries, representing Europe, Asia, Africa and America.

Dr. Warren P. Laird, Professor of Architecture at the University, has been chosen as the advisor of the State Meade Monument Commission in charge of the erection of a statue of the hero of Gettysburg, in Washington.

The officers of the Pa. Society of Miniature painters will open a school of miniature painting this Autumn, as owing to the successful annual displays of the Society at the Academy the demand for such a school has made it a necessity.

BOSTON.

Brookline, that residential suburb of Boston representing—in its own estimation at least—the best and brightest of Boston's brains, is tremendously pleased with itself at present, as it is to erect a soldiers' monument. Edward C. Potter is the sculptor, not of the Boston group, and his selection proves the truly conservative mind of Brookline's noblest, for "a Prophet is not without honor save in his own country," and therefore why not go farther—and fare worse, possibly?

The design for the group shows a mounted bugler reining up his horse, and sounding the call to arms. Mr. Potter was the sculptor of the chariot horses on the Minnesota State Capitol, the Custer Statue at Monroe, Mich., the roses of the Devens Monument in Worcester, and the Hooker Monument at the State House, Boston.

A firm of well-known local art dealers announces a second annual exhibition for art students—to open Oct. 29. Here is a change for the novice, it would seem, to make her debut without expense and under favorable conditions. But a clause or two in these conditions alters the plan, slightly. The "art student" must be registered in one of the regular art schools. Now, to the layman it would seem that any person admitting herself to be an amateur and also a student should be eligible for this exhibition. Then the fact that graduates of an art school, if they had not been graduated before 1914 are also eligible, allows a class of real professional workers to enter if they care to, and so reduces the amount of space for the real art student, as generally understood by that term.

A criticism, too good not to be true, is the following: "Frank B. Sanborn, portrayed by one of the race of whom he has been a constant friend, invites his many admirers to the Copley Gallery, Newbury St., to see this latest likeness that by Cloyd L. Boybin. This young painter who has been studying in Boston in the face of great obstacles, has always shown a 'terrible verity' in his portraits that augurs well for his future accomplishment. . . . He has depicted the Concord sage seated in a chair with cyma top, and urn finals. The distinguished sitter wears a black coat and a tie, inclined to ride upward at a tilt which one unacquainted with the man might call ministerial. The head shows much veritism and some vitality; this painter is gradually acquiring the latter quality."

NASHVILLE (TENN.)

The Nashville Art Association co-operated with the Art Department of the Tenn. State Fair Home and Educational Section in a very broad and liberal way, Sept. 20-25.

The Association contributed four exhibits as follows: 1st—Exhibit from Art in Trades Club of N. Y. City, as arranged by Mr. Frank Alvah Parsons, President N. Y. School of Fine Art and Applied Design. 2nd—Collection of Pictures in Color suitable for Schoolroom Decoration from Congressional Library. 3rd—Photographs of Model American Cities from N. Y. Architectural League. 4th—Collection of Plans for Rural Homes from Minnesota State Fair, through courtesy of Maurice I. Flagg, Chairman of Minnesota State Art Commission.

The Art Association sent out Travelling Art Exhibits last year during the scholastic term in Tennessee.

Many visitors from over the State to the Fair expressed their appreciation of such work and studied the splendid collection on view with interest.

"The Art in Trades," and "Pictures Suitable for Schoolrooms" are now placed in the Rotunda of the new High School, where they will remain for ten days.

The Tenn. State Fair Board of Managers awarded a Special Premium to each of the visiting exhibits.

The Tenn. State Fair Board also intends to do for Tenn. artists a work similar to that which Minnesota's great Fair is doing for her artists—although in different degrees—as Tenn. has not Minnesota's liberal art appropriation.

The Nashville Art Association, by its co-operation with the State Fair, State Normal School, City Schools exhibitions of oils, watercolors, crafts, murals, architecture, etc., is proving the primal factor in the re-awakening of art in Tenn.

The schedule for the Autumn, Winter and Spring Exhibitions, Lectures and Musicales will be announced this month.

Through the courtesy of the American Federation of Arts, the N. Y. exhibits were secured for the Tenn. State Fair.

The collection of Paintings, Miniatures and Sculpture by Tennessee Artists made a splendid showing.

J. W. Russwurm, Director of the Fair, provided excellent lighting facilities for the Art Department that made the gallery very beautiful.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

"The Galleries of the Exposition," by Eugen Neuhaus-Paul Elder and Co., San Francisco. $1.25.

This, a companion volume to the same author's "Art of the Exposition," favorably reviewed in the August issue of the Art News, is a well written, more or less critical review of the paintings, statuary, and graphic arts display in the Exposition art galleries at San Francisco. It is dedicated in most flattering and hyper-eulogistic words to the Fine Arts Director, John E. D. Trask, "Untiring worker and able executive."

The author states in his introduction that "It was a vast undertaking to gather such numbers of pictures together. (The reason for which Mr. Pennell explained in the September ART NEWS) but the reward was great—not only to have gratified one's sense of beauty, but to have contributed toward a broader civilization, on the Pacific coast specifically, and for the world in general, besides."

He also says that "The subject of the appreciation of pictures from a theoretical point of view is not exactly the purpose of this book. What I should like to do is to bring the public a little closer to the artists' point of view, through the discussion of the merit of certain notable works of art."

Beginning with a chapter on Retrospective Art, the author discusses certain pictures in the Foreign Sections somewhat discursively, and then devotes himself to a long review of the United States section. The work is well and intelligently written—will recall to those who have visited the galleries their general effect and many details, to those who are still expectant visitors will be an excellent and illuminating guide book and to those who may not see the Exposition at all will afford perhaps the only intelligent far off view of the galleries.

Winslow Homer by Kenyon Cox—Privately printed, in an edition of 300 copies,—Frederic Fairchild Sherman. New York.

In this beautifully printed and discriminatingly and finely illustrated little volume, Kenyon Cox gives an appreciation of the art of the fourth of the quartet of modern American Masters in Painting of which George Inness, Homer Martin and A. H. Wyant are the other members.

Franklin's acknowledging, in his brief preface, his debt to Mr. W. H. Downes for his biographical data, taken from the latter's exhaustive work on "The Life and Works of Winslow Homer," to John W. Everts' introductory note to the same work, and to Homer's own letters; Mr. Cox states that the interpretation he has put on the facts gathered from these sources and for his attempt at a critical estimate of Homer's work, he is alone responsible. In his lucid attractive style the author, after a review of the artist's curious life, half hermit at the last, gives a charming and, it would seem, a just estimate of Winslow Homer's art. He well says, commenting upon the slow development of this art that "If Homer had died at fifty he would be remembered as an artist of great promise and as the author of a few pictures, in which promise had become performance. It is because he lived to be 74 that his career is the great and rounded whole we know."

Mr. Cox traces the development of Homer's art through the early materialistic stages, the years in England which produced the Tynemouth series, the Adirondack and West Indian watercolor outputs, and the last and strongest Maine Coast series.

His explanation of why Homer worked better in the lighter medium of watercolor, as opposed to oil, is most interesting and instructive. The brochure is a most valuable contribution to American art criticism.

So well chosen are the illustrations, and so well done, that with them, the reader can follow clearly the stages of the artist's development. The color plate of the artist's Metropolitan Museum picture, "The Gulf Stream," which serves as the frontispiece, is an unusually faithful reproduction.

Lithography and Lithographers, by Elizabeth Robins Pennell and Joseph Pennell, president of the Senefelder Club.—The Macmillan Company, N. Y., $4.50. These chapters on the history of a fascinating art, for some decades in desuetude, by Mrs. Pennell, together with the descriptions and technical explanations, of her husband are of great value and interest. Authors better qualified for their task could hardly be found.

The volume which is fully illustrated with large plates traverses a wide field, and will take its place as a standard authority. It treats of Alois Senefelder, the Cellini of the art, of its birth in France and great period of floraison there, of the early English exponents, of the revivals in both countries and its further spread. Then comes the technical and critical introduction, the descriptions of the stone and metals, the materials, tools and methods of work; etc.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Works by Roll and Legros.

The collection of the life work of Alfred Philippe Roll, who may be styled the official painter of the French Republic, lately shown at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo, and then noticed at length throughout the country and in the Art News, is now on view to Sept. 16, with a remarkable display of etchings by the French Rembrandt in that line, the late Alphonse Legros, at the galleries of M. Knoedler & Co., 556
Fifth Ave.

In the framework of his art, in his nude and other studies in pastel, crayon and sanguine M. Roll is altogether charming. A number of the earlier pictures, portraits
and studies are sober, virile and vibrant,
but some of the later work when official honors and orders began to fall is coarse, though often effective, and theatric. In portraiture, however, M. Roll is facile princeps. He paints his subject for all it is worth realistically and puts air all around it. Witness the portraits of M. Faure with the boy, President Fallieres and Leon Bourgeois, the "Lady with the Fur Toque" and the "Lady with the Poppies," the two last exceptionally fine in quality.

A masterly composition is the sketch for the picture, "War—Forward March," and largely treated the huge "Trotting—Child on Horseback" from the Salon of 1888. Delightful are the two female figures in "The Trojans at Carthage" from the Salon of 1904 and capital the man on horseback on "A Summer Day." Two examples of official work are the sketch of the laying of the first stone of the bridge of Alexander III and that for the Gobelin tapestry of the Argentine liberator. The red robed female representing "The Young Republic," loaned by the Luxembourg is rather commonplace which is not the case in the small work
where she is represented throwing flowers.

As to the etchings M. Legros was a master of line in both portrait and landscape, and no lover of black and white should fail to see the collection.

Early Season Show at Montross'.

The opening display at the Montross Gallery, No. 550 Fifth Ave., briefly noticed last week, is attracting deserved attention. Following his departure of last season in the exploitation of the "new movement" in art,
Mr. Montross has assembled a representative and interesting number of oils, drawings, pastels and watercolors by some of the leaders of the new movement in this country, and others of the older and, up till recently, more conservative painters, who have been influenced by these leaders here
and more especially by those abroad.

Eugene Speicher, for example, shows a half length man's portrait, strong in color and expression, which evidences close study of Cezanne, and is a far cry from his accustomed finely colored, smoother, earlier work. Even W. L. Lathrop, the idyllic landscapist, is found "in this gallery"—although his example "By the River" does not show any marked departure from his accustomed charming vein.

George Bellows has two virile works—a sombre, almost too black presentment of a beetling cliff "The North Country" and a high-keyed well-drawn half length seated portrait of a girl—"Anne." There is fine and rich color quality in Edward Gross-man's broadly-painted "Landscape," evidently done in Canada, and attention was called last week to Allen Tucker's joyous, clear-aired "Cornfield," flooded with keen sunlight—a delightful work.

Van Dearing Perrine shows more of his landscapes with figures in broken vivid color
—such a contrast to his earlier gloomy, if strong, Palisade canvases, and Putnam Brinley in "Peonies" shows another colorful alluring work.

From Arthur Wesley Dow comes a coast
scene, lovely in color and with fine distance
"Under the Cliff," and Guy Du Bois sends two of his amusing satirical small figure compositions "After Dinner Speaker," and
"Mr. and Mrs. Middleclass." Du Bois is fast earning the title of the modern American Gavarni. Randall Davey with a "Portrait of a Young Woman," good in color and expression, and Jerome Myers, with a characteristic fantasy complete the list of the more conservative older artists represented in oils.

Of the advanced men Thomas H. C. Benton with what he calls "A Figure Organization," rich in color, at least, if somewhat wierd in idea, Amos W. Engle with a so-called "Lullaby," better termed a "Puzzle," K.
Gibran—after Arthur Davies, in a portrayal of two consumptive Venuses entitled "Dead Memories," C. Bertram Hartman, in a queer but effective study of a red curtain called
"Mme. Fashion," A. A. Nankivell in a cubistic "Fete," Walter Pach in two impressions of an Italian town cathedral and a "Rainstorm," James Preston with a still life, and Morton L. Schamberg, C. H. Sheeler, Jr., Joseph Stella, C. H. Walther and E. Ambrose Webster in wierd arrangements, are to the fore.

Of the advanced men George F. Of seems to have more sanity in his painting and drawing than his fellows.

The feature of the interesting array of drawings, pastels and watercolors, is Maurice Sterne's 12 color drawings in tempera of Miss Mabel Dodge, who was evidently a most obliging summer model, and whose graceful figure, gowned in summery attire,
and expressive features, he has drawn with sympathy and skill. The foreshortening strength and yet grace of line of these studies deserves high praise.

Some of the artists mentioned above in the review of the work in oils, are equally well represented in the drawings, etc., notably Putnam Brinley, A. W. Dow, K. Gibran, Jerome Myers, Geo. F. Of, Walter Pach,
Allen Tucker and Joseph Stella.

Works by Folinsbee and Leith-Ross.

There are now on view at the Louis
Katz Galleries, 103 W. 74th St., to Oct. 21,
a number of landscapes and an off shore scene or two by John H. Folinsbee and Harry Leith-Ross. Folinsbee, who wields
a vigorous and artistic brush and makes every stroke tell, has great simplicity of method and a good eye for the picturesque. There is a striking view of the Poughkeepsie Bridge in winter and a most attractive view in "Early Morning, November" of the edge of a mountain village.
A fine old farmhouse is shown in moonlight in summer and with sunlight and noon shadows playing over it. A fresh breeze blows "Off Pilot Island;" "Cloud Shadows" fall over a rolling country, there is a "Winter Haze" over snow.

L. W. Leith-Ross is particularly happy in his snow scenes, in his cow pastures, and his old farm houses and barns. He has fine light and greens in "The Cow Pasture, Morning" and an excellent effect in "Old Barns in Snow." Attractive is the brookside at the "End of Winter," while faithful portraiture and good color are to be found in "Dan Magill's House" and "Old Pennsylvania House."

Etchings and Drawings by Roth.

Ernest D. Roth, who shows three score and ten etchings and drawings, to Oct. 23,
at Frederick Keppel and Co.'s, 4 E. 39
St., is a capital draughtsman and a vigorous and picturesque etcher, particularly well equipped to interpret architecture. He has found his subjects in Italy and France, and especial interest is furnished by the placing side by side in several instances, of the original drawing and the etching made from
it. In his effects of light and shade Mr.
Roth often recalls Meryon, while his handling of line is summary and effective, a maximum of effect being produced by a minimum of execution. Witness "Amiens," "Gisors" and the "Pont Neuf." Most attractive are the aerial views such as that looking down on "Assissi."

School Art League's Annual Show.

Interior decorations costume illustrations,
drawings of birds and animals and embroideries will be shown in the Fine Arts Galleries, 215 West 57th Street, October 12-17, from 2 to 6 P.M., by the School Art League, which conducts an annual exhibition of the work of the high school pupils.
Work of graduates who have held fellowships in the School League will also be shown.

Wenger's Stage Settings.

At the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., John Wenger, who runs to the fanciful, decorative and fantastic, and often gets a great deal out of the combination, is showing a number of his "Modern Stage Settings," as well as several pictures, some of which are familiar. Mr. Wenger's idea is to build up a scene without drops or flies,
the effects of the moulded foregrounds (and backgrounds being softened by gauze), and the whole suitably illuminated. The results are attractive, the models including "Oriental,"
a "Music Room," "Spring," "Pier

Elverhot Colony Show.

An exhibition of jewelry and silverware
by the Elverhot Colony of Artists, at Milton-on-the-Hudson, is open to Oct. 16 at the rooms of the National Society of Craftsmen, 119 E. 19 St., from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M.

Paterson Textile Display.

The First National Silk Convention will be held in Paterson, N. J., Oct. 12-31, as already announced. This convention has been organized by the Chamber of Commerce in Paterson, and the local silk associations, with the co-operation of the Silk Association of America. A Committee of Honor and an Executive Committee are being formed, including many prominent people whose names will be later announced.

The exhibition will be of the highest artistic and scientific standard, will comprise about 250 specimens and will be divided into the following sections: 1—Primitive Period. Hellenistic and Coptic tapestries from Egypt, 4-7th Cent. A. D. Decorations of garments. Entire garments. Silk brocades manufactured at Alexandria. 2—Early Medieval Textiles. Byzantine fabrics after Sassanian models. Early Italian and Sicilian Weavings (Palermo), German textiles (School of Regensburg). Early Orient
Persian textiles from Ishahan Tabris 6—Gothic Period. The transformation of style in fabrics through Chinese influence.
Italian textiles, especially from Lucca.
Oriental textiles in Egypt, Syria and Persia
under Chinese influence. (XIV Century.).
4—Pre-renaissance and Renaissance. XV
Century. Venetian and Genoese velvets (gold and red) with huge pomegranate patterns. Silk weavings of the same period.
XVI Century. Italian and Spanish Dam-asks, velvets, etc. 5—Orient XV-XVII Century. Turkish gold brocades from Brussa. Turkish velvets from Scutari.
Persian textiles from Ishahan Tabris. 4—
France. Velvets, damasks. Louis XIV, XV and XVI brocades. Italy. XVII and XVIII Century textiles, especially Venetian and Genoese. Far East. China and Japan. 8—America. Peruvian Tapestry
work.

It is to be remembered that a similar movement was started fifty years ago by the Chamber of Commerce, Lyons, France.
This led to the foundation of the famous Musée des Tissus (Textile Museum) in Lyons, and it may be that the attempt in Paterson may lay the foundation of an institution which will develop education and rouse an interest in textile art in the greatest center of the silk industry in the United States.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS

An exhibition of the work of American women artists is on at the galleries of the Milwaukee Art Society.

A memorial window to Julia S. Chapman was unveiled at the Classon Ave. Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, Oct. 3. The subject is a symbolic figure of Faith and the window was designed and executed by the Tiffany Studios.

Clifford W. Ashley, a pupil of the late Honard Pyle, and a marine painter of New Bedford, Mass., is exhibiting at the Hotel du Pont in W. Pyle's native city, Wilmington, Del., a collection of oils and water colors illustrating the whaling industry and the coast and island of Jamaica.

A benefit performance for French and Belgian artists, musicians, painters, sculptors and actors, rendered destitute by the war, is to be held on or about Nov. 10 at the Metropolitan Opera House. M. Capilani, jeune premier at the Comedie Francaise has arrived to make the preliminary arrangements, is commissioned by M. Dalimier, the French Minister of Fine Arts, and also represents the Societe Fraternelle des Artistes, to which organization the proceeds of the benefit will go.

Julian Scott's "Distant View of Moki Pueblo," which was cut from its frame in the Hemenway collection in the Peabody Museum, Hartford, two months ago, has been returned. It was taken by a young man of a prominent family, and sold to a man who gave it as a wedding present. Assistant curator Willoughby saw the picture and identified it.

The October exhibitions at the Detroit Museum include works by Everett L. Warner, and a loan collection of pictures owned by Mr. E. L. Ford, of Detroit, which includes examples of English, Dutch and Barbizon masters.

Luis Graner, the Spanish artist, who, after spending part of last winter in New Orleans, went to California, is arranging to show the results of his trip at the Delgado Museum, New Orleans.

The Phila. Art Alliance to promote the arts of music, painting, the drama, sculpture and interpretive dancing, was chartered on Sept. 28. The membership is by invitation and there is to be a club house.

De Witt C. Lockman recently completed a portrait of Miss Howard, formerly of the Century Opera Co.

Miss Helen Parker has been appointed assistant museum instructor at the Chicago Institute.

Mrs. Edward C. Gale's purchase of eight of the Morgan porcelains from the Duveen Brothers has been presented to the Minneapolis Museum.

Ogonquit has a rival. The members of the Palette and Chisel Club, of Chicago, have been painting an undraped model in the woods of Lake County, Ill.

The Mary B. Blair collection of Medieval and Renaissance, lent by Mrs. Chauncey J. Blair, is now on exhibition at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo.

A collection of Navahoe blankets and Mexican serapes owned by the Museum of Natural History is on view at the Municipal Art Gallery, Irving Place at 16 St.

Mr. George Leland Hunter's lecture promenades on tapestries, rugs and furniture at the Metropolitan Museum will begin the week of November 8. Mr. Hunter will also give in the class room of the Museum, opening on the afternoon of November 9, an illustrated course of 18 talks on the "History of Civilization as Manifested in Art."

PITTSBURGH ARTISTS' JURY.

The jury selected by the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh for their 6th Annual Exhibition at the Carnegie Institute consists of W. M. Chase, C. W. Hawthorne, W. S. Robinson, G. W. Sotter, Margaret V. C. Whitehead and A. W. Sparks with James Bonar, president of the Associated Artists as chairman. The jury will meet Oct. 15.

OCTOBER ART MAGAZINES.

The International Studio for October has a good Autumn table of contents, of which the most interesting are Francine Almond's "Impressions of Brittany," delightfully illustrated with sketches in colored chalks by Douglas Almond, an appreciation of "Three New York Painters," Robert Henri, George Luke and George Bellows, by John Cournos, one on Canadian artists and the war by H. Mortimer Lamb, and an illuminating critical discourse by Christian Brinton on the Foreign painting at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

There are the usual good illustrations. Arts and Decoration for October has for its cover design a reproduction in brown tones of a Degas ballet girl picture. Guy Pene Du Bois has an essay on "Nationalism in Art" as exemplified by the Boston group of painters, which "is wrote scarcastical," and William B. McCormick discusses the work of "Four New York artists in a Newport chapel—namely Durr Friedly, Paul Manship, Eleanor Deming and Helen Keeling Mills.

Childe Hassam is the subject of the "Who's Who in Art" monthly sketch.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Messrs. Henry and Joseph Duveen sailed Tuesday on the Nieuw Amsterdam. They stated, in an interview, that they were going abroad to complete an important art deal, to visit both Paris and London and return in mid-November.

Mr. E. F. Bonaventure is to show at his galleries from Oct. 16-23 a collection of XVIII Century French and English engravings.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland F. Knoedler are back in town after a summer spent at the White Sulphur Springs, Va., and Atlantic City.

Mr. George W. Stetson, has leased his residence at 26 E. 45 St, for ten years to Mr. Ben-Simon, a dealer in antique furniture. Mr. Stetson has been asking $10,000 a year rental.

Mr. George Durand-Ruel is expected from Paris at the galleries, No. 12 E. 57 St., late this month. The many friends of M. Durand-Ruel, Sr. will be glad to know that he is in excellent health and very optimistic as to art business conditions and the result of the war.

Mr. James P. Labbey of Kleinberger & Co., who returned from Paris last week said in an interview, "I expected to find many art works on the market at war time prices, but was surprised to find everywhere both dealers and private collectors asking more for paintings than ever before, and that no one seemed at all anxious to sell. There is no stampede in the art world on the other side, but on the contrary, the war seems to have increased the tenacity with which Europeans are holding on to their art. This may be caused by the spirit which the war has developed in the people. I have found that they do not want to part with their pictures even for prices in excess of those that prevailed before August, 1914."

Mr. Herbert Labbey, of Arthur Tooth & Sons, of London, arrived from London last week and brought a number of important canvases.

Mr. A. H. Bahr, who for two seasons made successful exhibitions of oriental art at the Montross Galleries, 550 Fifth Ave., arrived Thursday on the New York.

Mr. Louis Ralston, of the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., returned from Europe on the New York Thursday.

Mr. Martin Birnbaum, of the Berlin Photographic Co., announces a most interesting series of exhibitions for this season, in spite of the War. The first five will consist of the following: Original paintings and recent decorations by Leon Bakst, who is coming to this country, in person, to superintend the settings at the Metropolitan Opera House, original paintings, graphic work and applied art by Emil Orlik, the work of Stephen Haweis in Fiji and the Bahamas, and the first New York exhibition devoted solely to the new works of Paul Manship.

Late this month there will be an exhibition of oils, watercolors and graphic work of Anne Goldthwaite. An international exhibition of a most interesting nature is also being arranged.

COLLECTORS' MARKS.

A new handbook on Collectors' Marks, to replace the nowadays wholly incomplete work of L. Fagan, is in course of preparation. Thanks to extensive research and the many notes kindly put at the disposal of the compiler by some friends, it has already been possible to triple Fagan's work.

The needed material, however, is so widely diffused and so many private collections are still not known, that more general assistance would be very welcome, so that the work may be brought to the highest degree of completeness. The compiler, Mr. Fritz Lugt, will therefore be grateful for the sending of any little-known marks and the identification of unsolved marks to his address in Holland: Van Baerlestraat 10, Amsterdam. Every collector is invited to send him original impressions of his own stamp, or tracings of other collectors' marks found on prints or drawings. All accompanying explanatory information concerning the personality of the collectors and characteristics of their collections will be valuable.

The Art Alliance of America will hold a public exhibition to open in the last week of November, extending to the middle of December, of "Art Associated with the Child."

It is planned to include any phase of art expression relating to children, such as Portraiture, Sculpture, Miniature, Interior Decoration, Furniture, Theatrical Arrangements, Books and Plates, China, Pottery, Dolls, Toys, Games, Fancy Costumes, Play Rooms and Play Houses, and Table Utensils.

The idea originated with W. Francklyn Paris, the architect. Already several museums and institutions are asking for the exhibition after its ending in N. Y.

The locality is still uncertain, but may be the former Knickerbocker Club building at 32 St. and Fifth Ave., or possibly the Colony Club.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney is doing a mantel, several architects are planning play houses and numerous interior decorations.

Mr. Carton Moorepark is repeating the frieze he did for Lady Warwick's nursery, while Mr. Harrie T. Lindeberg, the architect, is designing the room for it.

DIRECTOR WYER RESIGNS.

Mr. Raymond Wyer, director of the Hackley Art Gallery, gave written notice to the Muskegon, Mich., Board of Education, at its meeting Oct. 9, that this was the last year he would serve the city and its art interests. His letter was virtually a resignation to take effect in July, 1916.

"Mr. Wyer's prospective quitting of Muskegon," says the Muskegon Daily Times, "is another result of the niggardly policy of the Board, affecting not only the Mackley Art Gallery, but the Public Library and the entire school system, and is a protest at the attitude of the board as is shown by his letter, which follows:

"Gentlemen:—Will you kindly accept this intimation that at the expiration of my contract I shall not submit myself for reappointment. I feel that it is only fair to inform you now of my intention in order that there may be as much time as possible to make other arrangements.

"The opposition of certain members of the Board of Trustees began nearly two years ago by their refusal to act on the report of the Art Gallery Committee of the board recommending the purchase of our Whistler painting. Since then, this attitude has been pursued more or less consistently; first by all by opposing the publication of the museum bulletin 'Aesthetics,' followed among other things by a refusal to sanction a budget for the running of the gallery, culminating in an entire restriction of the continuation of that work for which I was originally engaged, namely the formation of the permanent collection.

"This condition, for some time past, has made me feel that I could not continue to occupy a position in which so much antagonism is encountered and where little apparent confidence in my judgment is entertained.

"Believing that this opposition has tended in a marked degree to minimize the good work of this gallery and that it will prevent me from carrying out that work creditably to the institution and to myself, I consider I have no alternative but to take this action and to give room to a successor who will be more adaptable or more in sympathy with the wishes of the board. Believe me, gentlemen.

"Yours faithfully,

"RAYMOND WYER, Director."

"When seen at the Gallery," says the Muskegon Times, "Mr. Wyer said he had no statement to make concerning his communication to the Board of Education, as it was self-explanatory. Questioned as to his future plans he said he had none formulated definitely, although he had received several excellent offers to go to galleries in large cities.

Some Local Comment.

"Mr. Wyer has been head of the Hackley Art Gallery for the last three and one-half years, and has filled the place in a manner that has won him high praise both in Muskegon and throughout the United States in art circles. His distinguished services to the city as a curator have won him recognition in the principal art publications of the country and newspapers that specialize on art subjects. His purchases of pictures have been made with such rare discernment and discretion that the Hackley Art Gallery now has a unique distinction among art galleries large and small in America, and is recognized and listed with the great galleries of Europe and South America, an honor won by no other gallery of its size in this country. There are only a few galleries of the first class in the United States that have collections to compare with the one here in representation and catholicity.

"Mr. Wyer has been noted as a lecturer on art and sociology at art museums and at universities, and has been a prolific contributor to the art literature of the day. Since his appointment here in 1912, he organized in the same year an exhibition of contemporary European and American artists, and in 1913 an exhibition of contemporary American artists, visiting Michigan cities.

"He assisted in organizing the Michigan State Federation of Art in 1912 and last year he was a judge of the Fine Arts Department of the Royal Canadian Industrial Exhibition. He is a member of the Artists' Society and Langham Club, London; the Cliff Dwellers, Chicago; the Archaeological Institute of America, American Association of Museums and chairman of the exhibition committee of the Michigan State Federation of Art. He is the author of 'The Artist's Conception of Art,' 'Modern Etchers and Their Work,' 'An Art Museum, Its Concept and Conduct' and 'Art and Discrimination.'

"For Muskegon to lose the services of such a man will appear a pity to the people of the city. It follows in the train of resignations from the school board of its secretary, Frank Hubbard Smith, one of the most capable and progressive of its members, who gave the city years of capable and earnest service, but who recently found conditions too intolerable to remain. It also follows wholesale resignations of some of the best teachers in the public schools of the city, most of whom left the city to take better positions in other cities * * *"

WANT TO BAR MATERNITY

Mr. J. E. D. Trask, Chief of the Pan-Pacific Department of Fine Arts, has been having trouble with the Woman's Board of the Exposition but has met the attack boldly and repulsed it. The women object to Bela Utiz' charcoal sketch in the Annex to the Fine Arts Palace, called "The Expectant Mother" and asked its removal on the ground that they had received several letters, evidently from non-expectant mothers, protesting that the display of the picture is an affront to taste and morality. Mr. Trask replied that the work was selected by an international jury as an example of the best Hungarian art of the period, and that to remove it would be unfair to both jury and artist. He also permits himself to observe that the Woman's Board should not allow its opinion to be biased by letters from persons whose artistic judgment is unknown to it, and asks it to have an opinion based upon that of

AN ALTHORP REMBRANDT SOLD.

The cable brings the news of the sale by Earl Spencer, from his famous collection at Althorp House, of Rembrandt's portrait of his son, Titus, which is reproduced on this page. The price is variously reported to have been $175,000 and $75,000. It was thought probable that it was bought for Mr. Henry C. Frick but he has denied this and Mr. Colnaghi has said in London he thought the picture would stay in England. If the work has been sold, which some of the trade are inclined to doubt, it is quite probable however that it will eventually be added to a certain collection in this country.

A WEST FOR CHICAGO.

One of the finest examples of the religious paintings of Benjamin West which has come into public notice in America, is the picture recently purchased by the Chicago Art Institute from the Vose Gallery, Boston, entitled, "He that is without sin

ARTIST GRUPPE WINS SUIT.

An unusual and most interesting suit and one of much importance to the art trade regarding the validity of a large picture, attributed to Mauve, conducted in the U. S. District Court at Philadelphia this week was concluded on Wednesday.

The defendant, Mr. Joseph T. Kinsley the well-known Phila. collector and President of the Phila. Taxicab Co., some time ago commissioned the equally well-known artist Charles P. Gruppe, whose patron he had been, to secure for him on a visit Mr. Gruppe purposed making two years ago to Holland, in which country he painted many years, a representative example of Anton Mauve for $5,000. This commission Mr. Gruppe claimed to have executed by the securing from Mr. Flierman of The Hague, and bringing to this country of a large canvas.

The picture is 32 by 42 inches and shows a group of cattle resting and standing on the borders of the Rhyn. On the back of the canvas is an alleged authentication of the work, a translation of which, according to Mr. Ralph N. Kellan, counsel for Mr. Gruppe, reads: "This painting, landscape with standing and resting cattle on the borders of the Rhyn has been painted by me. A. Mauve."

While visiting the Flierman galleries in The Hague, Gruppe saw the painting in dispute and upon inquiry ascertained that it could be purchased for $5,000. He had a photograph taken and sent to Kinsley with full details. It is charged that Kinsley answered and said he would take it. The photograph was then authenticated by Boussod, Valadon & Co., art dealers, The Hague, and sent to Kinsley. The latter then wrote to Gruppe, it is alleged, with instructions to ship the work over. The painting subsequently arrived here and was sent to Kinsley's office in Locust street.

A short time later a controversy arose over the payment for the picture, with the result that it was sent to Gruppe's studio in New York by the defendant. Suit was then brought by Gruppe against Kinsley to recover the purchase price. After a careful study of the technique, an inspection of the work and a comparison of it with other paintings of Mauve in the Metropolitan Museum and the Widener and other Phila. galleries, Mr. Kinsley declared he was convinced that the painting is not a Mauve, but a copy. Even if it is an original his counsel declared that under the agreement with Gruppe the defendant had the right to reject it if he so desired.

Conflicting testimony was adduced by both of the litigants.

Anton Albers, a Dutch artist, resident in Phila., was called as an art "expert" by Kinsley. Albers said that he studied carefully the details of the painting, and in no instance did he find the characters on the canvas true to nature. Mauve's forte, he said, was in making his subjects true to nature.

Issue with the opinion of Albers was taken by Mr. Charles F. Haseltine, artist and art dealer. Mr. Haseltine said that as a lover of art, and as a dealer, he had carefully observed the work of Mauve, and in his opinion, the painting on exhibition in court was that of the famous artist.

According to Mr. Gruppe, the painting he obtained for Kinsley was painted in 1867, when the artist was 22 years of age.

After Judge Dickinson instructed the jury that it would not have to consider whether or not the painting was the work of Mauve, it retired and later brought in a verdict of $5,308.33 against Mr. Kinsley.

The judge explained that the jury merely had to consider whether an agreement to purchase the picture had been entered into by Kinsley. The verdict includes interest on the full amount of the claim.

ALTMAN'S TOMB UNVEILED.

On Sunday at Cypress Hills cemetery a granite sarcophagus, built to hold the remains of Benjamin Altman was unveiled. An address was made by President Robert W. de Forest, of the Metropolitan Museum, who eulogized the late merchant for his great gift to that institution.

TO ENLARGE LAYTON GALLERY.

Mr. Frederick Layton of Milwaukee has given $10,000 to be used for the erection of a north wing to the museum which bears his name. The addition will house the present sculptures and prospective new collections.

SAYS HE MORTGAGED TO FREER.

Lee Kee Son, a highly educated Chinese, was arrested Sept. 29 in Berkeley, Cal., pending an investigation as to the alleged sale of antique Chinese pictures valued at $52,000. The works belong to Liu Sung Fu, a Shanghai art merchant, and form part of a collection sent for display at the Pan-Pacific Exposition. Three hundred are shown and 87 were stored for lack of space. These latter Liu Sung Fu is said to have shipped to Mr. Charles L. Freer, the well-known Detroit collector, on Lee Kee Son's suggestion. The latter says that he mortgaged them to Mr. Freer and received $5,280. Mr. Freer claims, it is said, he bought the works from Lee Kee Son as agent for the owner for that sum, much less than their value. Son had $6,000 in his possession when arrested.

West's religious compositions were numerous, and it is not too much to say that, whatever their faults, they are equal, if not superior, to the better pictures of that class painted by any of the Georgian British masters of his day.

One of his conspicuous achievements in this department is the picture now in Chicago, another is the very large canvas presented by the late J. P. Morgan to the Hartford Morgan Museum, "The Raising of Lazarus."

The Vose Gallery has done much to re-establish the artistic repute of West, by importing a number of his better compositions painted in England. No American museum can longer afford to ignore this early artist who went from the "wilds" of Colonial Pennsylvania to an intimate position in the British court by sheer virtue of talent.

A TITIAN FOUND.

A cable from Berlin says a painting by Titian has been discovered in Vienna. The subject is "The Rape of Lucretia."

ART SALES AT EXPOSITION.

The Department of Fine Arts of the Panama-Pacific Exposition announces that the sales made by it for artists of work exhibited in the Department reached a total of slightly over $100,000 on October 2.

Of this amount $81,025.65 was for paintings; $12,947.40 for sculpture; $7,301.05 for prints; $25,388.30 for works by foreign artists and $75,885.80 for U. S. artists.

THOSE EXPOSITION AWARDS.

Dr. Albrecht Montgelas says in the Chicago Examiner: "The agitation over the prize awards at the San Francisco Exposition has not yet subsided, as evidenced in the last issue of the AMERICAN ART NEWS. Now, no jury ever expects to satisfy everybody, public or artists, and in the case of the San Francisco Exposition the jury was confronted with the thankless task of awarding a certain number of prizes without having a sufficient range of really eligible pictures to choose from. But whatever can be said against the decisions of the jury in San Francisco reflects only on the judgment of the jurors, not on the selection of membership of that body.

"It is only when the methods of a jury are attacked, regardless of whether their decisions are bad or, by a stroke of good luck, correct, that the matter of juries becomes a menace to the interest of art.

"The most satisfactory solution of the jury question seems to lie in the method employed in various cities of the continent of Europe, for instance, in Paris. Out of a large number of jurors who make the original selection there should be elected by ballot a smaller number of men, who in turn would, by a process of elimination, select the amount of pictures which would come in for a consideration of awards. Then all of the original jurors pass over these works and decide on the special character of the awards.

"This method insures the broadest possible basis for ultimate decisions, eliminating the danger of oneness and personal favoritism.

"But even among the original large number of jurors at the Paris Salon you will vainly search for anybody who might bring into the jury sessions his personal ideas as to the propriety of divorces or as to the charms which since the days of Eve the weaker sex has exercised over man.

Needs and News of the Museum.

Director Edward Robinson, at the monthly press view on Monday at the Metropolitan Museum, called attention to its need of a large increase in its annual membership, which has fallen to 2,282 against some 3,500 last year. A strong letter of appeal is to be issued this month to those whom it is thought might be likely to become annual members. In view of the fact that the city is not financially as strong now as usually and that its annual appropriation is one of the chief means of support, the need for other aid is now unusually pressing.

Under present conditions no new purchases can now be made, except from funds especially set aside by bequest or otherwise, for that purpose. In the bulletin a report is made of the work of the Museum's Egyptian expedition during the war. It is also noted that the objects of the Theodore M. Davis bequest, including the Rembrandt "Sybil," already reproduced in the ART NEWS are now at the Museum, pending the results of the litigation, over the estate, now on in the Rhode Island courts, some of them being shown in the galleries.

In the new tapestry gallery is now hung a remarkably fine Gothic hunting specimen of large size, purchased last spring. It is apparently French or Franco-Flemish of about the year 1500. In the gallery of recent accessions was shown an interesting stonehead from Angkoe Wat with a curious smile on the features. There are also displayed various new Eastern ceramics from Persia and Mesopotamia. A number of specimens of terra-cotta, bronze, glass and gems, in addition to those accessions to the Department of Classical Art in 1914 already described, are written of in the present number of the bulletin.

COMING BOOK AND ART SALES.

Important Sales of Autographs.
The Anderson Galleries (Inc.), Madison Ave. at 40 St., will begin the season of 1915-16 by the sale on the afternoons of Tuesday, Oct. 19 and the three succeeding days of Part VII of the great collection of autographs made by the late Adrian H. Joline of this city. This division of the collection embraces autograph letters and documents by famous kings and queens of England and the Continent, and letters and manuscripts by the Brownings, Burns, Byron, Gray, Keats, Lamb, La Fontaine, Macaulay, Mitford, George Sand, Southey, Tennyson, and many other distinguished literary men and women of England and France. There is an unusually fine collection of play bills, and among the extra-illustrated books are one of thirty copies of the life of G. P. R. James by Mr. Joline, with more than forty autograph letters by James and his contemporaries, and a life of Ainsworth, with 165 autograph letters by him and his literary friends.

Remarkable Collection of Lincolniana.

For many years Mr. John E. Burton, of Milwaukee, has been a collector of material regarding Abraham Lincoln, including Mss., relics, medals, books and pamphlets.

The Anderson Galleries announce the sale of this collection in five afternoon sessions beginning Monday, Oct. 25, and says that it is the largest collection of printed material regarding Lincoln that has ever come on the market, embracing many great rarities, including one of fifty copies of the Emancipation Proclamation signed by Lincoln; an extraordinary collection of Lincoln broadsides; his own copy of the Constitution with a proposed amendment in his hand; two pages from his Sum Book, showing how he worked examples in arithmetic when a boy, and a remarkable series of legal documents, seven in all, signed by Lincoln and all but two wholly in his hand, which show his professional associations, beginning in 1838 and running on to 1855.

The miscellaneous books in the Burton library and his valuable collection of gold and silver coins will be sold in eight sessions beginning Nov. 8, and there will be a third important sale later on.

John Boyd Thacher Sale (Part VI).

The coming sale at the Anderson Galleries Nov. 3-4 of Part VI. of the John Boyd Thacher collection includes Autograph Letters, Mss., and Documents of the following, among many other distinguished persons: Statesmen: C. J. Fox, Sir Christ. Hatton, Sir T. Gresham, Sir M. Hale, Judge Jeffreys, the Earl of Nottingham, the Duke of Hamilton, etc.; Authors: Fielding, Gibbon, Goldsmith, Gray, Lord Herbert of Chisbury, Dr. Johnson, Ben Jonson, Keats, Lamb, Kipling, Landor, Locke, Andrew Marvell; Composers: Flotow, Gluck, Gounod, Handel, Haydn, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Moscheles, Mozart; Artists: Gainsborough, Kneller, Gibbons, Hogarth, Inigo Jones, Kneller, Mme. Lebrun, and Morland; Famous Soldiers: "Chinese" Gordon, Gen. Ireton, Kitchener, the Earl of Leicester, the Duke of Marlborough, Gen. Monck, Sir John Moore, and others; European Celebrities: David Garrick, William Harvey, Archbishop Laud, John Law, Madame de Maintenon, Laura d'Este, Mazzeppa, Madame Moliere, Duchess de Longueville, etc.

Particular attention is called to the three unpublished letters by Charles Lamb, an unpublished poem by him, and the original Manuscript of his poem, "The Triumph of the Whale," and also to the remarkably fine historical letter on the campaign in Flanders by the Duke of Marlborough, and the exceedingly important letters by Goldsmith, Keats and others.

Sale of Japanese Art.

An interesting collection of Japanese art, embracing color prints, original drawings and books, the property of Mitsuo Komatsu of Tokio, will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, Oct. 30, preliminary to the sale on the evenings of Nov. 3 and 4. What is considered the finest painting in the collection is the "Hawk and Monkey," by Tenryu-Dojin, a great colorist, who flourished in 1570-1620, 70x18 inches in size, from the famous collection of Lord Ono, and has been described as one of "the secret gold treasures" of his castle. Another fine and rare example of an ancient painting is "Yasan Jin," an allegorical figure by Masanobu-Karino (1380-1477), one of the greatest artists of Japan.

Phila. Autograph Sale.

At the auction sale of Autograph Letters and Historical Documents by Stan. V. Henkels on Oct. 8, the highest price realized was $200 for a Sheffield silver plated breakfast castor, formerly the property of Thomas Jefferson. A letter dated Dec. 7, 1797, from James Monroe, President of the U. S., inviting Alexander Hamilton to the field of honor fetched $105. A deed of sale to Cardinal Fesh from Napoleon I, bearing the Emperor's signature and also the initial "N" four times, setting forth the sale of lands and tenements in Corsica, fetched $65. Robert R. Livingston's letter to Col. Wm. Duane in reference to the character of Benj. Franklin was sold for $60. The Historical Society of Pa. acquired two documents, signed by Benj. Franklin, having relation to the affairs of the Library Company of Phila. at an aggregate price of $48. A letter of Wm. Franklin, Colonial Governor of New Jersey and illegitimate son of Benj. Franklin, fetched $21.50.

Queen Elizabeth's Privy Council were the signers of a letter to the High Sheriff of Norfolk requiring horses for Ireland sold for $23. An order signed by the Earl of Essex, the Queen's favorite and by other historical personages was disposed of for $21 as was for the same figure a letter of Andrew Jackson's to his daughter. The celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson mentions the provisions of his last will and testament in a signed letter dated Dec. 5, 1778 and sold for $55. A warrant signed by the Earl of Pembroke, Shakespeare's patron fetched $41, and a paper signed and sealed by Wm. Penn appointing a Court of Inquiry in Bucks County was sold for $39. Eugene Castello.

A portrait of Kemble as Coriolanus by Sir Robert Ker Porter, given by Mr. James Buchanan Brady, has been hung in the main dining room of the Friars' Club.

There were a number of sales of oils, drawings and sculptures at the Woman's Suffrage Exhibition at the Macbeth Galleries, 450 Fifth Ave., which closes to-day. The sculptures led in the sales.

A statue by J. Massey Rhind of Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb was unveiled at Gettysburg, Oct. 12.

The "Cicerone"

SEMI-MONTHLY JOURNAL PUBLISHED IN THE INTERESTS OF THE ART
EXPERT AND COLLECTOR

The "Cicerone" can point to its six yearly volumes as having maintained the promises made on its first appearance. It has been a guide as to the most important occurrences of international artistic life—a pioneer in the directions to which the interest of collectors of our time is chiefly directed—a conscientious record of all important features and new acquisitions of public museums—of discoveries, exhibitions, etc. Moreover a reliable and constantly up-to-date record, with respect to European auctions, and a guide for museum officials, collectors and art dealers.

It may without exaggeration be called the best and most reliable organ for all those taking an active interest in questions of ancient and modern art.

The journal rapidly attained a leading position through first giving publicity to important works in the possession of private collectors and international dealers, as well as by opening up hitherto unknown territories, particularly of an ancient art.

MONATSHEFTE FÜR KUNST-WISSENSCHAFT

(Monthly Numbers for Science of Art)

For the reader interested in art history, the MONATSHEFTE FÜR KUNST-WISSENSCHAFT forms an important adjunct to the "Cicerone." It is the real German central organ for art and scientific research, embracing the whole range of the history of architecture, painting, plastic and graphic art and the smaller arts, with the aid of new and copious illustrations.

In a special section based on criticisms by the most celebrated specialists, each number contains a review of the entire art literature of Germany and foreign countries.

The "Monatshefte" is now in its eighth year of publication and is the organ of art experts and lovers, museums and collectors and contributes to the scientific appreciation of their treasures.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Oct. 6, 1915.

The City Art Gallery of Manchester is at present holding an interesting exhibition of Flemish Lace, representing every type produced in Flanders during the last 350 years and including many rich examples of Church altar lace of the most elaborate and exquisite kind. Certain pieces, executed during the reign of Albert and Isabella are so fine that they had to be made by the light of a small lamp in an underground cellar, so that the fine thread might not be injured by the dry air above ground. But, quite apart from the delicacy of workmanship, the designs, often including mythical animals, as well as flowers and fruit of great beauty, are of remarkable draughtsmanship, showing that the skill of the most eminent designers must have been requisitioned in connection with this work. Added interest is given to the collection by the fact that it was removed by its owner from Ghent while the German army was actually about to enter the town!

It was an apt idea on the part of the Medici Society to hold at their Grafton Street Galleries an exhibition of stained glass by modern artists, for not only will there later on be great scope for the designers of memorial windows, but, when the time comes for the reconstruction of the ruined cities of the continent, the art of staining glass will occupy a more important place among the crafts than has been given it for many a year. The exhibits to be seen on this occasion are not of course of equal merit, many achieving but a weak result in their attempt to base their methods on primitive models. The artists who have elected to be frankly modern are by far the more successful and one cannot but be impressed by the particularly excellent work done by women in this line. The disposition and arrangement of the leads is of course as important a matter in regard to stained glass as is the main design or the tone of color, and it is perhaps due to the natural ingenuity of the feminine character that the women artists seem to overcome this difficulty with more apparent ease than do their brethren. There is an unexpected sense of humor also about some of their work, notably in that of Miss Townsend, who shows a clever composition, in which Mr. Bernard Shaw is seen hammering the world into shape with the assistance of his fellow Fabians! Wooliscroft Rhead is represented by a dignified figure of St. George, an admirable piece of work, which is decorative without being so unduly insistent as to detract from the merits of the architecture which may surround it. This exhibition is valuable as demonstrating, not only what our modern artists are doing in this branch, but also the pitfalls which beset those who tread in this particular path.

American admirers of Mr. Henry James will be interested to hear that his marble bust, executed by Derwent Wood, is now on view at the Tate Gallery. In this work the sculptor must have had an exceedingly subtle and difficult task before him, for the qualities which he was called upon to express with his chisel were many and various. It was almost inevitable that something should be missed from the whole, but it would be ungenerous to deny that there is much that is worthy of praise, both from the technical and the artistic point of view. The bust is pleasingly free from affectations and has obviously been wrought with sincerity and feeling.

An exhibition of Copenhagen Porcelain is on at the Brighton Art Gallery and is familiarizing its visitors with a type of ceramics which is too little known and understood over here. There are, however, various indications that it will not be many years before Danish pottery will take a high place in the affections of collectors, who will no doubt specialize either in the crystalline ware in which the decoration adheres closely to the technique of the body, or in the porcelain which adds a delicate luminosity to its beauty of color. The modelling of animals and figures shows a high degree of craftsmanship, the best artists of Denmark working in this medium. Specimens signed in leading names will assuredly appreciate in value before long.

The article in the August issue of the ART NEWS on "False and Forged Bronzes" has created a considerable amount of interest over here, several journals commenting upon it and the nefarious trade with which it deals. The facts which it disclosed do not, of course, come as an entire surprise in many quarters, but as it is the first time they have been publicly disclosed, the comments made on the article have been interesting and in many cases—illuminating! L. G. S.

MEDALLIC ART.

The N. Y. Evening Mail's Medal for Athletics, the work of the sculptor Gutzon Borglum, shows how satisfactory it is to everyone concerned to have a competent artist, familiar with the requirements of the medal, knowing just what its limitations are.

The catalog on Spanish porcelains contains illustrations of two most remarkable figure groups, always supposed to be Buen Retiro, but which proved to be noble examples of Capo di Monte of the second period, and the finest specimens, undoubtedly, in America.

DEBTS IN ENEMY COUNTRIES.

Fortunately for the British fine art trade, it is probable that it owes to enemy countries far more money than Germany owes to it. But those firms which have debtors in Germany and Austria should note that it has been arranged that the Public Trustee shall keep a record of "debts (including bank balances) due to British subjects from persons residing in enemy countries." Persons desiring to record their claims should obtain Form G for the purpose of doing so from the Public Trustee (Trading with the Enemy Department), 2, Clement's Inn, Strand, W.C. Of course the action of the Public Trustee will be confined to entering upon the record claims of which particulars are supplied to him, and in no way commits the Government either to responsibility for the correctness of the claim entered, or to taking any action on the conclusion of hostilities or otherwise for the recovery of the

to employ his best efforts in this most difficult art. The medal here mentioned, beautiful and simple in design, shows on the obverse the necessary inscription in a wreath of laurel and oak and upon the reverse a beautifully modeled nude figure of an athlete preparing to enter a contest, effectively set off against a perfectly plain background giving wonderful value to the figure standing against it and the beautiful detail of muscular development shown therein. HISPANIC MUSEUM CATALOGS.

The Hispanic Museum has published four most valuable ceramic catalogs compiled by Dr. Edwin A. Barber, Director of the Pa. Museum.

In the catalog on Hispano-Moresque pottery Dr. Barber calls attention (for the first time) to the use of white slip and lead glaze, developed gradually after the Moorish potters introduced tin enamel into Spain. His investigation of this subject resulted in the discovery that almost every piece of Hispano-Moresque ware made after the fourteenth century contains a large proportion of lead in the glaze and more or less slip, a fact which does not seem to have been known before.

Print Collectors' Quarterly.

The Print Collectors' Quarterly for October, under the editorship of Fitzroy Carrington, curator of prints at the Boston Museum, opens with Louis R. Metcalfe's account of Claude Mellan, the brilliant original portrait and figure engraver, supposed to have been a pupil of Leonard Gaultier, rather than of Thomas Le Leu, who stood with him alone in the front rank of the artists of line of the day. His portraits are excellent and his compositions, such as "St. Pierre Nolasque" and "St. John in the Desert," brilliant. A welcome paper by Frank Weitenkamp, chief of the Prints Division at the N. Y. Public Library, treats of the lithographs of Gabey, a master of the art and a remarkable and particularly picturesque draughtsman. Miss E. L. Cary writes of Dante Gabriel Rossetti as an illustrator. Emil H. Richter who treats of German XV century wood cuts, answers further a letter, also printed, by W. G. Rawlinson, on the unpublished series of mezzotints of Turner. John Charrington, honorary curator of the Department of Prints of the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, Eng., has a note proving that the subject of a print by Rembrandt is "Sylvius." An entry into Jerusalem by Master Lez, acquired at the Ives sale last season by the Boston Museum, is reproduced.

Mr. Ercole Canessa of C. and E. Canessa, whose American house is at 547 Fifth Ave., recently arrived from San Francisco where the firm has a large and beautiful exhibit in the handsome Italian Government Building at the Exposition which has attracted thousands of visitors and been deservedly successful.

Mr. Amadeo Canessa is en route from Italy and is expected here soon.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by ex-
perience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

A Baltimore Appreciation.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:
Dear Sir: I am very glad to enclose my subscription for another year to the AMER-ICAN ART NEWS, which I find a most satisfactory and up to date art publication.
Yours very truly,

AS TO EARLY AMERICANS.

Attention was called by a writer in our last issue to the comparatively feeble showing at the Metropolitan Museum of the works of early American masters, and this fact, especially in view of a marked revival of public interest in these works, and the further fact that several of the new, and some of the older American Museums are rapidly acquiring representative examples of these men and their followers,
as evidenced by our news columns every issue—which also means that the supply of such works, not overplenty, is diminishing; would seem to make evident the necessity of the Metropoli-tan's moving soon to build up its collection of early Americans. In this issue alone we record the acquisition
by the Chicago Art Institute of a fine example of Benjamin West, and of the securing by the Worcester Museum of a superior pastel portrait by Copley, while the interesting description of the many good examples of early American Masters, owned by the N. Y. Historical Society, also published in this issue, shows that another New York institution is in the field as a competitor for these works.

MR. WYER'S RESIGNATION.

Following the controversy between Director Raymond Wyer, of the Hackley Museum of Muskegon, Michigan, and certain newly elected Trustees of that institution over the former's policy in the expenditure of the Museum's bequest funds for pictures, fully related in our last issue, comes the news of the resignation of Mr. Wyer, to take effect at the expiration of his contract with the Museum, on July 16
next.

This is to be regretted, for while we have differed with Mr. Wyer's policy in the purchase of pictures ourselves,
in that he has not paid sufficient attention, in our opinion, to the building up of a collection of early American works, which, also in our opinion,
should be the first ambition of the Director of a new American or, as a matter of fact, of any American Museum;
he has otherwise made a good record
and his purchases on the whole have been marked by good judgment and knowledge.

Further than this, Mr. Wyer has evinced the possession of qualities of management, judicious exploitation of his institution, locally and abroad, and an attention to the educational and most important side of a Museum, not always found in Museum Directors.

We sympathize with Mr. Wyer in the obstacles placed in his path by perhaps well-meaning citizens of Muskegon, but men evidently, through lack of opportunity or want of interest, not fitted to dominate the affairs of an Art Museum, and we are confident that so capable an Art Director and Executive as Mr. Wyer has proven himself, will soon find a wider and better field for his abilities than he has in Muskegon.

DON'T KNOW THE FACTS.

"Art circles are interested, likewise amused,
at the various letters published in the American Art News, protesting against the award of the special Grand Prize to Frank Duveneck, instead of to William M.
Chase. Strange, they argue, that so many letter writers should be ignorant of the fact that the honor came to Mr. Duveneck as a special appreciation of the foreign members of the jury, and had nothing to do with the American members nor with the Exposition authorities. Strange, too, that the various protestants did not know that Mr. Chase, having had a special room, was not eligible for further honor. As for
Mr. Pennell's attitude toward prize awards,
I refer all interested to Mr. Trask's letter, to Mr. Pennell's reply, and the second note from the head of the art department, which,

so far as I know, Mr. Pennell has not yet had the courage to answer.—Saunterer, in Town Topics, Oct. 7.

[Strange! That the usually well-informed Saunterer should evidently,
when he penned the above comment,
have been ignorant of the fact that Duveneck's name was suggested for the special Grand Prize by one of 13
foreign members out of a Jury of 36,
all the rest having been Americans,
that the foreigner's suggestion could not have been made effective without the majority vote, at best of these Americans, so that they really gave him the honor, and finally, that Duveneck had a special room—as did Chase
—and that he was just as ineligible
under the Exposition Art Department rules—as was Chase—both being
"Hon. Concours." Why then was Chase passed over for Duveneck, or at least not given equal honor?—Ed.]

CORRESPONDENCE

As to Mather Brown.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:—The prominent notice given to Mather Brown, in your last issue, leads me to believe that you may be glad to supplement Mr. Hart's excellent sketch of this early American artist, with a few excerpts from letters written by him shortly after his arrival in England, in 1780. He carried with him to Europe two letters of introduction from his grandfather, Rev. Mather Byles, one of them addressed to Harrison Gray,
Esq., formerly Treasurer of the Province,
and the other inscribed by the famous wit,
"To Mr. Copley in the Solar System."

While Mather Brown was pre-eminently a portrait painter, and like Stuart achieved his greatest success with heads, like all painters of that period he essayed historical subjects as well. For Boydell he produced
"Bolinbroke offering the Crown to Richard II," and among his best work of this character may be mentioned "The Marquis Cornwallis Receiving as Hostages the Sons of Tippoo Sahib." In 1793 two pictures by him, "The Baptism" and "The Marriage of Henry VII." sold at auction for £84.

The following comments on Brown's style are taken from the "Critical Dictionary of Painters," London, 1876: "His touch is particularly dry, almost as dry as Benjamin West's, yet his portraits have not that hard effect which characterizes many of West's heads because Brown was careful in leaving the outlines delicate. We can also trace in his best portraits, nice wiry strokes about the features similar to what we see in chalk drawings. As there is character and considerable variety of expression in Brown's portraits we are encouraged to conclude that he was successful in preserving the likenesses of those who sat to him."

As some natural wonderment may be felt why, in view of the early achievement of success, we find the artist later neglected by his former patrons, and now a name so little known, it may be explained that a mental malady which first disclosed itself in eccentricities, finally developed to the degree of extinguishing the fires of genius with which Mather Brown had by nature been genuinely gifted.

If Mr. Hart and Mr. Cust are to engage in a discussion of the attribution of the Harwood portrait to Stuart or Brown, I think it might be well to open the question broadly enough to enquire which of the two artists, at that period, may have been regarded as the greater painter.

Respectfully yours,

Edward Francis Coffin.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 11, 1915.

Excerpts From Mather Brown's Letters.

Here follow the excerpts from Mather
Brown's letters referred to above:

In a letter dated Paris 23, 1781, Mather
Brown writes: "Dr. Franklin has given me a pass, and recommendatory letter to the famous Mr. West. He treats me with the utmost politeness; has given me an invitation to his home. I delivered him my grandfather's message; he expressed himself with the greatest esteem and affection for him,
and has since introduced me at Versailles,
as being grandson to one of his most particular friends in America."

In his first letter from London, written 1781, the artist says, "In consequence of the recommendation of Dr. Franklin, who gave me letters to his fellow townsman, the famous Mr. West, of Philadelphia, I practice gratis with this gentleman, who affords me every encouragement, as well as Mr. Copley, who is particularly kind to me, welcomed me to his home, and lent me his pictures, etc. At my arrival, Mr. Treasurer Gray carried me and introduced me to Lord George Germaine."

In a letter written in 1783, he writes: "I have exhibited four pictures in the exhibition; the King and Queen were there yesterday." In 1783: "I have painted several Americans. Yesterday I had two pictures shown His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. They were carried to the palace by his page. He criticised them and thought them strong likenesses. I believe I never told you that the King knew a picture of mine in the last exhibition, of the Keeper of Windsor Castle, and took particular notice of Mr. Gray's picture; asked who it was, and who did it, at what book he had in his hand. Mr. West told him it was the Treasurer of Boston, painted by his pupil, Mr. Brown, a young man from America. The King asked him what part.
He told him Massachusetts."

In 1785 he writes: "Among other great people I have painted, Sir William Pepper-ell and family, and Hon. John Adams, ambassador to His Britannic Majesty. On the 20th of June, I had the honor to be introduced to the Duke of Northumberland at his palace; His Grace received me with the utmost politeness."

In a letter 1786, he writes: "I have near a hundred pictures of my countrymen in my rooms, which are universally known; Messrs. Adams and Jefferson on one side of the room, and on the other, Treasurer
Gray and Sir William Pepperell."

The following extract is from a letter
mentioning Brown, written March 6, 1789, in London, and sent to Boston: "Your countryman, Mather Brown, is well and in the highest state of success. He now rents
a house at £120 a year and keeps a servant
in livery, and is appointed portrait painter
to His Royal Highness the Duke of York.
He has a great run of business and has not only painted many of our nobility, but also the Prince of Wales."

He also painted the portraits of many of the distinguished English military and naval officers of his time, among whom were Elliot, Rodney and Cornwallis.

TAKES ISSUE WITH BECKWITH.

Mr. Frederick James Gregg in a letter to the N. Y. Times, in answer to Carroll Beckwith's letter on "The Worship of Ugliness," republished from that paper in last week's ART NEWS, says:

"I leave out of consideration the suggestion of Mr. Carroll Beckwith that recent developments in art have been 'pernicious and monstrous,' and the other one that our innocent students should be saved from such 'perversities' by lectures on morals—
in the Ruskin manner, no doubt. Let me deal with one point in his letter in your issue of Oct. 4.

"He says that, on visiting the Volland
Gallery in Paris, two years ago, he was horrified to find the entire collection consisting of the most extreme works of the Cubists, Futurists, Pointillists, and all the extreme schools of the mental maniacs."

"Mr. Beckwith must be incapable of telling the difference between a Renoir and a Cubist, or a Degas and a Futurist. How, then, could we expect him to tell a Cezanne
or a Gauguin when he saw it?"

"In spite of Mr. Beckwith, the Volland Gallery owes its fame—as everybody but Mr. Beckwith knows—to its richness in the works of Renoir, Degas, and Cezanne. It is to see the paintings of these masters that people go there from all over Europe and America."

Beckwith Upholds a Principle.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Referring to my note in the N. Y. Times recently, and which I notice
you republished in part in your last issue,
I would like to add that I feel it is time
the artists who have been educated in their profession should no longer allow the public to remain in any doubt of their position, or the standards of art training in which they believe. We have been tolerant and patient, trusting that it would be a fad of the moment, but when it threatens to become a vicious disease, when we find that our art critics of the press, whose duty
it is to guide public taste, no longer direct with thought that is elevated, but cater to an unwholesome sensationalism that is both vulgar and degrading, it is time, I say, that we follow the example of such distinguished men as M. Bonnat and endeavor, with voice and action to stem this current of so-called "Modernism" which threatens the very foundations of the future generation of artists in this country, not to speak of the taste of our entire people.

Yours sincerely,

Carroll Beckwith.

Ontoora, N. Y., Oct. 11, 1915.

CHICAGO.

Whether handicraft and "commercial art" should be classed as "fine art" is a question made prominent in the exhibitions that are opening the season here—and it may be argued outside Chicago that the Art Institute is the first American institution of high art that opened its doors and offered its galleries to shows of applied art, on the basis of a "fine art standard." This fact is eliciting considerable comment in local art circles, following the report that the establishment of a museum of textiles will be discussed at the present convention of silk manufacturers in Paterson, N. J. Certainly Chicago patrons and art lovers are hoping for the materialization of the textile museum, quite apart from commercial interests. The stunningly skillful execution, subtle genius and delicate taste displayed in the annual show of applied art now on in the Institute, is accentuating the appreciation of what has heretofore been graded as "trade genius," and bringing it into recognition as "fine art."

Wilfred Voynich, a Hungarian and a Londoner through residence, is exhibiting ancient Mss. and illuminated volumes, in the Institute. The display covers the most important collections of royal families and monasteries through several centuries. Included is the Hapsburg Mss., stored in vaults for centuries. There is a "Lives of the Saints," with its 300 watercolor pictures, presumed by Giotto. The one authentic self-portrait of Boccaccio enhances the value of an illuminated Mss. of this author's "Genealogy of the Gods." There's a XVI century Latin New Testament, in cipher, by Roger Bacon. This interesting collection will be on show about two weeks more.

The Chicago Ceramic Association's display in the Institute is convincing in its distinctive designs of decoration and in its sensitive adaptation of colorings. Among the artists exemplified are Ione Wheeler, Anne T. Browne, Mary E. Hipple, Isabelle Kid-singer, Marguerite J. Rood, Olive M. Johnson, Myrtle E. Lynberg, Ellen Inglehart and Anna V. Cornish.

The Chicago Society of Miniature Painters and its invited artists have made their annual show at the Institute a national affair—and the result is a delightful assemblage of pictures in the little. "Little Brook in the Woods" by Carolyn D. Tyler, "Mrs. F." by Marian D. Harper, "Queen Anne's Lace" by Mildred J. Tuttle, are notable examples. Other artists well represented are Magda Heuermann, Kate L. Bacon, Lucy M. Stanton, Cecil Jay, Virginia Reynolds, Rosina C. Boardman, Edward W. Carlson, Eva Springer, Harriette A. Clark, Eda N. Castleton, Nicolas S. Macsoud, Minerva J. Chapman, Ann Martin, Katherine McIntire and Evelyn Purdie.

PHILADELPHIA.

More than forty immense pieces, some of them locally owned, others borrowed in New York, will be shown in the Tapestry Exhibition for two weeks beginning Oct. 25 at the Pa. Museum. The collection is being organized and cataloged by Mr. George Leland Hunter, author of a standard work on the subject entitled "Tapestries, their Origin, History and Renaissance," who will also give, by appointment, during the course of the exhibition lecture promenades, explanatory and instructive in aim, to art and architectural societies who may so arrange with him. All periods in the art of weaving picture cloths will be represented, including besides those better known, even ancient Coptic, Peruvian, Modern Chinese and American. One remarkable example of Gothic Tapestry that will be seen is ten feet six inches high by thirteen feet six inches wide, and has for its subject "Bathsheba at the Bath," and another is a piece of Brussels tapestry eleven by fifteen feet, dating from the sixteenth century, telling the Bible story of "Prophets and Kings," and is from the famous Somzée collection that was sold in 1901 in Brussels.

An important accession to the collection of books of interest to artists in the Library of the University of Pa. was made through the gift by Mrs. George C. Stout of a copy of the famous work entitled Brevaire Germani XII, comprising twelve volumes bound in white and illustrated by sixteen hundred plates, each page separately colored and finished by skillful Venetian bookbinders.

Eugène Castello.

In connection with German Baroque and Rococo art between 1650 and 1800, of which an exhibition was held last year at Darmstadt, a comprehensive work has been issued by George Biermann, Leipzig. This exhibition originated from the 1906 centenary art exposition.

German art during the 17th and 18th centuries met with much prejudice owing to the higher appreciation of foreign art. Experts like Henry Lemonnier pronounced an unfavorable opinion on XVII century German art.

MINNEAPOLIS.

There is now on exhibition at the Art Institute some fifty watercolors by the English artist, Charles John Collings. All of the great water colorists are of the English school, and among contemporary water colorists, Collings stands at the head. It was good fortune for Director Breck and the Institute to secure the first American exhibition of this artist, lent by three gentlemen from Winnipeg.

Collings was born in Devonshire, Eng., lived near Exeter, exhibiting in the Royal Academy, and other exhibition galleries, until 1910 when he came to Canada, and is now living at Shoswap Lake, B. C., painting scenes between Banff and Victoria.

The artist in his views in the Canadian Rockies invests nature with compelling charm, and in the selection of simple, elemental themes as "A Shattered Tree," which stands after a storm, defiant against a golden sky, "A Grey Morning," showing the subtle relations of light and color. "The Mountains in Springtime," and "Among the Bull Pines," emphasize color and decoration designs. These are color poems, showing not only a keen appreciation of the beauty of nature, but a feeling for design, pattern and color, which recalls the early Japanese yet with surface all his own.

His technique is characterized by transparency of color and rare feeling for decoration, like stained glass. The color is worked in to give effect and yet retains gem-like purity. Whether in the snow effects of many winter scenes, depicting prismatic colors for fiery browns of tree trunks, or dull greens of moraines or lonely meadows, he so disposes the color, tones and patterns as to give with both the mountain, valley and plain and yet make them recognized by all.

BOSTON.

When Boston needs a (vicarious) art thrill nowadays it hies itself to the Arts and Crafts Exhibition and looks up the luscious enamels. These fine examples of pure color are so "sensuously beautiful," and yet "so impersonal," as one æsthetic critic describes them.

Miss Elizabeth Copeland takes a first prize, which is not, however, munificent enough to awaken the mercenary instincts of others. F. G. Hale with a good conservative show is "hors concours," having received the medal of the Society this year, and F. J. Marshall has interesting specimens of Limoges enamel. Miss Mary Churchwood of Cambridge has an individual exhibition of decorated porcelain, and wood carvings of high order of merit are by L. Kirchmayer and A. Luldi.

The "Guild of Boston Artists'" first travelling exhibition is now on tour, making its first stand the Worcester Art Museum. This is a surprisingly good collection, with Messrs. Tarbell, Benson and Paxton represented well to the fore. Most of the members have evidently put their best foot forward, and the fortunate Worcesterians are duly grateful. It certainly is a good thing for the middle West and South that this show is going their way and that they may see that Boston is still on the artistic map with modern color and well drawn outlines. Forty oils, 15 pieces of sculpture and 15 miniatures make a representative show.

Malden is now reported to have its own Matisse, in the person of Horace Burdick, stalwart member of the Boston Art Club—"No striking resemblance, to be sure" . . . "But they, like Matisse's things, show the influence that stemmed from the Byzantine." The transition to this manner in which Mr. Burdick is now working was

CINCINNATI.

The Museum is happy in the choice of its first exhibition of the season. The work of George Bellows has been selected for this opening attraction.

Edward C. Volkert, a clever animal and landscape painter who divides his time between here and New York is here now to superintend the placing of two large decorative panels in Woodward High School; the subjects, cattle and sheep with figures, have been carefully studied and skillfully keyed to mold into their surroundings and form a harmonious note in their permanent setting. Mr. Volkert is also preparing an exhibition of about 50 canvases for the Art Museum to succeed the Bellows display.

Messrs. Clossons' Gallery announce an exhibition of landscapes in oil and monotypes by J. F. Earhart. This artist spent some time abroad at Barbizon and the influence of this school is felt in his works, which abound in delightfully tender and subtle coloring as well as poetic feeling.

The exhibition at Traxel's Art Store of several works by the late P. S. Duncanson has aroused more than ordinary interest in local art circles since the artist, a negro, was one of the first painters to settle here, where he painted as far back as 1843 portraits of Sumner, Birney and other abolitionist leaders and was eventually sent to Edinburg by the anti-slavery society, succeeding so well that his talent coming under the notice of Queen Victoria, she purchased one of his works now hanging in Windsor Castle. The best picture exhibited is the "Trial of Shakespeare," showing the bard before Sir Thomas Lucy, the magistrate, charged with poaching. Among the other figures are Ann Hathaway and her child, the game-warden, as well as the body of a deer and two hounds. Among his works are "Shylock and Jessica," "The Ruins of Carthage," "The Western Hunter's Encampment" and "The Battle Ground of the River Raisin," as well as various portraits and landscapes. He died abroad in 1871.

N. Y. HISTORICAL PORTRAITS.

Possibly the most valuable collection of early American portraits owned by a public institution in N. Y. City, that of the N. Y. Historical Society, 77 St. and Central Park West, is soon to have a new catalog. This collection, which comprises the famous Bryan bequest, and numerous canvases from the old "Museum" of Charles Wilson Peale, is especially rich in genuine examples of Copley, Charles Wilson and Rembrandt Peale, Benjamin West, Thomas Sully, Samuel Waldo, John Trumbull and John Wesley Jarvis. Of particular moment, in view of the extraordinary revival of interest in his work is the superb self-portrait of America's greatest "old master"—John Singleton Copley. This three-quarter length representation of the painter standing with brush and palette in hand, wants only intelligent restoration to place it in the first rank of Copley's canvases now owned in America. Even in its present unfortunate condition its color gives a hint of its power.

Considerable interest centers around the Copley portrait of Myles Cooper, Tory President of Kings (Columbia) College; inasmuch as the Society's portrait is in design similar to two portraits of President Cooper owned by Columbia and hanging in the University buildings. Two De Peyster portraits, attributed to Copley, are very likely by the same hand that executed the Dongan "Copleys."

Copley's self portrait forms the centre of an interesting group of artists' portraits which includes Benjamin West's strong head of Charles Wilson Peale as a youth; Abraham Delanoy's charming portrait of Benjamin West as a young man, and the portrait of Gilbert Stuart by Charles and Rembrandt Peale showing "Gibby" in his vigorous prime.

The Stuart portraits are of Thomas Jefferson, Egbert Benson, George Washington and John Adams. The Peale family group, a work which stamps Charles Wilson Peale as a painter of great ability, is the most notable of the several canvases painted by the Philadelphian, the others being Washington, Hamilton, Pieter van Borchel, John De Peyster and Gen. Jos. Reed. Sully is represented by the portrait of Guy Bryan, Samuel Waldo by portraits of Peter Remsen and David Grimm; Vanderlyn by a true profile head of Aaron Burr, and heads of "Bob" Livingston, Roger Strong and Henry Benson, and Trumbull by portraits of John Pintard, Gen. Huntington, Bryan Rossiter, Dr. Maurice Swabey and Robert Benson. Other early American portrait painters represented by numerous examples are S. F. B. Morse, J. W. Jarvis, William Page, Thomas Hicks, Frank Carpenter, George Baker, Ezra Ames, Geo. P. A. Healy, Ch. Loring Elliott, James Frothingham, Henry Inman, Eastman Johnson, Henry Petus Gray, Joseph Wright, John Paradise and Robert W. Weir.

THE FALCON HUNT
A. Pasini

At the Schultheis Gallery

On a recent visit here, Collings said "I endeavor to paint by suggestion. I see grace of line, color, light, shade and pattern in all subjects, whichever are most apparent, I emphasize." "People ask, what is my motif? I answer, 'I have only one motive, that is to produce a work of art that shall be a lasting and ever-present pleasure to those who are in sympathy with me, in every outlook upon nature.'"

The watercolors will be on exhibition this month.

Threats to Newspapers.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: I noted in your columns last season, letters from artist subscribers threatening a withdrawal of patronage if the editorial tone of the paper touching some prize awards was not changed. This conduct ought to be stigmatized as blackmail, for is not the essence of blackmail only this: If you do not knuckle down to me, I will make it cost you something. The law deals with blackmail on the part of councilmen and legislators; public opinion should deal with this old-time blackmail of publishers.

Furthermore, a simple application of common-sense to the situation should convince these befuddled and disgruntled people that, were you to yield to their admonitions, it would—and ought to—cost you more dearly than non-compliance. A paper whose principles seem to be good and honest, and whose clientele has been built up with regard to those principles, cannot turn its back thereon with impunity. Evidently this simple proposition has become the pons asinorum of your dissentient subscribers.

shown in an enamel-like landscape at the Boston Art Club Exhibition not long ago. Miss Doris Burdick, the young daughter of the artist, is an expert silhouettist and exhibits work with her father. H. M. Sylvester rounds out the trio with several examples of his style.

The new gallery of Bigelow-Kennard is occupied by sculpture by a modern Italian, working after the old manner—Angelo del Nero—once again represented in Boston by a one-man show. A portrait bust of the composer Verdi by Fontana is the most important example. A "Narcissus" and "Faun and Fauness" are in silver.

The Museum is always acquiring at present, and new-old "finds" are frequently reported. The layman hankers in his soul for modern pictures and sculpture that does not need many repairs and much imagination to make it beautiful and perhaps these will come—some evidence pointing that way. A sculptured stone niche, Gothic, early 15th century, has been added to the Western Art Collection and should prove useful to students of Gothic Architecture.

The John Hancock memorial tablet for the Mass. State House, presented by the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, will be placed in Doric Hall, opposite the Lincoln memorial. It is designed around a replica of the old portrait bust of Hancock by the architect A. Reuling, New York.

Works of the late Albion H. Bicknell are now on exhibition in the Copley Gallery. One hundred and fifty paintings and studies with many etchings and monotypes make up the collection. Mr. Bicknell painted many portraits of Lincoln. One of these is in the present show, and in the Massachusetts and Maine State Houses are two others. His "Lincoln at Gettysburg" is owned by the Malden Public Library.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Illustrators at the Arts Club.

The Society of Illustrators inaugurated its fifth exhibition on Wednesday evening at the National Arts Club Gallery, 119 E. 19 Street, with a first view and reception. The display remains open to the end of the month. It is a remarkably attractive gathering of 280 odd works arranged by the exhibition committee, of which Stetson Crawford is the head, with a view to decorative effect rather than for the placing in prominent places of the work of the best known men. The examples are in various mediums, in oil and watercolors, as well as in black and white wash, pencil, pen and etched line.

Among the more notable exhibits are those of C. D. Gibson, C. M. Flagg, J. Scott Williams, H. C. Christy, A. O. Fischer,
R. M. Crosby, W. B. King, Helen Dryden,
G. Wright, F. D. Steele, E. S. Crawford, Clara E. Peck, Howard Heath, E. L. and Mary Greene Blumenshein, A. Little, Helen Dryden, O. Lowell, F. D. Booth, Sheridan,
J. A. Williams, A. J. Kellar, J. Pennell,
R. W. Amick, T. Oakley, H. Townsend,
H. Dunn, W. T. Benda, W. van Dressar,
D. G. Cowles, A. Kimball, F. J. Johnson,
W. Hale, A. O. Fischer, L. W. Hitchcock,
F. W. Taylor, L. E. Chambers, A. W.
Brown, M. W. Enright, E. Penfield, E. Frederick, T. S. Sullivant, P. Stallo, N. C. Wyeth, R. Carton Moorepark and D. Robinson.

Portraits by Harrington Mann.

There is now at the Scott and Fowles Galleries, 590 Fifth Ave., an attractive group of woman and child portraits by Harrington Mann, which remain to Oct. 30.
The two principal works, with the figures
most naturally posed, represent the children of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Denehy, of Chicago. In the first a boy furnishes the most striking figure and in the second a girl.
There is a charming picture of Miss Dorothy Duveen, and Miss Elizabeth Francis is also most agreeably portrayed with a rabbit in her arms. Other subjects are Mrs. Skiddy von Stade, and Mrs. Devereux Milburn. Young Angus Menzies is pictured with a hobby horse in the Velasquez-Manet manner, and Curtenius Gillette, Jr., Sara Francis Barrows and J. J. Schubert,
Jr., are other children presented. A pensive girl holds a "La France" rose and symbolizes that country.

New Mural by Kenyon Cox.

Kenyon Cox is exhibiting a recently completed decoration in the Vanderbilt Gallery of the Fine Arts Building through to-morrow. The subject is "The Marriage of the Atlantic and the Pacific" and it is to be placed in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol, Madison, Wisconsin.

Turning to Mr. Cox's production one cannot but feel an entire lack of inspiration.
The artist seems to have been fully occupied with his craftsmanship, each part having been carefully painted without relation to its value as a whole. Abnormally developed muscles and colossal weight have been given to the central figures but expression is lacking. Angelo's exaggerated forms usually emphasize and beautify the movement of the human figure or show the effect of a mental struggle upon the body, but here one finds exaggeration without reason, which merely emphasizes a pose. It is perhaps unjust to judge the composition or color until the work is properly placed, but
at present the scheme seems to be a group of vivid colors, used without obedience to the laws of harmony. H. C. R.

Modern Paintings at Schultheis

An unusually fine Pasini is one of the attractive canvases on view at the gallery of the Henry Schultheis Co., 142 Fulton St.
This is the "Falcon Hunters," (formerly owned by a member of the French diplomatic corps) an extremely beautiful landscape with Arab figures and horses, rendered in the manner characteristic of this favorite of collectors. This Pasini contains an extraordinarily beautiful sky, and the treatment of horses and horsemen is exquisite in its minute perfection.

There are few Pasinis publicly owned in America which surpass this rare one.
Schreyer and Pasini, so often associated in collections, are seen here together—a large Schreyer of unusual power.

The Americans at present represented at this gallery are George Inness—two interesting early Italian landscapes; Alexander Wyant, an early, minutely rendered mountain and pasture subject reminiscent of Hudson River tendencies, and very fine in color; two J. Francis Murphys of good quality, an Irving Couse, a large Parton landscape (suggestive of Constable for scope of country depicted), a Bruce Crane,
a Bricher, etc.

Other European pictures of particular attractiveness are a small but charming Daubigny pastoral and a fine Jan Mon-chablon, showing an expanse of French hill country through which winds a country road dotted here and there with shade trees. The Monchablon has a fine quality of color throughout.

Homer in Brooklyn.

The Trustees of the Brooklyn Museum announce a Loan Exhibition of Water Colors by Winslow Homer, Oct. 16—Nov.
7, inclusive. The exhibition will include 58 watercolors, in addition to the group of twelve owned by the Museum, and obtained from the Estate of the artist. The loaners of the collections drawn upon were generally in such intimate relations with the artist as to give them exceptional opportunities in the choice of their pictures. The major portion of these watercolors has never previously been shown in public; the exhibition, will, however, include eight of the important subjects, which were shown at the Winslow Homer Memorial Exhibition held at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 1911.

Among the collections, of especial interest will be those loaned by Mr. Charles S. Homer, the brother of the artist, and executor of his Estate, and by Mr. and Mrs.
N. T. Pulsifer, who are the present owners of the watercolors, which originally belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Valentine.
This last collection includes some sixteen watercolors painted at Houghton Farm, in Orange County, about 1878, and two Gloucester subjects, painted in 1873. Twenty pictures, none of which have ever been seen in public, are loaned by Mr. Charles W. Gould. The subjects are very evenly distributed between those from Tynemouth, Prout's Neck, the Adirondacks and the South. Among the latter is a watercolor counterpart of the "Gulf Stream" with interesting variations from the famous oil painting of the same name. The only oil shown has the interest of being the last one finished by Winslow Homer (dating 1909). Among other contributors to the exhibition are Mr. Sidney Curtis, Mr. W. A.
Putnam and Mr. Walter Crittenden.

Autumn Exhibition at the Daniel Gallery.

The reopening of the Daniel Gallery at 2 West 47 Street with its group of modernists, many of whom have had wide recognition, is of especial interest. The general effect is brilliance of color and the spirit of summer is reflected in the work shown.

550 FIFTH AVE.

NEW YORK

The most important canvas is a full length portrait of a woman by Man Ray. One should not look at this from the same viewpoint as at a more conservative work but after acquaintance the human quality is appreciated, surface details are eliminated
and the inner character revealed in a fascinating way. "The Coast," by Harry Berlin, a man of different persuasion, although of no less virility, is strong both in design and color. W. Zorach is essentially a decorator and his two canvases "The Valley" and "Mountain Paths" show consistency in his realization of surface. They are poetic works which it takes time to appreciate.

Alfred Maurer shows brilliancy of color and Preston Dickinson, unlike so many "modernists," is choice in his work. His landscape has much in common with the primitive. There are few exhibitions in New York where one does not find the Brooklyn Bridge. In this instance Samuel Halpert's portrayal of this subject is effective. Charles Demuth's "Sensations of Times Square" invites careful consideration.
The painter aims to convey sensations
through the abstract significance of form,
as Mr. Walther, who exhibits at the Mon-tross Gallery, strives in his "Melody to Grief" to give such an abstract emotion as would music. H. C. R.

Americans at Levy's.

An important early canvas by Thomas Moran is one of the recent sales by John Levy from his gallery at 14 E. 46 St. This picture, which has been on exhibition at the gallery, is "The Flight Into Egypt," dated 1861, an individual treatment of a favorite subject in which the figures are subordinated to the landscape. The composition, an oblong one, shows the pyramids in the left distance and the virgin and child with St. Joseph coming through the rich tropical verdure at the right. The tropical growths are rendered with masterly precision and with remarkable color effect. A rich and luminous sky overspreads the darkened earth, and an air of mystery and enchantment pervades the whole. This canvas is a distinct contribution to the limited number of significant religious pictures painted by Americans.

Ralston's Opening Show.

The Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., are showing to open their season, several works of interest. There is a notable portrait of an elderly man by Watson Gordon, the successor of Raeburn as President of the Royal Scottish Academy. Another male portrait is by Lawrence, and still another of the Duc de Belfort, by Rigaud. Lely presents Miss Elizabeth Norbonne. A large Venetian Ziem glows with light and color, and there are in addition examples of Jean Raoux, Adolph Marais, Th. de Bock and
R. W. van Boskerck.

Works by Picabia and Picasso.

The Modern Gallery at 500 Fifth Ave., an annex to the Photo Secession Gallery, long at 291 Fifth Ave., has been opened with a collection of works by Picabia, Picasso and Braque, to which the manager, Mario de Zayas, the caricaturist, has added an alphabetical fantasy on paper entitled "Elle," which has as its centre a throbbing scrap from an actual feminine love letter. This is evidently a reply to M. Picabia's "Voila Elle," which is an exploding "There She Blows," combination of a gun and a pneumatic tube.

Picabia's "Ecce Homo" is a good specimen of a mechanical drawing. Picasso and Braque pipe in crayon, water color and oil much the same tune as does Picabia in his other contributions. There are, in addition, examples of primitive African sculpture, cubistic sculptural contortions by Adolf Wolf and some rare picturesque photographs of phases of the city and its life by Mr. Alfred Stieglitz himself.

Loan Exhibition at Montclair.

A new Loan Exhibition is open at the Montclair Museum, and will continue until Oct. 31. It comprises a choice collection of Etchings by Whistler, Wood-Engravings by Timothy Cole, and Colored Prints by S. Arlet Edwards, the last loaned by Mr. William B. Dickson, and a picture by Mr. Charles Warren Eaton. A private view was held on the evening of Oct. 8.

ART AND ARTISTS.

One by one the artists are coming back to town, all with rugged coats of tan and some with sketches which exhale the true spirit of the woods and sea.

Adolf Borie, the Philadelphia painter, has taken a N. Y. studio in the Bryant Park Building, 80 W. 40 St.

Allan Tucker is sailing on the St. Paul to-day to take up hospital work in France.

Birge-Harrison is painting at New Hope, Pa.

Charles T. Connick of Boston, who was awarded a gold medal for stained glass windows, at the Pan-Pacific Exposition, has recently installed a large window in the new chapel of Boston University.

Mr. W. B. McCormick, the well-known art writer, is to do hereafter the art criticisms for the N. Y. Evening Mail.

G. L. Nelson has closed his cottage at Kent, Conn., and is back with a noteworthy canvas or two and sunny little sketches full of spontaneity and charm, as a result of his summer's work. He has taken a studio at 15 West 67 Street.

William R. Leigh has returned from a fruitful western trip with interesting bits of Arizona and more of his well-known characterizations of Hopi Indians and their haunts.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Watrous are back in town after a summer of rest from work at their Lake George residence.

Arthur Crisp has returned from Maine and is again at work in his studio.

A portrait of President Wilson by Marian Swinton, which is individual and an able rendering of character, is on exhibition at the Holland Gallery, 5th Ave. and 42 St.

The National Society of Craftsmen announces the 9th Annual Exhibition of Arts and Crafts, to be held in Dec. at the galleries of the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St.

Richard Maynard painted several portraits in Utica during the summer.

Francis C. Jones found his studio a pleasant summer resort and devoted himself to finishing some decorations destined to grace his apartment.

Robert Aitken is completing an imposing memorial to Elihu Burritt, "The Learned Blacksmith," which will be placed in New Britain, Conn., where this man of phenomenal intellect and kindly spirit was born and died. He was an advocate of the abolition of war and spent his life in trying to promote universal peace. Mr. Aitken's work is appealingly symbolical.

The Hotel des Artistes at 1 West 67 Street is started at last—a gaping hole, daily growing to formidable dimensions.

The four striking canvases by Ignatio Zuloaga recently shown at a local gallery, are to become part of the wall in the residence of Mr. Willard D. Straight. They will be sunk in as panels.

Sherry E. Fry is modelling the figure for a monument to Captain Abner for Tompkinsville, Conn., and is also completing the memorial to Major Clarence E. Barrett soon to be unveiled in the little park to the left of Borough Hall, Staten Island.

Carl C. Gruppe's interesting collection of works by modern masters of Holland is shown at Braun's Gallery. Sketches and finished pictures, exchanged with Mr. Gruppe during the many years he worked among these men are displayed. Joseph Israels, Sluyter, Neuhys, Von Bartels and Blommers are all represented.

Prince Troubetsky has been modelling a portrait of Mrs. Leonard Thomas at Newport. It has rare charm and a vital quality most impressive. The arrangement of gown and scarf is unusually effective.

Hayley Lever spent the summer at Gloucester, Mass.

Leon Kroll has moved his studio from 2231 Broadway to the Clinton, 253 W. 42 St.

E. L. Henry has returned from Cragmoor, N. Y., to his studio in the Chelsea, 222 W. 23 St.

T. S. Perry is back from Hancock, N. H., and at his studio at 312 Marlborough St., Boston.

Susan Ricker Knox has returned from York Harbor, Me., to 119 E. 19 St.

Edwin Booth Grossmann is at his studio at 116 E. 63 St., after a summer at Saratoga Springs.

Edward Dufner is again in his studio at 318 W. 57 St.

Helen Watson Phelps is back in her studio at the Sherwood, 58 W. 57 St., from Elizabethtown, N. Y.

Elliot Daingerfield has returned from his summer studio at Blowing Rock, N. C., to 222 W. 59 St.

An exhibition of works of 23 American painters is on to Nov. 9, at the Rhode Island School of Design.

Mary Dale Clark gave on Tuesday a private view to inaugurate her studio for direct color photography at 665 Fifth Ave.

An exhibition of original drawings by Xavier Martinez is on to Oct. 23, at the Hill Tolerton Print Rooms, 107 Grant Ave., San Francisco.

Eliseo Meifren, a Spanish painter, has opened a studio at 35 W. 39 St. He was recently director of the School of Fine Arts at Mallorca in the Balearic Isles and received a gold medal at the Pan-Pacific Exposition. An exhibition of his works will be held at the Knoedler galleries.

Charles Grafly has lately made a bust of Frank Duveneck. It was done at Bass Rocks on Cape Ann.

WORCESTER ACQUISITIONS.

The Worcester Museum has acquired a marble bust of Marcus Aurelius Caesar as a youth. There has also been recently purchased a Roman cinerarium of marble dating from about 100 A. D., with an inscription which translated runs "Sacred to the divine Manes of Nicanor. Cincia Trophine and Hermes erected it to their well deserving fellow slave." There are also a small triptych in alabaster executed in Southern Italy in the XV century by one of the Gaggini, a couple of Italian XV century Renaissance marble columns, a portrait of a Venetian nobleman by Veronese, a Copley pastel of Joseph Barrel, miniatures by Malbone of members of the Farley family and an oil by Homer Martin called "Twilight near Honfleur."

IN MEMORY OF F. KEPPEL.

As a memorial of his father, the late Frederick Keppel, Mr. David Keppel has presented to Columbia University, of which his brother Frederick Paul Keppel is dean, a collection of modern etchings, which have just been placed on view in the library. There are nearly fifty examples and the gift is named the Frederick Keppel Memorial Collection of Modern Etchings. Among those represented are Millet, Corot, Bracquemond, Legros, Daubigny, Lepere, Lalanne, Whistler and Pennell.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 23, 1915.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

GREAT TAPESTRY SOLD.

One of the most important Gothic tapestries in the world has just been acquired from Messrs. P. W. French & Co. by Mr. Edward A. Faust, President of the St. Louis Art League, at a price said to exceed five figures. This is the "Prophecy of Nathan," seen last year for the first time at the tapestry exhibitions in Buffalo and Brooklyn, and that will occupy the place of honor at the coming tapestry exhibition in Philadelphia. It is a wonderful composition that pictures the story of David and Bathsheba in three scenes, and that was evidently created by the same designer from the same models, and woven in Brussels on the same looms as the famous David set in the Cluny Museum. The tapestry measures 12 feet by 22 and commands the immediate admiration of all who see it, although it does not possess the paint qualities that some insist on, being an exemplification of the most extreme use of rib-and-hatching contrast to separate figures and motifs and produce gradations of shade and hue. It is said to have been formerly in the Royal Spanish collection, and after that in the Chateau de Vierville in Calvados. There is no other tapestry of equal importance west of the Alleghanies.

LEAGUE WITHDRAWS AWARDS.

The Municipal Art League of Chicago has withdrawn its prizes awarded annually since 1903 for exhibitions by members of the Chicago Artists' Club. Such action was foreseen last year, when the artists, led by Lawton Parker, objected because the women did not have artists on the Committee of Awards. A group of artists refused to hang pictures, claiming the women had no authority to award prizes, though they could make purchases if they chose. The plan to discontinue the awards, when presented in resolution form by Mrs. W. F. Young, was adopted unanimously.

RICKETTS APPEAL HEARD.

Arguments on a petition for the reversal of a decision of Judge Carpenter, holding Robb R. Ricketts, formerly of the defunct firm of Moulton & Ricketts, art dealers in contempt of court, were begun in Chicago last week before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Ricketts failed to obey an order of Frank L. Wean, referee in bankruptcy, that he turn over the surrender value of a life insurance policy for $5,000, of which his wife, Jennie B. Ricketts, is the beneficiary, to the trustee in bankruptcy, Frank M. McKey. The surrender value was $1,210.27 on March 15, 1914, when the involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed. Roy D. Keehn, attorney for Mr. Ricketts, contends that the order of the referee was void and unenforceable and that, therefore, the commitment of the petitioner under contempt proceedings was likewise invalid.

MUSEUMS NOT MAUSOLEUMS.

"An art museum should be an art museum, and not an art mausoleum," said Mr. Charles L. Hutchinson, president of the Chicago Art Institute speaking in the rooms of the Wilkauer Art Society last week. His topic was "Development of the Art Movement in the West." "Every one to whom is entrusted the conduct of an art museum asks himself often and seriously what is the proper function of an art museum," said Mr. Hutchinson. "In former years this was answered that it should preserve and care for permanent collections entrusted to its keeping and keep the galleries open under more or less severe restrictions to the public. The art museum of today, if it properly fulfills its function, is no longer a mere storehouse. It must offer to the public changing exhibition of contemporaneous art. "It is not the sole mission of art to amuse, nor is art alone a mission for moral instruction. Here is another subject worthy of discussion—the value of an ideal. May we not attribute the present war in Europe to the fact that the world has grown rich and strong in material things at a rapid pace during the past twenty-five years, while its advance in morals has in no wise kept pace? Art still has a mission. It is a luxury for the rich, but a necessity for the poor." Mr. Hutchinson told of art as it made European countries famous for several centuries, and inquired: "Is there any reason why there should not be another renaissance of art? Are not present conditions favorable for such a movement? Why should not our own country be the center of a new renaissance?"

TO SAVE EXPOSITION BUILDINGS.

The military board headed by Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell to decide the fate of the Exposition buildings, which stand on government property at San Francisco will report to the Secretary of War. The original agreement with the government was that all buildings on its property be down within four months after the close of the Exposition. Among these buildings, which have been listed as desirable to save, are the Palace of Fine Arts, the Missouri Building, the Japanese pavilion and the Enlisted Men's Club. The board will determine what buildings if any are suitable for military purposes.

SAFETY FIRST POSTER PRIZES.

The Safety First Society of Greater Detroit offers at the current Safety First Federation of America convention 20 prizes for a poster for the whole country. The competition will close about Jan. 1 and there will be prizes of $300, $100, $50, $30 and $20.

NEW RODINS COMING.

Four of the latest works of Auguste Rodin will soon arrive here, following their purchase by Col. Samuel P. Colt, of Bristol, R. I. The group contains "The Hawk and the Dove," "Eve," much sought by the Metropolitan Museum, "Psyche" and "Le Lion Dououreux." The desire of the sculptor not to separate any of the four in their sale led to his refusal to sell the "Eve," and finally to their purchase by Col. Colt.

MINN'PLS MUSEUM PURCHASES.

A collection of Cypriote pottery and glass has been recently purchased by the Museum from the Dunwoody permanent fund. It is from the duplicate material of the Cesnola collection in the Metropolitan Museum. Seventeen drawings and etchings by Joseph Pennell that have been on exhibition at the Museum now become a part of the permanent collection. The Museum itself purchased fourteen, and the others were bought for the Museum by John R. Van Derlip, President of the Fine Arts Society.

CLAIMS NOT A ROMNEY.

A special cable to the Sun from London, dated Oct. 20, says: "Mr. Henry E. Huntington, nephew of the late Collis P. Huntington, is suing in the English courts to recover the greater part of the purchase price of a portrait of Mrs. Siddons and her sister, Fanny Kemble, sold as the work of Romney. The case will come to trial in the near future. "Mr. Huntington paid $100,000 for the picture under a guarantee of its genuineness. Subsequently he came to doubt the genuineness of the work and sent it to London, where it was examined by eminent 'experts.' The examination resulted in a difference of opinion. "Mr. Huntington contends in his suit that the painting is not a genuine Romney and that it is worth only $1,000. The defendants will call witnesses in rebuttal to establish that the picture is really what it was sold for. "Although the transaction was put through in New York, the suit is brought in England and will be tried in London for the sake of convenience, since practically all of the experts on Romney's work live here. "An application was recently made to the court to have Mr. Huntington attend the trial and testify. Mr. Huntington's counsel opposed this application and the court directed that his testimony be taken by a commission in New York. The Court of Appeals later reversed this decision and ruled that Mr. Huntington must come here and testify."

FALSE AND FORGED BRONZES.

Referring to an article in the August 14 issue of the AMERICAN ART NEWS from its London correspondent the London Star says: "Americans who buy bronzes in London are the special mark of the producers of a number of faked bronzes of a particularly fine artistic finish, which, it is stated, are extremely difficult to detect from the general antique. "The faking of bronzes, of course, is no new thing in the art world, for bronzes, unfortunately, lend themselves easily to the art of the unscrupulous but clever craftsman. "It is most difficult to decide the authenticity of bronzes," an official at one of the museums told a 'Star' man, "and I know bronzes in several private collections about which I should be very loth to pass judgment."

West-end Expert Opinions.

"West-end art dealers also agreed that the faked bronze was extremely difficult to pick out from that made by the master hand of some Italian sculptor, but they did not know of many high-priced fakes on the London market, as the circle of collectors was small, and, in the main, fairly expert. "It is the Americans who are deceived," an art dealer said, "and it is to America that these fakes go chiefly. The standard of art knowledge is not so high there, and many spurious bronzes pass muster in the private collections of America which would be spotted very quickly here."

Fakes from Italy.

"Personally, I doubt if the best fakes are made in London, for we generally find they come from Italy. "There they are found by people with a little knowledge, whereas if they were put straight into a sale here there might be awkward inquiries as to their history. "Tourists in Italy are still deluded into the belief that they have picked up a valuable bronze in an out-of-the-way village, and bring it home, expecting to pay for their holiday out of the profits. In that way many of these faked figures from Italy find their way to the saleroom."

Victimised Americans.

"As a matter of fact, the London art world generally regards Italy as being drained dry of the genuine antique, and the fakers realizing this have been devoting increasing attention to the American market. The AMERICAN ART NEWS, for instance, specially warns its readers to be on their guard, and 'L. G. S.' gives there a list of the latest fakes of a gang which, he says, "is working in a big way."

HENRY HUNTINGTON ILL.

Mr. Henry E. Huntington, the well-known art collector and bibliophile, and nephew of the late Collis P. Huntington, who has been dangerously ill at his home, 5th Ave. and 57 St., is happily much improved.

ENGLAND EXPORTS PICTURES.

According to the report of an English Commission, there have been about 500 old masters exported within the last few years, mostly to America, including: 52 Rembrandts, 29 Gainsboroughs, 27 Van Dycks, 26 Romneys, 25 Franz Hals, 21 Rubens, 12 Hobbemas and 4 Raphaels.

The English Commission does not favor the Italian plan of forbidding the export of art works, but proposes placing funds at the disposal of the National Gallery for the purchase of art works coming on the market. It is proposed, among other changes, to increase the parliamentary annual grant for this museum from £5,000 to £25,000.

NEW STATUE OF KAISER.

The design of the new equestrian statue of the Kaiser to be placed at Heidelberg has been completed. It represents the Emperor with a marshal's baton, and beneath a bas relief depicting the struggle of the Knight and the Dragon is the inscription: "Germany has never been vanquished when she has been united." Another bas relief representing the crowning of fallen heroes is inscribed: "Through life and death toward victory."

Among the series of the Pennell etchings and drawings is a new one, the Minneapolis Flour Mills.

TWO YOUNG TITUS PORTRAITS.

Many readers of the ART NEWS will have noticed the similarity, in pose and general aspect, of the Rembrandt portrait of his son Titus, reproduced last week and reported sold from the Althorp House collection by Earl Spencer and that which is in the Altman collection at the Metropolitan Museum. The open eyed, smiling youthful charm which irradiates from both and the similarity of costume emphasize the likeness, not alone, as is but natural of the subject, but also of the two works. The Althorp picture, which dates from 1648, shows Titus at about the age of 7 or 8, while that in the Altman dates from 1655 when he was circa 15. In the Altman picture there appears the emphasis of light and shade which is so characteristic of the master's mature art, while in that from Althorp the face is almost entirely in light and most delicately modelled. Both are on canvas, the Altman 65 centimetres high by 56 wide and the Spencer 76 high by the same width.

PATERSON TEXTILE DISPLAY.

The Paterson loan exhibition of textiles now on in the City Hall, Paterson, N. J., until Oct. 31 is important as an accomplishment, but is even more important as a promise for the future. It is held in the city that is the center of silk manufacture in America, where a knowledge of what has been woven in silk in past ages, can be made immediately productive in the form of improved products and better designs. The expenses of the exhibition are being met by the local Chamber of Commerce that appreciates the value to Paterson of a form of publicity that helps local manufacturers to raise the quality, as well as increase the quantity of their output.

The leading American museums and dealers have co-operated generously. The exhibition has been assembled, arranged and cataloged by a man who is familiar with ancient textiles, as well as with the making of exhibitions, Dr. Meyer-Riefstahl, who was publicity manager for the extraordinary exhibition of Mohammedan art held in Munich four years ago.

Sumptuous Catalog Planned.

The purpose of an exhibition like this is not merely to thrill the amateur lovers of the antique, or even to inspire to higher efforts the men behind the looms. Unless a permanent and worthy record of the exhibits is published, the effect will be but temporary. A superb folio volume lavishly illustrated, not in halftone but in more pleasing and accurate form, was created as a memorial of the Munich exhibition. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Paterson committee will be able to bring out the work that they are planning and to which they invite subscriptions on their historical exhibition of textiles, to contain a hundred photogravure plates, with others in color, a short history of the textile art as exemplified by the exhibits, and a complete catalog of the exhibits prepared by Dr. Riefstahl. Nothing has helped Germany in recent years toward raising the merit of German art industry so much as the huge tomes that assemble for the student and manufacturer adequate pictures and descriptions of the masterpieces of the past, in textiles and furniture and architecture, as well as in painting and sculpture.

Practical Side of Display.

Again I wish to return to the practical side of this exhibition. It is being held in the city that it can help most. Whether the citizens of Chicago or Minneapolis know anything about the history of design in silk, counts for but little in the development and growth of these cities. But for Paterson such knowledge is vital. It should permeate the atmosphere and be the foundation of the whole educational system there. A permanent textile museum as at Lyons and Crefeld should be established to supplement with actual examples the teaching of the library of textile books that should be the most extensive in the world, at least on the subject of silk. The United States already leads the world in quantity of silk manufactures, why not in quality also?

The present exhibition was assembled with almost incredible speed and under extraordinary difficulties, and the catalog was printed as rapidly as a daily newspaper. So that it would be unjust to cavil at doubtful attributions and the sometimes awkward English. The exhibition as a whole is well selected and well arranged, and the inexpensive catalog should be in the possession of all those interested in the textile arts, and on the shelves of public libraries in cities where there are important textile industries. The introduction that shows praiseworthy familiarity with Folke's "Seidenweberei" will be found especially valuable by contrast with the textile articles in general encyclopedias and books of reference in English. It shows briefly the development of textiles from ancient Egypt to modern Europe, and shows an understanding of texture that is as welcome as it is unusual.

Of course there are numerous examples of Coptic fabrics in the exhibition. I hope that the permanent catalog will describe these more fully. Perhaps it might have been better to omit these non-silk stuffs, even though they do fill an important gap in the history of pattern. I feel that an exhibition should be organized along the simplest possible lines, and with the fewest possible divergent suggestions to mislead the unwary and the inexperienced.

Some Notable Exhibits.

Silk brocade No. 31, with elephants, griffins and hippocamps in round medallions, red and yellow and green, is an important specimen showing the influence of Sassanid-Persian upon Byzantine design. It is loaned by the Cooper Union Museum of Decorative Art, from which Museum comes also interesting XIII and XIV century Lucca silks. Among English embroideries the "star" piece, one of the most precious in the world, is loaned by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and was made in England circa 1290. Of XV-XVIII century Italian textiles XV-XVIII century Spanish, XVII and XVIII century French and of Hispano-Arabic, Persian, Turkish and other Oriental cloths there is a great variety. There are two picture tapestries, one Louis XIV. Gobelin and one Gothic from the early XV century. The description of the latter might have been made more adequate by reference to my catalog of the tapestry exhibition a year ago at the Avery Library.

Among museums and collectors who have loaned numbers are Boston Museum, Brooklyn Museum, Museum of Decorative Art, Cooper Institute; Museum of Cleveland, Ohio; Museum of R. I. School of Design, Prov., R. I.; Metropolitan Museum, Horatio G. Curtis, Boston; Henry G. Dearth, Dr. Arnold Genthe and J. P. Morgan, N. Y.; Miss R. A. Polhemus, Brooklyn; Dr. Denman Ross, Boston; J. H. Wade, Cleveland, Ohio; Hervey E. Wetzell, Boston, and Duveen Brothers, French & Co., Funaro & Keller, Dikran G. Kelekian, Hagop Keorkyan, Loo & Co., Luigi Orselli, Dr. Tabet, Robert de Rustafjaell and Yamanaka & Co., all of N. Y. Geo. Leland Hunter.

PLAYING THE GAME.

Fifteen years ago Richard L. Miller left his home in St. Louis for Paris to study art. * * * He returned to the Mound City last November, and in the year since is reputed to have made $30,000 painting portraits of well-known St. Louisians. * * * The explanations is incidental to qualifying Mr. Miller as an artist. When questioned as to the truth of the story that he had made $30,000 in the last year, Mr. Miller replied:

"That's not a proper thing to ask. I may make more and I may make less than that amount. Art is not a matter of money."

"In this country they measure a man's worth by the money he makes. In Paris the question is 'is his work original?' There are few good things in this country because of that miserable 'best seller idea'—that cheap catering to the popular taste."

"That Harrison Fisher stuff, for instance, is all bosh. He's just giving the people what they want. I know Fisher personally. He has told me often that he was 'just playing the game' and giving them the 'dope' they wanted."

From the standpoint of art, Mr. Fisher's work may be all that Artist Miller says it is. From the standpoint of finances it is considerably above that of Mr. Miller's own revenue returns, and from that of recognition considerably superior to that of the St. Louisian. All of which probably doesn't concern either Mr. Miller or Mr. Fisher a great deal, but merely opens up a field for speculation as to the more desirable in life, "fame to-morrow or a comfortable living to-day?" * * *

While Mr. Miller evidently has a very high appreciation of what constitutes real art, he nevertheless recognizes there is another angle to the situation that seldom is seen by artists who refuse to "play the game." Many a man of great talent starts in painting, in literature and in sculpture with very high ideals. If he finds the public unappreciative of his work along the established technical lines, few can see any real reason for him turning aside to fill a popular want and reap a financial harvest. * * * In the division of his moments he is practicing real economics by providing for himself and his, looking after to-day and hoping for the morrow. There is nothing particularly inspiring in a starvation career to-day that people a hundred years from now may recognize you as a genius. For again, they may not.—Little Rock Democrat.

MUSEUM PICTURES CRITICIZED.

The November number of the Forum, today, contains an article by Mr. Willard Huntington Wright, on "The Paintings of the Metropolitan Museum," which is a severe criticism on the institution's standing as a factor in art education. Opening with a statement that "Predjudicial complacency has always been one of the most corrupting and disintegrating factors of a national existence" the writer goes on to say:

"No better example of this spurious complacency in a nation can be brought forth than the attitude of the American public toward the paintings in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. We have come to consider this institution as of genuine aesthetic value, possessed of much of the best graphic art; and we deem it adequate to meet the national demand for an educational exhibition of the world's greatest painting eras."

"The Metropolitan Museum," continues the writer, "warrants no such attitude, however. From the standpoint of its paintings (to which this article is devoted) it is distinctly a second-rate exhibition. It is not representative of either the great art of the past or the present. Nor has it any educational value save a minor one. Not one great school of painting is shown to advantage by a comprehensive selection of canvases."

An Extreme View.

Mr. Wright opines that "fully fifty per cent. of the pictures in the Museum are worthless, no matter what viewpoint we assume toward them and that by their removal the Museum would be a more truly educational show. It would reveal," he says, "the development of art to better advantage, for it would then approach nearer to a homogeneous display, and would thereby create a more accurate impression of art history. But even with an intelligent elimination of all the worthless work, there would be but little to recommend the Museum as a great national art institution, for even when we find pictures of the principal men of the past we approach only from a distance the true greatness of ancient painting. The majority of the pictures of the masters are not examples of their best work, nor even their characteristic work; in many cases, in fact, they are representations of their most inferior work, and can readily be dispensed with. Fully three-fourths of the canvases of the leading graphic creators give no adequate impression of the artist's genius. In the entire collection there are less than a dozen pictures which are coequal in rank with the greatest art."

The author condemns the system of hanging and says "the arrangement that prevails is chaotic and meaningless."

Individual Works Criticized.

Then follows a discussion on how individual painters are represented, from which the following excerpts are made:

"Let us first look specifically into the Museum's offerings. To begin with it might be well to name twenty of the greatest representative painters the world has produced and to set down briefly the manner in which they are represented. As to who these twenty are is a subject which might be open to infinite discussion, but the following names, I believe, will be generally accepted without cavil: Michelangelo, Rubens, El Greco, Veronese, Giotto, Tintoretto, Masaccio, Renoir, Cézanne, Leonardo da Vinci, Giorgione, Titian, Goya, Delacroix, Borrassá, Rembrandt, Pollaiuolo, Velasquez, Poussin and Ingres."

"Borrassá," says Mr. Wright in part, "is represented by a large altar piece, but unfortunately it is a detached bit of beauty. * * * But what of the great Italian primitive, Giotto. * * * there is nothing of his. * * * Masaccio * * * is not represented even by a copy. * * * Pollaiuolo * * * is shown in one frieze of disputed authorship. * * * Leonardo da Vinci—there is no picture by the great Florentine. * * * The most glaring omission * * * is of Michelangelo. * * * Rembrandt, however, is well represented. * * * Of Giorgione * * * there is nothing. * * * Of Rubens, the greatest painter the world has produced, * * * the Metropolitan Museum has two fairly representative works. * * * Of Velasquez * * * there are four examples—enough in number if they were all of his best work. But two of them are undoubtedly copies from the Prado and the Hermitage * * * and the sole picture * * * from the brush of Titian can be ranked only among his very worst works. * * *

"Again, there are only three Tintoretto's. * * * Veronese * * * has only one canvas here, 'Mars and Venus United by Love,' which is inferior to many in the Louvre and the National Gallery. * * * Next to Rubens' 'Wolf and Fox Hunt,' the best picture in the Museum is the El Greco. * * * The Poussin * * * is small and simple, but good. * * * it is hung badly and high. * * * Goya * * * is represented by a painted Capriccio of little value except as a record; by 'A Jewess of Tangier' which is even less consequential; and by the Portrait of Don Sebastian Martinez, which fortunately is one of the most purely beautiful bits of painting of the collection. * * * Of Delacroix there is only one canvas. * * * David * * * is not represented at all. Nor is Ingres. * * * But one of the most unforgivable and unnecessary omissions in the entire collection is the case of Renoir, who is represented by a single canvas. Cézanne * * * has only one small work. * * * His canvases can be had at a price much lower than they will bring five years hence and at a tenth of what they will bring in twenty. In fifty they will outbid Rembrandt. * * * Yet our Museum has recently bought an utterly worthless canvas by Cecilia Beaux. * * * With its list of second-class men the Museum is less deficient. * * * The Netherlands painters are better represented. * * * But there are no works * * * by Dirck Bouts, Van Outwater, Jerome Bosch, Brower, Jacob Cornelius, Paul Potter and Van Gogh. * * * While the British school is adequately represented as to numbers, the works are generally far from being good. * * * There are no Thornhills, no Burne Jones, no Holman Hunt's, no Ramsey's. And though Brangwyn is a poor painter, he is of sufficient importance to be shown. * * *

Italians and Americans.

"The Italian school," concludes Mr. Wright, "is the worst represented of all. * * * Turning to the German School we find a few good pictures. * * * The pictures of the Spanish School are few and far between. * * * We now come to the American School. These pictures are truly representative of this country up to ten years ago, but beyond that they do not adequately go. There are better artists working in New York now than the great majority of those hung in the Museum. * * * In this American exhibition there are, to be sure, many charming and competent works. * * * Quantity, not quality, would appear to be the keynote of the Museum's policy. * * *

LONDON LETTER.

London, Oct. 13, 1915.

An admirable exhibition is that of the London Salon of Photography now on in the galleries of the Royal Watercolor Society and showing distinct originality in the manner of its arrangement. Frames, for instance, have been altogether dispensed with, and the photographs are seen beneath a sheet of plain glass, resting upon nails. This method has distinct advantages, for not only does it enable foreign exhibitors to contribute with greater facility and so familiarize our own photographic artists with foreign work, but it enables the merits of each print to be examined with the distraction of possibly inappropriate surroundings. Each successive year these exhibitions of the London Salon testify to the strides which photographic science is making in the realm of art, gradually solving the problems of color and treating the questions of composition and lighting with the skill demanded in ordinary painting. Happily very few pictures connected with the war are on view, the aim of the majority of exhibitors evidently being to achieve perfection of technique and handling rather than to reach notoriety through sensationalism of subject.

It was a happy thought on the part of Messrs. Yamanaka of New Bond Street, to organize, on behalf of the Red Cross Society, an exhibition of Japanese works of art belonging to English collectors. Over 60 leading English collectors have responded to the appeal made and have sent of their zest, so that when the exhibition opened on Oct. 11, it was found that it comprised much of great interest both in old lacquer work, ivory sculpture, metal work and prints. Many of our English connoisseurs have in the past enjoyed exceptional opportunities for acquiring rare and early specimens of various kinds of Japanese arts and crafts, while others have specialized in the finest of modern handiwork, so that the greatest variety exists. Among the exhibits is an interesting collection of old pottery dating from the 7th Century B. C., some 12th Century sword furniture and some particularly beautiful iron of the 14th and 15th Centuries. In all, some 3,000 pieces have been loaned. England's alliance with Japan in the present war makes the co-operation between this distinguished firm and English collectors particularly appropriate and Messrs. Yamanaka are to be complimented on the graceful thought which prompted their action.

This month is to see the completion by Mr. Lee Warner of the Medici Society, of the Quattrocentenary Edition of Vasari's "Lives," as well as an illustrated booklet of "Twelve Scenes from the Life of Christ, after Duccio," with notes on the pictures by Mr. G. F. Hill of the British Museum. All these booklets, issued under the Ricardi Press, are of such uniform quality and so excellent as regards type, matter and general production that Mr. Warner's announcement will be hailed with pleasure by many on are booklover.

It is good to know that when the war is ended, Great Britain is not to be at the mercy of any unsightly memorials to its dead soldiers, which it may please local authorities or committees to erect. An influential association, called the Civic Arts Association has been formed, with the laudable object of discouraging the erection of monuments which shall detract from the beauty of public places in lieu of adding to them and it is hoped that corporations, and also private donors, will avail themselves of the advice which the Association is prepared to furnish. By means of offering prizes for suitable designs and by organizing exhibitions, the Association hopes to put itself into touch with the artists best fitted for the work, and eventually to secure for them the commissions for the principal undertakings of the kind. The Committee is an important one, containing the names of persons distinguished in various departments of art and science. With so laudable an object in view, few will grudge the humble five shillings which constitutes the annual subscription.

The first week in November will see the sale at Glendining's of the Japanese collection formed by the late W. L. Behrens, who made a special feature of fine netsuke, medicine boxes and sword ornaments. A number of Buddhist carvings and shrines, as well as some Chinese antiques are included. L. G-S.

BUDAPESTH'S HALS.

The Budapesth Fine Art Museum, according to the Kunstchronik, has a picture by Franz Hals, from the Paris collection of Moritz Kann, representing a handsome young man. It was exhibited at the 1911 Paris exhibition of 17th century Dutch masters, and was reproduced in W. R. Bode's "Life and Works of Franz Hals," published in 1914. The original drawing likewise appeared in the catalog of drawings of old masters issued by the Stadel Institute of Frankfurt last year.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

Japanese Art.

Mr. Mitsuo Komatsu of Tokio has consigned to the Anderson Galleries for unrestricted sale a fine collection of Japanese prints, original drawings, and books, which goes on public exhibition Oct. 30, preliminary to the sale on the evenings of Nov. 3 and 4. The collection contains a complete set of the "36 Views of Fuji," by Hiroshige, 25 of his "36 Views of Yedo," and a complete set of "22 Stations of Tokaido." There are seven of the set of "Mother Love" by Utamaro, and many other examples of his work, including the famous triptych, "Girls Gathering Awabi Shells." A score of the famous artists of Japan are represented in the collection.

Boston Coin Sale.

John E. Burton of Milwaukee was a coin collector as well as a collector of books. His collection, which embraces rare American and foreign gold, silver and copper coins, will be sold by the Anderson Galleries on the afternoon of Nov. 5. The collection is unusually rich in gold coins, the division including a very fine Jewish shekel, the earliest Jewish coin, and some examples of the private gold "slugs" put out in California half a century ago. Among the Ameri-

ing, and $14.50 and $11 documents signed by Charles I and II, respectively. L. W. Gabriel Weiss paid $260 for a letter by Burns to Lady Don of Coates and Miss Belle da Costa Greene $30 for a letter from La Guiccioli alluding to Byron.

At the Wednesday session Mr. Smith was again the chief buyer. He gave $120 for a letter addressed by Henry VIII to Pope Clement and signed unusually "Henricus;" $115 for a document signed by Edward IV; $112.50 for a letter of Queen Elizabeth; $67.50 for a letter of Queen Henrietta Maria; $60 for a letter in latin from Henry VII to the Duke of Milan; $21 for a letter of Cowper; the same amount for a receipt signed "Jno. Driden," and for a letter of Geo. III to the Duke of York, and $15 for a Mss. poem, "Chivalry at a Discount," by Edward Fitzgerald.

Mr. J. B. Soley gave $55 for a document in Latin of Henry VII; Mr. P. F. Madigan $29.50 for two letters of De Quincey. The total for the first two sessions was $3,279.10.

Americana Sold in Phila.

At the sale of a collection of Americana by Stan. V. Henkels in Phila. Oct. 13-14, an Indian Spelling Book by David Zeisberger printed by Henry Miller in 1776 was sold for $47.50. "Father Abraham's Almanac" for the year of our Lord 1777, can copper coins are all the rarities in fine condition. The dates most precious in the eyes of collectors are the cents of 1793, 1799 and 1804. Over $200 a piece has been realized on some occasions for specimens of these dates. The "Liberty Cap" cent of 1793 has an auction record, made in this city in 1910, of $340. The Burton collection has three very fine examples of the earliest Roman bronze coin, the aes, which was a huge affair, thick and round in shape, cast to weigh a pound, in the year 350 B. C.

Joline Sale Part VII.

The book sale season was opened Tuesday at the Anderson Galleries with the offering of the first installment of part VII of the library of the late Adrian H. Joline. Mr. George D. Smith was, as usual, to the fore and paid $610 for an extra-illustrated copy of Ellis' "William Harrison Ainsworth and His Friends," in which appear 165 autograph letters of Ainsworth and other literary material. He also secured for $165 the Mss. of 6 verses of Byron's "Oscar of Alva," with which was an autograph; for $130, an official letter signed by the Duke of Parma, High Chancellor of the Empire under Napoleon I, and for the same amount a letter of Charles I in French to Louis XIII. He further secured for $40 a letter of Elizabeth Barrett Browning; for $28, a letter of Bright to Greeley, on the re-election of Lincoln; for $18 a letter of Brownetched $37. Another, with same title for the year 1762, sold for $22. A folio volume dated London, 1753, by Joseph Besse, treating of the sufferings of the Quakers, went for $24. A Historical Memoir of the Schuylkill Fishing Company with portraits of the members and dated 1830 was sold for $14. The "Boston Imprint" published in 1725 containing the results of the Synods of the Churches of Mass. fetched $13.50.

Fine Collection of Lincolniana.

The first important sale of books of the season will begin Monday next, with the dispersal at the Anderson Galleries of Part I of the library formed by John E. Burton of Milwaukee. This division embraces the Lincolniana, which is so large that five afternoon sessions will be necessary to dispose of it. Mr. Burton was an industrious collector for many years, beginning by acquiring two small collections in the West and then buying from dealers and at auctions in this country and Europe. In the Lambert sale last season one page from Lincoln's Sum Book, showing how the boy Lincoln worked his examples in arithmetic, sold for $360. There are three of these pages in the Burton collection, containing examples, autographs and a stanza by Lincoln. A more personal or characteristic souvenir of Lincoln would be difficult to procure. The pages show the hard mental toil of the youth at night, after the day's work was done in the fields, in 1822 and 1824, when he was educating himself. The Lincoln medals, broadsides and relics—among the latter a lock of his hair—are interesting, and among the books and pamphlets are some items not previously known to bibliographers.

Rare Americana.

Part III of the Burton Library which the Anderson Galleries will sell in five sessions, beginning Nov. 8, contains standard sets and first editions and some very unusual items of Americans, like Covert's "True and Almost Incredible Report," London: 1631; the "Royal Commentaries of Peru," London: 1688; Willard's "Spiritual Desertions," Boston: 1699; Coxe's "Description of Carolina," London: 1741, and "A Poem Suitable to the Present Day," by Beigelow, Worcester: 1776, which was not in the Church library and was unknown to Sabin, Evans and other bibliographers.

GERMAN ART NOTES.

The famous Jan Sorel altar, with a view to avoiding the danger from proximity to the Italian front, has been placed in the store room of the Vienna Imperial State Gallery. Since its restoration in 1881 by Herr Karl Schellein of Vienna it had remained in the church of Obervevllach.

A domestic museum under the skilled direction of Rector Goebel was recently opened at Emmerich-on-the-Rhine. It contains the antiquities of the municipal collection. The first group consists of prehistoric finds from the neighborhood.

The Berlin art exhibition now on has many interesting exhibits. Among them a view of Pontresina by Wilhelm Geissler of Berlin, "Breakfast Table," by Body Wille of Düsseldorf, and a still life by Ludwig Muhrmann, of Dresden.

The exhibition early last spring at Frankfurt of works by Wilhelm Altheim, afforded the admirers of the late master an opportunity of seeing his paintings in collective form, to the number of 30 specimens. Under present conditions special interest attached to a military picture, "The Death of Prince Louis Ferdinand," dated 1892. One of the features of this artist's works is his sparing use of color. A score of etchings completed the varied collection.

Among the works of Max Sievogt lately acquired by the Berlin Copper Plate Cabinet, are a number of etchings, including early impressions of views in the Zoological Garden. Prominent objects are lions, lionesses, tigers and jaguars. Other etchings embrace scenes from "Reineke Fuchs" and "The Prodigal Son."

When a change of address is requested,
both the new and old address should be given. Two weeks' notice is required for changing an address.

DISCONTINUANCES.

If a subscriber wishes his or her paper
discontinued at expiration of his or her subscription, notice to that effect should be sent; otherwise it will be assumed that a continuance is expected and bill will be sent
and payment should follow.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by ex-
perience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

THE OCTOBER BURLINGTON.

Tancred Borenius, in the October number of the Burlington Magazine, writes of Giovanni di Paolo's "Sts. Fabian and Sebastian," owned by Mr. Robert Ross and which reproduced for the first time forms, the front-ispiece. Herbert P. Horne follows with some "Notes on Luca della Robbia" based on Prof. Allan Marquand's work on the Sculptor, and supplemented by original and illuminating notes by the reviewer. Campbell Dodgson discusses "Two New Drawings by Durer in the British Museum," a jousting scene and a cavalcade. Sir Martin Conway has the opening article on the much scattered Bamberg treasury. F. Schmidt-Degener writes of a Dossi-Dossi in the Boyman's Museum;
A. F. Kendrick has the first article on the Tapestries at Eastnor Castle, and C. J.
Holmes writes of an attractive portrait of a woman by Ferdinand Bol owned by W.
R. C. Witt. Lionel Cust talks of the Mona Lisa with particular reference to the work claimed by Mr. John R. Eyre to be another version of the subject, and now Mr. Cust rather unkindly says "apparently added to the increasing number of doubtful old masters in the Museum at Boston, U. S. A."
Roger Fry has an appreciative note on Sir William Van Horne. The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B.
Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

A JUDGE'S CURIOUS CHARGE.

If the published story of the trial of the suit in Philadelphia last week of the artist Gruppe against the collector Kinsley to recover the value of a canvas attributed to Mauve, told in our last issue, is correct—the instructions or charge of Judge Dickinson to the jury—namely that that body would not have to consider whether or not a picture in question was by Mauve, but only whether an agreement to purchase the picture had been made by Kinsley—was a curious, and it seems to us, an illogical one.

The defendant, Kinsley, produced a witness, a young artist named Albers, who testified that the figures on the canvas were not true to Nature, while the forte of Mauve was in making his figures true to Nature. Gruppe's witness, Mr.
Charles F. Haseltine, artist and dealer, on the other hand, testified that the work was unquestionably by Mauve.

Are we to understand that if these witnesses or others, had testified that the picture was a spurious one, that Judge Dickinson would have ruled that Mr. Kinsley was bound by an agreement to take from Mr. Gruppe, at a figure agreed upon beforehand a work
by Mauve, that he was, therefore, bound to accept and pay for, a work that competent authorities declared not to be what the agreement called for? How could the Jury have decided, even on the Judge's charge that Mr. Kinsley was bound to carry out the agreement with Mr. Gruppe, had it not felt, and presumably on Mr. Haseltine's testimony, that the picture was a genuine example of the dead Dutch master?

It is to be hoped that Judge Dickin-
son's ruling will not act as a precedent
in future cases of the kind, for, if it should, of what use is competent testimony on the validity of art works?

THE MUSEUM COMPLIMENTED.

The Metropolitan Museum has "arrived," as the French would say, or in other words, has reached the prominence as an art Institution that the great art Museums of Europe have long enjoyed, one of the chief proofs of which, is the calling into question by writers and critics of the validity or unrepresentative character of some, at least, of their possessions or exhibits.

While there have been sporadic criticisms in the American press, for some years, of this or that work owned and shown at the Metropolitan, it has remained for Mr. William Huntington Wright, extracts from whose article in the current issue of the Forum magazine entitled "The Paintings of the Metropolitan Museum," we give elsewhere in this issue; to make a general and somewhat scathing criticism of the validity and lack of representative character of the pictures—chiefly the Old Masters, in the Museum.

It would appear that Mr. Wright is more desirous of achieving a reputation for erudition in the history of painting, than of endeavoring to accomplish a judicial summing up of the merits and defects of the Museum's pictures, and it would also seem that he is, to judge from his article, not sufficiently aware of the difficulties that any Museum, and especially one in a country still young in art, finds in acquiring not only unquestionably authentic, but even first class or representative examples of artists, and especially of those long dead and gone.

One would really think, in perusing
the article, that Michael Angelos, Da Vincis and Raphaels, could be picked up on the streets of European Capitals any day, and that the easiest thing in the world is to secure old pictures whose authorship will not be questioned, and often by competent authorities.

While there is truth in some of Mr.
Wright's strictures, the majority of these, it seems to us, are hardly fair.
The collections of the greatest European Museums contain questionable and unrepresentative canvases, many of them. Why then, should the Metropolitan be blamed for lapses?

Of recent years there has been much,
and good, weeding out of its pictures
by the Museum authorities and the general average of the canvases it owns, is improving constantly.

The Museum is the great and leading art Institution of the country. It should be supported by kindly, not adverse criticism and while we ourselves
opine that it should pay more attention to the building up and strengthening of its collection of early Americans—we also believe that, in general, its pictures are wonderfully good, under its conditions—lack of funds for many years,
changing Boards of Trustees, and Directors, the small and constantly lessening output of good examples of old and modern Masters the world over, and the red tape that inevitably hampers the management and progress of all public or semi-public institutions.

We have published portions of Mr.
Wright's article, simply because we believe that he has by said article, unconsciously complimented the Metropolitan as we have above explained.

CORRESPONDENCE

Rockefeller and Aphrodite.

Dear Sir: Having read in your August issue an article entitled "Rockefeller and Aphrodite," telling the story of the purchase by Mr. John D. Rockefeller of the Statue, recalls to me my efforts on behalf of the then reputed owner of the work,
Mr. F. Linton, now deceased, to whom I was presented by Mr. Charles de Kay shortly after my arrival from England in this country in 1909.

My visit to America was made in order solely to place on view a collection of old Masters at my studio near the National Arts Club then in West 34th Street, New York. Mr. de Kay suggested an exhibition of these at the Arts Club, and through the kindness of Mr. F. Linton the "Aphrodite" was unearthed from her long sojourn in the Columbia Storage Warehouse, where she had for many years, rested in seclusion,
and placed in the centre of the large gallery
of the Arts Club, making an important feature of the fine exhibit, and exciting much discussion.

Following History of Statue.

After six weeks this exhibition closed,
and the statue was removed again to her former resting place in storage.

Meeting Mr. Linton one day at the Arts Club I suggested he send the Aphrodite to my studio in 34th Street, and I would endeavor to effect its sale. This he acceded to, and the statue there was admired by a select number of connoisseurs, but still the question of authenticity always balked a sale. Finally, having the acquaintance and friendship of the late Sir Purdon Clarke, then Director of the Metropolitan Museum, I endeavored to obtain his influence to further the purchase of the Aphrodite for the Museum, but the Directors declined on the grounds of lacking the necessary purchase price of $150,000. I again approached Sir Purdon and asked him if in event of my obtaining a purchaser would he accept on behalf of the Museum a gift of the statue—to which he acceded. I finally found a wealthy Western man who accepted by proposition, and having apprised Sir Purdon of my efforts, we together decided upon the place where "Aphrodite" was to stand in the Museum.

The Deal Called Off.

The $100,000 which Mr. Linton had agreed to accept was about to be paid over, when the Equitable Life Insurance troubles came on and my buyer withdrew his offer for the time being, promising if the money market improved by Spring he would be willing to carry out his first proposition.

As Spring approached I prepared to return to England and business in Wall Street had not really improved, so Aphrodite was again placed in captivity by her owner,
and I returned to Europe.

In British Museum.

To my great surprise, accidentally meeting Mr. Charles de Kay in London and questioning him one day as to what had become of "Aphrodite," he remarked that he had been commissioned to effect her sale
in Europe and hoped to influence the Directors of the British Museum to place the statue there "on view." This Mr. de Kay accomplished, in so far as the exhibition was concerned, but his efforts to induce the Museum to purchase were of no avail.

French Critical Opinion.

After many meetings both in Paris and London with Mr. de Kay respecting the "Aphrodite" I know that, although he prevailed upon Rodin to give this opinion as many other artists did, of the work, they all refrained from an absolute and positive opinion of its being the work of Praxiteles,
as its owners claimed.

British Museum Director's Opinion.

Through a transaction which involved an ancient Egyptian lamp I, at this time,
through the courtesy of the late Mr. J.
Pierpont Morgan, formed the acquaintance of Mr. Smith, the authority on early Greek art at the British Museum. He then informed me that if I cared for his opinion on any early Greek art work at any time, he would gladly give it to me. Not having heard for some time of the "Aphrodite," I called upon Mr. Smith, desiring to have his opinion and directly after admission to his office and stating the purpose of my visit,
he smilingly said: "Why Miss Schanck that statue is an old Roman work, very beautiful but not ancient Greek. No doubt, to my mind, the artist conceived the idea
after the Venus de Medici, as the likeness is very pronounced in its pose and features. This is why the British Museum did not purchase the statue. The last is the second time the work has been exhibited in the Museum, the first having been some twenty years ago, and it was then rejected
as a purchase, for the same reason as now."
He informed me he believed the statue had been returned to America.

It would be interesting to know how and when the Aphrodite passed from its owners whom Mr. Linton represented, to the dealers who sold it to Mr. Rockefeller.

After these few years of silence during which I frequently was asked by my friends
"What has become of the beautiful Aphrodite?" I am very much astonished to learn of the purchase by Mr. John D. Rockefeller of the statue and offer my congratulations on the purchase, position and place
he has given it, in his beautiful grounds
at Pocantico Hills.

A. Schenck.

OBITUARY.

Frank T. Sabin.

Frank T. Sabin, the well-known London dealer in prints and pictures, and who was almost as well known to the art trade and collectors here as in Europe, as he spent many years of his younger life in this country, died in London October 1 last.

Mr. Sabin was a man of most genial and agreeable personality and was greatly liked and esteemed by a host of American friends and patrons, who will be grieved and shocked at the news of his death. Exceedingly well read and cultivated, he was also an authority on early English and American prints and on Americana in general.

He had a gallery on Shaftesbury Ave., London, for many years after his return to his native land, but some eight years ago removed to 172 New Bond St., where his handsome rooms and the fine prints, old books and pictures he there assembled,
were an attraction for many American friends and collectors. Mr. Sabin was one of the oldest friends and patrons of the AMERICAN ART NEWS which, in common with a host of friends in this country and Europe, deeply mourns his loss.

Mrs. Richard Newton, Jr.

The many friends of Mr. Thomas B.
Clarke and his family, and of the artist, Richard Newton, Jr., are deeply grieved at the comparatively sudden death, following a brief illness, last week, of Mrs. Richard Newton, Jr., formerly Miss Grace Clarke,
at her home, No. 22 East 35 St.

Mrs. Newton inherited her father's artistic taste and interest. She was a young woman of rare sweetness of character, and was greatly esteemed and beloved. The sympathies of an unusually wide circle of friends go out to Mr. and Mrs. Clarke and Mr. Newton in their sad bereavement.

L. Clarence Ball.

L. Clarence Ball, landscape painter in oil and water color, died Oct. 9 in South Bend, Ind., at the age of 50. He had contributed to the Indiana Art Exhibit and the displays of the Society of Western Artists. He leaves a widow.

CHICAGO.

The Artists' Guild is inaugurating its season with an exhibition of paintings by members of the fraternity and thirty-six canvases are included in the show held in the galleries of the Guild's Fine Art Shop, Fine Arts Building. The display is seemingly an early leader to the important annual international exhibition of American paintings in the Art Institute next month. Every canvas shown is new, and with few exceptions are memories of Summer journeys in quest of "atmosphere" and inspiration.

Pauline Palmer's "Sketching Out of Doors," painted at Provincetown, Mass., where Mrs. Palmer spent the Summer, is a coast picture, redolent with sea breeze, with driftings of rain-drenched clouds, and happily human in the group of girls on the rocky shore. Anna L. Stacey shows "Muir Woods of Marine, California," a colorful work done while touring the Pacific Coast last Summer, while John F. Stacey shows "Through the Eucalyptus," another colorful landscape, one of his Summer products.

Other artists represented are L. S. Parker, F. A. Werner, O. D. Grover, W. Irvine, Marie E. Blamkie, L. O. Griffith (a stunning decorative work), A. E. Albright, C. F. Browne, F. V. Dudley, T. C. Steele, R. Grafton, C. C. Davis, A. R. Shulz, Jessie B. Evans, C. R. Craft, Harriet Phillips, B. Sanzen, A. Juergens, Margaret A. Hittle, C. A. Herbert, Margaret Baker, J. E. Colburn, Oda W. Shulz, Mary Butler, Bolton Brown, C. E. Boutwood, C. W. Dahlgreen, J. Reichmann and J. A. St. John.

The Fine Arts Building prize, recently transferred to the Guild, was awarded to a figure painting, "In Pensive Mood" by Louis Rittman—Rittman, the young and fervid "modernist" upon whom Lawton S. Parker lavished much artistic encouragement, and still affectionately approves. Honorable mention was given "Late Summer Afternoon," by Leon Roecker and to Pauline Palmer's "Sketching Out of Doors."

The Chicago Ceramic Art Association surpasses its previous records in artistic decorations, in its annual exhibit at the Institute.

An exhibition of eighty-seven illustrations by Orson Lowell is on at the Academy of Fine Arts.

The artists are not flocking home with any apparent haste since the fine Autumn weather is giving them splendid colorings. Carl H. Krafts and Rudolph F. Ingerle are still in the Ozark country, Missouri, and the news comes from them of the organization of a school of Ozark painters. This is the third season of their painting in that colorful country.

There is an exhibition of modern American, French, and Dutch oils in the Thurber galleries—and the print rooms have new and important etchings and mezzotints. Etchings by Donald Shaw are installed in one of the Roullier galleries.

H. Effa Webster.

TOLEDO.

The Museum will show during November, paintings by John Folinsbee and H. Leith-Ross, recently shown at the Katz galleries, N. Y., an exhibition by the Chicago Society of Artists, and another of painter etchings. In addition there will be on view a loan collection of paintings by old and modern masters of Europe, including Rembrandt, Hals, Bol, De Hoogh, Hobbema, Reynolds, Raeburn, Constable, Jacob Maris, Mauve, Van Dyck, and Bosboom. The policy of the Museum has always been a broad one. This museum, so far as is known, is the first institution of the kind to adopt the motion picture as an educational feature. Pictures illustrating art, craftsmanship, industries, bird and animal life, travel, etc., are shown in the hemicycle on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, which are free days. These motion picture exhibitions are largely attended, especially by children.

Bernardsville Art Show.

At the Somerset Hills Country Club, Bernardsville, N. J., an interesting exhibition opened October 15th, consisting of sketches by the out-door painting class, which has worked all summer under the direction of Ellen Ravenscroft. Miss Ravenscroft is showing with the class work, a number of her paintings of the beautiful gardens in the neighborhood. Among the members of the class, represented in the exhibition, are Mrs. Joseph Larocque, Mrs. Grafton Pyne, Mrs. Kenneth Schley and Mrs. Arthur Whitney. Elsie and Caroline Stevens, Dorothy Mitchell, Helen Turnbull, Miriam Harriman, Florence Blair and Julie Steersberg. The younger girls, including Katherine Bliss, Esther and Dorothy Stevens, Elizabeth Larocque, Belle and Shirley Behrs, and Caroline Talmage are also represented by a group of watercolor and oil studies and some interesting memory compositions.

PHILADELPHIA.

The 18th Annual Exhibition of watercolors and pastels at the Art Club opened yesterday.

The Philadelphia Chapter of the Institute of Architects at its annual meeting held last week elected Mr. Horace Wells Sellers, President; Mr. Edward A. Crane, Secretary; Mr. Edmund C. Evans, Treasurer, and Mr. Arthur I. Meigs, Librarian. The Chapter was organized in 1869, chartered in 1872 and included as charter members most of the leading local architects of that day. A standing committee for the preservation of Historic Monuments has already been responsible for many restorations to the original appearance of Independence Hall and its environment and seems a most appropriate activity for the Chapter in a locality of so many old landmarks.

Messrs. Gregg & Leisenring, architects, of Washington, D. C., are collaborating with Richard E. Brooks, sculptor, in the design of the monument, to cost $30,000, to be erected to the memory of Robert Morris at the entrance to the Parkway near City Hall.

The collection of Chinese Porcelains which Duveen Brothers are sending to the University of Penna. is now being installed in the new rotunda of the Museum. Some unexpected delays have occurred in the completion of the room where these works will be exposed, owing to complications over the proper lighting arrangements, but this has finally been adjusted. The work of installation and the preparation of the catalog will occupy at least two months more, and the collection will probably be open to the public in December.

An instructive and amply illustrated brochure by Dr. Edwin Atlee Barber, Director of the Pa. Museum, treating of and cataloging the collection of Tiles on exhibition there, should prove a most valuable handbook to the visitor. Fine examples of Mexican Majolica tiles, large panels of modern Spanish, Russian and American work are among the attractions to the connoisseur of this form of ceramic art.

Eugene Castello.

OBERLIN (OHIO).

The Oberlin Art Association opened its fourth season of exhibitions and lectures with an interesting exhibit of thirty-one oils and pastels by representative American painters.

The artists represented include: Emil Carlsen, John Carlson, Charles H. Davis, Arthur B. Davies, Paul Dougherty, Ben Foster, Frederick C. Frieseke, Daniel Garber, Birge Harrison, Child Hassam, Charles W. Hawthorne, Robert Henri, L. H. Meakin, Richard Miller, Chauncey F. Ryder, William Sartain, W. Granville Smith, Theodore C. Steele, Gardner Symons, Frederick J. Waugh, F. Ballard Williams and Charles M. Young.

The art committee of Oberlin College has purchased from the exhibition John Carlson's "Passing Winter" and Robert Henri's "Spanish Gypsy Girl" for the College collection.

The next exhibition early in the winter will be one of a collection of American Watercolors.

MONTREAL.

On Monday in the main gallery of the new Museum there was opened, under the auspices of the Art Association of that city, an exhibition of 65 pictures by American artists loaned by R. C. & N. M. Vose of Boston. Features of the display are groups of works by Paul Dougherty, J. Alden Weir, J. Francis Murphy, Mary L. Macomber, C. H. Woodbury, and Charles H. Davis.

ART IN AMERICA.

In the October number of Art in America, the acting editor, Prof. Frank Jewett Mather, Jr., writes of "Three Early Flemish Tomb Pictures," the illustration showing a Daret in Mr. John G. Johnson's collection; a De la Pasture and a diptych attributed to Gerard David in the Fogg Museum at Cambridge, and an example of the "Master of the St. Ursula Legend," owned by Mr. Philip Lehmann. Dr. Oswald Siren discusses "The Earliest Pictures in the Jarvis Collection," at Yale. Hervey E. Wetzel treats of the Persian and Indian pictures in the Boston Museum, and R. Meyer-Riefstahl describes the "Early Textiles in the Copper Union Collection."

The "Notes on Spanish Pictures in American Collections" by Dr. August L. Mayer is illustrated by reproductions of Mr. Archer M. Huntington's "St. Paul," by Ribera, sold by the Ehrich Galleries and which he says is a superior example, an "Interior" by Herrera, the Elder and a "Martyrdom of St. Stephen" by Legote, owned by Mr. Eugen Boross, and Mazo's "Portrait of a Man" in the collection of Mr. William P. Douglas. Dr. Mayer pronounces the much discussed Portrait of Philip IV in the Boston Museum, attributed to Velasquez "a poor copy."

BOSTON.

The art season may be said to have opened (with eclat) when the "Guild of Boston artists" first-of-the-year "one man" show is on, although in this case it is a two women duet, in oil paint and clay, by Marie Danforth Page and Lucy Fisher Richards as performers. Mrs. Page's canvases are good; Mrs. Richards' sculpture is also good; as although no especially new notes are struck, the familiar truths are well told and are sufficiently original in design to hold the attention among several figure studies and portraits by Mrs. Page. "The Sisters" and "Her Littlest One" are of note. Mrs. Richards' "Portrait of Miss Theresa Weld," a young girl skating, and a fountain design, "Lilies," demonstrate her ability.

Mrs. W. Scott Fitz has added to her frequent and opportune gifts to the museum, three Italian primitives, a panel attributed to Barabdi di Modena, a Head of the Magdalen by Segna di Buenaventura, and another panel attributed to the School of Simone Martini.

A general exhibit of work by members of the Society of Arts and Crafts is on at the City Club.

The Fogg Museum at Cambridge has lately acquired several prints, a rare little etching of a man in armor by Hirschvogel, a drawing by Altendorfer, and a print by the Master E. S. In November there is promised an important showing of early Italian prints, some owned by the University, others lent by friends. All the prominent American collectors have volunteered to help make this the greatest exhibition of its kind ever held in America.

In another Temple of Art in the famous group of arts cold storage repositories in the vicinity of Copley Square, is now an exhibition by a painter of Taoznua—one Charles King Wood. In 47 works whose subjects were found in Sicily, Egypt, the Alps, the Dolomites, Greece and Crete, this artist exploits, with considerable success, well trodden tourists parts.

Bigelow and Kennard's gallery is now largely occupied with small sculptures.

A collection of etchings by Donald Shaw MacLaughlin is now on view in a local gallery.

In the Vose Galley, the exhibition of works by the late William Keith of California continues. In the second gallery there is a showing of modern Dutch and French oils. John Doe.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Photography seems rapidly passing the stage wherein it is described as hard, cold or merely technically beautiful. By some magic process the feeling of the painter or sculptor has crept into the pictures made by J. Dunbar Wright of New York, who shows a collection of marvelously beautiful photographs in the Schussler galleries. They are printed on Japanese tissue, and though such a background is probably more sympathetic than ordinary papers, the result is not wholly due even to that.

Wright has secured a filmy, floating impression that appears impossible to have emanated from anything but a brush or soft pencil, and the subjects vary from Algeria to Saint Augustine, Florida, with scenes from Crete, Venice, Arizona, Massachusetts and the ever-alluring Monterey.

Wright is a man of many arts, and while far from being a dilettante, his inclination leads him to express himself in many lines, but the expression is finished and all loose ends caught up into place with the care of a professional craftsman.

Twelve charcoal drawings by Xavier Martinez, now shown at the Print Shop of Hill Tolerton, reveal the artist as a master of the medium. He has not worked seriously in charcoal since his student days in Gerome's Paris Studio—but the present display proves that his taking it up again will benefit the American art world.

Miss Marion Froelich has been exhibiting a series of studies and sketches of the Exposition in a local gallery which have greatly increased her reputation. Her work in the lighter medium is facile and most colorful.

The Century for November.

The November Century opens with the first chapters of Stephen Whitman's "Children of Hope," the capital illustrations being by F. R. Gruger. Oliver Herford illustrates in his quaint style his ode "To a Goldfish." George Wright furnishes the drawings with Jerome K. Jerome's "His Evening Out." Col. F. Feyler writes of "The Swiss Military System," the illustrations being from photographs. A clever drawing by Everet Shinn accompanies Mary Heaton Vorse's story, "The Highest Power," and well characterized pen and inks by John Walcott Adams illustrate Princess Lazarovich-Hreblianovich (Eleanor Calhoun's) "Pleasures and Palaces."

CINCINNATI.

The opening meeting of the local Woman's Art Club was held Oct. 9, with an interesting informal talk on Lithography by Mr. A. de Montluzin. The speaker, who is an "expert" in this particular branch of art, illustrated his remarks with posters showing various stages of the process.

It was Mr. de Montluzin's opinion that there is a large field open to women artists in the realm of poster-lithography.

Miss Elizabeth James, a native of this city, whose New York studio is well known to poster-artists, was present at this meeting.

The original design for the large Christmas poster, "The Nativity," which was displayed on the billboards of New York as well as of other large cities, was made by a well-known local artist, Edward C. Volkert. This poster was displayed in no less than 57 churches in the U. S. and Canada, and was produced in twelve colors at a great expense to the company.

Mr. Volkert is more famous, however, as a landscapist and painter of cattle. He has just completed two large wall panels, called "New England Pasture," and "A Breezy Day," which are to be placed in the large assembly hall at Woodward High School. They convey good out-of-door effects which will make them especially attractive to young students.

The pupils each contribute five cents a week toward this Art League Fund, and make one large purchase a year.

Mr. Volkert, to whom they gave their commission for the class of 1915, has long had a studio in New York, and has painted much in the East.

Upon the invitation of Director Gest of the Museum, Mr. Volkert, will hold his first large exhibit at the Museum early in November. His show will include over 70 oils and watercolors. On this occasion his two mural decorations will be on public view for the first time.

Mr. Norbert Heermann has just returned from a sketching tour in an exceedingly picturesque region near White Water, Southern Indiana.

Anna Louise Wangeman.

AN APPRECIATIVE TRIBUTE.

Mr. Roger Fry pays the following appreciative tribute to the memory of the late Sir William van Horne in the October Burlington Magazine.

"Sir William van Horne was one of the most striking and picturesque figures among the great collectors of America. A big, burly figure overflowing with vitality, he took his chances in society as he had taken them in the backwoods of Canada, with a genial and unpretentious simplicity of manner. He did not care to hide behind the entrenchments of etiquette and formality with which most of the newly rich protect their sensitiveness to criticism. On his frequent visits to New York he would put up at one of the big hotels. There he was entirely accessible to anyone who would spend long nights in the Cafe discussing Japanese pottery, the ideal planning of cities, Chinese scripts, Dutch painting, cattle breeding and bacon curing, or who would listen to his racy descriptions of his adventures in planning the Canadian Pacific Railway.

"At his home at his vast and varied collections of old masters and of Japanese pottery. In the evening discussions on some of his so diverse hobbies would go on till well into the early hours, and it was currently believed that when all his comparatively youthful guests had at last dropped off to bed, Sir William retired to an immense attic fitted up as a studio, and there by the aid of an intense arc light would begin to paint one of the ten-foot canvases of Western Canadian scenery which filled up all gaps in his walls as yet uncovered by old masters.

"His curiosity and his power of acquiring knowledge were as insatiable as his energy was restless and untiring. In his attitude to art these characteristics were apparent. His temperament and his past life had been too active to allow of any profound or contemplative enjoyment of beauty. Whatever his unusual faculties enabled him to grasp in a rapid glance he enjoyed exuberantly, but beyond that he never cared to penetrate, too many other curious and odd interests being at hand to solicit his attention. I believe his knowledge of Japanese pottery was remarkable, but I think what attracted him most was the possibilities of connoisseurship which this study afforded him. He used at one time to offer to tell the maker of a piece without seeing it, by feeling it with his hands held behind his back, on condition that if he was right the piece should be his, and if wrong he should pay a forfeit; but, according to his own account, he was so frequently right that the Japanese collectors with whom he played the game, finally fought shy of the ordeal.

"His collection of old masters, as may be imagined, was as varied and odd as his tastes. It was full of out of the way and curious things which other collectors would have overlooked, but as far as I recollect it was not a choice collection, and contained few indisputable masterpieces. But I may be underestimating it, for certainly after all these years, and having only once visited his collection, I find my memory of Sir William van Horne's personality, of his abounding vitality, and his rough-and-ready comradeship more interesting and arresting than any of the objects which he had acquired."

TAPESTRIES AT PA. MUSEUM.

George Leland Hunter, author of "Tapestries, Their Origin, History and Renaissance," has organized a tapestry loan exhibition for two weeks at the Pa. Museum, to open Monday. It is to be similar to the exhibitions organized by him last year at the Brooklyn and Buffalo museums, and at the Avery Library of Columbia University, and like them will be accompanied by lecture promenades which are such an attractive feature of Mr. Hunter's classes on tapestries, rugs and furniture at the Metropolitan Museum.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Works by Anne Goldthwaite.

A minimum of means for a maximum of results, seems to be the motto of Anne Goldthwaite, who is showing to Nov. 13, in the galleries of the Berlin Photographic Co., 305 Madison Ave., a collection of her pictures in oil and watercolor, as well as a number of etchings. And often the end justifies the rather rough and summary means.

Perhaps the most vital and satisfactory of her works, which have humans for models is her “Self Portrait.” With Cardinal Gibbons she has not been so successful, just missing the likeness, as she has in the study of Mr. William J. Guard. The portrait of “The Artist's Brother,” on the other hand, is full of life and evidently like.

Two effective sketch heads are of the late Monsignor Benson and Dr. Bellinger. The presentation of Miss Katherine Dreier is decorative and the heads of young Fraulein von Knapitsch and “Dick” are capital.

Among the landscapes in oil the best are the impression of the “Luxembourg Gardens,” “On the Banks of the Loing,” “Aunt Molly's Back-Yard” with its brilliant sunlight, the vivid “August,” “Perdido Bay” and “Cotton Bales.”

The watercolors are summary, and at times effective memoranda, seldom rising to the height of “A Church in Champagne.” For etching, the artist has a real talent, the examples being all of interest, although the dancers are fuller of movement than of grace or beauty. Admirable however are the “Hill-side, Ile-aux-Moines” and the brilliant little seated female nude seen from the back. Miss Goldthwaite is distinctly a personality.

Moorepark's Decorative Panels.

In some decorative panels by Carton Moorepark at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave., the arrangement of foliage and tall grasses with wonderful birds from the Bronx Park Aviary is most decorative. Manchurian Cranes, with vivid red heads, enormous Vultures, Pelicans and brilliant Macaws, lend themselves admirably to this sort of work and make a gorgeous riot of color. The medium used is pastel and the rare tonal quality and texture could hardly be produced with oils or water colors.

Americans at Macbeth's.

The Macbeth galleries, 450 Fifth Ave., have followed the woman's suffrage exhibition, with a general display of canvases by American painters, which is to remain until the Hayley Lever show opens on Oct. 28. Messrs. Frieseke and Miller are in the lead with a couple of their attractive presentations, of the ever divine and not always too fully clothed, feminine. The first shows a young woman by her washstand clad only in a kimono and glimpsing a friend through a lattice, while the latter's subject is seated at her toilet table trying on a necklace. Ivan I. Olinski also presents an attractive girl in a kimono and Charles Hovey Pepper offers an Italian girl ripe as a pome granate.

There is none of the bon bon box and confection, in Frank H. Desch's attractive and strongly handled figure of a young girl seated in full sunlight, on a bench at the seaside. Robert Henri sounds a true note with his vigorous head of a not altogether lovely old man and Emil Carlsen is represented by his son with a book canvas.

The slap and dash vigor of Hayley Lever are well shown in a large St. Ives subject and there is a refreshing village street scene by Chauncey P. Ryder. Great simplicity in stretch of stretch of sea and shore is shown by J. Breyvogel. There are besides landscapes of note by J. F. Murphy, Osip L. Linde, W. L. Paddock—a powerful “Early Spring in the Berkshires,” W. Sartain, F. B. Williams, J. Alden Weir, a veritable idyl, W. H. Howe, Gardner Symons, Guy C. Wiggins, James Knox, Gifford Beal, H. W. Ranger, John F. Carlsen, and A. J. Waugh, and a marine in the vigorous manner of Paul Dougherty.

A. v. C.

Americans at Milch's.

A feature of the autumn opening exhibition at the Milch Gallery, 939 Madison Ave., is a charmingly characteristic example of the veteran, E. L. Henry. The title is “Summer Boarders,” and the canvas shows an old farmer in a buckboard driving two city people homewards from the station. It is a subject, in which the artist always excels.

There are Walter Palmer snow scenes in the display, and attractive examples of the art of Ernest Lawson, Leonard Ochtman, Joseph Boston, A. L. Groll and F. W. Kost—a delightful little fantasy by F. S. Church, one of the late B. M. Shurtleff's wood interiors and “A Symphony” by Theresa Bernstein, which is less conservative than the other canvases shown.

Richard Maynard exposes “The Yellow Rose,” a portrait of a vivacious young girl seated by an open fireplace, and Edward Dufner's “Gathering Laurels” and “Morning Sunshine,” are joyous and charmingly fresh in color. By Charlotte Coman, a landscape painted in the Springtime has charm and the tender green of the foliage is fresh and realistic.

H. C. R.

Sargents at Knoedler's.

At Knoedler's Galleries three of Sargent's recent works are shown, all vigorous outdoor pictures. One entitled “Piazza Signoria Opposite the Loggia,” was presented by Mr. Sargent to Alphonse Le Gros. There is also a Twachtman snow scene which has rare charm, a Wyant wood interior, a portrait study by Douglas Volk, some delightful little Barbizons, a landscape by John W. Beatty, and numerous other canvases of interest. A special exhibition of the works of the gifted young Scotchman, James McBey, whose etchings and watercolors, sixty-four in all, are most appealing, is also open. In the watercolors, many of which were painted in the vicinity of the artist's birthplace, he proves himself a master of that tricky medium and that he possesses originality and a nice color sense. The story of his artistic development is an interesting one. He was entirely self taught and raised in an anything but artistic environment, so the word gifted may be aptly applied to his work.

Portraits by Harrington Mann.

Harrington Mann, in an exhibition of portraits now on at the Scott and Fowles Gallery, 590 Fifth Ave., demonstrates his ability to crystallize a passing mood in his alluring portraits of small children. Little “Miss Grace Wagner,” “Curtenius Gillette, Jr.,” “Miss Elizabeth Kendall,” with her pet rabbit, “Miss Sara Frances Barrow” and other captivating youngsters, are skillfully portrayed. In the portraits of T. C. Dennehy's children, if the background had been a bit simpler the charm of the little faces would have been accentuated. Portraits of “Mrs. Devereux Milburn” and her sister, “Mrs. F. Skiddy Von Stade (the Misses Steele)” have rare charm and “La France,” the artist's wife, is a delightful characterization of young womanhood.

Etchings by A. A. Blum.

Some thirty-nine etchings by A. A. Blum, a young Cincinnati artist and a pupil of the Museum there and the Academy Schools in New York, make up the first display of the season in the Print Gallery connected with the Ehrich Galleries, No. 707 Fifth Ave. The exhibition is also the first to be held by the artist in the Metropolis.

Mr. Blum has been an earnest and diligent student of the world's master etchers, and especially of Whistler, Zorn and Seymour Haden, and the majority of the plates shown are reflections of the work of the last three men. They are good reflections, however, and evince long and careful study—a sympathetic feeling and unusual grasp of the picturesque in subject. Nine plates entitled “Rhythm of Line—a Sequence” are original and have a grace of line and facility that suggest Matisse with a decidedly strong decorative feeling. Mr. Blum's work and progress will bear watching.

Annual Exhibit of School Art League.

Under the auspices of the School Art League an exhibition of Art in Relation to Women's Work is being held in the galleries of the American Fine Arts Society, 215 West 57 Street. It is an exhibition of work by girl pupils of the High Schools of New York City, showing not the product of individual teacher or school but a comprehensive contribution representing what has been accomplished by the associated body of instructors.

It is fascinating to see what children can achieve with efficient guidance. There are costume designs, original and practical, interior decorations, sketches in tempera from models, and designs in free brush work, taught at the Julia Richman High School during the first year of the commercial course. One also finds parasols, hats and decorative hat boxes, table linen, infants' wear and sofa cushions. In most of the work a nice color sense is indicated. The dolls dressed to represent fashions in vogue at various periods compare very favorably with those shown at the Metropolitan Museum a short while ago.

Arlent Edwards Prints at Ralston's.

At the Ralston galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., there is now on an exhibition of some 50 mezzotint engravings by S. Arlent Edwards. A display of the delicate and sympathetic reproductive, or rather interpretive art, of this producer of hand colored prints is always welcome, and the present large display is thoroughly representative. All the most sought after impressions appear, such as "Lady Hamilton as Nature," "The Calmady Children," "Duchess of Devonshire and Child," "Henrietta as Flora," the Botticelli and Luini Madonnas, "La Belle Ferroniere," "Baptista Tornabuoni," "Anne of Cleves," "Rembrandt's Mother," "The Parson's Daughter" and "Mona Lisa."

Mrs. Blommers' Pastel Portraits.

Caroline Bean Blommers is showing several pleasing little portraits in pastel and some theatrical posters, one of "Florence Walton and Maurice," and one of "Mrs. Vernon Castle," designed for Miss Elizabeth Marbury—at Powell's, 983 6th Ave. In the sketch of Mrs. Castle, quite a bit of that dainty lady's personality has been caught and the arrangement is decidedly chic. Among the most pleasing portraits is one of little "Lisbeth Higgins." There are also two attractive paintings of garden flowers and a small landscape by Mr. B. J. Blommers.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

A daughter has arrived in the household of Mr. and Mrs. William Ralston, Jr., who, with the infant's youthful grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Ralston, are receiving congratulations.

M. Franc de Francheville, who married last year Mlle. Andree Lenique, the portrait painter, has become associated with the Ehrich Galleries.

Mr. Blackie Murdoch, an English art writer and critic, whose work specially on Black and White and Lithography, has appeared in leading art magazines is now in charge of the Print Gallery, connected with the Ehrich Galleries, No. 707 Fifth Ave.

Prints at Bonaventure's.

The dignity, grace and charm, of the French and English prints of the XVIII Century, are well exemplified in the display now open in a newly arranged gallery at Bonaventure's, 601 Fifth Ave. which remains to Oct. 30. Here are, for instance, "Le Carquois Epuise" of Baudouin engraved by Delaunay; Fragonard's "La Coquette Fixee," reproduced by Couche, Auguste St. Aubin's "Le Concert et Le Bal," by Duclos; Tauney's "Foire du Village le Tambourin," in colors by Des-Courtais, Nattier's "Madame la Duchesse de en Hebe," by Hubert, Moreau's "Les Precautions," Moreau le Jeune's "La Petite Loge" by Patas, Northcote's "A Visit to Grandmother" by J. R. Smith, and Lawrence's "Miss Farren" by Bartalozzi.

MacDowell Club's Opening Show.

The MacDowell Club opened its season Thursday last, with a group of works by ten painters, Aline Bernstein, Bert Cressy, Meta Cressy, Emily Goldberg, Kathleen Houlahan, Amy Londoner, Albert Olson, Edith Reynolds, Carl Springhorn and Cora Louise Venon.

Among the most notable canvases are Amy Londoner's portraits, particularly one of Mary Lolio, a young girl with her face brimming over with merriment, some strong character studies, beautifully painted and decidedly Henriesque, by Kathleen Houlahan, charmingly fanciful subjects by A. Olson, the most attractive of which are "The Lonesome Sung Lady," "Poppies" and "Pan's Island" and landscapes by Edith Reynolds, poetic and nice in color.

Carl Springhorn's "Red Figure on Beach," "Pink Figure on Beach," etc., are weird in conception and crude as to color. Bert and Meta Cressy show brilliant impressions of Spanish Gypsies, Mexican scenes and children in the open with gaily colored flowers. In these, as in most of the works shown, Henri's influence is noticeable.

Homer Watercolor Display.

Art lovers should greet the rare opportunity to study Winslow Homer, afforded by the comprehensive collection of his watercolors, loaned to the Brooklyn Institute and now shown there.

Homer had no vaulting ambitions. Unhindered by the traditions of any school he painted for the sheer joy of it, and his work has rare human interest and spontaneity. The examples shown at the museum range from sketches made at Houghton Farm, in the early seventies, to "Driftwood"—the one oil on view, the last picture he ever painted, and include Adirondack, Tynemouth, Prout's Neck and tropical scenes. There are many of his incomparable marines.

Edwin B. Child, the portrait painter, has recently moved from his studio in Washington Square South to the Crown Studio Building in 59th Street. Mr. Child has just completed a large portrait of a well-known principal of one of New York's High Schools.

John Flanagan has sent colored plaster casts of his Aetna Ins. Co. bas-relief panels to Hartford for temporary placement in the setting where the finished bronzes will soon be installed. One of these panels is a full length full size portrait of the founder of the Aetna, the father of U. S. Sen. Morgan G. Bulkeley.

George Luks has had a busy summer. At his studio in Edgecombe Road, Washington Heights, one sees a stunning large park picture, rich and brilliant with summer greens of lawn and tree and the white dresses of women and children. A blue marine with pleasure boats and holiday figures is another fine canvas of late production. Luks has also recently painted a bust portrait of James Britton.

Clara Tice's decorations for the Edison "Thimble Theatre," 5th Ave. and 8th St., are among the latest productions of the clever young woman, whose drawings in line and watercolor attracted attention when shown last season. Miss Tice has just been subjected to mock trial at Bruno's Garret on the charge of having overstepped, in treating the nude, the bounds set by the late Anthony Comstock.

Miss Janet Scudder has removed her studio from 507 West 57th St. to 603 Madison Ave.

F. S. Church has returned to his studio in Carnegie Hall.

On Thursday last ground was broken for Anna Vaughan Hyatt's statue of Joan of Arc, at Riverside Drive and 93rd St.

Berenice Langton has moved from the Sherwood Studio Building to 33 West 67 St.

George Bellows has returned from Ogonquit, Me., and is at his studio, 146 East 19 St.

Harrington Fitzgerald, the veteran Philadelphia artist, has been granted a copyright for twenty-eight years for his five-act Romantic Play, "The Million Dollar Necklace." The scene of the drama is laid in N. Y. City and Newport. Mr. Fitzgerald is also putting his play in novel form, and arranging it for photoplay production.

Statues of "Sculpture" by D. C. French and "Painting" by Louis St. Gaudens have recently been unveiled in front of the City Museum at St. Louis.

Mr. James Fay, for many years a well known dealer in antiques, his last rooms having been in the old Progress Club building on West 42nd St., where the new Stern Brothers store now stands, was recently appointed chief of the 5th Division of the Custom House Appraisers and has charge of the fixing of duties on art importations, a post filled so well for many years by Mr. Michael Nathan, now with Lewis & Simmons.

Stephen Parrish gave 116 of his etchings to the N. Y. Public Library instead of 10 as previously stated through error.

Arthur Allan Wenzell, the 16 year old son of Albert Beck Wenzell, the well known illustrator, was killed in an automobile accident on Sunday near Englewood, N. J., where his father lives.

The Blair collection of Gothic art and 41 sculptures by Paul Manship are attracting much attention at the Albright Gallery in Buffalo. There is a fully illustrated catalogue of the Blair collection.

Albert Gleizes, a French "cubist" painter and his wife Juliette Roches Gleizes, are recent additions to New York's art colony.

Miss L. F. Rosenthal has opened a sculpture class at her studio, 6 Macdougall Alley.

Paul E. Harney, the St. Louis painter of chickens, has been seriously ill.

Abastenia St. Leger Eberle has reopened her sculpture class at her studio, 206 1/2 West 13 St.

The fall exhibition at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., contains a large 1868 Samuel Colman of the Hudson at Storm King, Bierstadt's Mt. Tamalpais, Cal., and a beach scene by Gari Melchers.

VOL. XIV., No. 4. Entered as second class mail matter. N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 30, 1915.

FOR CANADA'S GALLERY.

The trustees of the Canadian National Gallery purchased from the annual National Exhibition held in Sept. in Toronto, several pictures, etchings and lithographs. The pictures are F. Luis Mora's "In Costume," Alexander Marcette's "Rainy Weather," O. Leduc's "Pommes Vertes" and Arthur Lismer's "The Guides Home." Messrs. Leduc and Lismer are Canadians. The etchings and lithographs are by the Belgian artists Baertsoen and Opsomer.

DESTROYING VENICE TREASURES.

On Sunday night three Austrian aeroplanes bombarded Venice inflicting considerable damage. One bomb struck the Church of Degli Scalzi destroying the ceiling and with it a large fresco by Tiepolo. This represented the miraculous removal of the House of the Virgin to Loretto. Another bomb fell on the Piazza of St. Mark, but fortunately did no damage.

ENGLISH ART "EXPERT" SAILS.

Mr. W. E. Roberts, of London, who has been in New York, Boston and New Jersey examining pictures since the middle of August, is booked to sail by the St. Paul today for England.

During his stay here, Mr. Roberts completed, it is understood, the Catalog of the collection of Mr. P. A. B. Widener, of Phila., on which he began work last year, compiled the sale Catalogs for the coming auctions of the remainder of the Blakeslee collection, and that of Mr. Catholina Lambert—both for the American Art Association, and did some "expertizing" and cataloging for two prominent Boston collectors. Mr. Roberts will be one of the witnesses, it is reported, for Lewis and Simmons in the coming trial of the suit of Mr. Henry E. Huntington against that firm—to recover the purchase price of a Romney—he having been one of the "experts" who pronounced the canvas genuine.

THAT ROMNEY SUIT.

The news of the suit brought by Mr. Henry E. Huntington against the firm of Lewis & Simmons, 587 Fifth Ave. in re. the authenticity of a picture by Romney, sold to him by them of Mrs. Siddons and her sister, came too late last week for the ART NEWS to do more than reprint the Sun's special cable from London. Mr. Simmons of the firm when questioned by a Sun reporter about the suit said:

"This picture was sold to Henry E. Huntington by this firm and guaranteed to be a Romney. It was accompanied by a written expert opinion of the best—if not the very best—English authorities on Romney. After the picture was sold it was hung in the Metropolitan Club, in this city, in Mr. Huntington's private apartment, and while there was seen by several well known dealers who at that time were advising him, and all of whom pronounced very favorably upon the picture. After hanging at the club some time it was sent to the home of Mr. Huntington at San Gabriel, Cal. The following year I met Mr. Huntington in Paris and he told me how pleased he was with the picture.

"About eighteen months ago a well known firm of art dealers in this city held an exhibition of portraits of old English masters, which consisted mostly of pictures bought from the firm, by Mr. Huntington. This firm refused to hang the Romney in its exhibition.

"This poisoned Mr. Huntington's mind and he asked us to take back the picture and return his money. This we refused to do, assuring him that the picture was absolutely as represented, and that we could not take back a picture on which a slur had been cast, but we offered to submit it for further examination to any "expert" or "experts" that Mr. Huntington would name. After this the picture was sent to England under the direction of the large firm before mentioned and the matter was placed in the hands of lawyers, who began this action.

"After this action was brought we had the picture examined by the best authorities on Romney in England, and they have pronounced it absolutely genuine.

"The integrity of our firm has never been assailed before, and we have been established since 1860. We feel that we will demonstrate to Mr. Huntington as well as to the art lovers of the world that this great picture is by the artist Romney.

"We are pleased that this action has been brought, as it will clear the air and prove to Mr. Huntington beyond a question of doubt that he has a perfectly authentic and genuine work."

THE COLOR LINE IN ART.

Miss Della Raines, originally of the movies, following the example of Miss Mamie Blanha, who went on the stage, has drawn the line at posing before colored students at the Chicago Institute and in consequence will probably return to the realm of the films. Miss Raines is from Dallax, Texas. She was ready to pose when she saw three negro students, and another model had to be substituted. She said that they looked at things in a different way down in Texas. Mr. W. F. Tuttle, assistant secretary of the Institute, said "We are democratic here. We can't bar any one race. We merely substituted another model." It is not on record that any chocolate colored Venuses refused to pose for white students.

WANT TO KEEP DIRECTOR WYER.

The Muskegon, Mich., Woman's Club, at a meeting Oct. 16 unanimously passed a motion that the Board of Education be petitioned to retain Raymond Wyer, director of the Hackley Art Gallery.

The motion, which was put by Mrs. Frank Dudley Smith, and seconded by Miss Emma J. Latimer, was:

"That the Muskegon Woman's Club petition the Board of Education of Muskegon to retain Mr. Raymond Wyer in his present position as director of the Hackley Art Museum.

"That the president appoint a committee of three to draft a petition to secure the signatures of the members of the Muskegon Woman's Club and of citizens at large."

A FINE COPLEY SOLD.

The Vose Gallery of Boston has sold the portrait of Admiral Gambier, by John Singleton Copley, to a Boston collector. This is a notable canvas by the early American master whose pictures are now eagerly sought for by private collectors and museums, and whose works have come into the market with remarkable frequency in the last three or four years.

The portrait of Admiral Gambier (the elder) is one of the finest specimens in America of Copley's late American period, a period during which the artist produced, according to his own statement, his finest portraits. James Gambier was commander-in-chief of the British naval forces in America during the Revolution, succeeding Admiral Montagu. The portrait represents the Admiral standing, at three-quarter length, dressed in uniform and leaning upon a cane. The picture is powerful in color, the blue of the officer's uniform telling effectively against a beautifully painted sky. The low horizon allows an expanse of landscape to be seen, the character of which has been said to represent that of Copley's own Beacon Hill estate.

The picture came from London a few years ago from the collection of Lord Aberdare, a descendent of Copley, and soon after its exhibition in this country it was reproduced exclusively in the ART NEWS. It has been said that this canvas, some time ago, was under consideration for purchase by the Metropolitan Museum (which as yet possesses no representative oil portrait by Copley) and was endorsed highly by the artist authorities at the Museum. The failure of the Museum directors to take advantage of this rare opportunity of acquiring a fine Copley is a matter of regret, and the present owner is to be congratulated on its acquisition.

ANTI-VICE'S NEW BROOM.

The owners and employees of shops, where post cards, music, small sculptures and cheap reproductions of pictures are sold, are up in arms against Mr. John S. Sumner, the successor of Anthony Comstock as head of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, who says that pictures which may be all right in an art gallery are not fit to be exhibited in a store. It is said that some of the works Mr. Sumner objects to are allowed to go through the mails after due inspection. Mr. W. M. Shirley of the Strand Song Shop on Broadway, where Mr. Sumner made a raid, said he picked out reproductions of classic nude statuary, and left other similar works.

At the police court examination was waived and the case goes to Special Sessions. Mr. Shirley said their shops in Buffalo and Chicago had never been raided. A salesman for J. B. Marks, also on Broadway, was also arrested. Mr. Marks said that copies of "The Pearl and the Oyster," which had figured on the front page of a humorous weekly were seized. Mr. Sumner said he had not succeeded Mr. Comstock as a post office inspector. He would have withdrawn the charges he said after the seizure of the pictures if the people had not been especially bold and persistent. When asked why he did not raid the Metropolitan Museum he said "There are indecent pictures in the Museum, but the people who go there do so to study art and are not affected in the same way as are the crowds that gloat over such objectionable pictures in a shop window.

"But," said a reporter, "if these nude masterpieces in the original have been approved by the greatest art critics and connoisseurs, how can you blame the shopkeeper if a few evil-minded persons stop to gaze at copies in his windows?"

"The law holds him responsible," Mr. Sumner replied. "It is all a question of time, place and circumstance."

OBJECTED TO HADLEY'S LIP.

Mrs. Samantha L. Huntley of Albany, N. Y., is suing a Chicago committee for $1,200, the price of her portrait of Ex-Gov. Herbert L. Hadley. She claims she was obliged to place on his face a lower lip that never grew there, and the committee asserted the portrait did not look like the subject. When in 1911 the Ex-Governor was mentioned as President Taft's successor, 155 Missouri Republicans promised each to give $10. The portrait was then to cost $1,500 and the frame $50.

THE DISPUTED ROMNEY

Mrs. Siddons and sister, Mrs. Kemble Cause of Huntington vs. Lewis and Simmons $100,000 suit.

CANESSA IN ALTMAN GALLERY.

The firm of E. and C. Canessa & Co. of Paris and New York have leased for 10 years, at $10,000 a year, the art gallery, with was part of the residence of the late Benjamin Altman, on the N. W. corner of 5th Ave. and 50th St. The gallery has the height of 2 stories and covers a plot 33 x 100 ft. After alterations the art firm will occupy the building and a feature of its opening display will be the art treasures owned by the firm in the Italian Pavilion at the Pan-Pacific Exposition.

GOES BACK TO ROME.

An important view of Papal Rome, by Giovanni Paolo Pannini, was sold this week, by the Holland Galleries, 500 Fifth Ave., to the Sangiorgi Gallery in the Borgese Palace, Rome, through the latter's American representative, Mr. G. Walser.

GIFTS TO HARTFORD MUSEUM.

Mrs. James Junius Goodwin has, in accord with the desire of her late husband, a cousin of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, given $50,000 to the Wadsworth Athenæum of Hartford, Conn., for the purchase of art works.

BROOKLYN MUSEUM IN DANGER.

Controller Prendergast sent a more or less cold shiver down the backs of the Brooklyn Museum officials when he advocated on Oct. 19, an appropriation of $20,000 instead of the $118,085 requested.

THE JOAN OF ARC STATUE.

On Oct. 21 before a notable assemblage, the cornerstone of Anna Vaughn Hyatt's equestrian statue of Joan of Arc was laid in Riverside Drive Parkway at 93 St. The first spadeful of earth was turned by J. Sanford Saltus, honorary president of the Statue committee and Miss Clara Hunter Hyatt, niece of the sculptor who posed for the statue laid the cornerstone. Speeches were made by M. Maurice Heilman, Commercial Attache of the French Embassy and J. Alden Weir, president of the National Academy. The statue is to stand 25 feet high and be 50 feet long on the base. The horse and rider will be 13½ feet high and of bronze. The base will be of Mohegan granite supported by arches in which will lie 3,600 pounds of stone from the heroine's dungeon at Rouen.

THE SPENCER ALTHORP COLL'N.

"Lord Spencer's collection of pictures at Althorp, his ancestral home in Northamptonshire, from which he has just sold for the sum of $175,000 Rembrandt's beautiful portrait of his 9-year-old son Titus, to an American multi-millionaire," says La Marquise de Fontenoy in an article in the Evening Sun, "is one of the most celebrated in Europe; and the announcement that the Earl in conjunction with his son and heir, Lord Althorp, Lieut. of the 1st Life Guards, whose consent has been necessary, has decided to dispose of all his old masters at Christie's in London in the near future, is naturally attracting very widespread attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

The galleries at Althorp include several other Rembrandts, a number of Vandykes, some superb Titians, no less than 24 Sir Joshua Reynolds, 32 Lelys and splendid examples of Murillo, Holbein, Raphael, Frans Hals, Kneller and Guido Reni. Althorp is indeed a perfect treasure house, and the vast quantity of old silver is very valuable from an artistic as well as from an intrinsic point of view.

"Among the features of the collection are two huge wine pails, which are the largest pieces of pure gold plate in any private collection, five enormous silver wine coolers adorned with the arms of the Dukes of Marlborough, capable of holding I do not know how many dozen of champagne bottles each and the size of which may be gathered from the fact that one of the so-called wine coolers was used by the first Duke of Marlborough in his campaign in the Netherlands as a bath and formed part of his camp equipage. There are also great Russian cups of solid gold, monster silver water bottles of Charles II.'s time, with corks secured, Jacobean fashion, with silver links and chains, and a beautiful large silver gilt jug, one of the four provided by penny subscriptions from the nation for the third Lord Spencer, Lord Russell, Lord Grey and Lord Brougham in recognition of their efforts in passing the reform bill in the early part of the last century.

The Washingtons.

"To Americans Althorp possesses additional interest owing to the fact that Lady Spencer, wife of Sir John Spencer, who owned Althorp in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and who was the cousin, the friend and the patron of Edmund Spenser, of 'Faerie Queene' celebrity, was a sister of Margaret, wife of John Washington, from whom George Washington was descended. Lawrence Washington was not only the kinsman, but also the most intimate friend of Sir John Spencer's grandson Robert, first Lord Spencer of Althorp, and helped to entertain Queen Anne, consort of James I., and their eldest son, Henry, Prince of Wales, when they visited Althorp in June, 1603. It was for this visit that Ben Johnson wrote his 'Masque of the Fairies,' which was performed in the park at Althorp on June 25 of that year.

"The late Lord Spencer, half brother of the present Earl, was very much interested in the connection of his family with the Washingtons, and in a letter in 1890 to a member of the Spencer family living in Talbot county, Maryland, he stated that two members of his house, Nicholas and Robert Spencer, sons of Nicholas Spencer of Cople, thirty miles distant from Althorp, migrated to America with John and Lawrence Washington in 1657.

"It may be added that the Mount Vernon estate was originally the half of 5,000 acres of land that were assigned on division to John Washington, the great-grandfather of George Washington, in conjunction with Nicholas Spencer under a patent from Lord Culpeper, Governor of Virginia."

CORRESPONDENCE

Side Light on Exposition Awards.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

Apropos of your excellent comments upon the art awards at San Francisco, and the admirable summing up of the matter by "Academician," I have recently heard of an incident of the art jury sessions in San Francisco, which if my well posted informant is correct, throws a strong side-light upon the question.

"Academician" in his first letter, and yourselves in an editorial, called attention to the granting of a silver medal, and a medal of honor, if I remember aright, to a young woman watercolor painter—an Englishwoman—whose name for chivalrous reasons I omit—and criticised said awards, on the ground that they were, the first, at least, the same given to such American painters of reputation as Murphy, Davis and Tryon.

My informant tells me that this young woman was given this high recognition, although her work is almost unknown here and abroad, because a prominent American artist, long resident in Paris, and prominent in the Jury's councils, suggested it as the woman painter in question "is the widow of a well known American artist." I would respectfully inquire, if this story be true, whether the widowhood of an artist, carries with it Exposition prize awards—the same given to veteran artists, who have long arrived. If so, this is a new form of competition, and might not such a precedent even lead to a dire tragical act on the part of some ambitious married woman artist in the future?

Yours truly,
Curious.

Rockefeller and Aphrodite.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

I was much interested in Miss Schenck's story in her letter published in your last issue of the later wanderings of the "Aphrodite" statue, better known as "The Bathing Venus," recently purchased by Mr. John D. Rockefeller from Sir Algernon Freeman Firth and Mr. William H. Aykroyd of London for his "Temple of Love" on his Pocantico Hills estate; but I notice that Miss Schenck omitted, or is unaware, of certain important and interesting details regarding the statue's history.

When, after the first refusal of the British Museum to purchase the statue, I believe about 1887, Aphrodite was brought to America, to repose some twenty years in storage, her resurrection and exploitation at the Arts Club and in the American press, her return to storage and comparatively speedy return to England, Mr. Charles De Kay acting for some wealthy Lancashire merchants, who had advanced an amount, said to have been $80,000, to the late Mr. Linton upon the work, spent some five months in London and Paris endeavoring, but unsuccessfully, to effect a sale of the work. I then understood that these Lancashire merchants advanced the amount reported to Mr. Linton, on the advice, and through the influence of a member of the Arts Club—an Englishman of their acquaintance, and a brother of a London art dealer, who ran afoul of Lord Curzon and others of the English nobility some three years ago in a transaction involving the sale of an old English room, which Lord Curzon and his fellows had wished to preserve for the Nation.

However this may be, the Lancashire men have now, presumably, through the sale of the statue to Mr. Rockefeller recouped themselves for their advances on it to Mr. Linton, the statue having presumably passed into their hands to secure their advances.

I also understand that the purchase of the statue was suggested to Mr. Rockefeller by the architects of the "Temple of Love," who were members of the Arts Club at the time of the exploitation of "Aphrodite."

Of course the entire transaction was perfectly legitimate, and I send you these details, simply as an interesting addition to those Miss Schenck has already furnished and to complete the story of the later wanderings of "Aphrodite."

Yours very truly,
Adonis-Mars.

A Good Suggestion.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

Apropos of the recent discussion in your columns anent the awarding of a special prize to Frank Duveneck at the Pan-American Exposition it may not be out of place to point out that Mr. Duveneck's work is not as well known in New York as elsewhere in the United States and that it has been suggested that an exhibition of his pictures now on view at San Francisco be held at a Fifth Avenue Gallery and thus afford the New York public an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with the work of an artist enjoying great popularity in Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati and throughout the West.

Yours truly,
G. Frank Muller.

BOOK AND MSS. SALES.

Lincoln Relic Sale.

The sale of the Abraham Lincoln collection of literary relics, from the library of Mr. John E. Burton of Milwaukee opened Monday, at the Anderson Galleries. Mr. George D. Smith paid the highest price of the session, $240, for a leaf from Lincoln's school boy sum book and $115 for another, as well as $130 for a Circuit Court document with the Emancipators autograph. Mr. T. A. Barclay gave $210 for an electioneering broadside and $100 for another of the Van Buren campaign. The total of the day was $2,333.45.

On Tuesday Mr. Smith paid $515 for one of twenty copies of the Emancipation Proclamation signed by Lincoln and Seward, for the Sanitary Fair in 1864 at Phila. He also secured for $26 the scarce sermon by George Z. Gray, on "The Proper Use of the Memory of a Good Man's Life." Crozier's rare "The Bloody Junta, or the Escape of John Wilkes Booth," Little Rock, 1869, the first to appear in auction, brought $92.50. The first edition of Herndon & Weik's suppressed "The True Story of a Great Life," brought $65. A copy of the program on the night of the assassination, of the issue said to have been found in the box, brought $20. For the "Dreadful Warning of the Six Angels," Louisville, 1873, $10.50 was paid.

On Wed. Mr. H. W. Bell gave $45 for "Speeches and Letters of Abraham Lincoln, 1832-65," London, 1909, with some notable autographs, $40 for an autograph album containing the signatures of the majority of the northern probagonists in the war and a card signed by Lincoln and with three lines by him, $19 for a collection of Lincoln and other pamphlets and $16 for Ingersoll's lecture on Lincoln. Mr. G. S. Smith gave $16 for a letter of Mary Lincoln and $25 for a letter of Robert T. Lincoln referring to his "brother Tad."

On Thursday Mr. Smith paid $285 for Lincoln's rifle and $395 for the Columbus, O., 1860 publication of the Lincoln-Douglas debates. Brentanos gave $71 for a lock of Lincoln's hair. The total for the day was $2,145.60, which brought the total of the sale to date to $6,969.

Bauregard Letter Sale.

At the sale of the letters of Gen. P. G. T. Bauregard, of the Confederate Army at Starr V. Henkel's Auction Rooms, Phila., Oct. 25—a letter of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston's to Gen. Bauregard from headquarters, Huntsville, Mar. 7, 1862, fetched $60. Another by the same writer, giving information of his movements and autographically signed, dated Decatur Mar. 11, 1862, brought $40. An autograph letter by Brigadier Gen. Geo. H. Stewart to Gen. Bauregard from Oatlands, London Co., Va., Aug. 8, 1861, went for $19.50.

End Part VII Joline Sale.

The Sale of Part VII of the Joline library closed at the Anderson Galleries on Oct. 22, the total being $5,295.40 and the grand total of the parts already sold $58,832.65. At the third session, on Oct. 21, Mr. G. D. Smith gave $400 for a letter of Keats to the Misses Jeffrey; $55 for a letter of Ninon de l'Enclos and $51 for La Fontaine's autograph poem "Pour le Roi." The total of the session was $1,233.70. On Oct. 22 Mr. Smith gave $42 for a letter of Horace Walpole; $40 for a letter of Voltaire and $30 for a letter of Rousseau and eight portraits engraved by Hopwood. The total for this concluding session of Part VII was $783.35.

EXPOSITION ART SALES.

"Crofters Returning Home," by Hugo Carlberg..... 280.00
15 etchings, totalling..... 300.00
The sales in the Swedish section have amounted to $5,300.

Mr. C. E. de Vries, the manager of the Holland sections is trying to arrange for a circuit exhibition of Dutch art, such as has already been planned for the Swedish section.

The total sales of the Department of Fine Arts now far exceed $100,000.

RECENT FOREIGN ART AUCTIONS.

The first art auction held in Holland since the outbreak of the war, took place at Frederick Müller & Co.'s Amsterdam Galleries, July 6-8 last.

Among the principal items sold were:
A. H. Bakker Korff's "Old Lady at Morning Devotions," (Steengraacht Collection, Hague, 1878).....$1,290
Rosa Bonheur, "Two Donkeys," 1861..... 840
J. Bosboom, "Interior of Protestant Church, 17th Century"..... 680
A. H. Bakker Korff, "The Letter of Recommendation, 1879"..... 500
J. Van Goyen, "Two River Landscapes—1643 and 1642"..... 2,280

SAY IMITATED ASS'N NAME.

The American Art Association, 6 E. 23 St., applied Thursday to Justice Philbin of the Supreme Court for an injunction restraining the American Art Galleries and Auction Rooms, of 13 St. and University Place from continuing to use that name. The plaintiffs are Thomas E. and Gustavus T. Kirby and James F. Sutton, and the defendants are Arthur Kritzer and Maurice and David Gerstner.

The plaintiffs stated their association was organized in 1883 to sell paintings, objects of art and bric-a-brac. Since then they have sold $32,000,000 worth of such property, and in 1914-15 spent $60,000 for advertising. In all they had spent a million dollars in advertising. They complained that the defendants organized on Sept. 29 last with only $5,000 capital, of which but $3,000 was paid in, and that the purpose of choosing their business name was to trade on their reputation.

A. Jocelyn H. Magrath called on the defendants Oct. 7 on the pretense that he believed them connected with the plaintiffs. He said that the defendants made no effort to correct this impression and asserted that they were a branch of the American Art Association.

NOT TO GILD LIBERTY.

Happily the story that the Government was to paint and gild the Statue of Liberty brought out by the fact that Mr. George Kountz, of Harmersville, Pa., offered to do it himself is said to be untrue. The patina of age is considered one of the greatest attractions of all sculptured works in bronze, as are the tones produced by wind and weather on monuments of stone. Did any one in France ever dream of washing Bartholdi's "Lion of Belfort" as did the Treasury Department the groups of the N. Y. Custom House?

LONDON LETTER.

London, Oct. 20, 1915.

The will of the late Sir Hugh Lane, as you have doubtless learned by cable, has recently been proved at £50,000. His Sargent portrait is to go to the Dublin National Gallery, the bulk of his modern paintings and drawings are destined for the Dublin Gallery of Modern Art, while a group of pictures lent by him to the London National Gallery is to be used as a foundation for a collection of modern Continental Art in London. The remainder of his property is left to the National Gallery of Ireland, instead of to the Modern Art Gallery, as a protest against the want of judgment shown by the latter body in its decision to abide by its own taste in matters of art, rather than to rely on expert opinion. Sir Hugh alludes to the action taken by the Modern Gallery of Dublin in 1913 as showing a want of public spirit and hopes that his protest will serve as a deterrent to other public institutions. The Leicester Galleries are holding an exhibition of drawings by Forain, Steinlen, Vallotton and others, as well as by artists in the trenches, who are transcribing on paper some of the stirring themes witnessed among these war pictures, the French instinct for the dramatic seldom allowing itself to obtrude unduly upon the proper balance of composition. The draughtsmanship is in most cases of a very high order, the desired effects being attained in the most direct and simple manner.

On Oct. 25 Mr. Frederick Larkin, the expert in Chinese Art, leaves by a Dutch liner for New York, in company with Mr. C. J. Charles, whose gallery at 718 Fifth Avenue he will conduct his business during his visit. Mr. Larkin is taking with him a few choice specimens of porcelain, although he does not purpose holding any extensive exhibition. He will be away for about six weeks.

The recent death of Mr. Frank T. Sabin, aged 67, the well-known art dealer of 172 Bond St., came as a great shock to his many friends for he was widely respected and a man who made but few enemies. His connection with America has always been a close one, for his father made a special study of books relating to American interests and was the author of a dictionary of these works, handing on to his son many valuable links of interest between the two countries. Mr. Sabin specialized in old color prints and engravings and was in particular noted for his intimate knowledge of the English, French and Dutch Schools.

Mr. Eric Gill, who was entrusted with the task of executing the reliefs of "The Stations of the Cross" for the Westminster Cathedral, has evoked a storm of comment by the four which are already in place. Taking into consideration the fact that this sculptor deliberately affects archaic forms and is pledged to ultra-simplicity of treatment, it might have been expected that this work, in which elaboration or affectation would have indeed been fatal, would have been especially suited to his type of mind. Unfortunately his mannerisms have proved too strong for him, so that devout churchgoers see in his sculptures rather the expression of aesthetic ideas than those which pertain to the ethical and the abstract. His use of color, too, is so deliberately primitive as to be as provocative of derision as might be a child's attempt to color some wooden doll with the contents of his first box of paints and certainly, no matter how profoundly one may be interested in the new movement, it would be an impossibility to claim that it proves anything but distracting in a place of worship! Moreover, these sculptures accord remarkably ill with the architecture which surrounds them and it would be safe to assume that were Mr. Bentley, the architect, still alive, he would have resolutely discontinued anything so incongruous. It may be perhaps that in conjunction with the somewhat tasteless marble decorations of the surrounding chapels, these bald carvings of Mr. Gill seem intensified in their primitive bareness, for certainly taste has likewise erred in the over-decoration lavished elsewhere. Seeing that the building is in itself a really fine piece of modern work, it is deplorable that the effect within should have been marred so unnecessarily.

I wonder that American buyers did not compete at the sale of Stonehenge which took place a few days ago. Perhaps the difficulty of conveying it abroad at the present time, may have accounted for their absence! It came rather as a surprise to the majority of us that it was not a national monument, seeing that it dates back to the time of the Druids. A local patriot purchased it for £6,600.

One of England's foremost authorities on the art of decoration and antique furnishing, Mr. Andrew Russell, leaves this week to pay his first visit to America, going first to New York and thence to San Francisco and other cities. He is taking with him photographs of some of the most interesting items among his magnificent collection of antiques, notably those of an old Tudor house of oak and brick construction dating from 1495 and suitable for re-erection. From an important country seat here he has also obtained a suite of panelled and carved Chippendale rooms, while among the smaller "objets d'art" are a set of fine decorative paintings signed "Lancet."

A. Burne-Jones Gift.

An interesting gift has been made to the Polish Relief Fund by the family of Sir Edward Burne-Jones, namely the Burne-Jones portrait of the Polish musician Paderevski, which thus far has always hung in the artist's studio. The picture which has all the softness of a pastel drawing, but which is actually an oil, is well known through its reproductions and represents the sitter crowned with the aureole of auburn hair in the style which he affected some twenty years ago. The price put upon the canvas is £500 and it will be interesting to see whether the Pre-Raphaelite cult is still sufficiently vigorous to ensure so high a figure.

Among other items on sale on behalf of on one side and turn their heirlooms into good gold. Among the articles for which the outlying districts of Scotland may be looked upon as a happy hunting-ground are porringers, mostly in silver, pottery jugs, often embellished with quaint inscriptions to King James and his descendants, toddyladles of various types and of course Jacobean prints of all kinds. The northerly parts of Scotland moreover, contain a number of old, historic castles, the owners of which have become impoverished with the course of years and among these are several which contain fine tapestries and wood carvings. When the time once more arrives when tours in these parts again become the vogue, American visitors will do well to prosecute their search thereabouts with zeal.

GERMAN ART NOTES.

Fritz Winkler, noted for works on the history of miniature painting, has been appointed librarian to the Berlin Royal Museums. He had recently been engaged as assistant at the Dredens Gallery.

The "Picture of a Lady," by Wilhelm Trübner, dated 1877, has been acquired by the Municipal Gallery of Essen from the funds of the Krupp Foundation.

The Chief Magistrate of Breslau has allotted the equivalent of $725 for designs of the same fund are a number of exceedingly clever toys made in wood by Polish artists who have temporarily settled in Paris. These take the form sometimes of animals, sometimes of figures, and each is a spirited, individual piece of work. This incursion of the artist proper into the realm of toymaking, which since the War has become such a recognized thing, should have far-reaching effects and perhaps do more towards the development of national taste than all the voluminous writings of a Ruskin! It is difficult to imagine that a child, having once grown accustomed to the delights of a toy of true artistic merit (combining also, as they mostly do, the attractions of whimsicality and humor) will be willing to tolerate patiently the lifeless, commonplace playthings with which he was formerly content. So, even if in the days to come the majority of us find ourselves too impoverished to purchase more ambitious works, we may still be able to support the artist in our midst by at least embellishing the nursery with his products!

THE PROPHECY OF NATHAN

Sold by P. W. French & Co. to Mr. Edward A. Faust, of St. Louis

The Geffrye Museum in Shoreditch, which exists primarily for the benefit of the cabinet makers who live in that district, has recently been enriched by the addition of the staircase of James Boswell's house in Bloomsbury, the rest of which has been demolished. "Old London" is so rapidly vanishing from sight in spite of the persistent protests made in the press that one will soon be obliged to take a journey to this Museum whenever one wishes to be reminded of the glories that have been. It is curious that the far-spread appreciation of the antique which obtains today should not have proved sufficiently powerful to secure the retention of more of our antiquarian landmarks.

For the information of American collectors who like to purchase their smaller curios direct from the owners rather than from the dealers, I may say that I have heard lately that the northern parts of Scotland still offer many a "find" to the wily buyer. The Scotch as a race are slow to part with family treasures but the rising generation with the Scotch instinct for making money, are beginning to put sentiment war reminiscences, intended to replace the tasteless productions now extant. Tablets in honor of deceased warriors, to be erected in churches or homes, cemetery monuments, etc., are suggested.

The bronze bust of Bismarck by Adolf Hildebrand has been placed in the new department of modern sculpture at the Frankfurt Municipal Gallery. It is of colossal size and is modelled on the lines of the Bremen equestrian figure of the chancellor.

The gallery of old masters at the Budapest museum has been enriched by a work of Alessandro Magnasco, presented by Herr Marzell Nemes. It represents the "Meal of the Monks" and formed part of the Magnasco exhibitions of 1914 in Berlin and Paris. Another picture by Magnasco of the same title and similar in composition is in the collection of the late Sir William Van Horne in Montreal.

Among recent acquisitions of the Cologne Diocesan Museum is a picture of the old German school dated 1500, representing Saints Fabian and Sebastian, as well as a seated figure of St. Nicholas, of the 14th Century. These pictures are from the collection of Cardinal Archbishop Philippus Krentenz.

MR. FAUST'S GREAT TAPESTY.

The remarkable Flemish XV century tapestry, "The Prophecy of Nathan," recently purchased at a figure, said now to be over $100,000, from P. W. French & Co., 6 W. 56 St., by the well known St. Louis collector, Mr. Edward A. Faust, and reproduced on this page is the most important work of its kind owned west of the Alleghenies. It will occupy an entire wall space, in the new gallery. Mr. Faust, who is president of the St. Louis Art League, has built as an addition to his residence. This will be decorated and furnished in Louis XVI style. As stated in last week's ART NEWS which exclusively announced the sale, the tapestry, seen last year in Buffalo and Brooklyn forms part of the present display in Phila.

This work, originally from a Royal Spanish palace and later from the Chateau de Vierville in Calvados, and whose exact measurements are 11 ft. 10 in. x 21 ft. 5 in., shows in its three scenes, the story of David and Bathsheba. To the left above is David giving Bathsheba's husband, Uriah, the letter that ordered Joab to place him in the forefront of battle, and on the right Uriah delivering the same. The central scene shows David and Bathsheba, standing before a throne in penitent attitude, while Nathan below extends his right hand saying in prophecy "The sword shall never depart from thine house, because thou hast despised me and hast taken the wife of Uriah, the Hittite, to be thy wife."

Mr. George Leland Hunter says in the Phila. catalog: "Very interesting is this splendid tapestry to compare with the set of ten picturing the Story of David and Bathsheba, in the Cluny Museum, said to have been woven for the French King, which afterward belonged to the Duke of York, to Marquis Cpinola, and to the Serra family of Genoa. The Cluny tapestries are three feet higher than the present one but in no way superior as regards weave, composition or design. Indeed, were it not for the difference in height and the fact that the events of the tapestry and elsewhere covered in the Cluny set, one might almost at first sight suspect it to be part of the set. But while the faces and evidently the models for the personages are similar and similarly treated, the garments, particularly of David, are different and there are numerous other minor differences that I shall treat more fully in a special monograph on the subject."

John Denison Champlin, co-compiler, with Prof. Ripley, of the "Cyclopedia of Painting and Painters," published by the Appletons, who died Jan. 8, 1915, left a net estate of $36,225. To his son and namesake $5,000 is left, and the remainder goes to his widow, Mrs. Franka L. C. Champlin.

CHANGE IN ADDRESS.

When a change of address is requested, both the new and old address should be given. Two weeks' notice is required for changing an address.

DISCONTINUANCES.

If a subscriber wishes his or her paper discontinued at expiration of his or her subscription, notice to that effect should be sent; otherwise it will be assumed that a continuance is expected and bill will be sent and payment should follow.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or, more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Brayton Ives' Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

A SIGNIFICANT MOVE.

The leasing of the fine and spacious Art Gallery erected by the late Benjamin Altman at the rear of his former mansion at Fifth Ave. and 50 St., and just west of the Avenue, by the well-known and prominent art house of E. & C. Canessa and Co., of Naples, Paris and New York, together with the leasing of former handsome private residences in the same neighborhood by the Paris art houses of Jansen and Pares and the London one of Sparks—all chronicled elsewhere in our columns, are further proofs, if such were needed, of the shifting of the art trade interests and markets, simultaneously with the transfer of financial centers, from the old world to the new.

This shifting of the art interests and markets across the Atlantic had begun long before the war's outbreak, but its progress has been undoubtedly hastened by that calamity.

We congratulate the Messrs. Canessa on their acquisition of the Altman Gallery, in which, after rearrangement and refitting, they purpose installing the varied and beautiful exhibition of antiques and art treasures they are now showing in the Italian Pavilion at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and which has been one of the most interesting and important art features of the Exposition.

That so well-established and leading an art house as that of the Canessas should have decided to establish itself in such a location and to lease a gallery, so much esteemed by American art lovers from its association with the lamented and generous art patron, Mr. Altman, is a cause for congratulation not only to New York but to all American art lovers, while the significance of the move will be appreciated in the art world of Europe as well as America.

THE DISPUTED ROMNEY.

The regrettable incident which we chronicled last week, of the suit brought in London by Mr. Henry E. Huntington of this city and San Gabriel, Cal., against the old and well-known house of Lewis and Simmons, of London, Paris and New York, to recover the sum of $100,000 which the collector paid in this city for a large double figure presentment of Mrs. Siddons and her sister, Mrs. Kemble—as being the work of George Romney, has been and continues to be the universal topic of discussion in art circles. We call the incident regrettable because it tends to disturb the minds of many American art lovers and collectors, who argue that if so prominent, and presumably so intelligent and well-informed a collector as Mr. Huntington could have been deceived in so notable a picture, and so long established and reputable a house as Lewis and Simmons, could also have been deceived as to the validity of a work by such a master as Romney—of what avail are study and knowledge on the part of a collector, and of what service are the guarantees of even leading and reputable art firms?

And yet, it seems to us, that there is not, and should not, be any real cause for such a feeling or conclusion, from this incident, on the part of art lovers or collectors. The matter simply resolves itself, as the suit soon to be tried in London will reveal, into a question of the preponderance of "expert" or authoritative testimony on either side.

The good faith of the sellers of this canvas, it also seems to us, cannot be questioned, and this being the case, and with any suspicion of dishonesty or fraud on their part eliminated, the art world can the more calmly watch the trial of the suit and draw valuable lessons from its progress and result. It is unbelievable that a house like Lewis and Simmons would purposely sell and for so large an amount, to such a collector, as Mr. Huntington, a picture they knew to be spurious, or, in the vernacular, a "Fake." To put the case on a low plane they are certainly not fools.

We understand that Lewis and Simmons had the best possible advice from the best known authorities in England on the work of Romney, on the canvas, and which authorities they will presumably produce as witnesses when the suit is tried, before they even offered the picture to Mr. Huntington. It is proven by the interview with Mr. Isaac Simmons published elsewhere in our columns, that the picture was seen and admired while it hung in the Metropolitan Club in this city by dealers, critics and art lovers, and not questioned—and this would seem to endorse their own judgment and that of the authorities they consulted upon the validity of the work. We hold no brief for Lewis and Simmons, and we argue solely from the statements published, and other information in our possession, not obtained from them.

In our issue of February 20 last in an editorial entitled "As to Attributions," we commented upon the very general misapprehension in this country as to so-called "Expert" testimony, which is here, curiously enough, generally considered infallible testimony, and we further said an art "Expert" is one who has, or should have, if he is qualified to use or enjoy the appellation, superior knowledge of some branch or branches of art, which makes, or should make him, more or less of an authority on such branch or branches of art, but with superior knowledge and education, also a pre-requisite for an "Expert," he must necessarily, at times, be mistaken. He cannot, in the nature of things, be infallible in his judgment or decisions. Witness the now almost universal belief that the eminent Dr. Bode, of Berlin, erred in his judgment as to the famous wax bust of "Flora" being the work of Da Vinci, instead of the modern English sculptor Lucas, and the frequent and recurring controversies between Dr. Bode and that other eminent authority and "Expert," Dr. Bredius of The Hague, as to the validity of certain works attributed to Rembrandt—controversies that have never been definitely decided in favor of either man.

It may be that Mr. Huntington, or those acting for him in this suit, can and will produce authorities or "Experts," whose testimony as to the validity of the disputed work will outweigh, with the English Judge and Jury, that of the authorities and "Experts" whom Lewis and Simmons will call, and whom they consulted before their purchase of the picture. The case only recently tried in Philadelphia and exclusively chronicled by the ART NEWS here, that of the artist Gruppe against Mr. Kinsley of Phila. to recover an amount of $5,000 and interest which he claimed Mr. Kinsley agreed to pay him for an example of Mauve—the validity of which work the latter questioned: was decided in Mr. Gruppe's favor by the jury, not only from the fact that the plaintiff had the weight of testimony as to the picture's genuineness in his favor, but because he proved the absence of any motive to deceive the defendant.

As in the Gruppe-Kinsley suit the absence of motive to defraud and in the case in question, the seeming impossibility of belief that an old and reputable art firm, would be so foolish, to say the least, as to wilfully and knowingly attempt to defraud a wealthy collector and a valued patron and to hazard the loss of his most desirable custom, and the further fact that, probably much against their will, they are contesting the suit to uphold their action and reputation, should, in our opinion, and without any reflection upon or disrespect to Mr. Huntington, who has come to think himself deceived and is naturally aggrieved thereby, gain for them the sympathy of all reputable dealers, who may, any day, find themselves in a similar position, and through no fault of their own.

OBITUARY.

Waldo Story.

Thomas Waldo Story, sculptor, son of the eminent American sculptor, William Wetmore Story, long resident in Rome, and brother of the painter, Julian Story, and of the Marchesa Peruzzi, died at his home in this city Oct. 23 at the age of sixty. Born in the celebrated Barberini palace in Rome, which was leased by his father in 1847, four years after the latter married Miss Eldridge of Cambridge, Mass., he inherited the lease on his father's death and most of the elder Story's art collections, his brother receiving the family summer villa at Vallambrosa. A pupil of his father, Waldo Story soon gained commissions and reputation. He modelled the first statue, that of Sir William Vernon Harcourt, placed in the House of Commons in London, as well as a bust of Lord Randolph Churchill, also there, and his statue in the chapel of Blenheim Palace. He also designed the bronze doors of the library erected by the late J. Pierpont Morgan, a gold mosaic in memory of the elder Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont in Trinity Church at Newport, and a drinking fountain given by Gen. Draper to the town of Hopedale, Mass. Mr. Story was an intimate friend of Whistler, who referred to him often in his "Gentle Art of Making Enemies." He was twice married, his first wife, still living, being a daughter of the English piano manufacturer, Broadwood. He later married Miss Bessie Abbott, the opera singer. Of his two daughters, Miss Gwendolyn, married Capt. Courtney Stewart, who was then naval attaché at the British Embassy in Rome. In 1907 Mr. Story with the late Frederick Gerhard organized the Ritz Importation Co. in this city for the importation of wines and table delicacies. He was a member of the Calumet Club.

Constantin Makovsky.

The death was announced Monday from Petrograd, in a street accident, of Constantin Makovsky, the well known Russian historical and portrait painter. He was in his seventy-seventh year and visited this country about 20 years ago. Several of his paintings including "The Russian Marriage Feast," and "Choosing the Bride" were shown at C. W. Schumann & Sons estab-

CHICAGO.

A truly stunning conquest in the development of "applied art" into great art, is the imitation of fruits and plants by Milton D. Copulos—and products of this "perfection in skill" are amazing visitors at the annual Exhibition of Arts-Crafts now installed in the Art Institute. Botanists who have studied these replicas declare them absolutely true to nature. Copulos has been most assiduous in developing this art into perfection, for years he experimented and tested before he attained the subtle skill that is demonstrated in the Institute's show.

The attraction of the Chicago Miniature Painter's annual exhibition, in the Institute, is enhanced by the acquirement of a neighbor in the same line of art—a collection of portraits on ivory by Edward Earnest Morgan of the Royal Miniature Society. Among the examples receiving the most approval by local artists are the portraits of Mlle. A. Amfreville, Miss Murray-Scott, niece of the Duke of Buccleuch, and Charles Marks.

At the Little Theater Maurice Browne is managing an exhibition of models and designs for stage settings and costumes by C. Raymond Johnson. There are twenty-nine exhibits, including designs for scenery and costumes for "The Trojan Women," "The Pretty Sabine Women," "Jael," "The King of the Jews," "Medea," "The Lost Silk Hat," "The Philanderer." Johnson shows a vivid imagination in these pictures; he is quite kindred with Bakst in his high-keyed effects.

There's a fine display of color-prints from wood blocks by Gustave Baumann, in one of the Thurber galleries—of the romantic scenery in Brown county, Indiana—and some of the landscapes are very ambitious. At Anderson's, an etching in colors of Mrs. Castle, the dancer, by Pierre Nuytens, is a special feature and there is a new exhibition of American and European paintings.

At the Palette and Chisel Club there is a show of J. H. Carlson's pictures of the Berkshire Hills and Green Mountains painted during the recent Summer—splendidly colorful pictures, among which "The Great Oak" is getting much admiration. May Agnes Yerkes is exhibiting her paintings, in water-colors, at the Oak Park Art Shop—a collection painted last Summer.

Leo Mielzner's portrait of Professor Felix Adler is a special feature at Roullier's this week. The Art Institute has acquired ten more manuscripts of the Voynich collection. The first lot included the Canterbury Latin Bible of the XIII century and the wonderful illuminated work purchased by Mrs. Frank Logan. The second includes examples of painting in colors and gold to illustrate religious books of the middle ages—a XIV century Book of Hours, in French and Latin, with fourteen full-page miniatures, a small Book of Hours, with additional prayers, XVII century printing and illumination, a XIII century Anglo-Norman Psalter, a Limoges Book of Hours, with twenty-five miniatures illuminated on vellum in the first half of the fifteenth century, and a French miniature on vellum painted by Jean Colombo of Bourg, 1470; a XII century French Biblia with fifty-eight pictures; Psalms and Hymns in XIV century Parisian work, a XIV century Parisian Art Book of Hymns from Northern Italy; Horace on "The Art of Poetry and Letters" written and illuminated on fine Roman vellum in Florence, 1360; a XV century Book of Hours, with additional prayers and forty-eight full-page miniatures from Flanders.

SAN FRANCISCO.

An interesting exhibition of original drawings by Xavier Martinez has been on at the Hill Tolerton Print Rooms. Though extremely simple these drawings are done in a masterly manner and possess great charm and sincerity.

Of the twelve drawings which comprise the exhibition, eight are California subjects, two, found their inspiration in Arizona, and two are interesting notes from Guadalajara, Mexico, the old home of the artist.

Mr. Martinez is considered by many competent critics to be the most original and gifted genius on the Pacific Coast.

PROVIDENCE.

The president, Mrs. Gustav Radeke, has presented the Rhode Island School of Design with a 16th Century Northern French wooden sculpture of a "Virgin and Child." From Miss Ellen D. Sharpe comes a miniature by Benjamin Trott of John Wood Pointier, of Newark, N. J. Recent bequests are a "Portrait of the Duchess of Marlborough" attributed to Kneller from Mrs. Abby Greene Harris, and Robert Feke's "Portrait of Pamela Andrews," and James S. Lincoln's "Portrait of Sandford Durfee" from Miss Sarah Durfee.

PHILADELPHIA.

Water colors, pastels and black and white, to the number of 146 make up the 18th annual exhibition, now on at the Art Club, to Nov. 12. The pictures, none of them of large dimensions, are attractively hung on two lines only and include examples by a surprising number of painters whose names are new to the public, yet comparing favorably with the work of the better known exhibitors. Among them should be mentioned two effectively handled and highly decorative street scenes by Miss Felicie Waldo Howell, one "A Tenement Street, Phil." and another "A Marketing, Martha's Vineyard," both showing the last word in the way of the use of opaque color.

On the other hand, that painting in pure aquarelle still holds its own, is well illustrated in Miss Alice Schille's group of "Black Boats," and in a capital street scene in an old world town, "The Top of the Road." A number of admirable pastels are contributed by Fred Wagner, an especially good study of a wintry river view, "Floating Ice," giving a true note from Nature's own book. "The Fishing Fleet, Concarneau," by Carl J. Nordell, "Polperro," a colorful picture of the red sailed craft of a port in Cornwall, by Miss Katherine Patton, are excellent examples. C. J. Gruppe shows a convincing landscape in "The Rain Cloud" as does John F. Carlson in his "Sunny Brook." Mr. Gruppe also shows a good bit of figure painting entitled "An Interesting Book." "A Study for a Portrait," by Sergeant Kendall, in chalks and pastel, has every evidence of careful observation of the essentials in the makeup of the child model. Henry R. Rittenberg shows a charming presentment of American beauty and a fine example of a finished painter's technique entitled "At the Piano." Leon Kroll is represented by two studies of the nude, rendered in pastel, boldly handled and luminous in effect. Leopold Seyffert exhibits some well-drawn studies of the nude in dry point etchings.

The place of honor on the west wall is occupied by a series of ten drawings in black and white by Joseph Pennell of the buildings of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in which the picturesque architecture of the Fair is the leading theme.

Eugene Castello.

CLEVELAND.

The Oriental department of the Museum has acquired thirty Babylonian tablets and comical and cylindrical seals, which are to be shown at clubs and libraries on request, until the Museum is completed. Other plans for outside displays include exhibitions of photographs, prints and lantern slides, to be used in connection with Art talks by Mrs. Emily G. Gibson, formerly of Indianapolis, who has come on to take charge of this branch of the Museum's work.

Work is progressing rapidly on the Museum grounds and on the interior of the building, which will not, however, be completed by the end of 1915 as hoped. Director Whiting and his staff have moved into temporary office rooms in the building and preparations for the opening are steadily going forward.

The Karner and Wood gallery, which has recently been enlarged to nearly double its former size, with greatly improved lighting facilities, has for its opening display a collection of masters of the Dutch, Barbizon and early English schools, from Arthur Tooth & Sons, London.

Oils by Miss Louise L. Heustis, of New York, form the first Autumn exhibit of the Cleveland School of Art. These include three large and striking portraits of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Stevenson Burke, Jr., prominent among Cleveland art patrons. Of these, that of Josephine, the eldest, especially suggests one of the children in early English portraits.

The Cleveland Photographic Society has been showing fine art photographs by Stephen Doumoukos, of the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Raphael Raineri, decorative sculptor and carver in wood, formerly with Tiffany, New York, has on exhibition at his studio in the Hatch Building a bust of King Victor Emmanuel which he has made to be sold for the benefit of the Italian Red Cross.

Jessie C. Glassier.

MILWAUKEE.

An exhibit of nearly fifty pieces of sculpture by Cartaino Scarpitta of N. Y. is on in the Milwaukee Art Society's Gallery.

Among the pieces is a portrait bust of Samuel O. Buckner, president of the society, and a group of four children of C. C. Conway of N. Y.

There are a number of other portrait busts of Milwaukeeans in the exhibit, including those of Mrs. William Schuchardt, Miss Margaret Buckner, Messrs. Albert Zinn and Henry Hinrichs. There are also several groups; one, the "Healing Touch," particularly striking.

BOSTON.

Boston, true to type, is now rejoicing with Bostonese thoroughness over two (post mortem) exhibitions, one of works by Monticelli in the Vose Gallery, and the other a showing of old portraits, all painted prior to 1800, in a gallery dedicated to the shades of the great Copley. Stern and, sometimes handsome, ancestors, with rigid souls and close shut mouths are here shown, limned by Gilbert Stuart, John Smibert, Copley and others of their contemporaries.

The Monticellis at Vose's attract the artist and connoisseur, as well as the ancestor worshippers. Here are rarely fine examples by that master colorist to rejoice the art lover. This is the first collection of the great colorist's work ever shown in Boston.

"The Christmas Party" is Monticelli to a degree. A red robed woman with yellow hair is the center jewel spot in a setting of dark notes of richest color. "The Garden Party" exploits two or three nude cherubs glowing with color like rose petals, in an environment of dark tones of ultramarine blue and green, with ripest golden brown and suggestion of underlying crimson. "L'Arcade," "The Star of Bethlehem," "The Peacock Garden" and others are in this collection.

That all Bostonia does not regard all artists as Gen. Miles did the Indian—"No good Indian but a dead one"—is evident by the interest shown in the exhibition of modern sculpture in Bigelow and Kennard's new gallery. Here is an up-to-date Bacchante, called "Peggy," who is intensely modern; Edward McCarten's prize winner, a woman seated on a turtle; a Hawaiian youth and maiden by Clio Bracken; a local polo player, a portrait in action of John P. Fell of the Myopia Club, by Charles C. Ramsey, etc.

An important loan collection of early American portraits is on at the Copley Gallery for three weeks. In almost every case the portraits in this collection have never before been publicly exhibited; and several of the artists represented are comparatively little known painters. The names in the list include those of Copley, Mather Brown, Ralph Earle, John Johnston, Benjamin West, John Trumbull, Gilbert Stuart, Christian Gullager, Robert Feke, John Smybert and Charles B. J. F. de Saint Memin.

The Boston Art Club, with rare courage, announces an exhibition of works by artist members; with a jury to vise the works submitted. This seems to promise a better show, and a bigger row! than in former years.

John Doe.

HARTFORD (CONN.)

The recently completed Municipal Building now occupied by the Mayor and several city departments contains two allegorical panels executed in low relief by Louis Even, after designs by the architects Davis and Brooks. The sculptor, who is now fighting for France in the war, has been successful in combining several features of local significance. The figure of an Indian Chief represents the region of the source of the Conn. River—a hat standing in a ford typifies Hartford, Thomas Hooker and his band of settlers are shown, Ceres is introduced, and in the background oxen and ploughshares, symbolizing agriculture, and the front of Centre Church, representing the fundamental religion of the colony. The second panel represents in figures of Revolution and Union soldiers, the struggle of community development, while the accessories suggest the progress of the centuries.

The architects, Davis and Brooks are making an interesting restoration of an ancient colonial building in the vicinity of Bushnell Park for use as their offices.

CINCINNATI.

Although a conservative, old-fashioned town, the new in art is always eagerly booked for and "given a hearing here," and the Bellows pictures now on exhibition at the Museum are hailed with delight.

Certain it is that the new-comer is a strong painter, a colorist and very original. A pupil of Henri he has long "out-Henried" his master and how he could ever have consistently been included among the "Five Glooms" or "Depressionists" is a mystery for his painting exhales a glowing quality, and his shadows abound in transparency and opalescence. Rarely does one find a more luminous painter.

His female portraits are delightfully direct, limpid transcriptions and his full length, life size presentment of Dr. William Oxley Thompson is a strong, powerful and manly piece of portraiture that will live long and hold its own—no theatrical brushwork, no labored spotting, all so simple and great is the effect, art without pedantry.

Miss Bessie Hoover has joined the faculty of the Art Academy to succeed Miss Grace Young who has resigned; Miss Hoover is an advanced Duveneck pupil and is a successful portrait painter and well qualified for her new duties.

John Rettig never fails to bring home a goodly crop of interesting sketches from his annual summer outing, and this versatile and talented artist succeeds equally well with interiors and still life as with landscapes and marines. He has always played a prominent part in local art life and in one way or another is constantly giving his time as president or chairman of committees in the interest of the Art Club.

G. Frank Muller.

BUFFALO.

The exhibition of sculpture by Paul Man-ship at the Albright Art Gallery, to remain open until Nov. 14, contains twenty-five of his bronzes, one marble, four plasters, a set of seven terminal figures, and a series of four panels in color symbolizing the elements.

Among the bronzes are the fountain figure of the Infant Hercules, a Salome, a group of Centaur and Dryad, a group of Satyr and Sleeping Nymph, two or three vases, a gilded bronze figure of Christ Crucified, a portrait statuette, a sketch of David, three sketches of boy hunters, a sketch of a mother and child, a sketch of the Madonna, a group of Andromeda and the Dragon, a panel of two medals, a sketch of Music, and subjects catalogued under the titles of "Little Brother," the "Lyric Muse," "Indian and Pronghorn Antelope," "Playfulness," "Wrestlers," "End of the Day," "Marietta" and "Yawning."

NEW ORLEANS.

An exhibition of paintings by Luis Graner the Spanish artist is now on at the Delgado Museum. Since leaving New Orleans last Spring Mr. Graner has done a remarkable amount of exceptionally fine work so that he has now some forty pictures of far greater interest than any previously exhibited here, not only by Mr. Graner but by any other artist. A few of the paintings are figures with landscapes or marines for background, but the exhibition consists chiefly of charming, colorful landscapes done with a lavish brush or more frequently with the palette knife. The pictures are of a desirable size and deal with all features of the day from morning's tenderness to noonday glare, shading down into the soft toned evening effects. There are landscape and marine, wonderful in color and harmonious effects. There is one picture showing a commercial basin and rocky foreground with a wharf and some buildings in the distance which has fine color quality. Looking over the exhibit from the viewpoints of technique and handling and charm of color it is difficult to express a preference. Twelve good sized paintings were purchased by New Orleans art collectors on the opening day; three by Dr. I. M. Cline, three by Mr. Ernest Lee Jahncke, two by Mr. Hunt Henderson, two by Mr. E. W. Smith, one by Mr. Gideon T. Stanton, one by Mr. H. F. Baldwin, and there are others considering purchasing.

There is also on exhibition at the Museum an interesting collection of lithographs, representing John S. Sargent, Charles Shannon, Albert E. Steiner, William Nicholson, Maurice Denis, Matisse and Pennell.

There is also a group of some thirty paintings loaned by Mrs. J. K. Newman, comprising an admirable Cazin, good examples of Boudin, Jongkind, and others of the French school of the eighties and nineties.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Early Chinese Art at Montross'

At the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave., there is now on an interesting and instructive exhibition of early Chinese Art—a comprehensive showing of Stone Sculptures, Bronzes, Paintings and Pottery, from the collection of Mr. A. W. Bahr, whose long residence in China, and thorough knowledge of Chinese art made him pre-eminently fitted to obtain rare specimens of the work of various schools, from early periods on.

The dates are recorded by various Dynasties, including the Chow, Han, Wei, T'ang, Sung, Yuan, Ming and Ching.

The panel, "Pines and Rising Sun," attributed to Lio Tsan (Sung), simple in composition and wonderfully decorative, is most inspiring. Such subjects as "The Phoenix" (Ming) and "Arhat and the Dragon" (Tuan) are rarely imaginative in conception.

There is a dignity and a remarkable depiction of personality which always impresses one, in Chinese portraiture, of which there are some notable examples in the present display. H. C. R.

Flowers and Dunes by Demuth.

Beautiful color and decorative arrangement are the features of the exhibition of watercolors by Charles Demuth, now on at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47th St. to Nov. 9. Simplicity of method and drawing by masses characterize the thirty odd works and the catalog is simplicity itself, the groups "Flowers," "Dunes" and "Drawings," being known only by numbers, in the first two cases, and in the last the number not being given. That Mr. Demuth can draw with refreshing freedom is shown in a few strokes in one or two of the examples, but he is generally more concerned with effect and color than detail. His "Dunes" are simply frames for chromatic effects of light and color and his drawings are tinted sketches chiefly of bathers in which is good suggestion of life, but rather forced effects of color. A. v. C.

Ceramic Art Society Display.

The 18th annual exhibition of the N. Y. Society of Ceramic Arts is now on in The Little Gallery, 15 E. 40 St., from Nov. 1 to 13.

The aim of this Society has always been to present only the best work of this craft done in this country, and this exhibition is no exception in giving an interesting opportunity to observe the products of the leading potters and decorators.

Among the potters represented are the Marblehead Pottery, the Newcomb College Pottery, the Boston Bowl Shop and the Byrdcliffe Pottery by the Misses Penman and Hardenbergh. The most notable work shown in porcelain is by Miss M. M. Mason in relief enamels.

Other porcelain workers are Mrs. E. Mason Vanderhoof, Mrs. J. Unger, Mrs. A. B. Leonard, Members of the Fawcett School of Industrial Art under Miss Mason's leadership, Miss Van Siclen, Miss Armstrong, etc.

Pittsburgh Artists Show.

The Associated Artists of Pittsburgh are holding their Sixth Annual Exhibit at the Carnegie Institute Galleries to Nov. 22. The jury of award this year consisted of W. M. Chase, W. S. Robinson, Charles W. Hawthorne, George W. Sotter, Arthur W. Sparks, and Margaret V. C. Whitehead, with Hames Bonar as Chairman—Pittsburgh. The prize honors went to Elizabeth B. Robb, Ralph Holmes and Elizabeth F. Rothwell. The 181 pictures hung show a modern spirit and show decided progress on the part of the members of the Association. The contest for the Mrs. Richard A. Rowland prize of $200.00 for the picture voted by the public the best one hung is arousing a great deal of interest among the visitors, and this, together with the fact that there has been no International Exhibition in Pittsburgh this year tends to make this a most popular display.

Municipal Gallery Shows.

Exhibitions booked at the Municipal Art Gallery, Washington Irving High School, Irving Place and 16 St. for the season include displays of work by the School Art Dept.; a show of paintings, sculpture and objects of minor art by members of the German Association for Culture; an exhibition of designs for postal cards (looking to the improvement of this branch of art), a movement in which Miss Clara McChesney is one of the leaders; an exhibition of designs for commercial use by the International Art Service, and a display of recent paintings by a group of Americans of whom F. Luis Mora is the leader.

Portrait Painters Show.

The exhibition this year of the Society of Portrait Painters, to open with the 26th display of the Watercolor Club, at the Fine Arts Building on Nov. 6, will be much larger than last year when 27 works were shown. This year 54 will represent the 37 members and the two "invited" exhibitors, Oliver Dennett Grover and John Sloan. Newly elected members are J. Alden Weir, Douglas Volk, Joseph De Camp, W. T. Glackens, Helen M. Turner and Leopold C. Seyert of Phila. The executive committee consists of R. W. Vonnoh, W. M. Chase, Cecilia Beaux, William Cotton, Robert Henri and Irving R. Wiles, who replaces the late T. W. Alexander. The President is S. Montgomery Roosevelt. This year's exhibition of the Society after the close, Nov. 30, will go on tour to the Corcoran Gallery, Washington, the Chicago Art Institute, the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, and the Memorial Gallery, Rochester, in succession until the end of March.

ishment in this city and through the country, and among other works, he was represented at the St. Louis Exposition by "The Death of Ivan the Terrible" and "Banquet at a Russian Nobleman's House." He painted many of the beauties of the Russian court and aristocracy. He was a strong and agreeable colorist and handled the groups in his huge historical and genre canvases with great skill.

Stanislao Martini.

Stanislao Martini, aged seventy-eight, a sculptor of note among the Boston Italians, died suddenly in Boston, Oct. 18. Several of his statues adorn the Church of St. Leonard in Prince St., and others have been placed in other Boston churches.

He was born May 12, 1837, and for many years lived in Mirabella Eclano, Italy, where all his children were born. As a child he exhibited artistic ability and studied painting, sculpture and wood carving. Before coming to this country he achieved an enviable reputation in his native land as an artist. One of his specialties was artistic work in straw.

Hugo Kühnelt.

Hugo Kühnelt, president of the Austrian Sculptors' Association, has fallen in the war. His marble block of a Medea is one of the ornamental features of the Vienna State Gallery.

Dr. Jaro Springer.

This accomplished artist fell at the storming of Nowo Georgiewsk this Autumn at the head of his company. He was born in November 1856, at Prague, where his father was the professor of art history. He was successively appointed assistant and custodian of the Berlin Copper Plate Cabinet, attaining the latter distinction in 1909.

Dr. Marcus Zucker.

Dr. Marcus Zucker, an art and literary "expert," recently died at Erlangen, Germany, aged 74. His reputation largely rested on his writings upon Michel Angelo and the 17th Century Dutch school. Albert Durer was, however, his favorite subject. Dr. Zucker was director of the local University Library.

August Prokop.

August Prokop, professor of architecture, is dead at Bozen in his seventy-seventh year. He was the architect of the Turnhalle and the Episcopal Chapel at Brunn.

Dr. Ernst Weiss.

Dr. Ernst Weiss, late technical assistant at the Hamburg Museum of Art and Industry, a pupil of Adolph Goldschmidt, lately fell in battle. His studies were chiefly directed to the Dutch school of the early sixteenth century.

David Zacharias.

Lieut. David Zacharias, the Düsseldorf painter, was killed in the assault on Warsaw. His principal works were a picture of himself and various interior scenes, and his death is regarded as a distinct loss to the Düsseldorf artistic world.

ART AND ARTISTS.

An exhibition of etchings by M. Paul Roche closes today at the School of Fine and Applied Arts of the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn. There are both portraits and street scenes.

D. J. Gue has painted from memory and a daguerreotype a portrait of John Brown of Harpers Ferry.

Edward Borein, etcher and painter, has returned to New Mexico.

The American Federation of Arts selection of pictures from last year's international exposition at Pittsburgh is now on view at the National Gallery in Washington.

Leon Kroll has moved from the Broadway Studios to 253 W. 42 St.

Walter Russell is painting Mrs. W. E. D. Stokes with her baby and has recently completed portraits of Mr. Hudson Maxim and of the Rev. Alexander Charles Garrett, to whom a Memorial Chapel, where the portrait will be placed, is being erected at Dallas, Texas.

Albert Groll has returned to his studio in the Gainsborough, from Provincetown, with a group of sketches in crayon which are most artistic.

The annual "Get-together Dinner" of the Salmagundi Club will take place tonight, and the Sunday night Dinners, to which members are now allowed to bring ladies, will begin on Nov. 7.

Carroll Beckwith was recently struck by an automobile and thrown down, but fortunately was not seriously injured.

Bertha S. Menzler will exhibit her recent paintings of the Arizona Desert and Grand Canyon at the Detroit Museum of Art, Nov. 1-15.

On Wednesday last, Prof. A. H. Munsell, the first person to bring into practice a definite measure of color and color balance, addressed the National Arts Club and the American Institute of Graphic Arts, on "Graphic Color and Appreciation of Color Beauty in the Fine and Industrial Arts."

Among new pictures of interest at the Knoedler Galleries are a recent portrait of Cardinal Farley by Pierre Tartoue who also exposes dainty conceptions of the eternal feminine and a portrait of the late John Harson Rhoades by Albert P. Lucas.

Truman E. Fassett has taken one of the Bryant Park Studios at 80 W. 40 St.

George L. Rose, who occupies with C. Y. Turner the studio of the late F. D. Millet, in old Forrest Hall, Georgetown, near Washington, has been holding there an exhibition of his watercolors. Mr. Rose worked for years with the late John Lafarge.

Edith C. Barry has returned to the Van Dyck studios, 939 Eighth Ave. from Montclair, N. J.

Ida J. Greenleaf is back from Provincetown, Mass., and is at 200 W. 56 St.

Elliott Torrey's "Orvieto" has been presented by the Friends of American Art to the Chicago Institute. Another accession is Paul Manship's sculptured panel in color, "Water."

The October Art & Progress contains an article by Frank E. Schoonover on Howard Pyle and another by George Leland Hunter on American tapestries.

Edward C. Potter's bronze equestrian statue of a Civil War bugler, has been unveiled at Brookline, Mass., and is highly praised.

Francisco Pons Arnan, son-in-law of Sorolla, is showing in Havana his equestrian portrait of the King of Spain. It will be seen here later in the season at the Hispanic Museum or in one of the other galleries.

Three Copley portraits, one of a child painted in 1753, when the artist was only six years old, and a portrait of Alexander Hamilton by Trumbull have recently been loaned to the Brooklyn Museum and are on exhibition there.

There will be a new block added to the artists' colony around Washington Mews, in the near future. The property is owned by the Sailors' Snug Harbor.

The Municipal Art Society held its first meeting this year at the National Arts Club on Wednesday. The members showed designs for works intended to beautify the city.

Parker Mann is at Princeton, N. J., after a Summer at Arkville, N. Y.

E. Irving Couse has returned from Taos, New Mexico, to the Sherwood, 58 W. 57 St.

Douglas Volk has returned to his National Arts Club Studio.

Albert P. Lucas is working on an effective moonlight picture, and a conception of "Leda and the Swan," delightful in color and composition.

Ivan G. Olinsky recently completed portraits of Mrs. David Gray and her son, and of Edward Merston's little niece, charming in their pictorial quality and with the elusive bloom characteristic of this painter's work.

Frank Dumond is working on mural decorations for the reception room of the Hotel des Artistes.

The Wilmington Society of Fine Arts will hold its fourth Annual Exhibition from Nov. 1-6 at the New Century Club there. The exhibition consists of works by pupils of Howard Pyle and ten "invited" artists. There are prizes of $100 each for the best illustration and the best picture.

Henry Mosler, who is back for the winter in his Carnegie Hall studio, has finished, for the firm of Gerlach & Barklow, a historical American composition entitled "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

DANIEL'S "MODERNISTS."

The storm center has shifted again and is back home at the Daniel Gallery, where it is welcomed with supreme good humor by that persistent believer and zealous propagandist—Mr. Charles Daniel. One cannot help remarking, in passing, upon the futility of the program of that arch anti-modernist, Carroll Beckwith, who pleads, with such pathetic eloquence to and through the ART NEWS, for a stemming of this tide of "modernism." One's sympathy is enlisted—in truth—in the cause of comprehensibility, enlightenment and progress. While ready to admit the futility of much vagarious rubbish masquerading as expression of "new" thought, the candid observer must also be ready to admit worth, in howsoever small degree it may be found. It is so easy to condemn a picture. But it is very much like condemning a man, for how often do rare qualities appear, following hard upon those which created the first revolting impression.

Like a second "Daniel come to judgment," with a certainty of confidence, this "believer" has lined up his battery and fired, and behold! the spattered remains of "the" critics, Caffin has fallen, still intact, for he would not dissemble; McBride, still cased in Parisian Volland armor, writhes gleefully; others, certain others, variously dismembered, may be observed emerging from the smoke of battle, dragging remnants of once "firm" intellects to a last stand around the adamant figure of Cortissor.

As for the Academicians, they are still safe, for they didn't dare the contact.

Compare Man Ray with Kenyon Cox! What joy! This rare privilege is what New York has granted during the week past, Man Ray, original name surely, elemental name. Why should one be shocked to find such a man painting like a primitive—his "portrait" is truly Giottoesque (?) and decorative. Not decorative like the decorous Cox, most certainly not—not learnedly, industriously decorative, but naively, quaintly so. Fancy a portrait by Man Ray in the Metropolitan Museum! Oh, these "Danielites"! See how this Gus Mager, the man of "the funny paper," visions forth the "Spring." Did ever anyone see painted apple blossoms "jump" like these? The very birds will dip into them.

How about Man Ray's "Still Life," ye cantors who rave of the Japanese? Is there color here? Is there? Is there pattern here? What! Compare that marvelous craftsman, Carlsen, America's own inimitable Chardin? Man Ray, great name, it will be marvelous if it isn't one of the very great.

Zorach, the colorist, sees moving harmonies in the mountains and fell, harmonies no more strange nor less sweet than Mozart's. The Academy makes much of the "poetry" of painting, Zorach proposes the music of it. Harry Berlin, in two coast pictures is rugged, his color is not saccharine like Dougherty's worst, nor brilliant like Dougherty's best, but his tone is big and powerfully dry. Winslow Homer rarely painted a coast with the degree of solemn truth that Berlin gives in his large Oquonquit canvas. Demuth's "Sensations of Times Square" are not my sensations. The fault is mine, however, for not being in shape to feel that way in that neighborhood. Halpert's "Bridge" is the recognized Brooklyn structure, heavily delineated.

"The Garden," by Bror Wordfeldt, a Cape Cod subject, is an effective arrangement of green growths, bending female gardener, and brilliant yellow cottage wall. The woman in the picture has a study of peasant character recollective of Van Gogh's "Potato Gatherers."

Flower pieces by Thomas Benton (a St. Louis descendent of the statesman Benton) and Lee Simonson, and a "landscape" by Preston Dickenson are other features of the display. Charles Demuth now has the gallery at his disposition for a display of watercolors which will remain two weeks.

AND STILL THEY COME.

Jansen, Inc., art dealers of Paris, are the newest arrivals from abroad to establish themselves in New York. They have leased the former residence of Mr. Morton B. Plant, at 25 W. 54 St. Extensive alterations are to be made and the firm expects to be established by Dec. 1. The house is opposite that of Mr. John D. Rockefeller.

M. Emil Pares, art dealer of Paris, has leased the ground floor of the remodelled dwelling, 20 E. 55th St., just East of the St. Regis Hotel.

The Messrs. Ehrich, of 907 Fifth Ave., have leased the third floor of their building to Charles Sparks, of 37 Duke St., London, dealer in Chinese porcelains, etc. Mr. Sparks and Mr. F. J. Abbot, of the firm, are here to open the new establishment.

DEALERS' NOTES.

Mr. Amadeo Canessa of E. and C. Canessa, recently arrived from Naples, on the Dante Alghieri, having spent the summer in Italy and is at the Canessa Galleries, No. 547 Fifth Ave., from which he will direct, with Mr. Ercole Canessa, the fitting up of the new galleries of the firm—in the old Altman Gallery, one door west of Fifth Ave. in West 50 St., and which the firm has leased for ten years.

SCHIEREN ART FOR MUSEUM.

By the will of Ex-Mayor C. A. Schieren the Brooklyn Museum receives the Schieren collection of pictures at the Museum, valued at $22,575.

The Society of the Sons of the Revolution recently presented Boston with a replica of the bust of John Hancock in the senate wing at the Capitol in Washington.

MRS. KIMBALL BUYS A REYNOLDS.

Mrs. W. W. Kimball of Chicago has added to her collection Sir Joshua Reynolds' portrait of "Lady Banbury," at a price reported as $100,000, but which the collector said was less. Mr. Henry Reinhardt, the dealer through whom the purchase was made, also refused to state the sum. Mrs. Kimball said: "A few years ago the home of Mrs. Harold McCormick was burglarized and much valuable property was taken. They caught the burglar finally and asked him how he came to single out that home. He said he read in the newspapers of the purchase of a fine painting by Mrs. McCormick. I will not discuss the matter further." The picture is the well known work painted in 1765 and was formerly in the collection of Mr. C. J. Wertheimer of London.

The picture, bought a few years ago from Sir Henry Banbury, shows Lady Sarah Banbury in full length, kneeling on a footstool before a flaming tripod to offer a sacrifice to group of the Three Graces. Behind her is an attendant, supposed to be her great friend, Lady Susan Strangeways, passes some wine in a flagon. The work was engraved by Henry Fisher in Walter Armstrong's standard work on the artist. Mrs. Kimball intends to exhibit this with the other works of her collection shortly at the Art Institute in Chicago.

LEVY SELLS A BOL.

The fine "Portrait of a Man" by Ferdinand Bol, reproduced in the AMERICAN ART News of May 1 last, when on exhibition in the John Levy Gallery, No. 14 East 46 St., has been sold by Mr. Levy to Mr. C. G. Conn, the well-known musician, formerly of Elkhart, Ind., but now residing in California, where he is assembling a notable collection of pictures.

The canvas is a superior example of Rembrandt's great pupil and is that of a middle aged Dutch burgher, seated half length. The portrait is perfect in workmanship, and admirably conserved, rich in color and agreeably composed. The character and expression are both typical of Bol's able brush.

FORESAW LUSITANIA'S LOSS?

According to an application made by Mr. Stevenson Scott of the Scott & Fowles Co. to the Surrogate's Court on Monday last for a construction of the will of his partner, the late Charles F. Fowles, who was lost, with his wife, on the Lusitania, it would appear that Mr. Fowles had a premonition of death when he made said will.

The distribution of an estate of nearly $1,000,000 depends upon the Surrogate's decision. Under the will Mrs. Fowles received $5,000, all her husband's personal property at his English home, Fairmile Court, in Surrey, except his paintings, horses, carriages, automobiles and contents of his conservatories, garage and stables and certain other effects. She also gets 45 per cent. of the residuary estate in trust, with power to dispose of half the residue. Mr. Fowles left $5,000 each to two brothers and four sisters and the bulk of the estate to his two daughters, Gertrude F. Browne and Gladys M. Baylies.

The will of Mrs. Fowles provided that in the event of the prior death of her husband her estate was to be divided among her two daughters and her sister, Mrs. Dorothy Elizabeth Smith.

Under many decisions in this country, it has been held that in the case of the death of husband and wife in a common disaster, when there was no testimony as to which survived, the man is presumed to have survived the woman. This ruling was made in the litigation over the estates of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Fair, killed in an automobile accident.

The provision in Mr. Fowles's will which occasioned Mr. Scott's application to the Surrogate's Court indicated that he had a premonition that both himself and wife might die on the Lusitania. He directed that if he and his wife died simultaneously, or if there was any difficulty in determining which predeceased the other, it was to be deemed that his wife had survived him.

SCHOFIELD JOINS BRITISH ARMY.

According to the Washington Star, news has been received recently that George Elmer Schofield, the American painter, has joined the British army and is now on his way to the front. While Mr. Schofield is an American, he has lived much in England.

A VEDDER PICTURE FOUND.

"The Three Monks of Fiesole," painted by Elihu Vedder in the Sixties, was sold a little later to Mrs. Laura Curtis Bullard of N. Y. In April, 1880, W. Sartain, the artist, borrowed the picture from Mrs. Bullard, for a loan exhibition in the old Madison Square building. On the night of April 21, 1880, the walls and roof of the building collapsed and many paintings were damaged or lost, the Vedder painting being one of those lost.

In June, 1914, the painting was bought by Mr. Prosper Guerry from Miss Lizzie Potter of Linden, N. J. The old lady dying

ARTIST SUES FOR PORTRAIT.

Mrs. Henry C. Phipps has filed an answer to the action of August Benziger, in the Supreme Court, declaring that he seeks $4,000 for a portrait of Mrs. Phipps which is "not even a fair likeness." Mr. Benziger asserted that the amount was due under contract with Mrs. Phipps, who had ordered the portrait of her husband. She alleges that she repudiated any contract soon after work was begun, and that although Mr. Phipps refused to sit for Mr. Benziger the artist finished his work from a photograph.

Mrs. Phipps also declares that while she has not paid the amount demanded the complaint is erroneous in asserting that the painting in question "is a work of art."

LADY BUNBURY SACRIFICING TO THE GRACES

Bought by Mrs. W. W. Kimball of Chicago from the Reinhardt Galleries.

a few months later it was never known how the canvas came to be in her possession.

Early in January, 1915, Mr. Guerry sent a photograph of the painting to Mr. Vedder in Rome, Italy; who recognized that his lost lamb had been found and informed Mr. Guerry as to the original owner. The Bullard family were informed that the picture had been found, etc., and Mr. Bullard wrote renouncing any claim on the painting.

Mr. H. W. Story who was vice-president of the art committee for the loan exhibition received a check for $25,000 from Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt to cover the damages.

Lawyers, dealers and artists consulted on the matter, agreed and affirmed that Mr. Guerry paid value for the picture, and bought it in good faith.

"MET'N MUSEUM SHORTCOMINGS."

"A belated discovery has been made by Mr. Willard Huntington Wright, a critic who, as we learn from a dictionary of contemporary biography was sometime art editor of The West Coast Magazine," says Mr. Royal Cortissoz in the N. Y. Tribune.

"Mr. Wright has discovered that the paintings at our Metropolitan Museum are a mixed lot, and conceiving that many think the collection adequate to meet the national demand for an educational exhibition of the world's greatest painting eras, he proceeds at great pains to show that it is not. His laborious demonstration of the obvious takes up nineteen pages of the November number of the Forum.

"Now, Mr. Wright is probably not aware that many of the glaring faults he insists upon have been a subject of criticism these many years. If he were, he would doubtless have passed over half of his comments as commonplace and confined himself to such original thoughts as he has to offer. For there are original thoughts in his criticism. Everyone knows, for instance, that there are grave gaps in the collection, but not everyone is disposed to complain on the same score as Mr. Wright. Thus, having named Giotto and a few other Italians who ought to be represented in an educational exhibition of the world's greatest painting eras, he admits that such omissions can be more easily forgiven than the void which follows the name of Leonardo da Vinci, and goes on to say that the most glaring omission, however, in the entire Metropolitan collection is of Michelangelo.

"Some years ago, when Mr. Roger Fry came over here with a few modest things he had secured for the museum, a bright reporter, having lightly glanced over the assortment, turned to the collector and desired to know if he had picked up any Angelos. Mr. Fry stared for a moment, and then smilingly asked whether Michael was the one in question. The simplicity of the affirmative answer convinced him of the bona fides of his inquisitor, and instantly recovering his gravity he explained his difficulty in the kindest manner. Not since then had any one seriously questioned the laxity of the trustees on that account till Mr. Wright noticed that the catalogue had left out the name of this colossus of the graphic arts.

"If it seems a little captious to quarrel with the museum for its failure to procure the unprocurable, it is hardly less so to find fault with it for not having the very best of some other painters. First rate pictures by Titian and Velazquez are not easily found nowadays, and it is idle to say that Vermeer should have more canvases than any other Dutchman save Rembrandt. We are fortunate enough to have even a single example by a master whose works so rarely appeared in the market. * * * *

"Mr. Wright very justly criticises," continues Mr. Cortissoz, "the absurdities of the modern collection, in which it would have been much easier to select critically. But when he speaks of a superfluity of pictures by Manet, while grumbling at the absence of Burne-Jones and Böcklin, one is justified in doubting the infallibility of his taste. He complains that the museum has too few of the more important moderns and alleges that the finest works of Cézanne are now on the market and can be bought at an almost incredibly low figure. This is so surprising a piece of news that it is greatly to be regretted he was not more particular.

"The mistake Mr. Wright makes is in not setting forth clearly what he expects of a museum that is a very late comer in the art market. Apparently he would, as far as Old Masters go, be satisfied with copies, and he says there are many able craftsmen who would gladly make competent reproductions. Well, that is a defensible idea of a museum. But the real mischief, after all, is not that many of the examples of great masters are second rate—for we can hardly expect anything better in most cases—but that there are too many first rate examples by painters who are not masters at all and who have no standing.

"The severest criticism of the collections," Mr. Cortissoz well concludes, "would be a simple enumeration of the futile painters represented. What the museum has is a more just cause of complaint than what it lacks. And for this reason there must have been many who learned with a certain relief the other day that for the moment the state of the funds has checked the process of acquisition."

NEW OFFICERS CHOSEN.

The annual meeting of the Association of American Painters and Sculptors was held at the Manhattan Hotel on the afternoon of November 1. The following were elected: President, Henry Fitch Taylor; vice-president, Jo. Davidson; secretary, J. Mowbray Clarke, and treasurer, Elmer L. MacRae, who succeeds himself.

$250,000 For the Museum.

The will of the late Amos R. Eno, filed Oct. 28, left $250,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and to the Public Library all the books, engravings and prints relating to the City of N. Y. contained in his residence.

WATER COLOR CLUB SHOW.

The twenty-fifth annual exhibition of the N. Y. Watercolor Club, now open at the Fine Arts Building to Nov. 28 proves that while pastel and gouache or body color have many exponents the banner bearers of pure color appear in goodly array. There is one thing that strikes the observer in the present exhibition, which is made in conjunction with that of the Society of Portrait Painters, which fills the large Vanderbilt gallery, and that is the satisfying completeness of the impression made by most of the examples. With these are shown a score or more of small sculpture contributions from the members of the National Sculpture Society which add, with decoration of greens appropriate to the season, to the general picturesque effect. Some cases of miniatures from members of the Society devoted to that means of art expression are also shown.

There is a wealth of color—body color most of it—in George Elmer Browne's picturesque group of "Cape Cod Trawlers," with its almost Italian contrast of blue water in the sunlight with green in the shade, all in a fine ripple. In lighter vein, but full of movement, and delicate in color, is H. Vance Shope's "In Southern Waters." The torment of surf rising and surging on a flat rocky shore is vigorously expressed in Alexander Bower's "Low Tide, Cape Elizabeth."

The shore in quieter aspect appears in Geo. Wharton Edwards' attractive impression of "The Little Harbor, Early Morning"—a pure wash drawing. Felice Waldo Howell, who lays her color on gray paper with fine effect in something of poster style, sends "Gray Weather," a watering place landing stage scene with figures and "Reflections" off a fishing dock. Other shore scenes of note are by Mary Nicholena McCord, Jane Peterson, who in "The Pier, Edgartown" and elsewhere is very Frenchy, M. Sellers, Ernest Albert, who has a very sunny view at Ogunquit, Paula H. Balano, A. C. Goodwin, who has a rather shaky pastel, and A. L. Groll, who shows several capital drawings in cyrolia, or oil chalks, on Cape Cod.

Figure Works.

Perhaps the most serious figure work of the show, a beautiful pastel, delightful in its drawing, color and modelling, is Sergeant Kendall's "La Perroquette." He has also "L'Egyptienne" and a portrait. Also in pastel is Christine Herter's bright portrait study of a woman in a black hat. J. W. Breyfogle has a strong but almost too closely handled pastel of a gravely sweet young woman of whom it is queried, "Can she make a cherry pie, Billy Boy?" Mary Wilson Hubbard sends two attractive works "Knitting" and "Juliette" in the Renoir vein. Delightful, but a little lacking in force is Olive Rush's young woman at "The Sundial." Rhoda Holmes Nicholls has a charming pure wash drawing "Larkspurs." By E. Potthast there is a bright pastel with five well drawn and well posed figures of little girls on the seashore called "A Bunch of Daisies."

There is much go and capital grouping in Gifford Beals' pastels, "Spring Panel" and "Dancing Girls." Quite remarkable as a piece of technique and very graceful and attractive is R. F. Maynard's pastel of a young girl reading and reflected in a mirror called "When Two is Company." The effect of light on Carton Moore Park's decorative "King Vultures" is quite startling. "A Cup of Tea" and "Dorcas," by Charles A. Webb, are two little works of great simplicity and boldness of manner, the latter, however, being a little weak in the handling of the head. W. J. Whittemore has an attractive female figure, "The Flowered Screen," in which that article is a little disturbing. C. P. Gruppe has a bright Dutch horsemarket scene. A quite wonderful effect of light is obtained by Alice Schille by her block of color system, "A Misty Evening in the Park." She is not so successful in her "Gay Spots of Color in the East Side," with all its suggestion of crowd and movement. A similar work holds together better. Louis C. Tiffany is represented by "The Tin Peddler," a well-grouped Southern negro genre. Alethea Platt shows fine color, but rather loose technique in her kitchen scene, "Old Time Things."

Street and Other Scenes.

Two simple and strong St. Ives scenes, one of Hayley Lever's studio are by Florence Snell. Very true is the effect of light in Adelaide Deming's street scene in the fishing town of Polperro. W. C. Emerson strikes quite a new note in his landscapes, several artistic monotypes by H. W. Rubins and several most interesting British Columbia scenes by J. H. Collings.

Sculptures and Miniatures.

The sculptures include works by Carl E. Ackerly, E. T. Quinn, Herbert Adams, C. T. Humphries, J. S. Hartley, H. M. Shradly, Karl Bitter, F. W. MacMonnies, Arthur Putnam, Janet Scudder, Chester Beach, A. St. Gaudens, Isidore Konti, Eli Harvey, A. P. Procter, N. H. Ellerheisen, Jane Poupellet, H. A. MacNeil, Edith W. Burroughs, A. A. Weinman, V. Salvatore, R. Hinton Perry, Abastania St. L. Eberle, and A. Saegers.

Among the miniatures are examples of W. J. Whittemore, Clara L. Bell, Brennetta H. Crawford, Lucia T. Fuller, Eva Springer, Theodora Larsch, Beatrice Montizambert and Ella S. Volk. A. v. C.

SHOW OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS.

The show of the Society of Portrait Painters, which fills the large Vanderbilt Gallery at the Fine Arts Building, to remain to Nov. 28, is about double the size of that of last year, but does not seem to keep to as high a standard as previous shows. Still the general effect is good, if a few jarring notes are sounded in the hanging.

The place of honor, marked by a palm and laurel wreath, is held by the late John W. Alexander's distinguished portrait of a lady in lavender with a collie at her feet.

The new president of the Academy, J. Alden Weir, is represented by a masterly presentation of "C. E. S. W.," painted in 1901.

GEORGIAN PANELLED ROOM

Sold by Gill and Reigate to Mrs. E. H. Harriman

ive head of a young woman. By DeWitt C. Lockman there is a brilliant portrait of an elderly lady, glasses in hand, and a most naturally posed young woman with a red box on a sofa. Irving R. Wiles' "Young Girl With Peonies" is altogether charming.

A graceful, delicate impression is made by Helen Turner's "Head of a Lady." A second Bellows' shows with strong quality of life and fine color, a negro nurse and two children, the baby painted like a Hals. George B. Luks has a very unlovely full length of a young woman. Ellen Emmet signs a capital portrait of a gentleman. A third Crawford is a picturesque figure of a young girl among the pines.

There is a capital drawing in panel by Chase. A brilliant head of a pretty young girl is by Eugene A. Speicher. Richard Miller's "Girl at the Breakfast Table" is seen with pleasure. "A Lady Standing by a Chair" is a second and good example of William Cotton. W. M. Chase is at his best in his picture of a lady in furs, and Robert Vonnoh's "Girl at a Table With a Globe of Flowers" is most agreeable.

Highly artistic is the picture of a mother leaning over her baby lying on a pillow by Henry S. Hubbel. It has something of the quality of a Couture. He sends a capital portrait of a female impersonator.

MRS. HARRIMAN'S PERIOD ROOM.

Messrs. Gill and Reigate of London have sold to Mrs. E. H. Harriman, a remarkable Georgian panelled room reproduced on the page which M. S. Briggs describes in the October Burlington as follows:

"Georgian Panelled Rooms From London Houses.—The upper illustration represents a remarkably fine example of Georgian panelling, recently despatched to a purchaser in America by Messrs. Gill and Reigate. This panelling was removed from No. 38 Soho Square, a house reputed to have been occupied at one time by the French Ambassador. Soho is one of those districts of London where many such rooms are to be found, and there are other instances of famous French people dwelling in the neighborhood. There is, however, nothing particularly French about this example, which may well have been erected before the Ambassador occupied the house. The floor dimensions of the room are 23 ft. by 18 ft., the height 10 ft. 9 in. The chimney-piece is 5 ft. 11 in. wide, and extends to the full height of the room. The whole of the woodwork is in remarkably perfect preservation, and the carved ornament is of most delicate workmanship. Pine is used throughout except in the case of some of the smaller decorative details, which are in lime. The cornice and the dado-rail, so often the features to be enriched, are plain in this example, but all the mouldings of the panelling and the angles of the chimney-breasts are carved. The enriched moulding on these angles is stopped a few inches from dado and cornice. The windows, not seen in the photographs, are without shutters, and have jambs panelled similar to the walls. It will be noticed that the panel on the right of the illustration is unusually large. The door is well proportioned and is surrounded by a beautiful enriched architrave. The original rim-lock still remains. The fine carving above the chimney-piece is especially noteworthy for the central pediment, unusual in work of the period.

"The well-known room removed from No. 5 Great George Street, Westminster, and now in the Victoria and Albert Museum, may be compared with the Soho Square example as being of the same date or thereabouts. The former has no enriched mouldings on its external angles, but the modillion cornice is richly carved, as is the dado-rail.

"Dreamland" and "Idyl." "The Little Coquette," by Arthur Crisp, is hardly up to his standard. There is a spacious feeling about Edward Penfield's vigorous "Spring in Holland," while Frank Mathewson has a fine distance in "Garden in October."

Irma Kolm gives a picturesque little glimpse of "Alvarado St. Monterey." "A Mexican Wood Vendor" is a good moonlight by Frank Tenney Johnson. Simple and strong, as well as picturesque, is H. C. Merrill's "A View in Newbury." Norward MacGilvary shows a cool, graceful nude at a stream, "Among the Hills." Kentaro Kato, a Japanese, has a farm scene from under "Two Apple Trees," which is charming. Some fine work in the late Kubota Beisen's illustrations of the elements and seasons.

Lisbeth C. Hunter displays a picturesque Cezanne-like touch in "Cherry Croft," and Clara Weaver Parrish has a lady with "A Peacock Fan."

Marian Kavanah Wachtel sends a fine large landscape, "The Arroyo." By Reynolds Beal there is a large spirited view over the vineyards of Middle Hope.

Colin Campbell Cooper shows several striking Italian sunsets. J. T. Carlsen has a luminous view in "Grey Winter."

There is a fine Turnesque group of marines and shore views by C. H. Woodberry and "A Schooner at Anchor off Shore" does credit to Alexander Bauer. Harriette Bowdoin signs a bright impression of Washington Square. E. Varian Cockroft has a strange Gauguin-like group; Amos W. Engle a street pattern which is interesting, and Bror. J. D. Nordfelt some unlovely prints from wood-blocks. There is more attractiveness in others by Katherine Mars. Ernest L. Blumenschein has a sketch of his comical German tragedian, and S. Montgomery Roosevelt a good effect of "Rushing Water."

James M. Flagg signs "On the Saco River." Mr. J. M. Magie has an agreeable pastel of a child with "Easter Toys" and Lydia F. Emmet a bright portrait sketch. There are

At one side of this is a weird portrait of two young girls in a land of no light by John Sloan, and on the other an attractive out of door picture of a young woman by F. Crawford Stetson.

There is a sparkling picture by F. W. Benson of a young girl in full sunlight seated in a wicker chair by the shore. Leopold G. Seyfert has an elongated figure of an unhappy looking lady, suavely and skilfully painted with a fan half as big as herself, as well as a vivid male portrait. As a pendant to this is a skilful presentation by F. Stetson Crawford of a young girl against a quite novel background.

As an effect partly of the brightness of Mr. Seyfert's striking head in full light next it, W. M. Chase's "Master Roland" looks almost black in the face. Then, too, there is a very strong aggressive picture of a very determined old gentleman by Geo. Bellows near by with a garish yellow chair and a green and gray background. Next this sparkles an Italian boy by Robert Henri, who e second work is a portrait of a lady.

Former Senator Brice appears, presented in brilliant and yet sober manner, by John S. Sargent. Robert W. Vonnoh has a capital head of a young woman with an XVIII Century headdress. Admirable is Douglas Volk's portrait of himself. Oliver Dennett Grover sends a strong seated three-quarter length of Solon Spencer Beman, a late member of the Institute of Architects.

There is an attractive picture of a lady by Irving R. Wiles. Lydia Field Emmet has a fair two-figure canvas as well as capital portraits of a lady and of a child.

William Cotton has a good picture of Judge Bartlett, and admirable is W. T. Smedley's picture of Mrs. Smedley. De la Gandara's portrait of a fair hunter appears, as does a pendant in somewhat the same vein, by Ben Ali Haggin.

S. Montgomery Roosevelt has a life-like picture of Hiram Maxim, quite the best thing he has done. He has also an attrac-

Works by Lever and Randall.

A freshly painted Gloucester with a brilliancy of coloring like unto Naples, is what Hayley Lever, the Australian artist presents in the striking series of views of the fishing town, so dearly loved of Mass. artists, which he shows among other works at the Macbeth galleries, 450 Fifth Ave., at the exhibition is a joint one with Randall Davey, who is represented by character portraits of subjects found in the same locality, to remain to Nov. 19.

That Mr. Lever is often a brilliant painter there is no denying, and there are some St. Ives views in the present gathering to justify that fact, but somehow, he seems to have been following after more or less strange gods, and to have vulgarized the famous fishing town, instead of interpreting, with his undoubted artistic skill, the picturesqueness which is everywhere round about.

Compare the "Gloucester," (No. 22) with "Morning, St. Ives, Cornwall" and see where a fine picture is superior to what, though realistic in a way, is in quality as crude as a bill board illustrative ad. In "The Bathers, Good Harbor Beach" both sands and sky are contorted in flowing shapes resembling lava. The little group of water colors, of Gloucester and adjacent parts, is quite attractive, although rather fragmentary in execution. It is a pleasure to say that the half dozen odd flower pieces are in every way admirable, fine in quality and color and with something of Chardin and Bonvin about them.

L. Randall Davey is a strong painter, but if there had been no Robert Henri he would not appear in his present guise. Still the "Portuguese Grandmother" who bulks almost out of the canvas, is a remarkable piece of characterization and painting. Notable among the dozen and one works all vibrant and vital, if rather unpleasantly rough in handling, are "The Cobbler," "Old Sea Captain," and "Man and Monkey." A number of children's pictures appear, all of them full of life, but woefully unlovely in type most of them. Surely these could have brought out more of the charm, which is always to be found in healthy youth.

New Group of MacDowell Club.

At the MacDowell Club's second exhibition for this season now on in the club gallery, No. 106 West 55 St., Alice Judson and C. C. Mase, obviously disciples of Twachtman, though not to the extent of swamping their own individuality, represent the Impressionist School, with canvases, poetic in conception and color. Miss Judson's "Azalea Gardens" and "The Frozen Hudson" show realization of atmospheric effects and a nice feeling for color and "Blossoming Trees" by Miss Mase, exhale the very essence of Springtime. Marines by Yarnall Abbott, the only man represented, are rather strong and direct, but hard and quite devoid of feeling. His "Early Summer" is treated in a much milder way and does not show much originality.

"Society Knitting" by Catherine Crichton and "Committee on War Relief" by Sarah Munroe are similar in composition, types and costuming. Both works show the influence of Richard Miller and while Miss Crichton perhaps draws more accurately, Miss Munroe excels in color. The latter shows rare ability as a colorist in "Dahlias," "Fete Day in Brittany" and other works. Edith Barry's canvases have sentiment and charm. As to Dorothea Hale's "Monotony," one can exercise one's imagination, trying to fit the title to the composition which is immature. It is charming in tone, but the placing of the figures on the beach is not correct.

Among the most striking works shown are those by Helen Watkins, and "In Ogunquit, Me., she uses the method, specified by the French as "la touche divisee," which produces the vibrant effect of broken color and "In Italy," handled in a different way, she has achieved a colorful decoration. Julia Titworth shows an effective portrait study and a Spanish landscape, painted while she was studying under Sorolla and Frida Gugler's Venetian pictures have charm. The exhibition as a whole is more conservative than the first.

Napoleonana at Bonaventure's.

An exceptionally interesting, important and varied collection of Napoleonana will be placed on exhibition at the Bonaventure Gallery, No. 601 Fifth Ave. today, to remain through Nov. 20.

Among the items to be shown, further notice of which will be made next week, are, among the books "Louis Napoleon—Exposition of 1806," "Historic Letters of M. de Pellisson," from the "Malmaison Library," "Romances put to Music" by Queen Hortense, with many rare portraits, and autograph letters, and Masson's "Cavaliers de Napoleon," one of 75 copies, pub-ception being made in the case of the veteran Thomas Moran who is still happily with us. He is represented by a large and early woodland glade and a remarkable little Southern moonlight upright. There is a quite remarkable Thomas Doughty, a view of the Phila. water works, and a Kensett which is apparently a view of Harpers Ferry during the Civil War. "Preston Ponds" is a Homer Martin of fine quality and there is a Mexican scene by Sanford R. Gifford. By R. Swain Gifford appears an Alaskan view. There is a most interesting early Newport scene by W. T. Richards. Among others represented are J. W. Casilear, Paul Weber, W. L. Sonntag, Edwin D. Lewis, C. P. Cranch, George Inness, Thomas Cole, John M. Falconer, and F. O. C. Darley.

Dutch Etchings and Drawings.

Extremely interesting is the exhibition of etchings and drawings by Dutch masters from Rembrandt to Bauer which is on at the Frederick Keppel & Co. gallery, 4 E. 39 St. to Nov. 20. The etchings are of high interest though naturally many of them are more or less familiar, but the drawings in which are agreeable without being strong in the main, though at times the facile draughtmanship is most attractive. Among the heads in dry point are those of Poe and MacDowell, the composer, the latter being the more satisfactory. Among the portraits in pencil which form perhaps the most satisfactory group are most notable those of Edwin Markham, Mrs. W. W. Peake, Miss Estelle Richman and Mrs. Frank Day Tuttle.

Cameron Etchings at Kennedy's.

At the Kennedy Gallery, No. 613 Fifth Ave., 72 etchings and dry points by D. Y. Cameron are on view through November.

The collection includes the majority of the impressions which have made this strong modern master of the needle so popular with discriminating collectors, and three or four are only recently published, notably two entitled "Cairngorms" and "Amsterdam"—both rich and full in quality, and the last almost a Whistler in delicacy. The fine "Peaks of Arran" appears in two states and the "Wingless Chimera" in an early proof before the plate was cut down.

There is an early proof with figure at right, of "Rosslyn," as also an early proof of "Chartres Cathedral," before the hat was added to the figure on the porch. There is a trial proof of the "Waterloo Bridge No. 2," a first state of "Dryburgh," and one of the three impressions of "Bennan."

The work of this virile and convincing artist is well exemplified in this display.

Wood Engravings at Arts Club.

An interesting feature of a comprehensive showing of wood engravings now at the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St., is the block of the famous cartoon of "Boss Tweed," which made the late Thos. Nast famous. Practically every American wood engraver of prominence is represented in this collection. There are some rare examples of Timothy Cole's work, never shown before, including a sympathetic depiction of President Wilson, and Mona Lisa. Rudolph Ruzika's design for a new book for the Grolier Club is shown and by Howard McCormick one finds an interesting group. Among those represented are Herbert M. Baer, Frederick T. Chapman, Henry Wolf, Stephen G. Putnam, W. B. Classon, P. Grassby, A. Lewis, V. Preisig, Wm. G. Watt, and Edna Boies Hopkins. A typical F. S. Church, dated 1889, is charmingly fanciful.

"WHEN TWO IS COMPANY"
H. F. Maynard

In Watercolor Club Exhibition

lished by Bossod Valadon and Co., 1895, and extra illustrated.

The other items include the Marriage contract of the Hereditary Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen and the Princess Antoinette Murat, autograph letters and historical documents of Napoleon, framed autographs and portraits of Napoleon and contemporaries, portraits in color of Bonaparte and Napoleon, in black, portraits in oil of Caroline Murat, Pauline Bonaparte, Lisa Bonaparte, and the drawing for his portrait of Napoleon by Baron Gerard. There is also a Borghese bronze vase on a marble base.

Lovers and collectors of Napoleonana will find this exhibition of rare interest.

Art at City Club.

At the City Club, a group of 24 oils from the facile brush of Ernest Tower Rosen command attention. Langorous nudes in fantastic attitudes predominate, and luminosity, fine decorative feeling and a marked ability to subtly depict Bohemian atmosphere, characterize the works. Three portrait studies are charmingly vital.

Work by Early American Painters.

The Ehrich's, who seem to have a talent for exhibitions, which have a distant educational value, are displaying to the end of the month, at their gallery, 707 Fifth Ave. a quite remarkable gathering of landscapes chiefly of early American painters, an ex-

their unstudied freedom have a charm all their own. There are 22 Rembrandts besides examples of Van Uden, Van Goyen, Modyn, the Elder, Naeowinck, Van Everlingen, Waterloo, Both, Berchem, Roos, Nooms, W. Van de Velde the Younger, Villartaerts, Van Ostade, Bega, Dusart, Steen, Leys, Van's Gravesande, Tongkind, Israels, M. Maris and the brilliant Orientalist, Marcus A. T. Bauer.

Etchings and Drawings by Learned.

There are now on view to Nov. 15 at the Ralston Galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., a series of dry point etchings, drawings and pencil portraits by A. G. Learned

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

PUTTING IN TOUCH.

The letter of appreciation from William A. Coffin the artist, and Chairman of the American Artists Committee of One Hundred, which has been raising funds for the relief of French artists suffering from the effects of the war,
and to which we give space elsewhere
in this issue, is a convincing proof, if such were needed, of the value of this journal to the art interests of the country, and, in a way, to the same interests abroad.

When Mrs. Sortwell wrote us some time ago requesting information as to the best channel through which to send her generous contribution of over $200, raised by an exhibition of her sketches in Maine last summer, in which she was aided by George Haus-halter, the artist, we unhesitatingly recommended the "Societe Fraternelle des Artistes" of France, of which Leon Bonnat, the eminent and veteran French painter is the head, and which is represented in this country by the Committee of One Hundred headed by Mr. Coffin.

As will be seen by Mr. Coffin's letter,
Mrs. Sortwell acted upon our suggestion and we are gratified indeed to know that through such suggestion the French Society has been so benefited.

We could wish that other artists and art lovers, when in need of information, such as Mrs. Sortwell required, or any other topic of art interest, would communicate with us, for we are generally able to put in touch interests and persons who might otherwise find it difficult to so get in touch.

Our large and rapidly growing circulation gives us unusual facilities for information and advice on art matters.

When in doubt write the AMERICAN
ART NEWS.

WHY ARE PICTURES GREAT?

The excellent letter from Mr. S. L. Kin-gan of Tucson, Arizona, published in the ART NEWS of October 9 last, asking the question of the headline, and in which Mr.
Kingan argued that art cannot be defined and that words cannot tell what it is—has brought to the ART NEWS office, so many letters of commendation and interest and also of further inquiry along the same lines, that it is thought best to publish the letter written by the editor of the ART NEWS to Mr. Kingan at the time and with which he expressed himself well pleased.

This letter read as follows:
Dear Sir—You are correct in your general assumption that the only way you can learn the lesson of art is by continual study of the same. Art is the expression of the emotions—the handwriting, so to speak. One person expresses his emotion in music, another in poetry or prose, another in painting and still another in sculpture and all in different ways. Those who cannot express aesthetic emotion can feel it expressed for them and if such a one is thrilled by a picture, a sculpture, a strain of music, a poem
or line of poetry, or even a sunset or rise,
or some great vista—one has the aesthetic sense. The capability of feeling must be there, but one learns through constant study
why certain art works thrill and express emotion and others do not.

Very truly,
Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS.
New York, Oct. 10, 1915.

CORRESPONDENCE

An Appreciated Acknowledgement.

Editor American Art News:
Dear Sir,
I have received a cheque for $211.40 from Mrs. Daniel R. Sortwell, of Wiscasset, Maine, which she has sent as a contribution to our Relief Fund for the Families of French Soldier-Artists. The sum was obtained, Mrs. Sortwell writes, by the sale of her summer sketches and studies together with several tempera sketches by George Hanshalter, who co-operated with her in her charitable enterprise. As this substantial contribution has come to us, as you know through the good offices and suggestion of the American Art News, I feel that our thanks are due to your journal and I take pleasure in acknowledging your kind interest. Of course, a treasurer's receipt has been sent to Mrs. Sortwell and I have written her on behalf of our Committee.

Very truly yours,
William A. Coffin,
Chairman, American Artists' Committee of One Hundred.
New York, Nov. 3, 1915.

Those Exposition Awards.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:
Dear Sir: I have read with much interest
the letters which have appeared from time to time in your journal anent the art awards at San Francisco, and I agree heartily with those signed "Academician."
It seems to me the Exposition, as regards
the American section, has been a succession of mistakes, from the hanging at the beginning, to the prize awards at the end.
The exhibition was beautifully hung and spaced it seems, and there yet remained 2,000 canvases unhung. The hanging committee went to Mr. Trask and asked him what they should do. His answer was "they must be hung" which resulted in the rooms appearing as though covered with a cubistic wall paper, making it almost impossible to view the canvases properly.

Awards a Joke.

As to the awards, they were a huge joke. One painter, who carried off a silver medal, told me he was positively ashamed to have been given any medal. Of course we all know, gold medals were given to many who deserved no medals at all, silver ones to those who should have had gold, etc., but perhaps the most amusing of all was the awarding to two women, of gold medals, to which strong and stout strings were tied, while Robert Henri was only honored with a silver one! I have heard it said, that Henri did not send his best work,
but often in exhibitions medals are given,
not for the work a man exhibits at that special exhibition, but for what he stands in the art world. For this, certainly Henri deserved a gold medal. This must surely have been the reason for the awarding of the gold medal at the Corcoran Gallery show in Washington last year, else the honored President of the N. Y. Academy could never have carried off with the picture
he then showed, for one of the hands in that picture would not have passed muster
in a first year art student class.

Boston's "Grab Game."

Boston has played a regular grab game at the Exposition, some sixty medals having gone her way, to many of which struggled securely tied, some six or eight of these having gone to art school graduates of recent date—to favorite pupils of a well-known master—not to speak of the wives of the jurymen. Perhaps a third of the whole amount went to the Guild of Boston painters, rapidly becoming one of the most political art corporations in the country.
This is hardly a creditable showing for
Boston.

As to the gold medal of honor to Friescke
as you wrote of him "a charming and facile painter," but hardly a great one.

Chase and Duveneck.

Now, as to the medal awarded to the founder of the American School of Painting! I do not think there is much doubt as to where that should have gone. We have heard for years—we have read for years—of Chase as being that founder.
Personally, I have never once heard of Duveneck being mentioned in this respect until I read of the award in the papers. As to Chase, everyone knows he was not offered a separate room until the eleventh hour and everyone who is versed in the politics of the game knows right well the reason why. Politics play as large a part in the art world today as they do in Tammany Hall. If "in" with the elect, your reputation is made, no matter how badly you paint; if not "in" with the elect, your reputation is not made, no matter how well you paint. It would be quite an easy matter to decide the justness of this award.
Let the winner himself decide! If he considers himself entitled to the medal, let him keep it, if not—

Duveneck may have the medal, but—all hail to Wm. M. Chase, who has done more for art and art students in this country than any living painter!

American Artists' Widow's Medal.

The medals given to the widow of a "well-known American painter" should surely be withdrawn. Her work is well known to me, and as your correspondent says, she is "not well known, either abroad or here,"
and being an Englishwoman is not eligible for a prize in the American section.

Another prize was awarded in the American section to Mme. de Jonge, also a foreigner. May I inquire by what right medals are awarded in the American section to foreigners? All this is very much to be regretted, as it takes away so much from the dignity of our art exhibit at the Exposition. It has caused so much discussion, no end of amusement and goes to prove still further how politics govern the Juries on Admission, the Juries on Hanging and the Juries on Awards.

In this particular case, the Director and his Jury have surely played no very creditable part!

Yours truly,
Straight from the Shoulder.
New York, Nov. 1, 1915.

Chase and Duveneck.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:
Dear Sir—I have been reading with interest the correspondence in The AMERICAN ART NEWS on the Exposition Awards at San Francisco. I have not seen that exhibition, and cannot enter into the discussion as to the justness of these awards, but I would like to say a word as to the merits of two of the painters discussed, W. M. Chase and Frank Duveneck.

W. M. Chase has been for so long recognized as a great painter on this side of the Atlantic as well as on yours that I do not wish to say more than that I am certain his reputation is exceedingly well deserved;
and his pictures in the important Art Galleries in the United States are sufficient to make this widely acknowledged.

Frank Duveneck, on the other hand,
seems less known, and some of your correspondents do not hesitate to state that they consider the award given to him to be a piece of art politics, not justified by his productions.

Let me tell you my own experience: Last year my wife and I visited the Cincinnati Art Museum and this was immediately after having made lengthy visits to the splendid Gallery of C. P. Taft, and the smaller but also most important collection of Mrs.
Emery, in the same city, and we were by no means disposed to accept any artistic productions of ordinary quality.

When we reached the Museum we were immensely impressed with the pictures there by Frank Duveneck, many of which have been given by the artist. We spent a long time among them, and then, in conversation with the lady in charge, Miss Fishburn, we asked if it would not be possible to see the artist, who we learned was then in the city. This was very readily arranged, and we soon had the pleasure of a little talk with the one man who seemed to us to be at the head of the American School.

On returning to the Sinton Hotel, I sat down and wrote to my collector friends in Chicago and said to them that whatever American painting they might acquire, they must have, at least, one Frank Duveneck, and I told them to purchase all this artist's works they could, for as a simple monetary investment they would be amply repaid. We returned by Phila., Boston, New York, and saw many collections, Mr. Frick's, Mrs.
Gardner's, Mr. Johnson's, Mr. Widener's and many more, and I have seen no reason to alter my opinion. This opinion is that the artistic excellence of the pictures painted by Mr. Frank Duveneck place him at the head of what seems to me to be the foundation of a new American School.

I am, Yours faithfully,
D. Croal Thomson.
London, Eng., Oct. 19, 1915.

OBITUARY.

George Galland.

Prof. George Galland is dead, aged 57, at Berlin. He was born at Posen. In 1897
he devoted himself to the study of architecture at the Berlin Academy, taking up
art history at the University at a later date.
He was later appointed professor of that subject at the Royal Academy of Arts. In Hanover he devoted himself to local wood architecture and cemetery memorials. His chief work was the history of the Renaissance in Holland.

Victor Moessinger.

The city of Frankfurt recently lost one of its most worthy citizens through the death of Victor Moessinger. He had been a tireless worker, who had grown up with public life in his native city. In the establishment of the Frankfurt Museum some fifteen years ago he had been singularly active and energetic, while he was at all times a willing helper in the cause of art.

Wilhelm Widemann.

The above noted sculptor has died in Berlin. He was best known for the decoration of the Reichstag building, in which he was associated with Wallot and August Vogel, and had studied art workmanship in Munich.

The Cleveland Museum has recently received two gifts of $150,000 each. The name of the first donor is still a secret.
The second fund comes as a bequest of the late Dr. Dudley P. Allen and the income is to be devoted to the purchase of art works.
The amount of the income from both funds
will be probably about $15,000.

CHICAGO.

At the Applied Arts exhibition at the Art Institute, the Municipal Art League prizes for handicrafts for Illinois workers were awarded to Mrs. Signor Korling, William H. Girth, Edward F. Worst, Ellen Gates Starr, Mrs. Ogden Armour and Arthur E. Baggs. The Albert H. Loeb prize was awarded to G. E. Germer for original design in silverware. The Mrs. Julius Rosenwald prize for weavings was given to Mrs. Grieron of the Calumet Industries. The Municipal Art League gave hon. mention to the early American quilts exhibited by Mrs. Emma Hodge.

Mr. Martin A. Ryerson has a collection of pictures by Claude Monet on show in the Art Institute—and he recently added another example to the group.

A collection of prints and books pertaining to husbandry, herbals and gardens is on exhibition at the Newberry Library. There are many old books and illuminated Mss. in the assemblage.

Julia Bracken Wendt, the sculptor, has been given a commission to model a portrait of the late W. M. R. French, director of the Art Institute. Just now, Mrs. Wendt, formerly of Chicago, is in her Los Angeles studio, modelling a fountain, "The Wave," for the grounds of Mr. George Thorne, at Lake Forest. H. Effa Webster.

BOSTON.

Boston is as busy as a three-ring circus this week with its variegated shows, one at a "Fine Arts" store, and another at a Department Store, not to mention an animated art student exhibition joining the parade. "Place aux Peintres" (incorporated although they may be), and the "Guide of Boston Artists" sets the pace with Ignace M. Gauguin's "one man" show. This exhibition of conservative works is a good all round show, with many local "real bluefish" conscientiously portrayed. (This does not mean that the painter has used too much cobalt, however.) Portraits loaned by Mmes. Augustus Hemenway, Lawrence Rotch, N. A. Gaston, and J. H. Lanshire are interesting as types in addition to the skillful handling wherein the artist excels. Several genres are included in the displays.

Miss Gladys Thayer gladdens the heart of her father's friends, and others, with an exhibition of 32 portraits and pictures in a local gallery. The two portraits of "My Father" and "My Nephew" show intimate appreciation of character. Two or three flower studies are charming examples.

In a Boylston St. Gallery (Cobbs) Margaret Fitzhugh Brown has a collection of recent portraits marked by careful training the so-called Boston School so faithfully gives. "The Orange Blouse" is gaily exploited, and quite modish. "Andy" is a smart youngster with Puritanical cut to his hair (this is loaned from a Concord family). Augustus Hemenway lends an interesting portrait of Miss Hetty Hemenway and there are presentments of "Tucker Deland," "Henry Hudley" and other portraits, with landscapes, made in the fashionable atmosphere of Stockbridge.

The student exhibition in another local gallery attracts "his sister, and his cousin and his aunt," also an occasional uncle and brother, to see how the young in art disport themselves. Art schools of Boston, six or more, are more or less represented with the pupils from the Art Museum School well to the fore. Most of the examples from this classic school are good and more than one portrait would take rank with the professional art experimenter of the day.

The wary Christmas buyer already wends his weary way along the straight and narrow paths of merchandise and he or she it is who steps aside from well beaten roads and refreshes the soul by a visit to the gallery. Boston's classic Department Store has prepared as a shrine of sacred art. Here is found the "Return from Calvary" by one Herman Schmalz, a large and impressive canvas, completely filled, with figures and accessories suitable to the time and the subject, in the conscientiously "British manner." The painting shows careful research, and well grounded principles of art and religion.

Steinert Hall's Bostonese walls are now enlivened by mural decorations, made within the last year or two by Charles A. Aiken, whom a local newspaper describes as "Well-lesley's Puviss de Chavannes." The latest addition to the series is a large panel, placed at the foot of the stairway. (Steinert Hall being below the level of the street.) The subject is "The Poet," a classic figure on a rock-bound shore, "Augusto mence recitantis" to speak after Juvenal, before a group of admiring wearers of the chiton. * * * "The work is less suave and insipid than many of the efforts we have seen to idealize Greek life. * * * There are no lotos eaters reclining on lush grasses or beds of asphodel." Mr. Aiken has attacked the problems of this piece with gusto, and has made a decidedly interesting composition. The sincerity and honesty of the realism is especially good. John Doe.

PHILADELPHIA.

Six works have already been sold in the Watercolor Show at the Art Club, which remains open until Nov. 21, inclusive. These were "At the Piano" by Henry R. Rittenberg, "Foggy Morning" by Mary Lowell Lloyd, "Flower Study" by Marian Keen Wagner, "Horticultural Urns at the Exposition" by Donna Schuster; all water colors. "At Atlantic," etching, by A. C. Williamson, and a monotype "Head" by S. P. Baus. Among the interesting things in the exhibition not mentioned in the first review are some exquisite little dry point etchings from the nude by Leopold Seyffert and a fine landscape badly hung, almost out of sight, over a door, "When Earth and Sky Meet," by F. M. Lamb.

The Rosenbach Galleries are being prepared for an exhibition of black and whites by Joseph Pennell to open Nov. 10.

There was a formal opening of the School of Miniature Painting on Nov. 1. John Frederick Lewis, Esq., President, delivered an address, "The Beginning of Miniature Painting."

Thomas Eakins' famous picture of the "Agnew Clinic" now hanging in the Medical School of the University of Pa. and

BALTIMORE.

Two Baltimore artists, Edward Berge, sculptor, and Everett Lloyd Bryant, painter, have been especially successful with work they have at the Pan-Pacific Exp'n.

Mr. Berge has sold eight of his bronzes, two of them "The Scalp" and his Sun Dial having been purchased for the Museum of Honolulu. The first of these is one of his earlier works, having first been shown at the National Sculpture Society's exhibition in this city 7 years ago. The Sun Dial is of more recent production. The other six pieces on his list are replicas of the beautiful "Wild Flower," possibly the most popular thing he has done.

Mr. Bryant had four canvases invited to the Exposition, the one that was sold being the flower subject called "Snapdragons," which attracted attention at the Pa. Academy's exhibition last winter.

Plans for the establishment here of a public Art Museum have taken form, and the commission is now considering the question of location.

This committee includes Miss Alice Worthington Ball and Thomas C. Corner, the artists, J. B. Noel Wyatt, of Wyatt and

In Portrait Painters' Exhibition

Painted in 1888, contains 32 portraits, all of which, but one, have been identified. Only last year, at the 25th anniversary of his class, was the one not previously known, finally recognized as that of Dr. John D. Thomas of New Orleans, now residing in Cuba. The portraits were painted from life, giving the picture historic interest to members of the medical profession and is really a record, as well as a work of art. Eugene Castello.

CINCINNATI.

There has been a re-shuffling of studios. Mr. Wessells is now installed in the spacious old Duveneck studio on Fourth Street, where a large number of Gloucester sketches are admired. They are strong, virile, highly keyed studies, with a strong Caucasian flavor at which artists resort Mr. Wessell painted for many years.

Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Stearns are looking a big studio in Clifton. Art circles are building forward to the coming display of the Art Club which "on dit" will eclipse all former efforts.

Adolph Treidler won the $1,000 prize for a design for a poster to advertize the 250 anniversary of the founding of Newark next year.

An interesting exhibition is that of the work of Mlle. Betty de Jong, at the Helgesen galleries, 341 Sutters St. In the sixteen oils which form the exhibit, Mlle. de Jong shows remarkable ability, strength and a masterly technique, and well justifies the award given her at the Panama Pacific Exposition.

KANSAS CITY.

Another etchers' show is about to open at the Institute. Bracquemond, Haden, Legros, Buhot, Hardie, Simon and others are represented. The annual show of the local chapter, American Institute of Architects closed October 30, after a fortnight at the Fine Arts Institute. R. Clipston Sturges, of Boston, president of the national organization, was a visitor on his way East.

The Findlay Art Company reopened one of the best equipped galleries west of the Mississippi on Nov. 1. The company has taken an additional building for the gallery. There are works by Inness, Wyatt, Verboekhoven, Van Marcke, Tadema, W. Granville Smith, Tryon, Waugh, Thomas Moran, Remington, Couse, Cranc, Volk, Hartson, Chichester and Johansen. The Alma Tadema is "The Sculpture Gallery," painted in 1875. Etchings are shown by Whistler, Pennell, Haden, Fitton and Tornby. The Rombong is now showing forty of Brangwyn's etchings.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

Coming "A. A. A." Sales.

Ten sales at auction, announcement of three of the most important of which was made in last week's "Calendar of Auction Sales," in the Art News, are to be held before Jan. 1 by the American Art Association. Of the artistic sales the first will come on the afternoons of Nov. 15 and 16, and will be of a collection of laces, under the direction of Misses A. G. Larter and B. M. Kendall, legatees. In addition to specimens of many of the best known weaves, there will be over 100 camels hair, embroidered silk and lace shawls; a number of antique fans, lace and other parasols and other objects. This sale will be followed, on the afternoon of Nov. 17, by that of the collection of old English, Irish and American silver of W. George Osborne Rudkin of this city. There are also bronzes, miniatures and pieces of old Sheffield plate.

On Nov. 18, 19 and 20 will come the sale of the collection of Dr. Pleasant Hunter of Newark, N. J., composed of pottery, ceramics and glassware. This collection, which has been cataloged by Dr. Edwin Atlee Barber of the Pa. Museum includes many varieties, from Herculaeneum to Bennington ware.

On the afternoons of Dec. 2, 3 and 4 will be sold, by direction of attorneys, representing state and private owners, a gathering of antique and modern furniture, tapestries, curtains, Oriental rugs, marbles, bronzes and framed engravings. After this will follow on Dec. 11, the sale by order of the administrator of the late Senhore Salvador de Mendonca, formerly Brazilian Minister, to the U. S. of a collection, including art objects, relics of Columbus and Byron, ancient weapons, bronzes, silver, miniatures, glass, china, bric-a-brac, furniture and Oriental rugs. The pictures of the estate will be sold later in the season.

On Dec. 6 will be sold the collection of Mr. Timothy F. Crowley consisting of Wedgwood ware, including the Flaxman medallion head of Medusa from the Horace Townsend collection; old English china and pewter, ancient stoneware, etc. A part of the collection of Mr. Charles E. Locke of the city comprising antique Chinese porcelains and bronzes, Corean and Japanese pottery and Greek, Roman, European and early American glass will be sold Dec. 14, 15, 16 and 17. Other parts will be sold later in the season.

The first of the book and Mss. sales will be that of the Nelson library, comprising memorials of New Jersey and rare books and documents. This will be sold, as announced last week, in four sessions on Nov. 22 and 23. Here will be found a file for 1778 of the N. J. Gazette, the first permanent newspaper in the state, and "The Farmers Journal, Newton, 1798," the only known copy outside of Harvard. Smith's history of the colony of Nova Caesaria also appears.

The library of the late Alfred Henry Lewis, by order of Mr. William E. Lewis, editor of the Morning Telegraph will be sold at four sessions, Dec. 1 and 2. This includes first editions of George Cruikshank's illustrations including "The Satirist, or Monthly Mirror," 10 vols. with all the Napoleon plates, a first edition of Cibber's "Cinna's Conspiracy," London, 1713, and a large collection of early works on the stage and vols. on crime and criminals. The library of Dr. Edward Eworl of Newark, N. J., including books on travel, art and architecture will follow Dec. 13 and 14.

End Sale Lincolniana.

At the close of the sale of the Lincoln material, from the library of John E. Burton of Milwaukee, at the Anderson Galleries, on Oct. 29, Mr. George D. Smith paid $131 for J. L. Scripps' "Life of Abraham Lincoln," Chicago, 1860, the author's copy with signature. He gave $77.50 for the pamphlet "Testimony for Prosecution and Defense in the Case of Edward Spangler, etc.," and $26 for a presentation copy of Thayer's "Character and Public Services of Abraham Lincoln." Mr. Thomas Bell gave $116 for the original proof of Whitman's lecture on Lincoln with the author's corrections and additions; $86 for A. H. Wood's "Lincoln, a Drama," $36 for a complete set in 7 vols. of "Vanity Fair," N. Y., 1859-63, $20 for the Detroit Advertiser Extra, Sept. 4, 1860, with the speech of Seward on Lincoln, and $16.50 for the Lincoln and Johnson Union Campaign Songster. The Library of Congress gave $25 for "The Royal Ape, a Dramatic Poem," Richmond, 1863. Mr. Frederick W. Harris paid $24 for the Union Republican ballot of Darlington District for the National Convention, and $17.50 for the "Proceedings at the Dinner of the Early Members of the Union League Club of New York, May 20, 1880." The total of the session was $1,267.40 and grand total of the sale, $8,236.45.

C. G. Emery Sale.

At the sessions on Oct. 27 and 28 of the sale of Clarke's Art Rooms, 5 W. 54 St., of the collection of the late Charles G. Emery, Mr. R. A. Heller of Newark, N. J., gave $1,010 for Garleardini's "Au Port." Cachou's "Sleeping Village" brought $100. Hidalgo's "La Rive," $85 and Comte's "Inquietude," $65.

W. B. VAN INGEN ENGAGED.

William Brantley Van Ingen, the mural painter, and Miss Berthe Ernestine Sequard, who is a teacher of French and Latin in a private school in this city, took out a marriage license on Oct. 29 at City Hall. They said that Justice Guy of the Supreme Court would perform the ceremony. Miss Sequard was born in Paris, while Mr. Van Ingen is a native of Phila. and has a studio in the Sherwood, 58 W. 57 St.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Duparc of Crichton Bros., 636 Fifth Ave. returned from London on the Rotterdam on Sunday.

Mr. Henry Reinhardt of 565 Fifth Ave. is in Chicago.

Mr. George Durand-Ruel sailed Oct. 30 from Bordeaux on the new French Line steamer Lafayette.

CORRECT FIRM NAME.

In the last issue of the ART NEWS, in the announcement of the lease by the Canessa firm of antiquarians of the building formerly occupied as a gallery by the late Benjamin Altman, it was stated erroneously that the lessee was the firm of "E. & C. Canessa & Co.," instead of C. and E. Canessa, of Paris, Naples and New York.

Early Italian Engravings.

A significant loan exhibition of early Italian engravings will open on Monday at the Fogg Art Museum, Cambridge, Mass. The exhibition has been arranged and the valuable illustrated catalog has been compiled in memory of the late Francis Bullard (Harvard 1886). This will be the most important gathering of XV and early XVI century Italian prints ever assembled in this country. The lover of such treasures will have an opportunity to see some of the best work of the great Italian engravers, as well as extremely rare anonymous prints of an earlier period. All prints of this kind are very scarce. Impressions of the quality now to be shown are excessively difficult to find even in those great and rich European collections which have been forming for more than a century. The present exhibition is made possible only by the kindness of friends in Boston, New York, London and Cambridge.

Prints loaned by Miss Katherine Bullard of Boston from the Francis Bullard collection by Mr. Albert Scholle, Messrs. Colhaghi and Obach of London; Mr. Paul J. Sachs of Cambridge, and above all by the Boston Museum, will be shown, together with some of the finest impressions from the rich collection of the Fogg Art Museum. These treasures illustrate the whole field of early intaglio engraving in Italy from the time of the goldsmith, who took impressions from niello plates to test his work, up to the time of Marcantonio Raimondi.

Etchings at Brooklyn Museum.

An exhibition of unusual interest is on at the Print Department of the Brooklyn Museum. It consists of 113 black and whites, loaned by Hamilton Easter Field, Paul B. Haviland and George B. Davison. Alphonse Legros, Millet and Fantin-Latour are represented and lovers of etchings will have a veritable feast in the display. The recent exhibition of Legros etchings in a New York gallery, attracted much attention and the public will welcome another opportunity to study the art of this technician par excellence, one of the greatest of the Nineteenth Century etchers whose powerful, sincere and sympathetic work always appeals. Millet and Latour also need no introduction. The etchings by the former are largely reproductions of his famous canvases and Latour's intensely human and poetic lithographs are principally musical subjects.

H. C. R.

Pirates at Grolier Club.

An exhibition of books and prints relating to "Pirates and Piracy," is now on at the Grolier Club through the month, and will be found a most interesting and novel display. The exhibition opened on Thursday evening with an address to the members of the club by Mr. Don C. Seitz, a collector of buccaneering lore. Further notice will be given next week.

Sale of Engravings.

Engravings in mezzotint, aquatint, stipple, and line from the collection of a New York gentleman are now on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries. Bennett's American aquatints in colors; Hudson River and rare New York views; a very fine impression of Macdonough's Victory on Lake Champlain; Wheatley's Cries of London; decorative prints, naval prints, and prints in color, are included in the collection. It will be sold on Friday evening, November 12th.

Mezzotints and other engravings from the collection of the late William B. Dick will be placed on exhibition on Tuesday. This collection comprises many rare portraits as well as fine and interesting prints suitable for framing; and there has been added a number of valuable etchings and engravings by modern masters. This collection will be sold on the evenings of November 15 and 16.

Rare and Fine Book Sale.

The Anderson Galleries, which has already sold the Lincolniana collected by John E. Burton of Milwaukee, has made two divisions of Mr. Burton's miscellaneous books, the first of which will be sold in five sessions, afternoons and evenings, beginning Monday, Nov. 8, and the second in five sessions beginning on November 17. The first division embraces 1,358 lots, among which are standard sets, works of reference, first editions of American and English authors, works on Napoleon, and Americana. Among the rarities in English literature are Locke's copy of Bacon's "Sylva Sylvarum," London, 1664; early editions of De Foe, and many editions of Burns, including the excessively rare Dublin edition of 1787 and the first of the three Edinburgh issues of that year.

Some of the items of Americana are exceedingly rare, like Covert's "True and Almost Incredible Report," London, 1631; the Royal Commentaries of Peru, London, 1688; Samuel Willard's "Spiritual Deser-

American Art News

VOL. XIV., No. 6. Entered as second class mail matter, N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 13, 1915.

RHOADES PICTURES SOLD.

It will be a surprise to many art interests to learn that the large and important collection of American pictures of the first rank, formed by the late John Harsen Rhoades, and which, it had been rumored, would come to the auction market this season, has, with the exception of a few important examples, including some of Ranger, Twachtman, Blakelock, etc., been privately sold by Snedecor and Co., of 107 W. 47 St., for the estate.

The handling of the collection by these dealers, and the disposition of the pictures at private sale so quietly that the news has not been made public until now, is most interesting and is significant, as the works sold have all brought good prices, of a return of prosperity to the art business world.

The collection of Mr. Rhoades numbered nearly 200 canvases, carefully selected by himself with good advice and assistance, and was one of the best of modern Americans in the country.

A number of the most important pictures have gone to American Museums, and the Worcester Museum in particular, has secured a fine example of Homer Martin.

THE WIDENER PICTURES.

The following is a correct list, as far as can be obtained, of the pictures in the Widener collection:

- Corot—"The Dunes," "Le retour au Logis," "L'Atelier."
- Manet—"The Dead Toreador."
- Millet—"L'Attente."
- Troyon—"Autumn Morning, Landscape and Cattle," "Cows in Landscape," "The Hunting Dogs."
- Crome, John—"Harling Gate, near Norwich."
- Hoppner—"After the Bath."

GIFT TO ART INSTITUTE.

Through the generosity of Mr. William H. Miner the Chicago Art Institute has received the sum of $50,000 to be applied to the enlargement of the Institute facilities for the display of Industrial Arts production. The three rooms in which these productions are shown will be added to by three additional and the entire number will be known as the Frank W. Gunsaulus Gallery.

LEVY SOLD THE BOL.

The Chicago dailies persist in the statement that the new Moulton and Ricketts firm sold the "Portrait of a Man" by Ferdinand Bol to Mr. Conn of Cala. As was chronicled in the ART NEWS last week, and on his authority, Mr. John Levy of this city was the seller of this fine picture and not the Chicago firm.

NOVEL PICTURE SUIT.

A suit has been brought by the estate of Ichabod T. Williams against Scott & Fowles to recover the sum of $9,025, the amount which the defendants successfully bid for ten pictures at the Ichabod Williams sale at the Plaza Hotel, Feb. 3 and 4 last, conducted by the American Art Association. The defendants allege that the paintings were guaranteed by the Williams estate to be precisely as described in the catalog and

CRAFTSMAN POSTER PRIZE.

The Nat'l Society of Craftsmen offers a $25 prize for a two color poster drawing, in tempera, for its 9th Ann'l Exhibition and sale, at 119 E. 19 St., in the galleries of the Nat'l Arts Club, Dec. 8-30. Entries close 12 M. Nov. 15. On the jury will be Mrs. Ella Condie Lamb, Dr. James P. Haney, and Messrs. Charles de Kay, E. H. Ascherman and John Alonzo Williams.

IMPORTANT PICTURE SUIT.

Messrs. Dowdeswell and Dowdeswell (Limited), picture dealers, sued Mr. Alfred Jones, an antique dealer, of Bath, in London, to recover damages for alleged false and fraudulent representations in the sale of certain sketches attributed to J. Constable, and the case was tried on Oct. 23 last.

The defendant denied that the representations alleged were false in fact or to his knowledge, and pleaded that by the conditions of sale the plaintiffs took the risk that the sketches might not be genuine.

The jury failed to agree after an hour's deliberation.

The plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Rigby Swift, in opening the case, said that the action arose out of the sale to them by Mr. Jones, through auctioneers in London, of a number of sketches which Mr. Jones represented to be the work of Constable. It turned out that the pictures were not by Constable, and the plaintiffs' case was that the defendant had been guilty of fraud because he was aware, when he stated that the sketches were by Constable, that they were not painted by him at all. The sale to the plaintiffs was carried out through Messrs. Robinson and Fisher. They were a firm of the highest reputation, and anybody who went to their auction rooms was justified in believing that, so far as Messrs. Robinson and Fisher's knowledge went, what they offered for sale was genuine.

In October, 1911, Messrs. Robinson and Fisher received from the defendant a number of sketches for sale, which he stated were by Constable. Some of these were sold on October 12, and then they asked Mr. Jones for a pedigree of the pictures to show his ground for supposing them to be genuine. On October 14 the defendant wrote the following letter to Mr. Hurlbutt, a member of the firm of Robinson and Fisher:

"Constable Sketches."

I purchased them about five or six months ago from an old lady shortly before her death. She told me that the sketches belonged to her father, who was an artist's model, and he got them from "Constable." I purchased from her about 70 or 80, in fact everything in picture line she had. Some more I am sending on to you. The old lady's name was "Golfani," her husband was an Italian or some foreigner. The name of her father, "the artist's model," I forgot to ask about.

Some further sketches sent by Mr. Jones were sold on November 9, and on the 13th Mr. Jones wrote:

I am sending you on a lot more of the "Constable" sketches. Please keep space in catalogue for them, so that they can be offered with my other pictures next week.

On December 21 there was another sale of pictures, including several lots of sketches sent by the defendant. There were 88 in all, and were inserted in the catalog as "by or attributed" to Constable. A catalog was sent the plaintiffs, and Mr. Charles Dowdeswell went to have a look at them before the sale. He examined them cursorily, and having no reason to doubt that the sketches were by Constable he instructed Mr. Huggins, a broker, to bid for them, and he bought the 88 for £264 1s. 6d. The broker received £13 4s. commission, so that the plaintiffs paid in all £277 5s. 6d.

When the sketches were received by the plaintiffs they were unframed, but were mounted, and in the margin of some of them was written "J. Constable, R. A.," or "J. Constable fecit," or similar words. After the plaintiffs had received the sketches they had an opportunity of examining them carefully, and they came to the conclusion that they were not Constable's at all. They had bought without any guarantee, and as they had no reason to believe that anyone would deliberately deceive them nothing was done for some time. Later, they discovered that the sketches were by W. W. Warren, and they then had some of them framed and offered them for sale as Warren's work. No one wanted Warren's sketches, but when they were being exhibited certain attention reached the plaintiffs in the discovery that the sketches were the subject of an important case. They found that the defendant had been buying bought the sketches from a man called Golfani, and that they were from Mr. Freeth Smith.

that the two they bought, "Flowers," for $825, and "A Gala Day," for $8,200, were falsely represented to be the work of Diaz and Monticelli respectively. They refused to take the pictures and offer the defence that they relied on the description given of the paintings in the catalog and declare the paintings worthless.

Mr. Williams secured most of his pictures and notably his Barbizons from the late Daniel Cottier.

MR. JOHNSON'S ACQUISITION.

Mr. John G. Johnson of Phila. bought a few days ago from the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., a portrait of a Dutch gentleman by Hans Mahler von Schwartz, a XVI century Hollandish painter. Mr. Johnson, who now owns 1,197 pictures, has recently moved his collection, which he intends to leave to a public museum, into galleries in the house he recently purchased, adjoining his house in Phila.

on "Constable and His Influence on Landscape Painting." He had examined the 88 sketches sold to the plaintiffs. In his opinion they were not by Constable.

Justice Ridley asked: "Are they anything like his work?" and Mr. Holmes replied: "A few look like it, and at a distance might be mistaken for Constable's work by anyone not well acquainted with it."

In cross-examination, the witness said that it was well known that there were a great number of Constable forgeries about. There was one picture in the Louvre which passed as a Constable but was not. It was not a forgery, but was by an artist whose work resembled Constable's.

The defendant's attorney said: "One of the pictures in question here is called 'Eton College,' and is dated August, 1864. Do you think the plaintiffs could have thought that this picture was painted by Constable before 1837?" The witness replied: "In buying pictures at an auction one does not always have time to examine everyone separately."

The witness continuing, said that he had known the defendant for about three years. He had given several portraits to the National Portrait Gallery. Several of them were very interesting. They thought these pictures were genuine or they would not have accepted them. The defendant had also presented a picture of Henry IV., which now hung in the Jerusalem Chamber.

Did Jones Tell a Lie?

The defendant's attorney, Mr. Eames, said: "My client will say that, believing these sketches to be Constables and wishing to cover up the source from which he got them, he told a lie. That, however, is not the ground of the plaintiffs' action, because they never saw the defendant's letters before they bought the sketches."

Justice Ridley: "If the defendant was the source of the lie is he not responsible?"

Mr. Eames: "The plaintiffs are entitled to rely on the statement in the catalog that the sketches were 'by or attributed to' Constable, but not on the statement that they were purchased from 'Mrs. Golfani.'"

Mr. C. Huggins, an art agent and valuer, said that he received instructions from the plaintiffs to bid for the sketches up to a certain limit. He did not examine them very closely.

Mr. Dowdeswell's Evidence.

Mr. C. Dowdeswell, the managing director of the plaintiff company, said "that the statement in the catalog that the sketches were by or attributed to Constable affected his mind in deciding to buy them. He went to see the sketches and examined them for a few minutes under an artificial light. He had no reason to doubt that the sketches were by Constable. The pictures were cleaned and framed at a cost of £80. He had never been able to get any information as to the old lady known as Golfani."

Mr. Swift: "I think she was a sister of Mrs. Harris." (Laughter.)

Mr. Freeth Smith said that he carried on business as an art and curio dealer in Bath. He knew W. W. Warren, who died in 1911. For some years before his death he lived in Bath, and from time to time sketches by Warren were offered to him. Warren was ill for some time before he died. He (the witness) knew Warren's housekeeper, and during his illness a number of sketches were sent round to him for sale. He bought about £300 worth altogether at prices varying from a few pence to 10s. or 15s., the average being 1s. to 1s. 3d. The defendant had been a customer of his for 15 years and had bought a large number of the sketches which he had bought from Warren at prices varying from 6d. to 10s. They were referred to as Warren's sketches. He (the witness) never had any Constables. Later, he told the defendant that he had heard that he was selling the sketches in London as Constable's and was making a great deal of money out of them. The defendant said that it was untrue. When the defendant was buying the sketches he said that he wanted dark green landscapes, which he called Constable green landscapes.

Justice Ridley: "I thought that one usually spoke of Constable blue."

Mr. Swift: "These were Special Constables." (Laughter.)

Mr. Eames, for defendant, said that Mr. Dowdeswell in buying the sketches relied on his own experience and artistic knowledge and not upon the statements made in the catalog. Even if he bought on the faith of the catalog the statement in it was only that the pictures were "by or attributed" to Constable, which did not bear the meaning placed on it by the plaintiffs. Assuming the representation meant what the plaintiffs said, before the defendant could be held liable it must be shown that he had acted fraudulently, and he could not be held guilty of fraud merely because he told a lie of which the plaintiffs only heard after they had bought the sketches.

Mr. Alfred Jones, the defendant, said "he had dealt in pictures for 25 years. Mr. Smith put the sketches in question before him and said that they were very clever things. He thought that they were the work of Constable, and he still believed that to be the case. The first lot of pictures sent to Messrs. Robinson and Fisher were bought by two high-class dealers in London. There was a great competition for them and that backed him up in his idea that they were Constables, knowing how dealers in London tried to find out the source of such things so that they might clear them out, he invented the story of Mrs. Golfani. The story in the letter was untrue and there was no Mrs. Golfani. Mr. Smith never told him that the sketches were by Warren. He said that they were Warren's, which meant they came from Warren's collection.

"He believed that the pictures were Constables and that was the reason why he wrote the name Constable on them."

CANNOT USE A. A. A. NAME.

Justice Philbin granted the application of the American Art Association of 6 East 23 St. for an injunction pendente lite to restrain the American Art Galleries and Auction Rooms from using the name American Art Galleries or any simulation of that name.

"It is shown that the facts come within the rule defining unfair competition. The similarity of the name used by the defendants in the conduct of the said business is so great as to compel the inference of fraudulent intent in its use."

IMMIGRANT COMP'N PRIZES.

The prizes offered by Mr. H. P. Whitney in the Immigrant in America competition have been awarded as follows: The first prize of $500 was awarded to B. Buffano, sculptor; the second prize, $250, went to Mary Bayne for a painting; the third, $100, to F. G. Applegate of Trenton for a small wax group, and the fourth of $50 to Evan J. Walters for a drawing in black and white.

A special prize of $100 for a poster design went to Christine F. Chambers.

The exhibition at 8 W. 8 St. opens Monday when $1 will be the admission fee. Saturdays and Sundays will be free and other days 25 cents will be charged.

NEW ARTISTS' HOTEL.

Henry W. Ranger and Edwin Isham head a syndicate of artists who have combined to erect a new and handsome Artists' Hotel on the site of the old factory, 125 feet wide and 100 feet deep, Nos. 42 to 50 inclusive west 67 St. The building, which is to be some twelve stories in height, and will cost, with the land, something like a million is to be Gothic in architecture, and will be novel in construction. The rooms on the main floors are to be studios and those on the mezzanine floors to be bedrooms, all connecting with the studios.

P. A. B. WIDENER

OBITUARY.

Peter A. B. Widener.

Peter A. B. Widener, capitalist, and whose art collections are among the most notable in America, and contain some of the most costly examples of early painters ever brought to this country, died at his country mansion of Lynnewood, Elkins Park, Pa., near Philadelphia on Nov. 6, aged 80. He had been in failing health for some five years past, and his condition was aggravated by the loss of his son, George D. Widener and his grandson, the son of George Widener, on the Titanic in April, 1913.

With failing health, Mr. Widener's interest in the building up of his art collections waned, and the notable additions made to said collections of late years, notably the Panshanger Raphael, have really been effected by his son, Mr. Joseph E. Widener, who will probably inherit the bulk of the collections or be the trustee for the same, and who, it is generally thought in art circles, will still further add to the same and in time bequeath them to the City of Philadelphia.

It is hardly necessary to review Mr. Widener's life career at any length, as this is well known to the art public. He was born in Phila., the son of German parents, Nov. 13, 1834, received a common school education, and not caring to follow his father's occupation as bricklayer, became a butcher's boy (the first John Jacob Astor was a baker's boy), and through assiduous labor and thrift, was soon able to open a shop to sell mutton of his own. He was noted as a trimmer of chops. In this connection, the story, told in Paris, some few years ago after Mr. Widener had acquired some notable panels by Boucher for $25,000 each, is recalled. A rival and disappointed bidder for these panels remarked after the sale, "Well, the panels found their proper market—Bouchers to a Boucher."

After laying the foundation of a large fortune, through contracts to supply meat to the Government during the Civil War—following a combination with a cousin, also in the meat business—Mr. Widener entered politics, and after holding several minor offices, finally became City Treasurer. He was always a Republican. He is said to have administered the office with wisdom and success, although his retention of large fees, brought him criticism. This, however, was perfectly legitimate. Having formed a close friendship with the late William L. Elkins, the two men, foreseeing the possibilities of gain in the development of the traction facilities of Philadelphia, formed a close combination and they gradually, with Elkins' larger wealth, and Widener's greater ability, consolidated and developed the various lines and made immense fortunes.

Turning their attention to a wider field for traction development, Widener and Elkins tried to obtain control of the N. Y. City lines, but were fought off by the late Jacob Sharp and his associates. When these were deposed, and some years later, they combined with the late William C. Whitney and Thomas F. Ryan, and were members of the famous syndicate, the investigation of whose affairs and handling of the Metropolitan lines produced such a scandal some years ago.

Mr. Widener's extensive interests took him to all parts of the country in special cars. It is told of him that on one of these tours of inspection with a group of capitalists the party was marooned on a siding at a small middle western town. Mr. Widener and several of his friends went into the place on a foraging expedition, for the stock of food was low. They first stopped at a butcher's store, where they ordered lamb chops.

The butcher was rather awkward, and Mr. Widener made some jesting remark at which the man took offense.

"Maybe," said the knight of the cleaver, "you would like to do it yourself."

Off came the hat and coat of the millionaire, up went his sleeves, and for a few minutes he performed miracles in cutting and trimming chops.

"You are a better man than I am at that," said the butcher. "That's the finest work I ever saw."

As an Art Collector.

As an art collector, Mr. Widener belonged to that class of American collectors, who, while some have an innate love of and taste for art, acquire more from the pride of possession than from any real love of the subject. He enjoyed most, as he did in his business life, the competition and the chase, than the object secured itself. Naturally, during the first years of his collecting, he bought a number of works, especially pictures, whose attributions were doubtful, and within the past ten years brought suit or contemplated suit against two well known European dealers who had sold him many of the more important works in his collection, and who had retired from business in consequence, one living in a handsome villa near Brussels, and the other in a fine Paris mansion. These dealers finally compromised with Mr. Widener, who was also advised by other dealers to accept a settlement, and replacing some of the doubtful pictures by others owned or secured by them, and aiding in the sale of others, the matter was finally settled. This case was never made public, but was the talk of art circles for a long time. After this weeding out, and a drastic weeding out it was, of Mr. Widener's collections he bought more prudently and wisely, chiefly from Knoedler and Co. and the Duveens, so that his collections now have a high average of merit. His son, Mr. Joseph E. Widener, who has more taste for and love of art than his father and naturally has had greater opportunity for study, has greatly improved the collections.

Widener Art Collections.

"Mr. Widener's art collections," says the N. Y. Times, "are comparable in value and importance to four or five other collections in this country and Canada, notably those of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, the late Benjamin Altman, the late Sir William Van Horne, Henry C. Frick, and Mrs. J. L. Gardner of Boston. It is impossible to place any money value on his treasures. In one season alone, that of 1914, he is said to have spent $1,250,000. In that year he bought the tiny but exquisite "Small Cowper Madonna," by Raphael from Duveen Bros. for a sum said to have been in the neighborhood of $700,000; five superb pieces of Chinese porcelain for $300,000, the "Moresini" helmet from the Arnold Seligmann and Rey, and a marble portrait by Desiderio de Settignano.

LONDON LETTER.

October 30, 1915.

The proposal made recently by Sir Edward Clarke that a tax be levied on the accumulated wealth represented by the stores of works of art in the houses of the wealthy is rightly regarded by the dealers as a measure which, if it ever came into force, would act most prejudicially to their interests. It will inevitably be many years before the public, whether their means be large or small, will voluntarily add to their burden of taxation and the introduction of such a scheme would virtually mean the cessation for some time of this branch of trade, and so add unnecessarily to the difficulties of those already badly hit. It may, however, be remarked in this connection that there is no ground for the suggestion in American papers, that bankruptcy stares the art trade in the face, or that family heirlooms are to be had here at "knock-out prices"! Good things will continue to command good prices and though "deals" may not be effected quite in such numbers as before, the leading firms are perfectly well able to hold their own until brisker times arrive.

International Art Display.

The most important exhibition now running is The International at the Grosvenor Gallery, which hardly bears out its title, since present-day conditions have stood in the way of the usual number of contributions from across the Channel. Our artists at home have, however, done their best to remedy this state of affairs by endeavoring to appear as Continental in their ideas and manner as possible. Strange, for instance, whose canvases dominate the large room, has brought an entirely French manner to bear upon his clever picture of "A Café Bar," which, in its brilliant suggestion of atmosphere and its masterly use of color, shows the completeness of this artist's recent achievements as regards technique. Glyn Philpot, from whom of late we have been hoping great things, is less successful in his two portraits, neither of which seems to have any corporate being, but to be rather the wraith of the sitters, bloodless, unconvincing presentments, more in the nature of ghostly apparitions than mere men and women. Perhaps the most original work in the exhibition, and certainly the most entertaining, is the group of caricatures by Edmond Dulac, drawings that make one wonder why this gifted artist did not enter this realm of art before. An amused crowd of visitors is always to be found in front of that entitled "Mr. Winston Churchill Looking for More Trouble," which represents the politician handing some of his own artistic efforts to Mr. Francis Howard for criticism. For the first time the Serbian sculptor, Mestrovic, contributes to the International, sending portrait busts of "Lady Cunard" and "Sir Thomas Beecham," both of which manage to combine a curious modernity of effect with a strange archaic mannerism. Side by side with Rodin's "Lady Warwick," Mestrovic's work makes the older sculptor's seem almost conventional in style, so arresting and uncommon is his own individuality.

Coming Wigan Sale.

On Dec. 9-10 there will be sold at Christie's Sir Frederick Wigan's collection of pictures and drawings, which include, among other well known canvases, Millais "Idyll to 1745," J. C. Hook's "Sardine Fleet" and Alma Tadema's "Rose Garden," as well as a number of works by Sir E. J. Poynter, W. P. Frith, Birket Foster and others. Indeed most of the names which figured in the Royal Academy shows of the end of the 19th Century and the beginning of the 20th, are well represented and it will be interesting to watch the prices fetched under present conditions.

a most uninspired and uninspiring show this season, leaving one to hope that it is not really a fair representative of modern British Art. The illness of the President, Frank Brangwyn, is responsible for this able painter sending only a few sketches of comparative unimportance, so that one misses sorely the distinction which his work usually confers upon these exhibitions. The very excellent manner, however, in which this Society hangs its exhibits, is worthy of mention and many a more ambitious institution, the Royal Academy not excepted, might well learn a lesson from its simple and effective method of treating this artistic problem.

The Aumonier Pictures.

A very attractive Exhibition of works by the late J. Aumonier is on at the Galleries of Messrs. Tooth, 155 New Bond Street, W. Mr. Aumonier had a genius for the pictorial interpretation of English landscape, catching, not only its outward semblance with a rare skill, but achieving the far more difficult task of seizing its inner spirit. This power is exemplified in such canvases as his "Last of the Harvest," a scene that heirlooms at Bowood, Wiltshire, the seat of the Marquis of Lansdowne, had previously been acquired by Mr. Widener for $500,000. Lord Lansdowne had long denied that he intended to part with this painting, but finally, according to statements made at the time, Lloyd George finance, forced him to sell it.

"It was reported that for three Rembrandts that belonged to Lord Wimborne, Mr. Widener paid $1,000,000. They are "The Circumcision," "St. Paul," and "Portrait of a Gentleman."

"The purchase of three Van Dycks from the famous Cattaneo collection of Genoa by Mr. Widener, through Knoedler and Co. occurred in 1908. Van Dyck painted them for the Cattaneo family in the course of his stay in Genoa. They were very little known to the public, the family refusing to put them on general view because of the policy of the Italian Government toward works of art. In 1902, in consequence of the large and increasing number of exportations of works of art, a under no circumstances could it possibly be confounded with a similar scene in any other country, and thus achieving in a perfectly simple, unaffected manner what so many impressionist artists have struggled to attain by means that have merely resulted in eccentricity.

The Japanese Ambassador opened the Loan Exhibition of Japanese Art at Messrs. Yamanaka's, 127 New Bond Street, recently, and so splendidly have the English collectors responded to the appeal made on behalf of the Red Cross that it is doubtful whether any more interesting exhibition of the kind has ever been seen in London before. The list of contributors, headed by the Queen, includes the names of such collectors as Sir Hercules Read, Mr. Oscar Raphael, Charles Shannon among others. Queen Mary's loan is her coronation present from the Emperor of Japan, an exquisite cabinet of grained nashiji, decorated with flowers and birds, with its inner sides inlaid with pearl butterflies on a ground of clouds. The lock and corner pieces are chased in relief and the Imperial crest appears on the upper panel. The Marquis Inouye lends some remarkably fine inros, one of which is ornamented with the hundred monkeys in caricature of the occupations of human beings, an extraordinarily clever piece of craftsmanship.

Poster designs occupy a large portion of the present exhibition at the Whitechapel Art Gallery, which is intended to act in an educational manner both on the taste of the public and on the mind of the artist. Commercial printing is a branch of art to which it will be more than ever necessary for us to turn our careful attention henceforth, and there will be greater scope in the future than in any previous time for the man who knows how to make art the handmaiden to trade.

law was passed, called the "Pacca Law," establishing an official list of objects of art, and forbidding the sale out of the country of any which were put upon the list. If a family desired to realize upon its heirlooms, it could sell them to the Government museums, which offered only very low prices.

"Access to their collection was refused by the Cattaneo family to the Government officials, and a rumor that it was to be sold reached them too late. After the sale the fact that the pictures were not on the prohibited list prevented the prosecution of the sellers. Perhaps the finest of the Cattaneo Van Dycks is the portrait of the Marchesa Brignola Sala and her son. The two others are also splendid specimens of the painter's art. They represent the little Marchesa Clelia Cattaneo, daughter of Marchesa Elena, and the Marche-e Gian Vincenzo Imperiale, Genoese Ambassador at the Court of Spain.

"There are no fewer than six Van Dycks in the furthest room of Mr. Widener's great picture gallery in his home at Elkins Park. In the same room is a glorious Titian, a portrait of the sisters Emilia and Irene of Spilimberg, among the very few portraits of women that the great Venetian painter executed.

"There is an exquisite Botticelli among the Widener pictures—the "Madonna of the Thorns," sold by Prince Chigi in 1900 and smuggled over the Italian border. It is said to have cost the purchaser $63,000. At a sale in New York in the same year he paid $12,500 for a portrait of a Marquis of Lansdowne by Gainsborough and $5,850 for a portrait of the Duke of York by John Hoppner.

"Mr. Widener was catholic in his tastes, collecting pictures of almost every period and school. He possessed a number of fine specimens of the work of the Barbizon painters, including a group of remarkable Corots. Diaz is also represented in the Barbizon group, and Troyon with especially good examples, Dupre with a characteristic picture, as well as Rousseau and Daubigny.

Among the examples of the English school are examples of Constable and Turner, and there is also a group of XVIII century English portraits, with, among others, a lovely head of Mrs. Graham by Gainsborough, and Romney's "The Sisters," daughters of Sir William Mordaunt. Sir Joshua Reynolds is represented by a "Nelly O'Brien," and Hoppner, besides the picture already mentioned, by a group of children, called "After the Bath."

"In an adjoining room is one of the principal treasures of Mr. Widener's collection, El Greco's "St. Martin." Mr. Widener had three examples of El Greco, one of the others being the "Virgin with Saints," from the altar of San Jose in Toledo. The third El Greco is of much earlier date, but even more interesting, as it is thought to be the only family group painted by the artist, and is probably also a record of his own family. It belongs to his second period, between 1585 and 1590.

"Near this picture hang some specimens of the work of Velasquez. One is called "Satyr and Traveler." Another is a study for the picture of "The Topers," painted in 1629, the year the artist sailed for Italy. Another noteworthy work is Murillo's painting of two women looking out of a window at some incident below. There are two color studies by Rubens and Paul Veronese, one of the "Rape of the Sabine Women," the other the "Rape of Europa," two interesting examples of Jan Steen's work; Verder Meer's "Weighing Harls," and two specimens of the art of Hobbema, Cuypp, Adriaen Van de Velde, and Isaak van Ostrade. Other Dutch masters represented are Paul Potter and Pieter de Hooche, the latter by two particularly good examples.

"Apart from the art galleries, Mr. Widener's marble mansion at Elkins Park is full of art treasures. The ceiling of the library is a painting by Tiepolo, from an Italian palace. In this room are hung two pictures by Puvion de Chavannes, entitled "Le Travail," and "Le Repos"; an interior by Courbet, a Maris, an excellent De Nerville, and an 1889 Exposition picture by Fromentin, "Audience Chez un Kadi."

The Funeral Services.

The remains of Mr. Widener lay in a solid bronze coffin in the Van Dyck room of Lynwood Hall through Sunday and Monday morning, guarded by the dead man's four oldest servants and surrounded by the paintings and art objects, all of which, except the Sargent portrait of Mr. Widener, directly beneath which the coffin reposed on four pillars were draped in black. There were simple services held Monday afternoon, after which the body was removed to Laurel Hill Cemetery and laid in its crypt in the Widener mausoleum there.

About 200 bankers, financiers, business men and art dealers, including Messrs. Roland Knoedler, Chas. S. Carstairs and C. Henschel, who came to the house, remained in another room during the services.

When a change of address is requested, both the new and old address should be given. Two weeks' notice is required for changing an address.

DISCONTINUANCES.

If a subscriber wishes his or her paper discontinued at expiration of his or her subscription, notice to that effect should be sent; otherwise it will be assumed that a continuance is expected and bill will be sent and payment should follow.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or, more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

NOVEL ART SUITS.

The suit brought by the executors of the Ichabod Williams estate against the Scott and Fowles Co., to recover the value of two pictures sold at auction by the estate last February, through the American Art Association, and the suit recently tried in London, with a regrettable jury disagreement, brought by Dowdeswell and Dowdeswell against a Mr. Jones, also a dealer, to recover the value of certain sketches attributed to Constable, and bought by them at the well known London auction rooms of Robinson and Fisher, told of elsewhere in our columns, are novel incidents and have points in common.

They are novel in that in both cases the plaintiffs have sued and sue the original seller and buyer, respectively, and not the auctioneers through whom the sales were made, as is generally the case when goods auctioned are afterwards questioned or refused by buyers. The cases have a similarity also, in that in both the plaintiff, Dowdeswells, and the defendants, Scott and Fowles, assert that they bought on the representation of catalogs and without close examinations. It is to be presumed also that both the plaintiff, Dowdeswell, and defendant, Scott and Fowles, banked upon the reputation and reliability of the respective auctioneers, Robinson and Fisher, and the American Art Association, and possibly upon the statement of said auctioneers, who, themselves, have been deceived.

TWO ART COLLECTORS.

The recent passing of Mr. P. A. B. Widener of Philadelphia, whose art collections are among the largest and most valuable in the country, and which so soon follows the death of another American collector, the late Sir William Van Horne (Sir William was a native of Illinois), brings to mind the differing qualities of art collectors. The contrast between the two men in temperament, and method of collecting was strong.

Sir William was a collector of art works because possessed of an innate love of and taste for art, a remarkable memory, and an insatiable desire to study and improve himself, and because he also had the faculty, rare among art collectors, of being able to paint and draw well himself. He naturally began, early in his career, to acquire art treasures with personal knowledge and to judiciously and carefully add to them, until he surrounded himself with a remarkable as and method of collecting was marked.

Mr. Widener became an art collector only in his later years and during his strenuous early and middle life, and presumably without any inborn love of or taste in art, such as Sir William possessed, did not turn his attention to the subject until after he had amassed a great fortune and was enabled to relax from his business cares. Then, when because it was and is the fashion for rich Americans to build or own art galleries, or because he enjoyed the pursuit, and the capture of costly art works from rival multimillionaires or for both reasons, he formed, too rapidly at first, and to his cost—for he later found numbers of his purchases spurious or doubtful—an art collection.

The pride of possession was probably his chief inspiration in the formation of his collections, but after a time, and through and by association with and necessarily some study of his pictures and art objects, he became attached to them and desirous of acquiring more. Towards the last of his active years, for he has been a semi-invalid for a considerable period he "plunged" as it were, and his purchases of the Boucher panels, Rembrandt's "Mill" and lastly the Panshanger or Cowper Raphael were for sums that the American dailies revelled in headlining.

So it may be said of the two dead collectors—Sir William collected "art for art's sake"—Mr. Widener from the pride of possession and to follow the fashion. Which was the true collector?

PHILA. WATERCOLOR SHOW.

The thirteenth Annual Exhibition of Watercolors, Pastels, and Black and Whites combined with the 14th Annual Exhibition of Miniatures is now on in the Academy Galleries, through Dec. 12. One might well say, before going into a detailed description of the work now on view, that the most interesting features of the collection are the groups of designs for costumes and stage settings by Leon Bakst, the Russian artist, whose work has already been seen in a number of American cities, but never here before, and the group of 17 decorative paintings in water color by Alexander Robbinson, very unusual in facture. Bakst's studies in color, of adaptations of ancient Russian costume to modern requirements used in "Boris Godounow," of Italian costume in the representation of "Pisanelle," of ancient Grecian and of Oriental dress, costumes for the Imperial Russian Ballet, and those designed for the "Apresmidi d'Une Faune" occupy the whole of the wall space of Gallery G, while the place of honor in the long Gallery F is conceded to his designs for the "mise en scene" of the same stage productions, executed also in water color. These works have every appearance of being the result of a wonderful measure of patient historical and archeological research, united with a fine appreciation of the effect of the use of pure color upon the temperament sensible to visual impressions of a positive kind, of unusual vividness.

Robbinson's group of decorations painted in aquarelle, absolutely bold and free in handling, should be regarded, not as attempts to copy the model he has before his eyes, but, with a higher aim, as efforts to solve problems of schemes of color suggested by the scenes before him.

Watercolor Display Small.

There is not a very numerous collection of works in watercolor or pastel besides these or many of equal merit to engage the attention of the visitor here. Favorable notice, however, should be given to a group of Arizona and California landscapes by Francis McComas. Hayley Lever is represented by a group of cleverly brushed watercolors of Gloucester, Mass. Fred Wagner shows a number of freely touched works, drawn from local surroundings. Jane Peterson exhibits a group of capital sketches in gouache of Gloucester, including one especially notable entitled "The Old Shipyard." Felicie Waldo Howell exhibits equally clever work in the same medium. "The Pier," being one of the best in a group of oils. Alice Schille shows her well known ability as an aquarillist in a number of East Side, N. Y., pictures, one especially "A Colorful Street" has genuine realistic noting. Interesting portraits in pastels and chalks are shown by Mary Cassatt, and Cecilia Beaux and there is a beautifully drawn portrait in pastel of the late William T. Richards and landscape painted by John McLure Hamilton.

Work of the Illustrators.

The leading American illustrators are out in force, the Beck Prize probably having something to do with it. M. C. Wyeth, with an oil entitled "A Beach Tragedy," Thornton Oakley with some charcoal sketches of the Pyrenees, Joseph Pennell with a new set of lithographs of Independence Hall and Geo. Harding with some interesting pictures of New Guinea. Frank Brangdyn shows a number of etchings of Bruges. Violet Oakley exhibits a series of studies for a mural decoration of a historical character designed for the Court House in Cleveland, Ohio, besides a number of portraits and other drawings. Jessie Wilcox Smith shows some charming Mother Goose illustrations, Elizabeth Shippen Green Elliot a group of clever illustrations done in charcoal. Gustave Baumann exhibits some remarkably good wood block prints in color. Among the interesting drawings for illustration one must not fail to mention a set by W. J. Aylward of scenes in the war of 1812 published by Harper Brothers.

The Miniature Exhibit.

The exhibit of miniatures is both varied and good in qualities not necessarily confined, in these days, to portraiture. Landscapes, marines, animals and still life are some of the subjects on the little ivories. Be this as it may, one instinctively turns first to inspection of pictures of human personalities such as Margaret Kendall's portrait of "Mrs. V. S. Mitchell," Laura Coombs Hill's of "Mrs. Geo. W. Chadwick," Mabel R. Welch's of "Mrs. W. G. Haan," Emily Drayton Taylor's of "Anne Elliot," "Youth" by Margaret Foote Hawley, "Miss Polly Page" by A. Margareta Archambault, and Heloise Guillov Redfield's portrait of "Mrs. Norman Trump."

Sally Cross has a portrait of "George Moore." Stella Lewis Marks gives charming pictures of "Blue Bow" and "Sweet Seventeen." A fine portrait of "General Sir Evelyn Wood" by Constance Cumming is very effective. Two good little marines by Harry L. Johnson deserve mention as also one well painted still life by Minerva Chapman. Eugene Castello.

GOZZOLIS AT THE MUSEUM.

There were two features of unusual interest, shown on Nov. 5, at the Metropolitan Museum press view, namely four panels, in a fine state of preservation, by Benozzo Gozzoli and a remarkable little bronze Greek statuette of Hercules, supposed from his pose to be inebriate. All are recent acquisitions. The Gozzoli's originally formed part of a retable or altar piece in the chapel of the Allesandri family in the Florentine church of San Piero Maiggiore, abandoned after a partial collapse in 1784. They were then removed to the palace of the Allesandri family from which they came to the Museum. Ascribed by Vasari to Pesello they are now held to be with no doubt by Gozzoli. The subjects are "St. Peter and Simon Magnus," "The Conversion of St. Paul," "St. Zenobius Resuscitates a Dead Child" and "Totila Before Saint Benedict."

Other recent acquisitions shown are 16 Corean pictures of various periods. The bulletin contains a report of the work of the museum's Egyptian Expedition 1914-15, made possible by the Robb de Peyster Tytus Fund. Director Robinson made the interesting announcement that a special exhibition of textiles is being prepared to open the latter part of the month and continue until February.

TAPESTRY LOAN EXHIBIT.

The loan exhibition of tapestries now in progress in the Pa. Museum, Memorial Hall, Fairmount Park, Phila., has been assembled and arranged by Mr. George Leland Hunter, who contributes a valuable introduction to the catalog. He tells us that practically all the world's great tapestries that survive—tapestries of the type made famous by Arras in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, by Brussels in the XVI-XVII, by the Gobelins in the XVII, and since—are French-Flemish, and were woven in Flanders or northern France. Those made in Italy and Germany and England were for the most part the work of errant Flemish weavers, and apt to be inferior in weave and dye. Of the great tapestries of antiquity, of ancient Greece and Rome, we have only literary evidence. But of French-Flemish tapestries—Gothic, Renaissance, Baroque, and eighteenth century—hundreds of the most splendid examples survive. And they survive not only in European collections, but also in America, in the Morgan and other famous private collections, and in the Metropolitan and Boston Museums. In the loan collection of tapestries at Phila. the origin, history and renaissance of tapestries are illustrated adequately. Gothic, Renaissance, Baroque, XVIII century, and modern are all there. The collection contains 83 pieces, lent by Edward A. Faust of St. Louis, P. W. French & Co., Gimpel & Wildenstein, Jacques Seligmann & Co., Mrs. C. Wheaton Vaughan, James L. Breese, George Howe, William Baumgarten & Co., Duveen Brothers, Mrs. John Harrison, Daniel M. Barringer, Mrs. Edwin N. Benson, Jr., Charles M. Ffoulke, Mrs. Charles E. Dana, Rodman Griscom, Lewis & Simmons, J. J. Seibels, John D. McIlhenny, Mrs. C. C. Harrison, Mrs. Archibald Thomson, and others.

OBITUARY.

Fernand Falco.

Fernand Falco, who married the eldest daughter of Mr. Jacques Seligmann by his first wife, was recently killed in France when at head of his men he attempted to take on the German trenches. He was great favorite with his father-in-law, only 33 and the son of a former President of the Paris Board of Trade. He distinguished himself early in the war and soon rose to the rank of Captain, winning at the same time the coveted Croix de Guerre. The sincere sympathy of a host of friends and acquaintances have been extended to Mr. Seligmann in his great loss.

CHICAGO.

The prospective Art Club is the leading topic of interest among local artists, just now. Lawton Parker started this latest movement in the promotion of local art. He has originated several other movements in behalf of local art. The prospective Art Club is to be associated with the Artists' Guild. Mr. Parker has called committees of artists and friends of art, the benefits of the "proposition" have been earnestly and practically discussed, and the Club will be established. The Guild is now a pronounced success and its amalgamation with the new Club means a wider and even stronger support than it now enjoys.

It is proposed to pattern the new Club after similar New York and Paris art clubs, with rooms for transient guests, a few for local permanent use, a restaurant and an Assembly Hall.

The Art Institute's annual exhibition of American paintings and sculptures will open Nov. 16. The Jury of selection includes the Art Committee of the Institute, Paul Dougherty, W. E. Schofield, C. C. Cooper, D. Glover, Robert Henri, Paul M. Gustin, Wilson Irvine, H. D. Murphey, Lorado Taft, and George E. Ganere.

The Municipal Art League will, as usual, make its annual purchase of a selection from the works of Chicago artists to install in its gallery in the Art Institute. The collection is now loaned to the Helen C. Pierce School with the paintings belonging to the Commission for the Encouragement of Local Art. The League has withdrawn its three annual $100 prizes this season for groups of paintings and sculptures, but later on will inaugurate an annual prize for portraiture.

The Atlan Ceramic Art Club will open its annual exhibition in the Art Institute Nov. 16. Through the efforts of Mrs. Chauncy J. Blair an exhibition of antique English and Colonial silver will be a feature of the show; and this will be under the supervision of London and N. Y. Crichton Brothers.

Joseph Pennell is here directing the hanging and placing, in the Institute, of more than a hundred of his etchings, drawings, lithographs, and illustrations, including the Panama Canal series.

Adam Emory Albright and Mrs. Albright are holding a series of afternoon receptions at their home and studio in Hubbard Woods. There are shows of paintings and talks are given on Art. Many of the leading women's clubs have taken a membership jaunt to "The Woods" to attend these receptions.

BOSTON.

Boston has mental art dyspepsia! How can it help itself when it is called upon to assimilate such an artistic mélange as the Members' Exhibition now on at the Art Club, I. M. Gaugengig's "one man show" at the "Guild of Boston Artists," the Art Student Exhibition at a local gallery, Miss M. F. Brown's portraits at another, Montecelli colorful dreams at Vose's, landscapes, etc., by Mary A. Mullikin at the Twentieth Century Club, Miss Gladys Thayer's work and portrait of Colonial ancestors at a local gallery, not to mention side shows of interest at the Museum, the Fogg Museum, the Society of Arts and Crafts, and small sculpture at a local gallery.

The Members' Show at the Boston Art Club has the first requisite to make it interesting—the paintings are few in number. It is to be presumed by the ignorant layman that the jury had a free hand, either for laurel or fire, or as free as could be expected, when both friend and foe are the prospective exhibitors, still it is hard to explain a few of the canvases, for they are just plain bad.

The members of the Old Guard of the Club are both present and absent, and here, as in all other picture shows, the exhibitors can usually be predicted as soon as the jury is announced.

The place of honor is given to Frank H. Tompkins' portrait of Mr. William Howe Downes and one can but feel critical before this work. (N. B. Mr. Downes has written the art reviews of Boston's one altruistic newspaper for a decade or more). Two newcomers to the local art world are Theodore Schnieder and Talbot Aldrich; and these artists, heretofore ranked as amateurs, jolly well swipe general attention, the first named with his version of rocks and water brutally and truthfully presented, with no feeling for beauty, and Mr. Aldrich with two portraits "on the line" in the main gallery, where they accentuate the fact that some rather poor examples of hard worked portraits are also in the exhibition.

Melbourne Hardwick has seen the light, at last, and his recent works are well keyed up to almost to high C—and thereby benefited. He still exploits the peasant type on wind-swept downs, or by incoming tides, although now his figures wear more Americanese clothes. Another "stand-by of Art," J. J. Enneking is well represented. He sends an ever popular "November Twilight," and as a contrast to cool off—a springtime pastoral, both characteristically and dogmatically expressed.

Louis Kronberg outsteps his present reputation by his Degas-like study of a youthful dancer doing the bar exercise. It is the best work in this line he has ever done.

As an explorer, C. W. Furlongs courage has often been tested, so his entry into the deeps of tonality (as in the present example of the two dour-faced peasants, gossiping, only adds to his reputation.

An animal painter, who returns to his first love after several years flirtation with the goddess "Portraiture" is Alexander Pope, who shows a careful study of two friendly dogs.

Leaving nothing to the imagination as an appetising still life is the canvas by George L. Noyes. Pungent herring and good white bread, he exploits in good style. A painter who shows his knowledge of cloud forms and aerial perspective is W. J. Kaula, and he exposes also two landscapes, conscientiously painted.

A moving subject is that by Charles Copeland, a study of a snowy winter effect with a train of cars in full speed, followed by a plume of smoke. W. A. Kirkpatrick presents a good decorative color arrangement, realistically, a young woman with fine teeth, prettily playing the mandolin.

Others painters, other subjects there are in this show, but go to your N. Y. Academy or any other well established art retreat and many like can easily be seen.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

Keat's Letter $570.

A 3 page letter of Keat's to James Rice brought $570 from Mr. Geo. D. Smith at the conclusion, Nov. 4, of the sale in the Anderson Galleries of the Thacher autograph collection. Mr. Smith also gave $166 for the manuscript of Lamb's poetic "Epitaph on a Lady Written at Her Request," and $128 for an unpublished letter by Lamb to Mrs. Williams, with whom his adopted daughter, Isola, was governess. Mr. T. A. Stareardt of Berlin paid $125 for a letter of Mozart to his father. The total for the session was $2,435.90, making the total of this section of the library $4,384, and for the Thacher sale to date $45,798.20.

For Burton Coins, $2,428.

At the sale, Nov. 5, in the Anderson Galleries of the John C. Burton coin collection a $50 octagonal gold coin of 1851, with the engine on the reverse turned, brought $116 from Mr. Thomas Bell, who also gave $31 for a $2.50 gold coin of 1796. Mr. Henry Chapman paid $55 for a cent of 1799 and $34 for a broken die cent of 1804. Mr. William Cowler gave $115 for a shekel of B. C. 143-135. The total of the session was $2,428.20, making a total of $10,664 for the Burton coin and library collections.

Burton Library Sale.

The sale of Part 3 of the John E. Burton library at the Anderson Galleries came to an end on Wednesday with a total of $17,586 for the collection so far. The sale of Part 4 begins Nov. 17 and of Part 6 later in the season. On Monday, Mr. J. B. Painter gave $335 for Audubon's "Birds," and Mr. Gabriel Weiss $100 for a 1787 Dublin edition of Burns.

On Tuesday, Gerhardt & Co. gave $118.50 for the complete works of Disraeli; Mr. E. P. Kilroe $42 for Drake and Halleck's "The Croakers," Mr. F. A. Thompson $35 for Coxe's "The English Province of Carolina," 1741 and J. F. Drake, Inc., $30 for S. L. Clemens' "What is Man." On Wednesday Mr. Weis gave $66 for an edition of Hardy with autograph. Mr. J. F. Lamont paid $46 for 60 Indian drawings.

Mezzotints Bring Good Prices.

A mezzotint portrait of Lord Nelson, engraved by Wm. Barnard after the painting by L. F. Abbott, proof before all letters, a three quarter length figure showing the armless sleeve pinned to the breast of the coat was sold for $100 at Stan. V. Henkel's sale, Phila., Nov. 4. Dr. Rosenbach purchased a mezzotint portrait of the Duke of Wellington, printed in colors, engraved by C. Turner, full bust in court dress, open letter proof for $40, also another of the same personage full length printed in colors, proof before the title for $17. To the same buyer went a portrait in aquatint of J. P. Marat for $16, and a portrait of Sir Horatio Nelson, mezzotint, engraved by Laurie from a miniature painted at Leghorn, for American Autographs.

The eighth part of the collection of autographs made by the late Adrian H. Joline of New York will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries on Monday, preliminary to the sale a week later in three afternoon sessions. This division is confined exclusively to American autographs. Among the famous men represented are Adams, Burr, Hampton, Harrison, Patrick Henry, Jefferson, Lafayette, Laurens, Lee, Hamilton Livingston, Madison, Scott, Sullivan, Van Buren and Washington. There is an unusually large amount of important material on the war of the Revolution and the War of 1812. The agreement in 1778 for the exchange of prisoners between the British and the Colonials is a very attractive item to collectors of material on the Revolution, while Washington Irving's Note Book, 45 pages, wholly in his hand, will appeal to still another class.

Exhibition and Sale of Prints.

Rare mezzotints and other engravings from the collection of the late William B. Dick of New York, and a number of valuable etchings and engravings by famous modern masters, now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, will be sold on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday next.

Some Rare Books.

The fourth division of the John E. Burton Library will be sold at the Anderson Galleries in five afternoon and evening sessions, beginning Wednesday afternoon, November 17th. There are nearly 1,400 lots, embracing standard sets, first editions of English and American authors, the finest collection of portraits of the presidents ever issued, the autograph manuscript of "Home, Sweet Home," personal relics of Napoleon and John Paul Jones, and an unusually interesting collection of Americana, including McNemar's "Kentucky, Revival," Stephenson's "Call to Death," Russell's "History of America" with all the rare plates in perfect condition, copies of the New England Primer that are unknown to bibliographers, four books that were once in Washington's library, and two original account books, one of 160 leaves showing the expenditures during seven years by Washington and his family, and one of 300 pages showing how Washington's estate was managed. These old records, which first came before the public in the Bishop Hurst sale, are of the highest interest to collectors of Washintoniana.

Art Assn's. First Season Sales.

The opening sales of the season of the American Art Association will be held next week, and there are now on exhibition in the Galleries, No. 6 East 23 St., the George Osborne Rudkin collection of antique silver, to be sold Nov. 17, the collection of porcelains, old and modern, formed by Dr. Pleasant Hunter, to be sold Nov. 18-20, and a collection of old and modern laces, belonging to an estate, of which Misses A. G. Larre and B. M. Kendall are legatees, to be sold on the afternoons of Nov. 15-16.

The collection of china formed by Dr. Hunter of Newark, fills two galleries, and it has been cataloged by Dr. Hunter, with the assistance of Dr. Edwin Altee Barber, director of the Pa. Museum. Miss R. H. Lorenz, has well classified porcelains. The groups of rare wares, such as Whielden, Turner, Wedgwood and soft paste Lowestoft are in individual cases.

Mr. Rudkin's old silver includes George II, and George III, war, trays, tea caddies, sugar baskets, creamers, tankards, vases, snuff boxes, urns and spoons.

A silver vase is known as the "Wallack" and was presented to J. W. Wallack by the actors attached to his theatre. Among the names engraved upon the vase are John Brougham, F. Bangs, Charles J. Parsloe, Theodore Moss, J. Nast, Josephine Hoey, A. de Forrest and Lester Wallack.

The laces include specimens of both antique and modern workmanship, are in many patterns and styles and completely fill two large galleries. There are many fans with lace of classic patterns, lace umbrellas, collars, handkerchiefs, flounces, Brussels veils, Irish head veils, etc.

TWO COPLEYS FOUND.

An interesting discovery relating to the whereabouts of two portraits by John Singleton Copley has been made by Mr. Otto Fleischner, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library. The portraits, those of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Babcock, are listed on page 48 of Frank W. Bayley's work on Copley, but Mr. Bayley states that their whereabouts is unknown to him. Mr. Fleischner, however, has found the portraits engraved in the Babcock Genealogy (New York, 1903), with the further information that they belong to Rev. Edwin A. Blake, Brooklyn, Conn. Adam Babcock, born 1740, died 1817, was a prominent Boston merchant. He was a son of Dr. Joshua Babcock of Westerly, R. I. The portrait of him is of a young man.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

Recent Sculpture at the Gorham Co.

In the sculpture gallery of the Gorham Company, Fifth Ave. and 36 St., Mr. W. Frank Purdy has gathered an inspiring collection of 91 sculptures by American artists. It remains until Nov. 29. The most important work is D. C. French's beautiful "Spirit of Life," from the Spencer Trask memorial. Admirable also, full of spirit and grace is A. St. Leger Eberle's "Victory," reproduced on the front page of this issue, lifting far aloft a laurel wreath and balancing with the other arm in a gesture, which is thoroughly athletic as well as artistic.

Very strong is Gertrude V. Whitney's "Head of the Titanic Memorial," in black Belgian marble, with its wave swept hair and its nobly piteous expression of abnegation. On a similar high poetic plane and excellent in execution is C. S. Pietro's life size group called "Inspiration"—an old woman looking bravely up, while her life and death partner leans on her shoulder.

The late Karl Bitter is represented by a vigorous plaster model for a monument of "Labor," and a sketch of a model at rest. Cecil DeB. Howard, recently returned from Paris, shows strong artistic qualities in three works, a powerful crouching self-enwrapped female figure "Enigma," "The Cigarette"—a nude Parisienne seated and represented somewhat in the early Oriental manner, and a standing stretching tired "Bacchante." Evelyn B. Longman shows a spirited sketch of a winged genius, grasping with one hand the lightning and with the other rolls of wire cable. This won the competition for the figure to surmount the new Western Union Building. In "The Golden Hour," Rudolph Evans has a fine bronze nude female figure with a head of great distinction. A little heavy but attractive is Chester Beach's "Fountain Figure" and but little idealized is Anna C. Ladd's "Arethusa."

Charles L. Hinton's "Diana" is graceful and well modelled, in the Falguiere manner. He has also a fountain figure of "Spring." By Isidor Konti there is a strongly characterized "Portrait" head of his mother. Robert Aitkin's "Sundial" supported by a young faun and his ear is odd and attractive. Albert H. Atkins sends a capital kneeling figure of an archer called "Telesis" and Solon Borglum a powerful conception of a "Blizzard." Harriet W. Frishmuth has a good "Sundial" figure and Janet Scudder signs a graceful, but rather elongated figure of "Femina Victrix." Several masterly animal subjects are by Anna V. Hyatt while Edward Berge sends an attractive and very youthful "Undine."

A serious work of dignified character is Helen H. Mayer's Hermes pedestal, the heads being of "Art," for which Miss Hyatt posed and "Science." Sarah M. Greene has a capital Bacchante study head in the Coscovo vein.

Among others represented are Edith W. Burroughs, Victor D. Brenner, Herbert M. Dawley, Hunt Diedrich, James E. Fraser, F. Ferrari, whose "Alter Ego" is quite original, Malvina Hoffman, Helen F. Mears—a group "Dawn and Labor," original and in fine motion, Helen Morton, Grace P. Neal, W. D. Paddock, whose "Boy and Ball" fountain is charming, E. T. Quinn, C. C. Rumsey, Eugenie F. Shonnard, L. M. Sterling, B. W. Saville, A. A. Weinman, Alice M. Wright, Winifred D. Ward and F. F. Horner who sends a vigorous group of a "Hopi Indian Snake Dance." A. v. C.

Man Ray's Paint Problems.

It would take an X-ray to find out what that quite interesting artistic personality Man Ray intends by the apparently very serious endeavors he makes to express himself artistically. In the 30 examples of his work and drawings, he is displaying at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., to Nov. 3, he reckons nothing of beauty in nature, either in the human form, or in landscape or still life. In fact he wrecks it, as witness notably in the three noseless figures of his "Wall Decoration" No. 21, and in the two half dismembered forms in the "Wall Decoration" No. 25.

One of the "Landscape Interpretations," with an aurea-borealis like color shows a crude vision, which includes a 5 masted schooner and a man reaping.

Some of the others are more comprehensible. In the "Dance Interpretation," some tailors' patterns are having a gay time. And still there is a suggestion of movement. There is a head of a negress which has character, though it is formed of a full face and a profile. And again some of the dimension studies arouse interest. The color everywhere and the quality in the small landscapes shows that Mr. Ray can paint. Generally, however, he is engaged endeavoring to solve some very unlovely problems. And he is thoroughly in earnest. A. v. C.

With Pirates at the Grolier.

Mild mannered literary privateers, newspaper bucaners, and modern raiders of the mains of Spanish and other trade, together with wielders of bibliographical bludgeons in the auction room, in their cruise for literary treasures, gathered in force at the Grolier Club, 29 E. 32 St., on the evening of Nov. 4 to listen to a lecture by Mr. Don C. Seitz of the N. Y. World, on their pirate ancestors and examine an exhibition of books and prints devoted to the lives and achievements of the same, which is on through the month in the Club Gallery.

Mr. Don W. Seitz, whose fad is pirate lore, told a great deal of what he had learned regarding pirates, with interesting gusto. Especially amusing was his story of how Sir Harry Morgan sued two London printers for libel because they published a translation from the Dutch of some of the stories about him by Esquemeling, his literary collaborator in sweeping the seas, and obtained £200 damages and their covertly sarcastic printed apology. How like Wall St. and Newspaper Row.

As to Esquemeling himself that real literary pirate, the pioneer of piratical lore, there is shown a first edition of his work, and a translation of it into Spanish. In this publication in prose and poem or print, appear Kidd, Morgan, Teach or Black Beard, Avery, England, Gibbs, Green, Cusack, and other gentlemen, omnipotent in their day on the wave. They are gone and sleep in the deeps or in the fat churchyard. But their deeds live after them and the hunt for the treasure of Capt. Kidd is not so persistently followed as that for rarities in bucaner biography. A. v. C.

Works by H. B. Lachman.

Full of air, sunlight and color are the 17 pictures and 6 sketches Harry B. Lachman is showing to Nov. 22 at the galleries of Henry Reinhardt, 565 Fifth Ave. A thick impasto and free staccato handling produce an attractive effect, somewhat like that of pastel. The architecture, which appears in several of the views in Paris, the provinces, Switzerland, the Tyrol and Italy is solidly built up, but not too obtrusive.

Delightful is the glimpse through a tree of "Notre Dame, Springtime." Very attractive also is the view of "The Pantheon from the Seine." The sun really shines in "Gruyeres, Switzerland," and beautiful is the color of "The Back Porch" and "A Swiss Chalet." Among other works are "Pont en Royans," "In the Dauphine," "Brittany, Fishing Smack," "The Mill, Winter" and "An Alpine Village."

Napoleon Relics at Bonaventures.

Letters, many of them intimate, of his family and entourage, contemporary portraits, and books which they owned, as well as official documents, make the display of Napoleoniana at Bonaventures, 601 Fifth Ave. to Nov. 20 most attractive. The original portraits include miniatures by Isabey of Josephine and Wellington a drawing by Baron Gerard of Napoleon for his portrait in coronation robes, that painter's oil of Caroline Murat, and others by Lefevre and Benvenuti, respectively of Pauline and Eliza Bonaparte. Of the last there is also a marble bust by Bartolini, and by Iselin one of Napoleon.

The letters include among the writers Napoleon, Josephine, Marie Louise, Hortense and the King of Rome. Highly important is the marriage contract of the Crown Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen and Antoinette Murat, with its fine array of historic autographs. There are volumes of letters and documents and a copy of Masson's "Cavaliers" of Napoleon richly extra illustrated with autographs and portraits.

The reproductive portraits are many, both in colors and black and white, a number of them framed with letters or autographs, and there are besides watches a gold box, a bonbonniere, busts and a fan, ornamented with miniature portraits.

Paintings by Charles P. Gruppe.

In a group of 28 oils by Charles P. Gruppe, now on view at the galleries of Braun et Cie, 13 W. 46 St., the pictorial quality is prevalent, but the charm of the pictures does not end there. The artist shows a feeling for the moods of nature and a nice color sense. Many poetic bits of Holland prove his love for and intimate knowledge of that infinitely suggestive country, and one notices the influences of the old Dutch masters in the work. "An Old Bit of the Hague" and "Canal at Voorburg" are realistic, and there are a few interiors, well composed and with a story telling quality.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

Mrs. E. H. Harriman has purchased Hugh Breckenridge's "White Vase" from the San Francisco Exposition for the largest price ever paid for a still life by an American painter.

An exhibition of pictures and sketches in oil of the Pan-Pacific Exposition and landscapes of Southern California by Maurice Braun, Director of the San Diego Academy, will be held at the Milch Gallery, 939 Madison Ave., Nov. 15-30.

Susan M. Ketcham is back in her Carnegie Hall studio from Ogunquit, Mass.

The prize of $100 offered by Mrs. T. Coleman Dupont, for the most popular picture at the just closed annual Exhibition of the Wilmington Society of Fine Arts, was awarded by the votes of the visitors to Leslie Thatcher for his portrait of Miss Janet Jackson of that city. Ethel P. Brown's "Mother and Child" was second and G. P. Hoskin's "Bob Cat" third.

Andrew O'Connor of Mass. has been chosen to execute the $200,000 Lincoln statue for the State House grounds at Springfield, Ill.

Colin Campbell Cooper and Mrs. Cooper's pictures of East Indian life and architecture are on exhibition at the Memorial Gallery in Rochester.

Work by Hovey T. Pushman is being shown at the Milwaukee Art Society and has received much favorable comment. One of the exhibits "A Memento of Old Madrid" is owned by Mr. Samuel D. Buckner of that city.

Ella Condie Lamb (Mrs. Charles R. Lamb) has closed her summer "The Fold" studio in Northern New Jersey and returned to her New York studios in the Chelsea district. Mrs. Lamb has been changing her usual Summer work, from figure compositions, and has this season been making a number of studies out of doors, of landscapes, which will be shown at an exhibition later in the season.

H. L. Hildebrand has returned from Silver Mine, Conn., to his studio at 27 West 57 St.

Albert D. Smith has closed his studio at East Hampton, Long Island, where he painted portraits of Mrs. Kilean Van Rensselaer, with her daughter, and of Mrs. Wheaton Vaughn, and has returned to The Holbein. He also recently painted Miss Janet Fish.

Prince Pierre Troubetsky has taken a studio at 33 West 67 Street.

Frank de Haven, who has been painting Autumn landscapes in the country, has opened a studio at 257 West 86 Street.

EXHIBITION CALENDAR FOR ARTISTS.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN—Winter Exhibition.

Works received	Nov. 29 and 30
Opens	Dec. 18
Closes	Jan. 15

Oscar Fehrer has returned from the Berkshires to his studio at 257 West 86 Street, with several new canvases done in the open—"Under the Apple Tree" and "On the Veranda," loosely painted portrayals of a charming woman in a quaint old gown, are good examples of the work of this broad technician and strong colorist.

Anton Hellman at his studio in the "Benedick," Washington Sq., has arranged, in connection with his movement in the cause of improved interior decoration a course of lectures on the subject. Mr. Fallon is the lecturer.

The Hillyer Art Gallery at Smith College, under the direction of Dwight Tryon and Alfred Vance Churchill is giving an exhibition of 25 oils by Robert B. Braudegee of Farmington, Conn., whose fine portrait of Montague Flagg, called "The Wanderer" is in the permanent collection at Northampton.

Harold Ledyard Towle, Jr., the little son of H. Ledyard Towle and Mrs. Towle of the Chesterwood Studios, 12 W. 8 St., who was born Oct. 31, died Nov. 3.

Gutzon Borglum has been sued by the New Netherland Bank on a promissory note for $2,800. The complaint alleges that the note was executed on July 14 last and was payable September 15.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. C. S. Carstairs of Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., returned a few days ago from Holland on the Rotterdam.

Mr. Emil Rey of Arnold, Seligman, Rey & Co., Inc., 7 W. 36 St., returned from France Monday on the Lafayette.

Mr. Rey is a trustee of the French military hospital at Passy and will busy himself this winter in behalf of the institution.

"The price of art in Europe has gone up instead of down on account of the war," said Mr. Rey to a reporter. "Nothing is for sale, and owners will not part with their treasures when offered prices that prevailed before the conflict. While our firm used to get from ten to fifteen letters a day offering art works we now get none at all."

Mr. John R. Eyre of London, owner of the Mona Lisa at the Boston Museum attributed to Leonardo, is at the Marlborough. He brings works attributed to Holbein, Botticelli, Reynolds and Maes.

Mr. Vitall Benguiat is among the passengers of the Rochambeau which was on fire at sea this week on her voyage to Bordeaux.

Mr. George Durand-Ruel, of Durand-Ruel, 12 W. 57 St., arrived from Bordeaux on Monday on the Lafayette.

Mr. Charles J. Duveen of Charles, 718 Fifth Ave., was among the passengers who recently arrived from Holland on the Rotterdam. Mr. H. F. Dawson of the same firm has also returned from abroad.

Mr. Leopold Dion at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St., announces an exhibition, from Nov. 15-27, of 32 pictures in oil, chiefly landscapes on Long Island and in Connecticut, by Emily Palmer Cape, a former pupil of Carroll Beckwith who has written an appreciative introductory note to the catalog.

Mr. F. J. Larkin of London recently arrived and is arranging a special gallery in the Charles building, 718 Fifth Ave., where he will exhibit some of the rare Chinese porcelains, for which his house is noted.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.
Rare Old Mantels.

The sculptural adornment and elegant architectural design of the mantel pieces in old English country houses, make them highly attractive. This is evidenced by the quite remarkable display of 40 examples, chiefly of marble of the Georgian and Adams styles, now on view at Charles' 718 Fifth Ave. The central panels in many of the examples are graceful little sculptures, while the architectural mouldings are many of them delightful. These mantels also have in some cases a historical interest. One, a white and Sienna carved mantel, is from the former country home of the famous XVIII century sculptor and designer, John Flaxman, R. A. at Newport Pagnall and possibly designed by him.

Another comes from The Manor at South Woodford, Essex, the home of Sir Humphrey Jasper. An especially good example has a long marble panel with figures of Cupids emblematical of "The Arts." One fine example is in Wedgwood ware. A hare and greyhound subject is after Oudry. In other panels are such subjects as Bellona with a Cupid, Britannia, History with an attendant, and a lion aroused.

Porto Rican Pictures at Katz's.

An exhibition consisting of 46 sketches in oil—all more or less complete—and two large canvases, painted in Porto Rico by Otto H. Schneider, is now on at the Louis Katz Galleries, 103 W. 74 St.

The pictures present a bright colorful aspect and well represent the warm sunlight of a tropical country. The painter seems equally successful in the landscapes or groups of figures and shows market places, orange vendors, native children, San Juan street scenes and sympathetic interpretations of nature in bits of sea and mountains.

"The Plaza at Night (San Juan)," one of the large canvases, though not exactly happy in composition, gives an interesting effect of night on a crowded bourse.

Newark Poster Show.

After attracting deserved attention in the Public Library, Newark, N. J., the poster exhibit, resulting from the Newark Celebration Contest will be transferred to the Anderson Galleries, Madison Ave. and 40 St., and can be inspected daily during the week and on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 21, from 2 to 5 p. m. This exhibit is entirely free to the public, and has no commercial side whatever.

The posters have been designed by artists from all parts of the country, who entered the prize contest held in conjunction with the 250th Anniversary of Newark's founding. The first prize of $1,000 went to Adolph Fiedler for a poster entitled "Robert Treat Directing the Landing of His Party Where Newark Now Stands, in 1666." Miss Helen Dryden took the 2nd prize of $500, for a striking carnival scene. The 3rd prize of $300 was awarded by popular vote to A. E. Foringer, of Grantwood, N. J., for a picture not specifically designed as a poster work, but in itself extremely attractive.

portraits, decorative groups and smaller canvases by Ernest Tower Rosen, who returns to this country after a ten-year stay in Paris.

In that city his work was pleasantly commented upon for the refined qualities of its decorative feeling and atmosphere. It is said that several trustees of the City Club objected to the hanging of several nudes and half-nudes in the exhibition, but Mr. Rosen insisted upon maintaining his artistic convictions, and offered the exhibition in its entirety or not at all.

After a student period with Jules Lefebvre and Robert Fleury, Mr. Rosen made his first exhibit at the "Salon des Artistes Francais." He then became an exhibitor at the "Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts," where his "Nocturne" was favorably received. He is a member of the "Societe des Intimistes" in Paris.

In June, 1914, just before the outbreak of war, he was exhibiting some sixty pictures at the Galerie Deramez in Paris, entitled "Silhouettes, Portraits, Intimities."

It is understood that examples of his work are in the collection of the Marquis de Ganay, Comte de Gramont, Comte de Polignac, Monsieur de Lesseps, Baron Blanquet, Mr. George Graham and others. Among his portraits are those of Prince Wolkonsky, Marquise di Rudini, Mademoiselle Forzane and Hall Caine.

Bronxville Artists Exhibit.

The management of the Hoel Gramatin, Lawrence Park, Bronxville, has extended to the Bronxville artists the privilege of holding an exhibition there.

Max Bohm, one of the men, the war has driven home, shows four noteworthy canvases—a portrait, a French landscape and two figure compositions the most important of which is "Springe." On the same wall, are decorations by Spencer Nichols, who has adopted Japanese art as his model.

Walter Clark's bits of nature are veritable color symphonies, and Anne Crane shows some good snow scenes. In "Woodland Pool," "Rocks and Surf," etc., Hobart Nichols has caught the feeling of out-doors, with an unaffected simplicity and directness. Otto Bacher's work has much of nature.

There is a delightful Bruce Crane and an interesting view of the Gramatan, by Chas. Louis Hinton. W. T. Smedley exposes a splendid portrait of a boy, one of a young girl, which is a bit weaker, and a large outdoor group of a mother, seated under a tree, reading to three children. Wm. H. Howe shows a splendid group of heads of cattle—strong, vital studys, done from nature.

There are five sculptors represented. Clara Hill's portraits in bas relief are sensitive and charming and Clarissa Masee's child studys have considerable appeal. Laura B. Gates, Chas. Louis Hinton and C. B. Knight also exhibit.

VOL. XIV., No. 7.

Entered as second class mail matter,

SIGNIFICANT ART SUIT.

There was tried in the Supreme Court, Part Five, in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, in which the Brooklyn dealer, Mr. John Pigot was the plaintiff, Monday and Tuesday last before Judge Jaycox, an art suit of especial interest, importance and significance to the art trade and collectors, in that it brought up that old question as to what is a justifiable dealer's profit on art works, not claimed to be spurious. Unfortunately the jury disagreed after a long discussion, but it is reported that said jury stood ten to one for the plaintiff.

The trial of the case developed the facts that in March 1913, Mr. Pigot sold to a Mrs. McNulty, a wealthy resident of Scranton, Pa., seven watercolors for the sum of $3,750, of which Mrs. McNulty paid $1,000 on account, but refused, on the advice of her husband, to pay the remainder, on the ground that Mr. Pigot had agreed to take back the pictures if she did not wish to keep the same, and also had overcharged her for said pictures. Mr. Pigot, who claimed that he had not made any agreement to take the pictures back, and had not overcharged, accordingly brought suit for the recovery of the balance of the agreed upon purchase price.

The pictures, all watercolors, offered in evidence in the Court unframed, comprised a single figure by Adrien Moreau, sold to the defendant for $750, a two figure Italian street scene by Folchi, a modern Italian watercolorist, sold at $1,250, a "commercial" coast scene by George Howell Gay, sold at $25, small landscapes by John Wesley Little, an American artist, sold at $250 each and another larger one, of better quality, by the same painter, a sheep picture, "Housing the Flock" reminiscent of Mauve sold at $1,250.

Although it appeared to art lovers in attendance at the trial that the case was simply one of contract, and that as there was no claim that the pictures were not valid, their market value at the period of sale, March, 1913, was not relevant—the Judge ruled otherwise and for the best part of two days, the Court listened to so-called "Expert" testimony for both sides. Messrs. Charles Snedecor, Harris of Phila., and Jackson of Brooklyn, all dealers, testified for the defendants that the pictures in question did not have a value as high as that which Mr. Pigot had placed upon and asked for them, while Messrs. Bernstein, Schultheis and Rohlf, all dealers, testified that the transaction was a valid one, and the first swore that the pictures were worth even more than the amounts charged.

Mrs. McNulty and Mr. Pigot both testified and, as said above, the jury disagreed.

It is said that the case was a test one, and that others of a similar nature will follow its trial again next January, if any decision should then be reached.

A MATHER BROWN PORTRAIT.

In the November Burlington Magazine Mr. Lionel Cust, publishes in his "Notes" an interesting one, on "The Portrait of William Harwood" published in the September number of that magazine, at which time Mr. Cust gave the authorship to Gilbert Stuart. He now prints a letter from Mr. Charles Henry Hart of N. Y., giving the latter's reasons, with which he agrees, for believing the work to be by Mather Brown instead. Mr. Cust states, that this information has already been published in the AMERICAN ART NEWS of Oct. 9 last, but that, the letter he publishes, gives further details. He says he has found, that the ascription to Stuart, did not rest on continuous family tradition, but on the suggestion of an "expert" advisor, who called attention to the great merits of the portrait. He further says, that he feels some gratification in having helped to rescue an artist, obviously of high class merit, from an oblivion which he cannot have deserved. Mr. Cust also calls attention to Mr. James Britton's letter to the ART NEWS, anent the same portrait, noting that Copley was not a pupil of West, as stated in the article. He points out that the original statement was that Stuart, like Copley, owed much to the training and assistance of West.

THE ALTMAN ACADEMY PRIZES.

Two new prizes will be given at the National Academy this year. The Altman Prize of $1,000, combined with the Isidor medal, will be awarded for the best figure or genre painting. The second Altman Prize of $500 will go to the painter of the second best.

TOLEDO'S VAN DYCK (?)

"The famous Van Dyck, which recently came into the hands of Miss Dorothy Southard of Toledo is now on exhibition at the Museum. It has been hung in the small gallery containing a number of other paintings by the old masters, and is attracting much attention.

"The picture has now been proved a Van Dyck, beyond all doubt, by 'experts.' It is valued at $50,000. Both the painting and its quaint frame are over 200 years old. Miss Southard says she has no intention, at present, of parting with her treasure at any price. For safety she prefers that it shall hang in the Museum, as it is too valuable to be kept in a private collection. Also, she is glad to give Toledoans the privilege of viewing the masterpiece."—Toledo Times.

APPRAISAL OF JESUP ART.

The results of the appraisal of the estate of Mrs. Maria De Witt Jesup, widow of Morris K. Jesup, who left $12,672,792.82, were made public Monday. The pictures chosen by the Metropolitan Museum, which received a specific bequest of $150,000 for the encouragement of art, have been appraised at $171,155. Those not selected by the museum authorities are valued at $6,118.

The pictures are appraised by Mr. Lyons as follows: "Vicomtesse Polignac," Nattier, $10,000; "Lady Elizabeth Wyndham," Lawrence, $9,500; Mrs. Gardner and Children, Hoppner, $10,000; "A Former Royal Highway," Cazin, $8,500; "Portrait of a Lady," Van Loo, $7,000; "Portrait," Hals, $6,000; "An Eton Boy," Gainsborough, $6,000; "The Hon. Mrs. Tipples," Romney, $6,500; "The Duchess of Bedford," Reynolds, $5,000; "Landscape," Corot, $5,000; "View Near Haarlem Holland," Ruysdael, $4,000; "Waiting for Papa," Israels, $3,500; "Portrait of Himself," Romney, $3,000; "Landscape, Daubigny, $2,500; "Innocence," Greuze, $2,500; "A Landscape," Diaz, and "The Burgomaster and his Wife," both by Rembrandt, $20,000 each; "Landscape

The picture is described in Humphrey Ward and W. Roberts' book on Romney and comes from the collection of R. Hobson, Esq., of The Marfords, Bromborough, Cheshire, Eng.

ITALIAN OLD MASTERS HERE.

Italy having no use for art at present except to protect it, has allowed Prof. Elia Velpix Volpi, a Florentine dealer, to bring to this country two works attributed to Titian, which he values at over $500,000. He is said to have sold the late J. P. Morgan a Raphael. The present works are companions, one showing young women bearing fruits and flowers, and the other supposed to be like a very well known museum picture, the artist's daughter. Prof. Volpi also has a picture said to be by Francia and a XIII century bronze group by Riccio.

WORKS LOST ON ANCONA.

Salvatore Anthony Guarino, of 3 East 14 St., an American painter who recently returned to N. Y. after a long visit to Italy, where he was decorated in Jan. last by the King, received a cable recently, stating that a collection of his works was on the Ancona, sunk by an Austrian submarine. He had intended to give an exhibition this season and to bring the pictures, which were not insured, with him, but had failed to secure a permit from the Ministry of Fine Arts. Friends attended to the shipment after his departure. Mr. Guarino is a member of the Salmagundi Club. To a reporter he said that the pictures represented 7 years' work.

PHILA'S NEW ART MUSEUM.

"I can assure Philadelphia that it is going to get its great Municipal Art Gallery, and get it relatively soon, and that it was by the merest accident that Horace Trumbauer, the architect, did not have the splendid model, on which his dozen assistants have been working almost night and day, ready in October before P. A. B. Widener passed away; not that the completion would have meant that Mr. Widener would change his plans to leave everything in this issue to his son, Joseph E. Widener, but the model in being might have given the Wideners the opportunity to show how enthusiastically they were and are back of the project, which, I learn, as literally the case in the fullest sense of the words.

"Members of the Fairmount Park Commission are enthusiastic over the outlook, and one of them who knows tells me that, fortunately, none of the collections that they expect to get, aside from the Widener and John G. Johnson collections, has been alienated by the delay.

"As for the Widener collection, they are not worried about it, since they have understood all along that it would be kept intact at Lynnewood Hall. Mr. Johnson, too, they say, has made it very plain that he will keep his intact, probably where it now is in the old Sully-Darley house, for he does not like museums or galleries. Indeed, I hear he said recently: 'I won't put my collection in any old temple with a row of columns in front of it.'

"His ideal gallery, therefore, would seem to be a cross between a plain fireproof garage and a grand depot; no show outside, but solid value within.—Girard in Phila. Ledger.

BUYS THE EARL'S COLLECTION.

The famous collection of U. S. stamps belonging to Alexander Edward Lindsay, twenty-seventh Earl of Crawford, has been sold to John A. Klemann of 118 Nassau Street. It was formed by the present Earl's father, James Ludovic Lindsay, whom he succeeded in 1913. The collection cost the late Earl $200,000. The sum paid by Mr. Klemann is not stated.

An important part of the American collection, which comprises 54,000 stamps, was obtained for $30,000 from Henry G. Mandel, an employe of the American Bank Note Company, which printed most issues. Among Mandel's stamps were the earliest impressions of the adhesives and envelopes. He had saved many of the original engraved proofs, samples, and rejected designs, which were unobtainable elsewhere. The Earl also bought for $15,000 a collection of sheets of proofs owned by J. A. Petrie of Phillipsburg, N. J.

KNOEDLERS BUY HOMERS.

Mr. Charles W. Gould's collection of 21 pictures by Winslow Homer, recently shown in an exhibition of that artist's work, at the Brooklyn Museum, has been purchased by M. Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave. In the group is "The Herring Net," an oil medalled at Chicago in 1893. The rest are watercolors, including "The Gulf Stream," "After the Tornado, Bahamas," "Breaking Storm, Coast of Maine" and "The Adirondack Guide."

REMBRANDT NOT FOR AMERICA.

It is stated on good authority that Earl Spencer has sold his Rembrandt portrait of the painter's son Titus to an English collector, instead of to a N. Y. firm, acting as agents of Mr. H. C. Frick, with the understanding that it shall remain in England. It is further stated that Lord Spencer's collection will not be sold at auction as reported, and that he will not at present sell any more pictures.

GERMANS CAN'T PAINT IN OIL.

One curious result of the war is an order by the German Gov't, that artists are absolutely forbidden to paint in oils. An ordinance in Oct. prohibited the use of paints made of white lead and linseed oil, and the new one forbids the use of all paints made with animal or vegetable oils.

Many of them have Sicilian subjects, one being "The Brigand. It was "The Lascar" which showed the first soldier wounded in the Turco-Italian war that brought the artist the decoration of Chevalier of the Crown of Italy.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Our Monumental Monstrosities.

Editor American Art News

Since the close of the rebellion in 1865 the national government, the states, and many of our cities and towns have shown their appreciation of the services of the Union Soldiers, by erecting hundreds, possibly thousands of monuments, intended to keep alive memories of patriotic deeds, and at the same time to adorn public places. These manifestations, mostly impossible of classification, sculptural and otherwise, now abound in many of our communities. About two-thirds of them are queer images in stone, sometimes executed at the quarries of stone-cutters who succeeded in making the lowest bids for the "job." Others were puddled and cast as per contract in foundries not intended for art work, and some were cut in marble by sculptors who were never heard of but once.

In most instances, probably nearly all, committees appointed to pass upon models and execution of contracts, were selected because of their financial, social or orderly standing in society, and not for their knowledge of things artistic. From records evidenced by results, we may infer that in the making up of these committees the powers were governed by the action of an individual who, having decided he needed a hat, ordered a shoemaker to make it.

In relation to these affairs of queer composition originally intended for noble purposes, New York and Washington as to numbers are in the lead. In each they can be counted by the ton. As a rule the single statues as works of art are impossible, but the groups and the equestrians are infinitely worse, many of them looking as though cast from enlarged confectioners' moulds. Washington is especially afflicted with these monstrosities in bronze which in several instances have been procured by inexcusable expenditure of public funds, while others were presented by patriotic citizens to prove their admiration and respect for their countrymen who had performed notable service of national importance.

Among the Washington equestrian groups, which are supposed to embellish and adorn, it is conceded there is but one, which from a purely art standpoint, ought to exist. Others are of the confectionary mould order and in most instances bear little resemblance to the favored citizens they are supposed to represent. They are usually devoid of correct composition and experienced technique or execution. The single statues, not very numerous, are so overshadowed by the equestrians, that, when considered in connection with those inside the Capitol building they are hardly worth mentioning. In a room in that building set apart for the great ones of the States there can be found such a collection of uncouth, semi-grotesque images in bronze and marble, as never was seen in any other part of the world.

It must be admitted we have an elastic capacity for swallowing and digesting an unknown variety of questionable feasts prepared by many kinds of quacks, and that our joys are seldom complete unless flavored with sham or downright humbug. But our supposed capacity for being deceived does not account for our Chamber of Horrors, so securely placed under the protection of our great national dome. Of this collection we may safely boast as being all our own, and so unrivalled it must always remain.

The lesson, flowing from the misfortunes of Washington, did not stop before reaching New York, and we continue to let contracts for the same order of monumental stuff in the same old way. Committees with power are as ignorant and innocent of art knowledge as those gone before, and the average committee citizen with his pull, continues to have a very pleasant time in spending money, not his own, for monumental rubbish which, from his official position, he would have us believe is artistic. The misfortune of it all it—barring the relief that might come from friendly volcanic disturbance, there is no present foundation for hope—that seemingly these illusive creations may endure for many centuries to come.

The N. Y. Art Commission.

We have long suffered, without complaint from any citizen or educating criticism from the art critics, who illuminate in the columns of our thrifty Metropolitan dailies, to a point mostly of not offending and always for profit. Seemingly there was no relief in sight when, without suggestion or warning, a law was enacted at Albany creating an art commission to pass upon things artistic, including public buildings to be erected in and about New York. The city was supposed to be blessed, because of the coming of this new and officially proclaimed authority, and the knowing ones were not without hope. The official commission of art "experts" was constituted, duly installed in the City Hall and went about their work. The members were acclaimed as a body of newly discovered Daniels sent to lead us from out of our wilderness of the brutally ugly and silly meretricious, to the sunny slopes where flowers of art would be made to bloom, and where things of beauty would have their opportunities. But expectations borne of hope seldom get beyond the expectant period and so it was in this instance, the new experiment proved a disastrous failure and the art adornments in public places are less bearable than before.

Among the achievements officially approved are the two lions in front of the Public Library. They represent the most mild and benevolent of their race, possibly were professors in the morals department of a jungle college where they were engaged in promoting better conduct among the junglers. In the triangular spaces over the second story windows of the library building we have two more specimens of commission approved sculptural work intended to adorn. As to design and execution or intelligible purpose they are beyond reasonable power to explain. Another commission approval is a bronze upper part of a man, very much costumed and otherwise befuddled, which appears to be growing out of the top end of a wonderfully befuddled combination of granite blocks intended for a pedestal. To assert that this brain disturbing pile is grotesque would be to give it a classification which it does not deserve. Possibly, if reduced to proper dimensions, it might as a curiosity find a place on a mantelpiece of a not over critical owner. It is intended to represent Verrazano, an early navigator to America and is located in our Battery Park.

How They Remembered the Maine!

Since the attack upon Fort Sumter in 1861 no incident had so aroused our people as the sinking of the Maine, which it was believed, had been done by order of the Spanish Government. From the viewpoint of magnitude it was an affair of little importance, but our people, as usual, lost their mental balance, and a perfectly useless war was declared and victory came our way. But the sinking of the Maine was not forgotten; with the calm of peace came a nation's desire to commemorate the dead of the Maine; and the school children of our country raised a large sum of money for an appropriate monument to be erected in the city of New York. Then came the usual scramble—the manifestation of the special pull for place on the committee—to select and to see executed. It goes without saying that a committee composed of the usual units were appointed, put in charge and the monument machine set in motion. Specifications, no doubt were adopted, contracts framed for circulation among studios and stone yards, and in due time came bids for the "job," then the structure completed, the ceremonies and silence proclaimed a failure of the dreams of the children who had given of their little stores of dimes, that sad memories of a cruel deed might live in the hearts of those who would remember its victims. And such a structure for artistic purpose was never seen before! At a distance it appears to be a massive piece of stone, erected for no particular use save, to support a considerable weight. It is crowned by a gilded bronze caricature of a well known classic group often used for fountains and arches. This particular part is a wonder, having the appearance of having been sawed from a block of wood, after a barn-door charcoal drawing made by some rural youthful genius. It is in no sense a work of art and its classification would be impossible. The lower section of the stone is surrounded by figures in marble, not so hopelessly crude as those of the surmounting group, but without enough of art value to neutralize a seemingly irrelevant purpose. All that can be said of this unforgivable failure, the result of unpardonable ignorance, is that the squandering of a fund, constituted for such a noble and sentimental purpose, was without excuse and in its result little less than a crime.

The Pulitzer Fountain.

After the completion of the Maine monument we had ventured to hope that a combination of official art commission and art committee, had reached their ultimate, in the showing of a want of simple appreciation of the properties involved, but we were building without foundation, for at this time we have nearing completion an affair in stone and cement, more uninteresting and absolutely commonplace than the other. It is a fountain covering a small square of land at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street, directly in front of the main entrance to Central Park, the most conspicuous position in the city of New York, where once was an appropriate and restful grass plot with trees. With such a place and space there is no warrant or excuse for such an occupation as now afflicts it, and it never should have been taken for the planting of such a meaningless object. For a fountain only a quarter might have been set apart for the setting of a real gem of art—a thing of beauty, nestling among the trees and adding a further attraction for the whole. Instead we have several trainloads of cut stone arranged so as to cover the entire space, the whole without indication of grace, beauty, evidence of imagination or any quality whatever to warrant its existence. It does not in any respect adorn or serve a useful purpose. During the summer it will accumulate heat to the point of compelled avoidance and add to the inconvenience of all who use the streets either for walking or carriage service. It may be said of this out-of-place uninteresting creation, that it has no redeeming feature. Even the modified horns of plenty with their mouths wide open to the sky, evidently an afterthought, in no degree, mitigate the absurdity of its existence.

Some Meritorious Works.

This communication is not to be considered as an attempt to make others believe that we are without meritorious works of art in public places. Among such are the Madison Square Statue of Farragut, by St. Gaudens, the Tribune building sitting figure of Greeley, the Wall Street Statue of Washington, both by Ward, and the equestrian of Washington by H. K. Brown, which, while not a great work of art is a dignified, intelligently conceived and well executed presentment. These, and others like them in different parts of our country, stand in a class by themselves, and while we have a few that may be placed among the inoffensives, there is a large majority that in no sense can be regarded as works of art.

In the future what a blessing it would be if we could make our self-appointed committees and our municipal art commissioners, who have to do with public monuments, public buildings and their decorations, understand that what we require is quality, and in no instance quantity without it.

EXPOSITION ART CATALOG.

The monumental Catalog de luxe of the Fine Arts Department of the Panama-Pacific Exposition is now at the press, and will soon appear. Miss Helen Wright of the Congressional Library, Washington, has had charge of the compilation of the mass of biographical data—relating to some 3,000 names of American artists represented in the display—no foreign artists are included.

The work will be in two volumes of some 900 pages, will have 144 reproductions of the most notable art works shown, will be printed on the finest paper and in the latest typographical style, and will have 150 pages of critical text, divided into thirty chapters.

Mr. John E. D. Trask, Fine Arts Director, contributes the Introduction and a chapter on the art of Argentina, M. Leonce Benedite, the chapter on modern French art, and Miss Florence Ayscough of Shanghai, China, that on Chinese art, while Signor Umberto Boccione of Milan writes on "Futurism," Mr. H. Shugio on Japanese art, that Dr. Gregory Boloni of Buda Pesth on modern Hungarian art, and Dr. Leon M. Guerero, of Manila, on Philippine art, while Mr. J. Nelson Laurvik writes on early and modern American art, and that of Norway, Holland, Denmark and Sweden, also collaborating in the general critical work in the volume, and Mr. Robert Harshe writes on Graphic art.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Minnesota State Educational Association just closed, held, for the first time in its fifty-three years duration, a separate art department session. The chief address was "A Course of Selective Art," given by Henry Turner Bailey of Boston, Editor of the School Arts Magazine.

A collection of pictures are now on exhibition at the Institute by American painters, which has been assembled by the Memorial Art Gallery of Rochester, N. Y. Such artists as Symonds, Schofield, Dougherty, Bellows and Hayley Lever are represented. The head of a boy, by Robert Henri, was recently purchased by the Institute.

In response to the growing demand for reproductions of the favorite works in the galleries, the Institute has had twelve post cards printed of Burne-Jones' "Wedding of Psyche," Gari Melchers' "Marriage," John Alexander's "Ray of Light," and Manship's statue of "Playfulness."

Following the exhibit of the late George Hitchcock's pictures, the Institute received as a gift from his nephew, Mr. Herbert Maynard, Jr., the painting entitled "April Weather," as a memorial of his uncle.

The fall enrollment of the Art School is unusually good, especially the Friday night design class, and the costume sketch class.

An unique gift of a 16th century Swedish textile has been made by Mrs. Helen Nielson Morison, being the baptismal robe of Gustavus Adolphus, consisting of linen drawn work and embroidery.

Prosper L. Senat has a collection of fifty canvases at a local art gallery for two weeks.

Yamade Baske, the well known Japanese artist, is holding a final exhibition of his watercolors before returning to Japan.

M. C. Wells.

MEMPHIS.

A collection of oils from the Macbeth Galleries, N. Y., including examples of Frieseke, C. W. Eaton, Hayley Lever, F. J. Waugh and other leading American painters, is on in the rooms of the XIX Century Club, under the auspices of the Memphis Art Association, to Nov. 25. The display is under the direction of Mr. C. L. Boone of the Macbeth Galleries, who lectured upon it Wednesday morning. It will go from here to other Southwestern and Western cities.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Nov. 10, 1915.

As a precaution against damage by Zeppelin raids, the famous East Window of St. Margaret's Westminster, is being removed to a place of greater safety, an undertaking fraught with no little difficulty. It was felt, however, that no risk was too great to be taken as the stained glass is looked upon by all experts as the most beautiful example of 16th century Flemish glass extant. This is not the first time that this window has changed its abode, for, although it was originally designed as a gift to Henry VII from Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, it was set up at his death in the private chapel of one of his bishops, whence it was removed during the time of the Commonwealth and probably buried underground in order to escape destruction at the hands of the Puritans. Later on it became the subject of a seven-years' lawsuit against the church wardens of St. Margaret's, the ground of offence being the representation of the Crucifixion. In addition to the scene on Calvary, there is a quantity of symbolical detail, which has never yet been satisfactorily explained, the crescent moon and full moon of the upper lights still baffling the archaeologist. The window will be removed in 50 pieces, each being chipped out of its setting with the utmost care and so packed that when once more set up, its position will be obvious.

Late Autumn Exhibitions.

Quite a number of Societies are holding their Autumn exhibitions now, exactly as if times were normal and art occupying its usual place. The Royal Institution of Painters in Oil Colors, for instance, shows us its members, apparently untouched by the current events of the day, and as much occupied as ever with the little niceties of their craft. Here is Sir James Linton still painting beautifully costumed models in his Meissonnier-like manner, depicting yellow satin with such a finish that one might almost mistake it for the real thing and missing not a single detail in the scrupulous fidelity of room and inmates. Here is Louis Sargent still painting landscapes of greater intensity of tone than Nature yet intended, and the inevitable "problem" picture that presents no true problem at all, from the brush of the Hon. John Collier. Certainly it is undeniable that in these days of stress, the wildness and weirdness of "Futurists" and "Cubists" say more than the somewhat stale studio productions of the older school and one finds more that is vital in the revolutionary methods of a Van Gogh or a Matisse than in the polite smoothness of one of the drawing-room artists.

Far more heroic in character is the exhibition of Norman Wilkinson's Gallipoli Sketches at the galleries of the Fine Art Society. Mr. Wilkinson, while acting as paymaster on an English battleship, had plenty of opportunity for observation of the marine aspect of the war, but he has fortunately not allowed the thirst for sensation, characteristic of the usual war artist, to confuse the artistic issue. Consequently his sketches are stirring without being merely anecdotal, and manage to convey a more actual impression of events than if mere accuracy had been given a paramount position. Few artists know so well how to depict the inherent beauty of the battleship, and his personal experience of sea warfare has supplied him with an insight into naval matters, which is exceedingly valuable. One feels when looking at these pictures, that here is something which is really in harmony with life as it is lived today, and there is no artificial summoning up of interest in a phase of artistic achievement which, as in the case of a number of other shows, seems distinctly less than worth while.

Another exhibition which is interesting, although in a different manner, is that of Walter Bayes' work at the Carfax Galleries. Mr. Bayes, although one of our youngest artists of ability, is likely to prove himself among the most notable painters of his day, for in addition to possessing undoubted power and originality of vision, he has a decorative sense which makes even his slightest compositions of value. There is, however, a certain stiffness in some of his figure work which frequently mars the effect, but this is a fault which greater experience will doubtless correct. His frequent modifications of style testify to his development and will be likely to lead eventually to a distinct and individual technique.

The Leicester Galleries announce for next week an exhibition by the Senefelder Club, organized for the advancement of artistic lithography, to which the leading exponents of the art will contribute. There will be a number of new War subjects by Mr. Spencer Pryse and others. L. G. S.

The Omega Workshops, which, it will be remembered, are under the direction of Mr. Roger Fry, the art critic, and which produce furniture, pottery, hangings and clothes on Post-Impressionist lines, are now turning their attention to printing and are bringing out this Autumn an "Essay on the Future Life," by A. Clutton-Brock. This is to be printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper in a particularly well designed form of type and will be illustrated with original woodcuts by Ronald Kristian. New ground in printing is evidently to be broken by the Omega Press L. G. S.

The engravings include several splendidly done ex-Libris. "The Hill Top," and "Amelia" are two extremely quaint and spirited prints, reminiscent of the period of 1830.

Among the portraits are many fascinating drawings in silver-point, that illusive, delicate and yet the most direct of all methods of drawing.

ROME LETTER.

Rome, Nov. 7, 1915.

If there were no war more than one important art exhibitions would be in course of preparation in Italy, at Rome, Florence, Naples, Milan, and the biennial at Venice; besides these, many private ones of the artists and the dealers in art and antiquities. There will be nothing, alas, this year, not even the interesting International Exhibition of Venice, the twelfth, and if others should be held, they will be unsuccessful. Monuments are gone from Venice, galleries closed, and, in Rome, the Vias Margutta and Babuino are deserted, and the Piazza di Spagna no longer its gay self because the "foreigners" are lacking, as well as the flowers from the great flight of steps, and the models in the picturesque Ciocciarria dress. Thinking of all this, no wonder the artists who have not been able to go to the front have become sad and distressed.

One almost regrets the disappearance of the Futurists in this temporary suspension of art life, and many, who before could not stand them, knowing that they are at the front,—almost all as a voluntary cyclist

A WEDDING IN SEVILLE

The Late Jules J. Rougeron

Bought at Parke Sale Nov. 13, by the Artist's Son, Marcel J. Rougeron

ROUGERON'S SPANISH SCENE.

Among the most important works in the recent sale in the old Mitchell-Vance Building, Broadway and 13 St., conducted by Mr. Hiram Parke of the American Art Association, was a notable story picture, remarkable for its technical qualities, as well as for its composition, "A Wedding in Seville," by J. J. Rougeron. This canvas, 37x60 in., won a gold medal for the artist at the Paris Salon.

J. J. Rougeron was one of the most prominent of the group of French artists in Madrid between 1860 and 1872, to which belonged the Manets, Henry Regnault, Fortuny, and Madrazo. He was a pupil of his father, François Rougeron, curator and restorer at the Palais des Tuileries, and also a pupil of Picot and Cabanel. He was awarded several medals, received many decorations, and is well represented in European Museums.

The artist was the brother of Ernest Rougeron, the inventor of Chromo Typography, and the son-in-law of the well known picture restorer, L. Van den Bergh. The painting reproduced on this page, was bought, as said above, by M. J. Rougeron, the painter's son, the artist and restorer, well known in this city.

Haskell Prints in San Francisco.

A unique exhibition consisting of 108 works by Ernest Haskell is now on at the Hill Tolerton Print Rooms, San Francisco. Pen, Charcoal and silver-point drawings, etchings, engravings, dry-points and monotype form this most comprehensive showing of Mr. Haskell's work and attest his remarkable versatility.

The 15 pen-drawings are excellent in technique and execution, and especially filled with poetry and beauty are "Al Aaraaf" and "Fairyland," illustrating the poems of Edgar Allan Poe.

love for Naples one might call him the most Neapolitan of all Neapolitan painters; always depicting the fresh visions of his bay, the fishermen mending their nets along the Mergellina shore, the flower-adorned boats with their gay serenaders, the Tarantella in the picturesque dress of his light-hearted people.

David Calandra was the son of that Claudio Calandra, the celebrated collector of arms, whose two precious collections, one now in the Museum of Birmingham, England, the other in the Archeological Museum of Turin, are greatly admired. Perhaps it is owing to this passion of the father that the son created a heroic art, modelling warriors, celebrated deeds of arms, and heroes, becoming known as a great artist not only in Italy, but in all of Europe and also in America. His chief works are: "Mameluke," "The Piedmont Royal Dragoon," "The King's Dragoon," "Garibaldi," and that marvellous statue, "The Conqueror," admired, in plaster, at the fifth Venetian Exhibition, and which stands now, in bronze, in one of the gardens of Turin. It represents a young warrior gazing dreamily over the lands he has conquered, as if almost troubled for an instant by the realization of too superb a dream. In later years, Calandra dedicated himself to the glorification of the House of Savoy, whose history he illustrated in the frieze in the great hall of the new Parliament building in Rome. King Victor Emanuel III entrusted him with the erection of the Humbert I monument, which was to have stood among the pines of the Villa Borghese. Calandra's idea was an equestrian group in green bronze on a truncated pyramid of purple porphyry, with two bas reliefs in gray marble. It is greatly to be regretted that his death came so soon, and that he could not complete a masterpiece.

Francesco Paolo Michetti has carried out recently his promise, made in 1888, to paint his own portrait for the Uffizi Gallery in Florence. Those who have seen the presentment of the great Abruzzese painter, pronounce it admirable in execution and especially notable for a profound and subtle interpretation of character. Before going to the Uffizi, it will be shown in a coming exhibition, together with a series of the artist's designs, about sixty, recently acquired by the National Administration of Fine Arts and Antiquities at Rome.

Berenson's Gift to Bologna.

These notes would be incomplete, if they did not mention the magnificent gift, lately made to the art gallery of Bologna, by Mr. Bernard Berenson, of a copy of a part of the famous Crucifixion painted by Ercole Ferrarese, in the Cappella Garganelli in St. Peter's, Bologna. It was destroyed and, it was believed, no pictorial record existed.

The Government's decision to place the copy in the chapel in St. Peter's where the original once hung, renders the gift of the well-known English "expert" even more valuable to the people of Bologna. Being accustomed to seeing her masterpieces leave by thousands, it is a notable thing for Italy to see a copy of one return as the gift of a foreigner. G. D.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing of public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or, more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

THE NOVEMBER BURLINGTON.

The Metropolitan Museum furnishes in a good reproduction of Botticelli's "Last Communion of S. Jerome," the frontispiece for the November number of the Burlington Magazine. The text is by Herbert P. Horne, and is the first portion of a somewhat condensed version, of his monograph, under a similar caption, in the March, April and May numbers of the Museum bulletin. Campbell Dodgson then comments on "Two New Drawings by Durer in the British Museum." Martin S. Briggs signs the first installment of an article on "S. John's Chapel in the Church of S. Roque, Lisbon."

In the continuation of his "Notes on Pictures in the Royal Collections," Lionel Cust treats of the superb portrait by Velasquez in Buckingham Palace of Don Baltazar Carlos. Sir Martin Conway's second article on "The Bamberg Treasury" is devoted to reliquaries. In reviewing E. A. Barber's catalogs of the potteries at the N. Y. Hispanic Society Museum, A. van de Put says "The growing obligation to look to American collections, not only of paintings and porcelain, is made clear in these catalogs." A. F. Kendrick has a second article on the "Tapestries at Eastnor." The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

WHAT IS A DEALER'S PROFIT?

The suit brought by a woman collector of Scranton, Pa., against a Brooklyn art dealer, tried this week in Brooklyn, and exclusively reported elsewhere in our columns, brings to the front again the old question of what is a legitimate Dealer's profit? It transpired during the trial, after which, unfortunately, the Jury disagreed, that the dealer, who was the plaintiff, while he did not admit the defendant's claim of a too high profit or overcharge, and disputed the testimony of the defendant's "Experts" as to the value of the works sold, argued that as he had not sold nor attempted to sell to the defendant false or spurious works, "he had a right to his own profit."

The Judge ruled out the plaintiff's contention that the case was simply one of contract and admitted—it seems to us—illogically, the admission of "expert" testimony as to values.

In a general way it would seem that the dealer is entitled to a profit, if not based on false representation, to the amount that he places as his selling figure, if the buyer is willing to pay that sum.

The discovery of a rare, or even good art work, knowledge of what it is, the labor and time expended in securing it, and lastly knowledge of what is the best market or best customer for the particular work found, it seems to us, justifies whatever profit the dealer chooses to demand, and can obtain.

The word extortion is often misused in this connection and the line between a legitimate, if large profit, the result of all the factors above noted, for an authentic art work, and the extortion, through false pretences or wrongful inducements, of the same large sum from an innocent or ignorant buyer, should not be and is not difficult for an honest dealer to draw.

Who shall say that the art firm who discovered a superior Cosway Miniature in Whitechapel, London, a few years ago, and secured it for $50, to sell it later on to a Philadelphia woman collector for some $5,000, did not conduct an entirely legitimate transaction? They had the knowledge and acumen to know the miniature as a fine Cosway—to have had also the luck to find and purchase it for a song, and the Phila. woman collector secured a miniature which she could not have so procured elsewhere.

The late Mr. Widener was much criticised for his payment of a half million for Rembrandt's "Mill," as were also the dealers who sold it to him for that enormous sum—but where else could Mr. Widener have obtained this unique canvas, and how many other collectors would have been willing and able to purchase it at the dealers' asking price and profit?

So it would seem that the comparatively small case tried in Brooklyn this week was of importance to the art trade and collectors everywhere.

CORRESPONDENCE

Straight from Another Shoulder.

Editor American Art News:
Dear Sirs: "Straight from the Shoulder," who writes about "Those Exposition Awards," in your issue of Nov. 6 appears to make a great hit with himself. His remarks, however, concerning "the Guild of Boston painters, rapidly becoming one of the most political art corporations in the country," fail to carry conviction to one who is personally acquainted with practically all the members of this very innocuous organization. It is really a harmless little trust is this Guild—so harmless that it was powerless, if indeed, it made any effort, which is to be doubted, to prevent good medals going to several Boston painters who were "frozen out" at the time of its organization.

As for the relatively large number of awards, that come to artists, resident in this part of New England, is it not possible that there is a very simple explanation—that better painting, all things considered, is done in this city than in any other? This suggestion is made by one who is not of the "favorite pupils of a well-known master," to whom "Straight-from-the-Shoulder" refers, but who got his technical training—such as he had, in the art schools of Washington and New York. Neo-Bostonian.

Boston, Nov. 15, 1915.

Art Prizes Grab Game.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Your publication is certainly a clearing house for news artistic. It is unique and like a certain advertisement for cocoa, it is both grateful and comforting to the nerves.

Your latest acquisition to the ranks of the letter writers "straight from the shoulder" is a "hummer" and a fine, direct fighter. He has some feeling for his fellow men, artists though they may be. What he says about Boston in regard to the San Francisco awards and the "grab game" is seconded by all the painters in this tight little city, except the ones who gave or received the prizes.

Can't he be induced to tell more anent the workings of the political side of modern art? He seems to hold something in reserve that the artists would like to know.

To succeed in art, especially as regards attracting attention and medals, everyone knows that a "pusher" or a "puller" is necessary. Almost every well-known painter has been pushed, hauled or shoved into his present position. He, in turn, hauls and pushes and shoves for those he is interested in, or those who will directly or indirectly help him.

Name the artist who has succeeded without shove or push?

One Not Without Success.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 16, 1915.

Yours Truly,

Eliza V. Haigh.

OBITUARY.

Count Edward M. Grunwaldt.

Count Edward M. Grunwaldt, a Russian nobleman, who became known to American art lovers and the trade here, through his handling of the Russian art exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition of 1904, died in a lodging house room, and in poverty, in this city, on Wednesday last (aged 55).

Count Grunwaldt was a brother of the noted Russian furrier of Paris, Paul Grunwaldt, and once represented Russia at The Hague.

Count Grunwaldt brought to St. Louis over 500 pictures and art objects for the St. Louis Fair, the charges having been guaranteed by the Russian Government. Owing to the Russo-Japanese war these were never paid and the Count brought the collection to New York after the Exposition's close, and opening a gallery on Fifth Ave. near 27 St., attempted to sell it there, at first at private sale, and afterwards through various auctions. But the American public did not take kindly to modern Russian art, and he was unsuccessful. The pictures and objects were attached for debt and, it is claimed, a N. Y. lawyer, Henry Kowalsky, secured the works through a bill of sale and the Count lost them. Returning to Russia he was exonerated by his government from any blame in the loss of the works and tried to raise funds to repurchase them, but in vain.

HENRY MOSLER MAY RECOVER.

Henry Mosler, the veteran American figure and genre painter, who fractured his skull, through a fall when alighting from a trolley car on Tuesday night, has a chance of recovery, said his son, Dr. Fred'k H. Mosler, as the ART NEWS goes to press.

Henry Mosler was born in New York in 1841 but was taken as a child to Cincinnati, where he spent his youth. He studied art there under James H. Beard, and under Mucke, Wagner and Kindler in Munich, and Hebert in Paris. He won a number of medals and honors in Europe and this country, notably the Royal Munich Academy medal in 1874, the Gold Medal at the Nice International Exhibition in 1884, the prize of $2,500 at the Prize Fund Exhibition, New York in 1885, several Salon medals, the gold medal and diploma of honor at the Atlanta Exposition of 1895, the Clarke prize at the Academy of Design in 1896, and a gold medal at the Charleston Exposition of 1902. His "The Return" was the first picture by an American artist purchased by the French Government for the Luxembourg. His "Wedding Feast in Brittany" is in the Metropolitan Museum, and other distinguished works from his brush are in the Corcoran Gallery, Washington, the Cincinnati and Toledo Museums and the Pa. Academy, Phila.

A few years ago Mr. Mosler created a sensation in art circles by resigning his membership in the Academy of Design. The artist is the last of the few strong American figure and genre painters who fostered and kept alive here the teachings and traditions of the modern German Munich and Dusseldorf masters.

SOMEWHAT SENTIMENTAL!

"More light," Goethe's last words. "What kind of light? Sunlight, moonlight, candlelight. Perhaps world-light. But why not the brightest yet softest light of all—the light that lies in woman's eyes?"

"Goethe knew it well. The many romantic episodes in his career testify to that. The eyes of many women beamed upon him—the mild light of the blonde, the lightning flashes of the brunette. Most great men bask in the light that lies in woman's eyes. Only the painter must regard it objectively in order that he may interpret it in its infinite beauty and variety. And this is especially true of the portrait painter.

"By 'more light' Goethe might have meant 'the light that lies in woman's eyes,' but, of course, he didn't; while by 'more light' the portrait painter means merely a readjustment of the hangings at his window. To him the light that lies in woman's eyes is something to be expressed in terms of paint; something to be gathered up from his palette on the end of his brush and by a delicate turn of his wrist transferred to canvas.

"Thus it has been interpreted by Mr. August Benziger, who is showing several portraits in his studio; portraits in which one views the light that lies in woman's eyes and portraits that limn the meditative features of men of mark. Mr. Benziger is happy in his sitters and they in him"—Gustave Kobbé in N. Y. Sunday Herald.

A GREAT JORDAENS.

The important example of Jordaens "The Triumph of Religion," reproduced in this issue is owned by Dr. Geo. B. Reuling of Baltimore and comes from the collection of Privy Councillor David van Albeegg of Darmstadt. It is said to have been presented to him by King Johann of Saxony for valuable services, involving great financial sacrifices, during the Napoleonic invasion of that country. This work was considered by Prof. Cornelius of the Stadel Institute at Frankfurt one of the most dignified and harmonious compositions of the master and actually superior to Rubens.

Sir Walter Armstrong, the distinguished British art authority and director of the Royal Dublin Gallery, writing to Dr. Reuling, said "your painting is entirely by the hand of Jacques Jordaens and is actually an improvement on our presentation of the same subject in the Dublin Gallery, in as much as the figures are more favorably posed, and the background is let up by a full sun of glory, while in our picture the background is opaque. Yours may be the first conception of the work or it may be an improved repetition of the subject.

"Several of the principal authorities here" considered it the most important work of Jordaens they had seen in the U. S. Any further details regarding the picture may be obtained at the AMERICAN ART NEWS offices.

The painting represents the "Victory of the New Testament over the Old." Christ, the infant on the globe, offers his heart for the love of Humanity. The kneeling figure at the right represents Pope Gregory IX. with his Cardinal. Above him stands the youthful figure of St. Sebastian and next him St. Catharine with the wheel, and St. Barbara, with the lily.

The centre is occupied by the conventional Lion of St. Jerome standing in the midst of the glory of the Sun. This Sir William Armstrong of the Dublin Gallery, considers a great improvement over the picture of the same subject owned by the Gallery.

In front of the Lion kneels the figure of the old and decrepit St. Jerome, and next him, to the left, the figure of Bishop Ambrose. Above are Sts. Peter and Paul surrounded by cherubs.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

WORKS BY J. W. ALEXANDER.

The graceful women's figures painted by the late J. W. Alexander, are vigorously brushed, and live in a land of half light, or gray filtered sunlight. They are very human, very decorative, and were caught in all sorts of unconventional, but natural poses. A number of the figures, with a few windswept landscapes, a marine and three male portraits, form a memorial exhibition open to Dec. 15, at the Arden Gallery, 599 Fifth Ave., over which Mrs. John W. Alexander and Miss Averell preside.

The men's portraits are the tour de force which presents Joseph Jefferson as Bob Acres; the self picture, in which the sparkling living figure is dwarfed by the lay figure, arranged as an angel apparently, and a sober, close knit presentation of "Old Cole," a well-known figure in art circles, a quarter of a century ago.

"Memories," will be recalled as a two woman composition, which strikes a sober, yet vibrant, note and the sweep of lines in the portrait of Mrs. Alexander "On a Balcony" is most attractive. The panels, called "Studies in Tone," which are of young women, are works of especial charm to painters. The canvas called "The Cat," towards which a young woman bends, almost to the floor, has something witchlike and uncanny about it.

In other works, "Peonies," "A Flower," "The Guitar," "The Glass Bowl," "The Green Bow," "The Green Gown," "A Rose," "The Mirror" and "The Bronze Bowl" are examples of the savoir peindre, or rather savoir composer, which makes a combination of a genre and a portrait a vehicle for the picturing of a most bewitching, if rather robust, femininity.

A strong characterization, with suitable suggestion in the shimmering light, is furnished in "A Gossip." Again is the literary faculty dominant in "The Tenth Muse," "In the Orchard" and "Aurelia." The breezy landscapes at Cornish, N. H., break with good effect, the line composed of a couple of still lifes and a sparkling array of figures, life size in nearly all cases. The general impression made by the display on the walls of the spacious gallery is that of brilliant, bravourea artistry, of refinement in choice of subject and accessories and a well developed literary equipment. The work is individual and will live. No one could mistake an Alexander for the work of any other man. A. v. C.

Primitives at Martin Hofer's.

Mr. Martin Hofer, whose London galleries are at 47 Duke St., Piccadilly, has opened a spacious New York establishment at 668 Fifth Ave. His introductory show is a highly interesting group of 16 pictures by painters, known and unknown, usually called "primitives." With these are shown a few drawings by Lucas van Leyden, Cranach, Durer and Schongauer. A head of an old man in the style of Leonardo comes from the collections of Sir Joshua Reynolds and Richardson. A well gotten up catalog has several illustrations.

Notable among the pictures is an attractive "Virgin and Child," said to be from the workshop of Roger van der Weyden, if not by himself. A remarkably fine triptych, with very graceful and distinguished figures, is of the Bruges School. In the center is a Virgin and Child with Angels, on the left St. Catherine and on the right, St. Agnes with her lamb. By Patinir there is a most interesting "Hermit in a Landscape," and similar detail in landscape is found in Hugo van der Goes "Crucifixion." In the original frame is a quaint "Madonna and Child," by the Master of the Death of the Virgin. By the Spaniard, Juan de Burgos, there are the two volets or doors of an "Annunciation." This comes from the collection of Sir Charles Robinson, is signed and appeared at the Spanish Exhibition at the Grafton Galleries in London in 1913-14.

Others represented are the Master of Frankfort, Bouts, the Master of the St. Ursula Legend, Van Orley and Joost Van Cleef.

An Exhibition of Mosaics.

By special invitation, Messrs. J. & R. Lamb of the Lamb Studios have been requested to make an exhibit in connection with the Diocesan Convention, now being held in the old Synod Hall of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. They have selected from their many lines of work, to give special emphasis to their more recent execution in mosaic, the great panel (the color painting) recently completed for the "Tingue Memorial" in mosaic, the "Washing of the Feet of the Disciples," in which the figures are life-size, and the interior of the "upper chamber" is shown, with the Apostles, and our Lord kneeling in the foreground at the feet of St. Peter.

Supplementing this, designs are shown of the interior of the Memorial Chapel at Omaha, Neb., wherein the entire interior of the building, designed by Charles R. Lamb, was executed in marble, with mosaic enrichment, and stained glass for the window openings, the inscriptions on the frieze being carried out in pure gold.

Examples of actual mosaic are also shown, to indicate the beauty of the material, and the method of execution. A portion of the "Rev. Thomas K. Conrad Memorial" erected in St. Mary's Church, Wayne, Pa., has been selected for this purposes.

Antiques at Pares.

Mr. Emil Pares, of 11 Place du Palais Bourbon, and formerly also of Madrid, has opened a New York house, of which he is personally in charge, at 20 E. 55 St. His sale last season at the American Art Galleries will be recalled. A number of the most notable objects in the J. Pierpont Morgan, Archer M. Huntington and Henry C. Frick collections were originally acquired by him in Spain or elsewhere.

CORONATION OF THE VIRGIN
Attributed to Cellini

At the Pares Gallery.

Prominent in the rich gathering of pictures and antiques, which he offers for his opening display, is a remarkable bronze plaque, a veritable museum piece attributed to Benvenuto Cellini, reproduced on this page. The subject is "The Coronation of the Virgin" and the group of Father, Son and Holy Ghost, with the Holy Mother in the center, all framed in clouds studded with cherubim, is certainly the work of a master of the first rank. It is notable for its composition, the beauty of its types, the handling of the draperies, the modelling and the ciselure.

A bronze warrior of the XII-XIII Century is attributed to the Long family, and there are many sculptures and other pieces in terra cotta and porcelain.

A notable painted triptych is of the Flemish school of the end of the XV Century. There is also a Virgin by I. Senbrandt, of the Flemish school. By Goya is a little out-of-door study portrait of the Duke of Ossuna. Tapestries and embroideries, together with antique furniture, form a suitable background.

Chinoiseries at Sparks'.

The well known firm of "John Sparks" of London, "experts" in Chinese works of art, have opened a showroom in the Ehrich Building, 707 Fifth Avenue. There are on view some very fine examples of porcelain of the Song, Ming and Kangshi periods. A rare pair of early Kang-shi consists of figures of boys in black boots. There is a fine pair of green ground Kyllins and an exquisite powder blue bottle from the famous Huth collection. There are also carvings in jade, lapis lazuli, agate, etc., ivory carvings, carved red lacquer, etc.

Mr. Peter Sparks and Mr. F. Abbott say that it is now almost impossible to find fine pieces in China, and that the prices are bound to increase in the future.

Antiques at Gothic Gallery.

The war has had the effect of sending to America many rare objects of art. Recently the Gothic Gallery, in the Anderson Building, 15 E. 40th St., has acquired a small collection of statues of the period most admired by amateurs. The most important object of the collection is a XII Century statue representing the Madonna and Child. The entire piece was originally covered with sheet gold and precious stones, the tiny tacks and particles of the gold still remain.

 1790 BROADWAY
 NEW YORK CITY

Art at the MacDowell Club.

George Bellows, whose work needs no introduction, shows portraits of three fellow artists—Paul Manship, Leon Kron, and Harry Berlin at the MacDowell Club and Harry Berlin at the MacDowell Club and Harry Berlin at the MacDowell Club group display now on. Robert Henri's splendid nudes are unusually sensitive in conception and his powerful characterization of a little gypsy girl is especially notable.

There are characteristic works from Randall Davey's able brush and in a delightful still life, Leon Krohl, combining peonies, Japanese Iris, fruit and vegetables has produced a virile decorative composition and a gorgeous riot of hues, with none of his usual vulgarity of line or color. His two other canvases, "Hill and Sea" and "Sea and Landscape" show strength and facility.

John Sloan's canvases are as entertaining as the title of one—"Pig Pen By the Sea." Edward Hopper has individuality and poetry in his work. Thalia Millett's pictures possess charm and Gus Mager's blossoming trees have much of springtime in them.

Immigrant in America Competition.

At Mrs. Whitney's studio, 8 W. 8 St., paintings, sculptures and drawings which comprise the entries made in competition for prizes totalling $1,100 offered by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, through The Immigrant in America Review, for the best artistic interpretation of the meaning of America to the Immigrant and of the Immigrant to America—are attracting attention.

Benjamino Bugano, the winner of the first prize—for sculpture—$500, has produced a group, reminiscent of XV Century Gothic sculptures. It seems to portray simply the suffering of the Immigrant without expressing the ideal toward which he looks, the types, well modeled, and good in character, though massed have distinction in the silhouette. The winner of the second prize of $250, a painting by Mary Boyne, although a little hard to comprehend pictorially, represents in its symbolic sense, the mixture of all races which goes on endlessly.

A piece of sculpture by F. G. Applegate which took the third prize of $100, represents the Immigrant, with all his power and rugged strength, led by an ideal which appears to be symbolical of freedom.

The fourth prize of $150 went to E. J. Walters, a prize of $100 to C. Hailey and the same for a poster to Christine Chambers. A characteristic canvas by Hugo Ballin and a strong sculpturesque group by Chester Beach, in which the clay is treated in his usual enveloped manner are among the most noteworthy of the 96 exhibits.

Bezalel Exhibition.

An exhibition of Jewish Arts, worked in the Bezalel School of Handicrafts of Jerusalem, is on at 233 Fifth Ave. The school was originated by Prof. Boris Schatz, and started with six students, on a by street of Jerusalem, eight years ago—they had five hundred pupils, between the age of seven and seventy, before the war which caused them considerable suffering. The idea of the school is not to imitate other models but to utilize the flora and fauna of their native land.

Woodland Scenes by Mrs. Cape.

Mrs. Emily Palmer Cape, who writes good poetry in addition to painting landscapes, is showing to Nov. 27 at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St., a group of 32 oils, chiefly wood edges or interiors. Her master, Carroll Beckwith, writes a complimentary letter, printed as a foreword to the catalog. His praise is largely justified, although her technique is somewhat unformed and her treatment recalls that of those painters, often strong men, who are often slightly referred to as the "Hudson River School." There is every now and then a suggestion of Durand and Casilear in her work.

Mrs. Cape has a vigorous touch. In composition she shows ability and she has a good sense of color. Her subjects are taken chiefly at Stamford, Conn., and vicinity and on Long Island. Capital is "Staten Island in the Distance"—an artistic impression, with a sunset sky, in the centre of which is one fleck of crimson. Another sunset is reflected in "The Pool," and still another in "At Stamford." Quite unusual is the study of "Wind Clouds," with its group of slender swaying trees.

Other notable examples are "Woods, Noank, Conn.," "The Birches" the "Stream at Borgland," "A Glimpse on L. I.," "A Quiet Spot," "Old Age and Youth," "The Stormy Path" and "The Distant Church."

Paintscapes by Bluemner.

The Photo-Secession Gallery, 291 Fifth Ave., is showing to Dec. 3, a small group of landscapes, by Oscar Bluemner, based on N. J. scenery. They might just as well have painted from a child's top scenery but as well drawn, luridly but well colored and somewhat effective.

At the Arlington Gallery.

Some remarkable canvases by Americans, of importance in studying the development of the native school of out of door painters now on view at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., include George Inness's "Nook Near Our Village" that extraordinary classical landscape in which the youth of 24 declared his veneration for Claude Lorraine; and Samuel Colman's fine large marine, "Storm King," representing in singularly veracious style, one of the natural wonders of the Hudson River. The Inness is dated 1849 and the Colman 1866. An early Gari Melchers, somewhat suggestive in subject and in color of Whistler's odd "Breton Coast" picture, bears the date of 1885.

Several interesting special shows are now in prospect for the season here, the first of which, an exhibition of upwards of 200 works by members of the Association of Woman Painters and Sculptors, is to be held Nov. 20-Dec. 24.

Early English Pictures at Knoedler's.

Three new exhibitions are on at Knoedler's, one of XVIII Century, English art, including two delightful little Gainsborough landscapes, painted in the vicinity of Bath. Daniel Gardener's portrait of his wife and children and charmingly characteristic canvases by Lawrence, Richardson, Davis, Tilley, Kettle and many others. Another is of Rembrandt etchings and contemporaries and Whistler, Zorn, D. Y. Cameron, etc.

"STORM KING" ON HUDSON
Samuel Colman

At the Arlington Galleries.

Portraits in pastel by Albert Sterner, shown in another gallery, include "Master Olive May"—an appealing characterization of childhood with an effective color scheme of blue, brown and green, a striking portrait of Mr. Paul Claflin, two of Mrs. Sterner, a portrait of a model—with gorgeous red hair and sensitive hands—simply gowned in wide striped black and white satin, and a portrait of Miss Elsie de Wolfe.

Jewelry at Little Gallery.

An exhibition of jewelry of unusual interest is being held at the Little Gallery, 15 E. 40 St. A number of the best American workers who have obtained fine effects in mounting precious and semi-precious stones in gold, silver and platinum are represented.

Josephine Hartwell Shaw, of Boston, has been especially successful in her combinations of white gold, moonstones and sapphires, etc. Margaret Rogers of Boston, also has some remarkably fine pieces. Imogene Hawthorne Deming shows a beautiful pin in which silver and Japanese coral are combined. A beautiful collar of silver and topaz is by Miss Helen Keeling Mills. Others represented are Eleanor Deming, Jesse Ames Dunbar, and Mrs. John De McCarty.

Miss Tuthill's Decorative Panels.

At the Catherine Lorillard and Wolfe Club, 802 Broadway, three decorative panels bearing on social reform are shown. They are the work of Mary Tuthill, good in decorative quality and color. The first is symbolical of unfortunates appealing to state for aid—Self-supporting Youth Seated. The second Obsolete and Modern Ways of Punishing Criminals, and the third tributes of higher education to state—Emancipated Woman Seated. The panels were painted for the private office of Hon. Harry V. Osborne of the New Jersey Court of Common Pleas and will be placed in January.

Books of the Year.

The annual exhibition, "Books of the Year" now on in the National Arts Club gallery, 119 E. 19 St., is unusually interesting. The originals of many of the best illustrations for the new books are hung on the walls.

Among Scribner's exhibits, is H. G. Dwight's book on varied phases of life in Constantinople, containing unusual photographs of Turkish subjects. This house shows much new fiction and also books for children.

The Methodist Book Concern, Mitchell Kennedy, Geo. H. Doran & Co., Henry B. Holt Co., B. W. Huebsch and numerous other publishers are represented.

Among new work, the MacMillan Co. offers is that of the more popular of the modern poets and several recent books by Jack London. Frederick A. Stokes & Co. have a comprehensive showing of fiction, art and travel and of books for youngsters, over which there hangs a large oil portrait of Edna Ferber—of Emma McChesney fame—by Clara Ewald.

Pictures by Maurice Braun.

A group of oils by Maurice Braun, Director of the San Diego Academy of Art, is at the Milch Gallery, 939 Mad. Ave. to Nov. 30.

Glowing in color, broadly treated and with an entertaining pictorial quality, they make an attractive showing. A joyous array of brilliant flowers in the sunlight is called "The Canna Bed," and in his landscapes, the painter has grasped all the decorative possibilities of Eucalyptus trees, under California skies. There are sixteen sketches, and eleven larger canvases, including numerous interesting views of the Panama-California Exposition.

Pictures by a Mexican Priest.

Eleven religious paintings by Father Gonzalo Carasco, one of the exiled Jesuit priests of Mexico, are on exhibition at 65 East 83 St. Among the most notable are an inspiring conception of Christ, which has been sold and a large composition which illustrates a passage in the Viscount De Chateaubriand's "The Genius of Christianity," showing how in 1715 missionaries converted the savages in Paraguay. An idealistic conception of Mother Seton has charm and there is an atmosphere of sincerity in all the work which will be sold for the benefit of fellow priests who are in need.

Thalia Millett's Landscapes.

In one of the Macbeth Galleries at 450 Fifth Ave., are displayed a score of landscapes and flower pieces by Thalia Millett, which show promise and in several cases are fine in color. Examples of this are "Sunset" and "Early Evening." Some yachts are quite effectively pictured off "Glen Cove" and an apple orchard furnished another good subject. "The Road to Biddeford" is artistically handled. Other titles are "Center Island," "Biddeford Pool," "Fog," "Cornfield," "Chicken Coops" and Hudson River, Irvington.

Flower Pieces by Mrs. Fidler.

Mrs. W. C. Fidler (Claude Raguet Hirst) has on view at the Broadway gallery of Braus, (Inc.) 29 oils and 7 watercolors representing flowers, fruits, and still life. Some of the oils especially have a fine color quality, and all the pieces are well composed and "finished" to a degree. Many of the titles are attractive, as "Catherine Mermet Roses," "Daffodils and Violets," "Tacqueminot Roses," "Cornelia Cook and Marshal Niel Roses," "Bouvardia," and "Bonselene Roses." The "Don Quixote" still life, showing a rare edition of the Cervantes classic is enlivened by a beautifully painted green vase. With few exceptions these pictures have distinction. They belong to no "school" or period as regards technique, and make their appeal chiefly through excellent, though subjective, craftsmanship.

THE PORTRAIT SHOW.

It is not the highest sort of tribute to the quality of the present show of the National Association of Portrait Painters to say that such a Sargent canvas as the Calvin Brice dominates the exhibition—a portrait which concedes to all the others the advantages that charm of color may exert, and yet wins out by sheer soundness of craftsmanship and large veraciousness in observation of character. As it is the obvious aim of these portraitists to represent the real aspect of certain definite human beings, their performances are to be judged accordingly, no allowances being made for the possible possession, or lack of "free" imaginative-ness or proclivities toward the fantastic. On these grounds one invited exhibitor, John Sloan, must be ruled out of consideration, as his post-Gauguin arrangement is distinctly out of the scheme. With hardly any other exception, the works seem to aspire to please the dear old-fashioned lady who said—"I don't care how much art there is in a portrait, if it ain't a likeness, I don't want it."

Monstrously monochromatic as Sargent's Senator Brice is, it looks like a real man, and like a particular man, a substantial presence of flesh and bone, even though its leathery tone suggests the absence of blood. How flat Henri's "Emma Goldman" looks beside it. True enough, the flatness has more or less decorative value, but how much of the sitter's personality has been sacrificed to this effect? George Luks is decorative too, in his full-length "Fons," yet the portraiture, the personal human element, is brilliantly maintained. The sitter's personality is strongly felt, too, in Chase's beautiful "Portrait of Mrs. Clark," in Robert Vonnoh's "Mrs. Vonnoh," in Eugene Speicher's charming little "Miss Paula Murray," and in William Cotton's "Portrait of the Artist's Mother." One notes with regret how certain tonal and structural incongruities mar the otherwise effective portrait of "Master Roland," by Chase; how coarseness and perfunctoriness injure Henry Salem Hubbell's "Whitford Kane as Mrs. Farrell," (in Bernard Shaw's "Press Cuttings"); and how coloristic affectation continues to haunt George Bellows in his man's portrait and in the group, "Mabel, Anne and Jean," "Mr. Bellows" flair for novelty, having in this last instance produced a crimson negress. But one is recompensed—somewhat—by the tonal subtleties and the quietude of Alden Weir's "Col. C. E. S. Wood," the happy bits of color in Hubbell's "The Baby"; the sweeping lines and pleasant grays of the late John Alexander's full-length "Lady and Dog"; the joyous summer spirit of Frank Benson's "Daughter Elizabeth"; the sincerity of William Cotton's "Mother"; the solved problem of Dewitt Lockman's full-length "Pandora"; the stained-glass gaiety of color in Henri's "Flower Boy," and the innocence of George Luks's "Lore."

Cecilia Beaux is not more thrillingly masterful in her portrait of a lady standing against a blue sky than she is in the full-length girl in white recently acquired by the Metropolitan; Louis Betts misses in his portrait of Hamlin Garland, the entrenched fire of the well-known author; Lydia Field Emmet, famed for pretty representations of children is not inconventionally vital in her "Patricia" (a fine doll figure); while neither John Johansen nor Ellen Emmett Rand rise to heights of isolated supremacy in a "Portrait Group" and "The Misses Scovill," respectively. Irving Wiles, Richard Millar, S. Montgomery Roosevelt, Leopold Seyffert, W. T. Smedley, Helen Turner, Douglas Volk, O. Dennett Grover, Antonio De la Gandara, Adolph Borie, E. Stetson Crawford, Brunetta Herman Crawford, H. Gardiner Cushing and Victor Hecht would each and all, no doubt, not desire to be mentioned in the same sentence, nor would they be, if space permitted. Now a word or two about the "National" assumption of this association. Cut the membership in half, and prune still further, and the term national might mean something. Then think of these additions—Eakins, Duveneck, Brandegee, Wm. Funk, Jongers, Philip Hale, Hildebrandt, Kendall, Beckwith (modernists, attend!), Martha Walter, Hilda Belcher, Goldbeck, G. de F. Brush and Abbot Thayer.

The word national is a big word. It should not be used in vain.

James Britton.

Pottery at Durant Kilns.

An autumn exhibition of faience from the Durant Kilns is on at 16 W. 56 St. Since time immemorial, pottery, expressing as it does, the creative instinct of man and bearing the very imprint of the potter's hand, has been surrounded by an atmosphere of intense human interest and lovers of individual table decorations will find this showing of beautiful forms—jade green, Persian blue, amethyst, turquoise and Chinese yellow—most enticing.

Bas Relief of Whitney Children.Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney will have as an overmantel decoration at their home, 871 Fifth Avenue, a bas relief cast from solid tin, said to be the largest work of art of that material ever made in this country and which has the portraits of their children, Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney and Flora Whitney. The original work was modeled in 1907 by James Earle Fraser.
The relief is six feet long and five feet high,
and weighs more than 900 pounds. The material is so treated as to have the appearance of old silver. The boy and girl are shown mounted on ponies.English Art at Rochester.Preparations are now being completed at the Memorial Art Gallery in Rochester for an important exhibition of British work which is now on its way to America. The collection, assembled in England by Har-

November Fifteenth to Twenty-SeventhANNUAL ART INSTITUTE SHOW.

Chicago, Nov. 17, 1915.

The Art Institute's twenty-eighth annual exhibition of American oils and sculptures opened with the usual reception Tuesday evening last. Last year the customary European exhibits were sadly missed, and this is repeated this year. But the display is a good one just the same, although lacking an international character.The Prize Awards.The Potter Palmer Prize, carrying $1,000 and a gold medal, was awarded to J. Alden Weir's "Palm-leaf Fan," a portrait with a charming environment. The Norman Wait Harris prize of $500 and a silver medal went to Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., of Phila., for his landscape, "In the Gloaming." The second Harris prize of $300 and a bronze medal were captured by George Bellows with his portrait, "Anne." The Martin B.
Cahn prize, of $100, was given W. Victor Higgins for his "Oka and Qalmacho"—one of the results of the artist's Summer jaunts in Texas, Arizona, Mexico and New Mexico.The exhibition includes 365 oils and 46 sculptures. In the sculpture group, which is unusually large are several highly ambitious modelings. Chester Beach's "Unveiling of Dawn" was given an honorable mention. A few of the painters represented are
F. W. Benson, Gifford Beal, F. C. Bartlett, Hugo Ballin, Cecilia Beaux, Pauline Palmer,
Karl Anderson, A. E. Albright, John W.
Beatty, L. F. Berneker, Harriet Blackstone,

Artists' Guild Shop is now on. The $100
Fine Arts Building prize was given to four exceptional exhibitors, Margaret Rogers of Boston, for jewelry; George H. Trautman, for copper; Dorothy Heuermann, for weaving; Robert J. Jarvie, for silver, all of Chicago. Each received $25. Honorable mention was given to Matilda Middleton, Chicago, for painting on ceramics, and to F. E.
Walrath, of Rochester, for pottery.Joseph Pennell and the Chicago Society of Etchers held a reception for the lovers of lithographs and etchings in the Art Institute's print rooms on the afternoon of November 16, during the reception held for the opening of the American Painting and Sculptures exhibition. Pennell's series of "Wonders of Work" are on show for the first time.The Atlan Ceramic Art Club's annual show was also a feature of the Institute's big opening November 16. The loan collection of antique English and Colonial silver, assembled by Mrs. Blair, occupied a prominent place in the gallery.More than a score of portraits by Gordon Stevenson are on view in the Thurber galleries. Stevenson has risen to a climax of popularity during the year. With the collection are portraits of Arthur J. Eddy, Carolyn Walker, Dr. Albrecht Montgelas,
Elsie Ferguson, Miss Harmon Bailey,
Theodore J. Keene and Alice Bothwell.The Palette and Chisel Club is giving an exhibition of paintings by Gordon Ertz.
Charles E. Boutwood has returned from Europe. Boutwood has been on the faculty of the Art Institute for some time. He announces that he means to devote himself to independent painting in the near future.A collection of water-colors by Mrs.

PHILADELPHIA.Five different picture shows are now open in this city.There was an interesting gathering of the artistic fraternity at the "Artists' Evening"
at the Water Color and Miniature Exhibition at the Academy Nov. 13. A special reception has been arranged, suggested by the Bakst showing of costume designs and stage settings, to which organizations that might be interested, are to be bidden. A group of watercolors at the Academy Show, overlooked in the first review, by Charles Livingston Bull, are fine examples of the art of the animal painter, in the rendering of the anatomy and coloring of jaguars and leopards in full pursuit of their prey and also a note, rather unusual, in the miniature collection, in the way of two exquisite little "medallion portraits" executed in colored wax by Ethel Frances Mundy, much in the manner of the famous examples of this art in the Wallace Collection in London.The Sketch Club opened its remodelled house and extended gallery on Nov. 13
with a jury selected exhibition of 34 oils,
the work of artist members. Birge Harrison, Leopold Seyffert and R. Blossom Farley are responsible for the choice of the canvases shown, and certainly have assembled a most creditable offering for public view until December 15. E. W. Redfield is represented by a capital, rather smaller than usual, landscape, entitled "Approaching Spring," which, without the slightest doubt carries off the honors. Daniel Garber's
"Autumn Medley" is also a work of notable distinction giving one a most beautiful symphony of color as seen in the changing tints of Indian summer. "The Narrows in Winter," by Morris Hall Pancoast, shows fine appreciation of values and atmospheric effect observed on the shore of Staten Island.Birge Harrison exhibits a carefully studied work, "Bridges at Cos Cob," in which the well-known painter's sound method seems to make the other works look like mere sketches. Fred Wagner's two contributions are in his happiest vein, especially
"The Coal Wharves," commonplace objects of industrial life in the picture being treated as the leading features of the composition and very successfully. The only example of the art of portrait painting on view is
"Doctor A. C. Abbott," by Leopold Seyffert, admirably clever as a record of the personality of his sitter, who himself is a painter of talent, represented by a view of "Ogunquit Beach." A colorful decorative screen, showing some influence of the art of Japan,
is by George Harding and adds much to charm of the surroundings.An exhibition of works by Miss Katherine Patton in oil and watercolor is on in her studios in the Baker Building until Nov. 24.
Landscape marine and flower studies give one an idea of the versatile talent of the painter who figures among the leaders of the women in the profession. At the Rossenbach Gallery an exhibition for 48 original drawings by Joseph Pennell for the illustration of "Our Philadelphia" published by the Lippincotts is on. The opening of the display was preceded by a talk by the artist who was introduced to the audience by Mr. John F. Lewis. Eugene Castello.BOSTON.Boston keeps busy with (changing) art shows, and just as one has digested a dozen different styles, a new exhibition opens and the mental assimulative process has to start anew. This week the gallery trotter must trot indeed, for the exhibitions extend from historic Beacon Hill to the Art Museum, with detours along Newbury, Boylston and Ipswich Streets.The "Guild of Boston Artists" (which the typesetters occasionally translates, with unconsciously prophetic wisdom, as the "Guide of Boston Artists") has a variegated collection by active members in the front gallery and a one-man show by Albert
Felix Schmidt in the second gallery. Mr.
Schmidt's work looks uncommonly well perhaps because the forerunner is so distract-ingly "busy" with styles and color "arrangements," hung cheek by jowl in an unbecoming manner. (Of Mr. Schmidt more anon). There is such a thing as too much variety and too much "quantity" in a picture show. It is apt to send the prospective picture buyer home with his head empty and his pocketbook untouched.The Twentieth Century Club, appropri-

the ART NEWS when shown in Phila. last much traveled and prolific painter. A good

ART AND ARTISTS.
Francis C. Jones and his brother Bolton, have gone to Montclair, N. J., for a brief stay.

C. Y. Turner spends three days each week, working on a portrait of a musician and on genre subjects at his 27 W. 67 St. studio, and three at the Baltimore Art Institute, of which he is Director.

An exceptionally clever cartoon by Hy Mayer, entitled "From the Prospectus of an Illustrator's Studio Building, About to Be Erected in New York" is in this week's "Puck."

A number of recent paintings by Edward A. Kramer are hung in the rooms of the Petrus Stuyvesant Club, 129 E. 10 St., "When Spring Is Young" and other landscapes, in oil—are charming bits of nature in which a nice feeling for color and a decidedly poetic quality are noticeable.

The Pittsburgh Carnegie Institute is planning a memorial exhibition of the works of the late John W. Alexander.

Stanley Middleton has completed an interesting portrait of Dr. A. R. Starr and one of General E. Farrington Austin and is now at work finishing landscape studies, made from nature, during his summer outing.

At the Rhode Island School of Design, Providence, R. I., the textiles from the historical exhibition at Paterson, N. J., are on view. A display of the Newark Competition posters will follow from Nov. 24 to Dec. 8. Joseph Pennell will lecture at Memorial Hall, Dec. 1, on Artistic Lithography.

John S. Carson's "Autumn Beeches" has been bought by the Dallas, Tex., Art Association.

Frederick J. Waugh has purchased a farm at Kent, Conn., which seems of late to be a popular resort for artists. He is remodeling the house to put it in its original state of one hundred and fifty years ago and is making the barn into a studio.

Katherine Stymetz Lamb, sculptor, has been making the model for the bronze panel designed by her father Charles R. Lamb for the memorial over the grave of Galbraith Perry Rodgers, aviator, who made a flight across the U. S. The model shows the late Mr. Rodgers flying in a Wright biplane.

Jane Peterson has moved her studio from the Chelsea, 222 W. 23 to the Sherwood, 58 W. 57 St.

George H. Taggart has returned to town and taken a studio at 200 Central Park W.

Sophie Upton Brumback, formerly of Kansas City, Mo., has left her cottage "The House on the Hill" at Gloucester, Mass., and taken a studio apartment at 140 W. 57.

The annual exhibition of watercolors, pastels, illustrations and etchings by members of the Salmagundi Club, will be held Dec. 11-23. The "Stag" dinner will take place Dec. 10, and the private view Dec. 11. Works will be called for between Washington Sq. and 80 St. on Dec. 4, and returned Dec. 24. Only one work from each artist will be placed. The Isidor and Shaw prizes will be awarded as usual. The Art Committee consists of Carl Rungius, chairman, E. L. Blumshein, Edmund W. Greacen, Gardner Symons and Guy C. Wiggins.

Industrial Art at Columbia.
William Laurel Harris, contributing editor of Good Furniture, has arranged in the Avery Architectural Library at Columbia College, an important exhibition of industrial art, which includes rich decorative hangings, art objects, and artistic furniture. A score of furniture makers, one of whom as a boy, laboring in a manufactory, got his first start, artistically, at the library, and a dozen workers in textiles, are represented. There are besides bronzes and art objects by American artists, the former including some small figures by Robert Aitkin. A feature consists of tapestries from the Edgewater looms. This is the first important exhibition of industrial art ever organized under the patronage of one of the principal American Universities.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

W. B. Dick Print Sale.
At the opening, at the Anderson Galleries on Monday evening of the collection of the late William B. Dick Mr. George H. Franklin gave $16 for a proof etching of the Crystal Palace, London. For Haden's "Kidwelly Castle" he gave $12 and for his "Amstelodamum" $12. W. F. Meder paid $12.50 for Hollar's "Birdseye View of Cologne" and W. R. Schafer $11 for Pennell's "Greenwich Park." The total for the evening was $528.

At the final session Tuesday Mr. H. Wunderlich gave $42.50 for Jones' mezzotint of Hoppner's "Mrs. Jordan's as Hypocrita." Mr. H. G. Cowen paid $31 for Whistler's "To Bent's Head"; Mr. C. A. Fleischman $25 for a mezzotint of Mrs. Pope, the actress and Mr. Max Williams $17 for Juke's aquatint of Mrs. Siddons. The total for the sale was $1,550.

Laces and Shawls Sold.
The opening session, of the Larter & Kendall sale at the American Art Galleries of antique laces, shawls, fans, combs, parasols and purses on Monday, produced $2,711. Mr. Seaman, agent, gave $610 for a Brussels needle point shawl with a tulle centre. Mrs. Morris Loeb paid $190 for the Jenny Lind jacket of muslin and Valenciennes and L. Gertrude $80 for an antique fishu and founce, said to have belonged to Empress Eugenie. Miss Lorenz agent, paid $70 for a Louis XIV fan, and Mr. David Belasco $17 for an Indo-Persian cashmere shawl and $10 for 3 purses.

At the final session Tuesday $2,493 was realized making a total for the collection of $5,204.50. Mr. C. J. Sullivan gave $65 for one Persian camels hair shawl, and Mr. Seaman $60 for another. Mr. Belasco paid $50 for an early XVIII century Chinese shawl.

Napoleon's Hair $107.50.
For a duly authenticated lock of Napoleon's hair sold Wednesday in the Burton library sale, at the Anderson Galleries, Mr. George D. Smith gave $107.50. The Library of the University of Nebraska paid $280 for a copy of Kingsborough's "Antiquities of Mexico," London, 1831-48. Mr. J. F. Lewis gave $88 for a XVII century Arabic and Persian Koran. C. Gerhardt & Co. paid $62.50 for Col. Mitchell's "The Fall of Napoleon," London, 1845, and Mr. T. A. Barton $50 for Count Montholon's "History of the Captivity of Napoleon at St. Helena," London, 1846-47. The total of the session was $2,999.75 and of the library thus far $19,986.20.

Kirby Presents Wallack Vase.
At the sale of the Geo. Osborn Rudkin old silver, bronze and miniature collection, at the American Art Galleries Wednesday, Auctioneer Kirby bought for $70 the F. W. Wallack vase, presented the actor by his company, and will give it to the Players Club. The total of the sale was $6,407. Mr. T. F. Clausen gave $160 for a miniature and Mr. J. F. Branch the same amount for a silver tea caddy. Mr. Baumeister paid $120 for a George III silver tea set and Miss Brenner $120 for an early American tea set.

Tapestries Sold at Clarke's.
At the close of the sale Nov. 12, of the collection of Mrs. Evans R. Dick at Clarke's Rooms, 5 W. 44 St. tapestries owned by Princess Lwof-Parlaghy were sold for account of the Plaza Hotel. Mr. Augustus Lefevre as agent, gave $2,900 for one and another was sold for $1,550. The total of the Dick sale was $24,126. At the closing session Mr. Wallace Eddinger gave $522 for a Louis XV desk and $200 for an old Spanish barqueno.

The Parke Estates Sale.
The sale under the management of Mr. Hiram H. Parke in his new galleries in the Mitchell-Vance Bldg., 836 Broadway, Nov. 10-12, in settlement of various estates, realized $33,764.35 in four sessions. Mr. De Young gave $925 for Henner's "Ideal Head." Grolleron's "Un Renseignement" brought $750. Mr. P. J. Walsh paid $500 for Inness' "Morning Mist" and Mr. M. J. Rougeron $410 for his father's "Spanish Wedding." An attributed Landseer "Pet Calf" fetched $150 and an early Wyant study $50. A mahogany bedroom suite sold for $590 and a Sevres clock set for $495.

William Nelson Library.
An important library, that of William Nelson of New Jersey, will be sold at the American Art Galleries Nov. 22 and 23. It is composed of 1,401 lots of New Jersey memorabilia, and rare and valuable books and documents. There is an illustrated catalog, with a steel portrait of the former owner. Among the items are a Thanksgiving proclamation by Gov. Livingston, a lithograph of Sullivan's Elevated R. R. of 1827, a copy of the acts and laws of N. J. in 1727, a Pa. & N. J. Quaker's broadside of 1775, an Mss. Declaration of the Proprietary Gov't of N. J., 1681, and a copy of the New Testament published at Trenton in 1793.

The Alfred Lewis Library.
The library of the late Alfred Henry Lewis, will be on view in the book rooms of the American Art Association from Nov. 27 to sale in the galleries on the afternoons and evenings of Dec. 1 and 2. In addition to many sets of standard works the library contains a number of first editions of those with Cruikshank's illustrations, including a

There are a number of works on the drama, miscellaneous works of interest and many volumes on crime and criminals. Besides the Lewis books an added list contains besides books, autographs and signed documents and standard works on art.

T. B. Clarke to Sell Plate Collection.
The collection of plates of all nations formed by Mr. Thomas B. Clarke will be sold early in January and will be placed on exhibition Jan. 1. Mr. Clarke after selling his pictures, porcelains and objects of Oriental and Hellenic art some fifteen years ago, started in to decorate his house in West 35 St. with stuffs, embroideries and plates. So large did his collection become that he finally decided on its sale. There are plates, plaques, tiles, saucers, bowls, dishes, Persian, Turkish, Moorish, Italian and Spanish among the lot, and velvets, brocades, damasks and laces from many lands, the whole ranging in period from the XV to the XVIII centuries. Western Asia and Southern Europe furnish most of the examples, and there are specimens from Rhodes, Damascus and Bokhara, Hispano, Mauresque, and Italian from Duratas to Urbino.

The Worl Library Sale.
On Dec. 9 the library of Dr. Edward E. Worl of Newark, N. J., will be first shown and then will be sold on the afternoons and evenings of Dec. 13 and 14. This consists partly of modern books of travel, works of art and architecture, including biographies of old masters and modern artists; works on pottery and porcelain, furniture, old plate, &c.; and of illustrated biographies of English authors and statesmen, court memoirs, French and English royal memoirs, and classical French works, many in fine bindings.

Rustafjaell Egyptian Collection.
The Egyptian collection formed by Robert de Rustafjaell Bey has been removed from 734 Fifth Avenue to the Anderson Galleries, where it is now on public exhibition, preliminary to the unrestricted sale by auction in six afternoon and evening sessions, beginning Monday, Nov. 29. The collection is one of the largest and most important of its class that has come on the New York market in several years.

Arts and Letters Institute.
The seventh annual joint meeting of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, and the American Academy of Arts and Letters opened Thursday in Boston. There were papers by William Allen White, Brooks Adams, and Paul W. Bartlett, followed by a dinner at the Harvard Club.

VOL. XIV., No. 8.

Entered as second class mail matter,
N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 27, 1915.

10 Pages. SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

PRINCESS' PORTRAIT SUIT.

The suit of the Princess Lwoff Parlaghy against the estate of Frederick Townsend Martin for $15,000, which she claimed the late Mr. Martin had agreed to pay her for a full length standing portrait of himself, completed before his death, and which has been before Judge Bennet as Referee for several months, has been concluded. The Princess was awarded the sum of $3,500 by the Referee.

There was much interesting testimony offered by the Princess and the estate as to the value of portraits in general and the Martin portrait in particular, and from an educational viewpoint it is to be regretted that the suit could not have been tried in public.

MINIATURE PAINTER SUES.

Alleging that she painted miniature portraits of twelve people for which she was to receive $1,020 and was paid only $370 for her work, Miss Mary B. Olmstead on Oct. 20 in Los Angeles, Cal., brought suit against Miss Bertha D. Comer for $585. She claimed that the latter entered into a contract with her to get orders and was to collect the money and make the payments. She agreed to waive $65.

WOODWARD BEQUEST TO B'KLYN.

Bequests of art works with an appraised value of about $88,000 have recently been received at the Brooklyn Museum from the Estate of Robert B. Woodward. Among these are 14 oils, 4 watercolors, 36 pieces of Greco-Roman glass, and other miscellaneous works of art, with an appraised value of about $20,000; and a collection of Chinese and East Indian carvings, in jade and other semi-precious hard stones, appraised at about $68,000.

Among the paintings are Encke's portrait of Mr. R. B. Woodward, Michel's "Evening on the Great Moors," Harpignies' "Willows on the Banks of the Loire," Jacob Maris' "Fisherwomen on the Beach at Scheveningen," "Mauve's "Cow in Pasture," Boshoom's "Cattle by the Sea," Boudin's "Inner Harbor, St. Valery" and "Trouville Beach."

Col. Woodward was particularly interested in jade and ancient glass. His jade collection was destined for the Museum at his death, but during his lifetime he gave no jades. On the other hand, he was extremely generous in his gifts of Greco-Roman glass, so that it already owns a large and fine, excellent collection. The thirty-six pieces of Greco-Roman glass, above mentioned, will be a notable addition to this collection.

The collection of 218 carvings, mainly in Chinese jade, will be the finest museum exhibit of the kind in the U. S. after the Bishop collection in the Metropolitan, and the Mrs. T. B. Blackstone collection in the Field Museum at Chicago.

As usual in collections of Chinese jade carvings, other semi-precious hard stones are included in the Woodward collection, although the jades preponderate. Among other materials are lapis lazuli, rock crystal, agate, cornelian, amethyst, chalcidony and glass.

GIFTS TO HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The N. Y. Historical Society, 170 Central Park W., has lately received, by bequest of Mrs. Cora T. R. Catlin, in the name of her brother, the late N. W. Stuyvesant Catlin, great-great-great-grandson of Gov. Stuyvesant, 3 pictures brought over by him in 1647. These are a portrait of the Governor's father-in-law, Rev. Lazare Bayard and Mrs. Bayard, born Judith De Vos, and a view of the Bayard homestead at Alphen, Holland, with portraits of the Governor's sister Anna and her husband, Samuel Bayard.

Librarian Robert H. Kelby also received for the Society, on Nov. 18, an important gift of family portraits from the family and representatives of Philip Schuyler, great grandson of Maj. Gen. Philip Schuyler. One of the portraits, by Trumbull, painted in Phila., in 1792, represents Maj. Gen. Schuyler. The artists of the other portraits are unknown. They represent the Gen'l's wife, Catherine Van Rensselaer, daughter of John and Eugette Livingston Van Rensselaer; Capt. Johannes Schuyler, b. 1668, and his wife Elizabeth Staats, their eldest son Col. Philip Schuyler, and their second son, Johannes Schuyler, who married Cornelia Van Cortlandt, daughter of Stephanus Van Cortlandt, and was the father of the Revolutionary Major General.

ANOTHER BEAUX ARTS BALL.

The fortunate participants in the beautiful and successful pageant and ball, organized and given by the Society of Beaux Arts architects of this city, with the assistance of other local art societies at the Hotel Astor, in February, 1913, is to be repeated this coming winter, under the same auspices, and, if possible, on a larger and grander scale than the last famous event.

The ball of 1913 was a Venetian Fete. That of 1916 is to be an Oriental Pageant, followed by a ball. The students of the N. Y. School of Fine and Applied Art are already making sketches for the affair. The pageant

BLAKESLEE ESTATE DIVIDEND.

The executors of the estate of Theron J. Blakeslee, the Columbia Trust Co. and Mrs. Clara Blakeslee, the widow, declared this week a first dividend of 35% and interest. It is expected that a second dividend will follow the coming sale of the remainder of the stock of pictures, the details of which will soon be announced by the American Art Association.

POSTCARD COMPETITION.

The Association of Women Painters and Sculptors announce a postcard design competition, with an exhibition of the designs sent in, at the Washington Irving High School Gallery, Irving Place, Jan. 5-30 next. The subject of the designs must be representative of New York streets and people, bridges and other picturesque features, any medium may be used, the size must not be less than 7 by 11 inches and preferably 16 by 20 inches, and each contributor is limited to four entries.

The Women Painters and Sculptors offer

ARTIST'S WIFE A DEALER.

The invasion of so many fields of human endeavor, formerly occupied exclusively by men, has been frequently commented upon of late years. The business of dealing in art works has, however, save for a few exceptions here and there, notably Mrs. Sanchez Wilcox, heroine of the sale of the Hirsch attributed Van Dyck to Mrs. Huntington, Miss Elsie De Wolfe and the late Mrs. Fachiri, formerly Mrs. Mitchell Depew, has in this country, at least, remained one in which men were almost exclusively employed.

It has become known of late that for the first time—Mrs. Wilcox and Miss De Wolfe being independent of any art house—an art house, the old picture firm of Knoedler & Co., has added to its staff of employees a woman, namely, Mrs. Albert Sterner, wife of the pastel and watercolor painter and illustrator, who, for the first time in his career, although he has exhibited in New York, is now holding an exhibition of recent works at the Knoedler Galleries.

Mrs. Sterner, according to friends, has been given an important position with the Knoedler house, and was sent abroad by it last summer to purchase pictures, she having developed much acumen in the securing, purchasing and placing of pictures and unusual taste in their display. The presence of a woman in the Knoedler Galleries in a professional capacity is such a novelty as to attract the attention of many visitors, and the news of Mrs. Sterner's and the Knoedlers' new departure has greatly heartened the Suffragists and encouraged them in their new and fresh campaign.

Mrs. Sterner was a Miss Walther, of a Brooklyn family of German descent, and the sister of the lately and sadly widowed Mrs. Le Roy Dresser. Her husband, the artist, was born in England.

NATHAN HALE TABLET.

A bronze tablet designed by Chas. R. Lamb and erected by the Colonial Chapter of the daughters of the American Revolution was unveiled Nov. 18 at First Ave. and 42 St., to mark the spot where the patriot was hung. It is erected on the M. J. Sulzberger building.

BANKRUPT RICKETT'S PLEA.

The creditors of Robb R. Ricketts, doing business as Moulton & Ricketts, of Chicago, in the County of Cook and district aforesaid, bankrupt, have received the following:

"Notice is hereby given that on the 30th day of November, 1915, at 11 o'clock A. M., the petition of Frank M. McKey, trustee herein, filed on November 13, 1915, will come on for hearing in Room 437, Monadnock Block, Chicago, Illinois, in which petition the trustee represents that there are 105 watercolors now in the possession of the Anderson Galleries, a corporation, in New York City, held for the trustee's benefit, as set forth in a supplemental inventory on file herein, also that there are in the trustee's possession in Chicago a small quantity of oil paintings, etchings and prints, as set forth in a supplemental inventory filed herein, and the trustee asks that an order be entered authorizing him to crate and ship to N. Y. City said pictures now in Chicago, and to sell the same, together with said pictures now in N. Y. City, at public auction, subject to auctioneer's commission of 10 per cent. unless a satisfactory bid should be received for said pictures, to be submitted at the hearing on said petition, at an estimated cost for removing said pictures from Chicago, advertising sale, etc., of not to exceed $500.00, all as more fully set forth in said trustee's petition.

"At the same time there will come on for hearing the trustee's report and account filed on Nov. 13, 1915, showing the sum of $31,038.08 on hand, his petition for the allowance of $431.04 for expenses incurred and for leave to pay $207.50 balance due for expense of auditing books, his petition for the allowance of fees for the services of Rosenthal & Heermance, attorneys, of New York City, who ask the sum of $2,500.00; his petition for the allowance of $4,250.00 on account for the services of his attorneys, $750.00 having heretofore been allowed, and the question as to the declaration of a first dividend, to be paid on claims which have been proven and allowed.

Frank L. Wean,
Referee in Bankruptcy.
Chicago, Nov. 16, 1915.
Mr. Ricketts is doing business in Chicago as under the old firm name, having organized a new company.

is to encompass the span of centuries in the spicy and the tinkley East. It will begin with the movement of Aryan races across the great plateau; it will invoke the mystic powers on the roof of the world. Its imagery will come from ancient Cathay and set forth the Cipango of old. From the mythology of Egypt, of India, and Greece, it will draw much of its inspiration.

S. I. MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN.

A fountain memorial, of the late Major Clarence Tynan Barrett, for many years a resident of Staten Island, was unveiled Nov. 20 at St. George near Borough Hall. A Greek soldier, with spear and shield, is by Sherry Edmundson Fry and the base was designed by T. Sillett. The memorial is the gift of Mrs. Lula Olivia Hardin, executrix of the estate of Major Barrett's widow.

prizes of $100 and $50, respectively, for the best two designs and three Hon Mentions will also be awarded. The jury will be composed of Charles Berg, Victor Brenner, Ernest Blumenschein, A. Wiener, Jonas Lie, Sallie B. Tannahill, Clara E. Peck, Zulma Steele, Mrs. William Fox, Hilda Belcher and Clara T. McChesney.

STUYVESANT BUST AT ST. MARK'S.

The bust of Peter Stuyvesant by Toon Dupuis has been presented to N. Y. by the Dutch Gov't to remain in the custody of St. Mark's in the Bowery, will be unveiled by Chevalier Van Rappard, the Dutch Minister on the eve of St. Nicholas, Dec. 5.

ANOTHER PEALE WASHINGTON.

S. G. Cooper, a N. Y. artist, is said to have found, on Nov. 19 in a Baltimore second hand shop, a portrait of Washington by Rembrandt Peale.

ST. LOUIS MUSEUM'S MORO.

The Ehrich Galleries have sold to the St. Louis Museum a portrait of a Spanish prince by Antonio Moro.

REISINGER PICTURE SALE.

The art at auction of the collection of pictures and prints left by the late Hugo Reisinger, and which dispersal was exclusively announced as to take place this season in the ART NEWS of March 12 last, and again in a recent issue, while a list of his more important pictures was also published in the ART NEWS, it is now announced in some of the dailies, as news, as to take place in January next.

The sale will be an important one and will precede another of importance—that of the collection formed by Mr. Catholin Lambert, and well known to art lovers and collectors, and long in his castle near Paterson, N. J. This collection passed out of the control of Mr. Lambert some time ago, owing to business troubles, and will be sold for the benefit of his creditors.

The list of the Reisinger pictures is re-published below for the benefit of those of the ART NEWS readers who may wish to reperuse it, now that the sale is near, and who may have mislaid the copy of the ART NEWS in which it appeared.

BOSTON.

Complacent Boston is prone to admit that its art season is under way after the blue-blooded (one does not dare hint anaemic) St. Botolph Club has opened its doors for its first exhibition. With customary generosity, the club allows that exclusive portion of the public invited to its "private view" to stay just one hour and a half! The St. Botolph gallery is certainly not noted for its size; and when it is filled with a throng of gallery trotters, bristling with hats (which in turn bristle with updarting ornaments), one has an admirable opportunity to "figure out" the quality of the exhibition by the size and quality of the picture frames. To be sure this is not so great a hardship, relatively speaking, in the case of the present exhibitor, Herman Dudley Murphy, whose frames are of a most admirable contrivance; but it does seem a pity that pictures so genuinely beautiful in quality as his should not have a better chance of being seen at their first official showing. Respectfully suggested that the St. Botolph Club enlarge both its "open hours" and its gallery, if it is to continue its pose as the grand patron of modern art.

But revenons à nos moutons. Mr. Murphy's work can stand independent of praise or cavi: even the Boston public has admitted his artistry.

Apropos, another man who is just coming into his own, despite the ostrich-like stupidity of would-be connoisseurs, is Arthur C. Goodwin, who is exhibiting pastels and oils at a local gallery. Undoubtedly his subjects have helped him not a little in gaining this favor; for he has taken bits of time-honored Boston and endowed them with a charm and poetry they do not possess. It is heresy and desperate wickedness to hint to a conservative Bostonian that his cherished landmarks are dull and trite and commonplace. How, then, can he fail to be thrilled by a view of old T Wharf, or Park Street Church, or Boylston Street, especially when depicted by so skilful and idealizing a brush as Mr. Goodwin's?

Albert Felix Schmidt is in his second week at the Guild of Boston Artists. Ex-cept among those whose mental vision has become mummified (possibly by too much museum visiting), he has made a name for himself. It is a cheering fact to depose in this City of Baked Brains. Mr. Schmidt is a good draughtsman and an able painter. He is original, too, and, although a graduate of one of the regular schools, his native imagination has survived the experience. The picture called "Bride and Groom," two modest but interesting heads, seen in silhouette of quiet trees, against a background of light blue, is startlingly piquant. The variety of subject in his work successfully demonstrates his ability both as a portrait painter and a landscapist.

Guy Wiggins' creditable pictures still continue on exhibition at the Vose Gallery, which has also opened another exhibition, one of landscapes by Robert H. Nisbet.

The war is proving of benefit to that clever young painter, Arnold Slade, who recently sold one of his big war canvases to Mrs. David Kimball, the well-known collector. After all, they do buy pictures occasionally in Boston.

NEW WORKS AT FENWAY COURT.

Boston, Nov. 23, 1915.

The first formal opening to the public of Mrs. Gardner's Fenway Court, since last Easter, took place yesterday. The rooms will be open every day this week, except Thanksgiving, between 10 and 3. A new room is devoted to eight MacKnight water-colors, and works in that medium and oils, by, among others, Wilton Lockwood, Hopkinson Smith, Sarah C. Sears, Louis Kronberg, Martin Mower, Sarah Whitman, J. B. Potter and Anna C. Ladd. In the Yellow Room there is work by Degas, Matisse, Whistler and Sargent among others. In another room are other modern pictures. A new work to the public is the portrait of a woman by Veneziano. In the early Italian room are new works, not before accessible to the public, such as Di Credi's portrait of a young man, Caporali's "Dormition of the Virgin," and five panels by Simone Martine from the Museum at Orvieto.

CHICAGO.

Protests against the jury selections have always been an aftermath to the opening of the annual International Exhibitions of American Paintings and Sculptures at the Art Institute, and this year they have come as usual. The usual annual rumor, also, that artists whose paintings or sculptures had been rejected were to organize an independent show, but again, as usual, the rumor is fading. The jury snarl, however, remains unraveled. The old system has its faults but a better one has not yet been proposed. Member-ship on an art jury of selection or of awards is a difficult position to fill here.

The annual exhibition this year is creditable, both to the artists represented, to the jury of selection and in its entirety; it marks a higher national standard. There is much less reaching for flamboyant effects in that rather broad field tabbed "modernism," a field that covers a multitude of art distortions, and sane "modernists" regret these distortions just as much as do the academicians.

Display Strong in Portraiture.

Portraiture in the display has never before been so prominent. J. Alden Weir and George Bellows, of N. Y., certainly deserved the prizes awarded them. Many other portraits deserve "honorable mention," notably Ralph Clarkson's presentation of Irving K. Pond, Louis Betts' "Renie," Lawton Parker's "James A. Patten," Katherine Dudley's "Helen" and "Elvira," Joseph DeCamp's "Silver Waist," Irving R. Wiles' "Souvenirs," Thomas E. Eakin's "Thought," Virginia Hale's "Paul-ette," Charles Hopkinson's of his daughter, Gordon Stevenson's of Theodore J. Keane, Frank A. Werner's of Alfred Juergens, and Frank Wolcott's "Phoebe."

The many strong and clever portraits and figure pieces are significant when one considers that five years ago portraiture, and even appealing figure canvases, were scarce in the annual show.

The Reinhardt gallery in Congress Hall is being re-arranged and redecorated. By the new arrangement the visitor may walk into a daylight exhibition gallery beautifully decorated. One gallery is paneled in ivory. The season will be opened in December.

O'Brien will open his season in December with an exhibition of works by Guy Wiggins. This will be followed by a show of the paintings of Hindustan by Mr. and Mrs. Colin Campbell Cooper, now on exhibition at Rochester, N. Y., and reviewed in the ART NEWS when shown in N. Y. last season.

PHILADELPHIA.

The suit brought by Giuseppe Donato, a sculptor against M. S. Hershey, the so-called "Chocolate King," in the Dauphin County Court, promises to be one of the "causes celebres" in the history of local art. The dispute is over the payment of $25,000, demanded by the artist for the creation of a decorative fountain, to be erected on the Hershey estate. It appears from the testimony brought out in court, that, subsequently to the original order for the work, considerable enlargements and additions were made of it, naturally entailing corresponding increase in the expense. There is no question as to the artistic quality of Donato's work, but there is as to the value he places upon it. The prominent feature of the decorative scheme of the fountain is a group of three nude dancing female figures, decidedly realistic in modeling and yet not out of keeping with a work of this kind. Pending the suit Mr. Hershey refuses to receive the shipment of pieces composing the ensemble or to pay the amount demanded. Photographs of the fountain taken from the plaster cast before going to the bronze founder have been reproduced in the local newspapers and have had very favorable comment from the critics.

Preceding the opening of the Plastic Club's Exhibition of Illustrations there was an address on Wednesday by Mr. F. W. Taylor on the topic "Fifty Years of American Illustration" in which he gave a resumé of the various innovations in the reproductions of photographs, colored pictures and black and whites, in taking the place of wood and steel engravings and copper plates.

Twenty watercolors, pastels and black and whites are shown by women who are members of the club, not very many of the contributions especially remarkable except, perhaps, in the way of variety or novelty in the choice of subjects and the clever combination of two or more media in the facture of the same work, such as a group by Alice Barber Stevens, in charcoal and pastel, beautiful drawings in which the sombre massing of the foliage of tall cedars effectively contrasted with flying clouds of the autumnal sky. Ethel Warwick shows a capital "Portrait" in pastel of a young man whose scarlet draped head and hoop earrings suggest the costume of the old-time pirate. Ethel Pennewill Brown exhibits a group of sketches in aquarelle of street scenes and picturesque architecture in Senlis. Blanche Dillage a number of views of Mont Saint Michel and Givernay.

Prince Paul Troubetzkoy opened an exhibition of his work in sculpture at the Art Club by a reception tendered to him and the Princess on Wednesday last. Included in the collection are a number of portrait busts, life size, of prominent persons, in addition a number of groups of figures of smaller dimensions that have already been seen in some of the great international exhibitions. The Prince is partly American in parentage, his mother being a member of the well-known Winans family.

The provision in the will of P. A. B. Widener, now made public, leaving to the discretion of the surviving son the disposal of the famous collection of pictures at Lynnewood Hall, relieves, for a time, the tension regarding this matter and, incidentally, the fate of the new Art Museum. While there has been no bequest of pictures or funds to that institution there still remains a fair chance that the city will ultimately come into possession of the treasures of art assembled by the late owner.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Nov. 17, 1915.

The appreciable advance in the price of modern furniture, which has already begun and is expected to develop still further within the next few months, induces the public to frequent public auction rooms which deal in the antique with greater assiduity than ever. Indeed, many buyers who have but little natural taste for old furniture are beginning to cultivate a taste for it from the investor's point of view rather than the art lover's, for not only may pieces of real interest be purchased very frequently at prices even below those of inferior modern work, but the former possess the added merit of increasing in value with the passage of time, whereas with the latter type it is impossible to sell again at anything but a fraction of the original cost. Hence sales of old furniture see no falling off in the number of bidders or the briskness of the bidding, a fact which is causing many owners, who at the beginning of the year thought of postponing the idea of selling till after the war, to sell their pieces at auction. I was further interested to hear last week from a dealer that where really choice specimens of furniture are concerned, there is no dearth of buyers willing to give high prices. As an illustration of this, he told me that he recently placed in his window a fine antique chair, priced at £75, and regarding which he was already in negotiation with a customer. During the two days on which it was displayed, he had no less than six clients making inquiries respecting it, all anxious to be given the first refusal, should the pending negotiations fall through. In normal times he could not have looked for a better state of business, and his experience is confirmed by other dealers' statements.

"Art Tree Panels" Shown.

Great interest has been aroused by an exhibition held in Kensington of "Art Tree Panels," designed by A. J. Rowley, who has invented and brought to a high pitch of perfection a new method of interpreting artists' designs. These panels are formed of inlaid woods, some used in their natural state and coloring, others cleverly dyed by a process of his own. Full advantage is taken of the grain of the woods, while a peculiar effect of life and vitality is conveyed by the play of light upon their surface. Broad effects, as well as the most delicate, are carried out with equal success, and some of Mr. Rowley's best work has been done in the interpretation of pictorial designs by Frank Brangwyn, a large panel entitled "Ghent on Fire" being a remarkable example of the extraordinarily impressive results which may be obtained in this manner. Here only natural woods are employed, but these have been so discreetly chosen that a fine sense of atmosphere is achieved. As a piece of pure decoration, some brilliant studies of birds and flowers, treated somewhat in the manner of a Japanese print, are particularly striking, while a mountain scene designed by H. Butler is no less successful. I understand that an exhibition of Mr. Rowley's work is now being held in Chicago and that the American artist, Henry Reuter Dahl, has furnished him with designs for execution in the "Art Tree" manner and intended for the adornment of a yacht interior, for which purpose he considers this medium peculiarly suited. There is no doubt that, given a craftsman of the artistic sensibility of Mr. Rowley, a future of great promise lies before this new process.

Sculpture Hit by War.

Sculptors are feeling the pinch of war far more than painters, many of whom are kept busy upon portrait work. A committee has consequently been formed, with the Queen as patron and Sir Thomas Brock as chairman, to consider the best means of assisting them to dispose of their smaller work. The first step will be to organize an exhibition at Messrs. Waring & Gillow's of pieces suitable for room decoration, to be sold at moderate prices and to be viewed at their galleries among appropriate surroundings of furniture and hangings, so that their effect in the home may be duly judged. A portion of the takings will be put aside for the relief of sculptors and their families who are in actual monetary distress at the present moment. The feeling among sculptors just now is that after the war there is bound to be greater demand for their products than has ever before been known in their time, for there can be no more fitting method than that of sculpture for paying tribute to those who have fallen. But until that time shall arrive, help is needed for present necessities.

JAMES F. SUTTON DEAD.

As the ART NEWS goes to press, the death is announced of James Fountain Sutton, one of the founders of the American Art Association and noted as an "expert" in Oriental art. He was in his 72d year, and years ago Mr. Sutton retired from business, remaining a special partner in the Art Association. He is survived by a widow, who was Miss Florence Macy, daughter of Mr. R. H. Macy. Mr. Sutton, who was a most agreeable man, had the true flair of a collector, and besides his Oriental objects, had a remarkable gathering of works by Monet and other French impressionist painters.

THE LATE DR. REULING.

Dr. George Reuling, one of the most prominent physicians in Baltimore, and a noted art collector, died Thursday in his 76th year. He was the first surgeon to perform in the U. S. the operation of removal of cataract with its capsule, also the transplanting of the conjunctiva of a rabbit's eye to a human being's. Dr. Reuling was born in Germany and married Miss Eliza Culp of Darmstadt. Among those on whom he operated were President Grant, W. W. Corcoran and Joseph Jefferson. Dr. Jordaens' "The Triumph of Religion" was reproduced in full page in last week's ART NEWS.

passed away at his home in his birthplace, Bedford Hills, in Westchester County. One of the earliest Americans to bring porcelains and other art objects from China and Japan, he was first associated with the Brooklyn firm of the Orvington. He then became a partner in A. A. Vantine & Co., retiring in 1880, and the next year, a special partner of Mr. Rufus E. Moore, who opened the Kurtz Gallery, at 6 E. 23 St., as the American Art Gallery. Buying out his partner in 1883, he formed, with Mr. R. Austin Robertson, long a buyer of art objects in the Orient, and Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, already well known as an art auctioneer, the remarkably successful American Art Association. In 1888 Mr. Sutton made a sensational purchase at auction in Paris, for $115,000, of Millet's "The Angelus," which the Art Association later exhibited in this city and throughout the country. The picture was afterwards sold to M. Chauchard, who left it to the Louvre. Some

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 24, 1915.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

In response to a petition signed by thousands of citizens of San Francisco, the directors of the Panama-Pacific Exposition have decided to keep open until May 1 the Fine Arts Palace, retaining as many as possible of the works now on exhibition, and adding thereto sufficient works to make up for the large number sold, which must be delivered immediately, and the loans which cannot longer be retained. This means that there is every prospect of a large permanent art museum in San Francisco. We have already sold $200,000 worth of modern pictures and sculptures, 75 per cent. of which are by American artists. I shall leave within the next few days

The most amazing feature of the Exposition has been the appreciation by the California public of the work now being done by American artists, and I believe that the most important feature of the Exposition which will endure, is the aesthetic growth in this community.

The Department of Fine Arts has endeavored to serve American artists, and with co-operation in the next few weeks will, I believe, be able to render further broad and lasting service.

ART AND THE CHILD.

The exhibition of Art Associated with the Child, to open Monday at the former Blakeslee Galleries, 665 Fifth Ave., will consist of pictures, sculptures, miniatures, etchings, books and bookplates, prints, photographs, ceramics, interior decorations, toys and school art work. The display, the first of its kind, will be held under the auspices of the Art Alliance of America.

People's Art Guild Exhibition.

In the prospectus of the People's Art Guild something is said to the effect that the "People's aesthetic privation has heretofore been deplorable and giving art exhibitions at the Settlement will help develop creative instinct, sensitive appreciation and enjoyment of the best in art." The majority of the pictures now at the University Settlement, 184 Eldridge St., seem of a type hardly conducive to the development of creative instinct or of artistic appreciation in the uninitiated. So many of these men, instead of going to nature with their own eyes and really creating something, give us bad imitations of the work of the instigators of the Modernist Movement in Europe. Henri Bellows, Kroll, Davey and Sloan, who all paint with studious facility, seem so occupied with showing their extreme cleverness in handling the medium that there is often little else in the work.

Henry A. Mathes' "Ballet Dancer Adjusting Her Sandal" is among the noteworthy exhibits, and Gifford Beal's "Central Park" is strong and colorful. Hayley Lever's "St. Ives, Cornwall" is big and simple in handling, also well thought out. William Glackens shows a Russian Girl, Jerome Meyers a delightfully characteristic East Side street scene, Eugene Speicher a still life, Evan Olinsky an interesting characterization of a girl, and Maurice Sterne exposes one of his masterfully drawn portrayals of Bali Islanders. There is a good Ernest Lawson and much ultra modernism which would be apt to give novices a wierd ception of art.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

age prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

THE WIDENER TREASURES.

The clause in the will of Peter A. B.
Widener, made public this week, which gives the entire control of the dead
millionaire's art collections to his son,
Mr. Joseph E. Widener, with power to dispose of them when and as he desires, and permission to so give them to a museum in Washington, Philadelphia or New York, was seized upon by the sensation mongers of some of the New York dailies, as the ground for a story, with headlines, that the collections would come to New York.
One daily even went so far as to interview Director Robinson of the Metropolitan Museum on the subject, who graciously and tactfully remarked that
"the museum would have room for and would welcome the collections."

To those who knew the late Mr.

Widener, and who also know his son,
Mr. Joseph Widener, such speculations are absurd, and especially so at this juncture. As we said last week, Mr.
Joseph Widener has, through long association with his father's collections, and a taste for art and art study, become one of the foremost and best equipped of American art collectors.
He is not likely to make any speedy disposition of his collections in which he takes the greatest pride and to which he has, himself made, with his father's approval, perhaps their most famous additions of late years.

It is far more likely that the Widener collections will be greatly added to and with care and discrimination, to become sometime and in their present housing, a Wallace collection for Philadelphia, than that they will go into either a Philadelphia or New York museum, certainly not before the present
Mr. Widener passes, in his turn.

HART DENIES PHILA. STORY.

The story published at length in the Phila. Ledger of Monday and republished in the New York dailies of Tuesday, to the effect that Mr. Chas. Henry Hart, the well-known authority on early American art, had fiercely criticised and denounced as spurious certain old and famous portraits owned in Phila. by the Historical and Philosophical Societies, the University of Pennsylvania and the Penna. Academy, is declared by Mr. Hart to be a curious tissue of falsehoods and without foundation in some cases.

We will hope next week to publish a true story of Mr. Hart's attitude towards the portraits in question, as well as others in the Quaker City.

Errors in Hawkins Letter.

Through the seemingly inevitable errors
of the linotype, two regrettable mistakes occurred in the interesting and able letter of Gen. Rush Hawkins on "Our Monumental Monstrosities" in the last issue of the ART NEWS.

In the opening paragraph of Gen. Hawkins' deserved and clever criticism of the Pulitzer Fountain in the Plaza Square, the linotype made him say that "the combination of official art commissions and committees had reached their ultimate in the showing of a want of simple appreciation of the 'properties' involved, when the General wrote 'properties' not 'properties'."

In the same letter, the General, referring to the ignorance of art committees wrote
"the misfortune of it all is," etc., and again
the naughty linotype made him say in print
"The misfortune of it all it."

It is to be hoped that the readers of Gen-Hawkins' interesting and instructive letter which should bear fruit, overlooked, or were not misled, by these obvious errors.

OLD MASTERS FROM RUSSIA.

M. Nicolas Pavlovitch Riabouchinsky, of Moscow, editor of a well-known Russian art magazine, who is in New York with his wife at the Knickerbocker Hotel, to buy magnificent works of art, has brought with him 30 pictures by old masters, which he purchased from the widow of Count Galimitcheff-Kou-toussoff, former secretary of the Dowager Czarina. He still has many pictures in Moscow, and in Paris, where he has a residence on the Champs Elysees. He recently gave an exhibition of Russian primitives.

The Galimitcheff-Koutoussoff pictures were many of them long in the Count's family, while others were presented to him by the Dowager-Czarina. Notable among them is a panel with a Virgin and Child, attributed to Filippo Lippi. A similar subject left entirely unrestored is of the school of Leonardo, it being thought that the head of the Virgin may be by the master. By Lucas Cranach there is a portrait and a Virgin and Child signed and dated. A Holy Family is attributed to the Master of the Death of the Virgin. The Story of St. Catherine is told in a XV Century primitive, and a street
brawl is pictured by Breughel the Elder.
The interesting landscape of one work is attributed to Joost Monpere and the figures to Breughel. There is a large Bacchanalian scene in a landscape by Poussin. Most attractive is a Holy Family with St. John, attributed to Sodoma. A small grisaille portrait is attributed to Van Dyck. Other names of artists represented are Moroni, Potter and Solomon Ruysdael.

There are, besides, an enamel, a bronze door ornament attributed to Michel Angelo,
and some early vestments.

CORRESPONDENCE

Memories of A Titian.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:

In the autumn of 1907 I arrived at New York from England via Naples, where I had formerly been the guest of Signor Pias, director of the Naples Museum, and his family. At Milan I had met the noted English Architect, Mr. George Archeson, the particular friend of the late Sir Frederic Leighton. This acquaintance proved most valuable to me as a letter from him to the Director of the Roman Forum, gave me daily the company of this distinguished authority on Roman art exhibitions.

The object of my visit to Italy, my home
being England, was to verify the authenticity of a portrait of Titian, said to have been painted by the master, himself, but which was much criticized and doubted in England. Previous to the shipping of this picture from England (together with some fine old masters) to America, a visit one morning from the late Mr. Yerkes to my studio interrupted the "packer," and although I did not care to have my paintings
"on view" at that late hour, Mr. Yerkes seeing my Titian, asked the price, and at once offered $50,000. This offer I promptly refused, promising him, however, on my arrival in New York, to give him the first opportunity of purchase here.

Shortly after my arrival, Mr. Yerkes died and soon afterwards meeting Mr. Charles de Kay of the National Arts Club, he at once suggested an exhibition of Old Masters at the Club, which seemed quite attractive.

The comments of the press and public on my Titian, were most severe, many saying
"the canvas is certainly from the studio of Titan, but not from the hand of the master." Finally the exhibition closing, I proceeded to have my picture packed for reshipment to England. During the interval which preceded its departure, I called upon the late Sir Purdon Clarke,
then director of the Metropolitan Museum,
as he had seen the painting in my studio
in Kensington, and begged of him to place
the matter before the directors with a view to "purchase," and after two meetings of the directors they offered to purchase the picture for $30,000. This offer was refused.

Disconsolate, I returned to England with the picture, and suggested to its owner, a visit to the Borghese Gallery at Florence to obtain from the curator a verdict as to the authenticity of the canvas. To this he readily consented, and proceeding with a valuable letter of introduction from Signor Pias of the Naples Museum, I presented a fine photograph of the Titian portrait, for the inspection of this great authority on Italian paintings.

The dear old Signor was deeply moved at his first glance at the photograph and exclaimed, "where is this picture and who has it? It is the long lost Titian that has been missing many, many years. Most decidedly it is Titian! Titian," and crying out "Oh! We have at last found this wonderful picture," he continued, "tell me all about it, and who stole it." It was indeed most pathetic to see the emotion and deep feeling expressed over this canvas, severely criticized and now returned from America to be vouched for, by one of the greatest living "experts" on Titian.

After a visit through the gallery, devoted to the work of Titian, this authority offered me the proof of his opinion, written on the stamped paper of the Museum and upon his offering me the document, remarked,
"See, I have placed the seal of the Government on it so you see with my full signature, it is absolutely authentic."

Returning to England with this valuable document, it is needless to say that the picture soon found a purchaser, and now hangs in one of the galleries of a great Scotch collector.

Annette Schenck.

N. Y., Nov. 15, 1915.

The above letter has pathetic interest
in that, after it was put in type, Miss Schenck was stricken with a fatal illness and passed away after two days suffering. The composition of the letter was her last and loving labor, and she had looked forward to its publication with keen anticipation.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

Annette Schenck.

Miss Annette Schenck died, after a brief illness, in this city on Saturday last, aged 72. The passing of this brave and cultured woman received scant notice in the dailies,
and yet her career was most interesting.
Born in New York, a member of the old
New York family of the name, the daughter of the late Courtney and Eliza Schenck, and a relative of former Bishop Courtney of Nova Scotia, who, now a rector in this city, officiated at her funeral Monday—Miss Schenck, always of an independent character, went when a girl to Europe to study art. She resided many years in London where she became well known to the dealers and collectors. Possessed of only a small income, in middle life she took up the dealing in art works, and with her knowledge and taste secured many a prize which she placed in galleries or private residences
here and abroad.

She was a real art lover and had a good eye for pictures. The last letter she wrote and which was in type when she died, her memories of a Titian she found and brought to New York, is published elsewhere in this issue of the ART NEWS.

Miss Schenck figured largely in the first exhibition of the statue of Aphrodite, better known as "The Bathing Venus," which was imported by the late F. J. Linton some ten years ago, and after disappearance was recently purchased by Mr. John D. Rockefeller for his country place at Pocantico Hills, and Miss Schenck told the history of the statue in the ART NEWS of Oct. 23
last.

During the last few years Miss Schenck had lived in New York, bravely struggling against adversity in her old age, and her always cheerful mien and kindly disposition made her a welcome visitor to the ART NEWS and other offices. Her funeral took place on Monday afternoon and she was laid to rest in the old Marble cemetery
where her family has a plot, at Second Ave.
and 10 St. She is survived by a sister.

William Walton.

The mystery of the disappearance from his long time home, 360 West 22 St., where he had lived almost as a recluse in a small room, of William Walton, the well-known artist and art writer, was sadly solved on Tuesday last through the identification at the Flatbush Morgue of a body, found some days ago in Sheepshead Bay, as that of the aged man.

This sad ending of the life of a man, who,
although of a peculiar and solitary temperament, had unusual ability and qualities that endeared him to his friends, chief of whom was Carroll Beckwith, his fellow student under Carolus Duran in Paris, cast a gloom over the Century and National Arts Club, which were his favorite haunts.

The artist was born in Phila. in 1843, studied at the Pa. Academy and National Academy schools here, and in Paris. He was a figure and landscape painter, but was better known through his art writing.
For many years he had been a frequent and interesting contributor to the department known as "The Field of Art," in Scribner's.

Henry P. Kirby.

Henry P. Kirby, the architect who designed the Stock Exchange, died at his home in this city recently, in his 62d year.
He was a pupil of the Paris Ecole des Beaux Arts and a member of the firm of Henry P. Kirby and John J. Pettit of 103 Park Ave. He was associated with the late George B. Post for 25 years and designed among other buildings those of the American Bank Note Company and of Doubleday, Page & Co. at Garden City, as well as the Cornelius Vanderbilt house at 57 St. and 5 Ave. He had a studio home at Capri, where he usually passed several months each year. He was born at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and married Miss Adelia Browne.

Arthur Jeffrey Parsons.

Arthur Jeffrey Parsons, Chief of the Division of Prints of the Congressional Library, died a few days ago, at Dublin,
N. H. He assumed charge of the print division in 1897, when it was established in the new building. Mr. Parsons was a director of the Corcoran Gallery, a member of the Executive Council of the Washington Society of Fine Arts, and for some years director and treasurer of the American Federation of Arts. He was a member of the Metropolitan Club.

Eugene Bonneton.

Eugene Bonneton, a painter of scenes of old Paris has been killed in action in the Argonne by asphyxiating gas. He was a sergeant of Territorials and is represented at the Pan-Pacific Exposition by "Port St.
Nicholas."

Mrs. Van Rensselaer's Memorial Gift.

The Fogg Museum has recently placed on exhibition a group of reproductions of works of art of the so-called Minoan and Mycenaean civilizations, found during the last fifteen years in Crete. They are highly interesting as illustrating the arts of the Homeric period. The Metropolitan Museum is the only other place in America where reproductions of these works can be seen. They are a gift from Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, of New York, in memory of her son, George Griswold Van Rensselaer, of the Harvard class of 1896, and form a permanent part of the Collection of Classical Antiquities.

WOMAN ARTISTS ACTIVE.

The Association of Woman Painters and Sculptors has arranged fine exhibitions for the season. A small picture show at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., is now on. In January there will be an exhibition of post cards at the Municipal Art Gallery. In the same month a rotary exhibition, under the auspices of the American Federation of Arts, will begin. Then will come the regular annual display, to be followed in June by a further showing, in connection with the meeting of the General Federation of Arts.

VIOLET COPPER LUSTRE PITCHER

THE POTTERIES OF CROWLEY.

There will be placed on exhibition in the American Art Galleries, No. 6 East 23 St., probably on Thursday next, preparatory to its sale at auction of the afternoons of Dec. 6 and 7, the collection of old English, Delft and other potteries, formed by that intelligent, discriminating and enthusiastic collector, Mr. Timothy F. Crowley of this city.

The collection, both in the beauty of a number of its individual specimens, as one representing quality and, above all, genuineness, and as a comprehensive whole, is the best of its kind that has ever come to the metropolitan auction mart.

Mr. Crowley, as the compiler of the catalog of his collection, Mr. Horace Townsend, himself an authority on old English and Dutch wares, well says, "seems, when considering the acquisition of any particular piece to have asked himself at the outset, 'Is this beautiful or quaint?' and to have finally selected only those things concerning which he could make answer in the affirmative."

The reproductions on this page give a good idea of the variety of Mr. Crowley's collection and the exceeding beauty and variety of several of its specimens. Especially notable are the large Wedgwood plaque with the Bacchanalian subject "Boys and Goat," the two oval Wedgwood plaques by Webber and Mrs. Landre, and the fine violet copper lustre pitcher.

Important and valuable also are the old German tankard and the Bennington tulip shaped vase.

So the discriminating collector and the connoisseur in search of the curious, the quaint and the unique, would do well to betake himself or herself—for there are many women of taste and cultivation in

Mr. Crowley, the assembling of which has been such a pleasure and education to its owner, and whose dispersal, to his loss and regret, will be the pain of many a collector.

NEW ORLEANS.

Luis Graner, whose exhibit of paintings is still on at the Delgado Museum, has added two new portraits of much interest to the collection. The added pictures are portraits of Dr. I. M. Cline, the well-known director of the U. S. Weather Bureau, and one of the city's most enthusiastic and conscientious art collectors. The other is of Mr. Charles Wellington Boyle, curator of the Delgado Museum, whom Mr. Graner has painted, palette in hand, as he sits before his easel. Both pieces are fine likenesses. Mr. Graner is now working on several commissions, but cannot remain in the city more than a few weeks longer. Many important sales have been made and the prospects are bright that one of the largest and most striking pictures of the collection will remain a possession of the museum as a gift from a prominent art enthusiast.

TOLEDO.

The November exhibitions at the Museum include paintings by the Chicago Society of Artists; canvases by H. Leith-Ross and John F. Follinsbee; etchings and engravings by masters of the old and modern schools, a loan collection of paintings by old and modern masters of Europe, which has been on since July, and a collection of old Buddhas and other idols from China, besides the permanent collections.

A very successful Chrysanthemum and General Flower Show was held at the Museum the second week of November, which this country who know, love and appreciate the work of the early English potters—to the exhibition next week of Mr. Crowley's treasures. If they do so they will surely be in attendance at the sale, for the desire to acquire these dainty objects will grow with study, and it can be safely predicted that the majority of them will find new and appreciative owners.

But, apart from the unusual interest that Mr. Crowley's collection has for collectors and connoisseurs, it will appeal also to lovers of the dainty and the decorative, for these qualities the specimens all possess, and some in a marked degree.

What, for example, could be more dainty than some of the Wedgwood, the Spode and Whieldon pieces, and more alluring than some, if not all, of the glistening, glimmering Lustre ware; what more decorative than the beautiful rich old Delft and the creamy Lowestoft? There are also some admirable specimens of early German stone and tin-enamelled ware, with several early American pieces from the Bennington and other factories.

There are 273 numbers in the catalog, which it will require two afternoons to disperse. There are 44 pieces of Spode and a like number of Lowestoft and Derby. Among the Wedgwood pieces are portraits of Bentley and Josiah Wedgwood, two superb plaques 10 inches high by 7½ wide, the well-known Turner plaque from the W. P. Hodges collection, sold in 1864, the famous "Head of Medusa," modelled by Flaxman, the Neale copy of the Portland vase, the series of portrait medallions from the Hargreaves collection, the Wedgwood group from the same collection, and the Wedgwood statuette in black basalt of "Infant Hercules Strangling the Serpent."

The above mentioned items are only a few of the more noted in the collection of

was visited by about 12,000 people during the three days.

The special attractions at the Museum for December will include a Post-Impressionist Show, and exhibition of paintings by Alexis Fournier and some sculpture by May Elizabeth Cook.

TORONTO.

The members of the Canadian Art Club recently held their annual exhibition in the art gallery of the Reference Library for a month. The Club is composed of some of Canada's foremost artists.

This year many small pictures were noticed. Mr. Suzon Cote painted many of the best of these. J. W. Willian also had a group of little pictures. This was the first time that such small pictures have been noticeable since there was an entire exhibition of little pictures two years ago.

Homer Watson's large canvases, painted at Valcartier of the First Canadian Contingent which went overseas, were very interesting, historically, and were retained by the Canadian Government.

Many of Franklin Brownell's charming sunshiny pictures attracted those who especially like his work. A distinct favorite was one called "A Trout Stream."

Archibald Browne's pictures were rich in color and mellow in tone. "Sundown," as the title suggests, was peaceful and harmonious in color and composition, and was painted for Norman Mackenzie K. C. Regina. Some bright decorative paintings were contributed by Arthur Crisp of New York. Another New York artist, Canadian by birth, Ernest Lawson, had some good examples.

A brilliantly virile and truthful bit of coloring was contained in "The Gully," by Maurice Collin of Montreal, who also contributed a poetic conception in pastels called "Solitude," low in tone. Harmony of color characterized the work of E. Atkinson which also possessed the qualities of breath and good drawing. Most of his paintings were low in tone. "A January Thaw" suggested the mildness of the first spring days.

J. W. Morrice, of Paris, France, had softly harmonious interiors among his groups. They were chiefly interesting spots in the old land. Distinctly original and interesting in subject were Horatio Walker's "Lime Burners at Night," "Winter Twilight in the Laurentians" had charm of color.

Curtis Williamson's portraits of Fred. Mercer and of an old lady were speaking likenesses and were crisp and truthful in tone.

Herbert's small bronze portraits were good specimens of that sculptor's work. J. Kerr Lawson's pencil and etched drawings were fine individually and collectively.

ROCHESTER.

The two collections now on exhibition at The Memorial Art Gallery, coming as they do so early in the winter, suggest a more than usually interesting season ahead. They are those of the already well-known collection of pictures, painted in India, by Mr. and Mrs. Colin Campbell Cooper, which have been fully reviewed in the AMERICAN ART NEWS, one of paintings, miniatures, and sculptures from the Guild of Boston Artists, and a group of fine miniatures by Mathias Sandor of New York which supplements the larger collections.

The Guild of Boston Artists has brought together a collection of representatives of the leading tendencies of New England art. Frank Benson has a fine interior "The Gray Room," in his familiar style, as well as a marine with beautiful opalescent quality. Joseph DeCamp is represented by a portrait, low in key, "The Blue Lady." Philip L. Hale has a small interior, and Lillian Westcott Hale shows also an interior, a white and gold room of unusual charm and distinction. Among the miniatures may be mentioned especially the "Red Flower," by Laura Coombs Hills, a fine bit of color. The sculpture group includes some of Cyrus Dallin's Indian figures, notably a small replica of his "Appeal to the Great Spirit." Frederic Allen, Anna Coleman Ladd, Bela Pratt, Richard Recchia, and Lucy C. Richards are other sculptors represented. On the whole, while the collection includes much that is interesting, it is to be regretted that the majority of the work does not represent the Guild at its best.

Mr. Sandor's miniatures are peculiarly satisfying in their delicacy and individuality. Mr. Sandor combines with the skill of the finished miniaturist, the appreciation of the salient points of personality so essential to the successful portrait.

In the Print Room of the Gallery is shown this month a collection of American and German posters and small advertising material, assembled through the International Art Service of New York, by the Sheffield Fisher Company of Rochester.

MEMPHIS.

The exhibition of American pictures from the Macbeth Galleries, New York, now on at the gallery of the Nineteenth Century Club, will be followed by one in January of black and whites from the Roullier Gallery, Chicago, of foreign pictures in February, and of the works of John F. Carlson in the early Spring.

The exhibit now on is an especially good and important one. Mr. C. E. Boone, who is in charge of the collection, lectured very entertainingly upon it last week. The pictures most admired are those by H. W. Ranger, "After Sunset"; F. Ballard Williams, "The Glade"; Chauncey F. Ryder, "Girl and Cow"; Robert Henri, "Archill Girl"; John F. Carlson, "Winter Landscape"; Ivan Olinsky, "Marguerite" and another portrait; Cecilia Beaux, "The Fledgling"; Alfred Hutty, "Winter," and those by W. H. Howe, Ben Foster, Richard Miller, F. C. Frieseke, Gifford Beal, Emil Carlsen.

MILWAUKEE.

A most interesting exhibit of the work of about forty women painters and etchers has just come to a close, held under the auspices of the Milwaukee Art Society. Among the exhibitors were some of the best known women artists in America, such as Alice Schille, Dorothy Stevens, Helen Hyde, Anne Goldthwaite, Bertha E. Jaques, and Marie Blanke. Six of the exhibitors were Milwaukeeans.

The show comprised almost 200 pictures, including some 50 etchings, and was the first exhibit of its kind in this city. It is, therefore, a matter of congratulation to the society that the attendance during the three weeks was large and a number of pictures were sold.

Anna Louise Wangeman.

DETROIT.

Wilfred N. Voynich's collection of rare early printed books and illuminated Mss., en route from Chicago to New York, has been on exhibition at the Museum.

Prints from Caxton's press and from Pennarts of Rome, the first Italian printers; the first complete Hebrew Bible, printed in 1488, and many other interesting volumes are included in the exhibition.

WATERBURY (CONN.)

The traveling exhibition of American paintings and bronzes assembled by the American Federation of Arts, Washington, D. C., is on view here at the fine gallery of the Mattatuck Historical Society. It comes most apropos in connection with the civic celebration of "Old Home Week" and the dedication of Cass Gilbert's fine new colonial Municipal Building. The painters and sculptors represented are for the greater art well known exhibitors, although there are a few unfamiliar names in the catalog.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The studio of Charles Rollo Peters, 239 Geary Street, is open to the public for November. Mr. Peters shows many new works and while his favorite "Moonlight" effect prevails for the most part, an interesting departure is presented in his "Early Morning," a picture vibrant with color and beauty, as the first red glimmer of dawn is seen from the heights of Russian Hill, over and above the distant cross-bay peaks.

The California Etcher's Society will give an exhibition of the work of its members during the latter part of Nov. at the Schussler Galleries.

The society formed a few years ago, has progressed rapidly as to membership and enthusiasm and has done much to create and stimulate interest in etching among western artists.

Maynard Dixon's recent oils are shown at the Bohemian Club. The artist is a native Californian and although well-known in New York, where he has met with much success, prefers to both live and work in the west.

His subjects, mostly drawn from the desert with its attendant cowboy and Indian life, are well handled and extremely lovely in color.

An unusual exhibition at the little gallery of John McMullin on Grant Ave., is the decorative "sculpture," wrought in copper and silver by Borghild Arnesen, a young Norwegian artist, driven from her Paris studio by the war.

With charming technique, Miss Arnesen has worked out various motives in mantle friezes and decorative panels in brass and copper, and rich border effects on handsome silver trays and serving dishes. In smaller pieces she has successfully handled many interesting pieces of jewelry. Her work shows great spirit and originality.

The opportunity of painting at the Exposition is proving tempting to many of the western and visiting artists. Last week Miss Froelich showed a number of good pictures of exposition subjects at Schussler's, and at present Mrs. Lucile Joullin is exhibiting 25 pastels of favorite views at the Fair, at the galleries of Rabjohn and Morcom.

PITTSBURGH.

The Mrs. Richard A. Rowland prize of $200.00 for the painting receiving the most votes at the eighth annual exhibition of paintings by the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh, at the art galleries of the Carnegie Institute, has been awarded.

There were in all 106 paintings out of the 181 exhibited, voted on, 714 total votes being cast. The painting receiving the greatest number of votes was "The Picnic" by Christ Walter. The result is sure to meet with general approbation, as the picture is one of the most attractive in the whole exhibit. It is a large canvas showing a summer day on the Big Pucketas creek at Parnassus, Pa.

The exhibition closed Nov. 22. The Rowland Prize has added considerably to the interest, this year's attendance exceeding any heretofore and equal to that of the International Exhibits.

KANSAS CITY.

Cyrus E. Dallin, the Boston sculptor, stopped here last week on his way west to offer for temporary exhibit in some public place his large bronze equestrian Indian statue "The Scout," which has been at the Panama-Pacific Exposition during the summer. A number of civic societies here wanted to buy Mr. Dallin's statue "The Great Spirit" for the new Union Station Plaza, as a commemoration of the Santa Fe Trail. The Boston Museum, however, was able to raise the funds for the purchase of the work before Kansas City did, and it is now in the Back Bay. Mr. Dallin has offered to set "The Scout" up here and allow the public to decide whether it is to remain permanently.

Frank Alvah Parsons, president of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts was also in town last week and addressed members of the City Club. Raymond Wyer, director of the Muskegon Museum of Art was another visitor, following the delivery of an address at the University of Kansas at Lawrence, Kansas.

A loan exhibit of etchings owned by residents of Kansas City is being held this week at the Institute. Zorn, Haden, Whistler and Buhot are represented.

R. J. B.

Landscapes by Helsby.

Alfred Helsby is showing 28 oils at the galleries of J. H. Strauss, 275 5th Ave., to Dec. 4, comprising interesting glimpses of Kensington Gardens, London, of the Luxembourg Gardens, and of rural France, in addition to many American landscapes; hills and streams of the Adirondacks, "Night in Rio de Janeiro," and familiar views of Central Park and Riverside Drive, realistic and with charm.

Hopkinson Smith Memorial Display.

Some 82 watercolors and 14 charcoals make up a Hopkinson Smith memorial exhibition now on at the Century Club, to Dec. 2.

There are among the watercolors the quaint corners of Venice, back waterways of the Thames, old streets of Dutch towns, etc., and such oils as "The Old Sonning Bridge" with its cool shadows on luminous water, all so familiar and associated with his able brush.

The 14 charcoal drawings include Notre Dame and other Paris buildings, Westminster Abbey and views of rural England, also bits again of the artist's favorite Venice.

Women at Arlington Gallery.

An exhibition of work by the Association of Women Painters and Sculptors, is now on to Dec. 24 at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave. A dazzling array of 354 small paintings and sketches of flower gardens, children in sunlight, interiors, both subdued and gay, of iridescent snow and ice, of trees and meadows under a blazing summer sun, and of every conceivable type of femininity, greets the visitor.

There are a number of Olive Rush's delightful interpretations of childhood, clever studies by Anne Goldthwaite and work by E. Varian Cockroft, which is less interesting than usual.

There is a personal note in the work of Mary H. Tannahill and M. M. MacCord's sketch of the Panama-Pacific Exposition shows ability to handle water color effectively. There are four of Martha Walters spontaneous compositions full of color and charm, and Anne Crane is well represented. Theresa Bernstein's work is strong, and Alice Preble Tucker de Haas, A. Schill, I. W. Stroud, Julia Titsworth, Emma Lampert Cooper, Harriette Bowdoin, Helen McClain, Susan M. Ketcham and Matilda Brown are among those showing particularly interesting canvases.

Noteworthy, in the group of sculptures are two small heads of young girls, modeled by Bernice Langton, who also shows an interesting bas relief portrait of Miss Hecks. Janet Scudder's "Shell Fountain" is charming, and Gertrude V. Whitney's head of a Spanish Peasant, is a powerful characterization, sculptoiresque in every sense of the word. Alice Morgan Wright, L. M. Sterling, who shows a particularly lovely marble, has relief of a dancing sylph, and Isabel Moore Kimball are among those represented.

There are 17 miniatures, the most attractive of which is Lucia Fairchild Fuller's portrait of a young girl, lovely in color and characterization. May Fairchild's "First Born," and Florence B. Cramer's child study have much charm, and Maria Stream, Theodora Larsh and Alice P. T. de Hass are among others showing pleasing examples of their work.

In Oceanica and Bahamas.

Stephen Hawsis, a painter in oils and gouache, of quite remarkable gifts, after passing some time in recording his impressions of life and nature, in the South Sea Island islands of Melanesia and Polynesia, arrived this Autumn at Nassau, Bahamas, where he is now painting. The artist prefers to work almost in the buff, as shown in the illustration on page 9, presumably from his long sojourn in the tropics. Of his work, which in its earliest stages recalls Whistler and Condor, 124 examples are now on view to Dec. 15 at the galleries of the Berlin Photo Co., 305 Madison Ave.

As a decorative designer and draughtsman Mr. Hawsis is facile princeps. His color is attractive, and as shown especially in some small oils of the Bahamas, remarkably true, while his composition and general technique have something Japanese about them.

When in the islands of Pacific south seas he adapted and conventionalized until he satisfied his personal artistic demands, dividing into diamond pane sections, sea, shore, mountains and sky, in one case, and yet preserving an artistic effect.

When Mr. Hawsis reached the Bahamas, a hurricane he experienced there, seems to have had quite an extraordinary effect upon his art, and he evidently saw the sea and landscape, blown to bits by the winds, picked up the pieces and put them purposely loosely together, until the sunshine came again. In the kaleidoscopic resultants lines and color are broken, but the effects are very decorative; the color is fine and true and there is abundance of motion, as witness the "Nocturne—Wind and Wild Dog" and "The Hurricane."

Portrait Prints of Women at Library.

The prints division of the Public Library has not often arranged an exhibition in which the subject matter is of such paramount interest as in that just opened, devoted to "Portraits of Women." The majority of persons in this gallery of portraits have played a certain role in the history of mankind in its various phases of activity.

If one approaches the exhibition from the standpoint of the artist and of processes of engraving, there is quite as much diversity as in the subjects portrayed. There are line engravings by Faithorne, R. and J. Wierix, P. de Jode, as well as modern artists; a brave showing of British 18th century mezzotint, J. R. Smith, the Watsons, Jones, and the rest; modern mezzotints in colors by S. Arlent Edwards and others; wood engravings by Cole, and even one attributed to Marie de Medici; lithographs by Cavarni, Grevedon and Kriehuber. And the range of painters whose works are reproduced is equally wide.

Russian Art at Scribner's.

That Russian cousin of Aubrey Beardsley, M. Bakst is represented, at the Metropolitan Opera Diaghileff Ballet Russe display, on to Nov. 30 at Scribner's, 597 Fifth Ave. by a remarkable drawing, a study head of a young man, in addition to his costume and scene designs. There is a notable series of sanguine sketches of the ballet by that sympathetic Rumanian artist, Van Saanen Algi. Posters by Barbier, Gross, and Kainer among others, and photos of the dancers and scenes, complete, with some illustrated volumes, a highly interesting display.

Hildebrandt at City Club.

The 11 oils by H. L. Hildebrandt are shown at the City Club, are vibrant, fresh and flooded with sunlight if a bit immature. A little nude by a brook is especially effective, in conception and arrangement and there is the essence of Springtime in the blossoming laurel bushes, spotted with sunlight. There is a nice arrangement of peonies in a still life, and a large composition showing a woman and child on a bench in the open and another woman standing nearby has the charm of momentariness in expression and attitude.

Van Gogh at the Modern Gallery.

Van Gogh reigns supreme in a little show, now on at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave. Nothing disturbs the undoubted line quality of his work. Some dark wooden sculptures, simply enhance the brilliancy of his coloring. His accent is often sharp and sometimes harsh. Occasionally, however, there is serene repose, as in the masterly group of flowers thrown on a garden path, their colors somewhat faded in a petillating sunlight. There is a herring per contra, which has a savory look in its scales gleaming from the dark. Chief among the landscapes and shore scenes, is a roughly effective look over some poppy fields in France, with an excessively tormented sky. An old woman called "La Berceuse" is treated in a vigorous decorative manner. Messrs. Stieglitz and De Zayas are to be congratulated in presenting such an impressive little display of the late master's work.

DAVIS'S ALASKAN PICTURES.

The Alaska landscapes and coast scenes of Leonard Davis, who was awarded a silver medal at San Francisco, where he had 127 examples, have been frequently noticed in the ART NEWS when first shown at the Brandus galleries, New York, and afterwards elsewhere through the country. He excels in the rendition of the wonderful color effects, crystal clear atmosphere and grandeur of Alaskan scenery and climate, and paints them with rare sympathy and understanding.

The exhibitions of Mr. Davis's Alaskan pictures have attracted an attendance of over 100,000 people, during the sixteen months ending with April, 1914. More than 71,000, or an average of over 1,000 a day, attended the exhibitions at the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C., the American Museum of Natural History, N. Y. City, the Washington State Art Association Museum, the Seattle Public Library, and the Arctic Club, Seattle. During this period 53 oils were sold for $35 to $1,500 each, and among the purchasers were Mr. Wm. Jennings Bryan, Ambassador Ekengren of Sweden, Senator Wetmore, O. L. Dickeson, H. C. Hoover of London, Hennen Jennings of Washington, Frank Springer, Chas. H. Cobb and H. C. Henry of Seattle, the late Edward Wasserman, Dr. B. J. Macdonald and Morton L. Schwartz of New York. The Citizens of Seattle purchased one as a nucleus for a Municipal Art Gallery, and three for the Seattle Museum. Gov. Strong of Alaska and the Arctic Club were also purchasers.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

Pleasant Hunter Sale.

The first session of the sale of the collection of antique china, glass and Sheffield plate of Dr. Pleasant Hunter, of Newark, N. J., at the American Art Galleries on Nov. 18, totalled $5,282. Mr. Eben R. Lester gave $135 for a Syntax "historical blue" china fruit dish and tray. Mr. Seaman, agent, paid $125 for a Ch'ien-lung vase and $90 for a U. S. Capitol Staffordshire plate. Mr. A. Vernay secured a Bennington teapot for $95 and Mr. W. R. Hearst gave $80 for a dark blue plate showing an early Boston warehouse.

At the second session, Nov. 19, $5,282 was realized, making the total $10,720. Mr. Bernet, agent, gave $232 for a "silver resist" pitcher of 1914 with "The Blacksmith's Epitaph." Mrs. Payne paid $120 for an antique handmade rug. For two XVIII Century French mustard cups. Mr. W. D. Breaker gave $105. The same amount was given by Mrs. McAlpin for a "silver resist" flower holder. Mr. Edward W. Brun obtained for $100 a War of 1812 broadside. A "silver resist" set of plates and saucers went to Mr. Breaker at $96. Mrs. G. H. Hoyt paid $75 for a pair of flower pots and trays in pink lustre and Mrs. W. M. White the same amount for a posy holder with a ship decoration.

At the final session, held Nov. 20, Mr. Seaman, agent, gave $350 for the Mme. Recamier set of five "silver resist" vases. Mr. A. Vernay paid $200 for a miniature tea set, in splashed rose lustre. Mr. Seaman paid $170 for a Wedgwood rose lustre vase, $110 for a Leeds tea set, the same amount for a pair of splashed rose candlesticks, and $100 each for a pair of goblets of the same coloring, and a soft paste Worcester teapot. Mrs. J. E. Davis gave $160 for a pair of blue and yellow five-branched vases. For $110 Mrs. J. E. Waterbury secured a pair of five-fingered rose lustre vases. The total of the afternoon was $9,643.50, making a grand total for the sale of $19,964.50.

"Home, Sweet Home" Mss. $160.

At the opening of the sale Nov. 18, at the Anderson Galleries, of Part IV of the Burton library, Mr. George D. Smith secured for $160 the Mss. of "Home, Sweet Home," signed and dated by Payne Mar. 2, 1851. Mr. James F. Drake paid $110 for a rare Mass. Revolutionary broadside, Watertown, 1776; $92.50 for Marmaduke Stevenson's "A Call from Death," London, 1660; $77.50 for Haskett's "Shakerism Unmasked," Pittsfield, 1828, and $75 for Piranisi's "Antiche Romane." Mr. Smith gave $40 for the Tory poem "A Poor Man's Advice to His Neighbors," N. Y., 1774, and $37 for "The Yankee and Boston Literary Gazette," with poems by Poe. For Russell's "History of America," London, 1778, Mr. J. Atwater gave $30. The total of the session was $2,500.

Mr. Drake, at the session of Nov. 19, paid $265 for the original executor's account ledger of the estate of Washington, in which are the funeral items. Mr. George Smith gave $160 for Washington's overseers account book, 1786-1793, and $61 for his copy of Mackintosh's "Vindiciæ Gallicæ." The total of the session was $1,770 and the total to date, $24,268.

The sale of Part VIII, of the Joline library, began Monday, at the Anderson Galleries. Mr. W. J. Campbell, of Philadelphia, gave $170 for an extra-illustrated and autographed "Portraits of the Atty. Gen's, of the U. S.," with notes by Hildeburn, Phila., 1893. Mr. L. C. Hooper paid $125 for a letter of Benedict Arnold. Mr. Geo. D. Smith gave $70 for two letters of Gen. Nat'l Greene; $40 for a letter of Gen. Geo. Clinton, and $20 for a memo. of agreement for exchange of prisoners dated 1778. Mr. Jas. F. Drake paid $22 for the Mss. of Bryant's address on the genius of Burns.

On Tuesday Mr. George D. Smith paid $245 for a Mss. Notebook of Washington Irving, with lists of Indian tribes and other memos. He gave $55 for a letter of Gen. Chas. Lee and $45 for one and $43 for a second letter of Chancellor Livingston. The sale total was $1,461.

Nelson Library Sale.

At the opening of the sale at the American Art Galleries on Monday of the library of the late William Nelson, of Paterson, N. J., a quartermaster's receipt book with the autographs of nearly 500 Revolutionary officers and soldiers, at Morristown in 1780, brought $170. Mr. E. D. North paid $125 for a four-page letter of Hamilton and $50 for 95 pieces of colonial and continental currency. Mr. G. W. F. Mansfield gave $55 for a broadside in aid of an Indian charity school at Lebanon, Conn.

On Tuesday Mr. George D. Smith paid

$810 for the Acts and Laws of N. J., 1728. The N. Y. Genealogical Society purchased a set of its records for $155, and Mr. F. W. Morris gave $135 for 63 vols. of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register. For a militia ordinance of 1776, Mr. Smith paid $120. Mr. Morris paid $42.50 for an autograph of the signer, Benjamin Rush. The total of the four sessions was $11,364.

CARPETS AT SILO'S.

At a sale of Oriental carpets, Nov. 19, at Silo's Fifth Ave. Galleries, Mrs. Walter Damrosch gave $235 for a Kermanshah example with a rose field. Mr. J. P. Ryan gave $189 for an antique Melex rug; Mrs. Horace D. Smith $172.50 for a Tabriz example, Dr. A. S. Cole $117.50 for a Samarkand and Mr. Artemus Holmes $97 for a Chinese rug.

Capt. J. R. De Lamar gave $725 for a Savonnerie carpet at the close of the sale. Other purchasers were Messrs. W. O. Burbank, E. Walther, J. W. Hutchinson, O. B. Thomas, G. A. La Vie and G. H. Burbank.

Eugene and Thomas Kelly Sale.

Old and modern paintings, drawings, engravings, etchings, miniatures, silver, art properties, antiques and furniture collected by the late Eugene Kelly, and much of it removed from his quaint old English country place at Mitcham, near London, formerly occupied by Horace Walpole, and also the personal property of Mr. Thomas Kelly, will be placed on exhibition in the American Art Galleries today, and will be sold there at auction on Friday afternoon and evening next, Dec. 3.

Messrs. Eugene and Thomas Kelly have long been known among American art lovers and collectors as young men of unusually refined taste and judgment in art matters. They collected during a course of years, and until the untimely death of Eugene Kelly in 1913, as a pleasurable pursuit, and nothing more delighted these cultured brothers than the appreciation shown their treasures by their friends. "Wandle House" at Mitcham was really a little treasure box, an invitation to which was hailed with delight by Americans visiting London who could appreciate not only the fine old country house on the banks of the slow flowing Wandle river, and its dainty contents and furnishings, but the beautiful lawns, the spreading great trees, and especially the old time and old world garden in which Walpole himself was wont to wander.

So the coming exhibition and sale should and will have a large and appreciative audience, and there will be buyers also, who will wish mementoes of Eugene Kelly—a fine young soul, lost too early to his family and friends.

Egyptian Antiquities.

The large collection of Egyptian antiquities, made by Robert de Rustafjaell, during his residence of ten years in Egypt, is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, and will be sold in five afternoon and evening sessions beginning Monday afternoon next, Nov. 29. In predynastic specimens this collection is remarkable, the pottery and flint implements being numerous and unusually fine. One lot embraces a collection of 1,356 flints, many of the most delicate construction. Some of the pottery is said to be more than 7,000 years old. In 1905 Mr. Rustafjaell discovered at Deir El-Bahari, Thebes, what he believed to be the oldest painting on cloth in the world, representing the Goddess Hathor standing in a sacred bark with seven figures facing her in the act of veneration. This was reproduced in "The Light of Egypt," published by Kegan Paul in London, and also in Professor Naville's "Report on Deir El-Bahari" published by the Egyptian Exploration Fund in 1907, and is well known to the Egyptologists of this country and Europe.

Another interesting exhibit is a painting in wax, which is cataloged as being, in the opinion of Mr. Rustafjaell, the earliest known painting of a Christian subject. Some Pompeian frescoes exhibited at the Art Treasures Loan Exhibition in London, in 1862, at the Grosvenor Gallery, 1879, and at the National Museum, Dublin, 1913, are also in this collection, and there are some remarkable early sculptures.

Rare American Autographs.

An interesting autograph sale is that announced by the Anderson Galleries for the afternoons of Dec. 6-7. Mr. Henry Chapman, of Philadelphia, consigns 28 of the lots and the others come from private collectors. In Mr. Chapman's consignment are no less than 11 legal documents, wholly in the handwriting of Lincoln and all signed, some two or three times. These documents are from 1837 to 1858, covering three of Lincoln's legal partnerships, and comprise 26 pages in his autograph.

Mr. Chapman also consigns an unpublished letter by Washington, which discusses the disposition of Washington's mother's estate, written to Washington's sister. There are other Washington and Lincoln letters and documents, and among other rarities: Seven letters by Grant, ten by Washington Irving, six by Thackeray, four by Dickens, seven by Holmes, four by Longfellow, three by Ruskin, six by Motley, and five by Governor Bowdoin. There are important war letters by Schuyler, Gates and Burgoyne.

In an extremely interesting letter General Scott describes his interview with Lee just before the latter resigned from the army to join the Confederacy. There is also the letter which Hamilton wrote to Schuyler explaining his quarrel with Washington, and the letter that Jefferson wrote to Hamilton about the silver dollar. Autograph material of this character rarely comes up in a single sale.

Various First Editions.

In a collection of miscellaneous books, to be sold at the Anderson Galleries, on the afternoon and evening of Tuesday next, are first editions of leading American and English authors, among the items being Robert Bloomfield's copy of the rare first edition of Wordsworth's poems in boards, uncut; the first edition of Waller's poems and the first edition of Swinburne's "Dead Love," which has never been reprinted. The collection also contains the first edition of Coleridge's poems, with four of the earliest poems by Lamb, and the second edition of Lamb's poems, with poems by Coleridge not in the first edition. There is an autograph letter by Shelley, explaining his financial difficulties, and the original manuscript of a poem by him, signed twice.

Iridescent Glass and Necklaces.

A collection of iridescent glass vases and bottles of the Phoenician, Greek and Roman periods, made by Azeek Khayat of New York, with beautiful necklaces of Egyptian semi-precious stones, beads and scarabs, choice specimens of Persian pottery, and other antiquities is now on exhibition at The Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale on the afternoons of Friday and Saturday next. Mr. Khayat guarantees the genuineness of every specimen, and says that though this is the smallest collection he has ever offered at auction it is the finest, and he does not expect to have another collection till some time after the close of the war in Europe. Most of the specimens of iridescent glass come from Mr. Khayat's own finds in Syria.

Artistic Furniture Sale.

Artistic furniture and furnishings, including some fine Flemish tapestries, old rugs, a Renaissance marble doorway, mantels and over mantels, and wall panelling of old Italian carved Renaissance oak, the property of a number of private owners and some estates, will form a combination sale at the American Art Galleries on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 4. The articles will be on exhibition in the galleries from today until date of sale.

An Artist At Work.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

"Art without work is guilt.
"Work without Art is Crime."

Dear Sir—An Artist who does not possess a love for Art for Art's Sake and persistence beyond the average man, may possibly do good works, but not great ones.

To conceive a picture and carry it to a successful termination, is a greater feat than winning a battle on the field, in the Senate, or the Stock Exchange. Composition, which is the principal part of the invention of an artist, is one of the greatest difficulties he has to encounter, which accounts, perhaps, for the want of balance in the canvases of so many modern painters. Every artist who can paint at all can execute individual parts; but to keep those parts in due subordination as relative to a whole, requires a comprehensive view of art that implies genius, more strongly perhaps, than any other quality.

The layman believes that the life of the Artist is an easy going one; that he always paints masterly a few hours each day, and, "presto" the thing is done. But that is the exception to the rule.

Often an idea comes to an Artist in a most unexpected manner. Not always in the quiet of his studio—but on the street car, in a restaurant, or at the opera. A few hasty strokes of the pencil on the spot, and armed with his newly-born idea, he rushes to his studio, where with youthful enthusiasm, mingled with no little excitement, the idea is fixed upon canvas—a composition, showing the massing of chiaroscuro, the color-scheme, and lastly (contrary to accepted canons) the attitude, gestures, and number of the figures—giving the thought to be expressed.

Ah, what joy! what ecstasy! What bliss! The world outside has ceased to exist,—at least it is of little consequence to him.

After perhaps several days of preparation, a large canvas is begun, with models to pose for the beautiful images of his fancy.

"Then let the virgin canvas smooth expand,
To claim the sketch and tempt the Artist's hand."

As the work proceeds, his ardor sometimes begins to cool. One by one his cherished ideals vanish; the great qualities he was so sure of, disappear; all is dark without and within. What anguish! what sleepless nights! Vague imagery mocks and derides him, hinting of a mistaken calling. Then it is that a determination to succeed is evoked.

He knows that the world's great painters have produced their best results in passing through this same struggle to express with limited human means (brush and paint) what the soul feels. He also knows that God never gave a man a desire, without making it possible for him to accomplish it. So he recommences. He alters the shape or this mass to balance that one. He changes the color of a group to repeat or foil the same color elsewhere. His work takes on new life and interest, and again becomes a pleasure, and while he may reach the "finishing touches" without having expressed all that is within his ever-broadening vision, he will, nevertheless, have produced a great work, because it echoes the ring of an Artist's Soul, it is aflame with his innermost passion, and breathes the spirit of the Divine in Nature.

Yours truly,

Thomas R. Congdon.

New York, Nov. 22, 1915.

Stock Frames Again.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Referring to an article on "stock frames" for museum exhibitions, which to me is on a par with "stock costumes" for people invited to the receptions; would it not be wiser, if it's desirable to avoid insurance, etc., on frames, to have exhibited canvases shown with a simple half-inch binding of dull black rather than frames. I've always felt an exhibition would gain much by having pictures shown without frames and sold without them. Ther when the collector obtains the pictures, the frames will be supplied and be in perfect condition. I cannot imagine a frame for a Henri being put on a Dewing, or one for a Symons being put on a Murphy. Each picture requires individual treatment as to framing, and the ideal framing is had when the artist makes his own frame, no matter how simple, at the time he makes the picture, as was done in the time of the old masters. When the ideal is not possible or desirable for some reason as is now spoken of, I should think eliminations of frames would be far preferable to putting all kinds of pictures into the same frames. There is a dignity in "nothing" that "something" sometimes lacks.

Mary L. Macomber.

ART VERSUS AFFINITY.

It is strange how very moral are the guardians of American frontiers. If one is not prim one can't get in, but once in one can do very much what one pleases, if one don't interfere with the interstate commerce law and engage in the white slave traffic. Prof. Elia Velpix Volpi, who arrived Nov. 17 from Italy with some attributed Titians, a Francia, a XV century bronze group by Riccio called "Perfume," accompanied by a woman said to be another man's wife, and was detained with her at Ellis Island and both were ordered deported as undesirable aliens. The Washington authorities, however, it is said, on the representations of the Italian Embassy, reversed the decision of the Ellis Island board and permitted Prof. Volpi and his companion, who is said to be his secretary, to land.

INSTITUTE'S NEW MEMBERS.

THE LATE FRANK T. SABIN.

"A great adventurer in the purchase of old and famous manuscripts and art treasures has died in Mr. Frank T. Sabin, the well-known dealer.

"His last transaction was that of the Browning love-letters, which he bought at Sotheby's for £6,500, but one of his most sensational deals was that of the Nelson memoranda of the disposition of the Fleet at Trafalgar.

"These, written in the admiral's own hand, he might have re-sold at a profit of 100 per cent., but he announced that he would part with the memoranda at cost price on the understanding that the documents should be presented to the nation on the death of the purchaser.

"The memoranda were eventually sold to Mr. Woollan, of Tunbridge Wells, for £3,600. Mr. Woollan had the manuscript framed in oak taken from the Victory, and it is now in the British Museum.

"The original manuscript of 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' the only complete Dickens manuscript not in a museum or a private collection, was among Mr. Sabin's last purchases. He heard that it was in the possession of a London dealer, but knew that if he attempted a deal in person he would be charged an inflated sum. So he sent a deputy.

"When the 'ambassador' arrived, an American dealer was making negotiations for the same work. The American attempted to 'bluff' by pulling out a large wad of notes, some hundreds of pounds short of the sum asked, with the idea that the mere sight of money in bulk would 'talk' sufficiently.

"But while the higgling was in progress Mr. Sabin's deputy quietly wrote out a check for a larger sum—and won by a head."—London News.

NOTES OF ART AND ARTISTS.

John de Costa, an English artist, who occupied Mrs. Harry Watrous' studio in the Gainsborough during the summer, has temporarily taken Colin Campbell Cooper's studio in the same building. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have gone to San Francisco, where the former is to execute an order.

Mr. John Fry is having a pipe organ installed in his studio at the Gainsborough.

R. W. Van Boskerck just returned from Delhi, N. Y., where he has been painting landscapes since spring.

C. C. Coleman, one of the older American painters and an associate of the National Academy of Design, has returned after an eight year sojourn in Italy and temporarily taken a studio in the Sherwood Building, 58 W. 57 St. In the near future he will hold in New York, Boston and Buffalo exhibitions of his recent works, which include large religious paintings, pastels of picturesque Capri and many pictures of Vesuvius and vicinity.

Harry W. Watrous is at work on an interesting new composition called "Strictly Confidential."

Miss Lilla Elizabeth Dielman, daughter of Frederick Dielman, chief of the Art Dept of the College of the City of N. Y., and former president of the Nat'l Academy, was married Monday to Mr. Murray Pinchot Corse, son of the late Gen. John Murray Corse, Chief of Staff in the Civil War of Gen. Sherman.

The sculptor Cadorn of this city is to model for the subject, Signor Caruso, an ivory bust.

Frank Tenney Johnson, who shows in his pictures a remarkably truthful realization of the clear night atmosphere of the West, will expose, this season, new phases of Mexican life, including a charmingly Juarez street scene.

In the Arnot Gallery at Elmira there is on during the month an exhibition of photographs by Karl Struss, Clarence H. White, Edward R. Dickson and Paul L. Anderson.

C. Bertram Hartman has returned to his N. Y. studio and resumed his decorative work. Mr. Hartman's recent canvases, shown at the Montross Galleries attracted attention to this talented young Westerner whose German art training proved of great value in developing an original decorative style.

Wayman Adams of Indianapolis won the Mary R. T. Foulke prize for the most meritorious painting by an Indiana artist at this year's exhibit of the Richmond (Ind.) Art Association.

An exhibition of the work of Coulton Waugh, which is on at Bruno's Garret, 58 Washington Square, is of interest. Wierdly fantastic and decidedly decorative are his tinted pen drawings of serpents and strange creatures of his imagination.

An exhibition of oils by H. F. Waltman, including portraits and subject pictures, also landscapes and marines with much of nature in them, combined with an exhibition of sculptures by W. Dryden Paddock, is on at the Salmagundi Club to Dec. 3.

Van Dearing Perrine is showing to Nov. 28 some of his imaginative canvases at his Studio Under the Palisades—which can be reached by way of Dyckman Street Ferry. His is an original phase of the Modernist Movement and the pictures including "Wind in the Boughs," "Dancing Figures," "Little Girl Swinging," "Gathering Blossoms," and numerous landscapes and flower pictures, are well worth the trip one takes to see them. 25 cents admission is charged.

James King, the well-known etcher, who has been giving his time recently largely to landscape painting, has returned from Gloucester to Montclair.

Henry Clews, Jr., has given up his house and studio at 145 E. 19 St. to paint in Paris, despite the war.

M. Roger Boutet de Monvel, painter and playwright, who was wounded in France, arrived recently from Paris.

The art loving public, as well as the friends of Henry Mosler, who fractured his skull last week, by falling from a street car, will be pleased to learn that he is on the road to recovery at the German Hospital.

SCULPTOR WINS HIS CASE.

In Harrisburg, Pa., on Wed., the sculptor Donato secured a verdict of $23,941 against Mr. Milton S. Hershey for a statue "The Dance of Eternal Spring," which the latter immediately gave to that city.

WITH THE DEALERS

Messrs. Joseph and Henry Duveen, of Fifth Ave., and 46 St., returned from Europe Wed. on the Ryndam, bringing several pictures and objects of art. The latter said that the purchaser of Earl Spencer's portrait by Rembrandt of his son Titus was the famous English collector, Sir Frederick Cooke.

Miss Johnson, formerly of the Cottier galleries, is now with Mr. Stefan Bourgeois at his galleries, 668 Fifth Ave.

R. C. and N. M. Vose, of Boston, have purchased a majority of the stock of the Carrig-Rohane Shop (Inc.). Hermann Dudley Murphy, the well-known artist, and founder of the shops, will retain his interest and continue to direct the artistic side of the work.

Some four hundred photographs were placed on exhibition Nov. 19 at Wanamaker's, being the best of the examples submitted in the recent competition.

Three sets of prizes were awarded. In the portrait class the first prize went to Miss Alice Boughton, for a nude child holding a crystal, and second to M. R. Witt, of Philadelphia, for a study of a head. In the landscape class the first prize went to Mr. Witt and second prize to Melvin S. Wells, of Jersey City. In the miscellaneous class the first prize was won by R. B. M. Taylor, of Newark, and the second by Charles P. Abs, of Hoboken. The exhibition is on to the end of the month.

COPLEYS IN BROOKLYN.

(By the Second Viewer.)

In the awakened cause of early American painting the Brooklyn Museum has made a significant step. The acquisition by purchase for the permanent collection of a portrait by John Singleton Copley, the handsome portrait of Mrs. Benjamin Davis, is an incident worthy of more than passing notice.

While Brooklyn is to be congratulated in this acquisition, it is a matter for deep regret that this fine specimen of the art of Copley should not have been obtained by the Metropolitan Museum, whose collections, as has been pointed out in the ART NEWS, are wanting in fine examples of early American masters, and especially representative examples of Copley.

The Brooklyn Copley, the portrait of Mrs. Davis, is in every respect a superior canvas. It contains, to a marked degree, that "psychological" element which keen students are wont to find in the finer portraits by America's great Colonial "limner." The patrician beauty of this lady well befits the daughter of the Royal High Sheriff who used all the power of his office to "put down" the rebellious factions of Revolutionary Boston; the aristocratic spirit breathes from every line—the sensitive delicate nostrils, the pretty but firm lips, the beautifully curved chin, the open brow and clear eyes. No portrait of a noblewoman by Gainsboro or Sir Joshua or indeed by Van Dyke himself, has a finer poise of head or a more imperious line of shoulder. The dignity of this noble portrait is enhanced by the repressed coloration, combining richness and depth and that intense dryness which is the secret of the "carrying" power of Copley's color.

"The American Van Dyke," as Copley has often been called, is true to this title in this portrait of a lady whose distinctions were many.

Mrs. Davis was also distinguished as the fond mentor of a niece who became the wife of the great colonial architect Bullfinch.

The two other Copley portraits now hanging in the Brooklyn Museum (as loans) are of great interest. The portrait of the boy Jonathan De Mountfort, an early work which proclaims the precocity of Copley as extraordinary as that of Mozart, is invaluable to those students who would know the characteristics of Copley's youthful genius; while the portrait of Mrs. John Bacon (Elizabeth Cummings) is a fine product of the prolific year of 1769; the year that gave us the masterly full-length of Col. Jeremiah Lee (Boston Museum).

Our mediocre modern portraitists, who ask fancy sums for their canvases may be amused to know that Copley received for the fine portrait of Mrs. Bacon £9 16s., or about $50. In an extant bill, made out and receipted in his own hand, we see that for this portrait and two others, namely, the McWhorter portraits (at Yale University Museum), Copley received, after "throwing in" two black frames, only £31. And yet he was Boston's fashionable portraitist and

Brooklyn hangs its Copley's in places of honor. Nearby is John Trumbull's "Gibraltar," a composition which Trumbull painted in England while a pupil of West, a canvas doubtless inspired by the enormous picture of the same subject which Copley painted for the Corporation of London and which hangs today in London Guild Hall, the third unit of that famous historical trilogy dedicated by Copley to the British nation—"The Death of Chatham" (National Gallery), "The Death of Major Pierson" (National Gallery), and the "Victory at Gibraltar."

NEW ART MUSEUMS.

Oberlin College, Ohio, is to build a $165,000 art museum, to house the collection of paintings and art objects left by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Olney of Cleveland. A meeting of public spirited citizens of Lexington, Ky., has been called to decide on the establishment of an art museum.

EDGAR WORCH NOT DEAD.

The report of the death at the front, with the German army, of Mr. Edgar Worch of Worch and Co., of Paris and New York, published in the ART NEWS of Sept. 18 last, on good authority, proves to have been erroneous. The same issue contained the obituary notice of the death in Paris of Mr. Adolphe Worch, uncle of Mr. Edgar Worch, and this last news was correct.

FRENCH ART AT PITTSBURGH.

The Carnegie Institute, through Director Beatty, who is now in San Francisco, has arranged with Mr. Jean Guiffrey, Commissioner of Fine Arts for France, for the exhibition of the entire collection of paintings now in the French Section at the S. F. Exposition, numbering about 250, at Pittsburgh, during May and June next.

The Carnegie Institute, in co-operation with the American Federation of Arts, planned, early in the Summer, a more general exhibition to represent the art of the various nations, in a comprehensive but small collection, which collection it was anticipated would go to several important cities. It was discovered, however, that to withdraw from the French Section 32 important paintings for which orders had been received, would materially interfere with a plan providing for the exhibition of the entire French Section in Chicago, St. Louis, Buffalo and other cities, under the management of the Albright Art Gallery, and, therefore, the original plan was abandoned, and the agreement, providing for the exhibition at Pittsburgh was substituted.

PHILA.'S MUSEUM PLANNED.

While Mr. Joseph E. Widener, son of the late financier and art collector, and executor of his estate, has not made public his intentions regarding the Widener collection, much of which he personally aided in assembling, and may not take any steps for at least a year, according to the statement of Ellis Ames Ballard, attorney for his father: Philadelphia's chances for becoming the permanent home of the collection are bright, according to friends who were close to the late P. A. B. Widener.

During the latter years of his life, they say, he was intensely interested in the proposed Philadelphia museum and as a member of the Park Commission was one of those who fostered the project. Many of his ideas were incorporated in the first plans at the time they were drawn up. This is pointed out as significant, in that it is regarded improbable by his friends that he would display such concern over the details of the building and its site unless he contemplated housing at least a part of his magnificent collections in the galleries.

The site of the proposed building on the eminence overlooking the Green Street entrance to Fairmont Park was selected by Mr. Widener, who visualized the spot as the future head of the Parkway.

ANOTHER "EXPERT" WAR DUE?

Prof. Elia Volpi, who recently brought from Italy two works he attributes to Titian, values them, it is said, at $500,000. The Government in the person of Mr. John R. Hecht, thinks they are of the school of Titian simply, and appraises them at $500 each. Mr. Hecht, however, values a bronze XIII Century perfume vase by Riccio at $80,000. The professor says Mr. J. P. Morgan made an offer for it a few days before he died. The works were allowed to enter duty free, as over 100 years old.

ROOSEVELT, ART CRITIC.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt visited the Immigrant in America competition exhibition, in Mrs. H. P. Whitney's studio, 8 W. 8 St., on Thursday. In his remarks he aptly gave the jury a tip that immigrants were not necessarily models for gargoyles. He, however, was pleased with the first award to Benjamino Bufano.

OLD HARTFORD CITY HALL.

The agitation in Hartford, Conn., against the proposed demolition of the old City Hall, formerly the State Capitol, grows apace. The well known portrait painter, Charles Noel Flagg, a resident of Hartford, is taking a warm personal interest in the matter.

BODE FINDS TITIAN?

In reporting his recent visit to Vienna, Dr. Bode has called attention to a "Murder of Lucretia—by Tarquin" apparently by Titian, whose name is attached to the picture. This work has lain in the store room of the Vienna Academy, having been acquired some six years ago for the equivalent of $800, but not having been exhibited until the late rearrangement of the Academy's collection of old masters. It bears no relation to the painting of the same subject in the Court Museum.

CHARLES L. FREER ILL HERE.

The many friends of Mr. Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, and the art loving public will be grieved to learn that he is seriously ill at the Hotel Plaza. He is under the care of throat specialists.

BOUGHT ALTHORP REMBRANDT.

(By Cable to the AMERICAN ART NEWS.)
London, Nov. 29, 1915.

Herbert F. Cook bought a Rembrandt portrait of his son, Titus, sold by Earl S. Cener from Althorp House, and it is now installed in Doughty House, his father, Sir Frederick Cook's home, at Richmond on Thames.

BOUGHT NO RHEIMS SCULPTURE.

The weird story that Mr. Alfred I. Du Pont of Wilmington had bought an angel's head with a divine smile from Rheims cathedral has been dignified by denials by M. A. Dalimier, the French Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts and Mr. Du Pont himself through his secretary. Mr. Dalimier believed the actual "Divine Smile" has been destroyed by a sacrilegious German shell, but the latest advices are that it has been patched up.

REMARKABLE ART VERDICT.

The most remarkable verdict ever given by a jury, as to the value of a work of art, where there was no contract as to price, was that of $23,941 awarded, as recorded in last week's ART NEWS, at Harrisburg, Pa., to the sculptor, Giuseppe Donato, and against Mr. Milton S. Hershey, the "Chocolate King," for a fountain with three nude female figure called "The Dance of Eternal Spring." The sculptor had already been paid $2,000.

The case was tried before Judge S. J. M. McCarrell. Two "experts" were called, Albert Jaegers, the sculptor of the Steuben monument in Washington and the Pastorius monument in Germantown, Pa., and Mr. Charles Henry Hart. The former testified that the work was worth $20,000, to which should be added the cost of casting the bronze of the figures and getting out the stonework of the fountain. Mr. Hart testified that he considered the value of the fountain $30,000, in its completed form as a work of art. The fountain in question, is 13 ft. high with a basin of 21 ft. in circumference, while one which Mr. Hershey rejected was 7 ft. high with a circumference of 12 ft. It is said that he wanted to pay the same price for the large fountain, which is very elaborate and handsome, as he agreed to pay for the small one which he did not consider large enough and of suitable fashion.

The sculptor is a graduate of the Pa. Academy and won a foreign scholarship. He is a pupil of Rodin. The fountain was intended for Hershey Park. It consists of three female figures, "Spring," "Summer" and "Autumn," dancing. Mr. Hershey, who after the verdict, presented the fountain to the City of Harrisburg, as he said it would make him mad to look at it, claims it was to cost but $3,100.

FREER ON NATIONAL GALLERY.

The Phila. Public Ledger recently sent telegrams to owners of notable art collections in this country, asking their opinion on a plan by which collectors would donate their art treasures to a national gallery in some large city, where separate exhibits could be housed in various wings of one large building.

The following is the reply received from Mr. Charles L. Freer, of Detroit:

Editor Public Ledger:
Sir: Answering your inquiry, I already have given my art collection to the National Gallery of Art and intend soon to erect in Washington a suitable building in which to exhibit it permanently. I would like to see additional privately acquired art collections of high quality presented to the National Gallery and exhibited permanently in one large building, or in smaller buildings, as circumstances might require. The buildings should include ample study rooms for the exclusive use of serious students. Every progressive art student would approve of an independent building for the superb Widener treasures, wherever they may be permanently exhibited.
Charles L. Freer.
Detroit, Nov. 24.

THE SLASHER IN NEW YORK.

Like "Jack the Ripper," "Jenny the Slasher," also of London, has emulators on this side of the ocean. August J. Lukeman, sculptor, of 145 W. 55 St., reports that Monday night, a picture by Verestchagin, "Night, My Campfire in the Himalayas," valued at $2,500, owned by him, and left temporarily outside his studio, was slashed in several places. He offers a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the slasher, whether a suffragette, a vandal, or a hun. It might be suggested to Mr. Lukeman that a hallway, more or less of a thoroughfare, is a rather poor place to leave a valuable picture, even if alterations were going on in his studio. He states that it was his intention to present the canvas either to the Brooklyn Museum or a Richmond, Va., gallery.

TWO MUSEUM PICTURES MISSING.

The dailies, have some of them been making a great to do, about two pictures missing since September from the collection, loaned recently by the Metropolitan Museum, to the Municipal Art Gallery in the Washington Irving High School. The pictures, Willem Van Mieris, "The Tipper" and Barend Gael's "The Hog Market," were among the 75 sent by the museum, and their loss was discovered when the works were returned there. The evening papers reported the pictures worth $50,000, while the morning ones cut off two naughts. The police found them Wednesday in the hands of an innocent purchaser.

Cincinnati artists turned out en masse Nov. 20 to do honor to Frank Duvenceck, Jas. R. Hopkins and Chas. Kaelin, at a dinner given under the auspices of the Art Club to celebrate the distinctions gained by these artists at San Francisco.

BEAUX ARTS SCULPTURE PRIZES.

The prizes, in a competition, organized by the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, assisted by the Nat'l Sculpture Society of Young Sculptors, for a Memorial Day monument, were awarded Tuesday night at the Beaux Arts club house, 126 E. 75 St., where the designs are on view. The first prize went to Saul Baizerman and the second to Aaron Goodelman. The other final competitors, after a preliminary competition, were Pietro Manfredi, Albert H. Atkins, Paul Herzel and Gaetano Cecere.

The jury of architects and sculptors was composed of Herbert R. Brewster, Solon Borglum, Edward McSarten, Charles Keck, Robert L. Aitken, John Flanagan, E. W. Keyser, Sherry E. Fry, George W. Breck, A. Bloodgood Tuttle, John Duncan, William Emerson, J. Russell Pope, William N. Taylor and Lloyd Warren.

The Society of Beaux Arts architects, which maintains special classes in architecture and sculpture at its well equipped clubhouse, has a special fund for the encouragement of young architects, as well as young sculptors and painters.

KARL BITTER MEMORIAL.

The Highwood Engine Co. of Weehawken, at a meeting Nov. 26, presided over by Henry Reuterdaahl, decided to erect a fountain memorial, of the late Karl Bitter, to be designed by his assistant, Karl Gerlach. The sum of $1,500 is to be raised for the work, which will be of pink Tennessee marble, 9 ft. high and 4 ft. broad. The design will be submitted for approval, to the American Sculptors' Society, and the Architectural League.

SPAIN OBJECTS TO ART EXPORTS.

Mr. F. Kleinberger, of the Kleinberger Galleries, 709 Fifth Ave., who with his son-in-law, Mr. Emil Sperling, lately with the French army, recently returned from Europe, announces that he bought in Spain from a nobleman, a collection of old masters. This was for some time held there by the Gov't, which does not allow the export of any work "dedicated to public use." The pictures include a Rubens painted there, a "Holy Family" by Greco, a Goya and a Gerard David.

ANDREWS' PICTURE SALE.

The coming months of midwinter will bring an almost unprecedented number of important art auctions—and especially of pictures. Announcement has already been made of the coming dispersal of the remainder of the stock of pictures left by Theron J. Blakeslee at his untimely death in March, 1913, of the large collection of paintings, chiefly by and attributed to old masters, formed by Mr. Catholina Tamburt Paterson, N. J., and of the also large and superior collection of modern American and foreign pictures, formed by the late Hugo Reisinger.

It is now further announced that the administrators of the estate of J. R. Andrews have arranged for the dispersal at auction, probably in January, of his collection of modern American and foreign pictures, and old Oriental porcelains and rugs.

Mr. Andrews' assemblage of modern Americans has long been considered one of the best in the country. It includes the following artists and their respective examples: Winslow Homer, "Eagles' Nest," "Hudson River, Adirondacks" and "Burnt Mountain"; Albert P. Ryder, "Pegasus"; H. W. Ranger, "Looking Toward Noank from Mason's Island"; R. A. Blakelock, "Gypsy Encampment," "Wooded Glade," "Moonlight," "View Near Navarre Ridge, Cal.," "Indian Camp at Twilight" and "Portrait of Mrs. Blakelock"; W. Gedney Bunce, several views in Venice; Charles H. Davis, "Road to the Village," "Autumn Landscape," "Melting Clouds," "A Windy Day in October" and "Wind Swept Fields"; L. P. Desjar, "Shepherd and Flock"; H. G. Dearth, "Village Church"; C. W. Hawthorne, "Arrangement in Yellow"; John La Farge, "Peasant Girl and Horse"; W. L. Lathrop, "Old Farm, Primrose Valley"; R. C. Minor, "Near Niantic on the Sound," and F. B. Williams, "Diana and Minerva," "Grey Day, Orr's Island" and "A Day in June."

There are among works by modern Dutch, French and English artists the following: "Old Church at Katwyck," by Blommers; "Dutch Children" and "The Midday Meal" by Kever; "The Old Mill" and "Interior of a Barn," by Mauve; "Little Fisherman," by A. Neuhuys; "Shell Fishermen," by Pieters; "Sheep in Meadow," by Ter Meulen; "Sand Dunes," by Wiley; "Child Picking Daisies," by Artz; "Oriental Figure," by Diaz; "Autumn Evening in Sologne," by Rousseau; "On the Beach at Katwyck," "Barnyard in Holland" and "Dutch Scene," by Weissenbruch; "A Village," by Vollon; "Day Dreams," "A Country Road" and "Figure Subject," by Monticelli, and examples of Dupre, Richet, Henner, Ribot, Bellows and others.

The porcelains comprise specimens from the Deming Jarves, W. M. Laffan, Baron Speck von Sternburg, Henry Graves and other collections.

There are some 50 antique Oriental rugs and these include a fine Ghiordes and beautiful Bergama, Ladick, Ispahan, Chinese, Fereghan, Daghestan, Mosoul, Mir Serebend, Koula and other old weaves.

SALES TO COME AND PAST.*Egyptian Relics Sold.

At the opening sessions, Monday afternoon and evening, at the Anderson Galleries, of the Rustafjaell collection of Egyptian antiquities, $2,700 was realized. Mr. S. L. Sherer paid $225, for an ebony figure of the goddess, "Ptah," represented as a mummy. Mr. W. T. Wallace gave $105, for a basalt head of Rameses the Great. Mr. J. Quinn secured for $85, a 3,000-year-old painting on panel, of one Egyptian prince, and Mr. V. G. Hammer for $70 a mummy case for another. Mr. Quinn paid $37.50 for some Greek heads in terra-cotta, blackstone, and limestone, and Arthur B. Davies, the painter $35 for a statuette of Maut wearing the crown of Upper and Lower Egypt.

On Tuesday a sculptured stele from a Theban tomb fetched $160 from Mr. Sherer. Mr. J. W. Ellison gave $153 for a group of ancient pottery lamps and Mr. W. T. Walter $112 for a number of vari-tongue inscriptions on limestone pottery, papyrus and paper, $45 for a relief head with hieroglyphics and $40 for a collection of scarabs and trophies. To Mr. A. K. Kuhn went for $52 a stele carved with figures. The total of the day was $2,396.

On Wednesday Mr. G. Maurice Heckscher gave $1,700 for what is claimed to be the oldest painting in the world on canvas showing the goddess Hathor as a cow and a King of the II. dynasty. The same buyer also gave $1,400 for a collection of 1,356 Egyptian flints. For a lion cut out of limestone from the palace of Rameses III. Mr. C. B. Timkin gave $460. Mr. H. K. Kevorkian paid $310 for an early picture in colored wax with Saints Raphael, Michael and Gabriel. The total of the session was $7,354.25, and of the sale $12,530.75.

The prices ruled very low, as the art sold is not generally understood in this country. given by Mrs. E. C. Gale. M. C. Wells.

Sale of Oriental Art.

The large and fine collection of Oriental art belonging to Madame Yang-shi and recently brought from China, is now on exhibition in the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale in seven afternoon and evening sessions, beginning Wed. afternoon next, Dec. 8. The collection embraces old Chinese lacquers, ivories, bronzes and brasses, snuff bottles, jades, carvings, crystals, porcelains, enamels and rugs.

The most valuable item in the collection is a black hawthorn vase, a fine specimen of the Chien Lung period, with decorations in green, yellow and aubergine enamel on a black ground, and another remarkable piece is a hanging vase of the same period. An egg-shell vase, the entire surface coated with rose-du-Barry glaze, has the imperial Yung Chieng mark. A pair of beautiful vases, assigned to the Han period, are coated with rich green glaze and covered with silver iridescence.

A sacrificial vase with coiled dragon and figure decorations carved on the surface, of light celadon belongs to the Sung period. A bronze bell, the entire surface coated with verdis green patina, is a rare specimen of the Chou dynasty (1122-255 B. C.). Among the rugs is a fine one (six feet by four) of the Chien Lung period, with conventional peony and Dog Foo decoration. The ivories, porcelains and jades in this collection are of unusually high quality.

Sale of Objects of Art.

A miscellaneous sale is announced by the Anderson Galleries for the afternoons of Dec. 17 and 18, of Oriental porcelains, iridescent glass, rugs, prints, embroideries, bronzes, and carvings. The material will go on public exhibition Dec. 11.

Pictures and Porcelains at Silos.

At the opening of a sale at Silo's galleries, on the evening of Nov. 27, of pictures belonging to the estates of Ermina J. Proal and E. A. Raymond 104 examples brought $3,780. The Holland Galleries gave $305 for Jourdain's "Innocence," and $205 for Carpenter's "The Shepherdess." Mr. W. L. Coughlin paid $240 for Detti's "The Hunt" and $80 for two watercolors by Simonetti. Mr. Stachelberg gave $175 for Hernandez's "In the Garden."

In the afternoon Chinese porcelains and teakwood furniture fetched $2,005. Mr. He Chong Yum paid $95 for a pair of powder blue club shaped vases and Mr. G. S. McDonald $40 for a teakwood cabinet. A pair of teak chairs fetched $54.

At the final session Saturday evening Mr. Bartlett Arkell gave only $20 for the Sir Frederick Leighton palette and $105 for a landscape by Edward Gay. Prinz Bros. paid $310 for Detti's "The Elopement." Mr. H. D. G. Rohlf's $260 for Verboekhoven and Klombeck's; J. O'Brien, agt., $250 for a landscape by Van Boskerck, and Mr. W. L. Coughlin, $190 for Berne-Bellecour's "Officer of Cavalry." The total for the session was $4,986, and of the two picture sessions $8,766.

On Saturday afternoon a collection of Chinese coins fetched $200 from Mr. Bernard Caer. The total of the afternoon was $4,279, and of the Oriental sale $6,284.

Paintings to be Sold.

A collection of important paintings and watercolors by American and foreign artists will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries to-day. Some of the paintings are consigned by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Osborn of Milwaukee and E. L. Blossom of New York, but most of them come from the executors of the estate of the later James C. Fargo. The most important examples are by Verboekhoven, Thaulow, and Cazin.

Old and Modern Print Sale.

A collection of prints which goes on exhibition Wed. next at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale Dec. 14 and 15, contains Pennell's famous Panama set, colored prints by Wilson, fine examples of the work of Haig, Cameron, and other etchers, and some very rare N. Y. views. Among the latter is a watercolor drawing of the Sub-treasury by Alexander Jackson David, the architect, dated June, 1834, showing the building with a dome.

Joline Sale Ends.

At the final session, Nov. 24, at the Anderson Galleries of the Joline sale, Mr. G. D. Smith, gave $120 for a Washington letter, and Mr. Thomas Bell, $101 for a despatch signed by Gen. Wolfe. The day's total was $1,202.70, for Part VIII $3,514, and the grand total for the 8 parts of the sale $62,346.65.

Recent London Sales.

At Christie's, in London, Dec. 1, the first session of a sale of Oriental porcelains was held and totalled $15,000. Mr. Simons bought for $1,050 a Queen Anne needlework carpet. Mr. King secured for $790 an Elizabethan oak sideboard, and Mr. Gregory gave $551 for a panel of Brussels tapestry.

On the second day, Dec. 1, of the sale at Knight, Frank and Rutley's of the Raglan Collection, the family gave $4,200 for Lawrence's drawing of "The Three Mornington Sisters." Lady Mead paid $1,050 for a drawing by Downman of "Lord Raglan and His Brother as Children." The sales of the session realized nearly $50,000.

A recent sale at Sothebys, London, dispersed several collections, of especial interest to Americans, including the originals of famous Punch drawings by Sir John Tenniel anent the Monroe Doctrine; some piquant souvenirs left by Mrs. Bernard Beere; a racy letter by Oscar Wilde describing his lecture at Leadville, and one of his "De Profundis" missives written from prison; also a mass of genealogical data of American families and their English forbears, collected by the late Lothrop Withington, who went down on the Lusitania.

OBITUARY.*Gustave C. Langenberg.

Gustave C. Langenberg, portrait painter and illustrator, who had been three times around the world, and before the war maintained studios in Paris and Dusseldorf, as well as at 106 W. 55 St., died on Nov. 27 at St. Mark's Hospital in Second Ave. He was 65 years old and is survived by a niece and grandniece. Born in Dusseldorf, of a French mother and a father who was an Italian subject, he studied art in Paris, and in Germany and Holland. During the Boer war, he was with the British forces, as artist correspondent, and found time to paint a number of pictures. Among the portraits he did later are those of the German Emperor, Queen Wilhelmina, Queen Alexandra of England, the Queen of Spain, former Princess Louise of Saxony, Presidents Loubet and Wilson, and Sarah Bernhardt. He had commissions to paint for the British Gov't portraits of the principal Indian princes and was also to portray Geraldine Farrar, Emily Destinn and it is said Mr. Henry C. Frick. Mr. Langenberg was once connected with the Cologne museum. He usually travelled about Europe and elsewhere on horseback, and when in Mexico was intimate with Pres't Diaz.

Mme. Adele Gimpel.

Mme. Adele Gimpel, widow of the well known and greatly esteemed Ernest Gimpel, of the firm of E. Gimpel and Wildenstein, who died suddenly and sadly of diphtheria in this city, some eight years ago, and the mother of Mr. Rene Gimpel of the firm, who is now at the front with the French army, died in Paris Nov. 27 last, after a long illness, aged fifty-three. Mme. Gimpel was Mlle. Wildenstein and a very charming and cultivated woman. The many friends of her late husband and her son, both in Paris and New York are greatly saddened by her loss, and every sympathy is expressed for her son, with whom, until his marriage to Miss Duveen two years ago, she lived in a large and handsome apartment on the Champs Elysees, Paris.

James B. Sword.

James Brade Sword, one of the founders of the Philadelphia Art Club, died suddenly on Tuesday last, Nov. 30, 1915, of heart disease, at his home in Phila.

Mr. Sword was born in Phila. Oct. 11, 1839. After his graduation from the Central High School, in 1856, he devoted his attention to art, and soon achieved distinction as a landscape and portrait painter. He was a pupil, with Harrington Fitzgerald, of Geo. W. Nicholson and was awarded several gold medals for exhibits. He was President of the Phila. Society of Artists and the Artists' Fund Society.

Among his best portraits are those of ex-Gov. Samuel W. Pennypacker and Senator Penrose, which are owned in Phila.

A widow and four children, R. P. Sword, W. F. Sword, Mrs. M. S. Dudley and James B. Sword, Jr., survive him.

MINNEAPOLIS.

By the purchase of the mansion of the late Mrs. Thomas Lowry, by T. B. Walker, who will vacate his lower Hennepin Ave. home occupied for forty years, great changes will be made. Mr. Walker will move his extensive collection of paintings, jades and other art works to the Lowry site. For the ever-expanding collection, the Walker gallery has been frequently enlarged, but a new building will be erected on the beautiful grounds surrounding the Lowry residence, where it will be open free to the public as before. Hennepin Ave. stretching from Loring Park to the Lowry monument by Karl Bitter has some impressive architecture, the Pro-Cathedral, St. Mark's Episcopal Church and the stately new Hennepin Ave. M. E. Church, now nearing completion. Ground has just been purchased for the erection of a collegiate institution facing the Parade, and near the Armory. The heirs of Mrs. Thomas Lowry have given paintings and tapestry to the Art Institute which have just been installed in the Art Museum and a large gallery is also filled by the paintings given the Institute by the bequest of the late Mrs. Wm. H. Donwoody, and are now being shown. The portrait of Wm. H. Donwoody, painted by Julian Story, by whose generous annuity of $45,000 art purchases are made, is in this collection.

Mr. T. B. Walker has just given a collection of Tanagra statuettes and Egyptian curios, which in addition to the late purchase by the Institute of Cypriote pottery will make an unusually attractive collection—together with the rare Chinese porcelains, given by Mrs. E. C. Gale.

DALLAS (TEXAS).

The recent exhibition of the Art Association of this city was very successful, and some good sales were made. The Association purchased J. F. Carlson's "Autumn Beeches" for $1,000, the State Fair Association bought, for the Public Gallery, William R. Robinson's "Golden Day" for $1,000, a collector paid $750 for an example of Charles C. Curran, and another, $800, for a Van Boskerck, and still another $550 for a Van Laer.

Sales approximating over $4,000 were made. In addition to these there were sold several canvases by Julien Onderdonk, one by Hale Bolton, two by Cuprien and three small ones by Olin Lavis. The Gallery was visited by not less than 100,000 people, and during the sixteen days of the Fair more than 500,000 people passed through the turnstiles.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Nov. 24, 1915.

This week will see the dispersal of the household effects of the late Charles Davis, the Bond Street art dealer, the sale being in the hands of Phillips, Son and Neale. The furniture includes some choice pieces of early French and English work, among the most notable of which are a pair of Louis XV lacquered cabinets, and another of old English satinwood. There are a few pictures and a small amount of old silver.

Good prices were fetched at the recent sale of the Edmund Tautz collection by Robinson and Fisher, several pictures by Frank Brangwyn realizing excellent figures. A number of small sales are occupying the majority of the salerooms just now and a very fair amount of quiet business is being transacted.

An interesting gift has been made to the British Museum by Mr. E. Leggatt of St. James' Street, namely, a remarkable collection of drawings and engravings, as well as autograph letters by Frederick Walker, the famous associate of the Royal Academy, whose brilliant career was terminated at the early age of 35. Mr. Leggatt had exceptional opportunities of laying the foundations of this exceptionally fine collection while acting as assistant to Sir William Agnew, one of Walker's most intimate friends, and so the result forms a practically complete guide thoroughly did he carry out the work that to the whole of the artist's career. From a fellow apprentice of Walker's the donor obtained every woodcut which he executed during his period of training under the engraver, J. W. Whymper, as well as many of the original drawings for his illustrated work on current periodicals. There is a peculiarly human interest, also, attaching to the caricatures which he made of himself and his contemporary artists, while the collection as a whole is invaluable for purposes of study and research.

A choice little exhibition of modern original drawings is now on at Messrs. Colnaghi and Obach's, 144 New Bond Street. Among so much that is good, it is difficult to particularize, but a drawing that stands out in particular is a girl's portrait by Augustus John, in which each pencil stroke is of definite value and every line adds to the rhythm and beauty of the whole. There is a sureness of touch about this artist's work that makes each drawing perfectly complete and satisfying. Another drawing, a triumph of individual technique, shows a couple of studies by John M. Swan of a tiger's head, done in black, white and red chalk. Not only is the texture of the fur exquisitely suggested but there is behind the drawing that feline, animal quality which one finds in the best Japanese color work. There are some impressive studies by Muirhead Bone, the most attractive of which is a chalk and sepia drawing of a Florentine church, seen in deep shadow and finely lighted.

Mr. Roger Fry is holding an exhibition of pictures at the Alpine Club, where he is giving the public an opportunity of criticizing his latest experiments in paint. That these are experiments is obvious, and to judge of them as if they represented the entire summing up of his artistic philosophy would be the greatest error.

But whether one finds oneself entirely in sympathy with the ideas they illustrate or not, one is found to admit that they are of the greatest artistic interest, and not even the introduction of colored and patterned papers as a background to portraits can make the spectator oblivious to the power of characterization which those portraits indicate! A number of "Essays in Abstract Design," in which Mr. Fry is apparently aiming at filling a given space with mere form and color, quite apart from the representation of any known objects, are a little too abstract for the mind of the average person, unversed in the philosophic aspect of design, but even these, one is willing to believe, are but mere experimental steps towards something more evolved.

An exhibition, which, in some respects, shows aims similar to those of Mr. Fry, is that of paintings by M. Maurice Asselin now on view at the Carfax Gallery. M. Asselin, who is of the school of Cezanne, shows an intensity in his method of visualizing persons and things, which leads to an extraordinary directness and power of simplification. He constantly gives the impression of having succeeded in actually arresting the moment as it passes, almost as if he had taken unawares either Nature or persons at some instant of particular interest. Although belonging to the ultra-modern school, he does not distract the eye of the onlooker by any unusual garishness or undue crudity.

BOSTON.

Notwithstanding local pride in Mrs. Gardner's Museum, the smothered resentment of the average visitor at the methods employed in steering him along the highways and by-tinually moving, like amateur, but very efficient police. No time allowed to look twice at an object; and retracing one's steps is absolutely forbidden. To make a note (other than mental—and that would be prohibited if possible) or to jot down the ghost of a sketch is against the rules. Paper and pencil are contraband articles in this august repository of art!—even in the case of an art critic in his most genial mood. But why protest against these rather irksome regulations? One does not have to visit the palace a second time, even though one may be tempted by the rumors of some new art treasures acquired. Apropos, there are rumors of the acquisition of a magnificent new tapestry; but your lowly critic does not hazard any statement regarding it, from his fleeting glimpse of this treasure, caught "on the move."

In the matter of exhibitions this week, the Bostonese have a cosmopolitan pot-pourri from which to choose. Those unfortunates who are afflicted with the Napoleonic mania—and like the poor "they are always with us"—will be cheered and edified by a visit to a local gallery, where ways of the "palace" has at last been ably voiced by a critic in our only "daily magazine"—the altruistic "Transcript." It is safe to say that this same average visitor goes into the Museum with perfectly honest and honorable intentions—but evidently there is some doubt upon this point in the minds of the "management." Hence, the care with which he is "guarded" during his tour of the rooms. His first trial is the catalog of the pictures, which has no numbers—numbers, no doubt, being so thoroughly convenient in catalogs that they are frightfully commonplace. Instead, the catalog informs him that such a picture is "beyond the door," another "between the windows," and so on, in picturesque detail. This species of catalog is no doubt unique and exotic, but one prefers the common or garden variety.

Meanwhile, as one of the dollar-a-head flock, he is being shepherded by able-bodied young men, who keep the procession on a collection of Napoleonicana is on view. Another local gallery offers choice Old Chinese Art, and the Fogg Art Museum out in Cambridge exhibits a wonderful collection of early Italian engravings. Mr. Verbeck's "monotypes" at the Harlow and Holland studio adds a touch of spice to this mixture. Exhibitions still continuing include the "members' show" at the Art Club, Mr. Murphy's rarefied art at the St. Botolph, and Mr. Goodwin's glorification of Boston—including nine views of the beloved P. G. (Public Garden)!

Robert Nisbet's exhibition at Vose's Gallery is noteworthy. There is something almost Japanese in the care with which he has painted his delightful landscapes, albeit his trees are real trees, faithfully de-icted. Very unusual is the fine, clear atmosphere, the illumination, in which he bathes his countryside subjects, such, for instance, as "Kent Plains" and "Fragrant Fields."

Louis Kronberg's exhibition at the "Guild" called out a representative Boston assemblage on Monday afternoon, the combination of "private view" and "tea" being very attractive. Mr. Kronberg's work is so well known that it needs no explanation. Suffice it to say that it has gained much in interest and color quality since his last show. John Doe.

CHICAGO.

The annual exhibition of American oils and sculptures at the Art Institute continues to attract large crowds of visitors. Eastern critics who wander through the galleries to gather "precursory" understanding of the "qualities" of the international American show to appear, later, in Atlantic coast cities, unite in praising the display. Orson Lowell remarked during his brief stay that "this harvest of National art stands for a remarkable catholicity of outlook." Certainly, the contrasts in "accepted art" are remarkable.

For all the fuss and fluster among local artists concerning "the warped selections" made by the Jury, Chicago is represented by more than sixty examples in painting and sculpture—and this seems a generous proportion out of 41 selections from "everywhere." The report is that more than 1,500 works were submitted, the largest ever submitted to local a worried Jury.

The "Friends of American Art" are trailing through the galleries, to decide in their purchase of paintings and sculptures for the permanent collection of American art in the Institute—and have already selected "A Portrait," by Katherine Dudley, "A Kentucky Mountaineer," by James R. Hopkins, "Autumn," by Wilson Irvine, and "The North River Front," by Leon Kroll.

The Popular Pictures.

Among the canvases most popular with visitors are F. C. Bartlett's "Roof Garden Tea," Mary Butler's "Red Mallows," A. E. Albright's "Little Sister," Louis Griffith's "Lonesome Time," F. W. Benson's "Fox Hunter," E. W. Redfield's "Deserted Farm," Helen Turner's "October," Charlotte B. Co-man's "Well-Worn Path" and Frank Peyraud's "In the Berkshires."

Nancy M. Ferguson of Philadelphia has six charming sketches, in oils, on the line—and it is whispered "on good authority" that all have been sold. They were painted "down Cape Cod way."

The illustration of "The Wonder of Work," in etchings, drawings, and lithographs, by Joseph Pennell, is on at the Institute to Jan. 1. H. Effa Webster.

sent; otherwise it will be assumed that a continuance is expected and bill will be sent
and payment should follow.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
SALES of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

ART NEWS ADS. BRING SALES.

The value of the advertising columns of the AMERICAN ART NEWS is again evidenced by the recent sale to a Western collector of an example of the late Frederic Remington. This picture the owner advertised in the ART NEWS of Oct. 9
last to receive, within a week, a response from the Western collector, which, after an exchange of letters and photographs, resulted in the sale of the work at the former owner's price and to the satisfaction of both parties.

This is only one of several sales in which the ART NEWS has been instrumental of late, and details of which can be obtained at its office.

ART PUBLIC, BEWARE!

The regrettable continuance, as it now looks, for another winter, at least, of the great European war—and the almost complete prostration of art interest and business in England and on the Continent—has brought to America, during the last two months, what can only be described as a horde of art dealers—all bringing wares to unload upon the "rich and ignorant Americans."

A few—very few—of these dealers are reputable persons or representatives of reputable foreign houses, whom we are glad to welcome and who have brought, and are bringing over goods of quality and worth. These have, almost without exception, leased or are about to lease, more or less permanent quarters, and some have leased and fitted up handsome galleries in the art section of New York.

But there is another and a larger element of dealers, so-called, who should be shunned and shown the door. These gentry hire a room or rooms in some hotel, from whence they conduct a campaign for the selling of poor and frequently spurious pictures, tapestries, rugs and art objects. Their methods are often audacious in the extreme, and not being at any expense to speak of for rent, insurance or labor, they will resort to any ruse to gain admittance to collectors' houses or to pull collectors into their hotel room or rooms, and do not hesitate to attempt to unload poor or false goods upon them.

We have had several instances of the rankest frauds and swindles perpetrated by these gentry of late, and may think it wise to expose some of the worst offenders if they persist in their practices.

We will gladly give information, in confidence, if requested, as to the standing of any foreign dealer or dealers,
who may approach any of our readers
or patrons, but we would also advise such readers and patrons to consult our reading and advertising columns, if at any time in doubt, as we guarantee the honesty and standing of the firms who advertise in this journal, or to whom and their goods we give approving notice.

CORRESPONDENCE

Hart Analyses Portrait Criticisms.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

As you were good enough to refer so correctly in the AMERICAN ART NEWS of Nov. 27, to my attitude in regard to the "tempest in a tea pot" into which the Philadelphia papers have worked themselves, over their misreading and misunderstanding of my paper, read before the American Historical Association at Charleston in Dec. 1913, two years ago, entitled "Frauds in Historical Portraiture of Spurious Portraits of Historical Personages," and which has just issued from the Government Printing Office at Washington, in the annual report of the association, contrary to my intention not to notice the foolish vaporings, I send you a copy of this paper, as also copies of my earlier brochures on "Portraits of Patrick Henry"
and address before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, in 1910. I then presented on behalf of Mrs. Joseph Drexel, the original portrait from life by Elouis of Anthony Wayne, so that you may see the two statements of importance in the N. Y. "Sun" of Nov. 23, are absolutely false, when that paper says: "According to Mr. Hart, there is no authentic portrait of Patrick Henry"

and "There is no authenticated life portrait of General Wayne, Mr. Hart contends."

There are original portraits from life of Wayne by Charles Willson Peale and by Edward Savage, the last in the gallery of the Historical Society of New York, as well as the one by Elouis; and my monograph on the Patrick Henry portraits was occasioned by the long hoped for "find" of an original miniature from life of the noted Virginian, painted by Lawrence Sully in 1795, and now in the collection of a prominent gentleman of this city. To answer all the stuff and nonsense that has appeared would occupy more time and space than you or I have to give to the subject and then cui bono? I cannot give people intelligence and understanding. What good then would there be to plant seed in barren ground?

The Portrait of William Penn.

The following correspondence recently appeared in the Phila. Ledger.

To the Editor of Public Ledger:
Sir—As there has been some public discussion regarding the authenticity of the portrait in armor of William Penn, which hangs in the hall of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, the council of the society would be greatly obliged if the Public Ledger would print the inclosed quotation from a letter which Granville Penn sent to William Rawle, president of the society, at the time the portrait was presented.

Edward Robins.

[Extract from a letter of Granville Penn to William Rawle, president of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, dated Richmond, Surrey, 5th January, 1833:]

With these, I shall send a very perfect Portrait of William Penn, your Founder and my Grandfather, painted when he was at the age of twenty-two years. As we have in our family duplicates of this Portrait, I have long been desirous of deposit-ing one of them in the City which owes its origin and existence to him; but, until now,
I have not found myself free to indulge that reasonable desire. Having, however,
at length acquired the power of doing so,
it is with feelings of no ordinary emotion,
that I shall present that Portrait to the Honourable Society of which you are President.

Matthew Harris Jouett.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir—May I ask, through your columns, why the work of Matthew Harris Jouett has been overlooked among the works of early American painters, shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition?

Jouett was a painter of great merit and was called "The Rembrandt of the backwoods." He was a favorite pupil of Gilbert Stuart, and much of his later work, it has been said, is difficult to distinguish from that of his master's.

His portrait of "The Artist's Wife" was sent to the Exposition and it seems to me
a great oversight that there is no mention of his work in any article I have yet seen on the pictures of the Exposition.

I feel sure any of your readers who will examine Jouett's "John Grimes" at the Metropolitan or his "Peter Grayson" in the Philadelphia Academy, will agree with me that he richly deserves a place in the comparatively small rank of early American masters.

Yours truly,

(Mrs.) W. H. Martin.

Midway, Ky., Nov. 30, 1915.

[We are pleased to publish the above letter, as also a reproduction of Jouett's portrait of Dr. Brown, of which Mrs.
Martin sends a photograph, and entirely agree with her that it is strange the two portraits, which well represent this artist at San Francisco, should have been overlooked by the many critics who have written on the pictures in the Fine Arts Palace at San Francisco.
However, Mr. Charles Henry Hart,
the eminent authority on early American art, has, both in published notes and in private, extolled the artist and his worth; the Filson Club of Louisville, Ky., has published a catalog, with illustrations of his best known portraits; there were several portraits
by him shown at the Charleston, S. C., Exposition in 1901-02, which did so much to revive interest in early American art, by the Art Director—the present editor of the ART NEWS; and finally, as Mrs. Martin herself says, there are representative examples of Jouett in the Metropolitan Museum and the Pa.
Academy galleries.—Ed.]

"Expert" on Picture Values.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: As one of the "experts" in the recent much discussed case of Pigot vs.
McNulty, I think I am entitled to explain
my position in the matter. Especially so,
as some of my fellow dealers have contended that I presumed a great deal in endeavoring to put a fair valuation on pictures
my neighbors have sold, and contended that I cannot establish a fair price on the transaction of another dealer. I say, I can, provided I am a good judge of values, well posted on the present market, know the pictures which the public are buying, know that Kensett, Cropsey, Durand, Suydam, Williamson, Casilear, were not great artists
as compared with Inness, Martin, Wyant, Homer; know that the American public forty years ago were all children as far as knowledge of art was concerned, and that the final selection of the artists of that period, made after forty or fifty years, is the standard that is going to be maintained.

Further, that the training as a result of these fifty odd years is here to stay. Much of the former art was not art at all, and the works produced were simply pictures. The public is the one in the last analysis which finally creates the values, as it makes the prices. It is not what any particular person may happen to say regarding the work of an artist, that finally counts, as is illustrated by Inness, Wyant, Homer and Martin, all of whom have reached the present standing of prices through no effort on their part but to paint good pictures. The works of these men did not sell readily during their lifetime.

To my mind there is no question as to determining quite approximately the value of pictures of any particular artist. An artist may ask one price in his studio,
another price at exhibitions, and his pictures bring still another price at auction. A reasonable adjustment of these three prices is, to my mind, the approximate value of that artist's work. In the case under consideration there was another element, namely, the inducement which led the defendant to buy the pictures. That inducement was that the artist in question "had a national and international reputation,"
and that he was "the greatest watercolor painter in the United States." It is my contention that when a statement of this kind is made in order to consummate a sale,
and relying on that statement the person
buys the pictures, he has been imposed upon.

To my mind it is not difficult to answer the question, where the distinction should be drawn between a watercolor, which is so nearly commercial, and still be called a work of art, and a Cosway miniature, or the "Mill" by Rembrandt—the latter is art of the highest order. What is the former?
I do not wish to have it thought I am endeavoring to establish business ethics for those in the art line. I contend a dealer who has for sale a real work of art, a good example by a great artist, is entitled to get as large a profit as he can. The art business is truly a gentleman's profession, and a conscientious dealer has no difficulty in determining when the line of a fair and reasonable value of a picture has been passed.

Yours very truly,

C. E. Snedecor.

The Starling and the Hermit Thrush.

Jury Selection, Hanging Committee, and Jury Awards, Winter Academy, 1915.

Respected Sirs and Madam:

The starling like the sparrow was imported from Europe. His joyous twitter is pleasant through the winter months when other birds have taken their song to sunnier lands.

"Oh hemlock tree, Oh hemlock tree,
How faithful are thy branches,"
and the starling stays with the evergreen.
But the starling's chatter cannot replace the song of the thrush, the song sparrow, the oriole and Jenny wren. And now we find that the climate of America favors the philoprogenitive qualities of the starling, so that it is becoming a nuisance and steps are being taken for his extermination. The reason is that only the sparrow can also live where the starling makes his home.
The thrush and the robin and the bob-link are forced by his clamorous aggressiveness to the hermitage of the silent woods,
"far from the madding (avian) crowd." The starlings of art are banishing the lark, the linnet, the wren and the nightingale to the seclusion of the studio in which they saw the light. The eye of man but rarely sees them and their Arcadian song is open only to those who search them out.

In your aviary on 57th Street, with its starlings and sparrows and dazzling parrots and birds of paradise, with chanticleer and eagles (you have ever kept out the owls
and buzzards and carrion crows and in consequence received unlimited abuse), give us a cage to house the hermit thrush.

Most respectfully,

New York, Nov. 30, 1915. Charles Vezin.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

Early American Landscapes at Ehrich's.

The assemblage of 42 early American landscapes at the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave.—which can still be viewed there for a few days longer—deserves more notice from the press and attention from the public, than has yet been given it. With the marked revival of interest in the work of the early American painters that began with the Charleston, S. C., Exposition of 1901-'02, when the display of examples of these early men—for the most part owned in Charleston and vicinity—surprised American art lovers, both in quantity and quality, there has been an increasing rise in the value of these works both artistically and financially, and collectors of American pictures, and especially American Museums, have in the present display an unusual opportunity to add to or to fill gaps in their collections.

The early American landscapists represented, and well represented at the Ehrich Galleries, are G. R. Bonfield, J. W. Casilear, F. E. Church, Thos. Cole, Christopher P. Cranch, J. F. Cropsey, F. O. C. Darley, Thos. Doughty, Asher B. Durand, John M. Falconer, Hermann Fuechsel, R. Swain Gifford, Sandford R. Gifford, James Hamilton, William Hart, George Inness, John F. Kensett, Edwin D. Lewis, C. M. McIlhenny, Homer Martin, Edward and Thomas Moran, John Neagle, Chas. Willson Peale, W. T. Richards, Joshua Shaw, William Russell Smith, W. L. Sonntag, Paul Weber and A. H. Wyant.

There are, of necessity, some gaps in the above list, notably those of the names of Bierstadt, R. W. Hubbard, James Hart, Jervis McEntee, David Johnson and of possibly Regis Gignoux, E. Wood Perry and A. C. Howland and some may question whether the great Trio, Inness, Martin and Wyant, and the veteran Thomas Moran, still living and an artistic "Johnnie Walker," going strong, should be included among the founders of the "Hudson River school" and their immediate followers. There are names in the list, also, almost unknown to art lovers of today, such as Bonfield, Shaw, Falconer and W. Russell Smith, and some surprises, even to the cognoscenti, in the revelation that John Neagle, the able son-in-law of Thos. Sully and Chas. Willson Peale, could paint good landscapes as well as figures and portraits, and again, that old Thos. Doughty and William Hart, in particular, put exceeding quality, at times, into their canvases.

The display, as a whole, is not only of interest and importance, but has rare educational value, and is a revelation to those who only know of the early American landscapists by tradition, or who have been brought up to sneer at the god old "Hudson River school."

James B. Townsend.

Childe Hassam at Montross'.

An extraordinarily clever man is Childe Hassam, and he gets some quite remarkable effects, with the Pissarro-Sisley strokes, he affects in his figure works and landscapes in oil. He is, however, much more attractive, when entirely himself, as in the pastels and watercolors, which form the far greater number of the 106 examples that make up the exhibition now on to Dec. 11 at the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave.

Of course here and there, even among these he reverts to the familiar mannerism. Gems in their way, however, are the water colors, "Venice—San Giorgio" and "Chicago Nocturne" with its street cars and crowds. The other scenes are both foreign and American, there being Mount Hood and Isle of Shoals groups. Notable among the pastels is the view of "The Old Brush House and Store" at Cos Cob.

The 22 oils include a striking California group of landscapes, with quite remarkable effects of filtered sunlight, in "Spring Morning in California," "Spring Afternoon in the California Hills" and the Turneresque "The Silver Veil and the Golden Gate." There is also a Hudson River group which includes "The Destroyers." The small number of figure works in oil, there are but five, includes two rather skimpy portraits of women, one "The White Mantel," a single figure genre, "Morning Light," very cleverly handled; the highly attractive half length of "Janet" with her face turned away, and "The Christmas Basket," the last title seemingly suitable to the whole display.

A. v. C.

Etchings by Childe Hassam.

Seventy-five etchings and dry points, by Childe Hassam are on view at Frederick Keppel & Co.'s 4 East 39 St. to Dec. 18. The catalog has a foreword by Carl Zigrosser and a note of appreciation by J. Alden Weir. Mr. Hassam in his etchings has a summary vigor of stroke that recalls Zorn while his dry points have an entrancing delicacy.

Old French Fans at Bonaventure's.

Lovers of the dainty and delicate in art should see the collection of some 50 old hand-painted French fans of Mme. Dumont de Villeneuve, at the Bonaventure Galleries, 601 Fifth Ave.

This collection, sent over from Paris, despite war times, to Mr. Bonaventure, who always provides some rare artistic treat of this kind at pre-Christmas time, to delight his clientele and art lovers of refined taste and knowledge, is the daintiest and most alluring he has ever offered. Shown in cases, open, so that the beautiful painting of the vellum and chicken skin of the fan proper, and the tooling and ornamentation of the sticks, may be minutely studied, the effect as a whole is surprisingly beautiful. What more choice Christmas gift could one present to one's innamorata than one of these feminine weapons, which perchance a Queen has wielded, or with which a Princess has beckoned or cajoled?

Here are no less than six Vernis Martins, a case holding a typical fan of each of the Louis periods, and two exceptionally rare and fine examples, a Louis XVI fan with medallion portraits of fair women of France, and a Louis XIV fan with a classical subject, most rich in color. But these creations cannot be described in detail. They tell their own history and exemplify their respective periods, far better than any writer can describe them.

J. B. T.

The "Child in Art" Display.

The Art Alliance of America, which acts as a broker and art worker, has successfully realized its happy idea of holding, under its auspices and for its benefit, an exhibition of "Art Associated With the Child," to be on to Dec. 14 at the former Blakeslee Galleries, 665 Fifth Ave., at 53 St.

Very suitable to the pre-Christmas holiday season is this homage of art, offered to childhood, which in its turn lends its charm of innocence, beauty and grace to all those methods of art expression of which it is the subject or that devote themselves to its service. The pictorial and plastic reproductions of childhood, and the artistic environments of child life, are given further touch of reality by a little band of youngsters, who disport themselves, artistically clad, in miniature gardens, nurseries and play rooms.

The entrance to the extensive display leads through an ante-gallery filled with sculptures, which in turn conducts the visitor to a garden devoted to the graceful modellings of Janet Scudder, and whose walls bear pictorial decorations in oil by Mrs. John Carpenter. On either hand are arranged galleries devoted to pictures, miniatures, interior decorations, etchings, photographs, ceramics, books, jewelry, costumes and toys.

The committees for all these displays are formed of well known artists and literary men, with just enough of the salt of society to give a social imprimatur to the whole.

The sculptures, in addition to those by Miss Scudder, include examples of Herman A. McNeill, Bessie Potter Vonnoh, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Henri Crenier, Edith W. Burroughs, G. S. Scarpitta, H. Kahler, John Hays, Enid Yandell, Lillian Link, Carol Brooks, Anna Coleman Ladd, S. Murani, and Mario Korbell.

Notable among the pictures, which fill two galleries, is a bright "Holiday in Holland," by Arnim C. Hansen; a remarkable girl's head, by George Forest Brush; some delightful watercolors and pastels, by Rosina Emmett Shewood; a charming Olive Rush, and examples among others of Martha Walter, Victor Hecht, Lydia Field Emmett, Bernhard Gutman, W. H. Funk, Otis Williams, Charlotte Bean Blommers, Louise Heustis, W. J. Baer, a lovely child and kitten, Annie M. Peck, R. Murchison, W. J. Whittemore and F. Luis Mora—a full size copy of Velasquez's equestrian portrait of Don Baltazar Carlos.

The little group of miniatures includes examples of Maria Streaun, Carlotta St. Gaudens, Lucia F. Fuller, Elsie Davis, Lydia Longacre, W. J. Baer and W. J. Whittemore. A number of Cornwell luminous of landscape and sea add to the attractiveness of the display and there is jewelry by Misses Grace Hagen and Lilla Davis. The exhibition will be open free tomorrow and next Sunday.

Martha Walter on the Beach.

Very slight, very bright and dashed in with refreshing artistic freedom, are the beach scenes, with figures of bathers, by Martha Walter, which form the staple of her display of 21 canvases, on view to Dec. 11 at the Galleries of Henry Reinhardt, 565 Fifth Ave. What Miss Walter lacks is body to her figures, as witness notably those in "Bathing, Low Tide," with its windswept group of women and children, bathed in sunlight and in the large, very decorative and spirited figure of Dorothy Lee Bell, standing in the open in a fine breeze. Indeed color, air, light and motion are Miss Walter's strong points and she is very clever with her little sketches of beach with their tiny little figures. It all starts with Pott-hast and ends up with something very suggestive of Boldini. A. v. C.

Works by S. Montgomery Roosevelt.

Social eminence in any degree, does not usually go hand in hand with success in the arts, although Gerard, the Frenchman, and Leys, the Belgian, were barons by birth and Marcel Desboutsins, the painter-engraver, and Mario, the tenor, were marquises in France and Italy, respectively. S. Montgomery Roosevelt, presiding officer of the Society of Portrait Painters, who is holding an exhibition of portraits and two landscapes at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. to Dec. 15 is another exception to the general rule. He was a student at the Julian atelier in Paris as far back as 1893 which is recalled by the fact that his capital little watercolor portrait of his friend, Sanford Pomeroy, figures in the present display of 14 examples. Two other watercolors are "Rushing Waters" and a sketch in the Adirondacks.

The other exhibits vigorously handled, and in the main excellent as likenesses, are 9 portraits and two fancy subjects "Gipsy" and "The Witch" in oil. While his male portraits, notably the rather grave presentation of himself palette in thumb and brush in hand, those of Antonio de la Gandara and Earl Stetson Crawford do him much credit, it is in his depiction of woman that he is at his best. There is something of the same charm, found in the work of Jacquet, in the half lengths of one lady in ermine and another with a rose. There is good color and a bloom on the cheeks like that of the rose in both works. A seated figure with a book, representing Mrs. Donald Campbell, is effective, if rather sketchy. The Earl of Kintore is also pictured in ruddy health, and the late Oliver Belmont is another subject.

In an adjoining gallery are shown a number of cleverly handled Porto Rico landscapes by Thomas Watson Ball. The local color is well rendered, and the peculiar Caribbean mountain forms the swift water courses the coconut palms and the banana trees are depicted with great truth of impression.

Among the landscapes are "Sierra Pandora from Maunabo," "Sierra Luquillo," "The Shower," and clearing at "El Yunque," "Valley of the Rio Branco," "Waving Palms near Naguabo" and "The Edge of the Grape Fruit Grove."

Old Fans and Laces at Charles' Gallery.

At the galleries of Charles of London, 718 Fifth Ave., Mr. Arthur Blackborne of London, and Mme. Keller of Rome, are holding an exhibition of most alluring objects for feminine adornment, which includes over 160 fans, none less than a hundred years old. One Italian example, has a medallion painted on chicken skin, which shows fair ladies, bathing their feet in the river. A Spanish fan of richly pierced mother of pearl, has painted medallions of classical subjects. There is a Vernis Martin fan with a painting of Adonis asleep, and a fan of Chinese ivory, with gilded Cherubs, astride clouds, which has rich stones in the sticks. There are also exquisitely carved tortoise shell and one Louis XVI specimen with three painted medallions and richly carved and gilded ivory sticks. A quaint little English carved ivory telescope and fan combined, gives the fair owner a chance to observe, unseen—and a "Marriage Fan"—made for the grandmother of the late Lady Sheffield, is of especial interest.

In the same display is a rare collection of Court Lappets—some, once the property of Marie Antoinette, also gorgeously embroidered fichus, shawls, collars, etc., and an exceptional lot of old silks and velvets.

The Zorachs at Daniels.

What William sees Marguerite does. That is the case with the Zorachs, who are appearing in their fantastic and somewhat attractive act at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., of transforming nature, into something neither man nor the Creator could recognize.

And still there is color and a decorative effect, which, as before observed in these pages, has something of the Persian about it. And they both can draw when they want to as William shows, in a couple of mother and child watercolors, which have something of the Japanese about them, while Marguerite's scenes in the same medium, "The Country Sojourn, New England" and "Saturday Night in a New England Kitchen" are excruciatingly funny as they were intended to be.

Now to turn from these to the blobby figures in wobbly landscapes which both William and Marguerite show is a decided wrench.

There are landscapes and landscapes, with figures, some family groups in surroundings, which recall in composition the primitive painters. And among it all, there is something impressive in Marguerite's "Moonlight" and "Among Strange Mountains" while William's "The Family" has a certain nobility, and there is some dignity in his "Interior," with its queer nude figures, one of them holding an oil lamp. As to the embroideries they are highly attractive, especially the East Indian wedding designed by Mrs. Zorach and the plaque with musicians and dancers of Mr. Zorach. A. v. C.

Old English Pictures at Scott and Fowles'.

A small but most interesting display of early English pictures at the Scott and Fowles galleries, No. 590 Fifth Ave., is well worth the attention of art lovers. This includes a pair of three-quarter length standing portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Periam by that quaint old English painter, Thomas Hudson, far stronger and less stiff than are his portraits generally. The best is the man's portrait, which, in pose, expression and detail of costume and color, is worthy of Beechey. The woman's portrait is also well painted, especially the texture of the flowing white satin gown.

There is a delightful full length seated presentation of the little Duke of Warwick by Sir Godfrey Kneller, most picturesque in composition and presentation, and exceptionally rich in color quality for this master. Another portrait by Kneller is that of Thomas Western, a bold and fine presentation of an elderly man who suggests a Largilliere subject. There is also an interesting portrait of the Earl of Mansfield by Richard Wilson, whose portraits are few in number, and are seldom shown.

"Culture" Association Display.

At the Municipal Art Gallery, Washington Irving Bldg., at 16 St. and Irving Place, the "Association for Culture" will hold its fourth annual exhibition of paintings, sculptures and handicraft, Dec. 6-Jan. 1. The work is of decided interest and over 400 exhibits represent many well-known men and women, as well as those who have yet to "arrive." The Society particularly aims to help young people who have had no recognition and extends a hearty welcome to all serious art workers.

Among exhibitors whose work is known are Susan Ricker Knox, who shows several good portraits, one of an elderly woman in gray and several of children. Albert T. Groll sends a large Arizona landscape, rich in color and with atmospheric, Gustave Wolff attractive bits of Holland, Guy C. Wiggins a strong snow scene, Theresa Bernstein, whose examples have her accustomed vigor and individuality, and Jane Peterson, the last represented by several sunny, colorful canvases with pictorial quality, the most noticeable a girl with a rose colored parasol looking down into a lily pond.

D. Dolinsky shows attractive work and J. H. Hintermeister, a wonderfully realistic, vital portrait of his wife and baby. There is a Bruestle landscape, and many canvases by that broad technician and strong colorist, Henri de Mance, also some sincere work by Eugene Higgins, including "Patriots," a war picture which shows a vulture swooping over dying soldiers. Mr. Higgins also shows a very good "Immigrant in America" composition which seems to have been refused at the recent show at 8 West 8th St., where there were many exhibits, inferior both in idea and execution. Bertram Hartman's two fanciful decorative canvases are interesting, as are also some of W. R. Leighs characterizations of Hopi Indians. Among the more prominent sculptors represented are Adolf Weinman, Paul Harzel and Otto Baumgartel. John T. Arms exposes a group of unique pen and inks and one etching, the former with unusual depth and character. H. C. R.

Benson's Etchings and Drawings.

In an attractive display at the Kennedy Gallery, 613 Fifth Ave., Frank W. Benson, the Boston painter, with 48 etchings and dry points makes his first bow to N. Y. art lovers as a master of the needle. He also shows 13 drawings of wild fowl in flight, resting on quiet waters, just breasting the surf in air, or alighting to the gunner's call or decoys. In these last Mr. Benson repeats his earlier work with the same subject, shown at the Macbeth Gallery here in 1913 and the drawings now on view, will stir the sportsman's blood as did their predecessors. For Mr. Benson, the experienced wild fowl hunter, can see at a glance, is a true sportsman and loves and knows his sport so well as to give it not only faithful, but inspired portrayal.

The etchings of Mr. Benson are also of wild fowl and their haunts and have the same inspiration as his drawings. He has a bold and strong line, and, as in his paintings, a fine composition, sense of the picturesque and love of Nature.

MRS. FIELD TAKES STEVENSON MSS.

In the Supreme Court on Nov. 26, Justice Donnelly decided that 152 letters and Mss., of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, belonged to Mrs. Isabel Strong Field, his step-daughter, instead of to Mrs. Katherine D. Osbourne, wife of his stepson, Lloyd Osbourne. The judge held that Mrs. Osbourne, the plaintiff, had not proved ownership. The letters and Mss. were withdrawn, from last year's sale at the Anderson Galleries, as a result of the suit.

PA. ACADEMY $1,000 PRIZE.

Through the generosity of Mr. Edward T. Stoesbury, one of the directors of the Pa. Academy, a prize of $1,000 will be awarded by the Committee on Exhibition, to the artist whose picture or group of pictures, never before publicly exhibited, is, in its opinion the most important contribution to the success of its next and 11th annual exhibition.

Line Engraving at Knoedler's.

There is now on view at the Knoedler Galleries, 556 Fifth Ave., a notable collection of line engravings, of the XVII and XVIII centuries which remains to Dec. 11. The 65 portraits, scenes of moeurs and scenes galantes are most interesting records of historic, elegant and fast life in the days before the whirlwind of the Revolution and the Draconian decrees and personal extravagances of Napoleon.

Old Prints at Grolier Club.

At the Dec. meeting of the Grolier Club, 29 E. 32 St on Thursday eve., there was an exceedingly interesting exhibition of old N. Y. prints, a number of which have not been before shown publicly. In connection with this there was an address by Mr. I. N. Phelps Stokes.

ARTISTS, ATTENTION!
Mr. John E. D. Trask has left San Francisco for the East to secure replacements and additions to the exhibition in the Fine Arts Palace at the Exposition, and will make the Hotel Vanderbilt, N. Y., his headquarters.
The department's contract with exhibitors calls for the delivery of works sold from the exhibition in December. Artists will be requested to allow their unsold works to remain in the Fine Arts Palace, and to replace those sold with other representative examples. An effort will also be made to secure additional contemporary work from those not represented here. The new shipments must leave New York by Dec. 15.

ABOUT ART AND ARTISTS.
The exhibit of Gari Melchers, shown in a special gallery, like those of several other painters, at the Pana-Pacific Exposition, will be sent, at its close to the Delgado Museum in New Orleans and later to the Telfair Academy in Savannah. Mr. Melchers is the salaried consulting director of the latter institution, at which are a number of his pictures as well as his collection of works by old masters. Mrs. Melchers is a native of Savannah and the niece of Col. Alexander Lawton, president of the Board of Directors of the Telfair Academy.

Miss Ethel M. Chadwick of London gave an interesting account of the Servian sculptor Izan Mestrovic, whose work has been noticed in the ART NEWS, at the Architectural League rooms on Wednesday evening last. She spoke from personal knowledge of the man and his unusual work, and her talk was illustrated with lantern slides.

The "Friends of American Art" have bought the following pictures from the current Chicago Institute display, "Autumn," by Wilson Irvine; "A Kentucky Mountaineer," by James R. Hopkins and the "North River Front," by Leon Kroll. Other purchases are in contemplation.

Cullen Yates, who during the past eight months has been at his studio as Shawnecon-Delaware, Pa., where he painted numerous landscapes, including a splendid view of the Water Gap, ordered by a resident of that vicinity, has returned to his Van Dyck Studio.

At 122 E. 59 St., Wilhelmine Weber and Thomas Furlong are exhibiting representative examples of their work. Miss Weber's spontaneous bits of nature, painted near Martha's Vineyard, are decidedly attractive and she shows some distinctive painted furniture. Mr. Furlong's wall panels show a nice feeling for color and are extremely decorative. He also shows portrait studies in red chalk and in oil.

Hilda Belcher has just returned from Vermont, and is again at work at her studio in the Van Dyck.

Marion Swinton has been busy at both her Hackensack and New York studios, and among recent works shows an attractive portrait of Miss H. Cecilia Gaffney.

An exhibition of the Society of Illustrators will be held Dec. 11-29, at the R. I. School of Design.

The exhibition of the National Ass'n of Portrait Painters will be on, at the Corcoran Gallery, Washington, Dec. 7-26.

S. Montgomery Roosevelt left on Nov. 27 on a trip to Cal. to visit the Pan-Pacific Exposition.

Frank Fleming is at 60 Bank St. after a summer and fall at Woodstock, Ulster Co., N. Y.

Arthur T. Hill has returned from Easthampton for the winter and is at 33 W. 67 St.

Henry O. Tanner is expected to return from France to the United States this winter.

James A. Shearman, for thirty years a familiar figure in the artists' colony at Florence, has returned at the advanced age of 83, to stay in America. After a visit to his old home in Brooklyn Mr. Shearman has gone to Detroit.

Charles Hoffbauer is with the French army, having left Richmond, Va., where he was doing decorations in Memorial Hall, at the opening of the war. He is one of the half dozen artists serving under the colors, to whom the government gives a day off each week for painting.

To conduct a French propaganda Charles Huard, the official painter of the French army museum, arrived Nov. 24 on the Touraine with his wife, who was Miss Frances Wilson, daughter of Francis Wilson. They will lecture and exhibit war pictures.

Mrs. Louise M. Jensen, wife of Thomas Jensen, a portrait painter, died recently at the age of 73, at Bay Ridge. She was born and married in Copenhagen, and leaves, besides her husband, four daughters and a son.

Mrs. David Kimball, of Commonwealth Ave., Boston, has purchased the "Come Unto Me, etc." canvas by C. A. Slade, reproduced in the ART NEWS of Oct. 9. Six sales were made at the artists' display at the Vose galleries.

Alice P. T. de Haas has returned to her studio in the Van Dyck with several good canvases as a result of her summer's work at Gloucester, Mass.

The annual Christmas sale of decorative art work, for the benefit of the Art Workers Club for Women, will be held at the club house, 224 W. 58 St., on Dec. 9-10, 11 A. M. to 6 P. M. An unusually attractive showing of painting aprons, smocks, fans, picture frames, door stops, toys, etc., is promised.

Clara Ruge's one-act play, "Robbery," will be presented by the Art Drama Players at the Municipal Art Gallery, 16 St. and Irving Place, at 8:15 P. M. tonight. The play is a social drama of artist life and together with addresses in German and English and music and dancing under the auspices of the Association for Culture, will be part of an opening festival for the Association's fourth annual exhibition of paintings and sculptures to open to the public with free admission on Tuesday next, Dec. 7. Admission will be 50 and 25 cents on Monday.

Douglas Volk is at 119 E. 19 St. for the season.

Mrs. Coman's Birthday Party.

Alethea Platt, who painted wood interiors at Keene Valley, Adirondacks, during the Spring and Summer, and in the Berkshires during the Autumn, has returned to her studio in the Van Dyck, where she gave a reception for Mrs. Charlotte Coman last Sunday night. The occasion was Mrs. Coman's 82nd birthday, and her numerous friends deluged her with flowers and congratulations. It is difficult to realize that this veteran woman artist, who reads and works without glasses and whose canvases are so vital and spontaneous, has reached such an advanced age. Mrs. Coman has just returned from Elizabethtown, Adirondacks, where she painted landscapes last summer.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Henry Reinhardt of 565 Fifth Ave has added two new galleries to his suite. They are on the 46 St. side of the building.

Mr. H. K. Kevorkian of the Persian Art Gallery of London, has established himself for the season in handsome galleries, on the same floor, as the former Blakeslee Galleries, 668 Fifth Ave.

Mr. Edward Brandus, of 569 Fifth Ave., returned last week from France on the Rochambeau.

The Metropolitan Museum has bought from the Kelekian Galleries, 709 Fifth Ave. six tapestries, including Chinese, Persian and Italian examples. From the same establishment, Mr. Thomas Burchell purchased a Greek torso of a Venus in bronze of the III century.

C. F. WILLIAMSON'S WILL.

The will of Charles Francis Williamson, who went down with the Lusitania, aged 44, was probated Tuesday at Cumberland, Md. Mr. Williamson left that city fifteen years ago. He became secretary to Mr. James Hazen Hyde, and later a friend of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, with whom he was traveling when he died. He was an art dealer with offices in Paris.

Miss Minnie A. Baker, of Duluth, Minn., Mr. Williamson's fiancée, who was on the Lusitania and also drowned, is the main beneficiary. To her was willed $10,000 outright, and the remainder was to be divided into equal shares, Miss Baker to get one and the others to go to his father, Harry W. Williamson, of Cumberland; his brothers, Eugene L. Williamson, of Cumberland, and H. A. Williamson, of Fairmont, W. Va., and his sister, Mrs. C. E. Hodges, of Landover, Md., in equal parts.

The will was executed in Paris, June 13, 1913, and provided that his body be cremated

H. SIDDONS MOWBRAY MARRIES.

Are Boston Painters the Strongest?

Editor of the AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir,

I should like to say in answer to "No Bostonian," who suggests, that possibly the best painters are to be found at the Hub, hence the large number of prizes given Boston at San Francisco; that, although we have always been taught, that the very best of all things, of course, came from the modern Athens, there may be very few who think otherwise! I believe the Penn. Academy in Phila. holds the palm for having turned out from its school the greatest number of the big painters, of this country, and, if I am not mistaken, none of these graduates were members of or came from the particular Boston "clique."

To prove that these painters, are not absolutely sure of their standing as being "the" painters, let me cite one or two incidents. Not long since, a young painter, whose pictures were turned down at all the shows, asked one of Boston's leading artists why it was. The answer, he received was, "you paint too well!"

In spite of their assumed pose of superiority, this goes to prove that they can still be jealous of others, the greatest proof of which was evidenced during Sorolla's visit to this country. A large reception was given to him, in Copley Hall, from which six or more of Boston's more conspicuous painters stayed away!

"Straight-from-the-Shoulder."

Boston, Dec. 2, 1915.

N. Y. Water Color Club Sales.

The following works were sold at the exhibition of the New York Water Color Club, which closed Nov. 28th: "Frog Fountain" by Janet Scudder, "In Sunlight," V. V. Swope; "Golden Glow," V. V. Swope; "A Street in Amiens," J. Andree Smith; "Spring," L. F. Berneker; "Easter Time," Gertrude King; "A Wood Nymph," T. Gilvor Hall; "Among the Hills," N. MacGillvary; "Victory," A. St. Gaudens; "N. Y. City," Geo. Luks; "Harlem River," "Winter," "White Building" and "The Art," H. W. Rubins; "A Westport Garden," Ida W. Stroud; "Calandulas," Harriet F. Smith; "Larkspurs," Rhoda Holmes Nichols; "Spring in Holland," Edward Penfield; "My Garden," Alice W. Donaldson; "Grey Weather," F. W. Howell; "Bronze Panther," Anna V. Hyatt, and "On the Trail," Solon Borglum. The total of sales amounted to over $2,000.

Nat'l Portrait Gallery Shut.

(Special Cable to AMERICAN ART NEWS.)

London, Dec. 9, 1915.

The National Portrait Gallery has now been closed for the duration of the war, and its rooms converted into offices for government clerks. The reason for this step is not made public, and in view of the fact that the treasures of the National Gallery, incomparably more valuable from every point of view, are still accessible to visitors, it can scarcely be attributable to anti-Zeppelin precautions. Indeed, in spite of continued protests, the greatest inadequacy still characterizes the custody of British national collections. England could contemplate the drastic closing of its various municipal galleries in wartime with greater equanimity than it could bring to bear on the risk of the annihilation of their contents at any moment by a well-directed bomb. Sir Claude Phillips is especially untiring in his endeavors to induce the authorities to adopt more precautionary measures, pointing out that the minor dangers threatened by the Suffragettes induced greater care on their part than do the exigencies of war. L. G-S.

WITHDRAWS THE PICTURES.

In an auction of what the catalog stated were the oil paintings formerly owned by Dr. Smith, former Police Surgeon, contained in his former residence, No. 24 W. 37 St., on Dec. 2 last, there were cataloged certain oils as "by" Diaz, Schreyer, and other foreign painters, and also others as by J. G. Tyler, W. Merritt Post, Thomas Craig and other modern and living American artists.

The attention of the AMERICAN ART NEWS and of the District Attorney's office having been called to the sale, which was conducted by Mr. Benjamin S. Wise, who was notified that certain of these at least were not "by" the artists named, several of the pictures were withdrawn by Mr. Wise before the sale. On the following afternoon, after Mr. Wise had been requested by the District Attorney's office to bring there a picture cataloged as "by" an American artist, who declared he had never painted nor seen the canvas, a representative of Mr. Wise appeared and on being questioned stated that "he knew of twenty similar pictures."

FREER ART TO NATION.

The announcement in the AMERICAN ART NEWS last week that Mr. Charles L. Freer of Detroit, had decided to erect a building to cost a million, on the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, to house the large and important art collection he has bequeathed to the Nation, at his death, has been followed by the news that a resolution will be introduced in Congress by Representative Charles E. Doremus, for governmental sanction and a site for the building.

The Freer collections comprise the following:

About 1,200 examples of Whistler's work, oils, watercolors, pastels, etchings, lithographs, drawings in pencil-chalk, original copper plates of etchings and the famous Peacock Room which the great American painter decorated for Leyland, the English collector and ship owner.

Over 100 oils by American artists, including Tryon, Dewing, Thayer, Sargent, Hassam, Metcalf, Twachtman, Murphy and Melchers.

More than 1,600 pieces of ancient glazed pottery, from the Far and Near East.

More than 800 paintings on screens, scrolls and kakemono from Japan and China.

More than 500 pieces of sculpture, bronze, jade, lacquer and metal work from Japan and China.

A small collection of Egyptian art, including glass, pottery, bronze and sculpture. The rare Biblical Mss., classified as the Washington Mss.

THE E. R. BACON PICTURES.

It is passing strange that no journal, in the many obituaries of Edward R. Bacon that have been widely published of late, has even alluded to him as an art collector, and yet he was well known to the art world as an art lover and collector of note. He began to buy pictures, chiefly by the painters of the early English, Flemish and Dutch schools, some 25 years ago, and largely through Mr. Eugene Fischhof of Paris. Later he became a patron and close friend of the late Theron J. Blakeslee, from and through whom he secured the most notable works in his collection detailed below. His pictures, which number over 200, he kept in his large double apartment in his N. Y. apartment, where they occupied every inch of available space—some, like those of Mr. John G. Johnson, of Phila., being hung on doors.

canvas. The above canvases were shown in the Altman Gallery last Winter.

Reynolds—"Portrait of Mr. Barker, Architect."

Ruysdael, J.—"Landscape and Waterfall."

Le Brun, Vigée—"Portrait of Mme. Le Brun."

Mainardi—(Oval) "Madonna and Child."

Lawrence—"Portrait of Mrs. Michel," 40x50 in.

Zurburan—"Portrait of a Boy in Red," "Cardinal Gonzales," full length.

Romney—"Lady in White Turban and Dress" (Kit-Kat).

Reynolds—Portrait of Lady Ancaster with Large Hat.

Maes, Nicolas—"Portrait of Man in Big Wig," 40x50 in.

Lawrence—Full length, "Lady Standing by a Table."

Van Den Temple—"The Hyde Family."

DUCHESS OF ANCASTER

Sir Joshua Reynolds

Formerly in the collection of Earl de la Warr

In the collection of the late Edward R. Bacon.

Through his long business and social association with the late Robert Garrett, of Baltimore, Mr. Bacon, who succeeded to the friendship and confidence of Mr. Garrett's widow, later Mrs. Jacobs, of Baltimore, aided the latter in her collection of pictures, and was instrumental in Dr. and Mrs. Jacobs' securing, chiefly through the Blakeslee Galleries, the notable array of old pictures, for the most part of the early English school, which adorn the beautiful art gallery of the Jacobs residence, on Mt. Vernon Square, Baltimore.

Only in the late Autumn of 1913, before Mr. Blakeslee's death in March, 1914, Mr. Bacon had arranged for the purchase by Dr. and Mrs. Jacobs from the Blakeslee Galleries, of some $80,000 worth of old pictures. It is possible that the Bacon pictures will be sold at auction this winter.

More Notable Bacon Pictures.

The more notable of the pictures owned by Mr. Bacon are as follows:

Goya—"Señorita Tuzo."

Watteau—"Portrait of Rigaud."

Raeburn—"Full-length Portrait of Mrs. Hart." Mr. Bacon refused $150,000 for this

Van Sommers—"Portrait of a Princess," full length.

Hoppner—"Portrait of Mr. Simons and Son," full length.

Hogarth—"Portrait of a Woman," 35x30.

Barker of Bath—"Landscape."

Fragonard—Four important panels of "The Seasons."

Carreno—"Man Sitting by a Table."

Turner—"Marine—Battle Scene."

A "GOOD EXAMPLE."

Mr. N. M. Kaufman, of the Congress Hotel, Chicago, has purchased 700 oils by local artists, Charles F. Browne, Karl A. Buehr, R. H. Schmidt and Joseph Nuytteus, for $150,000, which he intends to place in the guest rooms of the hotel.

DETAILLE COL'N TO FRANCE.

A cable from Paris states that a collection of paintings and other art works belonging to M. Edouard Detaille, who died in Dec., 1912, has been presented to the French Gov't by the executor of his estate. The collection will be divided between the Musée Militaire and that at Versailles.

THE FREEDMAN PICTURES.

The following is as correct a list as can be obtained of the principal pictures, owned by the late Andrew F. Freedman, whose small but choice collection numbered some 40 examples.

Corot—"The Bathers," from the James A. Garland Collection.

Troyon—"Return from Market," from the last H. S. Henry sale.

Fromentin—"Fantasia" from the last H. S. Henry sale.

Henner—"Two nudes and two heads."

Harpignies—"Morning."

Dieterle—"Two landscapes with cattle at rest."

Diaz—"Forest Interior" and "Opening in the Forest."

Cazin—"Street Scene," "Sand Dunes" and "Landscape."

Daubigny—"River Oise."

Schreyer—"Arabian Horsemen."

Alma-Tadema—"Arcadia."

Dupré—"Cattle, Isle d'Adam."

Jacque—"Sheep at Pasture."

Isabey—"Court Yard at the Chateau."

Van Marcke—"Cattle in a Pool."

Clays—"River Scheldt—Dutch Fishing Smacks."

Ziem—"The Grand Canal."

Courbet—"Landscape and Grotto."

Thaulow—"River Arles" and "The Old Mill."

Rico—"Venetian Canal."

Pasini—"Le Marchand d'Etoffe."

Delacroix—"Lion at Prey."

Jacquet—"The Coquette."

Gérome—"The Mosque, Cairo."

Lessi—"Book Worm."

Brozik—"Family Interior."

Charlemont—"Cavalier."

Mr. Freedman, whose will directs that the bulk of his collection be sold, made the following bequests of pictures to friends: To Walter G. Oakman, Troyon's "Going to Market"; to John Fox (since deceased), a large oil by Julian Rix, and to Eugene L. Bushe, a Marie Dieterle.

HENRY C. ENO'S ART WORKS.

The will of the late Henry C. Eno, lately probated, shows that he left art and literary properties appraised as follows:

"Marine," by Van der Heyden, $650;

"Interior of Cathedral," Van Elben, $800;

edition of Benjamin Franklin's works, of 1768, $250; "The Shepherdness," Millet, first copy, $250; "Bloody Massacre," engraved and sold by Paul Revere, $250; a marine permit, signed by Thomas Jefferson, $50; "The Blacksmith," by Albert Cuyp, $2,000; a Shiraz rug, $1,500; a volume, "The Second Punic War," published in London, 1661, and bearing signature of William Penn, $350; a Russian enamel icon, $400;

a Russian icon, enamel on silver gilt, fifteenth century, $1,200; twelve Whistler etchings, Venice series, $6,000; George Washington's set of "Gordon's History of the Independence of the United States," four volumes, with owner's signature and bookplate in each, $500.

England To Lose Art Works.

London, Dec. 1, 1915.

It is gloomily, but generally, agreed in art circles that the next few years will see England practically denuded of the majority of art works, not included in the public collections, for small as is already the grant given to the National Gallery and other kindred institutions for the acquisition of works which may come into the market, the sum voted in future years will be considerably less, while in addition it will no longer be possible to raise large public subscriptions for the purchase of art works. Consequently England as a bidder in the art market will be practically negligible, and will have to resign itself with what grace it can to seeing America swallow up all that is most desirable in this direction. Of course in the pre-war days matters were already fairly serious, and the number of important art works which changed their habitation from the Old World to the New was far larger than England cared to see, but it may be taken for an accepted fact that this state of affairs will be far more acute by the end of this decade. L. G-S.

CHICAGO.

The daily attendance of visitors at the current Art Institute exhibition is so large that the officials accept it as a demonstration of increasing local art interest. On the first Saturday of the show, there were 11,485 visitors, and the crowds have grown ever since.

The standard of this annual show of American oils is qualified by the loaned paintings, which are not included in the competitive, or selected canvases, and these loans are not always individually approved by critics and visitors, although they enhance the value of the display as a whole. For these loans the Institute is indebted to the Metropolitan Museum, the Macbeth, Knoedler, Montross, Folsom and Snedecor galleries, of New York; the Smithsonian Institute, Washington; the Buffalo Academy; Milwaukee Art Association and Club; the National Gallery, the local Thurber, O'Brien and Young galleries, and Messrs. Charles L. Freer, Detroit; James A. Patten, Evanston; Paul Schultz, Kenilworth; C. K. Billings and Frank K. Zimmerer, New York; A. C. Goodwin, Evanston; Henry Tatnall, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Carter H. Harrison, Mrs. Walter L. Brewster, Clarence Darrow, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Webster, Mrs. E. M. Graham, Mrs. M. A. Little, Miss Dorsey Gibbs, A. Buhl, of Chicago, and others.

In the Galleries.

At O'Brien's, there is now on a display of American paintings by W. Herbert Dunton, Lois Wilcox, and Maynard Dixon. The latter artist shows pictures of Southwest scenery, Dunston exhibits Indian figures with landscapes, while Lois Wilcox contributes North Carolina landscapes.

The Reinhardt Gallery will open its season with an exhibition of oils by Harry B. Lachman, a young American artist, the same Lachman who recently won success in New York. The Reinhardt Galleries are at the south end of the Congress Hotel, not in "Congress Hall," as stated in last week's ART NEWS.

The Palette and Chisel Club is continuing the show of Gordon C. Ertz's paintings.

There's an assemblage of paintings by George Inness, Jr., at the American Art Gallery.

Auguste Lepere, the French etcher, is exhibited in a large assemblage of his pictures at Roullier's—and many of the Anders Zorn etchings are still on the walls.

Charles M. Lesaar, a Belgian artist, has established a studio here. A few months ago a score of his paintings were on show at a local gallery, and won applause for beauty of coloring and skillful interpretation.

"Snowfall in the Woods," by Everett L. Warner; "Lady Portrait," by Randall Davey, and a "Holiday," by Edward H. Pott-hast, have been presented to the Institute by the Friends of American Art.

H. Effa Webster.

WAR OVER NUDE POSES.

Dissension is rife in the Palette and Chisel Club of Chicago, owing to a disagreement over the propriety of posing a pretty nude female at the end of a 12-ft. telescope at 50c. a peep, at a party to be given shortly. The conservatives object and threaten to turn out the young blood element at the next election in January.

BOSTON.

For two days Copley Hall has been given up to the sale of a large and interesting collection of war posters and relics, gathered abroad by a fashionable Boston dilettante (Mrs. Fiske Warren). The proceeds of the sale will form another contribution to suffering Belgium, conducted in London for the Belgian refugees. That these vivid war posters are appreciated by the public is proven by a large public attendance and many sales. A touching feature of the sale was a number of articles made by the men in the trenches—poorly made, perhaps, but infinitely pathetic in their appeal. On its business side the affair was exceedingly well managed. One of the announcements contained this skillful touch: "Please don't say, 'I am bored with Belgium. I'd rather work for France.' Remember that if it were not for Belgium, there might be no France."

One cannot fail to comment on the alertly intelligent management of the Vose galleries. Once a year it has a gathering of small paintings by various artists for the benefit of the "average buyer," a feature that has always proved popular. To the show this year many of Boston's best painters have contributed, and the result has made the art critics "sit up and take notice."

Louis Kronberg's exhibition at the "Guild" continues to attract wide attention, not only from "the public," but the "best people" as well. It should be remembered, of course, that the Guild has a large associate membership of fashionables; but aside from this, Mr. Kronberg's pictures are good, and those canny Bostonians who backed this successful painter in his earlier days can now say, "I told you so." The "Guild," by the way, has a new and humble rival, in the recently formed association of younger artists who, presumably, have not yet "arrived"—but who hope to "arrive" quicker by thus banding themselves together. The infant association, with commendable enterprise, plans to change its shows each month, with a new jury for each occasion.

In a local gallery the etchings of one good painter, C. H. Woodbury, have been replaced by those of another, Frank W. Benson, who, it is reported, has recently completed an etched portrait of unusually large size.

When it comes to the matter of ancestor worship, the Bostonese can certainly beat the Chinese! Following the exhibition of "colonial portraits" at a local gallery comes another of photographs of ancestral doorsteps and facades! How our Puritan souls do revel in these things! And yet, leaving aside our well-known weakness for peering back, pictorially, into the glorious past, these photographs by one Mr. J. J. Hawes, a photographer who flourished back in the '40s and '50s, are really of exceptional value and interest. Think of a panorama of all the houses on Beacon Street, from the top of Beacon Hill down to Dartmouth Street, as they existed at that time! Think of a view taken of Boston Common, when the self-sufficient Back Bay was a malodorous swamp and the Public Garden naught but a Utopian dream!

The Museum has acquired a Primitive, attributed to Lippe Memmi, representing Christ and St. Catherine and between them, on a much smaller scale, the Christ Child standing between the seated Virgin and St. Anne. The predella is divided into three sections, at the left St. Margaret and the devil, at the right St. Michael and the dragon, in the centre a reconciliation scene two young noblemen having thrown down their arms, embracing under the influence of an angel. John Doe.

WASHINGTON.

The Smithsonian Institution announces that a portrait bust in bronze of the Right Honorable the Viscount Bryce, O. M., Ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, 1907 to 1913, executed by Henry Hudson Kitson, has been presented to the National Gallery of Art by the sculptor, and has been installed.

The program of a competition, for the design of a monument, commemorative of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner," to be erected at Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, has been issued by the War Department. Competitors are required to submit plans and a model executed to a scale of 1½ inches to the foot not later than April 1st, 1916.

In order to facilitate the work of the selection of artists, for the execution of such sculptural monuments, as may be erected, under the supervision of the Commission of Fine Arts, Colonel Wm. W. Harts, the Secretary of the Commission, has forwarded an invitation, to most of the best known American sculptors, to place on permanent file in his department, photographs not exceeding twelve in number, of what they consider their best works.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Phila. Watercolor Prize, offered by the friends of watercolor painting, has been awarded to Miss Alice Schille of Columbus, Ohio, the artist showing the strongest group of works in that medium in the current annual exhibition at the Pa. Academy. The money award with the prize is $200. Miss Schille exhibits a group of five works in pure aquarelle, pictures of the East Side and Coney Island. She previously won a gold medal at San Francisco, and the Corcoran Gallery Prize in Washington. The Jury of Award have withheld the Charles W. Beck Prize of $100 for the best work reproduced in color for publication.

Some 25 watercolors, pastels, lithographs, wood block prints, wood engravings, dry points and pencil drawings have been sold in the Exhibition, among them examples of C. W. Eaton, C. C. Cooper, G. Senseny, Paula Balano, a fine set of wood block prints by A. W. Doro, lithographs by L. C. Mullgardt, and a group of miniatures by F. McG. Knowles.

Mr. Edward T. Stotesbury has offered a new prize of $1,000 to the artist whose paintings are the most important contribution to the coming 111th annual Pa. Academy display.

A group of nine pastel portraits of children of prominent families has been on view last week at the galleries of Robinson and Farr, the work of Miss Josephine Streetfield. The drawing in these works is good and the color refined.

An exhibition of watercolors by the late Henry Bacon will open at the McClees galleries about Jan. 10. They have been shown before at the Boston Art Club and the St. Louis Museum.

Thirty-seven pieces of sculpture, and ten painted portrait sketches, the work of Prince Paul Troubetskoy, were on view at the Art Club to Dec. 5. Modernity is the keynote of these creations. Modeling in free, spirited movement shows itself in the posing of the figure pieces. Classic tradition has no place here. Only Nature as the artist sees it, and his interpretation absolutely free from influence of any academic rule.

A replica of a finely modeled head of Segantini, exposed at the Paris Exposition of 1900, and now in the Brera Gallery in Milan, is one of the conspicuous objects of the collection. Another, of Tolstoi, is wonderfully vital. The personality of Mr. Thomas F. Ryan is well indicated in a life-size, half-length portrait. The world of sport has its representative in a full length statue of Mr. Charles MacDonald of golfing fame. A statuette of Wilding, the tennis champion, who lost his life in the European war, besides being a very successful bit of motion study, has also a sentimental value. Among the portrait sketches in color, those of Dr. Christian Brinton and Mr. Craig Biddle deserve mention, as successful in portrayals of the essential points in the appearance of the gentlemen and realistic impressions of them, rather than copies. A very interesting and instructive biographical sketch of the sculptor and his work from the pen of Dr. Brinton appears in the catalog. This exhibition will be followed by the annual show of oils, by the members of the Art Club. Eugene Castello.

TOLEDO.

The Museum has received from Dr. Frank Gunsaulus of Chicago an important XIV century illuminated Mss., an elephant folio on fine vellum, by Bartholemeo Anglicus Glanville, a description of the world as it was known in the XIII century.

The exhibitions on this month at the Museum are one of the work of the American "Post Impressionists," another of pictures of Barbizon by Alexis Fournier, and a third, of the sculptures of Miss May Elizabeth Cook of Columbus, Ohio, who studied in Paris under Paul Bartlett.

President Libbey has presented the Museum with a typical example of the Swedish painter, Gustav A. Fjaestad, entitled "Silence—Winter."

The Museum has recently acquired a permanent collection illustrating the evolution of printing and engraving from 300 B. C. to the present day.

The Museum has installed a moving picture apparatus, the gift of Mrs. George W. Barnes, and various educational features have already been given to thousands of delighted people. "Movies" in a museum are indeed a novelty. What if the mummies should sit up and take notice?

The Museum has been enriched by a gift of quaint Ushabti, little images, more than 1,000 years old, given by the Egyptian Exploration Fund Committee; also by some fine examples of pottery, ivory objects, mirrors, alabaster vases, etc.

ROCHESTER.

Works of the modern English painters, Harrington Mann, Wm. Orpen, Charles Sims, Gerald Moira, La Thaugne and others, are on exhibition at the Memorial Art Gallery.

NEW ORLEANS.

The art loving public is enjoying one of the best collections of paintings, by modern American artists, that it has been its good fortune to see. There are some sixty oils, well hung in two adjoining rooms at the Delgado Museum, secured through the courtesy of Mr. William Macbeth of New York, who has probably contributed more to the advancement of American art, than any other one person. He has been quick to recognize merit in artists and his encouragement to American painters is well known here. This exhibit is especially strong in the landscape painters represented. There are examples of Chauncey F. Ryder, H. W. Ranger, Charles Warren Eaton, Ben Foster, A. L. Groll, and E. W. Redfield, all of which show a true inspiration.

There are some men, whose paintings are new to the local public, namely Arthur Davies, F. C. Frieseke, H. Lever, and Richard E. Miller, and their art productions are of exceptional interest. The work of Davies is the most interesting. Frieseke's is brilliant in color and broad in treatment. Lever's two pictures are of exceptional interest and appeal strongly, Miller's "Waiting" is a beautiful painting, and his style and manner are pleasing, Chas. W. Hawthorne's excellent canvas is full of feeling and unusual in color qualities and harmony, Robert Henri, well known here, is represented by two good examples and there are several works by Childe Hassam, who has been a favorite here since the exhibition of his "Rainy Day" under the auspices of the AMERICAN ART NEWS in 1907.

Mr. Cheshire L. Boone, who is well posted on American art, accompanies the exhibit, and his knowledge of each painter adds materially to the interest and value of the exhibit. He will deliver one or two illustrated lectures at the Museum and he will also talk at the Newcomb Art School, before leaving.

Etchings by members of the Chicago Society of Etchers will be exhibited at the Museum the last half of December and into January.

Luis Grañer, the noted Spanish painter, disposed of some thirty oils, all of good size, and painted five portraits while here. He is now en route to Bogota, Columbia. While here, he painted from the eighth floor of his hotel, a view overlooking New Orleans on a misty night, catching a glare of light at the junction of Perdido and Saint Charles streets for the center of his picture, which, with reflected lights from the streets in the background, give a fine effect. Notwithstanding his reputation in Europe as a painter of night, Mr. Grañer pronounced this better than any he had previously painted. The picture is now in the collection of Dr. I. M. Cline, who owns fourteen of Mr. Grañer's paintings.

ART CLUB FOR CHICAGO.

Chicago is to have an Art Club and a club building which will maintain reception rooms, luncheon and library as well as galleries for the Artists' Guild. The number of artist members is to be limited to fifty.

Mrs. Kernochan's Pictures.

Mrs. Eliza Sheriffe Kernochan, who died Dec. 20, 1914, left pictures valued at $10,900. These include an "Italian Landscape" by Corot and a "River Landscape" by Daubigny, valued at $3,000 each.

LONDON LETTER.

London, December 1, 1915.

There was a sale recently at Knight, Frank and Rutley's of the art works, belonging to the late Hon. Katherine Somerset, including Sir Thomas Lawrence's set, including the beautiful sisters, Ladies drawing of Fitzroy Somerset and Burghersh. Bagnot, Fitzroy Somerset and Burghersh. Some fine pieces of Louis XV and XVI furniture were also dispersed, the majority of them having been inherited from the first Baron Raglan, who is said to have bought very extensively in Paris when the city was in the occupation of the Allies.

It has now been decided that the Royal Academy will hold no Winter exhibition this year, the original intention of organizing a Show of Arts and Crafts and of French and Belgian works, having been definitely abandoned. The two deciding factors in this change of plan have been the difficulties due to present conditions and the inconvenience which would have been occasioned to the Red Cross Society, by the withdrawal of the loan of several of the Academy galleries, which would thus have been necessitated. So invaluable have these large rooms proved to the work of the Society that the Academy committee have agreed to further extend the space placed at its disposal.

The Kevorkian Sale.

The sale of the effects belonging to the Persian Art Galleries, of 28 New Bond Street, of which Mr. H. Kevorkian, now of New York, is the Managing Director is set for Dec. 7. The dispersal, which is being carried out under the management of Mr. J. O. O'Dell, is due to the action taken by certain creditors, who, however, are unlikely to secure any very satisfactory results, as the stock which remains in the galleries is both small in quantity and poor in quality. By the law of the land, the landlord's claim takes precedence of all others, so that the creditors may resign themselves to receiving something quite fractional.

The Raeburn portrait of Francis, Lord Seaforth, sold last week in the Arbuthnot dispersal, made £808 and panel of old Brussels tapestry £220.

Kitchener is Caricatured.

The aspect of Lord Kitchener, which shows him as an ardent collector of old Chinese Porcelain is neatly caricatured by Edmund Dulac in one of his pictures in the current exhibition at the Leicester Gallery. "Lord Kitchener Shows Emotion" is the title of the "jeu d'esprit" and the great personage is portrayed smashing a piece of choice "blue-and-white," in protest at some misdemeanor, evidently committed by a terrified menial. The incongruity of the grimly determined expression of the War Minister and the delicate charm of his ceramic treasures is cleverly brought out.

L. G-S.

GERMAN ART NOTES.

An exhibition was lately opened at Vienna of works of XIX Century artists from private collections; following up the display of old masters held in that city last winter.

According to the statements of a Swiss museum director, in a recent visit to Germany, he had counted on being able to purchase art works cheaply, but found himself disappointed. Prices had reached a notable height. Böcklins were selling at three times the maximum they had attained in Switzerland. Prices of Hödlers were also maintained, while the works of French artists realized good figures.

Commenting on an article from the pen of Thiébauld-Sisson, the "Temps" of Paris remarks that at the first sale since the war at the Hotel Drouot, prices were not only maintained at the level current before the war, but certain curiosities realized higher figures than had been long obtained.

The difficulty of purchasing curiosities is thus illustrated. Collectors are evidently holding on to their treasures and will only part with them under stringent circumstances. Reference is likewise made to similar conditions prevailing in London.

Dr. K. F. Hempel has presented to the city of Wiesbaden an endowment equalling $375,000, the interest of which will be devoted to purposes of art, science and social economy, as well as to traveling scholarships. The participants in the endowments will be appointed without regard to their religious or political opinion.

According to the Cassel correspondence of the Kunstchronik, the opinion prevalent at the outbreak of the war that there would not be any encouragement to hold art exhibitions during its course has proved groundless. While the picture galleries register a diminished number of visitors the attendance of the German public has been scarcely below the normal rate. The troops in training likewise formed an appreciable contingent of interested visitors, as well as those convalescent.

A RUG FETCHES $250,000.

Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice, formerly Mrs. George D. Widener, has bought from the Duveen Brothers, 720 Fifth Ave., a magnificent Ishapan rug, which formerly figured in the palace at Delhi of the Grand Mogul, and is now in her Newport establishment. The price is said to be a very large one, one chronicler setting it up at $250,000, while Mr. Henry Duveen refused to discuss it. The rug is 58½ ft. long by 18 ft. wide, and was made in the latter part of the XVIII Century. It is stated that it was used only for festivities and religious ceremonies. Its ground is red, with flowers, scrolls, etc., in yellow, green, mauve and black. The wide green border is similarly decorated.

Prizes at Woman's Show.

At the current exhibition of small pictures and sculptures held by the Association of Women Painters and Sculptors at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., the first prize for the best painting has been awarded to Martha Walter and that for the best sculpture to Bernice Langton.

MUSEUM BUYS A DELLA ROBBIA.

The Minneapolis Museum has acquired the "Goddess Pomona," by Giovanni Della Robbia, from the Butler Collection, London. Dr. W. Bode states: "The glazed figure of Pomona by Giovanni Della Robbia is far the best example of this figure several times repeated by him and in his studio. This example is the most complete and the finest, and has an unusually fine glazing and preservation. It must be a very early work of his, still under his father, Andrea's influence."

The Joan of Arc Statue.

With suitable ceremony, in which Ambassador Jusserand participated, Anna V. Hyatt's equestrian statue of Joan of Arc, who as usual rises in her stirrups almost upon the horse's neck, was unveiled Monday by Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, at Riverside Drive and 93 St. The Ambassador on behalf of the French Gov't presented J. Sanford Saltus, honorary pres't of the Statue Committee, with the cross of the Legion of Honor, and the sculptor with the rosette of an officer of Public Instruction. It would seem as if the rewards should have been reversed.

Charles Field Haseltine.

Charles Field Haseltine, artist, art dealer and proprietor of the Haseltine Galleries, in Phila. was found dead in his apartment over the galleries Dec. 5 from heart disease.

Mr. Haseltine was one of the best-known art dealers in this country and an artist of recognized ability. He was born in Phila. July 29, 1840, and was educated at the University of Pa. After his graduation he entered a dry goods commission house, and later entered that business for himself. Subsequently he was a member of the firms of Haseltine & McCope and John H. Williams & Co. He was married in 1863 to Miss Elizabeth Holmes Patterson, of Pittsburgh. His wife died in 1891.

When the Civil War started Mr. Haseltine called a mass-meeting in the Musical Fund Hall, out of which was organized the Keystone Battery. Mr. Haseltine was elected first lieutenant. In 1868 he entered the art-dealing business on Chestnut Street. Several times his place of business was changed because of fire.

His loss will be felt both in business and social circles. The art galleries, of which he was the proprietor, have always been noted for the high class of work exposed there, owing to his "expert" knowledge and discriminating taste in selection of modern productions. Many of the notable private collections in Phila. have been assembled with his aid as a connoisseur. The Union League Club Loan Exhibitions, which were organized by him a few years ago, were the most important events of the art life in the city. His judgment as to the genuineness of a painting by Mauve in the recent Gruppe-Kinsley suit recently was an important feature of the testimony in that case and no doubt had much to do with the decision in favor of the plaintiff.

Edward Rathbone Bacon.

Edward Rathbone Bacon, lawyer and art collector, died, following an operation for appendicitis at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Dec. 2 last. He was born in New York City, Nov. 22, 1848, and was admitted to the bar in Buffalo in 1869. He lived there until a few years ago, when he removed to New York, where he made his home with his brother, W. Rathbone Bacon, who married Miss Barker, a granddaughter of Commodore Vanderbilt, at the large Knickerbocker apartment house, which the brothers owned, at 247 Fifth Ave.

Mr. Bacon made a large fortune through his handling legal matters connected with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the late Robert W. Garrett, and especially through participation in the placing of five millions of the road's stock in 1892. He was counsel for several railroads at different times and was president of the Baltimore & Ohio and Southwestern road in 1891. He never married. (See story of Mr. Bacon as an art collector on Page 1).

CHANGE IN ADDRESS.

When a change of address is requested,
both the new and old address should be given. Two weeks' notice is required for changing an address.

DISCONTINUANCES.

If a subscriber wishes his or her paper
discontinued at expiration of his or her subscription, notice to that effect should be
sent; otherwise it will be assumed that a continuance is expected and bill will be sent
and payment should follow.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

ART IN GERMANY.

The war, it would appear, has surprisingly not destroyed the art interest and activities of Germany as is seemingly proven by the art notes from that country we have published from time to time during the past year, and more of which we publish this week.
But, despite the many items relating to exhibitions, past and to come, public and private sales of art works, etc., we notice the already long and lengthening list in our obituary columns of German artists and dealers killed in battle.
Some of our English and French friends and correspondents and also many Americans who are pro-Ally, write and assert that this output of German art news is only a huge "Bluff." We know not as to this, but our function as a newspaper compels us to publish what appears to be
"news"—no matter from what country
it proceeds.

AUCTION BUYERS, BEWARE!

It would be well for the large element who frequent and purchase at some of the many art auctions, especially those advertised to be held in private residences or apartments in town or country, to, if possible, examine the art objects and especially the pictures offered and to study the Catalogs of such sales,
in advance.

While the laws governing auction
sales, and which naturally cover art auctions, are strict and explicit, they are constantly evaded by unscrupulous auctioneers in this country, and notably in New York—where every week during the art season, art works, and especially pictures, advertised as being by famous, well known, and even inferior, Foreign and American artists are advertised in the dailies and unblushingly cataloged and sold as genuine, to people often ignorant of the technique and style of artists and artisans, with only a smattering of knowledge as to names,
and who rely upon the statements of Catalogs and auctioneers.

We propose to keep a close watch, in the interests of our artist and art-loving patrons, on certain art auctions from this time forth. We cannot prevent foolish people purchasing, for a few dollars, canvases purporting to be,
and cataloged as being, "by" old and modern Foreign or even American artists who are dead, but we can and will protect, to the utmost, our patrons and the art public from being deceived
by flaring advertisements and cleverly worded notices into the attendance and purchase at certain art auction sales, of frequently spurious and comparatively worthless art works.

There are a few—very few—reputable art auction houses, whose sales can be attended and patronized with safety and the sales of these reputable houses and firms we record in our news columns and publish their announcements and addresses in our advertising and news columns. On these houses and firms our patrons and the art public can rely.

TWO ART COLLECTORS DEAD.

In the obituary notices of Edward R.
Bacon and Andrew Freedman, and the list of their pictures, published elsewhere in this issue, comment is made that no notice whatever was made in the dailies throughout the country of the fact that both men were art collectors of note.

They were modest in their collecting,
to be sure, but their activities in collecting and their ownership of a number of important pictures, was well known to the art trade. It has remained, however, for the Art News, alone of all American publications, to record the news of the art treasures left by both Messrs. Bacon and Freedman, another evidence of the value of this journal to the art trade and art lovers in general.

J. F. SUTTON LEFT $350,000.

The will of James F. Sutton, of the American Art Association, who died at Bedford Hills, N. Y., Nov. 24, leaves $350,000, his entire fortune, to his widow, Mrs. Florence Sutton, daughter of the late R. H. Macy of N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE

The Armored Portrait of William Penn.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:
The communication by my esteemed friend, Mr. Edward Robins, in your last issue, is evidently intended to leave the impression that the armored portrait of William Penn, belonging to the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and presented by Granville John Penn to that body, is an original portrait of Penn painted from life.
It is true, Mr. Robins, or the record of the Historical Society does not say so, neither does Mr. Granville John Penn's letter of presentation say so, indeed it says very much the reverse. This question is our old friend "Mons. Tonson come again"; it has been threshed out many times. It is not necessary for me to express any opinion upon the subject, when so competent and able a writer as Doctor Sydney George Fisher, for many years a member of the Council of the Pa. Historical Society, has presented the "facts" so forcibly and so succinctly on pp. 13-14 of his "The True William Penn" (1900) that they are, as well
stated facts always are, the best argument.
Dr. Fisher says:

"The armor portrait in the possession of the Pa. Historical Society, was given by Granville Penn 1833, and is described in the Society's Catalog of Paintings as 'entirely authentic.' It was for a long time believed by the uninitiated to be an original, and the statement usually made was that the family had had two portraits, both painted from life and by the same artist, and had retained one of them after giving the other to the Historical Society. But recently in cleaning
the one belonging to the Historical Society,
it was found to be of a very modern date,
and seem to have been painted within the first half of the nineteenth century.

"It might be supposed that the one remaining in England, in the possession of Major William Dugald Stuart, might have been taken from life; but now it appears that there is another of these armor portraits in the possession of J. Merrick Head, Esq., of Pennsylvania Castle, Dorset. Both are claimed by their owners to be originals.
But connoisseurs have grave doubts of their authenticity, because little or nothing is known of their history, and it is not even known by whom they were painted. They are not in the least like the Beaven carving of Penn, the only likeness of him which is at all well authenticated."

Dr. Fisher reproduces the armor portrait belonging to the Pa. Historical Society, and the one belonging to Major Stuart, to show their dissimilarity.

Are Boston Painters the Strongest?

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: "Straight-from-the-Shoulder" continues to "tilt at windmills." Nobody in Boston was jealous of Sorolla, a very nice little fellow and a good painter, although grossly over-rated in the press agency
"dope" fed out at the time of his big exhibition. I attended the opening reception, to which "Straight-from-the-Shoulder" refers, and I am sure that I saw there almost everybody who is anybody hereabout. If any suburban painter stayed away it was to get a good night's sleep and come to Copley Hall next morning, when the pictures could be seen to better advantage.
Boston did by Sorolla fully as well as his works merited. The exhibition paid, and it got generally sympathetic criticism from artists, some of whom can paint rings around the Spaniard.

Now consider "Straight-from-the-Shoulder's" other windmill. What boots it to compare the Pa. Academy with the Boston Museum school? Both are excellent institutions for training artists. If one were going to institute a statistical comparison
as to which art school has produced the greatest number of distinguished artists I should like, as a loyal, if unworthy, alumnus
of the Art Students' League of New York, to suggest that perhaps the figures for forty years would show our co-operative alma mater to be in the lead, even although its peculiar distinction has been to be rather a school of good academic drawing than of modern painting. Both the Pa. Academy and the Boston School have been, at least of late years, great schools of painting, and Boston and Phila. today, as distinguished from New York, run perhaps a little more strongly to the mode of painting, as opposed to drawing in color. I have spent comparatively little time in Phila., while I have been living in Boston for now twelve years, so that local prejudice may conceivably affect the judgment that there are here rather more good painters. (I don't mean illustrators or decorators or symbolists or exponents of preciousness), than there are in the Pa. capital. This judgment, whether valid or not, would certainly seem to have been confirmed by the findings of the San Francisco jury and of many other juries of the past ten years.

Neo-Bostonian.

Boston, Dec. 7, 1915.

[We regret that our correspondent has evidently not read the Art News' story of the San Francisco awards, studied the list of these awards, and digested our several editorial comments upon said awards and the manner of their bestowal—both almost a public art scandal and universally condemned, save apparently in Boston.
Had he so "read, marked and inwardly digested" we do not believe he would have quoted the San Francisco awards to the Boston painters, as confirmatory evidence of either their ability or superiority.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

Andrew Freedman.

scale, was closely associated with Richard Croker, and was chiefly instrumental in the formation of the first Rapid Transit Construction Co. He interested himself in baseball. He was director in many companies and died, as he lived, a very wealthy man. He never married.

As was the case with the late Edward R. Bacon, the fact that Mr. Freedman was an art collector and one of note, entirely and curiously escaped the notice of the dailies in their obituaries of the man. Unlike Mr. Bacon, Mr. Freedman did not patronize any one dealer exclusively, but,
although he made many purchases from and through Knoedler & Co., he secured
many of his finest canvases at the more important picture auctions of the past few years.

A list of his most important pictures owned by Mr. Freedman, which it is currently reported will, like the Bacon pictures,
be sold at auction and possibly this season,
appears on page 1.

Georges Hoentschel.

Georges Hoentschel, the well-known collector and general director of the Magazines
du Louvre, died in Paris, Tuesday night, at the age of 55. He was one of the board of directors of the Figaro. His collection of XVIII Century carved woodwork, now in the Metropolitan Museum, was bought by the late J. Pierpont Morgan. The latter also acquired for $1,000,000, it is stated M.
Hoentschel's collection of XIII Century religious art. The Parisian collector later began a collection of XVIII Century miniatures and ivories. The Hoentschel collection at the museum consists besides the woodwork, of sculptures, champeve work, enamels and ivories. The collector, who was a widower, with two children, visited
New York in February, 1911, to see his collections at the Metropolitan Museum.

Paul E. Harney.

Paul E. Harney, animal, genre and portrait painter, died Nov. 27 at a hospital in St. Louis aged 65. He was born in New Orleans and studied in N. Y. and Munich.
He had been a teacher in the St. Louis School of Fine Arts, and was a member of the Art Commission of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. His pictures of monkeys were specially notable. Mr. Harney was for some years associated with the late Halsey C. Ives, art director of the New Orleans, Chicago and St. Louis Expositions.

Hans Rossmann.

The painter Hans Rossmann recently passed away after a long illness, aged 47.
In 1912 his health forced him to give up the position of Professor at the Breslau Art Academy. His principal works had been those in the Breslau Rathaus, where the decorative treatment of the "Schweid-nitz" cellar was much admired. He participated in the 1909 exhibition of the Silesian Artists' Union. His early training as the son of a stained glass artist was of value
in his later career.

Dr. Hermann Brandt.

Dr. Hermann Brandt, German art critic and historian, recently succumbed to his wounds received in battle. He was born in 1887 and studied at Heidelberg, where he gained a degree for his essay on "The Beginnings of German Landscape Painting in the 14th and 15th centuries." Medieval German art had always been his chief subject.

REULING COLL. PRIMITIVES.

The late Dr. George B. Reuling of Baltimore, whose sudden death Nov. 26 last so saddened a wide circle of friends, was an enthusiastic and indefatigable collector of old pictures. He has left a collection of most interesting and some important paintings in his handsome parlor gallery on West Monument Street, Baltimore. His large and fine example of Jacob Jordaens was reproduced in a full page in the ART NEWS of Nov. 27, and this week five of the more important Primitives in the collection are reproduced. These are as follows:

Ghirlandajo, "Holy Family," from the collection of the Marquis Farinola, of Florence. This work has been examined by Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Berenson and declared by them to be authentic.

Cranach, Lucas, "The Approaching Death of the Virgin Mary," from the collection of Baron von Frehse, Dresden. This picture was written of and reproduced in the London Sketch. It is certified by Drs. Bode and Valentiner and contains a portrait of the artist as well as those of Luther and Melancthon among others.

Perugino, "Madonna," presented by King John of Saxony to Hofrath Dr. Abegg of Elbing near Dresden.

Francia, "Madonna, Christ Child and St. John," Collection of Hofrath Abegg, of Elbing, near Dresden.

Mabuse, "Madonna," certified by Dr. Valentiner.

Dr. Reuling's Funeral.

The funeral of Dr. George Reuling, medical specialist and art collector, who died Nov. 25 last, took place Nov. 27 from his Baltimore residence, 103 West Monument Street. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Chilton Powell, of St. Mary's Episcopal Church, conducted services. The honorary pallbearers were Mayor Preston, Alexander Brown, William F. Lucas, Rudolph Sangmeister, Henry J. Hilken, Joseph Wise and John Gill, Jr., and Drs. Henry Wood, William B. Wolf, Ridgely B. Warfield, John D. Blake, Samuel K. Merrick, A. C. Pole, Harry C. Peterman, D. C. Streett, Frank Martin and Samuel T. Earle, Jr.

Seldom have there been so many floral tributes sent to the home of any well-known Baltimore resident as came to the Reuling home. Several wagons were required to haul them to Greenmount Cemetery. There were more than 100 pieces, some of them very large and beautiful. Hundreds of telegrams and letters of condolence were received by Mrs. Reuling from Baltimore and other cities.

CLEVELAND.

Colin Campbell Cooper and Mrs. Cooper, who are now in San Francisco painting the vanishing glories of the Exposition under official commission, have some thirty of their well known oils, painted in Hindustan, on exhibition just now at the Gage gallery.

The Art Museum announces several new acquisitions including a rare Chinese carving and several volumes for the art library.

The Woman's Art Club is holding its annual exhibition and has two smaller travelling exhibitions out, in Elyria and Ashtabula.

William M. Chase spent two days here recently in connection with the opening of an exhibition of his work at the Hatch Art galleries.

Jessie C. Glasier.

BALTIMORE.

An effective mural decoration by Mary Sherwood Wright of Ohio has recently been unveiled at the Calvert, a well known children's private school.

The painting was done directly on the wall, commercial paints having been used for all parts of the work with the exception of the faces.

Miss Wright's scheme was to present a series of the familiar personages from Mother Goose, the Arthurian legends, fairy tales and other sources of childhood lore, and she has succeeded admirably in catching the spirit of the different episodes. The whole decoration is blithe, animated and marked with appealing flashes of humor.

Plans for the Baltimore Watercolor Club's annual exhibition Jan. 3-30 next, are rapidly nearing completion. The display will be of customary large proportions and many paintings by distinguished artists will be invited from the N. Y. and Phila. watercolor displays. The Bakst works which attracted so much attention at Phila. will be shown.

The present Peabody exhibition includes 35 oils by five Baltimore artists, Camelia Whitehurst, L. Hazelhurst Vinton, Ruth A. Anderson, S. Edwin Whiteman and N. R. McGill Mackall, all of this city. It is the strongest display of oils by local artists seen here for a number of years. Each of the artists is well represented, several of the canvases being works of distinction.

KANSAS CITY.

An important exhibition of paintings by the French impressionists, loaned by the Durand-Ruel Galleries, of N. Y. and Paris, has followed the etching show at the Fine Arts Institute. All the famous names of the early movement of the '60's and '70's, Monet, Manet, Degas, Sisley, etc., are represented.

The Findlay Gallery has been showing etchings by Axel Haig, Hedley Fitton, Roth, Pennell, Whistler, Millet, etc. Mr. Willis G. Dowden, of New York, is in charge of a number of his paintings by Jules Hereau, Monchablon, Picault, Julian Rix and others. Oils by Irving Couse, Chase, Franz Charlet, Julian Onderdonk, Leonard Ochtman and Bruce Crane are being shown by a representative of the Schultheis Galleries of N. Y.

The Rombong has been exhibiting a large number of delicate watercolors by Charles Francis Adams, chiefly scenes of Western valleys and ranges, done with a fine deftness that is surprising, because it never descends to tight, "smug" handling. Etchings and wood block prints by Helen Hyde will occupy the walls at The Rombong this week.

Oils owned in Kansas City have been shown at the City Club the past week, among them two Verboeckhovens, a Martin Rico and an oil by Georges Croegaert.

George Bellows has two canvases at the annual exhibition which opened this week

CINCINNATI.

Among the features of the party given in honor of Frank Duveneck at the Art Academy, Dec. 4, were beautiful living pictures reproducing the best known paintings included in the artist's room at the Exposition. Several of the original model's dresses, forty and more years old, were used. The climax of the pictures was reached when Duveneck himself posed for DeCamp's well known portrait of him. Further there was the presentation of messages written for this occasion by the best known of his former pupils, among them Joseph DeCamp, Theodore Wendel, George Hopkins, and Oliver Dennett Grover, who also personally attended. Finally the ceremonious bestowal of a large medal, one side of which showed the features of Duveneck, the other the inscription: "From the Society of the little Duvenecks."

Robert Henri's "One Man Show" and the annual exhibition of the Cincinnati Art Club are the important local art events at present.

In Henri it is again his joyous, direct dash of execution, together with his "go" for character—let charm and prettiness take care of themselves—that form the qualities to thrill at once upon entering the Art Museum gallery, where his pictures are hung.

This year's Art Club exhibition is not only the largest in the Club's history (350 canvases are shown), but also from the artistic viewpoint, the most brilliant the Club has produced. As last year, the exhibition is held on the ground floor of the Union Central Building, in the heart of the city. Among the men best represented are: Frank Duveneck, L. H. Meakin, J. R. Hopkins, H. H. Wessel, J. Kunz, J. Rettig, Ed. Volkert, J. Webber, B. Miller and J. D. Wareham.

IS A PORTRAIT A PICTURE?

The question as to the ownership of a number of portraits by Italian and other masters recently came before a London court on an application by Major Arthur Austen Layard in reference to a bequest in the will of the late Sir Henry Austen Layard. The question the judge was asked to decide was whether the legacy given to the applicant included pictures at the testator's residence, Casa Capello, Venice, and at the National Gallery, or whether the Trustees of the National Gallery were entitled to claim any or all of the paintings under a bequest to them.

The bequest to Major Layard was of portraits of "myself and my family and other portraits, except the portrait of my uncle Benjamin Austen."

Major Layard contended that a number of pictures at the Venice house were included in the bequest, and the two pictures now in the National Gallery, viz.: "Lady and Child," and "Portrait of a Gentleman," both by Netscher, were portraits.

Pictures or Portraits?

For the plaintiff, Mr. Frank Russell, said what the court really had to decide was: When is a portrait not a portrait? It being contended for the National Gallery trustees that some of the pictures were not portraits in the meaning of the bequest.

What the trustees would say he imagined was that a portrait is not a portrait when it does not pass to the National Gallery.

A deal of evidence by well-known painters, art critics and others was read on both sides with the object of showing what pictures were or were not portraits.

at McPherson, Kan. Fifteen oils by Birger Sandzen, and a number by Fern Coppedge and John R. Carlson of Woodstock are included. Etchings and sculpture by Malvina Hoffman, Anna Coleman Ladd, Mahonri Young, Albin Polasek and others complete the exhibition. R. J. Block.

TORONTO.

An interesting exhibition of sculpture by local artists is now on at the Art Museum at the Grange. Two former N. Y. artists—who for three years had a studio in McDougall Alley there—Miss Frances Loring and Miss Florence Wyle, are among the chief exhibitors. Numerous clever models and portrait busts—which are excellent likenesses—show the rapid and sincere work of the two clever girls who share a studio here. One of Miss Loring's lifelike bronze models is a mounted N. Y. policeman, while a fine bust of Sir Robert Borden has been modelled by Miss Wyle.

Emmanuel Hahn exhibits a well posed bronze figure of "Thundercloud," an old Indian, as well as several other works. J. L. Bank's horses in bas relief are exceptionally good as well as his model for a King Edward Memorial. Two beautiful bas reliefs in bronze are the work of Frederick Coates, a young English artist. His work is classical in style.

Miss Winnifred Kingsford, M. Olis, E. L. Laur, and Alfred Howell, complete with their good work one of the finest exhibitions of sculpture ever held here.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

Thumb Prints of the West.

A number of very capable technicians, to be exact 13, who are members of the Society of Men Who Paint the Far West, are giving their third exhibition, to Dec. 31, at the Macbeth Gallery, 450 Fifth Ave. The display is remarkable, aside from its pictorial interest, on account of the first public appearance of a new method of guaranteeing the authenticity of pictures by the thumb print, in the paint, of the artist.

Thomas Moran, the originator of this scheme, has thus marked his three contributions, just over his signature. The canvases of this veteran artistic explorer, whose "Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone," was displayed in New York some 33 years ago, when Albert Bierstadt was in the height of his vogue with Far Western landscapes, are "Indian Peak, Wyoming," "Mist in the Canyon" and "Castle Rock, Green River, Wyoming."

So capable a painter is Mr. Moran, that it is no discredit to his co-exhibitors to say they, except perhaps in more modern, if not more skillful, ways of laying on of paint, have gone but little beyond him. And again he has poetized, while they have in the main but realized. And clever as it is, it is all so painty, almost scene painty. The color of the locale is often so hot that in a few cases the landscapes seem to rise half fused out of volcanic embers.

William Ritschel, De Witt Parshall, Carl Rungius, E. H. Potthast and William Wendt present in landscape, perhaps the most successful series of examples, while Ernest L. Blumenschein and E. Irving Couse uphold the standard of the figure painters, the former chiefly with the picturesque "Chief Warbonnet and His Eagle Wing" and "Son of the Wind," and the latter with "Medicine Water," "A Firelight Interior" and "Two Hunters," who seem to be watching a young forest grow.

There are strong and beautiful color and dramatic effect in Ritschel's seashore "Morning, Carmel," "The Storm, California," with its fine skyscape and the shore, "Morning, Monterey." Theatrical, but grandiose, is De Witt Parshall's "From the River," while Rungius lays out with fine regard for geological truth, as well as pictorial effect, "The Upper Bow," "At the Forks" and "Mount Athabaska." Wendt's "Summer Days" is largely presented, while the dragged stroke has its due effect in the hot air over his "Mountain and Meadow."

Mr. Potthast shows "Rising Mists," from a canyon, while his "Snow Clad Peaks" rise in well-distanced terraces, under a beautiful turquoise sky. Others represented are Gardner Symons, with a very sketchy altar, and church interior, and the unusual composition, "The Bell, San Xavier Mission;" Albert L. Groff, always serene; Eliot Daingerfield, smoulderingly effective with "Inimities;" Ben Foster, whose skies are fine but whose rocks have a rather pulled taffy effect, and F. Ballard Williams.

The MacDowell Club Display.

The majority of canvases in the latest MacDowell Club group display, 108 W. 55 St., all by women, are decidedly mediocre. In the work of these immature painters, however, one occasionally finds appealing qualities missed in pictures by men and women who have "arrived."

Some landscapes by Sarah N. Ives are pleasing and Josephine M. Lewis shows interpretations of childhood, sincere and quiet in color, which are about the best portraits in the group. They would, in fact, hold their own in any company. Another woman with ability is Matilda Brownell, who, like Miss Lewis, was a pupil of Macmonnies. Among the most noteworthy of her flower pictures is a still life wherein enormous single white peonies and pieces of copper are effectively arranged. Ruth Bobbs uses color daringly and draws well, her woman in brown, leaning on a bright red chair is effective, and there is much originality and charm in her little girl reading—entitled "Mary Lois."

Caroline Bean Blommers' girl in a blue kimona, arranging tulips, has charm, and her flower studies are realistic and fresh.

Photographs at Print Gallery.

Among the most artistic examples from a notable showing of photographs at the Print Gallery, 707 5th Ave., are Geo. S. Seeley's "Maiden with Bowl," A. Thibaudau's head of a girl and Clarence White's "Nazimova." Arnold Genthe's delightful but too well-known portrait of Mrs. Norman Galt is shown, and he is represented by an interesting view of New York as well. Amy Whittmore's work has much charm.

The 57 works, representing 38 photographers, were selected by a committee composed of Mr. Henry W. Kent, Albert Sterner and Dr. F. Weitenkamp.

Tapestries and Textiles.

The monthly press view, at the Metropolitan Museum, on Dec. 3, was of unusual importance, signaling as it did the opening of a magnificent display of tapestries and textiles, arranged chiefly for the benefit of artists, artizan and manufacturers, and especially timely, in view of the stimulation of all industries by the great war.

It showed that in the department of the decorative arts, as applied to the furnishing of the house, as well as the clothing of the person, both in ordinary life and on the stage, it is no longer essential that the artist or the artizan seek his models and his general inspiration in Europe or the Orient. The display will last through January and probably through February.

The new collections, opened with an invitation private view, on Monday, are arranged in the special exhibitions galleries, where four are devoted to the textile display, and the special exhibitions and entrance hall, where eight important tapestries bequeathed by Mrs. Robert McM. Gillespie of New York and Stanford, Conn., are shown.

With these is a loan portrait of the donor by the late J. Wells Champney.

The display of textiles is remarkably well arranged, features of it being costumed lay figures and pictures and prints, from the museum collections, in which the costumes are a feature. The textiles are placed on the walls on screens and in cases, in chronological order, beginning with the earliest Oriental specimens followed by the products of Byzantium and examples of Gothic and Rococo work. The near East, China and Japan are also represented. The catalog gives a history of the art of weaving and there are post cards on sale with reproductions of some of the principal speci-

Two Painters at Goupil's.

Works by Ruth Murchison and Riichird Kawashima are on view to Dec. 18 at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St. Miss Murchison shows 14 oils, all but the picture of an "Old Woman of Volendam," and two or three child subjects having the same young woman model, chiefly in profile, and variously costumed. The examples, which show some feeling for color, are vigorously, if somewhat coarsely, handled and are effective.

Mr. Kawashima, who paints in the European manner, has the Japanese appreciation of color and shows a leaning towards the pleinairists and impressionists. His views in Paris, Venice and elsewhere in Europe are attractive, while his genres, such as the Japanese scene "Summer Eve" and the "Tea Hour," are charming. "The Garden" has in types and arrangement a suggestion of Puvis de Chavannes.

Pictures by Parrish.

Stephen Parrish, who some thirty years ago won fame as an etcher, and now devotes much of his time to painting, has on view to Dec. 23, at the Braun Galleries, 13 W. 46 St., a most attractive group of 25 landscapes. He paints with suave strength, composes and colors well and details his landscape incidents in a fashion that recalls Pokitinov. The scenes are at Cope Cod and elsewhere in New England, in Normandy and Venice. There is a beautiful sky in "Plainfield, N. H." and "Drying Sails—Granville, Normandy," has a touch of Boudin. There is fine morning light in "Gloucester Harbor" and tender feeling in "Gloucester Evening." "Moorland" is remarkable for its pool of sunshine, on the distant sea horizon.

mens. Among those who loan examples, besides the museum itself, are the Cooper Union, the Pratt Institute, Messrs. Charles L. Freer, Mortimer H. Schiff, George Blumenthal, Julian C. Levi, H. G. Dearth and H. Outhout Milliken, Dr. Denman W. Ross and Mr. H. E. Wetzel of Boston, Mrs. Archibald G. Thompson of Phila., and Dr. Bashford Dean of the Museum.

Among the Gillespie tapestries, selected by the museum from a number left by Mrs. Gillespie, are Flemish XVII century examples in one of which Pomona is the central figure of a vintage school and the other a "Fishing Scene," a Gothic XV century example showing "The Adoration of the Magi," and others depicting "Courts of Love."

A XV century Siamese bronze Buddha and other heads are recent purchases of the museum. A Renaissance red velvet dalmatic was presented by Sir Charles L. Waldstein of London in memory of the parents of his wife, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Einstein of this city. It is one of a series of vestments given by Charles V. to the Cathedral of Burgos.

Nadelman at the Secession.

Eli Nadelman, a sculptor of talent and strong individuality, lately arrived from Paris, who leans to the cavortings of the disciples of the "newest art," is showing to Jan. 8 at the Photo-Secession Gallery, 291 Fifth Ave., a number of bronzes and marbles which, despite exaggerations, show fine plastic qualities. He also shows sketches in sculpture and drawings in charcoal and gouache, which are strange reductions of human figures.

In the same galleries Louise de Gignilliat Rogers is showing an interesting series of colored etchings of N. Y. street scenes, with a few portraits, the former so foreign in method that the local character is lost, while Fifth Ave. is little more imposing than a side street, like the quasi-Rue de la Paix of 46 St.

Ettore Caser at Parkway Gallery.

At the Cathedral Parkway Gallery, 2837 Broadway, Ettore Caser is showing oils, watercolors and etchings, eighteen in all. His work is idealistic and has subtle charm. Bits of Venice and Greece, quaint old palaces and poetic landscapes, not at all in the modern vein, are decidedly restful and pleasing. The artist seems quite as successful with the needle as with the brush.

Thumb Boxes at Katz Gallery.

The Thumb Box Exhibition at the Katz Galleries, 103 W. 74 St., contains over 470 so-called sketches, Benj. Eggleston's "Magic Crystal" is a beautiful little work. Hayley Lever shows St. Ives subjects, and E. Potthast a group of twelve sketches. There are also groups by P. Cornoyer, Warren Eaton, Chauncey Ryder, Bruce Crane, Guy C. Wiggins, G. Wiegand, Jane Peterson and A. Hutty. "The Water Front," by Jonas Lie, is charmingly atmospheric. John Follinsbee and Mr. Chichester show sunny landscapes which contrast with Bolton Brown's gloomy subjects. Ruth Palmer and Sara Noble Ives send decorative impressions and the work of F. S. Chase is joyous. John Carlson, Charles P. Gruppe and his son Emil Gruppe also add to the attractiveness of the display.

The exhibition will be open Tuesday nights until ten.

A most interesting Inness, painted in Florida in '93, has been recently acquired by these galleries.

C. C. Coleman at Rose Gallery.

At the Rose Gallery, 246 Fifth Ave., Charles Caryl Coleman, the American painter, recently returned from an eight years' sojourn in Italy, is giving a representative exhibition of 66 of his most important works, oils, pastels and drawings in tempera. "The Return from the Crucifixion" and other large religious canvases are well composed and most impressive.

There are many scenes in the Island of Capri, warm sunlight on vine covered pillars, interiors, painted in Mr. Coleman's studio there and gardens in moonlight. Among the most interesting of the varied subjects, is a picture of Vesuvius, in eruption, as the painter saw it from his studio window, in 1906. Other views of the volcano, too, are realistic, especially those in pastel, a medium which lends itself so admirably to the depiction of blowing ashes and smoke, of rain, snow and flowing lava.

Gaetano Capone—Landscape.

Gaetano Capone, whose studio is in the Bristol Building, N. W. corner of Fifth Ave. and 42 St., and a reproduction of whose landscape entitled "Sunset After Rain—Catskill Mountains," which he recently sold to Mr. J. I. McKee, a collector of this city, appears on this page—was born in Italy but came to this country some years ago. He worked for some time as an illustrator on the dailies, and then took up landscape painting, in which he has been very successful. The artist is especially happy in the rendition of sunlight and atmosphere and the canvas now reproduced is a characteristic example of his brush. Mr. Capone spent last summer in the Catskills, where he painted several other excellent landscapes.

NEW COPLEYS (?) DISCOVERED.

The revived interest in early American art which the ART NEWS has always consistently fostered, is leading to unexpected zeal in the "discovery" of examples of American old masters, Copley in particular. The galleries of the New York Historical Society, whose interesting collections have been recently noticed in this journal, have been recently visited by one Mr. Jonse L. McGurke, representing himself as a new "expert" in old masters, who has declared to the Society's authorities, with a confidence that left no doubt of his conviction, that not only are the portraits of the De Peyster ladies (Mrs. John De Peyster and Mrs. Wm. Paxtell, attributed to Copley) really genuine, but that several other early portraits, hitherto described as by "artists unknown," are also the work of the great Colonial Bostonian.

Mr. McGurke's sweeping affirmations are interesting, especially as the De Peyster portraits have been steadily losing caste as "Copleys," and as no other portraits in the collection have ever received any attention as possible works of Copley, except, of course, the unqualifiedly genuine self-portrait.

The Schuyler Portraits.

By all odds the most artistic of the portraits recently presented to the Society through the will of Mrs. Philip Schuyler, is the oval miniature of the Revolutionary Maj.-Gen. Philip Schuyler, painted by John Trumbull. Exquisite in color and marvelously skillful in execution, this little picture represents the art of Trumbull in its refined aspect and shows anew that as a miniaturist this painter was a master, and one who occupies a peculiarly isolated position in the history of the native school. (See in this connection his miniatures at the Yale Museum at New Haven.)

The portrait of Mrs. Philip Schuyler (Catherine Van Rensselaer), which has been mentioned as a possible Copley, has little to suggest it as an example of that master except a certain treatment of the bust and drapery. The picture is interesting and rich in color, much richer than early Copleys, indeed the color is more like that of Smibert.

The portrait of Johann Schuyler, 1697-1741, has also traces of the color of Smibert, and this picture is obviously the model for the portrait of Col. Philip Schuyler, 1695-1787, almost identical in composition, attitude and type of costume, and differing only in a certain thinness of face and the color of the outer coat, blue in the latter and very deep and rich garnet in the former. The large double portrait of Capt. Johann Schuyler and Mrs. (Elizabeth Staats) Schuyler has certain reminiscent features. The man suggests in composition certain portraits of Theus, the old Charleston painter, and John Greenwood, while the woman has a character similar to that found in some of Trumbull's early Connecticut portraits.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

The Crowley Wedgwood Sale.

The Timothy F. Crowley collection of ceramics, sold Monday aft. at the American Art Galleries, brought $5,067. A Wedgwood blue and white jasper 1795 teapot, decorated with Lady Templeton's "Mater-dona" and "Domestic Employment," fetched $200 from Mr. Winthrop. The Wedgwood "Medusa Head" sold for $175 to Mrs. J. A. Davis. She also secured for $81 a set of shell shaped Wedgwood plates. Mr. W. W. Nolan gave $190 for a set of 95 Wedgwood portrait medallions from the Hargreaves collection. "Mr. Chelsea" paid $155 for a Wedgwood medallion of Omphale. Mr. James A. Goldsmith gave $150 for an old Spanish banquera; Henry Symons and Co. $110 for a XVII century Delft platter, and Mr. Seaman, agt., $100 for a black terra cotta Wedgwood vase. Mr. W. D. Mr. Edward Michael gave $70 for a pair of porcelain parrots; Mr. Gray, $65 for 5 pairs of Wedgwood bell pulls, and Mr. I. N. Phelps Stokes $40 for Wedgwood plaques mounted on an ebony pedestal.

The Kelly Sale Nets $11,011.

At the sale Dec. 3, at the American Art Galleries, of the collections of the late Eugene Kelly, and of the objects owned by Mr. Thomas H. Kelly, the amount realized was $11,011. Mr. Bernet, agent, gave $860 for a XVII century verdure tapestry. Mr. E. G. Marion paid $400 for "Five Heads" attributed to Van Dyke; $225 for a Courbet, "The Passing Storm in Picardy;" $230 for Ramsey's "George III and Family," and $170 for a silver English trophy cup. Mr. Bernet paid $325 for Highmore's "The Girl in Blue" and $200 for Dance's portrait of Boswell. Ginsberg and Levy gave $155 for Lawrensen's "The Master of the Rolls" and Mr. R. W. Goelet $105 for Dodd's "Trajalgar Bay." A coaching scene by Cowdrey brought $125 from Mr. J. T. Loew and Mr. W. R. Hearst secured the Mexican Xarez's "Assumption of the Virgin" for $180. Mr. Seaman, agent, gave $140 for 2 Japanese candelabra; a Louis XV console table fetched $125 from Lans & Co., and Mr. Frank gave $105 for a panel of Genoese velvet.

De Mendonca Sale.

The sale, at the American Art Galleries, Dec. 2 of the collection of art objects, of the late Salvador de Mendonca, former Brazilian Minister, produced $4,848. Mr. Seaman, agent, paid $240 for a pair of silver candlesticks, once owned by a Queen of Portugal, and made by Gil Vicente. He also secured, for $67.50, twelve plates of old Dresden ware and for $62.50 a Limoges dinner set. Mr. Gibson gave $115 for 12 Vincennes place plates and $65 for a Sevres set of dinner plates, and Mr. Baumeister $105 for a Sevres dinner set. A Roman arms chest went to Mr. Herbert Du Puy at $85, and two trays of English silver, to Mr. H. Lanthier at $70. Mr. Jesse S. Foote paid $62.50 for a tea set of Royal Sevres.

Meredith Mss. Poem $685.

A sale of the library of Mr. W. S. Allen, and of works owned by other parties, on Dec. 2, at the Anderson Galleries fetched $5,520. Mr. Geo. D. Smith, always in the forefront, paid $685 for the Mss. of Meredith's poem, "Jump to Glory Jane." He also gave $250 for the Mss. of a poem and $100 for a letter by Shelley, and $142.50 for J. Rolfe's "Naval Chronology of Great Britain." Mr. V. Koenig paid $300 for Jesse's "London" extra-illustrated to 6 vols.; Mr. C. Gerhardt $200 for a set of Tudor translations and Mr. T. Morrison $127.50 for the "New Bon Ton Magazine," 1818-1821, with 20 caricatures in color.

Kayat Antique Glass Sold.

At the opening of the sale, Dec. 3, at the Anderson Galleries, of the dealer Azeez Khayat's collection of antique glass, $2,624 was realized. The second session Dec. 4 brought $4,575, which made a grand total of $7,199. At the first session, Mr. M. J. Olcott gave $110 for a blue pitcher; Miss J. Forah $95 for a Sultanabad, blue and silver jar, and Mr. E. G. Bunn $51 for a necklace of Egyptian beads. At the final session Miss Forah paid $205 for a deep blue Rhages jar, the same price for a turquoise blue Sultanabad jar; $165 for a Rakka pottery inkwell; $160 for a deep blue Rhages jar, and $150 for a cream colored Sidonian bottle. Mr. W. T. Walters, of Baltimore, gave $150 for a cream colored Rhages jar; Mr. N. Homsey $150 for a Sultanabad jar of turquoise blue and Mr. E. H. Yates $57.50 for a pressed body cup.

A Washington Letter, $446.

At the opening of the Henry Chapman sale on Monday, in the Anderson Galleries, a letter of Washington to his sister, Mrs. Betty Lewis, about his mother's estate, fetched $446 from Mr. Thomas Bell. Mr. William Nestor paid $120.50 for a Charlotte Bronte letter, Mr. Geo. D. Smith gave $130 for an Alexander Hamilton letter, $118.50 for a Mss. poem by Emerson, and $102.50 for a letter of David Garrick. Mr. Bell paid $75 for a document signed by Lincoln. The total of the session was $3,314.80. At the second session, Tuesday, Mr. W. V. King gave $110 for a Washington letter. Another went to Mr. Thomas Bell at $107.50. James F. Drake, Inc., paid $82.50 for a letter from Swinburne to Colvin. Mr. Smith paid $102.50 for a pardon signed by Lincoln, $72.50 for a letter of Jefferson to Hamilton, $62.50 for a letter of Pope and $62 for a copy of Johnson's "Petrarch." The total of the session was $2,654.35, and of the sale $5,940.65.

Book Sale at Anderson's.

At a sale Dec. 4, at the Anderson Galleries Mr. H. Mischke gave $110 for a reproduction, Leyden 1903-08, of the "Breviarium Germani." Mr. C. J. Baker paid $41 for Valentine's presentation copy to the then Mayor of Balto. of his manual for 1848. He also secured for $17 the first edition of Riker's Newtown and for $17 the late William Walton's "Art and Architecture of the World's Columbian Exposition."

Sale of Pictures at Silo's.

At a sale Dec. 3 at Silo's Fifth Ave. galleries, of attributed old masters and other works, sold under the order of Attorney Frank Aranow, which realized at the first session $4,715, a portrait of Washington set down to Stuart was sold to Mr. Bartlett Arkell who will present it to the Rensselaer Club at Canajoharie. A portrait of an Italian nobleman cataloged as by Bordone went West at $325. Mrs. R. D. Wyckoff gave $190 for Cortes "Cattle Homeward Bound" and $155 for Buisson's "Allegory of Love," both, it is stated, from the Joseph Jefferson collection.

At the second session Dec. 4 Mrs. Frances Burke-Roche purchased a large canvas, endorsed by Dr. Valentiner as by Franz Snyders (98 1/4 x 96 1/2) for $1,510.

Mrs. Henshove of San Francisco bought a large canvas, "Peace and Plenty" attributed to Luca Giordano for $340. Mr. Bartlett Arkell secured two canvases—one a "Portrait of a Gentleman," attributed to Reynolds and a small picture attributed to Van Mieris. Other pictures sold were an attributed Franz Hals for $1,450, an attributed Gerard Dou for $575, and a J. B. Pyne. The total of the sale was $19,099.

Oriental Sale at Anderson's.

The sale of the Yang-shi collection of Oriental art opened Wed. at the Anderson Galleries.

Mr. Lanthier bought a pair of quadrilateral cloisonne vases that date from the Chien Lung period for $400. He also paid $70 for five carvings of old men in ivory. Mr. C. T. Croker gave $125 for a seated figure of Kanyin and $115 for a Kanyin with a scroll.

Mr. F. W. Kaldenberg gave $100 for a club shaped vase, with powder blue glaze; Mr. Thomas Bell $57.50 for a pair of jars of hard white paste porcelain, and Mr. H. J. Henderson a cinnabar lacquer box for $52.50.

The total of the day was $6,164.

Albert Henry Lewis Library.

At the American Art Galleries, on Dec. 2, the sale of the Alfred Henry Lewis Library was concluded, with a grand total of $7,167. Mr. Curtis Walters gave $180 for "Harvey's Scenes of the Primitive Forest of America." F. Meder paid $90 for Nagler's Art Lexicon. M. Knoedler & Co. gave $87 for the Robert Dumenil catalog, of French engraving. Beer's sketch of Willis sold to Mr. Thomas at $45.

Some Rare Americana.

Books from the libraries of John B. Dunbar and George Plumer Smith will be sold by the Anderson Galleries on three afternoons beginning Dec. 20. The material relates almost entirely to the North American Indians and the early history of the Western, Southern, and Eastern states. The first issue of the first English edition of Hennepin, London, 1698; Harmon's Journal, Field's Berkshire, McKenny and Hall's Indian Tribes, Adair's History of the Indians, London, 1775. Greenhow's Oregon and California, Ellicott's Journal, Esquemeling's Bucaniers, London, 1699, Beattle's Journal, Forbe's California, and Cuming's Sketches are among the rare and important items in the sale. There are 954 lots in the catalogue.

Various Objects of Art.

A large and miscellaneous collection of objects of art is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries preliminary to the sale on the afternoons of Friday and Saturday, Dec. 17 and 18. In addition to the rugs, porcelains, jades, and bronzes is a very unusual collection of old English silver, including basins, bowls, trays, teapots, caddies, baskets, urns, tankards, candlesticks, and two magnificent George III epergnes.

An Indian Collection.

The well-known Indian collection of Joseph Parker Camp of Washington, has been consigned to the Anderson Galleries for sale, and will go on exhibition Tuesday, December 14. The sale is scheduled for the evenings of Dec. 20 and 21. The collection contains baskets, pipes, beadwork, weapons, and a remarkable collection of blankets and mats, including Bayeta and Navajo antiques.

Charles E. Locke Collection.

The Charles E. Locke collection, the first part of which is now on exhibition at the American Art Galleries, prior to its sale on the afts. of Dec. 15, 16, 17 and 18, is one which has been brought together by many years of collecting by Mr. Locke and comprises the entire contents of his house at No. 14 E. 69 St. The part which is now being offered includes his collection of Oriental Porcelains and Potteries, his Greek, Roman, European and American Glass and Old Copper and Glass. The catalog contains 976 items.

The Reisinger Sale.

The exhibition of the Hugo Reisinger Collection will open at the American Art Galleries on Jan. 13 and the sale will be held in the ball room of the Plaza Hotel on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 18-20.

The Worl Library.

The Dr. Edward E. Worl library, to be sold on the aft. of Dec. 13 and the aft. and eve. of Dec. 14, at the American Art Galleries, contains works which appeal to the casual reader rather than to the collector, who buys to own. Its sale is timely for it contains many interesting descriptive volumes on France, Belgium, Switzerland, Servia and Bulgaria as well as standard volumes.

By American and Foreign Artists.

The paintings now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, consigned by the executors of the estate of James C. Fargo, with a few additions by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Osborne of Milwaukee, E. L. Blossom of New York, and others, include some interesting examples of the work of both American and foreign artists. "The Bend in the River" by Cazin, was purchased from Arthur Tooth & Son. It is accompanied by a letter from which the following is an extract: "Madame Cazin and also her son told us that M. Cazin regarded this example of his work with affection, as he rarely introduced water effects into his pictures and he considered this most delightfully successful."

Two works by Verboeckhoven are "Sheep and Chickens," a panel, signed and dated 1863, and a landscape panel with animals. Thaulow is also represented by two works, "The River Seine," and "The Rippling Stream." Two landscapes by William Keith are also attractive.

"In a French Garden" is the name of a Ridgway Knight. Paintings, pastels, and watercolors by F. S. Church are also features of the collection which will be sold on the eve'g of Dec. 16.

Prints, Engravings and Watercolors.

George Jones, well known to the older generation of play-goers as "Count Johannes," received from admiring friends in this country and England a collection of watercolors and prints, including portraits of himself, and miscellaneous dramatic material, which the present owner has placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to public sale on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Dec. 14 and 15. This material, however, comprises only thirty-seven lots in the sale, the other four hundred being from various owners. Pennell's Panama set in fine condition, colored prints by Wilson, etchings by Haig and Cameron, and rare New York views are to be found scattered through the catalogs. Of the New York views the most important is among the "Count Johannes" material—a watercolor drawing by Alexander Jackson Davis, architect of the Sub-Treasury, signed and dated June, 1834, showing the building at Wall and Nassau streets.

Mr. E. D. North, at 4 E. 39 St., is showing a collection of drawings by Boughton, Du Maurier, Abbey, Keene, Leech, Phil May and Maxfield Parrish.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

Art at Union League.

At the Union League Club's first exhibition of the season, now on, there is a still life by Emil Carlsen, "Sunlight" by Chas. Bittenger, E. A. Bell's "Harmony," and a fine canvas by G. Elmer Browne. Carlton T. Chapman, Wm. A. Coffin, C. C. Coleman, C. C. Curran, Ellis H. Dangerfield, Paul Dougherty, the late Arthur Hoerber, Francis C. Jones, H. Bolton Jones, Ernest Lawson, W. L. Metcalf, F. Luis Mora, John Sargent, J. Twachtman, Douglas Volk, Alden Weir, Harry Watrous, Irving Wiles and A. H. Wyant are all represented.

Group Show at Belnord Gallery.

In an interesting little exhibition at the Belnord Gallery, 86 St. and Amsterdam Ave., Hobart Nichols shows a sparkling snow scene. Paul Cornoyer, who loves the picturesque, is represented by characteristic canvases, and Frank De Haven's landscapes are vigorously rendered and well composed. F. J. Mulhaupt shows a composition with a pleasing pictorial quality.

Society of Craftsmen Show.

The 9th Annual Exhibition of the National Society of Craftsmen, opened with a private view on Thursday evening, at the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St., and will continue to Dec. 25. A review will appear next week.

Van Gogh at Modern Gallery.

(By the Second Viewer.)

The "mad painter of Arles" is a sane and powerful master in certain of the eight pictures now on view at the new Modern Gallery. Mr. de Zayas is to be congratulated. His selection and arrangement of this little exhibition might have touched Vincent's own heart, so thoughtful is the selection and so modest the arrangement.

With what rare boldness has this new expositor placed the most masterly of all the canvases against the light. Entering, one sees a blazing window—and a picture.

Sunlight streams from behind the canvas, around it and upon the floor. Light is everywhere, but upon the picture. Yet the picture is luminous, for the light, is "in" it. Here is a broad green meadow of Arles, with children half hidden among the grasses and the stalks of the field flowers they gather, lying under a sunny blue sky. Still leafless trees, slender, but firm, with roots well "struck," as Vincent used to say, into the earth, rise out of the moist green of the mid distance, reaching in the spring air toward "the clouds" that churn above with a vigor not approved by Ruskin, but permitted by liberal and rather "old" fashioned mother Nature. What a marvelous vision in a mad man!

Let all painters die in crazy houses, if only they will "see" for a time with half the penetration, and feel with half the sensitiveness here evidenced. Assuredly Vincent "sat out" before Nature to some purpose on this beautiful spring day in Arles. How simple, how great is this art! Painters, once past their idiotic revulsion over the freaks which parasitical literati have heaped against Van Gogh's personality, will duly note the manifold triumphs of the painter in this great picture—"The Clouds." One cannot cite them all, yet the perfection of the design begs a remark about that distant Ocerulean chimney belching smoke of opals—set plumb in the middle of the canvas! Subtlety, thy name is Vincent! See the accent of slender dark evergreens at the distant right, the reverberating tonal notes of the little sheds, the rhythm and "value" of the little figures (three strokes), and the free formatism of the literally dotted meadow garden.

The other pictures, the "Herrings," scaly, dry; the snow picture with its tonal prophecy of Lawson (oh, Ernest, how are you honored!); the woman of the sea tales, with her jaundiced complexion, her emerald skirt, her awkward elbows and provoking nose; the Arles hill region; the solid old "Hollandaise," and the flower pieces. Not a very bumping measure of versatile Van Gogh—Vincent the colorist, the designer, the man; but enough for the extinction of scoffers.

The "International" had Von Goghs, the Bourgeois Gallery has had them, now let us have more and more of them. One is tempted to recall Robert Schumann's admonition to the critical gentlemen on the approach of Chopin. Van Gogh's case has had some "literary" advancement in this country. No need for paraphrase of Schumann, for we have no doubt of soon seeing, from adamant Cortisoz down, a row of kindly gentlemen "unhatted," making proper obeisance. The "mad painter's" picture of "The Clouds" will attend to that consummation. James Britton.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

MODERN PAINTINGS BY WILLIARD HUNTINGTON WRIGHT. Svo., JOHN LANE CO., NEW YORK AND LONDON, $2.50 NET.

Many of the literary gentlemen who write ponderous books on the sumptuous subject of modern art, work around an obsession. Mr. Willard Huntington Wright's obsession in his "Modern Painting" is Cezanne. Building up to Cezanne from Delacroix through Turner, Courbet and Daumier, Mr. Wright arrives at such a frenzy of enthusiasm over his hero, as to permit of his stating that—"purely as a painter he (Cezanne) is the greatest the world has produced." At great length he discants upon the "plastic volume" of Cezanne's expression, dismissing Van Gogh and Gauguin from possible rivalry as mere "workmen in the flat," whose "art of two dimensions" leaves much to be desired.

As far as Van Gogh is concerned, the author's contention as to his two dimensions is a little upset by the reproduction of one of Vincent's portraits of himself, for the third dimension is here, in unmistakable presence. In comparing Renoir with Cezanne, the author cleverly likens the latter to Beethoven and the former, because of his "linear rhythm," to Haydn.

Mr. Wright's scheme of tracing the modern idea which reached, in his view, such wonderful fruition in Cezanne, is interesting, if not novel. Beginning with Delacroix, and while neglecting entirely the great significance of the draughtsman, Ingres, he proceeds, after noting Delacroix's debt to Constable, to carry the idea to Manet, by way of Turner, Courbet and Daumier, whom, with Delacroix, he calls "the pillars of modern painting." One instinctively asks "How about Goya?"

On the way to Manet some extremely important men are overlooked—such as Wm. Etty, the Englishman, and Boudin, one of the innovating luminists. Jongkind finds attention, then Pissarro, Sisley, Bazille and Guillaumin. Renoir has a chapter, yet there is no reference to Zandomeni, who, in a sense, pointed out color paths to Renoir. Poor Whistler, who figures so prominently in Meyer-Graefe's big "Modern Art," (a work which is in many ways the parent of the present one), counts for nothing in Mr. Wright's scheme but a target for an odd sally. Although Gauguin has a chapter to himself, he would be almost as well without it, for he is masqueraded as a rather sorry figure. Van Gogh fares little better.

From the chapter on Cezanne the book peeters away to "Cubism" and Picasso, "Futurism," "Synchromism," and the lesser moderns, to a conclusion which cants in the old strain on the "widespread ignorance regarding art's fundamentals."

Mr. Wright made his bow to fame with an attack upon the Metropolitan Museum in the "Forum." His volume on "Modern Painting" is by no means wanton or licentious in its disclosure of knowledge regarding art's fundamentals. It is a thoughtful contribution to the literature dealing with ever-pressing "modernism."

MONTREAL.

The 37th annual exhibition of the Royal Canadian Academy, now on, proves that the progress of Canadian art is being steadily and strongly maintained and it is generally conceded that the present exhibition has never been surpassed in this city.

The Princess Patricia exhibits two pictures, a large landscape "The Ottawa River at Sunset" and "Lilies and Silver," a still life.

The military note is present in the three large pictures by Homer Watson, of the Valcartier Camp. "The Birth of an Army," "The Review" and "The Ranges," commissioned by Government, while Lieut. Louis Keene, returned wounded from the front, exhibits a dramatic night study called "At 2:30 the Infantry Will Attack" while E. R. Glen of London shows a large picture of the "Canadians at St. Julien Retaking the Trenches."

The purchases of the Trustees of the National Gallery are as follows, and it can justly be said of each picture that it typifies the artists' best work: J. W. Beatty, "Morning, Algonquin Park"; W. Brymner, "Nude Figure"; Miss Cecil Buller, "Bretton House" (watercolor); F. S. Challenor, "A Selkirk Pioneer"; W. H. Clapp, "Rio Neuvas, Cuba"; Miss M. Alberta Cleland, "On the Beach"; Maurice Cullen, "The North River" (pastel); Charles de Belle, "Children's Joy"; Miss Alice Des Clayes, "Drawing Water"; E. Wyly Grier, "Moon"; André Lapine, "The Team"; Alfred Mickle, "Dyke-lands of Grand Pré"; Valentino Molina, "Morning";

WHAT ARTISTS ARE DOING.

Edward Dufner has returned from Elizabethtown, where he painted figures in sunlight, to his studio at 318 West 57 St. He has been made a life member of the Lotos Club and of the National Arts Club at the same time and since his recent exhibition at the Milwaukee Art Museum, that institution has acquired two of his canvases for its permanent collection.

Mr. Dufner's large portrait at the current Chicago Art Institute exhibition is reproduced, with a note, in Art and Progress for December.

Among several interesting sketch portraits recently executed by Judson Wylee Card, who handles pen and ink in a way which gives the effect of an etching, is one of the Swedish opera singer, Jeanette Larson.

F. S. Church, who paints three days each week in his studio at Far Hills, N. J., where he made studies of flowers and birds during the summer, spends the remaining three in Carnegie Hall. He is now wearing an alluring painting apron, probably of Bakst design as he works on a lovely phantasy, "Flowers of the Sea" and some humorous subjects in which, of course, cupids and bear figure largely.

Joseph Boston has returned from the Adirondacks with several new canvases, the most striking of which is an oil of Indian Head Mountain, Au Sable Lakes.

Charles Bittinger, who paints at his new home in Duxbury, Mass., this year, came on to attend the recent Artists Aid Society annual meeting and election of officers. It is proposed to incorporate this society, which does much good work for those who do not belong, as well as for those who do. George W. Maynard is president.

Charles Warren Eaton painted groups of pines and wood interiors, in New Jersey, the past summer and is again at work in his New York studio.

The Louisville, Ky., Art League, is showing a number of pictures of Hayley Lever, Bundy, Hawthorne, Bellows and others at the 18th annual exhibition in the Public Library.

Charles Niehaus has returned from Canada to his studio in the Lincoln Square Arcade.

Mrs. Ethel Morrison Van Derlip and Agnes W. Morrison have offered $25,000 for a building to be known as the Julia Morrison Memorial and $2,500 a year for three years towards the salary of a director of the Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts.

The old E. B. Crocker home in Sacramento, Cal., now the Crocker Art Gallery, is to be removed to a more central location. This, however, is meeting with disapproval as the historic old Crocker house is one of the principal points of interest in the city.

There is a personal note in the work of Agnes Pelton, who shows about two dozen small canvases at the Dora Brophy, Inc., 13 E. 36 St. She has a poetic vision. Illusive little semi-nudes, blossoming fields and glimpses of misty days predominate.

Carl Waldeck, Mrs. Cherry and Caroline Risque Janis were the prize winners at the recent thumb-box exhibition in St. Louis where A. F. Roll pictures are now on view.

Gustave Verbeck's exhibition of colored montypes at 355 Boylston Street, Boston, is remarkable for its technical excellence as well as style and charm.

J. Henry Sharp, the painter of Indians of Taos, N. M., is showing his latest works at the Gibson House, Cincinnati, comprising about forty canvases depicting the redskin as he is today.

It is announced that the Delgado Museum of New Orleans will shortly be presented with a valuable collection of paintings and statuary.

Spokane, Wash., artists are banding together to secure a permanent gallery for exhibition purposes.

"The Venetian Balcony," by Wm. M. Chase, is now owned by the Art League of St. Joseph, Mo. The picture was purchased through the activity of Miss Estelle Marion, a pupil of the artist.

William McKippol, who recently returned from Europe, occupied a leased studio during the Summer, and has now taken one of his own in the Van Dyck building.

J. C. Nicoll is at his winter home and studio at Winter Park, Fla., having recently closed his summer studio at Ogunquit, Me.

The engagement is announced of Miss Ruth J. Hess, daughter of Mr. Selmar Hess, long the publisher of "The Studio," and Mrs. Hess, to Mr. Sigmund Albert, of Lancaster, Pa.

Elliot Clark has returned from Lake Sunapee, N. H.

Joseph Pennell has on view, at the Brooklyn Museum, in the Print Dept., a collection of 79 of his etchings, lithographs and drawings. There are 70 of the New York series.

Dr. James P. Haney, director of art in the New York High Schools, is exhibiting a number of thumb-box sketches and drawings of the Maine coast, under the auspices of the Pratt Institute Art Alumni Association, in the gallery in their clubhouse, 296 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn.

The Museum of French Art, in the Scribner Building is showing an interesting collection of work of soldiers in the trenches. The dramatic, the poignant and the prosaic are on every hand, and the subjects range from a Red Cross Hospital to the Rheims Cathedral.

Peter Stuyvesant's bronze bust by Toon Dupuis, given by the Dutch Government to New York, was unveiled Monday on St. Marks-on-the-Bouerie, by the Misses Catherine & Anne W. Stuyvesant, daughters of Mr. Van Horne Stuyvesant, 6th in descent from the Director-General of the New Netherlands.

Miss Martha Wheeler Baxter has returned to her studio in the Sherwood, 58 West 57th Street, from Lenox, Mass., where she has spent the summer doing outdoor work.

Thomas Moran, having returned from Easthampton, L. I., is now at his studio, 57 W. 45 St. for a month or six weeks, before going to California for the rest of the winter.

The art loving public, as well as the friends of Henry Mosler, who recently fractured his skull by falling from a street car, will be pleased to learn that he is on the road to recovery at his son's N. Y. residence.

Mrs. Percy Chase has purchased one of the Gloucester series of pictures painted by George L. Noyes, now on exhibition at a local gallery, to be presented as a gift to the Museum.

At the Public Library, La Crosse, Wis., a collection of etchings by famous English, Continental and American etchers is on view.

William M. Chase opened an exhibition of a number of his paintings at the Hatch Gallery, Cleveland, last week.

The Minneapolis Institute of Art has acquired its first work by a local artist "The Channel to the Mills," by Edwin M. Dawes.

Hennig Ryden has left his studio at Montclair, N. J., and is at 32 East 28 St. for the winter.

CASS GILBERT DINED.

Cass Gilbert, President of the Architectural League was the guest Tuesday night last, at the dinner held annually by the Salamagundi Club in honor of an eminent artist of this city. Among others present were Borough President Marks, J. Alden Weir and Herbert Adams.

Speeches were made by several of the guests among them President Marks, who declared that the city administration here should spend more money for the advancement of art in New York.

SCHOOL ART LEAGUE WORK.

At the recent fourth annual luncheon of the School Art League, held at the Waldorf-Astoria. Mr. Robert W. De Forest presided, and told of the co-operation of the Metropolitan Museum with the League. Dr. James G. Haney said that the League's work might lead to the founding of a big industrial school, much needed in New York. Other speakers were City Chamberlain Bruere, Dr. John H. Finley, Miss Florence Levy, George De Forest Brush and Mrs. Vladimir G. Simkhovitch.

Christmas Sale at Art Club.

Those interested in artistic Christmas gifts will find some really lovely little watercolors, at absurdly low prices, on exhibition at the Catherine Lorillard Wolfe Art Club, 802 B'way. Anna G. Morse's conceptions of old fashioned gardens, with hollyhocks, poppies and ferns, of quiet meadows and water with reflections of trees and sky are charming notes and Gladys Branniger shows equally pleasing sketches of Hot Springs, Va. By Sara K. Hunter, there are two good little oils and a large canvas, rather immature which shows an unpleasant looking "Bohemian Girl." Eleanor Duer Larocque's landscape sketches are sunny and atmospheric.

COMING MCKINLEY MEMORIAL.

The cornerstone of the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial was laid recently at Niles, O. The building will be a two-story structure of severe colonial design, flanked by one-story wings. The main portico is to be supported by six Ionic columns and the facade of each wing will carry as many similar supports in sectional form. A marble statue of the former President, twelve feet high, will be erected in front of the building.

The Winter Academy.

Over 2,000 pictures have been sent in to the Academy—more than ever before. In view of the fact that scarcely more than 300 can be hung, there will be many woeful painter men, when the Jury's selection is made known.

ARTISTS' CARDS.

35 cents a line—minimum 4 lines.

VOL. XIV., No. 11.

Entered as second class mail matter.
N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 18, 1915.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

NEW COPLEY AT MET. MUSEUM.

The ART NEWS is able to give the exclusive information from an authoritative source, but as yet not officially announced, that the Metropolitan Museum has purchased an important example of John Singleton Copley. This is a three-quarter length portrait, painted in England in Copley's later manner, and is said to be one of the finest specimens in this country. The picture was painted about the same period of the production of the equestrian portrait of George IV, now owned by Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter of Boston. The new Museum Copley is the first example in oil of the early American master acquired for the permanent collection of the institution.

New Copley Loan.

The Museum has recently hung as a loan, a late American portrait by Copley. This is the standing figure of Mrs. John Murray owned by F. W. Chandler. This picture is very interesting in composition, showing the lady leaning against an architectural garden wall. The background is specially notable for the large and beautifully painted ornamental vase which stands outlined against the dark blue sky. The hands and costume of this portrait are executed in Copley's most proficient American manner, and the color throughout is restrainedly rich and full. These Copleys, coming into the Museum, so soon after the need for such work had been pointed out by the ART NEWS, is gratifying.

SAN FRANCISCO ACCEPTS GIFTS.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., announced recently that he accepted for the city gifts from States and nations exhibiting at the Pan-Pacific Exposition, including the Virginia Building, a reproduction of Washington's home at Mount Vernon and the Siam Building. Most of the gifts will be placed in Golden Gate Park. The art works will be placed in the Park Museum and Art Gallery.

FRISCO CLAIMS A CORREGGIO.

An old picture brought some months ago to San Francisco, and consigned to Rosenberg Brothers, fruit importers, was recently about to be sold for the claimed duties, which had not been paid, when that firm appeared and stated that the painting had been sent for exhibition at the Exposition, in their care by one J. Prato of Spain, who had written them that the work was by Correggio and was painted by that old master at Parma. They also stated that they had made every endeavor to find Prato but could only learn that he had been in New York in December, 1914. They then applied for the free entry of the picture under the Old Master clause in the tariff.

HARRISBURG HAS FOUNTAIN.

By a vote of 4 to 1 the Harrisburg, Pa., City Commissioners have accepted the fountain, the "Dance of the Eternal Spring," offered by M. S. Hershey, of chocolate fame, for which he was recently ordered by the courts to pay Sculptor Donato $25,000 and which was reproduced in last week's issue.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. FOWLES.

Mr. Charles P. Taft ordered a portrait of Scott & Fowles, 590 Fifth Ave., who went down on the Luisitania, to be painted by Harrington Mann from photographs and memory. The portrait is extremely lifelike in spite of the circumstances under which it was painted, and was sent to Mr. Taft recently to be placed in his gallery at Cincinnati. It is said to be the first instance on record of a great collector thus honoring the memory of the dealer who assembled a large part of his fine collection.

A SALON DES REFUSES.

There is much dissatisfaction among artists whose works were rejected at the annual Chicago Art Institute exhibition, now on, and a large number of the younger element, headed by Mr. Abrahamson threaten to rent the Armory for an exhibition of the pictures thrown out by the jury. It is said that encouragement, so necessary to the progress of Art, is lacking and that the young artists were not given a fair chance.

Boston Museum of Fine Arts benefits to the extent of $25,000 under the will of Mr. Francis G. Curtis of 143 Beacon Street, Boston, the money to be used for the purchase of objects of oriental art.

A VELASQUEZ FOR ENGLAND.

Another important picture has recently been added to the Doughty House collection. This is the portrait of Calabacillas, by Velasquez, which was originally in the Royal Palace of Madrid, where it formed one of the series of Court Buffoons and Imbeciles painted by Velasquez for Philip IV. The name of Calabacillas signifies "pumpkins," the nickname of this unfortunate creature, a half-idiot paid to amuse the Court circle, and in this picture he is painted with a paper windmill in one hand and a miniature painting in the other. How or when the picture left Madrid is not known, but it was subsequently in the collections of M. Cottier and the Duc de Persigny in Paris, and came into the Cook collection through Sir George Donaldson. Mr Herbert Cook published an article on the picture in the "Burlington Magazine" of December, 1906.

NEWPORT ART ASS'N'S HOME.

The Newport Art Ass'n is to buy for a permanent home, the late J. N. A. Griswold property on Bellevue Ave. This has a house, stable and garage, consists of two acres and is taxed at $68,000. The rooms are large enough for galleries and classrooms. The new house has been made possible by the activity of Mr. Walter Coles Cabell, the president. The secretary is Mrs. Maud Howe Elliot. Mr. Marsden J. Perry made a liberal donation to the purchase fund.

E. R. BACON'S WILL.

By the will of E. R. Bacon all his works of art, a list of which was published exclusively in last week's ART NEWS, were left to his sister-in-law, Mrs. Virginia P. Bacon, wife of Mr. Walter R. Bacon, of 247 5th Ave. The total estate, worth more than

THE WINTER ACADEMY.

First Notice.

The winter exhibition of the Nat'l Academy, now on in the Fine Arts Soc'y galleries, 215 E. 57 St. to Jan. 16, 1916, is almost good enough to have been an early display of the former Soc'y of American Artists. Not but that the general standard has decidedly advanced in all these years. It is simply that the point of view of the exhibitors has veered about so that what the Society stood for then, the Academy, while still salted with conservatism, stands for now. And then again all the former insurgents long ago captured the citadel.

The display of 369 works, of which 132 are sculptures, is full, in the painting section of light, color and life. The hanging is exceptionally well done and in the large Vanderbilt Gallery there are but a dozen works over the line.

Perhaps it will be both courteous and of interest, to treat first of the prize pictures. Here the Academy has indeed shown its conservatism, for all the prizes have fallen to members except one. One begins to believe what is often said, more or less sub rosa, that the reward is given not for what a man does, but what he has done.

The Benjamin Altman prize of $1,000, awarded for the first time, and the Isidor medal, have fallen to Charles W. Hawthorne, for his "The Offering" which might well have been called "The Madonna of the Fishes." This work fine, if rather too full in color, is certainly the most important figure composition in the galleries. Still with all the admirable painting, in the head of the Virgin in modern costume, a la Von Uhde, and the brilliant handling of the fish, which one of the two boys is offering, do not excuse the scamped handling, evidently partly intentional, of the figures of him who shows the boat to the fat baby, and his brother, who has the fish basket.

The example of Paul Dougherty, which won for him the Carnegie prize of $500, is an "October Morning," in a mountain locked bay, where the sunlight falls over the shore and pellucid greens and blues crisp the still waters of the middle distance.

The second Altman prize of $500 went to Daniel Garber for his "Tanis," a brilliant plein air, the little bare-legged girl standing under the sunlight with her slender figure showing in X-ray fashion through her summer dress.

Cecilia Beaux took the Thos. R. Proctor prize of $200, with a portrait of Mrs. S. H. Brooks, seated in white furs and costume at a writing table. The face, though expressive, lacks modelling and the left arm is without substance, the gloved hand springing from it as if on wires. This is a distinctly inferior example. So much for these Academicians and their prizes.

The Helen Foster Barnet prize for sculpture went to Paul Herzel, an outsider, for a vigorous bronze of "The Struggle" between a lioness and a cobra, inspired by Barye and the Japanese.

Features of the Vanderbilt Gallery.

In the Vanderbilt gallery, the hanging committee has eliminated the place of honor on the north wall, by placing just before it a pedestal, which bears a plaster model of D. C. French's really beautiful figure, "The Spirit of Life," from the Spencer Trask memorial. This was politic, and it is evident the committee did not think the Hawthorne the best thing in the display. The sculpture is flanked on the walls by a magnificent "Entrance to St. Thomas Harbor" by Emil Carlsen full of breadth and salt air and singularly free from paintiness, and a "Grey Day, Centre Bridge," a snow scene, by E. W. Redfield, rather out of his usual vein as to composition, very painty and a little weak in the foreground. Not far off Charles Rosen has built up in somewhat set scene, but effective fashion, a snow-flecked "Coast of Cape Elizabeth;" Jonas Lie has slapped in with vigor, on a huge canvas, "The Autumn Fleet," and W. Ritschel shows a cove of swirling water in shadow, painted with much strength and knowledge and called "Alurement, California."

Another large canvas is Gardner Symons' "New England Mills," a prosaic subject, well enough painted, but prosaic still. Charles H. Davis shows fine ability in his cloudscape, "Over the Hill."

A somewhat bilious woman with purple lips, nude to below the waist and offering a nut to a parrot is by George Bellows. The background is crude maroon, and purple, and the parrot, barring his red eyes

Winner of First Altman Prize of $1,000 and Isidor Gold Medal at the Winter Academy.

MAY SUSPEND OR EXPEL.

Two changes in the constitution of the National Academy of Design were adopted at the Dec. meeting. A committee will be elected in March, to nominate officers to be voted on at the annual meeting and the council is to be given the power of suspending or expelling members for actions considered prejudicial to the interests of the Academy, though the action does not prevent the person so suspended or expelled from appealing to a meeting of the Academy, called for that purpose.

CURIOUS ART SUIT.

Mr. Warren W. Hurd of St. Paul in filing an answer to a suit by Thurber Gallery of Chicago for the recovery of $2,000, the purchase price of a picture sold him, said that a successful financier is not always a good art critic. He offers to return the painting in payment for which the Thurber Gallery alleges that Mr. Hurd gave worthless securities.

The robbery of the La Verne W. Noyes collection of French enamels from the Chicago Art Institute is now believed to have been planned and executed with the express purpose of selling them back to the Institute, since they cannot be pawned or sold.

$2,000,000, is left to his two brothers, sister, sister-in-law, other relatives and employees.

BUILD FOR STUDIOS IN MEWS.

The trustees of Sailors Snug Harbor, intend to alter into studio apartments, the old stables on the N. side of Washington Mews, with the exception of one still under lease, and 9 of the 12 3-story houses, on the south side of 8 St. excepting 3, between 5 Ave. and University Pl. The alterations will cost from $20,000 to $25,000.

AMERICAN ACADEMY ALUMNI.

At the Salmagundi Club, 14 W. 12 St., last week, the Association of the American Academy of Rome held its annual meeting and dinner. Among the guests were D. C. French, E. H. Blashfield, Herbert Adams, W. M. Mead, C. Grant Lafarge and Andrew F. West. The officers elected from among the architects who studied in Italy are Frank P. Fairbanks, pres't; Charles Keck, first vice-pres't; Lucian E. Smith, second vice-pres't, and F. Livingston Pell, secretary and treasurer.

Ground will be broken next Spring on the Smithsonian grounds in the mall, Washington, D. C., for the $1,000,000 addition to the Institute presented by Mr. Freer of Detroit to house his gift of works of art.

and yellow face, is all green like the table cloth. The lady is rather at a disadvantage, but still fleshy. Of rare distinction is Sidney E. Dickinson's self portrait, which suggests Velasquez.

On the other hand Leibl comes to the mind when looking at Benjamin D. Koopman's "Portrait of an Old Man" with his hands on his stick. F. Luis Mora strikes brilliant notes in his portrait of two Spanish "Brunettes," in fine complementary pose. Irving Wiles is at his best, in his naturally posed picture of "Isabel and Her Father" who is the painter, Charles Bittinger. The late John W. Alexander fills well a centre on the East wall with a graceful figure "Portrait" of a young woman holding a flower. Opposite to the West is Louis Betts' large and spirited "Josie of the Hills" with her horse—a difficult subject, well handled. Leopold Seyffert has a strong sober presentation of Hans Kindler with his 'cello.

Suggests the Japanese.

W. A. Levy in "The Morning Sun"—an interesting work, with Japanese inspiration, shows an apparently colored painter in his studio. In F. W. Friesseke's contribution, handled with great skill and appreciation of values, a young woman stands by "The Open Window," holding a bird cage. Greens, blues and yellows predominate and the flesh is rather porcelain-like in quality.

W. T. Smedley's "Portrait of Miss M. G." is skillfully handled, but Raymond P. R. Neilson's "The Black Bonnet," nearby is remarkable for qualities of soberness and reticence which it lacks. Helen M. Turner paints with rare facility, in the broken stroke manner, "A Song of Summer," sung amid leaves by a girl with a mandolin. With his usual suavity and skill Harry Watrous has painted a genre called "The Dregs," which shows a young woman toying with figurines. Douglas Volk shows his fine qualities to the full, in "The Lettie Canadienne." Lillian Genth's nude is graceful and refined, but somewhat cold though, in "The Sunlit Dell." Very sober and skillful is Pres't J. Alden Weir's portrait of a smiling elderly lady. Randall Davey's "Portuguese Grandmother" already seen at a special exhibition, looms large again. In his male portrait George Tera shows individual and fine qualities while Marjorie Conant's "Piazza Portrait" is quiet and strong.

Brilliant Little Genres.

Leon Gaspard strikes quite a new note in his brilliant little "Le Retour du Ker-messe;" Miss Turner is attractive in "The Breakfast Room" and H. E. Schnakenberg, has stolen a march on Guy Pene du Bois, with his capital and Daumier-like, beer garden scene on "Sunday Afternoon."

In "Autumn in the City" Gifford Beal handles with striking effect a scene, looking down over Dr. Parkhurst's church to Madison Square. Robert Vonnoh has skillfully treated a not very happy subject in "Memories."

Sparkling and truthful, though painty, is Henry Reuter's "Winter in Weehawken." Ivan G. Olinsky presents with good effect "Louise K. C. O." and has also a charming young woman reader. Charles C. Curran pictures attractively two girls on "The Edge of the Cliff" and Frederick J. Waugh makes one feel the strength of "Surf in Sixty Fathoms." A well posed and most attractive genre is John W. Dunsmore's "The Engagement Ring."

H. M. Walcott has in a "Mother and Children" in the open, a striking work that recalls Sorolla while quite in the Greek vein in subject and with a refreshing strength of handling is George R. Barse's "Mona-Monela." F. S. Church attracts with "The Flamingoes." Sergeant Kendall signs a fine "Study in Shadow," and Ferol Sibley has a striking portrait of a young lady.

Maurice Prendergast sends a landscape with figures in his usual decorative vein. "H. H. and her Sister" by Charles Hopkinson is capital. Rintano Saba strikes a new note in "Utatane." Superb is C. H. Woodbury's "The Narrow Cove." James Hopkins has a novel subject in the "Sunlit Window" and William Cotton shows "A Russian Girl."

John F. Carlsen has a striking landscape subject in "A January Morning," and it is simply and well painted. There is a real nipping and eager air.

Notable among the other landscapes are works by Ernest Lawson, F. B. Williams, J. F. Murphy, James Knox—very original—A. L. Groll, Cullen Yates, Leonard Ochtmann, and H. Bolton Jones.

The Sculpture Exhibit.

The sculpture exhibit is unusually fine and among those well represented are Atillio Picirilli, C. Scarpitta, De Francis, Edith B. Parsons, Polasek, Chester Beach, A. St. L. Eberle, Malvina Hoffman, Jane Poupelet, Charles Grafley, Rene Prahar, E. F. Quinn, Herbert Adams, and Janet Scudder.

To the outer darkness of the Academy Room, have been cast a number of worthy works of painting and sculpture and it looks as if the exhibition committee was more concerned about the general appearance of the galleries than the rights and feelings of the contributors there marooned.

Still apparently some one must suffer that beauty shall reign, for the galleries make a very fine effect decoratively and pictorially. A. v. C.

CHICAGO.

Now that the 28th annual exhibition of American oils and sculptures at the Art Institute has run about half its course, and sufficient time has elapsed to enable a just verdict to be passed upon the display, and the critics, as a rule, agree that it is a superior showing—a conviction that was expressed in the ART NEWS when the exhibition was first opened.

Works that Stand Out.

One always expects more than good art from John S. Sargent, and this artist is in one of his most happiest moods in "Three Boats in Harbor at San Vigilio," a canvas with the luminous life of the sea pulsing in work and coloring. Walter Sargent scores a success in "May Morning" and Alice Schille delights with her animated "Room with Green Blinds" and "Porto Rican Mother and Child," a pair of the most pleasing of this artist's examples. H. Leon Roecker appears in "Duck Pond" and in "Late Summer Afternoon." F. C. Bartlett again shows good examples in "Roof Garden Tea" and "Autumn Game." Gifford Beal sends his joyous "Picnic Party," "Study of Peonies," by Gertrude I. Barnes fairly ripples fragrance and light. Lawton Parker's portrait of Mr. James A. Patten well portrays the subject, and Louis Betts, who always may be depended upon to give us sincere portraiture, does so in his "Renie."

Other Good Works.

Matilda Brownell's "Still Life," George Elmer Browne's "The Maine Coast," Harriet Blackstone's "The Painter," "Pauline Palmer's colorful "Late Afternoon, Provincetown," Jane Peterson's "The Docks," A. E. Albright's "Little Sister," Gordon St. Clair's "Lamia," Albert Rosenthal's Portraits of Mrs. H. Bryan Owsley, Jr., and Miss H. Charles Rosen's spirited "Ice Bound River" and "Wind-Blown Trees," John F. Stacey's California pictures, "Hills of Belvedere" and "Through the Eucalyptus," Henry S. Hubbell's portrait of Frank J. Zimmerer, Cecilia Beaux's decorative panel, a figure; Tom P. Barnett's breezy "Close of a Winter Day" and "Landscape in Forest Park," Hugo Ballin's big and effective symbolic figure-piece "Cup of Life"; Henry C. Balink's portrait of Mrs. C. J. Wessing—all these examples of individual art are of unusual merit.

And the reviewer must not omit "After the Bath," by Mary Cassatt; Max Bohm's "Gathering Clouds," Alfred Janssens' "Country Home," "Lawrence Mazzanovich's "Moon-dark," F. Luis Mora's "Zona," Ada Walter Schultz's "Motherhood," Grace H. Trumbull's "Asleep," Karl A. Buehr's "Signa," Edgar Cameron's "Autumnal Gloaming," Edith Barry's "Marie Jeanne," Louis F. Berneker's "Bronx River," George Bellows' portraits, John W. Beatty's "Return from the Field," Frank Benson's "Fox Hunter," Mathias Alten's "River Bend," Karl Anderson's radiant "The Heirloom" and "Venetian Vase," Ernest Albert's "Day's End," Christian Abrahamsen's finely executed portrait, Maria D. Page's "Littlest One," Helen M. Turner's "Dorothea Knitting," Alice K. Stoddard's "The Fisherman's Little Sister," David Adam's "Aunt Martha," W. J. Beaulieu's "City Gate" and Theresa Bernstein's "Opera Lobby."

And strolling into the South and East galleries there are many of the works of well-known artists in the line and some new ones. Among the former are George De Forest Brush's "Family Group," Everett L. Bryant's "Apple Blossoms," Edward B. Butler's "Autumn in the Berkshires," W. M. Chase's "Open Air Breakfast," Ralph Clarkson's portrait of Irving K. Pond, Charles S. Dewey's "Gray Room," Joseph DeCamp's "Silver Waist," Arthur Davies' "Sacramental Tree," L. C. Earl's "Mexican Brother," Richard Farley's "Mirror," Helena Dunlap's "Still Stream," Katherine Dudley's "Helen" and "Elvira," Nancy M. Ferguson's six gay sketches "Down Cape Cod Way," Frederick C. Friesseke's luminous "In the Garden," Lillian Genth's "Story of Ursula" and "Woodland Idyll," Walter Gay's "Salon of Edouard Andre's House," August Franzen's portrait of F. Augustus Schermerhorn, Fournier's "Harvest Moon," Johanna Hailman's "August Flowers," Virginia Keep Clark's "Flowers," Elizabeth S. Taylor's "Boquet," Louise U. Brumbach's breezy "After the Race" and "Morning on the Beach," Gertrude Fisk's "Job's Tears," John R. Grabach's "River Front, New York," Albert L. Groll's "Rain Cloud, Arizona," and Emily Groom's "Midsummer."

Various Examples.

Although not every meritorious painting can be mentioned in this review, record must be made of Louis Griffith's beautiful "Lonesome-time," Paul Gustin's "Mount Rainier, Moonlight," Emil Gruppe's "In the Catskills," O. D. Grover's "Autumn Landscape," "The River," "Lake Garda"; Oskar Gross' portraits of Mme. Buhl and Children, W. Victor Higgin's "Women of Taso," "Oka and Walmacho" and "White Stone," a group of his stunning studies of Indian life in the Southwest; Robert Henri's "On Wi Taa" and "Tan Gan," a pair of his colorful pictures of the red people of Mexico and the Southwest; Virginia Hale's "Paulette," Charles Francis Browne's "Rocks and Cypress, Sunny California," Louis Kronberg's "In the Dressing Room," Lawson's "Young Trees in Spring," Marie Locke's "In the Harbor," Charles M. Lesaar's Portrait of Miss Dorsey Gibbs, Stephen W. Macomber's "Waning Day," Mary N. MacCord's "Italian Hill Town," Mary MacComber's "The City," Philip Little's "Golden Rod," Jonas Lie's "Winter Sun," Leon Kroll's "North River Front" and "Upper Broadway," Charles Hopkinson's "Lady in Orange" and portrait of the artist's daughter, James Knox's "Winter," James R. Hopkins' "Kentucky Mountaineer" and "Lavish Light," E. T. Hurley's "Cliff Dwellers," G. Wilson Irvine's "Old Boat Shop" and "Autumn," Wallace L. DeWolf's "Hermit Range, Glacier, B. C.," E. Lampert Cooper's "Lane in Edgartown," Paul Cornoyer's "Morning, Washington Square," E. Irving Couse's "Moonlight, Pueblo of Taos," Elliott Daingerfield's "Carolina Sunlight," Charles W. Dahlgreen's "River Road," Charles H. Davis' "Rosy Afterglow," Marion Bullard's "October," Emily Nichols Hatch's "Rosamond Enters," C. Bertram Hartman's "Pageant of Autumn," Charlotte B. Corman's "Well Worn Path," Frank Swift Chase's "Mountain Landscape," C. C. Cooper's "Edgartown, Mass.," F. V. Dudley's "As the Shadows Lengthen," Paul Dougherty's "Near the Runnel Stone," Philip L. Hale's portrait "La Donna Mi-Velata," Alice Hirst's "Overlooking the East River" and Walter McEwen's "Vanity."

There are also Willard T. Melcalf's "Summer Night" and "Tiger Lilies," Richard E. Miller's "Sunlight," Rose E. Moffatt's "Red Scows on the Beach," J. F. Murphy's "Sprout Lot," L. Ochtman's "Big Warrior," Edgar Payne's "Coast at Valdez," T. Pearson, Jr.'s "The Thunderstorm," "In the Gloaming," F. C. Peyraud's "In the Berkshires," A. E. Philbrick's "Indian Summer," Marion Power's "In Old New England," Grace Ravlin's "Charcoal Venders, Tangiers," Morning at the Kssba, Tangiers"; E. W. Redfield's "Deserted Farm," H. R. Poore's "Pilgrim Sons," E. H. Potthast's "Holiday," Robert Reid's "The Pool," C. F. Ryder's "Park Monadnock," W. E. Schofield's "Low Tide, Polperro," Donna Schuster's "The Convalescent," G. Trumbull's "Twilight," F. A. Werner's portrait of Alfred Juergens, and F. Wolcott's "Phoebly."

H. Effa Webster.

Gustav Brock, a Danish miniature painter, is at the Vanderbilt Hotel with some of his work. He painted the King of Greece and the Queen of Denmark, among other notables and was awarded a silver medal at the San Francisco Fair.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

Light, Color and Life.

Monet seeks and finds the soul of French landscape; Renoir pictures the charm and form of French women. Each in his own line is unsurpassed, and both are brothers in the cult of color. The two are seen in full splendor of expression, in the exhibition, now on to Dec. 31, at the Durand-Ruel Galleries, 12 E. 57 St. What could be more beautiful, in the interpretation of nature, than Monet's look, down from the cliffs at Etretat, with the water in such fine motion about the feet of the flying buttress and the rock finial a space apart in the sea? Again what could be more true to the face, form and costume of the true Parisienne than Renoir's "Buste de Femme?" Not, mind you, the woman of fashion, the theater, or the world that lies separate, but the bonne, petite and bourgeoisie, who makes life well worth while.

Claude Monet rests in the light of the sun, on the rolling sward, and the toss of the wind-swept trees, in a magistral, "Prairie Ensoleillee, Givernay," and sends the waves surging, like a conquering army, on to the shore at Fecamp. Into the limitless blue of the Mediterranean, he looks over the blazing color of the houses at Bordighera. Full of luxuriance is his garden scene at the same place. Note, then, how mysterious is the winter fog, that creeps about his haystack, and what a fine sweep of sea and cliffs there is in "Pourville près Dieppe." The beauty of it all is, however, jarred by the human note, in the somewhat touseled landscape, "Matinee sur la Seine."

Pierre Auguste Renoir, who digresses occasionally into landscape with interesting, rather than fully satisfactory results, is facile princeps, with his Parisiennes. That is not to say that he might not idealize them a little more than he does, and at times he comes close to grossness. But his color and his handling save him, as witness the very living figure of the woman drying herself after a bath. How fine is the action of the young woman arranging her waist and how true that of the young girl combing her hair. Besides an older woman doing the same thing, there are "Les deux Soeurs" and a "Jeune femme au balcon, Cagnes." A. v. C.

By Lesser Known Masters.

The Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., are holding to Jan. 1, their second exhibit of "Paintings of Merit by the Lesser Known Masters." As for no one of the 27 examples more than $1,500 is asked, it is veritably surprising to see what a notable collection, much more important than that of last year, has been assembled.

The largest work, and one of the best, is a family group of 8 figures, remarkable in the variety and interest of their poses, and capably painted, by Pieter de Grebber.

By the little known David Martin, the master of Raeburn, there is a sympathetic portrait of "Two Children," most unaffected in pose. A "Portrait of a Lady," by Paul Moreelse, shows beautiful quality and modeling in the painting of the face. Another work, also worthy of any museum, is Gaspar Netscher's "Prince in Armor," with its remarkable rendering of the cuirass and the fur atop the helmet. There is a superb portrait of Miss Williams, who has an air of great distinction, painted by Harlow, and a most interesting presentation of David Wilkie, who looks as if he had just struck the idea for a subject and was somewhat dazed by it, by John Opie. Eugenio Lucas, the elder, pupil of Goya, is more attractive than his master sometimes is, in a soberly brilliant portrait of a Spanish lady. He is also represented by a "Procession."

Francis Cotes pictures with his usual preciseness "Lady Olive," and Janssens van Ceulen perpetuates the opulent charms of a Countess of Carlisle. There is a Sir Peter Lely showing "Sir William Leman," and a portrait of Miss Russell, by John Russell. Inimitable is the county fair scene of Martin Stoop, called "The Fakir," in which a background group suggests Gavarni. What could be finer in its way than George Stubbs' portraits of "Mr. Palmer and His Horse?" Richard Wilson is distinguished in a "Classic Landscape," and Benjamin Wilson limns with delicacy Mrs. Locke of Norbury.

Other names in the catalog are Both, Longhi, Monnoyer, Miel, Juan de Sevilla, Veneto, attributed, Ver Brugge and Vincent. A. v. C.

Art Weaves of Weber.

There was a time, as evidenced here and there in the exhibition of his works, now on, at the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave. to Dec. 30, when Max Weber, a wonderfully industrious person knew pretty well what port he was bound for. Now since he has sailed his barque onto the sea of Cavorticism he seems to have lost his bearings and to have blown first towards one shore and then to another. And if he apparently does not know exactly what he means, how can any one else know?

One thing is certain—he does not aim in his productions, sculptures, oils, water colors and pastels, which number over a hundred, to represent the beautiful. However, that he can visualize it if he wants to is shown in his group of nude women called "Summer."

In "The Mother" and a double figure-piece in which one nude woman is seen on both sides of a tree, he seems to want to represent types uglier than those of the cave dwellers. The chief preoccupation of the artist, whose color is generally without charm, is to produce varieties of flat and curved planes in groups, radiating from various axis, into which he occasionally throws a few suggestions of human and other forms, to emphasize his meaning.

See for instance his "Comprehension of the Grand Central Terminal," "Interscholastic Runners," "Memory of a Chinese Restaurant," "An Idea of a Modern Department Store," "A Comprehension of the International Exhibition at the Armory" and "Woman and Tents." It is a far cry from these imaginings of then and recent years, to the clever little Italian landscapes of 1907. And again Mr. Weber tries by arbitrary symbols to indicate such things as steam, noise and melody. He can paint and he knows it. But he has eaten of the fruit of the tree of "modernist" knowledge with dire results. And with it all he is interesting, if not commendable. A. v. C.

Soc'y of Craftsmen's Show.

The Soc'y of Craftsmen's 9th. annual exhibition is now on at the Nat'l Arts Club Gallery, 119 E. 19 St. Furniture for a dining room and an oak door by the Norwegian wood carver, Karl von Rydingsvard are among the most interesting exhibits. There are mosaics by Charles R. Lamb and some very choice Marble Head and Basekraft potteries.

Very attractive is a flame colored and black luster, porch set by G. C. Wake-man and Glen Tor's wall vases are charming in form and color. One finds panels, screens, quaint tiles, bronzes, brasses, embroideries, laces, jewelry and books on art. Work by boys and girls from various high schools, bears comparison with that of mature craftsmen.

Thimble Theatre a Gallery.

Charles Edison now has pictures and statuary, as well as music, at his 10 Fifth Ave. studio and Thimble Theatre. An excellent characterization of his father, by Orlando Rouland, pictures by R. H. Cooper, Barry Faulkner, Agnes Pelton, M. McKay and others included in the first of these little exhibitions, which is now on. There are also sculptures by Alice Morgan Wright, a characterization of Lincoln and a delightful group of small figurers by Chester Beach, an attractive Edith B. Parsons and among works by Laura Gardin, the puppy which won at a recent Academy show.

The Daniel "Olla Podrida."

Mr. Daniel, with a wily view to the Christmas season, for the month has gathered in his gallery at 2 West 47 St., 34 little works by artists well and little known, that in their combination of color and quality furnished restful relief to the eye and joy to the soul, although the methods occasionally sound jarring notes. The artists form a happy little band, as full of life as crickets, although not always so insistent and in full accord.

There is Hayley Lever, with a couple of sparkling little Gloucester studies; Ernest Lawson suggesting Monticelli, with three brilliant little landscapes, and Man Ray deserting his stove pipes and showing fine qualities in a "Still Life" and a "Landscape." Gus Mager, also is in fine fettle, with a "Still Life" and "Landscape," and Maurice Prendergast gaily disports himself on "The Beach" and more soberly presents "Venice." A new and vigorous note is struck by Clagett Wilson, who shows maestria, in

The Perhèlion of Picasso.

To judge from one of the works by Pablo Picasso, now displayed to Jan. 3, at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave., he may be expected to present some day, a painted model in relief, of a roulette wheel, and ask for serious consideration, from others than the votaries of chance. His "Still Life in a Garden," is a relief medallion, not modelled but made, mounted with very "precious" care on a square of rich white watered silk, on which large and small truncated solid cylinders fibure, together with a simulation of the ace of spades.

This production called with the other six a "painting" is like a flat "Still Life," also in gay colors, a very late emanation of the artist's brain and workshop.

But there is still hope for the seeker after in this wierd display, for he finds a semblance of two hands reaching to the floor in the "Jeune Fille," (Avignon, 1914). The young girl has otherwise disappeared, blown apparently to pieces by an artistic hurricane, which has by strange chance brought together again, the remnants of her costume, that seeking her have found only her hands.

There are more "Still Life" subjects in the usual vein, in which violin bridges and strings appear here and there, but the whole collection makes the fine little row of primitive sculptures seem almost alive, so great is their contrast to the corpses of nature and remains of art strewn about.

various little panels, one or two of them gems, in their way, which present single figures of Spanish women and two figures of Spanish girls. William Potter is as truthful as Boudin, in his sparkling group of sail boats. Then there is Preston Dick-inson almost fascinating with his "Land-scape" built up, of elemental forms.

Others in the Christmas band, all with something new to say, or something old to say in a new way, are Robert Henri, Max Kuehne, William Glackens, Samuel Halpert, Harry Berlin, Mr. Bates, Edward Fisk, Charles Demuth and the Zorachs. A. v. C.

Salmagundi Ann'l Exhib'n.

At the Salmagundi Club exhib'n, now on, Geo. Elmer Brown's picture, awarded the prize for painting, is powerful and good in design. Gloucester fish boats, of many colors are shown in blazing sunlight. Ernest David Roth took the prize for etching with an interesting depiction of an ancient theatre in Rome. The illustration prize was won by Howard Giles whose snappy outdoor group of smart looking people, taking tea is brilliant, harmonious in color and handled in a decorative way.

Three etchings by Mr. Quinlin, are low in tone and beautiful in quality. Edward Dufner shows a large watercolor, characteristically poetic and misty. Ernest Albert's marine has movement and depth. Leon Kroll's three pastels of nudes, drawn on Japanese paper, are powerful and far from the academic. Ledyard Towle shows a couple of spirited canvases. A wood cut for a book plate by Mr. McKinney is noteworthy and Mr. Alwads two illustrations and cover design have charm. Many other equally interesting examples of the art of painters, illustrators and etchers are included in the group.

One of the most artistic treats of this Holiday season, is a visit to the galleries of Mr. Edward I. Farmer, No. 5 W. 56 St., where, in cases fitted in the walls, and framed in XVIII century patterned and gilded oak, are displayed a wealth of Oriental art objects, jades, crystals, rare porcelains of all the dynasties, old prints, kake-monos, netsukes, and antique rugs and hangings, which combine to make a most alluring and colorful array. Mr. Farmer's jades are especially notable and most varied in shape, color and carving. A large wonderfully carved rock crystal is so translucent that one looks into and through it as into and through a coral bottomed pool in the Bahamas. There are also other rare objects, such as a large and most important statue of K'wanon, the face full of expression and beautifully modelled.

While the jades, porcelains and other rare art objects appeal more especially to the cognoscenti, there are, in another gallery, for those desiring beautiful and original Christmas gifts, an array of lamp bowls, bodies and stands of old oriental wares, and many and diverse shapes, all fitted by Mr. Farmer himself with shades fashioned of oriental stuffs, which not only accord in color and design with the individual lamps but greatly enhance their effect.

The George Bellows Show.

That George Bellows is stupendously clever is a self evident truth, but in some of his work, now on view at the Whitney-Richards Galleries, in the Holland House, there is little but cleverness, mere surface painting which inspires no emotion, only surprise at his brilliant and easy handling of paint. There is a distinctly personal note, however, and Mr. Bellows is a most resourceful person. Some of the canvases have much depth and are notable in color.

Especially vigorous and original in composition, are "Cliff Dwellers" and "Day in June" both well known canvases. The splendid portrayal of Dr. Wm. Oxley Thompson, a 1913 Academy prize winner, is shown as well as light examples of this years work, seven portraits and a landscape, entitled "Cloudy Day." These are exhibited for the first time, one example with genuine charm and appeal is a presentation of the painter's little yellow haired blue eyed daughter Anne. A small marine called "Beating to Sea" is full of power and movement and "Boy" is a delightful characterization. There is something rather morbid in the majority of the drawings. One called "Luncheon in the Park" is a however refreshing exception. H. C. R.

At the City Club.

Armin Hansen's oils at the City Club, are luminous and full of atmosphere, "The Old Farm—West Flanders, Belgium" and "On an Iceland Fishing Boat," are noteworthy impressions and a marine entitled "The Blue Hour" is quite imposing.

One of the most charming of 12 Lester Boronda canvases shown, is "Chinese Squid Fishers." There is real movement in the iridescent rippling water and a nice feeling for color. A fountain at Versailles, in summer and some California pictures are also effective.

Thumbbox Gallery Exhibition.

At the first exhibition of the Thumb-box Gallery 24 E. 49th. St. now on, the eye is at once drawn to Van Deering Perrine's attractive pastels and oils, gorgeous sunsets and fanciful conceptions of children dancing amid blossoms.

Gifford Beal's preliminary drawings for circus pictures, are vastly entertaining, fresh little sketches, made on wrapping paper, never intended for exhibition. He has also 4 oils. There are many of Potthast's beach scenes and a strong group of Jonas Lie.

Carroll Beckwith, delivered during the week, at Washington and Baltimore, lectures on Versailles, illustrated with Miss Marbury's fine series of motion picture slides.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

ART NEWS' VALUE PROVEN.

A most convincing proof of the superior value of the ART NEWS to art lovers, is afforded by the fact that whereas this journal published, as far back as August 14 last, an excellent appreciation, with illustrations, of the Serbian sculptor, Ivan Mestrovic—whose work at that time had created a sensation in English art circles, and called the attention of its readers to his originality and ability—the monthly art magazines, and notably "Arts and Progress" of Washington, D. C., have apparently only recently awakened to the "arrival" of Mestrovic as "news." The last publication trails along in its November issue, just three months behind time, with an article on the man and his
work.

It is impossible, of course, for the monthlies to keep even in any way abreast of the real and important news of the art world, but to be three months behind on such a matter, would seem to indicate a strange lack of news perception. American art lovers are busy people during the crowded art season
and want the news quickly and tersely told. For the art news of the world and especially of America, "read the ART NEWS.

CORRESPONDENCE

THOSE EXPOSITION AWARDS.

An Open Letter to Edward W. Redfield.
My dear Redfield:

You will recall that upon your request I agreed to furnish a partial list of "those absent" at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The farther I wade into the affair, the more I regret to find that those in charge, have either let the selfish qualities rule, or else have never heard of the existence of men whose works have stood the test of time before their contemporaries and the public, an achievement which you will admit is worthy of respect and should entitle them to a degree of consideration.

I believe in a matter of this kind, where a national event is in question, the public expects, and has every right to expect that all representative men should be in evidence, whether the individual members of the committee or jury do or do not personally admire their works. And, after all, no man or body of men safe in assuming God-like power by forecasting the end right at the beginning; it may be wiser to leave a few questions for the future to answer.
Another thing that complicates the situation is that it is not always easy to decide just where on this present bilious plane of existence, our obligation to the other fellow ends. I am firmly of the opinion that all of these relations are well-hooked and should stay linked together.

I ask, in the name of all that is fair, why should a man of Gardner Symons' unquestioned ability be unrepresented? Why Henry G. Dearth has not even one canvas?
Who can question the claim of George Oberteuffer or of Martha Walter? How account for the absence of Elizabeth Sparhawk Jones, Frank Benson and Joseph DeCamp? The latter, it is true, has one canvas, but what one and why is it there?
Why, it is his portrait of Duveneck, who requested it to fill out his own exhibit, to complement the grave of his wife, whose figure "dead on the couch" has been dragged from exhibit to exhibit.

Fred Dana Marsh, one of the cleverest of young decorative painters, is given not one inch of the wall. Not a single painting of so great a man as Thomas W. Dewing is to be seen, nor one by Albert Sterner.
No notice of Hopkinson Smith, Frederick Ballard Williams, Abbott Thayer, Robert
Blum, Henry Ranger, William T. Smedley, Arthur Schneider, Middleton Chambers,
Elliot Clark, Frank Swift Chase, Edgar S.
Cameron, W. J. Alyward, Charles Basing, Gustave Cimiotti, Howard Giles, Edward Greacen, Frank Green, George Inness, Jr.,
C. F. Naegle, W. J. Hayes, Gustave Wie-gand, Arthur Freedlander, Sarka, Schilling, and others too numerous to mention.

On the other hand, what do we see? A room devoted to twenty-six Redfields, another containing thirty-eight Hassams, a third containing thirty-four Chases; almost a hundred canvases representing three men.
Who would not enjoy looking at all of them? But this, as you know, is not my point.

In passing out loaves to a bread line, care is taken and one would expect a spirit at least as lofty to prevail here. Far be it from me to suggest that Redfield, Hassam and Chase should be allowed to exhibit but one canvas each; on the contrary, I have deep regard and sincere admiration for the work of all of them. But I do think that an exhibit, supposed to be open to all, should be so in fact as well as in name.

I can, however, credit Messrs. Redfield, Hassam and Chase with a sense of humor keen enough to see the point when all three exclaim: "This is a great Exhibition!"

Regarding style in selection, I would call attention to the fact that this is a Panama-Pacific Exposition; what other artist beside Jonas Lie has brought out the big, dramatic note of the Panama Canal on canvas?
A group of these in the opinion of many,
would have fitted well into this scheme, as long as groups were in vogue.

Apropos of Jonas Lie why A. S. Clark instead of Jonas Lie, as the reasons for his representation cannot be artistic ones?

What can be said in the defense of the Winslow Homers selected? They are a lot of old ones, only of his best in the lot, and that fact has been pointed out often by "experts." But Hale and his wife, from Boston, are certainly there with the glass-blowing stunts in large numbers.

What has anyone to say of the arrangement of Sargent's canvases; in a little cornered well—a distressing place and the representation greatly lacking; and again,
the Whistler room nailed up with canvases mostly picked up in London for motives
we cannot define, and those that were kindly loaned by Mr. Freer, who protested against the entire hanging and arrangement of the American section.

It is not wise to put sense of justice under lock and key, for the verdict of the future must be reckoned with—better that the book be open to all men.

Yours sincerely,

William Jean Beauley.

P. S. Have not Louis Betts' past performances been good? Why hand him a piece of malleable iron? W. J. B.

Why Are Pictures Great?

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:

In a recent issue of the ART NEWS, Mr.
S. L. Kingan of Tucson, Arizona, asks:
"Why are pictures 'great'?"

He says: "No one can describe a song so as to make you hear it, to feel it. And as no one can tell you why it is that a melody of Chopin is wonderful, so no one can tell you why Corot's or Inness' pictures are wonderful. And then," he says:
"Art can never be defined; words cannot tell what it is."

Your correspondent wants two things in one short phrase:—a definition of Art and a lecture on the constitution of the said, explaining why it is capable of being emo-tioned by Art, and, then, because Heaven itself could not do this impossible thing,
he promptly assumes that neither a definition of Art, nor an explanation of why it affects us, is possible!

For an explanation of the why art stirs
our senses, feeling and emotions, three entirely different things, let him read "Aesthetics," by Eugène Véron, published in Paris,
in 1873.

As for a definition of Art, in the abstract,
the simplest and a sound definition is as follows: Art is an expression of human emotion. But that is insufficient. Véron's definition is also sure definition: "We may therefore say that Art is a manifestation of an emotion, translating itself exteriorly,
either by a combination of lines, of forms,
or of colors, or by a series of gestures, of sound, or of words—subject to certain rhythms."

But this is also insufficient. Why? Because an expression of "an emotion" may result in a work of idiotic art, or art which,
while charming enough, is yet trivial art,
which, while it may please the artist who made it, may leave others indifferent or even hostile.

Art, to be in the category of great art, must not merely express the emotions of the artist himself, it must also be capable of stirring the emotions of others of mankind.

Therefore, to cover both these functions of an artist, the expression of his own emotion and the stirring of the emotions of his fellowmen—the art world has needed a sufficient and complete definition of art, ever since Plato and Aristotle began to analyse art.

To supply this ancient need, I succeeded in formulating, after many years of reflection, the following definition: Every human work, made in any language, with the purpose of expressing, or stirring human emotion, is a work of art; and a work of art is great in ratio of its power of stirring the highest emotions of the largest number of cultured people for the longest period of time.

I have not the space to say which are our highest emotions, but a little reflection will reveal this to any capable thinker.

This definition does three things: It defines art, in the abstract; it implies that there are two categories of art: great art
and trivial art, and it defines great art.

Quite a number of men consider this definition complete, sufficient and invulnerable and that, with this measuring rod as a guide, any human work may be given its true place and value in the scales of great and trivial art.

Respectfully yours,

F. W. Ruckstuhl.

New York, Dec. 13, 1915.

WILLIAM WALTON, ARTIST.

An Appreciation.

Cradled in the salty sea,
There you slept so peacefully:
Sea-weeds brown entwined your hands,
Sparkling grains of purest sands
Glinted in your silvered hair—
Sea-birds mourned to leave you there.

Did you find this world so sad
With its wars and woes gone mad
That you could not bide the times
Left us from those peaceful climes?
You, so gentle-souled and shy
Did not even say "good-bye."

You who taught me when a child
Guided my small hand and smiled,
At the charcoal's crooked trace,
As I tried to interlace
Leaf and vine (with untrained eye)
'Twas you set my ideals high!

Midst the golds that you loved best
Bide you in the realm of rest;
Bide you in rich bronze and grays,
Bide you in the rainbow rays.
Ah! the canvas spread for you
Will be made of heaven's own blue.

—Mrs. Christene Wood-Bullwinkle in the "Wave."

OBITUARY.

Frederick B. McGuire.

A notable figure in the world of art passed away Dec. 12, with the death in Washington, at the age of 78, of Frederick B. McGuire, trustee and director of the Corcoran Gallery. He followed his father as a trustee of the gallery and finally became director. He was an intimate of the late W. W. Corcoran, the founder. The selection of works for the permanent collections was largely due to him, as was the inauguration of the bi-annual exhibitions of contemporary American oils, at which former Senator Wm. A. Clark offers such munificent prizes. Mr. McGuire took much interest in the careers of the younger native painters, and did much to aid them. He was affiliated with the Nat'l Academy of Design and a member of the Metropolitan Club of Washington. His funeral, the first ever to be held there, took place Monday in the Corcoran Gallery.

E. Wood Perry.

Enoch Wood Perry, long a member of the Nat'l Academy and U. S. Consul at Venice for two years from 1856, died Wed. at the age of 84 in the Presbyterian Hospital. He was born in Boston and went abroad in 1852, studying under Lentz and Couture. In 1860
he returned to the U. S. and had his studio for many years in the old Tenth St. Building. Before or during the Civil War Mr.
Perry painted the portraits of Jefferson Davis, John Slidell and Gen. Grant, the last being in the Union League Club. He also on a Western trip did the portraits of Brigham Young and other Mormon leaders. In 1866 he returned to N. Y. and in 1869, on exhibiting "The Weaver," was made an Academician. In 1877 he was elected a member of the American Water Color Society. Among his works are "Counting Spoils," "The Contraband of Peace," "The Garibaldian," "The Lost Art," "The Clock
Doctor," "Saturday Afternoon," "Heart's Ease," "The Sower" and "A Helping Hand."

Mr. Perry was active in causing the Park Commissioner to set aside land in Central Park for a museum. He was recording secretary of the National Academy of Design from 1871 to 1873 and a member of the Artists Aid Society and the Century Club.

Henry J. Thouron.

Henry J. Thouron, of Phila., a fellow of the Pa. Academy died in Rome, Dec. 13.
He was an executive officer of the Institution for several years and was last elected its pres't in 1914. He was instructor in composition in the Academy Schools and

CHICAGO.

The National Association of Portrait Painters show; etchings and monotypes by Charles W. Dalgren; and block prints by Gustave Baumann will be on exhibition at the Institute in January.

Paintings by Guy C. Wiggins are on show at O'Brien's. These are views of Cornwall, land and sea, shipping, the reefs, the grassed headlands,—all swathed in radiant lights or in misty atmosphere, and Wiggins has a fine example in the American show now in the Art Institute—"Harbor Lights."

Charles Howard Clawson, a member of the Richmond School of Landscape Painters and of the Cincinnati Art Club, has 22 landscapes, on show in the popular Northshore Barrere art gallery.

Harry B. Lachman's Paintings on exhibition at Reinhardt's are winning much praise. The scenes from the Tyrol, from Paris, and other parts of France, and from Spain, form one of the best shows of the season.

Miss Jeanette Buckley and Margaret Baker have Wisconsin Landscapes on view in the Harvester Building studios.

H. Effa Webster.

PROVIDENCE.

The Water Color Club recently closed a rotary exhibition, of seventy-six selected examples, after a successful circuit of New England cities. The following seven sales were made: Clara Arnold, "Raspberries"; W. A. Brown, "Flood Tide at Twilight"; Eliza D. Gardiner, "The Children" and "Early Morning"; F. C. Mathewson, "Garden in Pink and Blue" and "Formal Garden"; G. W. Whitaker, "Fruit Hill Pasture." The club is now assembling a new rotary show.

The Art Club opened its annual Thumb-Box Show on Dec. 7th to run to Dec. 27th. Sixteen sales were made during the opening week. Robert Nisbet's group of conscientiously painted landscapes in delicate grays, F. Usher De Volls' strong dock and city street scenes, and Lester G. Hornby's group of spirited and colorful watercolors are the most important offerings.

Other interesting groups are formed by the quiet toned watercolors by Sydney R. Burleigh, the atmospheric impressions by Stephen W. Macomber, the picturesque foreign views by Mabel M. Woodward, and the rich toned landscapes by George W. Whitaker, H. Cyrus Farnum, George A. Hays and Frank C. Mathewson. Futurist examples by August Satre are also shown.

H. Anthony Dyer is holding an exhibition of his recent work at a local gallery. This collection includes two early morning effects of much charm and a sunset in rich warm tones. A number of foreign views are also included.

Owing to architectural changes at the City Hall, the large oil by George W. Whitaker, "View of Fall River from Swansea" which has hung in the Municipal Court Chamber for fifteen years has been removed and is now in the hands of a private collector.

Among recent work in the studios, is a large landscape with cattle by George A. Hays and Maude R. Fenner's recently completed nocturne and one of her characteristic "Willows with Reflections."

BOSTON.

In dwelling on the present "lean years" of exhibits, the thoughts of the "old-timer" hark back to the world-famous displays given by the Copley Society, and to those palmy days of the Art Club, when shows were of a most lively and stimulating character, inviting, from one member of the painting fraternity, the cynical remark, "By going to all these pesky shows you know what to avoid doing yourself."

Reference was made briefly last week to Frank W. Benson's etchings on exhibition at a local gallery; but mention should also be made of his really remarkable series of black and whites of bird life. In making these drawings he has worked in a hitherto neglected field. They splendidly reproduce the drama of bird life, the poetry and grace of bird motion.

The big etching show of George T. Plowman, architect, author, and etcher, at the Misses Harlowe and Howland's, Boylston Street, is also of unusual interest. Notable in this exhibition is his famous Christian Science Church in Boston—Mrs. Eddy's own—a massive piece of architecture that has been variously called "ugly" and "beautiful," a "mess" and a "dream." This etching, made especially for Mrs. John M. Longyear, and now first publicly exhibited, is certainly very effective.

The variety and charm of the "little pictures" still on at Vose's Galleries are attracting not only "lookers" but "buyers." After the exhibition and sale is over, it may be that not a few lucky persons will find in their Christmas stockings a delightful little pochade signed John Doe.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Annual Exhib'n of oils, by members of the Art Club was opened on Dec. 10, and will continue until Jan. 9, 1916. Forty-eight works are shown. Upon entering the gallery attention is immediately challenged by a capital marine by William Ritschel, "There Shall Be Light," wonderfully true in effect of shimmering sunlight glancing across on-rushing sea to the rocky coast. Another wall is equally interesting, Leopold G. Seyfert's graceful nude, entitled "Reflections," being the attraction.

Henry R. Rittenberg exhibits a very solidly painted and lifelike portrait, of John H. McFadden, Esq., once Pres't of the Club. Wm. K. Yarrow shows a capital character of an elderly woman, entitled "Waiting." The same painter also shows himself in a very able work at the easel in his studio, reflected in a mirror. An extremely virile picture is in W. Elmer Schofield's "Winter Landscape." None the less strong and direct, in translation of American landscape, is Edward W. Redfield's "Melting Snows." Emil Carlsen shows a beautiful "Woods Interior," most attractive in light and tonal and decorative quality. Lazar Raditz gives a suggestion of Franz Hals in his capital character study, "Anna Laughing." Paul King exhibits two canvases, in which diffused light envelops the landscape. In his "Horse Drinking" he shows some good painting.

Richard Blossom Farley exhibits two carefully studied views of the seashore and dunes, and Henry B. Snell some small views of St. Ives admirable in color and values.

At Pen and Brush Club.

An exhibition and sale of thumb box sketches, at the Pen and Brush Club, 132 E. 19th St., contains clever water colors by Jane Peterson, some work by Susan Ricker Knox, Harriet Bowdoin's colorful impressions, poetic studies by Caroline W. Pitkin, an interesting bit of Glen Island, by Fanny Dritler and "The Pendant," an attractive picture of a young woman by Helen Watson Phelps, Gertrude Fosdick and H. S. Phillips are also represented.

Textiles at Chadwick's.

The John Chadwick Company, 13 East 57 Street, have reopened their galleries with an exhibition of rare and interesting textiles, consisting of velvets, brocades, embroideries, tapestries, XV., XVI. and XVII century laces, some old potteries, Hispano Mauresque plaques, iron work, Arabic marbles, Arabic copper vessels and other works of art, from Spain, Portugal and Italy.

Italian Laces.

A tempting display of real laces and hand embroidered linens, which was awarded the first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition is at 665 Fifth Ave., the New York branch of Pietro Cattadoni. There are lovely Venetian point, fillet and other Burano laces from the school of Queen Margherite of Italy, bed spreads, pillow cases, table covers and scarfs of all sizes, collars, cuffs and lace by the yard all beautiful in design and workmanship.

"HOMELESS"

An Art Tree Panel

Designed by Frank Brangwyn and executed in natural and dyed woods by A. J. Rowley, London.

C. Arnold Slade is represented by a good "Maine Coast." Leon Kroil shows a very remarkable "Still Life," extremely modern in scheme of color. Alexander Harrison's "Model and Spider," exhibits masterly painting of the nude, and Birge Harrison's "Morning in Philadelphia" excels in atmosphere and perspective, as also does Parke C. Dougherty's "Misty Morning, Independence Square." Benedict Osnis has a capital portrait of "Mrs. Henry B. Pancoast."

An exhib'n will be held in Memorial Hall, Jan. 12-Feb. 23, 1916, of oil and watercolors, sculptures, illustrations, etchings and the crafts, the work of foreign born artists, or those of foreign parentage, in furtherance of the work of the Nat'l Americanization Committee, in order to demonstrate how much can be done, with the aid of art, for the conversion of those of alien birth into loyal Americans. Mrs. E. F. Stotesbury, second vice-chairman of the committee, has offered money prizes aggregating $2,000 for the best works in each class.

Simon and Bassett, of this city, have been selected as architects of proposed memorial to General Meade, victor at Gettysburg, to be erected in Washington. Charles Grafly was chosen as the sculptor of such work as the architect's design may call for. The State has appropriated $80,000 for the memorial. Eugene Castello.

NASHVILLE.

The Nashville Art Ass'n presented Paul Swan in Classic Dances, of Greek, Persian and Egyptian roles, Nov. 12-13, at the Theatre Vendome; from Nov. 15 to 28 the Ass'n held an exhibit of Japanese Prints in the Carnegie Gallery; on Dec. 10-11 Mr. Frank Alvah Parsons, of N. Y., gave a series of lectures on the place of art in school education, in modern business, and in household furnishings and costumes.

The local business organizations co-operated with the Art Association in bringing Mr. Parsons here, as also the Public School Teachers' Ass'n.

The Rarest N. Y. Print.

It has transpired, in connection with the display of prints of old N. Y., at the Grolier Club, 29 E. 32 St., that the rarest engraved view of N. Y. City, that known as the Burgis print, is now owned by Mr. Edward W. C. Arnold. At the club the owner's name is as usual not recorded. The print, said to have been sold for $20,000, was found some two years ago, in a Western town, and bought by Mr. Robert Fridenberg. The print is the largest copper plate of N. Y. and was engraved by William Burgis in 1717. The view, apparently made from Brooklyn Heights, is engraved on four large sections, which were to have been formed together, the entire length, being 7 ft. by 2. An imperfect print, until recently, thought to be the only one extant, is owned by the N. Y. Historical Society. This does not contain the dedication to Gov. Robert Hunter and the key. The price of the engraving is not alone a high water mark, for a N. Y. print, but also exceeds by several thousand dollars, the prices obtained in London for mezzotints of XVIII century engravers.

Projected Urbana Museum.

The University of Illinois at Urbana wants an art gallery and has begun a movement to collect funds towards which it has a promise from Mr. Homer Stillwell of Chicago of $25,000, providing a like amount is raised by September next.

The walls of the MacDowell Club, exhibition room are gay with Spanish posters, collected by Ernest Peixotto when he was in Spain a year ago. The last performance of the clever little sketch in which Louis Mora takes the part of a Toreador, will be given tonight.

The Dresden Municipality having at last granted the $112,500 for the erection of a new museum to be built on the "Zwinger" site.

LONDON LETTER.

December 8, 1915.

A permanent memorial of the late Sir Lawrence Alma Tadema was made last week, in the form of the presentation, to the Victoria and Albert Museum, of his library, which was purchased for the sum of £1,000 by a number of his friends, the Princess Louise having been especially active. The artist's two daughters have displayed considerable public spirit in allowing the purchase to be made at this moderate price, for the collection had been valued for probate, at three times the figure, while twice the amount had been offered, before the war by a public library in Germany.

Included among the "documents" collected by the painter are no less than 163 portfolios, containing nearly 6,000 drawings and photographs dealing with every detail of classic art, from the plan of a temple to the embroidery upon a Grecian lady's robe. The books comprise several thousand volumes, an interesting feature being the group with Greek, Roman and Egyptian portraits. The whole bears eloquent testimony to the thoroughness, which characterised Sir Lawrence's work, and to the elaborate researches made by him to achieve absolute accuracy.

A Dec. Exhibition, sure to be of the greatest interest, will be that of cartoons by the Dutch artist, Louis Raemakers, to be held at the galleries of the Fine Art Society. This neutral observer of the war is so pro-Ally, in his feeling, that even when he raises a laugh at the English, it is always rather in the spirit of the man who turns a joke against himself. So biting are his satires on German militarism, that he has more than once been accused of violating the neutrality of Holland, and the matter has even been brought into the courts. That the power of the brush is as mighty as that of the sword, is established by the fact that a price of 12,000 marks has been placed upon the artist's head, by the Germans.

The well-known authority on Indian Art, Dr. Ananda Coomaraswamy, is leaving England shortly for New York, where he will speak on the subjects which he has made his special study. His wife, Ratan Dévi, gave last week a successful recital of Classic Indian folk-songs. Dr. Coomaraswamy preceded the recital with an address on India.

The London Group, undisturbed by the grimness of the times, is holding an exhibition at the Goupil Gallery, and showing itself as alert as ever it was, though we are spared this year some of the rude shocks of former shows. Indeed, we miss Mr. Epstein's sculpture and a number of eccentricities in paint which formerly enlivened visits. Even Mr. Nevinson, who represents Cubism, in England, is growing slightly more normal in his artistic vision, though his methods of achieving realism, still include a sort of hodge-podge of miscellaneous detail, from which he leaves the spectator to extract the emotions which they are intended to portray. But his picture of a "Deserted Trench", carried out in tones of black and grey, is a really powerful piece of work, creating with little apparent effort the impression of utter desolation. Mr. Nevinson, too, is responsible for the one piece of sculpture in the Exhibition, a bust which he names "Une Americaine" but which is hardly complimentary to ladies of the New World. One can only trust that he means this plaster to be taken humorously, for if taken "au grand serieux", it is impossible to regard it as anything but grotesque. What this particular distortion of feature is intended to indicate, it is by no means easy to decide, but since it is generally adopted by the Futurist-Cubist-Vorticist school, one feels convinced that it possesses some abstruse, metaphysical meaning! In spite of the fact that a considering. L. G.-S.

A NEW BRANCH OF ART.

The illustration on this page, of an "Art Tree" Panel will convey some idea of the excellent work which is being done by A. J. Rowley of the Rowley Galleries, Church St., Kensington, London, in the interpretation of artists' designs in a medium of natural and dyed woods. Mr. Rowley has lately patented a method of wood inlay, by means of which he reproduces with the happiest results, decorative designs of all kinds, achieving not only fine effects of color, but also an impressiveness and atmosphere, rarely attainable in paint. Mr. Rowley attributes much of his success in this direction to the natural play of light which is inseparable from the surface of the natural wood and to the vitality and life which this quality confers.

This picture which is from a design by Frank Brangwyn, is carried out in black and natural tinted woods together with a background partially developed in silver. The figures stand out most impressively against the smouldering ruins of the town and the whole is instinct both with emotion and mystery.

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY.

Mary Helen Carlisle is exhibiting to Dec. 19 at her studio at 80 W. 40 St., a number of her attractive pictures of English and American gardens.

F. K. Detwiller has taken a studio in the Holbein, 145 W. 55 St.

Everett L. Warner's "Snowfall in the Woods," in the last Spring Academy, and now at the Chicago Art Institute, is among the works recently purchased by the Friends of American Art, for the permanent collection of that institution.

Pierre Tartoué and Mrs. Tartoué gave a reception at the former's studio, 6 E. 46 St., on Dec. 3 to show the former's portrait of Miss Vera Fisher. On Monday they gave a studio costume dance.

George Washington Smith has returned from Paris and taken a studio at 1228 Connecticut Ave. Washington, D. C.

J. Francis Murphy was in town for Academy Jury duty, but returned to his place at Arkville, N. Y. where Mrs. Murphy and he will remain until Christmas.

At the Montclair Museum an exhibit of ptg's loaned by the Nat'l Arts Club and portraits in wax by Ethel Florence Mundy are on view to Jan. 13.

Two operettas in French were given Tuesday at the Princess Theatre for the benefit of the French organization Appui aux Artistes.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

A part of the French Renaissance, Louis XV and Louis XVI collection of jewelry exhibited at the Pana-Pacific Exposition, by the antiquarians C. & E. Canessa, is now on view at the Canessa Gallery, 547 Fifth Ave. It includes rare pieces of enameled gold, studded with precious stones, vanity cases, "bonbonnières," "tabatières," etc., the works of well-known artists of the period, some of which bear historical portraits of people of the Court of Versailles.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustavus Town Kirby, the former of the American Art Association, gave a dinner and dance to their recently married friends Tuesday at their house, 7 E. 9 St.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.

As was announced in the AMERICAN ART NEWS, in its issue of Oct. 2 last, and again announced in more detail, over a month ago, the large and important collection of old and modern foreign and American pictures, formed during nearly 50 years of effort, study and research by Mr. Catholina Lambert, and which fill and adorn the large and handsome gallery of Mr. Lambert's residence, Buena Vista castle, which from a mountain's summit on the west, looks down upon the city of Paterson, N. J., will be sold at auction in the Plaza Hotel ballroom, on four evenings in early February.

The pictures in Mr. Lambert's collection, and of which the ART NEWS will have more to say, and, in detail, before the sale, were secured by him both in Europe and America, and have a wide range of subject, school and period, from the early Italian school of the XV century to the modern American masters. The most important of the early Italian works are Madonnas by Botticelli and del Sarto, the former from the late Sir William Agnew's collections, and the latter from that of the late Martin Colnaghi. There is also a large, most important and beautiful altar piece by Bernardino Luini (1465-1533), purchased through the Blakeslee Gallery some years ago, and reproduced in the ART NEWS at that time. The late Sir William Agnew placed this really great picture with Mr. Morgan's Raphael, now in the Metropolitan Museum, and Carlo Dolei's Madonna of the Eight Stars, then at Blenheim Palace, as the three great altar pieces of the world.

Old Spanish, Dutch and Flemish Works.
The Spanish pictures include examples of Murillo, Pereda, El Greco, Carreno de Miranda, Coello and Ribera.

Among the Dutch and Flemish XVII century works is a portrait of de Gelder signed by Rembrandt, dated 1632, from Durand-Ruel, portraits by Mytens, Janssens, Mierevelt, van Ravensteyn, Van der Helst and two each given to Van Dyck and Jordaens.

The English school is represented—Reynolds with five examples, Lawrence with eight, Gainsborough with two, Romney by two, Wilton by three, and Hoppner, Raeburn, Beechey and others by one or more each, for the most part purchased through or from the late T. J. Blakeslee.

Modern French Paintings.
Among the Barbizon masters and their contemporaries there are two good Corot landscapes and examples each of Rousseau, Troyon and Diaz, Daubigny, Jules Dupre, Delacroix, Lepine and Boudin.

A Chien-Lung red lacquer screen went to Mr. E. W. Lublin at $180. A temple vase with side handles brought $100 from Mr. C. T. Crocker.

Sale of Orientalia.

A small but unusually fine collection of Oriental art, the property of Bunkio Matsuki of Boston, consigned to the Anderson Galleries for sale, will go on exhibition today, to be sold Thursday eve. next, Dec. 23.

There are oils, watercolors and rare prints by some of the greatest artists of Japan. Among the beautiful art objects are antique rugs, pottery, bronze, ivories and textiles, also some remarkable wood carvings from temples and shrines, among the latter old carved doors of Satsuma oak, with the eight compartments elaborately ornamented with Howo birds and cloud designs in relief. The names of various pilgrims, written on the doors during many centuries, can still be deciphered. These once adorned a Shinto shrine in Yamato and date from the early Kamakura epoch (XII Century).

Indian Collection Sale.

The large and important Indian collection of Mr. Joseph Parker Camp of Washington, now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the public sale on Monday and Tuesday evenings next, Dec. 20-21, contains some fine specimens of Indian beadwork, including headdresses and war bonnets, many baskets, made by the Navajo Indians and the Thinkits of Alaska, and a remarkably large and fine collection of Indian blankets.

DIRECTOR TRASK IN NEW YORK.

Art Director John E. D. Trask, of the Pana-Pacific Exposition, recently arrived in this city, from San Francisco and is making his headquarters at the Hotel Vanderbilt, during a trip which will include Washington, Philadelphia and Boston. He is to arrange with the artists represented in San Francisco, for pictures to replace those to be withdrawn on account of their sale, etc., in order that the Fine Arts Palace may remain open until May 1. He is also to further the plans for a permanent museum to be established in that building, of which, it is rumored, he is to be the director. Mr. Trask, since his arrival here, has learned that $25,000 more of works have been sold, in addition to the $200,000 worth disposed of since the opening of the Exposition. Seventy-five per cent. of the total amount of the sales is for American art works. It is said that Mr. Trask intends to arrange for some extra rooms for individual artists, and that one of those to be so honored, is to be Henry Golden Dearth.

WAS THE BESNARD STOLEN?

The press agent is invading the field of art. The widely reported "disappearance" of the pianist Leopold Godowsky, who was finally found apparently blissfully unconscious that he had "disappeared," is now followed by a weird story, with pictures of both the painter and his work, of the supposed loss, after its recent arrival in N. Y. by the S. S. Espagne, of Albert Besnard's large canvas "Peace." This work is loaned by the French Gov't for exhibition with others, under the auspices of the Museum of French Art, etc., for the benefit of foreign artists' widows and orphans. Mr. William Francklyn Paris, who reported the matter to the police, thinks the huge canvas may have gone to Detroit. The agent of the French Line, Mr. Oscar Cauchois, says he knows of no picture having been stolen from the pier and that no such loss has been reported to him. He says if the painting did not arrive on the Espagne, it would come on the next steamer. As the work is 26 ft. high by 11 wide, it is not likely that it has been stolen, as no thief could sell it or pawn it to any advantage.

But the story is a "lovely" one, and will give the work, when it comes to be exhibited, an amount of free advertising in the press that could not otherwise have been obtained. Hats off to the press agent of the French Museum!

Art in the High Schools.

In his recent annual report, to the City Supt. of Schools, Dr. Haney, art director in the High Schools, urges that a scholarship for industrial art to be established in each school. Another recommendation, is for the regular employment of a visiting teacher, to promote school and museum co-operation. He also wishes to establish in the different schools, small loan collections from the museums, and urges that two per cent. of the cost of each new building, for suitable interior decoration, be included in the contract price. He also renews his plea for a day industrial art school, which might include a normal department for the education of art teachers.

NEW CORCORAN PRIZES.

Announcement is made by the Board of Trustees of The Corcoran Gallery at Washington, D. C., that former Senator, William A. Clark, has generously donated the sum of $5,000 to be awarded in prizes at the Sixth Exhibition of Contemporary American Oils, in the Corcoran Gallery during December, 1916.

These prizes are known as follows: The first William A. Clark prize of $2,000 accompanied by the Corcoran gold medal; the second William A. Clark prize of $1,500, accompanied by the Corcoran silver medal; the third William A. Clark prize of $1,000, accompanied by the Corcoran bronze medal; the fourth William A. Clark prize of $500, accompanied by the Corcoran honorable mention certificate.

This liberal donation, the sixth of its kind through the generosity of Senator Clark, brings the total amount of his gifts to the American artists, through this source, to $26,000—in repeated rewards which have proven to be potent and effective factors in the encouragement and development of our Native Art.

HAS MURILLO WHEN ARRESTED.

The cable reports from Paris that as he was embarking for America Adolphe Kramer was arrested on a charge of the theft of bonds, preferred by a Belgian broker. In Kramer's baggage was found a picture, thought to be a Murillo. It is dated 1682. The canvas was insured for $15,000.

Mr. Frank Tilford, president of the School of Applied Design for women, announces that in order to remove a large mortgage indebtedness, it has been decided

NEW MUSEUM FOR 'FRISCO.

During the closing days of the Exposition various plans were suggested for the advancement of art in this city. A fairly well organized movement is at present underway, to form a Museum association by the amalgamation of the Hopkins Institute (San Francisco Institute of Art) and the San Francisco Society of Artists, and to build and maintain an adequate and permanent Museum. A downtown office has been opened where those interested may meet and discuss "ways and means," and the matter is being pushed with much seriousness of purpose.

NEW CORCORAN DIRECTOR.

The Trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art of Washington, D. C., have chosen Mr. C. Powell Minnegerode as Director of the Institution, the post left vacant by the recent and regretted death of Mr. Frederick B. McGuire.

Mr. Minnegerode, the news of whose election will be hailed with pleasure by American artists, collectors and art lovers who have met and known him—and who have also known and appreciated his work as the able assistant of Mr. McGuire for a number of years. Mr. Minnegerode, still a young man, brings to his new post a wide and good knowledge of art, an unusually large acquaintance with the artists, collectors and art lovers of the country and a most agreeable and likeable personality. The ART NEWS warmly congratulates him upon his deserved honor.

Under Mr. Minnegerode's direction the Corcoran Gallery is sure to maintain the high position it has reached through the work and efforts of Mr. McGuire, its late Director, and its earnest and progressive Trustees.

SHURTLEFF MEMORIAL EXHIB'N.

A memorial exhibition of the works of the late Roswell M. Shurtleff, whose death last winter was a grief and loss to the art world, is being arranged by the Art Committee of the Lotos Club, with the assistance of Mrs. Shurtleff, widow of the artist. The exhibition will be held in the Lotos Club gallery, and the press view will be on Friday next, Jan. 14, with a private view and reception on Sat. evening, Jan. 15.

Philosophy For the Library.

Paul Wayland Bartlett, the sculptor, is superintending the placing on the attic story above the main entrance of the N. Y. Public Library, his colossal white marble statue of "Philosophy." This dignified and imposing work is one of a series of six.

FREDERICK B. MCGUIRE.

The regrettable passing of Frederick B. McGuire, for so many years Director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art of Washington, D. C., and whose loved and familiar form and features are reproduced from an unusually good photograph on this page, did not have adequate notice throughout the country.

Mr. McGuire, whose passing follows too soon that of his fellow Director, the late William M. R. French, of the Chicago Art Institute, had in his way as strong an influence upon the cause of art in America as did Mr. French. He succeeded to his father's interest in the Corcoran Gallery and for many years and during the formative period of the Institution enjoyed the full confidence of its founder, the late William A. Corcoran.

With a wide and good knowledge of art he constantly studied the exhibitions and collections of the country and followed the more important art sales, at which he made many purchases, ever alive to the interests of the Corcoran to which he devoted his life. It was largely due to his able direction and wise suggestions that the Corcoran gradually increased its collections, and when it finally was able to build and occupy its present beautiful home in Washington, it was Mr. McGuire who set on foot the movement which resulted in the now famous biennial exhibitions of American Art, with the munificent William A. Clark prizes, and made Washington for the first time an Art Mecca in this country. These exhibitions were to him of absorbing interest, and, although of late years almost infirm, he struggled out many times and against his physician's orders to superintend arrangements, to consult with his able assistant, Mr. Minnegerode, and to meet and greet, when the displays were ready, the members of the art juries, the artist exhibitors and other visitors.

The funeral of this devoted Director took place, appropriately, in the beautiful Gallery over whose fortune he had so long presided.

Art Sold at St. Mark's Bazaar.

At St. Mark's Hospital Bazaar, in the Grand Central Palace on Dec. 15, several art works were sold. Mr. Harold Phipps gave $450 for a statuette of Nathan Hale by MacMonnies, and Mr. Gouverneur Morris, $200 for a cartoon by Cesare.

War May Bring One Relief.

The Washington Herald of Dec. 17 said: "Carroll Beckwith, artist and lecturer, in a recent lecture here before the Washington Art Society, believes that the war will permanently do away with 'Cubist' art. So, the money may not be wasted after all."

GOVERNOR A POOR SITTER.

The Chicago jury in the case of Samantha L. Huntley who sued a committee for $2,000 for her portrait of former Governor Herbert L. Hadley of Mo. gave her $906.

"The jury," says the Examiner, "heard evidence offered by Mrs. Huntley for two days. It told of the multiple troubles of an artist trying to paint a statesman who virtually refused to sit still. They heard that Governor Hadley insisted upon reading the paper; that he likewise insisted upon dictating letters to his stenographer, and even wore a polka-dot tie while he was 'sitting' for the portrait.

"But Judge Goodwin instructed them that Hadley's actions during the sitting were not a matter of law. It was the contract made. The jury upheld the contract in its verdict."

THE WINTER ACADEMY.

(Second Notice.)

The mission of art is to inspire, and not to suggest, or excite, and yet strange as it may seem, it is the women artists who seem to be the most eager to deviate from this purpose, and produce works, which their technical purity and excellence apart, are most likely to offend. In contradistinction to the common saying, that to the pure all things are pure, is the fact that to the pure many things are impure. Leda and the Swan and Danae and the Shower of Gold are comparatively innocuous, when compared with various manifestations of modern art. And then they suggest little to the uninitiated. They also are somewhat purified by tradition and by the acceptance of the standards of other days, which probably put the tales of Boccaccio and Margaret of Navarre, in but little different class, from the Chronicles of Froissart and the "Temple of Boccaccio," a treatise on fortune or rather misfortune, written for the solace of Margaret of Anjou.

All this virtuous preamble is to call attention to the act that two of the sculptures by women, at the Academy Winter Exhibition are apparently such offenders against good taste and ordinary morals, that their undoubted technical excellence cannot cover their sins in this respect. They are Alice Morgan Wright's "Pavanne," with its struggling youth and bird, and Malvina Hoffman's "Morte Exquisite," the first a bronze and the second a marble.

The Naked and the Nude.

In a much less decided fashion, Edith Woodman Burroughs' "Acquiescence" suggests, though it does but little to offend. Her "Kathleen" is charming. Now to turn to another, but related matter, the treatment of the nude. Among the 132 sculptures, which form the large plastic section at the Academy show, but few, which represent what is usually called the nude, make any distinction between it and the naked. The difference may be slight, but it is there. Properly speaking a nude woman never had on any clothes, while a naked one has more or less recently taken them off. Over-emphasis of sex characteristics of either women or men does no good in art and indeed lubricity often is venerated but thinly by pencil, brush, spatula or chisel.

Now here is Charles Carey Rumsey with his three life-size women, rather spare of figure and plain of face, forming a "Group for Garden Pool." They are rather artificially posed, though still full of life, but instead of dryads, they might as well have represented ballet girls natur. On the other hand, Edward McCartan's well modelled "Spirit of the Woods," though a little coarse and recalling MacMonnies' "Bacchante," at the Boston Museum, does not offend. Neither do Chester Beach's rather far fetched marble relief, "The Vortex," with many nude figures; his effective "Cloud Forms" who seem to be engaged in a tug of war, or Brenda Putnam's Rodin-like "Char-mides," with its recumbent nude man and woman asleep.

How delightful, and not at all suggestive, is Janet Scudder's slender woman's suffrage figure, "Femina Victrix," and how inspiring is Abastenia St. Leger Eberle's Navy Dept. trophy, with its male "Victory." In contrast there is the prosaic and highly Germanic "Water Nymph" of C. Percival Dietsch, with its duck ducts and Louise Allen's similarly heavy "Fountain Figure." Both, however, have good technical qualities.

The Pleasant Side.

Unaffected art and humor, on the other hand, are to be found in Edith Barretto Parson's laughing "Turtle Baby." Renee Prahar has a frenetic, but cleverly modelled dancer, with her head touching one knee and a well modelled "portrait of D," which is full of character. Delightful is Isabet M. Kimball's little girl with a kitten called "Mikey-Boy" and simple and strong is Louise Allen's figure of a boy called "The Dreamer." Charles L. Hinton's "Diana" is a very well set up, naked lady, nicely modelled, but evidently from a mythological ballet, while his young woman who represents "Spring," is on the contrary rather bulky.

Scarpitta's "Healing Touch."

It is not prose but poetry that Cartaino Scarpitta presents in the "Healing Touch," and "Lampada Spenta." His portrait of Albert Groll is true to life and excellent is that of Albert Finn, Esq. Attilio Piccirilli signs two highly sensitive and admirably modelled heads, one of a sorrowful woman and the other of a pensive girl. Anthony de Francisci presents with vigor, among several busts, one of A. A. Weinman and Albin Polasek, a striking head of William M. Chase. By Louis Millione is a clever portrait of Eugene Castello, the ART NEWS' Phila. correspondent. Capital is the portrait bust of Charles Francis Adams, by T. Spicer Simpson. Helen Farnsworth Mears shows again her attractive ideal group "Dawn and Labor." Victor D. Brenner has a bronze relief, full of character, of Dr. Emily Blackwell. Strong, though not over-refined is Katherine B. Stetson's "Dancer: Making Horns." A similar remark is suggested by Mr. De Francisci's stretching woman's figure called "Relaxation." His "Primordial Prayer" seems rather more of a curse. Jane Poupelet show cleverness in a head and a hen and cat and Frances D. Jones has a cleverly modelled "Blue Heron Fountain." Quite odd is Benjamin Buiano's bright imitation of the early Chinese in his "I Yoke" with the stupendous head-dress. He also has a couple of capital babies' heads, the "New Born" inimitable. Charles Grafly reproduces the imposing head of Frank Duveneck and Albin Polasek, the well known features of the late J. P. Morgan. There is fine character in Karl H. Gruppe's "Polish Girl" and Marie Apel shows an excellent head of E. A. Cole, Esq.

A Work of Distinction.

Very distinguished, like a Bargue in bronze, is Neilson Stearns' figurine of "Daphne." Graceful is Bessie P. Vonnoh's little girl with "Water Lilies." C. S. Pietro-cendi his sympathetic group called "Inspiration" and a good statuette of John Burroughs. A vivacious and deftly modelled bust of Miss Violet Twachtman is by Nathan D. Potter. Mahonri Young leans to the new art in his effective, "Man with Wheelbarrow." Well modelled but rather tame is Edward F. Sanford's "Hamadryad," and rather heavy and Teutonic is Emil Siebern's "Faun at Play," which still has sound artistic qualities. There is humor as well as good art in Michel Jacobs' "Rock of all Nations," and spirit in Louise Allen's "South Winds" while Sara Morris Greene's "Eve" is well modelled, but rather ponderous. Louis J. Ulrich is represented by a well handled bust of an old gentleman whom he calls "Santa Claus."

SCULPTURE AT CHICAGO SHOW.

Only four years ago the sculptures in the annual Institute exhibition were only mere "scatterings," good to be sure, but with only a few of the leading sculptors represented. In the present display the sculptures are almost as prominent features as the paintings.

The figure, "Kanellos," a Greek dancer, by Emil Zettler is attracting attention, not only for its grace of lines and contour, but for the spiritual element that makes the personality of the girl vital. Richard W. Bock has two excellent groups in plaster, "Spring" and "Winter," both designed to be chiselled in stone. Nancy Cox-McCormack shows a portrait, in plaster, of Clarence Darrow—the force of the Darrow face is difficult to reflect, and although Mrs. McCormack hasn't caught the "oratorical tenseness," she has transmitted the power in repose that also belongs to the Darrow countenance. A. H. Atkins is represented by four bronzes, "Victory," "The Siren," "Maternity," and a portrait in relief. Each example shows sincerity and skill. Chester Beach has four bronzes, "Spirit of the Woods," "Unveiling of Dawn," and two torsos, male and female.

Medallion Portraits.

Mary A. Washburn's medallion portraits of "Ernest" and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Webster, in plaster, are gracefully modelled. Adolph A. Weinman shows a fine free-hand reflection of primitive human ambition in his "Heroic Courage." Another of his bronzes, "Head of Lincoln," is among his best work, and there are also a portrait sketch of Womboli, and a portrait medallion. Emory P. Seidel has a good figure piece, "Joan" in plaster; and Henning Ryden's portrait plaque, in bronze, is a pleasing bit of modeling. Cartaino Scarpitta exhibits two portrait busts, "G. W. Hodgson," "S. O. Buckner," and a bit of wild-wood animation, "Moo-ette." Frederick G. R. Roth's "Sea-Lion," in porcelain, is individual work. Lucy Currier Richard's "Allegro" is charming in its delicacy of grouping; and Bela L. Pratt's figure of a young girl reflects sincere genius.

J. M. Miller contributes a bit of pleasing fancy in a bronze ink-well with the title "Starlight," and this is prettily adapted. Caroline P. Ball has a charming "Wall-Dial" in bronze, and Edith C. Barry a delightful "Companion of the Road," while Elizabeth Norton's "Lioness and Cubs" greatly adds to the woman's representation in the show. Sidney Bedore's portrait, in plaster, "Junamay," and a nude figure, are conspicuous for courageous sincerity.

Work of "Appealing Freedom."

A certain dash of appealing freedom is always expected in Maximilian Hoffman's work, and he delightfully comes up to anticipation this year in his figure of the "Fisherman." Edward Berg gives the spirit of the sounding sea in his "Undine," and his fountain, "Will-o-the-Wisp" reveals his sensitive imagination as well as skill of execution. Jefferson C. Hine's "Seal Hunter," Louise Allen Hobbs' "Source" and "Scottie," Michel Jacobs' "Rock of all Nations," Isadore Konti's "Allegro," Ephriam Keyser's "Wireless" for book ends; Herman A. McNeil's bust of Lincoln and study for statue of Lincoln all show original interpretation and promise of stronger effort—and Louis Meyer's fountain-basin, "Sea Urchins," has been modelled in a joyous mood.

More Anent the Pictures.

Although many of the oils have been noticed in the ART NEWS, others deserve recognition, and among them are Charles Woodbury's "Fantasy," Cullum Yates' "Crisp September," G. A. Williams' drama of life including "The Pilgrimage" and "The Trail of the Star," Guy C. Wiggins' "Harbor Lights," Irving R. Wiles' "Souvenirs," J. A. Weir's "Bit of Nassau," Everett Werner's "Snowfall in the Woods," A. T. Van Laer's "Spring Day," Walter Ufer's "Isleta Water Carriers," C. P. Townsley's "Sunshine," D. W. Tryon's "Autumn Evening," G. B. Troccoli's "New England Woman," G. Symons' "Sunlit Hills," A. V. Tack's "Simon of Cyrene," Elizabeth S. Taylor's "October Days," Alice K. Stoddard's "Fisherman's Little Sister," Eda Sterch's "In Bou Sada," Zulma Steele's "Ashokan Reservoir," Robert Spencer's "Five O'Clock, June," George Smith's "Montecito Hills," John Sharman's "Vermont Hills," William Ritschel's "Rush of the Evening-tide," William S. Robinson's "Mid-summer," Carl Rungius' "Across the Saskatchewan," Puthuff's "Borderland," J. Potter's "Drying Sails," J. Quinlan's "Youth of the Year," W. Scott Pyle's "The Garden," G. Olinsky's "At the Window," Dewitt Parshall's "Zoroaster Peak," C. J. Nordell's "Choosing the Gift," P. R. Neilson's "Summer Morning," E. Neuhaus' "Lake Merced," H. D. Murphy's "San Juan," L. H. Meakin's "Summer Sky, Maine," G. F. Muendel's "Snow Patches," A. E. Ludwig's "Youth," Katherine Langhorn's "Sakonnet Surf," H. Lever's "Windy Day, St. Ives," H. Bolton Jones' "Late Afternoon," Charles W. Hawthorne's "Provincetown Fisherman," Fred G. Gray's "On a Summer Night," Howard Giles' "Maine," W. H. Dunton's "Emigrants," J. B. Davol's "Maine Fjord," Morgan Colt's "June Clouds," W. L. Carrigan's "Summer Hills," Maude D. Bryant's "Ramblers," Louise C. Brumbach's "Morning on the Beach," R. S. Breddin's "Morning Hours," W. A. Coffin's "Evening in the Valley," and C. M. Young's "Maple Tree, Autumn."

The December Good Furniture.

The December number of "Good Furniture," that most useful publication to the householder and lover of interior decoration and furnishing, and published by the Dean-Hicks Co., of Grand Rapids, Mich., is, if possible, a distinct advance on its predecessor. In beauty of typography, choice of illustration, well and capably written articles and illustrations (and those of its advertising are as good as those of the news pages), it takes rank among the best high class art publications of Europe and America.

The current number is especially notable for the excellent articles by the contributing editor, William Laurel Harris, on "The Preparedness of the American Art Industries," the same editor's bright and newsy notes on art topics "Seen in New York," Dr. James P. Haney's "Study of Home Decoration as a Problem of Design," George Le-land Hunter's finely illustrated article on "Gothic Tapestries" and C. Matlack Price's "Furnishing of Spacious Homes." The magazine should be on every art lover's library table.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

Two Volumes by James Huneker.
New Cosmopolis, By James Huneker,
Scribner's, 12 mo. ....$1.50
Ivory Apes and Peacocks, By James
Huneker, Scribner, 12 mo. ....$1.50

A diverting pot pourri of impressions of cosmic New York, the collection of essays by James Huneker, forming the volume called "New Cosmopolis," presents a series of pictures executed in the brilliant style for which this clever "wordsmith" is distinguished. The volume has much of interest to the artist. Architects, however, may feel aggrieved because so little is made of the architectural aspect of a "cosmopolis" which has certainly a salient architectural character, but painters and sculptors will find that the author, as usual, has seized the occasion to make frequent reference to their professions and certain of their professors. The initial chapter on "The Fabulous East Side," in which the author recalls his own participation in a Tompkins Square anarchist meeting, introduces a "Bohemian atmosphere" from which arises some scraps of conversation anew and the "East Side of George Luks."

From Luks to Mielatz, the etcher, the circumscription is easy for our admired "Raconteur," so in "The Lungs" we have remarks about etched bits of quaint New York of old. On to the chapter called "The Matrix," we read of Ernest Lawson as the artistic discoverer of the Harlem River and the "unknown reaches of the Bronx." "Brain and Soul and Pocketbook" brings us to the Metropolitan Museum, where the author comments upon the comments of the Sunday crowd with something less than his usual penetration. But it is in his remarks about the greatest of the Altman Rembrandts—"The Woman Cutting Her Nails," that the keen critical faculty flashes most amazingly.

Notes on pictures in Vienna, Little Holland, Belgium, Madrid and "Dear Old Dublin" (Sir Hugh Lane's Call of Moderns) are entertaining as new thought on old matter. The volume ends with bright chapters on Atlantic City and Newport.

It would be interesting to know how Puvis de Chavannes fits into the scheme of Mr. Huneker's book entitled "Ivory Apes and Peacocks."

We see now how criticism, like politics, has the power of making the strangest of bed-fellows. Puvis and Max Lieberman between the same covers—Heavens!—certainly the Raconteur and his publisher have patched up a strange tome. But list! Max Klinger, "not" a great sculptor, and his "Beethoven" dumb to the biographer of Chopin and Liszt! Angels and ministers of grace defend us—Lieberman preferred to Anselm Feuerbach; Anselm, the greatest of modern Classicists, the one Teuton who may be mentioned with Chavannes. Back, Jens, to the "linear," to the Sonatas of Pere "Franz" Haydn—for a bit of chastening.

The chapter on "Melancholy of Masterpieces" has an eloquent appeal for catholicity of taste and some good lines about Gauguin and Vincent Van Gogh. Matisse also is noticed.

Barring some flings at modern German art which denote a want of sympathy; the mention of Ingres and Degas in the same breath—the latter as a sort of continuator of the former; and certain other "strangenesses" above noted, "Ivory Apes and Peacocks" has some sound and much entertaining writing about the arts of the painter and the sculptor.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

New Group at Folsom's.

A coming exhibition at the Folsom Gallery, Dec. 29-Jan. 13, will be a selection of paintings and sculpture by a new group of Americans called "The Eclectics." The painters are James Britton, Guy Pene DuBois, Philip L. Hale, (Boston), Bertram Hartman, Henry Salem Hubbell, George Luks, Martha Walter, and the sculptors are Marie Apel, Solon Borglum, John Flanagan and Mahonri Young.

At the Netherlands Gallery.

The Netherlands Galleries, recently opened at 348 Madison Ave., are showing a number of interesting old masters, some of which come from the collection of the Ridgely family, of Baltimore, and others from that of the late Dr. Geo. B. Reuling, of the same city.

The manager, Dr. Gold, where he is in doubt as to the authorship of an example, wisely simply "attributes" it. His collection includes an interesting "Venetian Gambling Hall," with a large number of figures by Pietro Longhi, an Adrian Brauer "Interior with Figures" and a "Velvet" by Breughel, "Noah's Ark," the last from the Matthews collection, of Baltimore. Of more than usual interest is a portrait of Mrs. Lloyd, of Maryland, attributed to Gilbert Stuart, and an attributed Sir Joshua Reynolds, a woman's portrait. A "Portrait of an Architect" is ascribed to Ribera, as is a portrait of "William of Orange" to Netscher. Pietro Breughel has a scene of country life, and a large Vasari, a "Venus and Love," is from the collection of Mr. Charles Spence, of Md., former U. S. Minister to Turkey.

A "Hunter and Dog," Snyders; a "Dutch Peasant and Horse," B. Cuyp, and a "Landscape with Figures and Cattle," Berghem, are all good canvases. Other paintings include a "Conversion of St. Paul, set down to Rembrandt, and a "Venus with Loves," supposed to be by Jacopo Pontormo. There is a highly interesting little marine by Clarkson Stanfield and examples of Mass, Goltzius, Bega, Heusch and Correa.

Art From the Trenches.

The highly interesting exhib'n of work of French artists on the firing line, sent over by the government at Paris to the Museum of French Art, in the Scribner Building, 599 Fifth Ave., is well worth a visit. Besides the artists, who are allowed by the government a day each week to paint, have in most cases, very decided need of the money their exhibits may bring. Many of the exhibits appeared in the display made last summer in the Orangerie, in the gardens of the Tuileries. G. Belnet and W. A. Lambrecht picture many scenes that are full of character, while Charles Hoffbauer, who left his work at the Richmond, Va., State Capitol to join the colors, has a brilliant watercolor of a devastated village. One of M. Belnet's examples shows a convoy of wounded returning from Rheims, while Leon Dauphin has a large and striking view in watercolor of the half-ruined cathedral. Others represented are Henry Baud, whose work is capital, Leon Dauphin, Louis Montagne and Georges Bastard. There is also shown a collection of bisque figures sent from Sevres as a government gift to the French Museum.

Art at MacDowell Club.

Oils by a new group of ten painters are at the MacDowell Club, 108 W. 55 St., to Jan. 4. Josephine Paddock contributes the most striking work. This year she looks at humans with a more conservative eye than heretofore, and shows her usual nice feeling for design and color. Her sunny picture of a girl in white, with an enormous Japanese parasol as a background, and two portraits, are of more interest than her small, commonplace landscape.

Ernest D. Roth, better known as an etcher, sends work which has charm, and somewhat similar in key are Alta W. Salisbury's "Beach Trees in Spring" and other bits of nature, interpreted with delicacy and poetic feeling. Susan Ketcham's marines are always welcome notes, and she shows two human little portrait studies as well. Some of Anna M. Upjohn's canvases have a pleasing pictorial quality and are realistic and the work of Emily Nichols Hatch is promising. Others exhibiting are H. R. MacGinnis, Sybilla Mittell, Wm. E. B. Starkweather and Christian M. S. Midjo. The Society of the Daughters of Indiana purpose buying one of Susan M. Ketchum's marines to present to the Herron Art Institute in Indiana.

Ave., he is showing, in addition to an interesting collection of bronzes, watches, miniatures, fans and other art objects, antiques, a number of attractive paintings, chiefly by modern masters, several of the most notable of which were originally in the collection of the late Erwin Davis. Especially remarkable are two portraits of girls, one by the grave and impressive Ribot and the other by the sparkling but solid Mettling. There is a magnificent elder Vollon, still life of "Fish," a Monticelli, "Nymphs in the Wood" and a Decamps, "Old Fisherman of Calais."

A brilliant landscape is by Le Seneschal, Luis Graner is represented by the "Gossips" and the "Boat Race," Louis Leloir signs a vivid little riverside scene in a banlieu of Paris. By Seignac there is an attractive little genre "The Weekly Bath." The graceful "Ideal Head" of a young woman by Baron Lejeune is painted with much vigor.

Others represented are M. Desboutsins—two good examples, V. Huguette, Jacomin.

Art Students' Summer Work.

Over 100 paintings and drawings in various mediums, are on view at the Art Students' League, 215 W. 57 St. They are representative of the summer work of pupils. Small canvases by H. E. Schnakenberg and Eliza C. Moran are among the best. A portrait of a woman, seated carelessly, her hands clasped around her knees, is rich in color, very human and unposed, it is the work of M. D. Dodd. H. C. Park shows a pleasing outdoor picture and Mrs. Kraus, an interesting little study of a rather disconsolate looking girl in a painting apron, seated in a corner of a studio with an open book in her lap. A Weinrich's girl sewing is daring in color and rather good in design. There are some clever little impressions in both water color and oil, but nothing very startling.

At Mr. Lawlor's Gallery.

In the admirably arranged galleries, which Mr. Frank A. Lawlor has fitted up in the former Senf Mansion, 300 Madison Jean Auffray, V. Plumot, Carroll Beckwith and Wm. Hathaway. The example of the last is a shore scene at Newport.

Textile Show Continues.

The exhibition at the John Chadwick Co. Gallery, No. 14 E. 57 St., of XV to XVII century, inclusive, textiles, including velvets, brocades, embroideries and tapestries, together with some old potteries, Hispano-Moresque plaques, iron work, Arabic marbles, copper vessels, etc., continues, and is attracting many art lovers.

An art exhibition is on at the picture gallery of the New Museum at Wiesbaden.

A RARE ANGELICA.

A beautiful specimen of the art of Angelica Kaufman, examples of which are rarely seen in this country, is on view at the galleries of Lewis and Simmons, 581 Fifth Ave. This is an oval portrait of the artist, painted in Ireland while Angelica was a guest of the family of Latouche at Greystone, Dublin County, and presented by the artist to the Latouche family.

As the picture has never been out of the family until its recent purchase, its title of authenticity is absolutely clear and impeccable. The picture is one of great artistic merit. Its composition is perfect for tonal balance and rythmical pattern of line. As a representation of feminine character it closely approaches Sir Joshua at his best, and for brilliance and clarity of color it is the equal of many fine Gainsboroughs.

The modeling of the head is accomplished with extreme delicacy, indeed it would be difficult to find in the whole field of British portraiture more delicious nuances of rose than those which tint the cheek of fair Angelica in this magnificent portrait. How painter-like is the management of this brilliant head with its wealth of deep chestnut hair against the grey blue of a clouded sky; how skillfully is the high light of the chaste breast led up to by the warm pearl tones of neck and shoulders; but even more admirable is the successful placing of the graceful and expressive hand, which carries the light into the lower left of the oval in a manner which truly embellishes the composition and enhances, if possible, the extreme beauty of the head.

The exhibition of such a canvas by so important a painter as Angelica is an event. No wonder Goethe found Angelica one of the seven inspirations of an Italian sojourn.

D. S. MILLER'S PICTURES.

Daniel S. Miller, brother of the late Mrs. Jay Gould, who died Feb. 9, 1915, left a total estate of $647,318, having a net value of $440,896, according to a transfer tax report filed Dec. 17 with Deputy State Controller Boardman. Mrs. Harriet M. Dickenson, his sister, is the sole beneficiary.

The assets include more than 100 paintings, among which are, with their appraised values, "Feeding the Goat," Kever, $1,000; "Armande, the Shepherdess," $2,510, and "Gathering Apple Blossoms," $2,000, Ridgway; "The Man with the Sword," Roybet, $1,700; "The Chess Players," Latour, $2,000; "Head and Bust Study," Henner, $1,500; "Morning on the Escart," Clays, $1,500; "Before the Bath," Bouguereau, $3,000; "Returning Home," Bloomers, $1,000; "Summer Pleasures," Tromp, $1,000, and "Inspiration," Batours, $2,000. A crystal vase and cover was appraised at $2,500.

sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-

THE DECEMBER BURLINGTON.

"A portrait of Henry Sidney, Earl of Romney," by Kneller, in the Natl.
Portrait Gallery, is the frontispiece of the December number of the Burlington Magazine. The text is by C. J.
Holmes. Sir Claude Phillips signs an article on Paris Bordone, with which are reproductions of two pictures,
"The Holy Family with a Donor" and
"The Repose in Egypt," the former owned by Admiral Warrender and the latter by Mr. Bernard Berenson. Martin S. Briggs has the second article, on St. John's Chapel, in the Church of St. Roque, Lisbon, while A. F. Kendrick signs the third one on the "Tapestries at Eastnor." G. Baldwin Brown writes of the highly interesting work on architecture that passes under the name of Vitruvius. The destroyed Tiepolo of the church of the Scalzi in Venice, is reproduced in the "Monthly Chronicle." There are notes "On pictures in the Royal Collections"
which include Anne Killigrew's
"James the II," by Lionel Cust.
Whistler's "Portrait of his Mother" is by Frank Gibson. Mr. Gibson, speaking of the pose, differing from Mr. Pen-nel, suggests that it might have been inspired by Charles Keene's etched portrait of Mrs. Edwards. The Burlington may be obtained of the American Agent, James B. Townsend, 15 East 40th St.

CAN ART BE CONCENTRATED?

A writer in the Phila. Press, while lauding Mr. Charles L. Freer for his recent generous and public spirited offer to erect a million dollar building in Washington, D. C., to house the superb collection of art works which he had previously donated to the Nation questions whether the gifts of buildings and collection are "wise" in principle.

The argument which the writer uses,
as against Mr. Freer's action, is that as the future of the United States as an artistic shrine depends upon the generosity of just such Americans as Mr. Freer, in contrast to European countries, where the Governments have collected their art treasures and placed them in Government built and owned Museums—the concentration of the art treasures, owned now by private American collectors in Washington, as Mr. Freer, he says "evidently desires from his own gift"—would lessen, if not destroy, civic pride and thus injure rather than aid art interest in this country?

It is pointed out that Detroit itself is presumably disappointed, if not shocked, at the coming removal of the Freer collections from that city; that Phila. would, as presumably, not contemplate with pleasure the removal,
some day, to Washington of the Widener collections from its own limits, and that the same would apply to Pittsburgh, Boston, Chicago, and even New York. The value of the possession of, even small, if choice, collections of art works, to a city or community, is proven by the Wallace collection of London, to which we might add the pride of Boston is the collection of Mrs. Gardner, even if she does not always show it generously—and that of Minneapolis is the Walker collection.

We are not so sure, while admitting the justice of some of the conclusions of the writer in the Phila. Press, that Mr. Freer contemplates that any appreciable number of American collectors will follow his example, but the question is an interesting and important one, and one that can be well and widely discussed with good results.

THE OPEN FORUM

Letters for this column must not exceed 500 words in length at the most
and should be limited, if possible, to 100 words. As a rule condensation
and brevity make for force and effect.
There are few subjects that cannot better be treated in 100 than in 500 words.
If letters exceed the above allowed
limit of 500 words they will be "cut"
to that space. Letters must be accompanied with name and address of
sender, not necessarily for publication
(although a letter signed with one's own name is always stronger than one
with a pseudonym) but as an evidence
of good faith. We cannot publish anonymous communications.

Why Artists Grow Discouraged.

[The following interesting letter was recently received from a prominent American painter and a subscriber to the ART NEWS of 10 years' standing.—Ed.]
Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: Your very courteous letter as to my discontinuance of subscription to the ART NEWS was duly received. I assure you this was not caused by any dissatisfaction with the quality nor conduct of the journal.
You give all the art news, and you give it in excellent form. And my discontinuance was not a measure of economy. The price of the ART NEWS is very reasonable. Your suggestion that I was perhaps actuated by any resentment at opinions you may have expressed, is farthest of all from the fact.
I have the poorest possible opinion of the man who "stops his paper" from such a paltry motive.

"Why, then," you will naturally ask, "stop the ART NEWS?" Because I am losing my interest in Art. I am forming an interest for other things. Art is a dead wall,—that is, for the artist who isn't exceptionally strong,—which I certainly am not,—or the artist who can hustle, pull wires, and do still more humiliating things. I couldn't do those things if I wanted to.

I am not complaining that I can't make money nor acquire fame from Art. You know that very few, even of the best, can make a living out of it. And no American artist can be said to be famous. Even the names of the most prominent and successful artists are unknown to the vast majority of educated and well-to-do people.

Can't Show His Work.

But there is no possibility for me—and for a very great many like me—even to show my work; and it takes the life out of one's work to feel the certainty that no one is ever going to see it. Imagine a writer knowing absolutely that he would not be allowed to offer his work to any publisher!

And, except for the favored few, that is the situation in New York with regard to the rank and file of artists and their opportunities to offer their work to buyers in exhibitions.

I am no neglected genius, whose superior work is shut out of the Academy by the wickedness and lack of appreciation of its members. I am only one of the many who,
till a few years ago, were usually accepted, and sometimes hung on the line. And—what is more—my works were frequently sold. I suppose everyone in the art world knows how this condition of affairs came about. However, I don't remember ever having seen any mention of it in print.

The "Incurable Rotten Spot."

It all comes down, in the first place, to the one—apparently incurable—rotten spot in the local art situation: the lack of any suitable exhibition place. That old evil has been gone over till everyone is sick of it, and has given it up as hopeless. As has been frequently remarked, the only people who might, perhaps, remedy it are the Academicians, and they are very comfortable as matters stand. I don't mean to say anything against them. They are very good fellows, most of them. It would probably be asking a good deal to expect them to make the sacrifice of time and labor it would involve—even if they had the ability.
Anyway, I am only complaining of conditions.

Academy and Society Merger Injurious.

The thing that made these conditions very much worse—that made it vastly harder for the "outsider" to get any showing—was the merger of the Academy and the Society of American Artists. This clever arrangement was, of course, borrowed from Wall Street. Formerly all the Academicians were sure of space in their own show, and all the American Artists were sure of space in theirs. But they were by no means so safe in the other fellows' show. Now all of them are sure of a showing in both exhibitions. But, of course, the space available for outsiders is correspondingly diminished.

That is the situation. Apparently there is no help for it. Indeed, it must grow worse. New organizations can be—have been—formed by outsiders, presumably with a view to ultimate merging with the Academy. If this kind of thing is carried far enough of course there will not, eventually, be any room for outsiders at all.
Perhaps there ought not be. It all depends upon whether an art organization is intended to encourage art growth generally, or to exclusively promote the interests of its members.

Obviously, however, you are not in any way responsible for these conditions—quite the contrary. So, in view of your very friendly expressions—which I wish to return most cordially—I will reconsider my intention of discontinuing my subscription to the ART NEWS.

Very sincerely yours,

American Artist.

New York, Dec. 21, 1915.

Pennell Answers Beaulieu.

Editor American Art News:

Dear Sir:

I do not know whether the William Beaulieu, who writes at great length of "Those Exposition Awards" in your last issue, visited the Panama-Pacific Exposition. But I do know, that he knows nothing about what he is talking about. When he says "the Whistler room nailed up with canvases mostly picked up in London, for motives we (he) cannot define."

As a matter of fact there were but three canvases sent from London—and the reason why they were sent, was because they were important—the most important canvases in the Whistler room—and represented three periods of Whistler's work.

But what I cannot "define"—to use Mr.
Beaulieu's expression is his failure to note the absence of Arthur B. Davies—whose absence was as much regretted as that of any of the others he has mentioned.

It is also rather characteristic that he confines his list of omissions to real oil painters. Oil paint is not the beginning, end and all in all of oil—as most painters
in America would like it to be believed.

And Mr. Beaulieu might have referred to W. B. van Ingen—who so far as I know—is the only man to paint the Panama Canal
—the only man to make decorations out of it—and the only painter to be recognized by the U. S. government, and ignored at San Francisco, and also by Mr. Beaulieu.

Joseph Pennell.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Elsie Ives.

Mrs. Elsie Ives, wife of Percy Ives, an artist of Detroit, and herself a painter, died Dec. 11 in that city, aged 51. Previous to her marriage in 1889 she had exhibited in Chicago and other cities. Mr. Ives' portrait of his wife, whom he first met in Paris, was recently awarded the first prize in the Scarab Club exhib'n in Detroit. Mrs.

Ives is survived by her husband and a son.

Fritz Lissmann.

Fritz Lissmann, born in 1880, fell in battle lately. His specialty was animal and bird life. He had been resident in Hamburg since 1906.

Robert Ockelmann.

Robert Ockelmann, aged 60, died recently in Dresden where he had originally studied under Schilling. Figurers were his specialty.

F. Hart Nibbrig.

The artistic world of Holland has been expressing its regret at the death of F. Hart Nibbrig, best known as a landscape painter.
His studies had been at the Amsterdam
Academy and under Cormon in Paris.

WILLIAM WALTON.

A Tribute.

Good friend and true and noblest of thy kind,
We are the band of mourners left behind
To chant, in broken cadences, thy dirge.
O may a gladder song arise to purge
Our hearts of bitterness! Thy memory
Of comradeship enjoyed must ever be
Our solace. Nay, what though thy brush and pen
No longer bear their messages to men?
The message of thy soul is higher still.
Shy spirit, rest thee quietly until
We meet again. Would we might learn of thee—
Thy kindly ways, thy matchless loyalty!
In God's own sunshine, far from wind and wave,
We lay the laurel on thy new-made grave. L. S.

LAWYER "SOME" ART VALUER.

Gustave C. Langenberg, portrait painter, who died Nov. 27 last at St. Mark's Hospital, is alleged to have left paintings in his studio at 106 West Fifty-fifth street worth $113,000. This statement was made in a petition filed in the Surrogates' Court by Mr. Israel Ellis, a lawyer, of 116 Nassau street, who has a claim for $40 for professional services. He asks that Elsie Foige, the artist's niece and nearest of kin, who was appointed administratrix of his estate, be compelled to increase her bond from $2,000 to $25,000.

When Miss Foige filed her application for letters of administration she alleged that the decedent's estate, consisting of $500 in household effects and the remainder in his paintings was worth not more than $2,000.

Ellis's petition gives the following paintings with their values as stated by Langenberg:

Life size portrait of President Wilson,
$15,000; "Repose in a Studio," $10,000;
"Elascal Market," a Mexican landscape,
$25,000; "Dutch Girl Smiling," "Torreon, Mexico," and "In Pennsylvania," the three worth $13,000; "Dutch Girl With a Cat in a Field," $5,000; four Belgian landscapes, $12,- 000; "Madonna," $5,000; "Bismarck," $3,000;
"Mis Christensen," $5,000; "Mademoiselle," $10,000, and other paintings worth $10,000.

A. Seligmann Gallery Not Sequestered.

A special cable despatch to The Sun from Paris, says in regard to a report printed in the Paris newspapers to the effect that Arnold Seligmann's art gallery had been sequestered on the ground that Mr. Selig-mann was of German nationality, Mr. Selig-mann's manager told the correspondent of The Sun that the story was untrue. It had its source, the manager said, in the action of a French court in holding a Beauvais tapestry screen, valued at 72,000 francs ($14,400), until after the war, when it is to be sold.

The screen was bought by Mr. Selig-mann, the manager said, on a joint account with M. Guerault, another art dealer.
The latter wished to sell it now, while Mr.
Seligmann preferred to wait until there was a better market. M. Guerault brought suit,
Mr. Seligmann's manager says, alleging that Mr. Seligmann was still a German, under the Delbrueck law limiting the naturalization of Germans. The manager said
Mr. Seligmann was naturalized in England
in 1898.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Eugene Glaenger, of Jacques Seligman & Co., 705 Fifth Ave., sailed from Bordeaux, Dec. 14, and was due on Christmas eve.

C. P. Snow, art dealer, has taken the store at 24 East 49th Street.

LEFT PICTURES TO FRIENDS.

Charles S. Sykes, real estate operator, who died recently, left various pictures to relatives and friends.

Henry Morgenthau, Jr., receives W. R.
Lee's "Navaho Shepherdess," Mrs. Josephine Morgenthau, "The Rag Gatherers," by Whistler, and Mrs. George Lebolt, "Monk," by Novak; "Boticelli Madonna," by Edwards; "Miranda" and "On the Bay of Naples," by J. C. Webb.

CHICAGO.

The Taos Society of Artists is growing in membership. Local artists, every year, more and more appreciate the inspiration in the American Southwest. E. Irving Couse is president of the Society. Couse, J. H. Sharp, E. L. Blumenschein, H. Dunton, O. E. Berninghaus, and Bert Philips have permanent studios in the Taos colony, New Mexico. Walter Ufer has returned with sumptuous paintings that he accomplished at Taos Isleta, the Grand Canyon, and in the Mojave Desert. He has paintings of Indian maidens of Pueblo, and San Juan types, Indian Chiefs, and the red people in their native environment. Two of Ufer's paintings are at the Art Institute now—and several of them will be in line at the forthcoming exhibition of paintings by artists, in the Institute.

Paintings by Charles Russell, the painter of Indians and pioneer cow-boy life, will be exhibited at Thurber's in January. Mr. Russell will be in town as also Mrs. Russell.

Katherine Maxey gave a talk on mural decorations, with stereopticon illustrations, in Fullerton Hall, last Saturday. Miss Maxey is painting an important mural decoration for an Evanston public school.

Victor Higgins, Bertha Menzler Peyton, Royal H. Milleson, Edgar Payne, and Grace Ravlin are finishing oils they sketched in the Taos country, to be exhibited later.

The Harry B. Lanchman paintings, at Reinhardt's, continue to draw crowds. The artist is a Chicagoan.

There's a collection of color-etchings and paintings by American artists at Anderson's. Gordon Stephenson's portraits are still conspicuous at Thurber's, with important paintings by American artists. At Roullier's, the etchings by Auguste Lepere are proving of special appeal—and examples of the very best work by this French genius are in line.

Paintings by Guy Wiggins, landscapes painted in Cornwall, are still attracting visitors to O'Brien's.

Leonide C. Laveron has returned from New York and has established a studio in the Fine Arts Building for the Winter.

The Palette and Chisel Club has assembled a large number of paintings, by members, in their quarters—and the show is meritorious. There are several hundred of these paintings, all small and mostly oils.

There are new American paintings, most of them by Chicago artists, at the Guild Shop.

Albert Wehde has in his studio, in the Fine Arts Building, an attractive collection of Philippine hand-craft.

Jeannette Buckley and Margaret Baker sold 55 paintings and sketches during their recent exhibition in the Harvester Building. Jean Beman Cook Smith, sculptor, has opened a studio here. It may be recalled that Mrs. Smith's frieze, 150 feet long, is a feature of the California building at the San Diego exposition.

Mrs. Rose Sears Kerr, a worker in hand-craft jewelry, has come on from New York and established a studio in Evanston, Ill. H. Effa Webster.

TOLEDO.

Alexis Jean Fournier lectured in the hemicycle of the Museum, Dec. 15, on the Barbizon painters. Mr. Fournier spent much time painting the studios of the famous artists in Barbizon. His talk was illustrated with lantern slides of the artists and reproductions of paintings of the studios.

"We won't have much American art," said Mr. Fournier, "until we see to it that American painters come back from abroad and paint in their own home cities."

"Before we have 'old masters' we must have young masters," continued Mr. Fournier. "We have some young masters now in this country. Time alone is needed to make them 'old masters.'"

Carl Rakeman, of Washington, D. C., is exhibiting several excellent summer landscapes at Woodruff Brothers' galleries.

The Christmas exhibition of paintings and watercolors at the Mohr galleries include some good work by Carlton T. Chapman, Lewis H. Risser and Irma Kohn.

Chester C. Hayes has re-established his studio here. Portrait commissions will keep Mr. Hayes occupied the greater part of the winter.

Thomas S. Parkhurst, who has painted many landscapes along the Maumee River, has published a little book entitled, "The Valley of the Maumee: an Autumn Reverie." Frank Sottek.

German Painter Escapes.

At the outbreak of the war, Max Pechstein, the German painter, was in the German South Sea Islands at Palau, whence he reached America via Manila and Nagasaki. From there he got over to Europe on a Dutch steamer as a coal trimmer. According to the Kunstchronik, he has now arrived in Germany, where he expects the call to arms.

BOSTON.

In a local gallery of historic reputation, Kenneth Frazier, Paris-born and New York adopted, and the pupil of Constant, Doucet, and Lefebvre, is showing a collection of portraits, which some of our local critics consider surprisingly disagreeable, if competent in their way. These portraits are mostly of fashionable and prominent folk, whom Mr. Frazier, with the courage of his convictions, has painted in a most unflattering light. In fact, whether truthfully or not, he has dared to depict "important men with stupid expressions and leathery complexions." (This, according to one of the best-known local critics.) Can it be that "our best people" are utterly lacking in vanity, that they cannot only permit Mr. Frazier to paint them in this frankly depressing manner, but consent to have him exhibit them as well? One would suppose that his women sitters at least would revolt, when viewing his "idea of fleshcolor," which, again in the words of the above mentioned critic, "does not strike one as either veracious or pleasant."

PHILADELPHIA.

In the new picture gallery of the Philadelphia Sketch Club there are now on exhibition some 100 works in oil, water color and pastel by two of the members, Fred Wagner and John J. Dull. A number of the works have already been exhibited in local art shows. Most of them are direct sketches from nature, freely touched notes of color observed in nearby bridges, shipping at the water side, snow clad hills and autumnal foliage. Among these, in the Wagner group, is an excellent portrait of Charles M. Burns, a prominent architect. An aquarelle among the Dull contributions, entitled "Addingham in December" has decided charm and spontaneity.

The annual holiday revel of the Students of the Academy will be known as the "Toy Ball" and will take place on New Year's Eve.

An exhibition of early wood-cuts and chiaroscuros from the John S. Phillips collection, including an important representation of the works of Bartolozzi is now on in Galleries B, G and F at the Academy. Miss Sara Minis Hays, honorary curator of

LONDON LETTER.

London, December 15, 1915.

Mr. Herbert Cook, announced as the purchaser of the Althorp Rembrandt, (the beautiful portrait of the painter's son, Titus, which changed hands a couple of months ago for the sum of £35,000), has recently acquired, as you have probably heard by cable, another important portrait, namely Velasquez' picture of Calabacillas, the Court fool of Philip IV of Spain.

American bidders were well represented at the recent Raglan sale, but must have felt somewhat discouraged, if they attended with the idea of finding that prices had declined with war conditions. Although the furniture was, for the most part, of the type that is small and dainty, rather than large and imposing, everything was so exquisite in craftsmanship that the keenest competition prevailed throughout. The opening offer, for instance, for a pair of Louis XV Couturier commodes, measuring only 25 inches in width, although not starting at the 1,000 gns., suggested by the auctioneers, Frank, Knight and Rutley, was quickly succeeded by others and eventually led to their purchase by a Parisian dealer for 1,450 gns. And in this connection it may be remarked that, judging by the keenness displayed by the French connoisseurs and the number of valuable pieces purchased by them, there is at present, no dearth of the "wherewithal" in France for the acquisition of art works. More than one of the London dealers, was, I understand, acting on behalf of American clients. This was so in the case of Mr. Frank Partridge, who paid as much as 1,700 gns. for a small bonheur-du-jour kingwood table and a fine pair of Louis XV commodes by La Croix, to which the original "Couronne d'Or" sales-sign was still affixed, while the two little round cupboards with Louis XV ormolu mounts, for which Mr. Cullum paid 630 gns., were likewise intended for America. The same agent, acting this time for the Raglan family, secured for them the Lawrence drawing of the three beautiful Mornington Sisters, although both Messrs. Sabin and Partridge entered keenly into the competition.

This week has seen the election to the rank of Royal Academician of Charles Sims, a painter whose delicacy of fancy and excellence of execution have won him general recognition and approbation. His work is imaginative to a very high degree and has the additional merit of being entirely individual. The election is one which is certain to win favor in all quarters.

Persian Art Gallery Effects Sold.

The sale of the effects of the Persian Art Gallery last week, in consequence of the absence of any items of especial merit or importance, resulted in exceedingly low prices. Indeed the largest sum attained was that of 2 gns. for a XVI Century Persian vase of thick crackled glaze, semé with quatrefoil blossoms in black and blue. Small pieces went for as little as 5s. each, and what remained of Mr. Kervorkian's collection of Hispano-Mauresque lustre dishes might have been acquired for anything from 9s upwards. The total of the sale, amounting in all to £135, will go to discharge in part the same due to the landlord, leaving the other creditors to bemoan their fate.

The sale at Sotheby's of a number of drawings and cartoons by Sir John Tenniel illustrative of events proper to the commencement of this century has a peculiar interest at the present day when the art of the cartoonist is given very special prominence. It would have been illuminating to see how this great draughtsman would have dealt with the current situation; one may rest assured that it would have been with a wide grasp and a sure perception of every side of the issue. Every one is talking just now of the Raemaeker exhibition at the Fine Art Society, of which I spoke in my last letter, but which was not then opened. It is certainly a most extraordinary exhibition of both insight and versatility, the mental outlook of the Dutchman expressing itself in an amazing variety of ways. Never once does he fail to present his one theme in a new and living light, seeming to gather fresh force as he continues, by the very passion of his indignation. It is strange that the greatest power of cartoonist invective should have expressed itself through a neutral rather than through a participant. L. G. S.

ADMIT TAPESTRIES FREE.

It was announced Tuesday that John K. Sague, appraiser, had admitted free of duty as antiquities $30,000 worth of tapestries covering furniture imported by the late E. R. Bacon. They are to cover a screen, two sofas and ten chairs. The gilded wood-work of the furniture was held to be modern and assessed at 15 per cent. as manufactures of wood.

IDEAL FIGURE

Hovsep Pushman

Owned by Mr. Samuel O. Buckner, of Milwaukee

Another painter, who is showing "strong meat" this week, is Ernest L. Major, whose exhibition at the Guild of Boston Artists is arousing flaming antipathies, and equally violent sympathies. Mr. Major's technical skill and resource, added to his genius for painting the flamboyant, the sensational, the dramatic, are at his best in these works. Skillful indeed are his ambitious "interiors," and his glowing "firelight" scenes; and when he comes to placing an ultra-modern young woman, in vari-colored garments, in one of these "interiors," "take it from one who knows, there is something doing on the walls." Strikingly clever as his work usually is, there are "them as likes it and them as doesn't," and meanwhile a "warm" discussion is going the rounds as to its merits.

The Museum is exhibiting an interesting variety of glass and paste jewels. The Fogg Museum is proudly exhibiting a real Tintoretto—"Diana"—which, from the viewpoint of the student of painting, possesses unusual interest, for, inasmuch as it is unfinished, the whole Venetian method of painting, even to the last glaze, is clearly revealed.

Mr. W. Scott Fitz has given the Museum three pictures by primitives, a "Madonna and Child" by Barnaba da Modena, a head of the Magdalen by Segna di Buona Ventura and a portrait of a Saint of the School of Simone Martini. John Doe.

prints, has arranged the exhibition and gave an informal talk Dec. 21 upon methods and ideals of the engravers whose works are on view until Jan. 16, 1916.

In a recent lecture on "The American School at Athens," by Dr. Stephen B. Luce, Jr., in the newly opened Auditorium of the University Museum, there were shown as illustrations a number of views of the work of recent excavations on the site of ancient Corinth, among them pictures of life size marble statues in excellent preservation, personality not yet determined and important architectural remains of pure Grecian style. Eugene Castello.

WORKS BY HOVSEP PUSHMAN

An artist who has lately attracted much attention out West by his work, is Hovsep Pushman, whose graceful and expressive figure study of a young woman is reproduced on this page. The picture is owned by Mr. Samuel O. Buckner, of Milwaukee, a man of affairs and collector who is himself something of an artist. The works of Mr. Pushman, after attracting much attention in Milwaukee, where they received very favorable critical commendation, are now on view at the City Art Museum in St. Louis. The artist's "The Hour of Rest" was lately bought for the Chicago Institute. He is an American, who recently returned from an extended stay abroad and has now a studio in Chicago.

The late Edward Wasserman's Chinese porcelains and jades will be sold at the galleries, Apr. 13-15.

Two English libraries, one of Sidney Herbert, will be sold on the aft. of Feb. 16 and 17, at the galleries.

IN STUDIOS AND GALLERIES.

On Tuesday Joseph Pennell gave a demonstration lecture at the Brooklyn Museum on the "Making of an Etching." All the operations involved in making and printing were carried out in the presence of the large audience. The lecture was of particular interest on account of the display of the artist's work now on in the print dept. of the institution.

A gift of $50,000 for a hall which shall be devoted to the exhibition of objects of industrial art has been received by the Chicago Art Institute from Mr. and Mrs. William H. Miner. The hall will bear the name of Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus.

The annual exhibition of the Architectural League will be open at the Fine Arts Building, 215 W. 57 St., Feb. 6-26. The press view will be on Friday, Feb. 4 and the dinner will take place the evening of the same day. On Saturday, Feb. 5, the annual reception will be held.

Mr. C. J. De Vries, manager of fine arts for the Pana-Pacific Exposition, recently sailed for Holland, to bring back works by Dutch artists, to replace those sold during the time of the general display. One-fourth of the Dutch collection was sold.

Pine Bluff Inn
at
Point Pleasant, N. J.

YOU who are fagged, overworked, or feeling the "press of things," cannot do better than take brief respite from city sights and sounds by spending a few days—perhaps just a week-end—at Pine Bluff Inn, right in the thick of the Jersey Pines.

But the pines, with their wonderfully refreshing odors, are not all. There is Treasure Island, of Robert Louis Stevenson fame; the beautiful Manasquan River, with its gorgeous scenery, and the ocean just a mile away as the crow flies from the piazza of the Inn. And this, of course, means sea food and game that are unrivalled.

And the quiet restfulness of it all! Recupere, if you wish, with naught more disturbing than your own thoughts; but if you need company of the truly congenial sort, that you will find, too. Winter golf, tennis, boating, trap-shooting and other out-door sports are yours for the taking. Ice boating and skating parties in season.

Our conveniences are unique. Hot water heating throughout, with huge open log grates in each room.

American Plan. Prices, $3.00 per day; with private bath, $4.00 and upward. Special weekly rates on rooms and suites.

Pine Bluff Inn is situated ten miles from Lakewood, within a stone's throw of the main ocean motorway between Atlantic City and New York. A la Carte service to motorists.

Frequent train service, via Pennsylvania and Central Railroad of New Jersey from New York.

STUART PORT COMES HERE.

Mr. Max Williams, the well-known New York print and picture dealer of 28 East 46 St., was the purchaser for $13,000 of the full length portrait of Washington, said to be by Gilbert Stuart, and also to be one of the seven replicas of the famous so-called "Landsdowne" portrait in the Penn. Academy, sold in Phila. by Mr. Stan V. Henkels Dec. 17 last.

The sale of this canvas interests a large number of people, as the price paid, is the second largest ever given for a Washington portrait attributed to Stuart. It will be remembered that Mr. Thomas B. Clarke paid $16,000 for the Vaughan portrait of Washington by Stuart also in Phila. at the Harrison sale, two years ago.

The portrait purchased by Mr. Williams came from the South, where it has been owned by a prominent family for many years. While it has no pedigree it seems to have the characteristics of Stuart.

At the same sale a miniature of Andrew Jackson by J. W. Dodge, painted on order for the late James Robb, a New Orleans banker, was sold. Mr. Robb also commissioned the artist to paint the portrait of Henry Clay. The miniature was painted at "The Hermitage" at Nashville, Tenn., in 1842, and was presented to a Mr. Hallett of New Orleans by Mr. Robb, and finally came into the possession of a Mr. Dingwall. Senator Hampton Robb, son of banker Robb, who ordered the miniature, still has the portrait of Henry Clay by Dodge.

BUYS $1,000,000 LIBRARY.

Mr. Henry E. Huntington has purchased, through Mr. George D. Smith, the library of Mr. Frederick R. Halsey of 22 W. 53 St., said to be valued at over $1,000,000. The price paid is stated to have been over $750,000. This will give Mr. Huntington, who will dispose of the duplicates of his original and already remarkable gathering, what is probably the finest private library in the world, including as it already did before the purchase, the Duke of Devonshire's quarto Shakespeares and Caxtons, the Robert Hoe rarities, the Beverly Chew examples and many other scarce works, purchased from the Huth, and other sales, here and abroad. It is understood that Mr. Huntington intends that after his death his library shall become public property.

Mr. Halsey's library includes complete sets of first editions, of early and modern English and American authors. There are four Shakespeare folios, 1623, 1632, 1663 and 1685, a perfect copy of the "Sonnets," and a number of quartos. The "Sonnets" is duplicated in Mr. Huntington's collection and is one of four perfect copies known.

The remarkable Poe collection, includes the only complete set of first editions known. The Dickens collection is also very valuable, containing "The Strange Gentleman" with the original drawings. The Cruikshank drawings form the best collection in the country. There are many hundreds of other rarities, including such Americana as the only uncut copy of the first N. Y. directory, 1786 and Eliot's Indian Bible. There is an authors presentation copy of Browning's "Pauline," and the only known copy of Lamb's "King and Queen of Hearts."

MIXED THE DUVEENS UP.

The old story, published in the ART NEWS of Nov. 14, 1914, of a suit brought by Charles of London against Mr. William R. Hearst, to recover the sale price, some $4,000, of an old Elizabethan chimney piece, purchased by the latter from Charles, and on which he refused to pay more than $1,000, on the ground that the piece was not an original, was republished by the N. Y. Sun this week as news, with the firm of Duveen Brothers as plaintiffs, whereas that well-known house had nothing to do with the transaction.

When the "experts," Messrs. John Getz, Valentine Andrews and H. Burlingham, who were called in, decided that the chimney piece was an original, the case was settled by Mr. Hearst agreeing to pay the amount of the purchase price at the rate of $1,500 a month, and to publish a retraction of his claim that the piece was not genuine in one of his newspapers. This publication was so long delayed that Charles offered to return all the monies paid in to date, and threatened a new suit to prove his house had not sold a spurious article. Then Mr. Hearst published the retraction and all ended well.

HENRY JAMES PORTRAIT SOLD.

The portrait of Henry James, by Jacques Emile Blanche, which was exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has been purchased by Mrs. Stanley McCormick of Chicago, who is spending the winter at the Plaza Hotel.

ARCHITECTS AT CITY HALL.

Acting Mayor George McAneny invited the members of the New York Architectural League to visit and inspect the N. Y. City Hall Wednesday afternoon last.

The entire building was thrown open to the visiting architects who were received by the Art Commission in their rooms. Dr. J. Q. Adams, Secretary of the Art Commission, explained in detail the various much needed improvements that have been accomplished through the energy and enterprise of Mr. McAneny and his friends. After the reception the Architects League gave a dinner in honor of Mr. McAneny in the India House, Hanover Square.

ART DEALERS MAKE CHANGE.

Mr. Edward Brandus, the well-known fine art dealer of Paris and New York and who recently arrived from Paris with Mrs. and Miss Brandus, will, at the expiration of his lease of the handsome galleries which he has occupied in the Windsor Arcade for three years past, give up the same and associate himself with a prominent Paris and New York art house, whose upper Fifth Ave. galleries as well as those in Paris are well known to American art lovers.

Mr. Hugh Willoughby, a young Englishman known to Paris art circles, recently arrived from Paris, and has become associated with the house of E. Gimpel and Wildenstein, No. 636 Fifth Ave.

The old book auction firm of Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge in Wellington St., London, is to move, but not probably until autumn, into the recently closed Dore Gallery in Bond St., where the French master's "Christ Leaving the Praetorium" was on view for so many years.

THE WINTER ACADEMY.

The Academy's exhibition, under Mr. Wier's presidency, is a disappointment to many art lovers. Perhaps it is too much to expect that a change in the presidency would immediately transform an old and necessarily conservative institution into one of new significance and astonishing brilliance. But even in this mediocre exhibition, for certainly it is that, Mr. Weir may find a grain of comfort, for if the present show is devoid of salient things, painted and modelled, it has certainly one distinct virtue. It is harmonious—harmoniously mediocre.

Out of this mediocrity—smug mediocrity of craft—there arise slightly one or two things that demand attention, and these things are not—"glory be"—the productions of any of our much over-exploited painters.

Of the portraits, one alone has the distinction of really profound personal feeling, and that is the work of a hitherto unknown man, a Massachusetts painter—Sidney E. Dickinson. Not even Mr. Weir's own contribution, honestly sincere as it is, gives one a more poignant thrill as a transcript of human nature. Hats off to Mr. Dickinson—whoever he may be. His tone has a slight reminiscence of some of the most sulphurous canvases of Franz Hals, but for all that his portrait is so rarely simple, so decorative, so characterized as to line, that one feels it might have had the centre of the wall to get its due.

French, Griffin, Beaux.

Daniel C. French has that place, however, for his "Spirit of Life," so one must rest content. The second "achievement" that rises from this sea of mediocrity is Walter Griffin's "The Old Church, Boigneville." This Griffin has a position near the place of honor, which is distinctly good for it, and good also for Emil Carlsen's "blue" marine. Griffin strikes a big color note again with a "green sky," a feature which he is managing with ever increasing effect. Miss Beaux's prize portrait has the same general defect noticed in her hackneyed, over-exhibited picture of her niece Ernesta Drinker (now placed with decidedly strange judgment, in the Metropolitan Museum). This is a thinness of tone in the whites. The "Portrait of Mrs. B.," moreover, seems over characterized in the head, the "weeping" eyes have an insistence of character, and the too much modelled nose—a want of true delicacy. But then, this a prize portrait.

Bits of Sculpture.

Bits of sculpture here and there bid for attention with some success. Albin Polasek's bust of Wm. M. Chase is one of these (a classis in its way); Mahonri Young's "Man with Wheelbarrow" is another. One also feels the presence of Edith W. Burroughs' portrait of "B.B." (Bryson Burroughs), Marie Apel's dark bronze of A. E. Ide, and C. S. Pietro's large group "Inspiration." It seems a pity that Ernest Lawson's superb snow picture is so badly hung. Carrigan's "Maples, Early Summer" is another canvas injured by ill placement. Admirable, up to a certain point, are paintings by Randall Davey, Charles Hopkinson, Maurice Prendergast and Henry Salem Hubbell.

Painters of Reputation.

Other painters of reputation send things that attract qualifiedly as Daniel Garber, whose "Tanis" is unpleasantly blackish in the shadows; Bellows, whose "Nude Girl with Parrot" is still affected in color; Jonas Lie, whose "Autumn Fleet" is a shipping picture cleverly brushed, and Leon Kroll, whose "Building New York" is superficially interesting. Certain works of other men have unquestionable merits of a sort, such as those by Allen Cochrane, Joseph Boston, E. H. Potthast, Charles Rosen, W. Glackens, Charles Reiffel, Oliver D. Grover, De Witt Parshall, Teresa Bernstein, William Cotton, Robert Spencer, William Wendt, Ionis Vaillant, Redfield, Symons, Paul Cornoyer and Reynolds Beal. Gedney Bunce is represented by a "White" "Venice." John Carlsen has an uncommonly appealing winter picture, Edward Gay shows one of the best of recent canvases, "Pelham Marshes." George Elmer Browne's "Octagonal House" is a striking work, and John W. Alexander is well memorialized by an attractive portrait of a woman.

LEFT HIS DAUGHTER RELICS.

Sèvres plates and other china used by the Empress Eugenie, powder horns made by her great-great-grandfather, Asa Elliot, "in 1758, during the expedition against Crown Point," were among the effects left to Miss Margaret Henderson Elliott by her father, Daniel Giraud Elliot, zoologist and traveller, whose will was filed Wednesday.

BOOK PLATE DISPLAY.

The Board of Governors of the American Book Plate Society announces its first annual exhibition at the Avery Library, Columbia College, from Jan. 3-15. At the annual meeting, Jan. 8, the assembled body will act as a jury to choose the best personal, public or institution and portrait book plate. For these there will be awarded certificates of merit and a grand award. The book plates must have been designed within the year.

AMERICANIZATION THRO' ART.

Penn. artists of foreign birth or parentage are invited to contribute to an exhibition, Jan. 19-Feb. 22, at the Penn. Museum, Phila. Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury offers four prizes of $500 each for oils, water-colors, sculpture and crafts, and there may be one also for etching if the exhibits warrant. The jury will consist of Cecilia Beaux, G. W. Dawson, Charles Grafly, S. V. Seeler, and Jessie W. Smith.

WOODWARD BEQUESTS $428,194.

The bequests, including the art collection, of the late Robert B. Woodward of Brooklyn, to the Brooklyn Museum, are valued by the official appraisal, just filed, at $428,194. The collection includes paintings, jades, other art objects and rugs.

APPEAL FOR FRENCH ARTISTS.

The Vicomtesse de Roncougne, Vice-President of the Paris Society "Appui aux Artistes," has issued, from 21 Gramercy Park, an appeal to the American public for clothing, in behalf of certain artists of Paris and their families "who have," she says, "been reduced to great suffering because of the war."

The Vicomtesse states further that the "Appui aux Artistes" has furnished almost 2,000,000 meals to artists' families and that she has come here to assist in securing funds for the continuance of this work which originated in a generous contribution from Mrs. E. H. Harriman and has been almost wholly supported by Americans ever since.

J. Campbell Phillips' portrait of the late Mayor Gaynor, is hung in the City Hall, prior its acceptance by the Art Commission.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Eugene Glaenger, of Jacques Seligmann & Co., 705 Fifth Ave., will sail from Bordeaux on Jan. 8 instead of Dec. 14 as was stated last week.

Mr. Arthur Greatorex, of Dowdeswell and Dowdeswell of London, will arrive from England next month, and will be at the Hotel Imperial.

MODERN PAINTINGS*PENNELL HITS "NEW ART."

Joseph Pennell, in the N. Y. Times recently tackled, without gloves, the new art movement.

"Art is upon the town," he says, "and every one practices, encourages, plays with it, collects it, deals in it, produces what passes for it. A time there was when the artist was a poor thing who stayed at home with the women—now the women artists have gone forth to struggle with the men, and one at least has done as good work in America as any man living here is doing today.

"A time there was when no American took any interest in art; now the aim is to make the biggest collections, pay the biggest price, and get the biggest advertisement out of it.

"A time there was when the American artist lived alone in a garret; now he divides his days between town palaces, a couple of extra studios, a country place, motor cars, and all the other modern necessities. Is it any wonder then, with such examples before them, that all the young, who are thought worthy, are handed over to art? Formerly it was only those thought unfit for business; now it has been discovered that art is very good business. * * *

Museums Dead Art Graveyards.

"Many," Mr. Pennell continues, "have been of late defending the old art, many decrying it—quite unnecessarily; if the new art is a new movement—a real movement—it will prevail. If the old art is played out it will be found only in those graveyards of dead art, the museums, where so much of it reposes, and where, curiously, so many new artists are trying to enter.

If the war continues, however," says Mr. Pennell, "it will prove the greatest aid to new art, for the old will be wiped out and even its existence disproved by new critics. For the temples, tombs, palaces and churches where it was born will have vanished, and no old restorer can compete with a new creative artist.

Art and the War.

"Amid the crowd of disputants over the new and old art two have come to my notice lately. One is Mr. Carroll Beckwith, who attacks the new. Mr. Beckwith is a stern defender of the faith that is in him—a defender of his kind of art and tradition in art by which he thinks art alone can be carried on—but I really do not see how he makes modern art in any way responsible for the war. Miss Agnes Meyer says that Cezanne, Matisse and Picasso are the leaders of the new art movement—or dominate it—when she says 'In what foreign country can a painter be found to stand beside them?' and she adds that the people who bought their pictures are not those who brought on the war.

"I do not see why either the painter or the lady should have dragged the war in," continues Mr. Pennell. "But the new art preceded the war just as the art of Egypt, Greece and Rome preceded their downfall. Not the supreme art of those countries, which so impresses us by its excellence, but the last and popular form of it in Greece and Rome which marked the beginning of the end of their art and their history.

Cezanne, Picasso and Matisse.

"Miss Meyer," the author says, "refers to the pecuniary successes today of Cezanne, Picasso and Matisse, and after saying that the Germans never produced any modern art of importance, that M. Picasso has temporarily taken to painting portraits a la Greuze, alleges that the new art will triumph over 'the eternal sunsets and cathedrals and sheep.' He then tells a story of the exploitation by a syndicate, of the works of a French artist of great talent, who painted for his materials and his bread alone, apparently, and of another man, and of the fact that this syndicate, having found this venture hugely successful, with the aid of complaisant artists, invented the new art.

"Van Gogh," Mr. Pennell says, "would have tried to cut off the ears of his followers and Gauguin, somewhat of a rough sailor, might have murdered and eaten them. But Van Gogh and Gauguin are dead," Mr. Pennell observes, "and Matisse and Picasso live. It was just the case of Whistler over again, only reversed—real artists had praised Whistler, genuine collectors bought him for a mere nothing—genuine critics damned him. The critics boomed Matisse, dealers cornered him, collectors strove for him, but genuine artists, who knew the man's work, despised him. Again, however, it was the old story—I paint what I see—but there was no Whistler around to say 'The time may come why you see what you paint.'

"Whole Thing in a Nutshell."

"And here is the whole thing in a nutshell—the new art is produced just as you like, and the only thing is to make the collector, dealer, and critic like it, and, more important, the collector buy it. You must become as a little child, throw traditions to the winds, do exactly what you like in the way you like.

The bulk of the "Cubists," "Futurists" and other ists "Mr. Pennell, thinks if not ignorant, are incapable, but where they have intelligence enough, have studied early Greek sculpture, early Italian painting stained glass and missals. These new artists, he thinks, are clumsy and do not work hard like the ancients, or even the unsuccessful pre-Raphaelites. "We cannot paint as little children," he says, "and be honest—unless we are mad. But we can be frauds." If these people are right, he opines, the old masters are wrong. They steal everything, don't observe anything but each other, and produce works alike as photographs, only not as good. And several old reactionaries had painted over their old works in the new names, signed new names and even won fame in some cases.

Cezanne only Tolerated.

"Cezanne," he says, "was only tolerated by the Impressionists, because he with his father's money hired them a house near Paris, where they could paint nudes in the open. In time Caillebotte, another rich amateur, invented a million times more brilliant artist and youthful man.

The work of these European 'Post Impressionists,'" Mr. Pennell says, "is composed of indecency or decadence and incompetency. One can paint or chisel or chalk, anything he likes in the way he chooses. The artist says that is the way he sees, or that it is a rendering by paint of sound or a sensation by sculpture. Naturally the art is popular with students, for the boy artist can outshine the veteran.

The Dealers Part.

"Clever dealers," he says, "have taken up, for a mere song, the work of utter incompetents and unloaded it on a waiting public at an enormous profit.

"Critics in a funk of not being on the right side have raved over it, and collectors hoping for a rise have purchased it all over the world.

"He notes that Matisse 'has retired with a fortune,' and Picasso as Miss Meyer says, 'has turned to painting a la Greuze.'

Lauds Modern German Art.

"What Picasso would think of such an exposure of his humbuggery (if a fact) I give up," the writer declares. "What Matisse thinks he keeps to himself. Miss Meyer says that Germany has never produced any modern art of importance. I won't discuss, though I long to expose, Miss Meyer's unfortunate ignorance of Menzel, Boecklin, Dietz, Lenbach, Leibl, Trubner, Klinger, Stuck—oh! I could fill a page with names she never heard of—but I will say that the reason why Frank Duveneck got his special medal of honor at San Francisco—the reason why many of our most brilliant artists, Chase, Currier, Twachman, are so brilliant—is because they worked and slaved with these and other unknown Germans."

The War Prelude.

Noting the change that has come over European art, Mr. Pennell, recalls the fact that a distinguished German art authority, told him in 1914, that the world was decadent, in the same artistic slough Greece and Rome were in before the fall, and that something awful was going to happen, which did. "Rodin may study the Greek," says Mr. Pennell, "but the new art 'is made while you wait.' They get a certificate from the alienist that they are mad like Blake and Van Gogh and he also tells them they are frauds. The new art is an easy way of twisting the truth and no one of its exponents has stated a fact even technically better than an old reactionary. Anybody can see what Velasquez painted, but no one can tell how he did it. Any one can see how the new artists paint, but no one can tell what they mean by it. But, while it is not certain there is any great artist alive today, there are thousands of the new artists.

"Don't you wish you could paint like that," said the new artist to a boy. "I can," said the boy. "That is the new art."

"And is it reason to call most of it art. That is, if art is the science of the beautiful. The art of concealing art by art."

ART COLLECTOR AND DEALER.

Director Raymond Weyer of the Hackley Art Gallery at Muskegon, Mich., has the following opening article, in the current quarterly issue of that institution's publication, called "Aesthetics," under the head "The Art Collector and the Dealer."

"The person who begins to form a collection of art embarks on an undertaking which is full of difficulties and disappointments. His experiences are similar to those of one who makes the first plunge in backing a favorite in a horse race. The enthusiasm which causes the first bet is due to information about a horse which is sure to win. The novice is keenly interested in this special bit of information and, not being selfish, gives others the benefit of it. Some take his advice and look upon him as an authority with as much confidence as he himself has in the original disseminator of 'the tip on a sure thing.' Others discount his information and substitute their own. This goes on for days or weeks and by the time the race is due to take place the would-be gambler has a perplexed and somewhat cynical attitude towards horse racing and betting generally. However, he places his bet either on the horse he was originally advised to back and which he in turn so energetically advocated, or upon another horse according to some subsequent information which had the effect of shaking his confidence in the first advice he received. Whatever he does he invariably loses and, if he does make a lucky guess, it is probable that the next shot will not be so lucky. Eventually he is more perplexed and begins to wonder what information can be relied upon and what constitutes an expert.

"Although the art collector who is a novice usually flounders in a manner similar to the novice backer of horses, the advantage is with the former; for, while the latter flounders all his life and finds no road to success, there are distinct roads to success in art collecting, and this success is often attained through much preliminary floundering.

"Three Ways to Collect."

"There are three ways for those with little knowledge of art to form a collection. One way is to spend money recklessly in backing our own opinion, by buying what we like and then, when we realize that we have spent a great deal of money on worthless things, it may have the effect of bringing home to us the fact that, because we have made a success in commercial enterprise, we still may not have the necessary ability to guarantee the quality of an art collection. These jolts have often had a good effect and have been the forerunners of important collections. Another way is to study the best art in the principal galleries, read the best writings on art—and study those collections which are in demand for exhibition from the principal art museums, before you start collecting. If, however, you have not the desire or the time to devote to the study of art and the problem incidental to the building up of a collection which has significance, or have a disinclination to buy your experience through your mistakes and the accompanying waste of money, the best thing to do is to go to a firm which has a high reputation, with museums and recognized collectors, and trust to them implicitly. It is to the dealer's advantage to supply the best and to be able to point to the collections which he has built or assisted to build. This is his greatest recommendation.

"There is one important thing to remember, however, and that is that you must place yourself entirely in the dealer's hands and not half do so. You must not go to a dealer and ask his advice and then take the advice of an artist who, even though he be an artist of repute, may have few qualifications to make his advice valuable in forming an art collection.

"I once knew a Western man to throw over the best advice he had received from a well-known dealer and to accept the counsel of a young man who had once been to an art school for six months. This collector built a gallery and filled it with trivial paintings for which he spent a large sum of money. Yet this man's ambition was to have one of the most important collections in this country and it is truly pathetic to see the tenacity with which he tries to hold the idea that the collection has this standing."

Tapestry Exhibition at Baumgarten's.

There will open, on Monday, in the galleries of Wm. Baumgarten & Co., 715 Fifth Ave., an exhibit of 40 important Gothic, Renaissance, Flemish, Gobelins, Beauvais and Aubusson tapestries. The exhibit will be arranged by periods, and the catalog gives the subject and the provenance of the different pieces.

Especially interesting will be found the Gothic "Jeweler," the Gobelins "Chateau de Chambord," the Louis XVI Aubusson "Children Playing." The celebrated Antwerp designer, Louis van Schoor, will be represented by three of his best compositions, "Spring," "Hunting," "Music." Among other weavers' signatures will be those of J. B. Vermilion, and Pierre van den Hecke, both of whom flourished in Brussels at the beginning of the XVIII century. The story of "Diana and Endymion" will be pictured twice, in XVIII century Gobelins, and a Beauvais example of the same period will show "Psyche supported by the Zephyrs."

MR. PUSHMAN'S WORKS.

Hovsep Pushman's "Hour of Rest" was sold, not to the Chicago Institute, as was stated last week, but to friends of the Milwaukee Art Society, for its permanent collection. The title of Mr. Pushman's half length woman's figure, reproduced in last week's ART NEWS, is "A Memento of Old Madrid." The picture, it will be recalled, is owned by Mr. Samuel O. Buckner of Milwaukee. The recent display made by Mr. Pushman, at the Milwaukee Art Society, attracted much attention and elicited very favorable critical comment. Four of his pictures were sold from the exhibition, besides the "Hour of Rest," which with Mr. Buckner's picture brought the number of works sold in Milwaukee, up to seven, a most creditable result.

The California Society of Fine Arts has been formed, to hold competitions to encourage painting, sculpture, architecture and music.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

WINTER ACADEMY.

(Third and Final Notice.)

Is it any wonder that there is figurative weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, when so many offer themselves and so few are chosen, as at the present winter Academy. Think of it, 1,642 paintings rejected or accepted and not hung, many simply for want of what the committee considered sufficient space, and 88 sculptures, only 237 pictures and 132 sculptures, or 369 works in all, being placed, out of 2,099 sent in. It is very safe to say that 1,500 deserved admission. The need of sufficient gallery space has become superimposed. But what is to be done when even a free exhibition does not attract any adequate number of visitors and the sales are not at all what they ought and used to be?

As has been stated, a number of pictures and sculptures are given the cold hospitality of the Academy room and though, in view of the similarity to the general standard of Academy displays, in the old building at Fourth Ave. and 23rd St., the room seems well named, it contains a number of works well worthy of mention. Some of them have already been spoken of. Above the line, for they are hung three deep here as in the old day, is John W. Breyfogle's simply and effectively handled picture of "The Surf-Boat Drill." Edward Gay signs a capital view of the "Pelham Marshes, Evening," and Birge Harrison, a "Hazy Moonlight." Clarence K. Chatterton found picturesque material in the view looking across the river from "The Roundhouse." Capital is W. H. Hyde's "The Edge of the Woods." Very materialistic, with its very active figures is Louis F. Berneker's "The Dance of the Rose." Anne Crane finds good material in "An Old Farm House."

Gems and Landscapes.

Well designed but false in its values is Henry R. Poore's "Pilgrim Sons, No. 2." Charming in its plain air effects, and attractive in color is H. P. Maginnis' "The River Border." The late E. Wood Perry is represented by a genre in the Erskine Nicoll vein, "The First Vaccination." Reynolds Beal's, "Newburgh Bay," is effective but crude, while Colin Campbell Cooper has an effective view of the Cathedral at Malines. Grace and refinement mark Albert Rosenthal's "Mercedes Walton." William F. Klinc has had fair success, with a good subject, in "The Fields of His Fathers." Picturesque is Francis Day's "The Old Song" and Olive Rush shows originality, delicacy and grace in her "Evening Flowers." Most picturesquely, but with sufficient realism, has Ernest L. Blumenschein painted "The Chief's Two Sons," who look like "broths" of Indian boys. Newton Parker gives an effective glimpse "Under the Old Bridge."

Louise Cox's "Conversazione" is a rather tame middle age composition. Charles Bittinger has made his bright figure of "Becky" very dressy. Strong reds and greens dominate Walter Gotz's "Landscape." Leroy Barnett signs a well handled "Head of an Elderly Man"; L. H. Meakin a scene in "Rockport Village," and Charles H. Miller an agreeable "Evening on Long Island." Mary F. Low has had considerable success with "The Swift." W. H. Lippincott's "A Good Fishing Day" attracts and so does G. H. Smillie's "Half Dome, Yosemite Valley." Edward Dufner's lady in "The Blue Shawl" is effective, and F. T. Weber has excellent character in "Mother and Daughter." Alexander Harrison signs a good scene on "The Golden Adriatic." Excellent is F. W. Hutchinson's "A Winter Morning." E. K. K. Wetherill is effective, though rather painty in "The Blue Morning." Eliot Clark has modelled well his "Hillside, New Hampshire," an excellent canvas. W. M. J. Rice has a fair "Portrait" of a lady and Albert Herter a pleasing "Portrait of Miss Marjorie Curtis." Clever is Vacslav Vytacil's "Maria."

In the Main Galleries.

To return to the galleries, where daylight reigns. Here is prominent, among the works, not already mentioned, Louis D. Vaillant's "The Bathers," which is very well painted and most originally composed. The woman's figure, albeit a trifle too realistic, is admirably drawn and modelled and the boy is delightful. Walter Griffin, while a trifle painty and hard, is effective in his "The Old Church, Boigneville." George Elmer Browne strikes a new and attractive note with no uncertain touch, in his "The Octagonal House." Thoroughly attractive is Charles Hopkinson's "Mother and Child." Carlton T. Chapman has an excellent example in "The East India Man." Randall Davey's clever but unattractive "Two Sisters" catches the eye immediately. Leon Kroll has a fine subject largely handled in "Building New York." There is a brilliant "Morning, Venice" by W. Gedney Bunce, while Henry S. Hubbell paints with his usual skill "Ten O'clock" and "The Coming of the Sandman." R. W. Van Boskerck has an attractive "Autumn on the Ausable River." Max Bohm has a "Golden Summer," which attracts and Carroll Beckwith is in old time form in "The Nautilus."

ures, chiefly women in modern costume which recalls with an artistically imposing effect a Byzantine group of saints, while W. Zorach parodies Blake in "The Garden." Others in the group are Messrs. Berlin, Fisk, Glackens, Halpert, Hassam, Lever, Magee, Marin, Myers, Prendergast, Ray and Wortman.

Eclectics at Folsom Gallery.

A group of painters and sculptors, calling themselves "The Eclectics," have opened their first exhibit at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. to remain until Jan. 13. The bright little show is made by 7 painters and 3 sculptors, Mahonri Young who, according to the card of invitation was to have been represented, not having sent anything. Among the painters Philip L. Hale shines, with two fascinating lightly colored landscape genres—oils with the effect of pastels—"Autumn Fruit" and "Wistaria." He has also a sober and well-handled portrait of Captain Peter Turner.

C. Bertram Hartman has four of his weird scenes, in fantasia land, which are very decorative and fine, if deliberately untrue, in color. They symbolize the seasons and the figures of humans, birds and animals are as usual fearfully and wonderfully made. Henry Salem Hubbell makes a brilliant showing, with eight works and is the largest contributor. There is a lovely mother and child canvas, called "A Snug Little Kingdom," and a quite unusual subject effectively handled showing a girl snuggled

William Wendt leads the beholder straight into his admirably composed "The Grove." William Cotton has a portrait of a picturesque "Russian Girl" and Howard Russell Butler a sparkling view of "Baldhead Cliff, Me." Henry R. Snell makes good picturesque use of "The Wharf, Edgartown," and George H. Bogert sends a good example in "The September Morn." W. M. Chase shows a good portrait of "August Janssen" and William A. Coffin pictures with fine sobriety of effect "The Evening Star."

Daniel's Latest Show.

Some twenty and two pictures have been gathered by Mr. Charles Daniel, in his gallery, 2 W. 47 St., to represent "American Art of Today" and will remain to Jan. 18. It is in part a look down, the more or less interesting by ways, into which some American artists have strayed in the earnest search for the unusual both in treatment and subject.

To lend the show the dignity of the successful in somewhat similar lines, the coll'n of Mr. Alexander-Morton has been drawn upon. From it come a delightful example of J. Alden Weir, "Girl with Peacock Feather," a remarkably fine A. P. Ryder "Moonlit Cove" and the important and almost classical "Unicorns" of Arthur B. Davies.

Among the other contributors shine Middleton Manigault, with his graceful "Tide" in which figures a band of nude women and Ernest Lawson, with the quite remarkable scene, showing a village near "The Creek." Robert Henri upholds tradition and truth with his ruddy "Country Girl." There is nobility in Kenneth Hayes Miller's "Figures and Landscape," though the nude woman in the foreground shade is rather material. A. Walkowitz has a string of figures, chiefly women in modern costume which recalls with an artistically imposing effect a Byzantine group of saints, while W. Zorach parodies Blake in "The Garden." Others in the group are Messrs. Berlin, Fisk, Glackens, Halpert, Hassam, Lever, Magee, Marin, Myers, Prendergast, Ray and Wortman.

James Britton is represented by four of his own works. There is also a like, yet unlike, portrait of him by George Luks, his sole contribution, and an effective little bust by Marie Apel. Mr. Britton's works are the striking full length, life size figure of "The Man from Boheme"; a portrait of Mrs. Britton, fine in quality, an effective if flimsy "Portrait Study of Anton Hellman," owned by that gentleman, and another of Mr. Hubbell, in a Prussian blue coat, against a background of similar tint, which is altogether too hurried.

Martha Walter shows vigorous and picturesque qualities in "The Blue Shawl," is pleasing in "Bobo" and deft, as usual, in the shimmering "Sunshine," and "At the Beach." Theresa Bernstein has a striking, largely massed scene, from a steamboat deck, of "Sunset on the Hudson," which recalls Bellows; an effective "Opera Night," a graceful "Fantasy," "Little Cafe" and "Caprice." Guy Pene du Bois, the modern Gavarni in oil and apostle of the cynical and ironical, send four works, a "conversazione a due" called from the shape of the armchairs. "Automobile Tires," a two figure genre "Poudre de Riz," a "Girl in a White Waist," and another study of an unlovely woman.

The Gorham Galleries

Important examples of sculpture suitable for presentation to retiring officers and directors of corporations

The sculptures include a brilliant little showing by Marie Apel, whose nude figurines are charming; Solon H. Borglum's bust of Washington as a youth in 1753, and John Flanagan's sensitive relief head of "Aphrodite," his bronze Tolstoi panel and head from the tympanum of the Newark Public Library.

French Museum Art Exhibit.

The long heralded exhibition, under the auspices of the French Museum of Art in New York, of some 80 paintings donated by the Fraternelle des Artistes of France to the American Artists Committee of One Hundred, to be displayed for the benefit of French and Belgian artists and their families suffering from the effects of the war—together with Albert Besnard's large canvas "La Paix," painted by order of the French Government for the Peace Palace at The Hague, and which was not lost as the Museum's clever press agent intimated last week, will open for two weeks in the Ritz-Carlton ballroom, tomorrow evening.

There will be addresses, monologues and musical selections at this opening, tickets for which will be sold at $3 each, the proceeds to go to the same object as that for which the exhibition was organized. On other days of the fortnight's exhibition, tickets at $2 each will admit visitors to the ballroom and every afternoon, American painters, sculptors and architects will deliver addresses, American singers will be heard and at five tea will be poured by the modish women on the reception committee.

During the exhibition's first week the following speakers will be heard: William M. Chase, Monday; Miss Cecilia Beaux, Tuesday; Gutzon Borglum, Wednesday; Henry R. Marshall, Thursday (Fine Art & War); E. H. Blashfield, Friday (Efficiency in Art); and Paul Bartlett, Saturday (American Sculpture & France). During the week of Jan. 10-15 the speakers will be Grant La Farge, Kenyon Cox, Miss Janet Scudder, Charles H. Caffin, Wm. H. Coffin, J. Alden Weir and Royal Cortissoz.

Lithos and Woodcuts.

The Ehrich's have on view in their Print Gallery, 707 Fifth Ave., a most interesting display, of lithographs, etchings and woodcuts. Among those represented are Whistler, Fantin-Latour, Brangwyn, Pennell, Will Rothenstein, James Cadenhead and Sturge Moore. The Brangwyns and Rothensteins are recent and unfamiliar examples, while the work of James Cadenhead, a Scotch etcher, is little known here, as is that of the wood engraver Sturge Moore.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

THE PRESS AGENT IN ART.

Whoever it was, connected with the French Museum of Art in New York, who "worked up" public interest
through the dailies, led by the Herald
in the allegorical mural by Besnard
"La Paix," the clou of the exhibition of French pictures organized by the Museum, and to open in the Ritz-Carlton ballroom, with modish appendages tomorrow night—proved himself a press agent, for whom the theatrical managers should bid.

His suggestion that the Besnard picture was lost, because it did not arrive on the French steamer on which it was billed—was eagerly seized upon by the art department of the Herald as a
"scoop," and published, with a huge reproduction of the canvas, while the other dailies meekly "lifted," in journalistic parlance, the story for their later editions that morning. Through this press publicity many thousands of people became acquainted with the fact of the near exhibition of the picture and of the French Museum's display, who would presumably otherwise never have noticed either incident.

The "Art News" alone last week, suspecting the presence of the Press Agent in the story, so said, and also suggested that the canvas would arrive by the following French steamer—which it did.

The fact that the exhibition, both of the Besnard canvas and other French pictures is to be held for a most worthy cause, the relief of French artists and families suffering from the war's effects—excuses the utilization of press agent methods in the attempt to work up public interest in an art display, but it is to be hoped that such methods will not become customary in this country.
There is, or should be, a certain dignity of atmosphere inesting high class art exhibitions, which should make the Press Agent unnecessary. We do not want sensation to be made an appeal for art.

THE OPEN FORUM

Letters for this column must not exceed 500 words in length at the most
and should be limited, if possible, to 100 words. As a rule condensation
and brevity make for force and effect.
There are few subjects that cannot better be treated in 100 than in 500 words.
If letters exceed the above allowed
limit of 500 words they will be "cut"
to that space. Letters must be accompanied with name and address of
sender, not necessarily for publication
(although a letter signed with one's own name is always stronger than one
with a pseudonym) but as an evidence
of good faith. We cannot publish
anonymous communications.

Wants More "Logothete" Words.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir: It is worthy of note that scientific writers are each year constructing from the Greek and Latin and incorporating into our own language, a vast volume of new words.

In this they seem to show more linguistic capacity than do the writers on art.

Should not the latter seize more freely upon available and effective words from every source and use them as English words?

This would tend to make our fine
language more amply and felicitously expressive in art criticism.

As it is, our dictionary is far more indebted to science than to Art.

Very truly,

Jonas M. Libbey.

New York, Dec. 28, 1915.

AS TO "ATTRIBUTIONS."

Mr. Philip J. Gentner, director of the Worcester Art Museum, has written the following letter from Florence, Italy, to Mr. W. H. Downes of the Boston "Transcript":

"Dear Mr. Downes: I learn from a friend that Dr. Mayer, one of the band of young writers sent to America for purposes of their own by Dr. Bode and the greater German authorities, 'experts,' and art dealers, has just discovered that the Worcester
Art Museum possesses a 'Portrait of a Young Nobleman' by Gonzales, though ascribed to Coello. Dr. Mayer's article was published, I am told, in a recent number of Art in America. Unfortunately for this
'find' the Museum, nearly three years ago, rejected the attribution to Coello (given by the way, by Dr. Bode and Dr. Valentiner) then, nearly two years ago, ascribed it tentatively to Gonzales and finally, in August, 1914, on my return from study and travel in Europe, labelled it so decisively,
at first with a card, and then on a metal label.

"Six months ago, several other attributions given by high 'authorities'—not all of whom are German—were likewise changed or modified, simply because I was at last certain that these authorities were, wittingly or unwittingly, mistaken. I hope, however, these changes will not be noted, so that they may prove to be only the prelude of further discoveries. When I return I shall probably alter also the label upon our painting now ascribed to Rocco Marconi. * * *

"Whatever has been accomplished at Worcester is due to our acquisition of the finest works we could afford and to our disregard in great measure of the mere opinions, written or not, of nearly all art critics and art historians who 'authenticate' and procure works for dealers and wealthy private collectors. Their reasons are always listened to gladly, and, if valid, incorporated with all the other evidence we can secure.

"Up to the beginning of this year, I deferred in some cases to the signed opinions of a very few 'experts' of international reputation, even when I was all but certain they were in error. I felt I must accept, as director, what I could not accept as an individual. Henceforth I find it best to gather all possible information from any source whatsoever, and to depend primarily for final judgment, in spite of the fact that no single group of men can know thoroughly every field of art, upon my colleagues and myself. Believe me, there is no other safe rule at present for most American museums. Sincerely yours,

Philip J. Gentner."

OBITUARY.

Arthur Hughes.

One of the last of the pre-Raphaelite brotherhood followers, the portrait and genre painter, Arthur Hughes, died a few days ago in London, at the age of 83. He took a silver medal for drawing from the antique while a student at the Royal Academy, and later, as an exhibitor in its galleries, attracted attention with his first contribution "April Love." This he followed, in 1864, with "The Eve of St. Agnes," "The Music Party," "Sunbeam in Church" and
"Silver and Gold," in 1865 with "Home from Work" and "The Mower," and in 1866 with "Good Night." In 1870 he began to exhibit his series of subjects, from the legends of King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table, the first being "Sir Galahad."
This he followed with "The Lady of Shalott" and "The Burial of the Good Knight." Other works were "Endymion," "The Convent Boat," "The Woodman's Return,"
"Vanity," "The King's Garden," "Uncertainty," "The Sailing Signal Gun," "Summer Is a Coming In," "The Skipper and His Crew" and "Rest by the Way." "The Convent Boat" was at Phila. in 1876. Mr.
Hughes painted little since his 60th year.

Montague Flagg, N. A.

The well-known portrait painter Montague Flagg, who was a member of the Nat'l Academy, died on Dec. 24 at the Hahnemann Hospital, at the age of 70, of pneumonia. Mr. Flagg was the son of Rev. Dr. Jared B. Flagg, formerly rector of Grace Protestant Episcopal Church in Brooklyn and was born in Hartford, Conn.
He studied in Paris under Jacquesson de la Chevreuse, and later came to this city.
In 1909 Mr. Flagg's "Portrait of My Wife" took the Thomas R. Proctor prize at the Academy for the best portrait. He was then an associate of the Academy and the following year was elected a full member.
In 1904 his work won him a silver medal at the St. Louis Exposition. He was a member of the former Society of American Artists, having been elected in 1883, and lived at the Gainsborough studios, Central Park, S.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

Masterpieces of Painting.

By Louise Rogers Jewett. 12 Mo. Richard
Badger, Boston, $1.00 net.

The author, late Professor of Art at Mount Holyoke College, outlines the modest plan which she follows in this book—
"to give suggestions which stimulate the sense of true appreciation and deepen the sense of enjoyment in the presence of great pictures." The great pictures considered are works of certain masters of the Italian, Dutch and Spanish schools. The first of the three parts of the book, devoted to "Workmanship," has a quotation from John La Farge anent the great artist's love for "his trade," and deals with early mural painting in fresco, painting in tempera and in oil, noting particularly some fine things
by Giotto, Benozzo Gozzoli, Luca Signorelli, Fra Filippo Lippi, Carlo Crevelli and Hugo
van der Goes. Cennino Cennini is quoted with some good advice to young painters who urges the old admonition that "art is long," especially bidding youth beware of "those who say that they have learned the art without having been with a master."

Miss Jewett's chapters classed under the title "Enthusiasms," consider Giorgione, Simone Martini, Perugino, Andrea Man-tegna, Giovanni Bellini, Masaccio, Botticel-
li, Michelangelo, Titian, Andrea del Sarto, Rembrandt, Nicholas Maes and Velasquez.
A series of Appendices under the title of "Outlines and Notes," give little sketches
of the painters, set down chronologically,
and a "reading list," a short bibliography dealing with the periods and painters noticed. Miss Jewett's "enthusiasms" are expressed with moderation, with what might be called a distinctly feminine delicacy. Being concerned with none but safely immortalized masters, her temperate conclusions are not likely to stir controversy.
There are many books of this class, and they certainly do no harm.

James Britton.

Art and Progress No More.

The little monthly magazine, published in Washington at $2.50 a year and 25 cents a copy and edited by a Miss Leila Mechlin, and formerly known as Art and Progress, appears with the current January number under the title of "The American Magazine of Art." Editorial announcement is made that "the old title of Art and Progress was never satisfactory (many people have thought it absurd) that in every respect the magazine will remain the same, and that there will be no change in its policy or character."

The current number is well printed and illustrated, contains a long review of the annual Phila. Watercolor Academy show—after the display has closed, and another of the annual Chicago Art Institute display, just about to close. But one should not, of course, look for anything approaching "news" in a monthly art magazine of the kind which is suitable only for perusal
in chance leisure hours.

SALES PAST AND TO COME

Rare Books and Fine Bindings.

In a collection of books now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, preliminary to the sale on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon, are five beautiful bindings with miniatures on ivory by Miss Currie of London, which are wonderful examples of the finest work of modern binders. The sale includes first editions of many English and American authors and many great rarities, among them Damhoudre's Pratique, Louvain: 1554, Descamps' Vies des Peintres Flamands, extra-illustrated; Esquemelin's Americanae Zee-rovers, Amsterdam: 1678 and the London edition of 1684, and Las Casas's Narratio Regionum, Francofurti, 1598.

English Autographs.

Part VII of the great collection of autographs made by the late John Boyd Thacher of Albany, is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries and will be sold on the afts. of Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 10 and 11. This is the final part, and will mark the conclusion of a sale that has extended over two years. With the exception of a Ms.
by Hawthorne and a few autograph letters
by Americans, this division of the collection is made up exclusively of letters, documents
and manuscripts by distinguished authors, soldiers, statesmen and rulers of England and France.

Among the items of superlative interest are unpublished letters by Swift and Wordsworth, an extraordinary four-page letter by Shelley, a pen drawing by Thackeray, and letters and documents by the statesmen of the time of Henry VIII.
The Wordsworth letter is autobiographical, giving an account of the formation of his opinions, his methods of work, and corrections in his poems.

REVIEWS

CHICAGO.

The Art Institute kept open house on Christmas and the galleries were thronged. The annual show of American paintings and sculptures is nearly over, and still continues to attract crowds.

The National Society of Portrait Painters will install in the Institute forty-three portraits, recently shown in N. Y., about Jan. 7. Some 250 paintings from the French section of the Panama Exposition will also be then shown, while still other galleries will be occupied with wood-cuts, prints and etchings by Helen Hyde, and a "one-man" show of portraits and landscapes by Hovsep Pushman, a local artist, and by Charles W. Dahlgren's monotypes and etchings.

Art in the Stock Yards.

Every American knows that Chicago has vast "Stock Yards," a little world peculiar unto itself, but every American doesn't know that the Stock Yards have an art center, and that close to the Yards is a little colony of artists, painters and sculptors, and "casting shops" where plaster modelings are reproduced in metals. The "Colony" is holding its first exhibition as an "annual" in a spacious gallery, right under the "eaves" of the Yards. In this assemblage are some stunning bronzes by the "Florentine Brotherhood," a coterie of sculptors—many alluring figures, some graceful and others heroic in pose, and all skillful in execution. These are cast in the studios of the Brotherhood. Fay Barnes Powell is exemplified in etchings and paintings. Robert Jarvie is represented in silverware, copper and brass utilities and jancies, and contributes also a collection of rugs and special furniture. Magdalena Tolson, noted as an interior decorator, has etchings in line, with several book-plates and a collection of chinias. Norman Tolson has on show portraits, miniatures, mezzotints and posters.

Some time ago the late W. Scott Thurber occupied "The Cottage" (near the entrance to the Yards) as an art gallery. The "Florentine Brotherhood," sculptor Carlos Romanelli, and his comrade-workers, were leaders in establishing studios at the Yards. Then Robert Jarvie, silversmith, opened studios—and then others. And the Midway studios are within call, so that it may be told that the Yards colony of artists is a permanent local art center.

In Dealers' Galleries.

Etchings in color are shown in Thurber's print rooms and in the Thurber galleries. "Up stairs," the Gordon Stephenson portraits are still on view, and the consensus of opinion has selected the portrait of Miss Harmon Bailey as the "best" in the collection. There is an assemblage of important American landscapes in another gallery.

The Auguste Lepere's etchings continue as an attraction in a local gallery, and there are new original etchings, line-engravings and mezzotints by other modern and early masters of the needle.

Guy C. Wiggins Cornwall paintings are still at O'Brien's, where there are, also on view, wood-block prints and etchings in color by Helen Hunt and Bertha Lum.

There are sixteen oils by George Inness, Jr., at the American Art Gallery—the best assembling of this artist's canvases ever shown here. Included among the examples are "The Red Sun," "Golden Glow," "The Hilltop," "Cragmoor in Winter," "Leaving the Barn" and "On the Moorland."

Earl H. Reed, Chicago etcher, has issued a new book of etchings that include prints from new plates and some from plates shown at exhibitions in this country and in Paris. With the text, also by Reed, the book includes 250 pages. The title is "The Dune Country." The local Municipal Art Commission has purchased two of Reed's etchings for its collection.

Local artists are hurrying to finish their paintings destined for the competition at the annual show of the Chicago Society of Artists, in the Institute.

The Artists' Guild has a large collection of miniatures on show, with new paintings, by Chicago artists.

At Anderson's, there are many new etchings of cathedrals, color-prints and American paintings in line.

H. Effa Webster.

TOLEDO.

The December exhibitions at the Museum will be continued until Jan. 3. Following the December exhibits, during the month of January, Robert Henri will show about 25 oils. The Boston Guild of Artists will exhibit paintings and sculpture.

During the first three weeks of Alexis Jean Fournier's exhibit at the Museum, three of his landscapes were sold, namely: "In Daubigny's Country," "Clouds and Hills," and "Breezy Uplands."

Christmas sales of paintings by local artists were more numerous than in the past. At the Woodruff Brothers Galleries, landscapes by Karl Kappes and George S. Elwell were sold. Numerous sales were made at the Mohr Galleries of small oils by Lewis H. Risser.

BOSTON.

Kenneth Frazier's exhibition of portraits of "prominent people" at a local gallery was discussed in this column last week and the more forbidding qualities of his work emphasized. Actually, however, these very forbidding qualities have a certain charm of their own, for some local critics (of which the present writer owns rather humbly that he is one). In other words, Mr. Frazier's work, in its brusque sincerity, seems to have shaved pretty close to nature, and that kind of fidelity is usually appreciated in the long run. Among the artist's sitters, whose portraits have been loaned for this exhibition are Hamilton Fish, Hugh Scott, F. Murray Forbes, Philip Sears, F. B. Crowninshield and Mason Sears. Perhaps the most notable of the women's portraits is the full-length of Mrs. Lee Thomas, who stands, holding a green feather in her hand. Other modish women sitters were Mmes. Hugh Scott, Louis Bacon and F. B. Crowninshield and the Misses Ethel Grew, Margery Forbes and Helen Scott.

Why is it that so many present-day artists seem not content with the medium of canvas and paint, but are itching to etch? Certainly, within recent years, one might almost say months, a perfect army of etchers has sprung up with mushroom-like rapidity. One of the local galleries is showing a small but choice collection of the

PHILADELPHIA.

The Municipal Art Gallery, if one is to judge from the beautiful model of the structure and its approaches now on view in the pavilion in the City Hall court yard, will be most imposing. The ground plan of the Museum resembles in some measure, that of the Capitol at Washington, a central mass of considerable projection flanked by wings at the right and left, extending forwards, well beyond the main facade, the columnar decoration in carefully designed modern Greek style. The building, while not a high one, is yet very effectively seen in its setting of architectural gardening, flights of steps, fountains and shrubbery. Horace Trumbauer is the architect of the gallery committee and has as associates, Clarence Zanzinger, Milton B. Medary, Jr. and Charles F. Borie, Jr. The object of the exhibition of the model is to demonstrate to the citizens, whose money it is proposed to spend for a Museum, the possibilities in the use of a sufficient appropriation.

The Chairman of exhibitions of the Academy Fellowship announces that an exhibition will be assembled early in 1916, and members are requested to reserve some of their best canvases for it, as a considerable sum has been subscribed for the purchase of pictures from that collection.

The annual holiday dance of the Academy students last evening was a "Toy Ball." Eugene Castello.

ROME LETTER.

Rome, Dec. 17, 1915.

The present war exposes not only Venice to the reprisals of the Austrian aeroplanes, but all the minor cities of Veneto, and their rich and splendid monuments. Bombs have been dropped on Venice, Vicenza, Verona, Padova, Brescia, not to speak of other cities almost on the boundary, such as Belluno and Udine. Removable art works have been sent into safety, but they are very few in comparison to those that remain in every museum, gallery, church, public building and private home, every piazza and in every street.

Venice has lost one of her most precious ornaments, that marvellous Tiepolo fresco, which covered with a sky glorious in color, the ceiling of S. Maria degli Scalzi. It was not only a fine fresco, but perhaps the most daring and spirited of the decorations of 1700, with a richness and intensity inherited from Michelangelo and Creggio. It was a commission entrusted to Tiepolo by the Carmelite friars in 1743, just at the moment when his art had attained its climax.

Although other great Tiepolo art remains in various Venetian churches and palaces, and in the Academy and in Treviso, Vicenza, Udine, in the palace of the Prince-Bishop of Würzburg in Bavaria, the Royal Palace of Madrid, the Musée Jacquemart-André in Paris, and in the London, Berlin, Munich and Budapest Galleries, one is not consoled for the loss of this one—more magnificent than all the others.

The war goes on damaging, ruining art treasures, changing profoundly irrecoverably the physiognomy of the old cities, but, at the same time, war does not succeed in stopping the tenacious love for art. In the exposed city of Venice, in St. Mark's church, one hears the sound of striking hammers on metal, on stone. Are they working to protect still better the Basilica? No! while Venice fears any moment a new barbarous attack, they are merely at work, repairing the mosaics, restoring the golden cupolas, fighting against time's attacks.

The facade of the Milan Cathedral has just been completed. In near-by Bergamo have lately been discovered XIII century frescoes of Saints and other religious subjects in the interesting cloister formerly of the convent of Santa Maria. A Latin epigraph written in Gothic characters, enclosed in a group of frescoes, gives the date 1380. The frescoes, however, appear of three distinct periods and of three different authors, by reason of their lines and colors, and the topographic disposition they occupied when they were discovered; some of them are anterior to that date and nearer to the middle of 1300. They possess some qualities, especially as new art documents of that time.

An archeologist, with the soul of a poet, Vittorio Spinazzola, is exploring the ancient consular roads on that immortal coast which extends from Naples to Cuma. Here are great arches hidden by ivy, trees, vines, stretches of walls almost buried beneath the soil, grottoes, ruins, sepulchres. Spinazzola has carefully explored, studied, united the fragments, in order to recompose one by one the ancient monuments. Thus has come to light on the sacred hill of Cuma the remains of a temple to Apollo; in Pozzuoli, those of a large amphitheater, which, after many centuries, come to add a new word to the history of that Romanemporium.

The existence of this amphitheatre was revealed by the fragment of Roman glass on which was a small view of this amphitheater, also of a smaller one. Could this minute document be believed? Vittorio Spinazzola, after having discovered the first amphitheater, searched for the second, which, from his study, should have been placed on the high part of Pozzuoli. In one of the last excavations he discovered a small portion of the seats and parts of large exit doors, so that in a brief time, will be brought to light this small but more ancient and famous amphitheater, because here the Roman senators came, as narrates Suetonius, to enjoy the games. It was here, also, that Nero gave feasts in honor of the King of Armenia, who, from the steps killed the beasts in the arena with bow and arrow.

Print Collectors' Quarterly.

The Dec. number of the Print Collectors' Quarterly, contains an interesting article by George S. Hellman, the N. Y. dealer, on the "Drawings by Dutch and Flemish Artists in the Metropolitan Museum." With this there are twelve illustrations. David R. Smith writes an account of the Bohemian artist Hollar's interesting Print of London in the XVII Century. Albert E. Gallatin contributes "Notes on Some Rare Portraits of Whistler." These are in addition to some 200 already listed by him. An article on the "Golden Book of Landscape Lithography" is by H. L. Seaver. Frank Weitenkamp, chief of the division of prints of the N. Y. Library, treats of "John La Farge, Illustrator."

products of the needle, including one of Whistler's, one of Zorn's, and one of Pennell's. And now, Philip Little, that versatile artist and man of letters, has startled his contemporaries by exhibiting some colored etchings! His records, in brief line, of the wharves and old vessels of his native Salem are exceedingly "snappy" and personal.

At the Guild of Boston Artists the present exhibitor is that veteran exponent of values, line and mass, Joseph DeCamp, who has a show of portraits. These are square and upright examples (we refer not alone to their proportions), and honest, as far as the painter can make them. As a painter of portraits of men, DeCamp stands in Class A.

One of the new portraits in the front gallery of the Guild is Lilla Cabot Perry's admirable likeness of Chalmers Clifton, the musician. At another local gallery Mary L. Carlisle has opened her usual stereotyped exhibition of English garden pictures.

Through the initiative of Guy Lowell, the architect, the Museum has placed temporarily on exhibition a portrait bust of the late Desire Despradelle, professor of architecture at the Institute of Technology. Denys Puech, one-time shepherd boy, but now a famous French sculptor, a member of the Institute of France, and the husband of a princess, is the executor thereof, the work being ultimately destined for "Tech." It is shown in a niche of the Evans Memorial gallery.

It is announced that, at the renewed Pana-Pacific Art display, Charles H. Woodberry will have a special gallery for his exhibit.

Rembrandt's "The Sibyl," formerly owned by the late Theodore R. Davis is at the Metropolitan Museum, pending a legal decision as to whether it is to become its property. The work was reproduced in ART NEWS on Mar. 20.

SYRACUSE.

The George Elmer Browne exhib'n to close at the Museum Jan. 3 will be followed by the Woman's Group Exhib'n from Rochester Memorial Gallery, which was formed at Grand Rapids, Mich. The museum was closed during the greater part of the summer and on Oct. 1 the new gallery in the Public Library building was opened. The Friends of American Art have made possible, during the year several purchases, some of which, with views of the galleries, are reproduced in the Nov. number of the excellent bulletin issued under the supervision of the director and secretary, Mr. Fernando A. Carter. They are Gifford Beal's "Freight Yards," De Witt Parshall's "Isis Peak," Everett L. Warner's "December Hillside" and "The Poor Man's Club," Blanche Dillaye's "Arrangement in Green," Guy C. Wiggins' "St. Ives Sunlight," Marion E. Markham's "The Girl in Red" and D. E. Parshall's "Marine."

The Connecticut Academy.

The sixth annual exhib'n of the Conn. Academy will be held, in the annex of the Hartford Athenæum, Feb. 14-28. The "Varnishing Day" will be Feb. 12. There will be awarded the Conn. Academy Prize of $100, from a fund given by a member, for the best work shown, and completed within two years previous to the opening. The Dunham prize of $25 will be awarded for the best work by an artist under 35, while the Hudson prize of the same amount will be given, for the third time, for the best work by a woman. The Jury of Selection consists of Chas. Noel Flagg, G. F. Muendel, W. R. Derrick, Geo. Thompson, Hilda Belcher, Marion B. Allen, H. C. White, W. Nettleton, W. L. Carrigan, J. G. McManus and D. C. Wentworth, and the Hanging Committee of H. C. White, R. F. Logan, Guy C. Wiggins and A. E. Jones.

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY.

Edwin M. Davies is the first Minneapolis artist to have one of his paintings offered to and accepted by the Art Institute of that city. The picture was purchased by his friends, and is called “The Channel to the Mills.” The artist has come to N. Y. with his wife to spend six months, and will it is announced, take a studio, and study as well as paint.

Leo Mielzener has returned from West Point, Me., near Casco Bay, where he has organized a summer class, to his studio at 58 W. 57 St. and is occupied with portrait sketches, in red chalk and charcoal, and an exceptionally interesting Silver Point of Mrs. Jacob Schiff.

Orlando Rouland spent part of the summer at Nantucket, painting landscapes, and the rest at his place at Peconic, L. I., where he remained through November. He is now at his 130 W. 57 St. studio, painting portraits. A recently completed one is of John Burroughs and there is a delightful conception of little Miss Virginia Dwight.

Wilhelm Funk will have an exhib'n of recent portraits early this month at the Reinhardt Galleries, 565 Fifth Ave.

An exhib'n of woodcuts by Henry Wolf is on at the Camera Club, 121 W. 68 St.

The Paul Bartlett statues are being all placed on the facade of the Public Library. Romance has joined Philosophy and soon will also be in position Religion, Poetry, Drama and History.

The Detroit Museum has added to its permanent coll'n, Ivan S. Olinsky's “Two Girls.”

The following group will exhibit at the Macdowell Club, 108 W. 55 St., Jan. 6-18: Alice M. Belville, Horace Brown, Louise U. Brumback, Mr. Cole, C. H. Freeman, J. H. Goodrich, R. M. Kimbel, Harriet Lord, Robert Martin, Francisus Pausos, William J. Potter and Agnes Watson.

The “Immigrant in America” competition exhibition in Mrs. H. P. Whitney's studio, 8 W. 8th St., was transferred this week to Ellis Island.

Douglas Arthur Teed, of Binghamton, N. Y., has finished a seated portrait of Governor Whitman, that is to be placed in the Executive Chamber in the Albany Capitol. It is a commission from the Governor.

Janet Scudder has been given by Secretary of State Lansing the commission to design and model the three gold medals, to be presented by the U. S. to the “A. B. C.” mediators, Ambassadors, Naon, of Argentina, Da Gama, of Brazil, and Suarez, of Chili.

COMING MACBETH EXHIBITIONS.

The following is the schedule of exhib'ns arranged for Jan. and Feb. at the Macbeth Galleries, 450 Fifth Ave.: Paintings by F. C. Frieseke and John F. Carlsson, Jan. 3-18; group exhib'n by Emil Carlson, Helen M. Turner and Daniel Garber and decorative panels by F. S. Church, Jan. 19-Feb. 1; paintings by Charles W. Hawthorne and Jules Guerin, Feb. 2-15; decorations by Elmer MacRae, Feb. 2-29; and Ann'l Exhib'n of 30 pictures by 30 artists, Feb. 16-29.

Point Pleasant, N. J.
YOU who are fagged, overworked, or feeling the "press of things," cannot do better than take brief respite from city sights and sounds by spending a few days—perhaps just a week-end—at Pine Bluff Inn, right in the thick of the Jersey Pines.
But the pines, with their wonderfully refreshing odors, are not all. There is Treasure Island, of Robert Louis Stevenson fame; the beautiful Manasquan River, with its gorgeous scenery, and the ocean just a mile away as the crow flies from the piazza of the Inn. And this, of course, means sea food and game that are unrivalled.
And the quiet restfulness of it all! Recupere, if you wish, with naught more disturbing than your own thoughts; but if you need company of the truly congenial sort, that you will find, too. Winter golf, tennis, boating, trap-shooting and other outdoor sports are yours for the taking. Ice boating and skating parties in season.
Our conveniences are unique. Hot water heating throughout, with huge open log grates in each room.
American Plan. Prices, $3.00 per day; with private bath, $4.00 and upward. Special weekly rates on rooms and suites.
Pine Bluff Inn is situated ten miles from Lakewood, within a stone's throw of the main ocean motorway between Atlantic City and New York. A la Carte service to motorists.

The pictures in Mr. Lambert's collection, of which the ART NEWS will have more to say, in detail, before the sale, were secured in Europe and America, and have a wide range in subject, school and period, ranging from the early Italians of the XV century to the modern Americans. The most important of the Italian works are Madonnas by Botticelli and del Sarto, the first from the late Sir William Agnew's collection and the latter from that of the late Martin Colnaghi. There is also a most important and beautiful altar piece by Luini, purchased through the Blakeslee Galleries some years ago, and then reproduced in the ART NEWS. The late Sir William Agnew ranked this really great picture with Mr. Morgan's Raphael, in the Metropolitan Museum, and Carlo Dolci's Madonna of the Eight Stars, then at Blenheim, as the three great altar pieces of the world.

Miniatures and Manuscripts.

M. Léonce Alexander Rosenberg, a well-known collector in Paris, who is now serving in the aviation corps of the French army, has sent here his famous collection of early European and Oriental Miniatures and Mss. These will be sold privately by Tonying & Co., of 615 Fifth Avenue, but till the end of Jan. will be on public exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, Madison Avenue and Fortieth Street. The check list which has just been sent to American collectors contains 118 lots. Of these ten are Flemish, Persian and Italian manuscripts, from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries, some of them illustrated with miniatures. The remaining lots are Arabian, Persian, Indo-Persian, French, Italian and German miniatures, the Persian predominating. Nearly all are of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, though there are some of the thirteenth and fourteenth. The collection is a very unusual one and should have the careful attention of discriminating collectors.

Bunkio Matsuki Oriental Sale.

The Bunkio Matsuki sale of Oriental Art, held at the Anderson Galleries, Dec. 24, realized $2,828.50. Mr. C. Morgan paid $260 for a set of old Shinto temple carved oak doors; Mr. D. Dow $155 for a six-fold temple screen, and Mr. C. Maxwell $150 for a gold thread imperial tapestry. The last amount was given by Mr. C. B. Alexander for an embroidered palace hanging. He also paid $65 for an antique Chinese rug, and $40 for an old temple mirror. An old law screen fell to Mr. G. C. Smith for $60.

Mead Library Sale.

At the opening, Monday, at the Anderson Galleries, of the William S. Mead Library, $985.20 was realized. Mr. A. H. Tissue gave $47.50 for Crowe and Cavalcaselles vols. on painting in Italy. Mr. H. D. Buegeleisen paid $38 for the Riverside Emerson, and Mr. H. O. Harris, $25 each for Burrow's "Wild Tales" and "Lavengro"; Mr. A. W. Clark secured for $24 Plon's "Cellini."

The second session Tuesday brought $1,130.75. G. E. Stechert & Co. gave $30 for Mrs. Lowden's, "The Ladies Flower Garden;" Mr. W. Shelburn paid $2,650 for Latham's "The Gardens of Italy," and Mr. G. D. Smith, $20 for Mrs. Jameston's six vols. of works on art. The final session, Wed., resulted in $1,258.50, which made the total of the sale $3,374.95. Mr. Tully gave $79 for the first library edition of Thackeray. Mr. H. B. Buegeleisen paid $55 for "The Book of Waverley Gems" and Mr. G. D. Smith $24 for Ruskin's "Modern Painters," 1851-60.

Clarke Plates and Stuffs.

For the auction, of the Thomas B. Clarke collection of "Rare Plates of Many Nations and Beautiful Old Textiles," at the American Art Galleries, on the after. of Jan. 5-8, the American Art Association, has provided a quite remarkable catalog, in which figure, besides halitones, a number of fine colored illustrations. The public view of the collection of 742 examples begins today.

As a collector, whether of American pictures or Oriental art, Mr. Clarke is primus inter pares, and always early in the field. And having collected first this and then that, he looks for new fields to explore. His collection and sales of American pictures, made both the reputations of men and established a standard of values for their works, which has since steadily increased. Last year Mr. Clarke sold his magnificent collection of rugs and carpets, and this season, he offers an equally attractive display, the brilliantly colored plates and richly embroidered textiles furnishing, in cases and on the walls, a veritable feast of color and fine workmanship. The specimens range from the ancient products of Far Cathay, and Near Stamboul, to those of the north Mediterranean shores, and Italy and France of the Renaissance.

There are plates of early China, of Bokhara, Persia, and Turkey, of Rhodes, and Damascus, and of the Spain of the Moors. Particularly rare are the examples of early Italian white faience. There are besides Urbino and Drua examples. One Urbino example, showing the chase of Daphne and Apollo, came from Guido Durantino's bottega, patronized by the Comnetable de Montmorency. The collection of velvets and other textiles includes some laces. There are escutcheons, a number of richly embroidered banners, brocades, copes, chasables, dalmatics, panels, rugs and portals and other hangings, in fact a gathering that would half fill a decorative and industrial art museum.

OLD MASTERS
of the English, Dutch and Italian Schools.

MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 14 CLIFFORD STREET LONDON, W. is acting as private agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

Rugs Sold at Silo's.

At the continuation, Dec. 24, of a sale of Oriental rugs at a Fifth Ave. auction room, Mrs. Burke Roche paid $765 for a gold and blue Chinese palace carpet. For another palace carpet Dr. F. N. Irwin gave $300 and Miss C. M. Hurlbut $235 for a rose colored Khiva specimen. A Sultana-had Persian rug sold to Miss E. M. Smith for $185.

Civil War Material.

Part V of the library of John F. Burton of Milwaukee which goes on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, Wednesday next, preliminary to the sale on the Wednesday aft. and eve., January 12, and the afternoons of the two following days, contains the Civil War material. There are 1,354 lots in the catalog. One division contains 50 books printed in the South while the war was in progress; another nearly 70 broadsides printed between 1854 and 1865; while still another is made up of hundreds of songsters used by the soldiers.

Four autograph letters and documents by John A. Campbell give the events leading to the bombardment of Fort Sumter. An autograph letter by Jefferson Davis discusses his coming election to the presidency of the Confederacy and his qualifications for the office. There are two important letters by Grant, both written from Southern battlefields; four books that belonged to Josiah Henson, the "Uncle Tom" of Mrs. Stowe's famous novel, and among the relics, in addition to slave deeds, photographs, and newspapers, is a portion of the first flag captured by the Northern troops.

WALTERS GALLERY CHANGES.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 4, 1916.

The additions to the collection in the Walters Gallery, which was opened for the season, Jan. 1, are sufficiently important to warrant special note.

Chief among the recently installed paintings are a "Virgin and Child with Two Angels" by Matteo di Giovanni, the Siennese mid-XV Century painter; the "Death of St. Francis of Assisi," the work of some unknown artist of the Camerino school and "Young Man Wearing a Fur Collar," attributed to Basaiti. The last is a particularly strong and interesting example, a remarkably vital work that commands and holds attention. One other painting by Basaiti, a "Saint Jerome Seated in Landscape, Reading," was put in the collection last year as was Matteo's "Cavalcade," a fragment of a cassone panel.

These works all hang in the North Gallery, where was formerly displayed the Massarenti Collection of sad memory. It will, perhaps, be recalled that this room underwent "Berensonization," prior to the re-opening last winter, and that as a result only a few of the original paintings were allowed to remain on the walls, and many of them were given new authorships.

A New Catalog.

The old catalog has been discarded and the present one is nothing like as positive in its attributions. That is, one comes across more interrogation points in parentheses after the names of artists and the phrase "School of" is much more frequently found in connection with such names as Botticelli, Verrocchio, Tintoretto, etc. Renewed study of the North Gallery reveals more fully than ever the sweeping changes that were made through Mr. Berenson's study of and report on the pictures.

One looks in vain in the new catalog for del Sarto's name. And there used to be two attributed del Sartos in the collection! That is, according to the pristine nomenclature. Both were supposed to be self-portraits. The finer of the two, a work of psychological significance, is now announced as being by Bugiardini or Sogliani. And to either the one or the other of these painters is attributed the "Portrait of Raphael" which used to be called a Raphael and which is signed RU in the upper left hand corner of the panel.

Alas, too, for the Botticellis! The two works—"Virgin and Child with Saint John" and "St. John the Baptist," which in the good, old days apparently were above suspicion as by the master himself at present are classed as belonging merely to the "School of" Botticelli and a third, "Virgin and Child," is similarly classified. Another "Virgin and Child" that has all the superficial characteristics of a Luini and which was formerly so cataloged, is now declared a Civerchio.

Some New Art Objects.

Downstairs, where the sculptures and miscellaneous objets d'art are arranged, several unfamiliar pieces are to be found. The most striking of these is a boxwood cabinet that has the quality of old bronze, said to be a XVI Century Nuremberg production. It is very richly carved, the panels having mythological subjects done in rather high relief. In a room nearby are six new plates of modern Delft production in imitation of antique glazes. These were exhibited at San Francisco, where, it is understood, Mr. Walters purchased them.

TWEED OWNED THE STUART?

It is reported from Phila., where one of three—not seven—replicas of the famous Lansdowne portrait of Washington by Gilbert Stuart was sold by Mr. Stan V. Henkels some little time ago to Mr. Max Williams of New York, heading a syndicate, for the reported sum of $13,000, that the picture was once owned by "Boss" Tweed, and hung for sometime in his New York house.

The other replicas of the original Lansdowne portrait, so called from the fact that it was painted to the order of the Marquis of Lansdowne, and which is now owned by the British Nation, are the canvas in the Pa. Academy and the Tweed-Henkels-Williams picture. The portrait is still in Phila. and will probably be placed on exhibition when it is brought here.

ST. LOUIS BUYS A MANET.

The City Art Museum of St. Louis has purchased from the firm of Durand-Ruel the well known picture by Edouard Manet called "The Reader," reproduced in the ART NEWS some time ago. It shows an elderly bearded man, who holds a large volume open on the table before him. The early example of the French master was first exhibited in Paris in 1857 and eight years later in Vienna. There Faure, the baritone, and his wife saw it and added it to their well known collection. The public again saw the picture in 1884 at the exhibition of Manet's work held at the Beaux Arts after his death.

PHILA. PORTRAIT DEPOSED.

Following the recent pronouncement of Mr. Charles Henry Hart against the validity of certain cherished old portraits in various Phila. institutions, comes the deposing from the place of honor it has long held

COMING "BALL OF THE GODS."

The "Ball of the Gods," to be given at the Hotel Astor, Feb. 11 next, by the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, will not only be the most brilliant art and social affair of the Winter season, but will surpass, if that were possible, the Venetian Fete given by the society in Feb., 1913, also at the Astor.

The pageant, to be followed by dancing, is divided into three parts—Hindu, Egyptian and Greek—each subdivided into a large number of groups. The scheme is to realize a fanciful conception of some Olympus where all the gods ever imagined might be supposed to meet.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor will represent Hera, Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, Artemis, Mrs. Gordon Knox Bell will lead a band of Bacchantes and Miss Juliana Cutting as Iris will lead a band of young women in the rainbow ballet.

GIVES CHURCH ART COLL'N.

Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Walker, of Minneapolis, have had the novel idea, in these days, of presenting an art gallery to a church. To the Hennepin Ave. Methodist Church in Minneapolis, December 24, Mr. Walker gave 34 pictures, and on Christmas Day, Mrs. Walker added 125. The pictures, all of Biblical subjects, given by Mr. Walker, are placed in a room built to receive them on the second floor of the church building, and Mrs. Walker's gift will be in rooms on the ground floor. Mr. Walker started the collection ten years ago with a modern work, Antonio Ciseri's "Christ Before Pilate," 10x17 ft.

The following is a list of the works given by Mr. and Mrs. Walker with their attributions:

"Holy Night," Washington; "Belshazzar's Feast," Bezzuoli; "Building Tower of Babel," Bononi; "Adoration of the Shepherds," "The Annunciation" and "Joachim and Anne," Borras; "Holy Family," Cerezo; "Ecce Homo," Ciseri; "The Nativity," Cuirado; "Notable Events in the Life of Jesus," Ernst; "The Crucifixion," Dietrich; "Adoration of Shepherds," Fabritius; "Isaac Blessing Jacob," Flinck; "Adoration of Shepherds," Furini; "Erring Woman Before Christ," Guercino; "Abraham and Three Angels," Meenskerk; "Rebekah at the Well," Kauffman; "Jesus Bearing the Cross," Lucas Van Leyden; "Assumption of the Virgin," Maratti; "Assumption of the Virgin," Menesses; "Christian Pilgrims at Tomb of Virgin, Jerusalem," LeComte Du Nouy; "Job's Messengers," Poole; "Joseph's Brethren Casting Him Into Pit," "Joseph Sold to the Ishmaelites," "Exhibiting Joseph's Blood Stained Coat to Jacob," "Joseph's Escape From Potiphar's Wife," "Joseph Interpreting Chief Butler's and Chief Baker's Dreams," "Cup Found in Benjamin's Sack" and "Joseph Meeting His Father in Garden," all by Santa Croce; "Wedding in Cana," Swanvelt; "Madonna and Donors," Siena; "Christ Before Caiaphas," Tiepolo; "Christ Healing the Sick," Tintoretto, and "Christ Raising Jairus' Daughter," Benjamin West.

PROF. VOLPI'S PICTURES.

Under the heading "Another 'Expert' War Due," the ART NEWS, in its issue of Dec. 4 last, stated that Appraiser Hecht, attributed two, among several Old Masters, brought over by Prof. Elia Volpi, the well known Italian art authority, to the School of Titian and consequently valued them at $500 each. Their owner placed a valuation of $500,000 on the canvases, one as a replica by the Master of his well known "Girl with Fruit," and the other as an undoubted original portrait of a woman.

This publication of Mr. Hecht's opinion, while innocently made, not only cast doubt upon the correctness of Prof. Volpi's judgment and knowledge as an art authority, one of the best on early Italian painting, but was considered by Prof. Volpi as injurious not only to the Titian canvases, but to others which he also brought over.

It is only fair to Prof. Volpi and his pictures to state that no representative of the ART NEWS had seen the Titians or his other pictures when this publication was made. After careful examination, the ART NEWS must differ with Mr. Hecht and those who may have advised with him in his opinion. The Titian canvases, if not by that Master, certainly have all his characteristics, while the remaining pictures in Prof. Volpi's collection are among the finest examples of the masters they represent ever brought to America. They will surprise and delight the cognoscenti, who will soon have an opportunity to see and study them in a gallery, which Prof. Volpi has leased at 707 Fifth Ave.

It was from Prof. Volpi's Avenazzati Palace in Florence, that a number of the finest early Italians in the Pierpont Morgan and Altman collections came, through the Agnews and other foreign dealers.

PICTURES UPSIDE DOWN.

At an exhibition of 12 modern Americans, now on in the gallery of the Art Association of Grand Rapids, Mich., a picture by George Bellows, entitled "The Pool," aroused much curiosity when the display was opened, as there was no "Pool" visible. This curiosity was not satisfied until an intelligent visitor discovered that the landscape had been hung upside down. When reversed the "Pool" was clearly visible.

This incident recalls that of some years ago at the Phila. Academy when six pictures by Robert Henri, which visitors could not understand, were finally discovered to have been hung upside down by the then Director, Harrison B. Morris. It will also be recalled that a New York art critic gravely discussed a certain landscape in a New York Lotus club exhibition some few seasons ago, which was hung upside down. This would not matter much with some of the works of the modern "Cubists" and "Futurists."

PORTRAIT OF A MAN

Franz Hals

In the coming Catholina Lambert Sale.

in the main gallery of Independence Hall in that city, of the portrait of the "Signer," William Whipple of New Hampshire, by St. Memin. It has been decided by Curator Jordan and the members of the Advisory Board as well as by Mrs. Fanny Pickering Heffenger of Portsmouth, N. H., that the portrait in question is not one of William Whipple, but of his brother, Joseph Whipple, who was not a "Signer."

Mrs. Heffenger has a copper plate etching of Joseph Whipple, which is identical with the portrait. What is puzzling is how St. Memin could have made a portrait of Joseph Whipple, who was a plain country man and never travelled as far South as New York or Phila., where St. Memin worked when here.

As there is no record of any portrait of William Whipple other than this, up till now, supposed presentment—the face of Whipple in the group of "Signers" by Trumbull at New Haven, being probably an impression—it seems probable that the Phila. portrait is an enlargement of the etched portrait of Joseph Whipple, which has never been out of the possession of his descendants.

Mr. J. M. Hewlett will design the scenery and decorations of the ballroom, and the scenario of the pageant is to be prepared by Messrs. Howard Greenley and George Chappell. Mr. Kenneth M. Murchison will have charge of the music. Mrs. John W. Alexander will arrange the scenes from Greek mythology, and Mrs. George de F. Presh will costume the Hindu tableaux, assisted by Messrs. Paul Manship, Barry Faulkner and Homer St. Gaudens.

Invitations to the ball were issued on Tuesday. There will be no public sale of tickets, and the proceeds will be devoted to the educational work of the society—the helping of young painters, sculptors and architects.

The list of patronesses includes the names of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney and Miss Janet Scudder, representing sculpture; Mmes. Leonard M. Thomas, Payne Whitney and Douglas Robinson, poetry; Mrs. Albert Herter, painting; Miss de Wolfe, decoration; Mmes. Archer M. Huntington and Price Post, prose; Ethel Barrymore and Dorothy Donnelly, drama, and Mrs. Pablo Casals and Miss Mary Pearsall Field, music.

MODERN PAINTINGS*EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*SOME PRINT SHOWS.

(By The Second Viewer.)

There is a decided significance in the awakening of interest in prints, as evidenced by the number and quality of print exhibitions which have been held rather recently in this town. This awakening bespeaks a broadening comprehension of the pictorial arts, and an approach toward placing the art of the original etcher and engraver in its proper relation to that of the painter. In furtherance of this tendency the exhibition at the Print Gallery, 707 Fifth Ave., of lithographs and woodcuts is important. The modern productions shown here are interesting, although far from being the most excellent contemporaneous achievements of their class. Whistler is represented by a few lithographs, but they are not the most brilliant things he did with the stone process. Indeed, in this exhibition the lithographic honors are carried off by a man whose name, although already a good one, is not yet one to conjure with—Will Rothenstein. His portraits are quite the best things shown. New York may wait a long time before seeing lithographic portraits by anyone which possess finer qualities. Rothenstein's "Rodin" portraits are well known and liked, but in a way they sink to insignificance beside his masterly little portraits of John Sargent, Henry James, Bernard Shaw, Aubrey Beardsley and Coquelin. The Sargent is especially happy. Perfectly easy in attitude the little thing is so sensitively, yet so truthfully expressed that it seems alive. The figure of the late Alphonse Legros is also delightful, a great portrait in slight scale, and accomplished apparently with slight effort.

The Brangwyn lithographs shown are powerful things, a little excessive in power perhaps. The woodcuts of James Cadenhead are interesting, and the single lithograph by Charles Shannon, slightly Rossetian in sentiment, is delicately expressed. Fantin Latour's "Prelude to Lohengrin" is here, with the souvenir of Berlioz, the "Duo des Troyens." Sturge Moore is prominent among the original wood engravers, while the honors for reproductive wood engraving are carried by Wolf, Cole and Closson.

F. W. Benson's Etchings.

Frank Benson's etchings at Kennedy's have a certain Bostonian "smartness." They are the work of a man, who, having painted rather cleverly, condescends to honor the etching needle with a little holiday attention. The plates inspired by fishing and hunting experiences are the most entertaining. Possibly that phase of life makes a particular appeal to this successful and capable artist. The silhouette of man and dog in "The Duck Hunter" conveys a real feeling of outdoor atmosphere in the quality of the shadows. The log men in "River Drivers" are jolly good human bits, and the fishing vessel, pitching on a high swell in "The Seiner" is realism, tossed off with a skill that was calculated well for effect of pattern and economy of stroke.

Benson and Hassam have dropped into etching quite notably. They will find, however, one suspects, that the position such as Whistler occupies in this field is not won in a handspring. Paint is one thing—etched-line quite another.

The seduction of color, which on the canvas ekes out of a wretched pattern and a wobbling structure, a sort of superficial charm, is happily shut out of the etching room. The bitten line stands or falls without props. The novitiate of Messrs. Benson and Hassam as etchers is fraught with promise. Meantime, there are some men in the graphic arts, in this country, who have long passed, so to speak, their baptism of nitric. Will some enterprising dealer kindly bring out their prints?

James Britton.

Nat'l Arts Club Exhibition.

The Nat'l Arts Club has distinguished itself in the hanging of the present annual display of work by painter members, open to Jan. 28. There are but a score of pictures over the line and there is no crowding. Each picture hangs alone. The effect is excellent and the show a fair one. Hayley Lever is well to the fore with a large "Early Morning at St. Ives," somewhat like a Brangwyn in quality and painted some years ago. Paul Dougherty sends a shore scene full of breeze and rock thrown surf. Another large coast scene is by William Ritschel, a fine sketch of sea under a clouded sky. A Turnbull Hill sends a fine picture of quietly moving sea and monumental sky. "The Town on the Dunes" has been effectively painted in well massed strokes by Geo. Elmer Browne. Frank A. Bicknell has a vigorous autumn view through a tree screen to an old country house. Paul Cornoyer shows, with good pale moonlight effect, a view of European village houses under poplars. Carlton Chapman's large view of a 54 gun frigate and other ships at sunset is striking, though a little hot in color.

A second picture with poplars is F. J. Mulhaupt's early morning farm scene, effective in its light and shade. A. L. Groll has a sunny view with a fine cloudscape looking inland over a New England village. Charles Vezin attacks the hill and sky subject with quite successful results, while Bruce Crane is nobly effective in a sweep of mountainside with a couple of lonely tree wrecks. George Bellows is much more quiet than usual in a very truthful "Early Morning" in winter under one of the new bridges and over the river. Henry S. Hubbell shows a good figure of a young woman with a well modelled face in filtered light. Guy C. Wiggins has a sparkling street scene in Washington. Very decorative is the unconventionally posed figure of the girl in Douglas Volk's "Sylvanesque." A clever vigorous figure of a woman in evening dress reflected in a mirror is Ruth Bobbs' "My Sister." Marion Boyd Allen pictures with sober effect Anna Hyatt modelling a sketch of her Joan of Arc statue.

Attractive in color and modelling is the figure of a woman holding her naked "lamie, Boy!" by Carl Anderson. F. Luis Mora has a svelte full length figure of a senorita in long flowered shawl. Robert Henri shows his virtuosity in an also life size, but rather coarse, full length of a Spanish girl. Albert F. Lucas depicts a Charon ferrying a mother and babe. Simple and very strong is W. R. Derrick's view in sunlight of the Gardener's Cottage. Louis Betts' "Poverty's Children" is bright. There is fine quality in the street head of the girl "Marion" by Louis Betts.

Others represented are Ben Foster, Jane Peterson, Lilian Genth, G. Glen Newell, Everett Warner, H. Titlow, J. Dunbar Wright, Birge Harrison, Leon Dabo, Gardner Symons, C. W. Hawthorne, Florence F. Snell, Edmund Greacen, E. L. Dufner, May N. McCord, Cullen Yates, I. L. Couse, Hobart Nichols, Clara W. Parrish, Daniel Garber, A. T. Van Laer, A. Worthington Ball, Noble Ives and Clara McChesney.

The gold medal of honor was awarded to Hayley Lever.

Modern Frenchmen at Knoedler's.

In the selection of modern French pictures of diverse kinds, now assembled at the Knoedler Galleries, it was rather a daring achievement to admit Paul Gauguin to the society of Dagnan Bouveret without a clash. Dagnan's profile portrait of a young Breton, Holbeinesque in its searched fineness, foils magnificently with the opulently solid man's head by Gauguin.

Almost "eclectic" diversity distinguishes this show of novel and odd canvases by men of much renown. Manet's large duo portrait "The Music Lesson" is a sonorous note for the place of honor, flanked with a Cottet and a Lucien Simon. Then, for corner pendants the strong Cottet heads of Breton women, the one old and bowed, the other vibrant with young maturity and both seem against harbor settings, under melancholy skies.

Rene Menard in several classic decorative arrangements depressingly rich in tone, La Touche in a ballet scene and several decorous confections, Besnard with outdoor fantasies and Carriere with a group of sepia-toned "suppressions," are all characteristically represented. Lucien Simon in a self-portrait is jaunty—white clothes, cigarette and tilted flat black hat. Early Monets of good quality, a fine rich early Sisley (1875), an upright Pissaro of groping procedure as to facture, a Degas pastel "Femme," a Renoir pastel "Lady in Chemise," an oil Renoir "Girl Sewing," and a brilliant Signac marine attract.

There are two Monet female heads in pastel, a Simon group of figures in the open, an interior, a street scene by Bonnard, and a fine Daumier, "The Drinkers."

Cezanne at Montross'.

The extravagant claims of supereminence that have been made for the painter Paul Cezanne should not disturb anybody. But they do disturb, as if extravagant claims were not constantly being made for all sorts of painters every day. That Paul Cezanne was a painter of fine quality it would be idle to deny—that his art is a decadent art it would be equally idle to deny. But only a man with a tragic obsession would entertain the fancy of Cezanne's supereminence in the world of paint. The Cezanne exhibition now on at the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave., is an admirable lesson for those who rage fitfully against "modernism." The one little portrait in this display is enough testimony, by itself, to the painter's possession of the soul of the artist seeking earnestly for nature's truth.

The twaddle of Cezanne's most fevered champions, about the "three dimensions," is the merest mockery of pedantry in the face of a genius tantalizing in his simplicity. Take the little still life in "Seven Apples," or the watercolor "The Watermelon"—how infantile to talk geometry over such realism. Or take the sombre note of "The Old Mill"—a profound color note, compact of the stuff that fires the imagination.

Ye "literary" critics of art, go to! What about it, what does it mean? How marvelous does a simple genius of a painter become when his slightest eccentricities turn to a grist of golden guineas. Gone are all the rapid materialisms of watercolor clubs. Here, with one and twenty strokes on the finest Michelet, this master feels delicately, with a brush dipped in liquid gems, for the forms that mother nature moulds in "The Forest," "The Mountain," the "Tree Trunk," "The Ravine," "The Ledge" and—"The Ditch." He goes further, on "The Road," past "The House on the Hill," up to the "Rocky Ridge" and down to the "Trees in a Ravine." "Reflections in the Water" arrest the attention of this keen-seeing aquarellist, who stops to note the odd formation of "The Ash Tree," observes the silent figure of "The Fisherman," notes the play of cool light upon the "Foliage" and other "Verdure," lingers a moment by "The Boats," and retires by the "Bridge," past the domicile of "The Gables."

On another journey to "sit before nature" the oil box gives us the red roofs through the curtain of deep emerald in "L'Estague," another day gives us the "Road in a Forest." Back in the studio the "Still Life with Figure of Cupid" offers the joyous problem of light on plaster.

How simple all this. Why the perplexity? If Cezanne were not a dead man we would be tempted to say "Bon jour, old bogie, your battered blue derby makes a fine note on the red carpet of Montross, welcome—to the carpet."

French Art Exhibition.

The 100 or more paintings, drawings, engravings, medals and plaquettes donated by the members of the Societe Fraternelle des Artistes de Paris to their fellow American artists numbering 100, composing the "Committee of One Hundred," as a recognition of the latter's work in behalf of French artists and their families, suffering from the war's effects, in the exhibition at Knoedler's last winter, arrived last week at the studio of William A. Coffin, President of the American Committee, and were distributed by lot among the Committee's members.

These were placed on exhibition last Sunday in the Ritz-Carlton ballroom, under the auspices of the French Museum of Art, the Society of Beaux Arts Architects and the Committee of One Hundred, and can be seen there to Jan. 15 inclusive.

The exhibition was opened on Sunday evening by a reception, to which admission was placed at $3, and which occasion brought together a representative gathering of artists, art lovers and members of the modish world. There was an attractive program, an opening address, eulogistic of France and her artists by Mr. Whitney Warren, who presided, a most eloquent and moving speech by Mr. James Beck, and an also eloquent and feeling address by Dr. Frank Landon Humphreys, followed by a concert, in which several noted singers took part.

The large painting by Albert Besnard, executed to order of the French Government for the Peace Palace at the Hague, and finished just before the war's outbreak, was, with another and more decorative painting, a ceiling for a Vienna ballroom, also by Besnard, placed at each end of the ballroom. The large "Peace" is an effective, if not inspiring, mural decoration, and will be shown throughout the country for the benefit of the French artists.

The donated works are, with few exceptions, slight, and are for the most part sketches, some early ones by noted modern French painters, but severally and as a whole, charmingly decorative and appealing, while some, such as Bonnat's quarter life size painting of a young French woman knitting, entitled "Pour les Soldats," and which went to Mr. Coffin, Menard's chalk drawing for his "Bathers," which was allotted to Miss Malvina Hoffman, and George Weiss' "Advance," given to A. T. Van Laer, are really unusual works.

The Bourdelle statuette went to Gifford Beal. Charles Curran secured a chalk study in black and red by Henri Martin of a mother and child. Fouqueray's "In the Trenches, Dixmude," a watercolor, was allotted to Miss Janet Scudder, Roll's "In Belgium" (chalk drawing) to Max Bohm, and a landscape in crayon by Harnpignies to Elliott Daingerfield. Charles Cottet's etching of clustered buildings went to Childe Hassam, a seated figure in Indian ink and white by Flameng to Lloyd Warren, a marine in charcoal by Mauffra to Alfred Maurer, a pastel "Leda and the Swan" by Auburtin to F. Luis Mora, a pencil head of a woman by Cormon to A. L. Groll, a flower piece by Le Sidaner to John Flanagan, a head of a soldier in pastel by Gervex to Walter Palmer, and a drawing of a nude figure in black and red chalk to C. C. Rumsey. C. M. Dewey was given a little drawing of a head by Paul Chabas, and George de F. Brush won a painting of a woman seated by a window by Bail. A Venetian scene by Lamy went to W. L. Taylor, and Bougonnier's "Le Labour" to J. C. Nicoll.

Block's Pictorial Raptures.

In the A. P. Ryder and Arthur B. Davies vein are a couple of dozen little panels by Rudolf J. Block, now on view in one of the Folsom Galleries at 396 Fifth Ave. Mr. Block, who has a somewhat Wagnerian imagination of his own, places his figures in Oriental interiors and in landscapes in which the same mountainous forms reappear. His color is fine, though he shocks by signing his surname in red and his figures are not usually carried very far, though one nude "Nympe" is Rubenseque. "Little Boy Blue" is naked and in a very sad landscape. In "Afternoon Quiet" one mature lady seems to be combing her hair under some strange trees. A little "Hillside" suggests Rousseau. There is also "An Old Musician," a "Meditation," "The Shepherd's Song" and "Solitude."

Mezzotints at Knoedler's.

In one of the galleries of Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., a collection of 54 examples of the work of the English XVIII Century mezzotint engravers is shown. They reproduce the work of Reynolds chiefly, of Cosway, Gainsborough, Hoppner, Romney, Morland and Opie among others.

Scenes Arctic and Antarctic.

Frank Wibert Stokes, a clever draughtsman and careful observer, has on view to January 15, at the Arlington Galleries, an interesting collection of 29 pictures, or rather, drawings in what is apparently pastel, reinforced by gouache, of scenes in the Arctic and Antarctic regions and on Terra del Fuego. These artistic memoranda have both scientific and artistic value, and attract if they do not greatly inspire.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

A COURAGEOUS COLLECTOR.

The story from Baltimore published elsewhere in this issue, detailing the additions to, and the changes made during the past summer in the picture collection of Mr. Henry Walters in that city, for the reopening of the Galleries, is not only interesting to art lovers, as would be any news affecting this remarkable collection—one of the largest and finest in America—but evidences that one prominent American art collector, at least, has the courage of his convictions.

For it was courageous on Mr. Walter's part, when he learned that doubts had been expressed as to the validity of several of the pictures in the Massar-anti collection, which he purchased for a sum said to have been a million, some years ago in Rome—to send for no less an "Expert" and authority on early Italian art than Mr. Berenson, and to give him carte blanche to examine the pictures carefully and to frankly report to their owner.

With this unusual commission, Mr.
Berenson went carefully over the pictures, pasting on those which he decided were falsely or wrongly attributed a white label, so that, as was amusingly said after the completion of his task, "the Gallery looked as if it had been struck by a snowstorm."

In other words, Mr. Berenson found many wrongly attributed works, and Mr. Walters, regardless of monetary loss, or adverse criticism as to his own lack of knowledge or judgment in the purchase, for so large a sum, of the pictures questioned, as will be seen from the letter of our Baltimore correspondent, accepted Mr. Berenson's verdict and has removed some of the pictures and has had others re-labeled, with what are presumably more correct attributions of artists' names.

All honor to Mr. Walters for his courage, his honesty to the public and his friends, and also to the art world of America. Would that other American collectors, who have in some instances been far more badly deceived
in the purchase of art works than Mr.
Walters, follow his fine example.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Kevorkian's Disclaimer.

Editor American Art News.

Dear Sir: My attention has just been called to a statement in the letter from London published in the issue of December 11 last, of your esteemed journal, under the heading of "The Kevorkian Sale," and again to another article published in the London letter, issue of Dec. 25 last, which referred in a deprecating manner to a sale of certain objects belonging to the Persian Art Gallery, as though the said objects were of my collection, or that I was the manager of the said Persian Art Gallery.

I am not in the least aware of the nature of the sale referred to, and absolutely deny that any of the objects of my collection were sold in the manner described. I must therefore protest in a formal manner against my name being used in this connection, and must declare most emphatically that at no time I have been the manager of the company referred to, or of any other concern whatever. Yours very truly,
H. Kevorkian.

New York, Jan. 4, 1916.

[We publish the above letter at Mr.
Kevorkian's request, but must state that the statements to which he refers were sent us in good faith by our experienced and reliable London correspondent, and that we had no reason to doubt their accuracy.—Ed.]

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

A Fresh Batch of Friesekes

A baker's dozen, and odd, of fresh baked Friesekes, beautifully tinted a la Della Robbia, are on view at the Macbeth Galleries, 450 Fifth Ave., to Jan. 18. In the lower gallery is a group of 21 strong, sober landscapes by John F. Carlson. Riding atop the wave of success, caused largely by the award of the grand prize at San Francisco, the artist, who proved himself possessed of a highly elegant and picturesque style in his Watteau-like decorations in the Wanamaker auditorium, has fallen into a slough of materialism which rises almost at times to the trenches of vulgarity. And still he is a capable, and indeed, at times,
a brilliant painter, suggesting often in subject, if not in treatment, Renoir, and in both Mary Cassatt.

Compare, however, for instance, the partly nude figure in a kimono, showing half of the entire bosom, with the XVIII century jeune elegante of Maurice Leloir, about to take a bath, and with her form partly revealed by and through her peignoir. One is prose and the other almost poetry.

Then look at the "Corsican Girl," in chemise and kimono. It is not the painting that is at fault, but the selection of subject.
And the painting, too, although brilliant,
is rather confected. It has nothing in common with the realism of the nude Paris models pictured under the trees by Alexander Harrison and it has much in common with the French pleinairists. It is attractive, sometimes elegant, sometimes commonplace and often untrue.

There is, however, truth in the large and unlovely "The Hammock," with the woman's figure showing through her sun flecked draperies, and the group "Under the Trees," of a woman offering an apple to a child held by a nurse. Another recent product of the painter's Giverny studio is a picture of an unattractive model seated before her mirror, dressing her hair. There are grace and refinement in the figures in
"The Yellow Room," and at "The Kitchen Door" and "The French Porch." Some landscapes with figures are unaffected and attractive.

Art at Women's League.

A group of oils shown at the Professional Women's League rooms, 1999 Broadway, to Jan. 16, represent eleven women. Jane Peterson's usual gaiety of color and variety of subject are in evidence and Theresa Bernstein's characteristic notes please, especially a basket of flowers, gorgeously rich in color and nice in arrangement. "In Self Defense," a large canvas by Elizabeth
S. N. Watrous, is the most striking work; in it she has expressed a great deal. It is a subject inspired by the war in Europe.
A woman is shown standing in a disordered room, grasping a revolver. Her much discussed "In the War Zone" is also shown.

Isabel V. Cook contributes vivid bits of Bolivia and Harriett Bowdoin's Venetian scenes are spirited and atmospheric. Martha Walter's Indian baby is one of the best pictures shown, and there are many of her characteristic beach subjects as well.
Laura V. McLane gives evidence of talent and originality and Clara M. Norton's
"Old Woman" is a serious characterization.
Others exhibiting are Marian Kerr, Lillian Schmidt and Clara Davidson.

A DREAM OF SCULPTURE.

There are castles in the air as well as in Spain. And similarly there are mountains in Georgia, U. S. A., as well as beyond the Pyrenees. And as the mountains cannot go to Mahomet, that individual, in the person of a sculptor largely in the public press, is preparing to go to the mountain. According to a syndicate story furnished by the sculptor, and extensively used by last Sunday's dailies, Gutzon Borglum is preparing to execute on Stone Mountain, Ga., as a memorial to the Confederate armies, the largest sculptural work in the history of the world.

The Sphinx will have to take a back seat, and remains of Ghiseh and Nineveh, and the palaces of the Incas will have their historical noses, so to speak, put out of joint. The Colossus of Rhodes will be forgotten, while the Lions of Lucerne and Belfort, and the Statue of Liberty will seem like scarf pins. Mr. Borglum plans to carve a great frieze in Stone Mountain, 2,000 feet long, and, it is said, five stories high.
The work, it is stated, will consume most of the sculptor's thought and energies for eight years.

The Monument Association showed the sculptor the mountain and asked him to compete. He refused, with the present results. The memorial is to cost $2,000,000.
The groups representing various branches of the C. S. A. Service, with the official heads of the Confederacy, will be carved in high relief, the figures, super-colossal, horses, for example, to be 35 to 50 feet in height. As Mr. Borglum says, "It is what the Egyptians tried to do and the Grecians wanted to do, and neither had the time nor the place."

All of which is very illuminating. Men fell for less at Thermopylae. May the shadow of the millions never grow less.
But "Ars longa, vita brevis est." And what does the Scenic and Historical Preservation Society of Georgia, if there is one, say about it?

OBITUARY.

Edith W. Burroughs.

Edith Woodman Burroughs, sculptor of talent, and wife of Bryson Burroughs, Curator of paintings, at the Metropolitan Museum, died Thursday at Flushing, L. I., aged 44. She studied at the Art Students' League, under St. Gaudens, and in Paris
under Inglebert and Luc Olivier Merson.
At the Pana-Pacific Exposition Mrs. Burroughs showed "The Fountain of Youth" and another fountain, "The Arabian Nights."
In the present Academy Exhibition she has "Aquiesscence." She has exhibited at the Chamip de Mars Salon in Paris, and won the Shaw Memorial prize in this country. Mrs.
Burroughs was a member of the National Sculpture Society and an associate of the Nat'l Academy. She is survived, besides her husband, by a son and daughter.

George Albert Lewis.

George Albert Lewis, retired banker and artist, died Dec. 23 in Phila. at the age of 87. He showed oils and watercolors for many years.

J. R. Stuart.

James R. Stuart died at the age of 81 the week before Christmas in Madison, Wis.
He was a portrait painter and many of his works are in the Wisconsin State Capitol
and in the University of Wisconsin.

DEALERS' NOTES.

Mr. James D. Gill is at the Prince George Hotel, where he will be for several days while on his 39th pilgrimage among the studios of New York artists selecting paintings for the 39th annual of American paintings at Springfield Mass. Just before leaving Boston he sold a number of paintings,
among which were fine examples by Mr.
H. Howe and Henry Mosler.

Miss Brandus on the Stage.

Miss Yvonne Brandus, daughter of Mr. Edward Brandus, made her N. Y. debut on the stage, under the nom du theatre of Yvonne Kersac, in the play of "Georgette Lemeunier" at the Theatre Francais (Berkeley Lyceum), in this city, on Monday evening last. Although cast for only a small part, Miss Brandus proved her possession of dramatic ability, and her debut was a successful one.

Lewis Buys Dodge Miniature.

The miniature of Andrew Jackson, by J.
W. Dodge, sold at a recent sale at Stan V.
Henkels, Phila., for $459. was purchased by President John Lewis of the Pa. Academy.

CHICAGO.

An exhibition of the paintings from the French section in the Palace of Fine Arts at the San Francisco Exposition is on in the Art Institute, and is in charge of Mrs. Ethel Quinton Mason, of Buffalo, who so gracefully presided over the French Pavilion at the Exposition. Portraits sent by the National Society of Portrait Painters, the paintings by Hovsep Pushman, and a collection of woodcuts, prints and etchings by Helen Hyde, are also all on view at the Institute.

The Institute officials are arranging the Frank W. Gunsaulus Hall of Industrial Art, made possible by Mr. and Mrs. William H. Miner's recent gift of $50,000 for the purpose. This Hall is to be made an important center of American accomplishment in industrial art. The Munger collection will be increased by a number of paintings, and the gallery it occupies will be re-decorated, to carry out the conditions accompanying the bequest of $100,000 from the estate of the late Albert Munger. And there are other important obligations with which the officials must also comply.

According to statistics, more than a million visitors strolled through the Institute galleries during the past year.

In the Academy of Fine Arts, of which Mr. Carl N. Wertz is director, 250 modern posters, loaned by Mr. Henry L. Sparks, President of the Park Bank of N. Y., were exhibited last week. Edward Penfield, F. G. Cooper, Gordon Grant, Helen Dryden, Robert Wildhack, Jules Guerin, H. B. Eddy, Adolph Treidler, F. E. Schoonover, J. C. Lydenhecker, J. E. Sheridan and Maxwell Parrish were represented in the American group. Among the foreign artists represented were Henri Meunier, Ludwig Hohlwein, Eugene Grasse, Julius Klinger, Aubrey Beardsley, F. Brangwyn, A. Mucha and Dudley Hardy. Belgian, Spanish, Austrian, Russian, Italian, Dutch, English, French and German artists were prominent in the foreign group.

Local Art Commission Buys Art.

The Chicago Art Commission, established through the efforts of Carter H. Harrison during the last term of his office as mayor, assisted by the Council, recently purchased two etchings by Earl H. Reed, "Laying Down the Law" and "Heralds of the Storm." The Commission also purchased an oil, "Morning at the Kasba, Tangier," by Walter Ufer, and John Stacey's oil, "The Hills of Belvedere," a glowing California scene. These pictures are now with the collection at the Helen C. Pierce school. The Commission keeps its collection on public view the year round, and gives special opportunities of exhibition to the public schools. The Commission includes Carter H. Harrison, Frank A. Werner, Frank G. Logan, Wilson Irvine, W. Victor Higgins, William O. Godwin, Arthur J. Eddy and Wallace L. De Wolf.

Frank A. Werner, portrait and landscape painter, has finished several commissions for the Sigma Chi Fraternity, and these are on show in his Pearson Street studio. The portraits are of Col. Benjamin P. Runkle, U. S. A.; Daniel William Cooper, LL.D., founder of the Sigma Chi Fraternity, and the late Professor William L. Dudley, of the Vanderbilt University, who had much to do with the organization of the fraternity.

New Art Gallery Opens.

The Artists Mart of America, Inc., Mrs. Jane Palmer, Pres't, is holding an exhibition of the works of early American artists, and have been fortunate to secure the collection of some important early American works from a collector through whom it has secured the gallery of the Eureka Art Co., 56 W. 39 St., for the exhibition to begin Monday, Jan. 10, and to last a fortnight.

Among the works shown are examples of Thomas Cole, Clinton Ogilvie, Davis Johnson, Thomas Doughty, J. F. Kensett, J. F. Cropsey, R. W. Hubbard, Asher B. Durand, Daniel Huntington, W. S. Haseltine, J. M. Falconer, H. D. Shattuck, Edwin White, D. M. Carter, H. Herzog, Arthur Quartley, Wm. Bradford, W. T. Richards, Ver Bryck, J. Fairman, Blythe and Rockwell. There are also works by later American artists such as W. Gedney Bunce, George H. McCord, Henry P. Smith, Walter Gay, Frank De Haven, Frank Green, N. Briganti and Gilbert Gaul.

The Eureka Art Gallery is showing at the same address works by modern European artists, as well as old pictures attributed to polo, Jordaens, J. B. Oudry, John Constable, Sir George Hayter, Angelica Kaufman and Charles Wauters.

Buy Howard Pyles.

The Wilmington Fine Arts Society has purchased from Scribner & Co., of this city, 68 oils by the late Howard Pyle. They are now in Wilmington and will be exhibited this month.

BOSTON.

From the exhibitions of the current week the gallery trotter carries away with him a sense of calm and dignity. In Joseph De Camp's admirable portrait show at the Guild may be seen the apogee of modern Puritanism—for, if there is any Puritanism left in America, it is certainly to be found in a certain type of cultivated Boston "gentleman." It is an austere, rather than a genial, type, impressing one with its unswerving rectitude, not to say smug hypocrisy. In it the artist has found inspiration for some of his best work, which seems to be not so much painting as incisive and masterly character analysis. One of the finest and truest of these analyses is the portrait of Dr. F. C. Shattuck, of the Harvard Medical School. Besides this, the portraits of Benjamin A. Kimball, Gen. Charles H. Taylor, Francis I. Amory, Frank G. Webster, Arthur F. Estabrook and Robert Saltonstall and son are included in a very goodly showing of substantial names. Meanwhile, a rather frivolous contrast to this exhibition of weight and worth is to be found in the general gallery of the Guild, where the artist members disport themselves merrily, so to speak, in a series of "amusing" contributions.

Geo. Inness' Show at Vose's.

A most significant exhibition has opened at Vose's Gallery—a collection of the works of America's master landscapist, George Inness, marking the progressive development of his art from youth to ma-

PITTSBURGH.

Some 411 oils presented by the French and Swedish Governments at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, will be exhibited in Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, April 27, Founder's Day, and during May and June, Director John W. Beatty of the institute, just returned from a trip to Cala., made the arrangements while there. At the same time will be shown a collection of 40 British paintings.

The entire French collections of 230 works and the collection of 81 paintings representing the national collection of Luxembourg and exhibited by the French Government, will be included in the exhibit. There are 311 paintings in both French collections.

Modern Art Included.

The more general collection, which was shown in the Fine Arts Palace in San Francisco, is representative of the latest period of French art and includes works by many of the contributors to the Institute's international exhibitions. It is important in that it represents contemporaneous French art.

In addition to these two important French collections, arrangements were made for the exhibition of the entire Swedish collection, numbering 100 paintings and 50 art objects, including statuary.

There is also to be exhibited at the institute at an early date, a memorial collection of paintings representing the life work of John W. Alexander. Mrs. Alexander is co-operating with the view of securing Mr.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Dec. 28, 1915.

The art work that is making the greatest stir in art circles just now is Augustus John's "Portrait of Col. Smyth" at the New English Art Club, a piece of work which combines the most masterly execution with an equally striking grasp of character. Judged by academic standards, the picture defies any number of accepted canons; the paint is laid on in a manner peculiarly the artist's own, the canvas has none of that perfection of finish which is approved of at Burlington House, and yet there the portrait stands, a model of what one needs in portrait-painting, direct, strong, living! Many of the shortcomings of the exhibition have been atoned for in this one picture, which has so much to say and says it so well. Other good things are C. J. Holmes' landscapes and McEvoy's portrait of Mrs. Charles McEvoy.

As is customary with the exhibitions held at the Burlington Fine Arts Club, the present show of pictures and furniture is of a high order. Of the latter a 16th Century credence cupboard, lent by Sir Coleridge Grove is a fine example of the carving done in North France about that period, while an English oak cupboard, of the same epoch and lent by Mr. George Lockett, is interesting for purposes of comparison. Among the pictures is a beautiful Guardi, discovered by Mr. Herbert Cook in a collection at Petrograd. This is an impressive landscape, exceptionally fine in color and composition. Mr. Robert Ross lends a panel by Giovanni di Paolo of great charm, and among the Flemish Old Masters is a "Virgin and Child" by Roger van der Weyden, which, although it has been otherwise attributed by certain critics, is an exquisite example of that master's art. Not the least attraction in the exhibition is the delightful arrangement of the room, which enables the visitor to enjoy the exhibition in the same frame of mind as if he were viewing it at the house of a friend, where all the surroundings are in harmony and the very atmosphere sympathetic. It is no doubt on this account that one invariably leaves these exhibitions in Savile Row, refreshed rather than tired, after the manner induced by the ordinary show.

Some Wigan Sale Prices.

The Wigan sale at Christie's resulted in some very fair prices for modern art. A thousand guineas for Millais' "Idyll of 1745" was by no means a disappointing price, notwithstanding the fact that at the height of the painter's fame, it fetched four times that sum. The same may be said of the 1,100 gns. paid by Mr. Eugene Cremetti for a pair of panels by Alma-Tadema. The general impression gained from the sale was that even if the Victorian painters have (perhaps temporarily) declined in favor, theirs is an honorable decline and by no means an undignified fall, such as one has witnessed in the case of others who have enjoyed a sensational vogue and ultimately dwindled to a mere shadow of their former estate. It was noticeable that the war was not responsible for any further lowering of prices, Victorian pictures showing, before July, 1914, no higher figures than those reached today.

Yet another leading dealer who is leaving England for a sojourn in the States, is Mr. Arthur Greatorex, one of the directors of the firm of Messrs. Dowdeswell and Dowdeswell. He is sailing early next month and will take with him a number of new publications issued by the firm.

Interesting Salesroom Items.

A series of eleven drawings depicting the manufacture of munitions at Woolwich a couple of centuries ago are shortly to be sold at Hodgson's. These are especially interesting as being the earliest representation of the Royal Laboratory and as showing the arrangements then in force. Moreover, it seems particularly appropriate that these early Woolwich drawings should be disposed of at Hodgson's, a salesroom which first opened its doors to the public for the sale of books two days before the Battle of Waterloo was fought and won. Another salesroom item which owes its merit to its historical associations rather than to any intrinsic beauty is the portrait plaque in silver of Charles, Prince of Wales, dated 1616 and executed by Simon Passe. This was recently bought at Sotheby's by Messrs. Spink for the high price of £43, the example being an exceptionally fine one.

Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley of Hanover Square will shortly conduct the sale of the art collection of the late Mr. Salomon's, which includes several portraits of the early English school, together with a very problematical Watteau.

L. G.-S.

Gaetano Capone has painted a portrait of Miss Marguerite St. Clair as the Palm Beach girl in the Ziegfeld "Midnight Frolic." It hangs in the foyer of the New Amsterdam Theatre.

BEACH AT ETRETAT
Eugene Boudin

In the Coming Hugo Reisinger Sale.

It is a very interesting showing, from the carefully finished landscape of his early youth down to the late product of his genius—the gracious and poetic "Eventide, Tarpon Springs, Fla.," where detail is lost in the broadest of generalization. This picture is a combination of haze, bare trees, and a russet glowing sky—in short, a few of the great primal verities are here selected and treated with the finest of imagination. It might have been breathed rather than painted. In the same class are two or three fine "moonlights," and there is also an interesting view of the "Roman Campagna," an early work.

Miss Mary Helen Carlisle exhibits at another local gallery, her familiar English garden paintings, which have been seen and noticed to weariness in New York but are a seeming novelty to the Bostonese.

John Doe.

PROVIDENCE.

George W. Whitaker, the Dean of Providence artists, is holding his annual exhibition at the Art Club. In a sense this is a retrospective display as it includes excellent examples done in Mr. Whitaker's earlier period, together with many recent canvases of a decidedly romantic nature. Always in sympathy with the Barbizon school and with our own earlier American art as exemplified in Wyant, Inness, Vedder, Sartain and their contemporaries, Mr. Whitaker still keeps fully abreast of the times as a single glance at his "Meadow Brook," a pearly toned grey canvas, will show.

Other important canvases are "The Mill Wheel," "Fontainebleau Forest," "On the Hudson" and a delightful series of Venetian pictures and several wood interiors and poetical sunsets. At the opening there were three canvases sold, "Venice—Sunrise," "Approaching Storm" and "Autumn Afternoon."

At the Rhode Island School of Design an exhibition of paintings by Wilbur Dean Hamilton is on, to Jan. 26.

Alexander's most important works, and she will contribute as many of his paintings as were left in her care at his death.

Arrangements have also been made for an exhibition at the Institute early in February of an important group of paintings by Charles W. Hawthorne.

Edward Duff Balken will assume the duties of curator of prints in the department of fine arts, and plans are being made for several important exhibitions of prints. Mr. Balken was largely instrumental in organizing the Pittsburgh Etching Club. The department possesses nearly 1,000 prints, but it is the purpose to enlarge and broaden this collection so as to make it representative of the arts of engravings, etching and lithography.

PHILADELPHIA.

Central headquarters for art, dramatic and musical organizations combined under the title of "The Phila. Art Alliance" are now being considered by a committee of prominent women known as leaders of these different lines of movement in the direction of co-operation and unity of effort to the same end. The committee consists of Mes. William Yorke Stevenson, President of the Plays and Players; Leopold Stokowski, Felix E. Schelling and Miss Violet Oakley. Tentative plans have been prepared for what will be known as the "Shakespeare Memorial Building," a six story structure, to be erected on a site opposite Rittenhouse Square at 1823-25 Walnut St. and which will include an entrance court designed as a memorial to the immortal Bard.

RUBENS FOR A LOAF OF BREAD.

A recent despatch from Cincinnati to the Chicago "Herald," states that Samuel Parken, a delicatessen dealer, of the latter city, received recently a picture, now declared to be a Rubens, by Chicago "experts," for a loaf of bread. The work is said to have been saved from the Chicago Fire.

THE HUGO REISINGER SALE.
The catalog of the 194 paintings and the 64 etchings and colored prints owned by the late Hugo Reisinger, handsomely printed and well and copiously illustrated, issued this week by the American Art Association, which will conduct the exhibition to open in the American Art Galleries, No. 6 E. 23 St., on Thursday next, Jan. 13, and the sale, to take place in the Plaza Ballroom on the evenings of Jan. 18 and 19 next, emphasizes the importance of the event, which has already been noted in the ART NEWS.
The German pictures in the collection, and which are most representative of modern German art, were to have been sold in Berlin, but for the war. They will interest American art lovers, and it is probable that, despite the war, many will be purchased by German houses through agents.
It is unnecessary this week to give any detailed notice of the pictures, as the exhibition's opening next week will give better opportunity for such notice. Suffice it to say that the collection is especially strong—outside of the modern Germans—in representative examples of the French Impressionists and their contemporaries, and of modern Americans. Mr. Reisinger had a good inborn art taste and discrimination. He was known as an "intelligent" buyer and his collection is well balanced in the works of those men whom he especially favored, and who were the leaders and among the strongest of their respective schools. The sale will be the first large and important one of the present season and all art lovers are advised to attend the exhibition next week.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.
The sale at auction of the large and important collection of old and modern pictures formed by Mr. Catholina Lambert, and which will include upwards of 400 works, as already announced in the ART NEWS, will take place in the Plaza ballroom on the evenings of Feb. 21-24 next, inclusive, following a week's exhibition in the American Art Galleries, to begin Feb. 12.
The sale will be an event in art circles, and already collectors from all over the country are arranging to attend it, while orders are now being received from Europe.
One of the most interesting of the old pictures in the collection, the "Portrait of a Man" given to Franz Hals, reproduced on the first page of this issue, will give an idea of the general character of this portion of the collection.
The work of preparing the pictures for exhibition and sale is rapidly progressing at Buena Vista castle, Mr. Lambert's beautiful residence on the heights overlooking Paterson, N. J., on the west, and requires a small army of photographers, catalog writers, cleaners and frame restorers. With 400 pictures to take down from the walls of the gallery, look over and clean, and with the added work of the repair and regilding of frames, etc., some idea of the size and importance of the collection can be obtained.

Coming Matthews Picture Sale.
A small but interesting collection of paintings by old and modern masters, consigned by Mr. Nicholas M. Matthews of Baltimore and other owners, will be placed on exhibition in the Anderson Galleries on Monday, preliminary to the sale on Monday eve., Jan. 17. Among the painters represented are Constable, Morland, Frans Snyders, Hart, Twachtman, Keith, Berne-Bellecour, J. Francis Murphy, Weir and other well-known Americans. The painting by Snyders is the "Dogs Attacking a Stag," formerly in the collection of the King of Naples and Spain.

Daniel Huntington's Library Sale.
The late Daniel Huntington, for many years president of the National Academy, left an interesting collection of books which will be placed on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, Jan. 12, preliminary to the sale at auction on the after. of Monday-Wednesday, Jan. 17-19. Among the books are many fine works on art, published in America, England, France and Italy; some important books on architecture, numerous dramatic works and publications on the stage, finely illustrated books and various standard sets. There is also a large number of Huntington's sketch books, containing thousands of pencil sketches of scenery, portraits and copies.

Sale of English Autographs.
On Monday and Tuesday after., next Jan. 10-11, the Anderson Galleries will sell all that remains of the famous John Boyd Thacher collections of Autographs, namely Part VII, confined to the letters, documents and Mss., of famous men and women of England and France. A four-page letter by Shelley is of the highest interest; a letter by Wordsworth, unpublished, is largely an autobiography, and there is also an unpublished letter by Swift. There are more than 400 lots in the catalog.

Fine Books Sold at Anderson's.
At the opening, on Tuesday, of a sale at the Anderson Galleries, a number of first editions and specimens of fine bindings were sold for $4,322.60. Mr. S. W. Long paid $345 for the Kelmscott Press Chancer. For Esquemeling's book on pirates, Amsterdam, 1678, Mr. George D. Smith gave $295. He also paid $180 for a "Compleat Angler" bound by Riviere; and $105 each for the

NEW WORKS AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The new exhibit, in the Palace of Fine Arts at San Francisco, has been called, not alone the largest, but the finest in the U. S., although not over a tenth of the works obtained in the East by Director J. E. D. Trask were ready for hanging on the opening day, Jan. 1. The following is a partial list of those who are represented by canvases and etchings, in the new collection gathered to take the place of works withdrawn from the art gallery: Richard Andrew (1), George Bellows (16), Frank W. Benson (3), Arthur B. Carles (4), Emil Carlsen (2), F. J. Chambrlain (1), Morgan Colt (2), Joseph de Camp (3), Gertrude Fiske (2), Philip L. Hale (2), William A. Kirkpatrick (1), Leon Kroll (2), Anna C. Ladd (2), Hayley Lever (4), Wilton Lockwood (3), Carl J. Nordell (2), Emma P. Nordell (7), George L. Noyes (8), John Marin (27), Elizabeth O. Paxton (1), William M. Paxton (2), Lilla C. Perry (2), Francis Picabia (7), Marion L. Pooke (3), Marion Powers (1), James Preston (3), Gretchen W. Rogers (4), Charles Rosen (2), Denman W. Ross (1), Arthur P. Spear (1), Eugene Speicher (3), Robert Spencer (5), Leslie P. Thompson (11), M. Bradish Titcomb (7), Helen M. Turner (1), F. C. Warren (4), and Charles H. Wodbury (37). Several of the number in the last case being groups of 10 panels.

PRIZES FOR WAR ARTISTS.

The Journal Pays de France, which is responsible for the exhibition at the Tuileries of works produced at the front, has organized a prize competition, at which 100 prizes, 13 of which are of 2,000 francs ($200) each, will be distributed to the exhibitors. The award will be by a jury consisting among others of General Niox, the director of the army museum; M. Léonce Bénédite of the Luxembourg, M. Bonnat of the Institute, president of the Society La Fraternité des Artistes Français; M. Armand Dayot, inspector general of fine arts; M. Gustave Geffroy, administrator of the Gobelins, and M. Frantz Jourdain, president of the Autumn Salon.

OILS FOR DELGADO MUSEUM.

Mr. Chapman Hyams of New Orleans recently purchased, on the advice of Mr. Henry Walters of Baltimore, from the display in the Art Palace at the San Francisco Exposition, the well known "Masquerade Ball, Paris Opera House," by Gaston La Touche, and "The Lace Makers" by Joseph Bail. These pictures, loaned by Knoedler & Co. to the Exposition, will be added to the collection bequeathed by Mr. Hyams' mother last year to the Delgado Museum of New Orleans.

GALLATIN GIVES DRAWINGS.

Mr. Albert E. Gallatin has given the Metropolitan Museum five drawings by American artists not represented there and one by Boutet de Monvel, the last in sepia. The American works are two beach scenes by W. J. Glackens, two by John Sloan, one a Paul de Kock study, and the other a figure in black chalk and a sepia of several figures by Boardman Robinson.

ART DAMAGED IN VENICE.

An Associated Press dispatch from Venice, Italy, says:

"An opportunity to see the destructive effect of the bomb raids on Venice was given the Associated Press correspondent when an inspection, under official escort, was made of the havoc and ruin in the famous old Church of the Scalzi, one of the art monuments of the world, now a wreck, with its roof blown off, its massive walls tottering and the famous ceiling fresco by Tiepolo, valued at a million francs, lying in heaps of rubbish in the ruins of the building. There have been three bomb raids on Venice, but this was the worst, and the historic church bore the full brunt of it.

"The facade, fronting the Grand Canal, is intact, and three sculptured figures standing along the cornice remain untouched. But back of the figures the roof sags away in a curved line downward, and then up again to the rear wall, as though some giant hand had reached down and torn out the whole top of the church, leaving only the front and the rickety side walls still intact. Workmen can be seen high above, beginning the work of salvage and repair, and heavy timbers are being laced across the gaping hole left by the bomb.

SELL TWO TAPESTRIES FOR $95,000.

It is announced that William Baumgarten & Co., 715 Fifth Ave., have sold to a N. Y. collector who owns a number of paintings and tapestries for $95,000, two XVIII Century Gobelins tapestries, from their present exhibition, described in last week's ART NEWS. The most important, the "Europa" example, 10 ft. 2 in. by 10 ft. 9 in., shows Jupiter asleep, while Mercury is preparing to summon the maiden, who is not shown in the scene as she is in the similar subject by Oudry. Cupid and the bull appear in the background. The second example shows "Diana and Endymion" and measures 7 ft. 9 in. by 10 ft.

MORE HOTEL DROUOT SALES.

The "Gazette de l'Hotel Drouot" calls attention to the fact that "a manifest sign of the resumption of business is, as we foresaw, the growing increase of the number of sales at the Hotel Drouot."

BY VERSPRONCK—NOT HALS.

Through a regrettable error, due to a wrong endorsement of a photograph—the reproduction of a fine example of Johannes C. Verspronck, a "Portrait of a Man" in the Catholina Lambert collection soon to be sold, published on the front page of the ART NEWS last week, was credited to Franz Hals.

FRENCH ART EXHIBIT CLOSURES.

The exhibition of the 100 pictures and sketches, contributed by the members of the French Societe Fraternelle des Artistes, to their fellow members of the American Artists Committee of One Hundred, together with Besnard's large Mural of "Peace" and another by the same painter, in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, and which opened on Sunday evening, Jan. 2, and was to continue through this week, came to an untimely end last Saturday night, owing to the poor attendance and consequent paucity of receipts. The display was organized for the benefit of French artists and their families suffering from the war's effects. Its failure to draw the New York art public is much to be regretted, as the organizers of the exhibition, and especially Mr. W. Franklyn Paris, Secretary of the French Museum of Art, worked hard and faithfully for its success.

Various reasons are ascribed for the non-success of the exhibition, as also of the lectures by prominent artists and architects, including William M. Chase, Gutzon Borglum, Henry R. Marshall, E. H. Blashfield and Paul Barlett, which were given as announced on the afternoons of last week before pathetically small audiences, but the best explanation would seem to be that the prices of admission to the exhibition and

THE REISINGER COLLECTION.

The 172 oils, 23 watercolors and gouaches, 64 etchings and color prints, forming the collection of the late Hugo Reisinger, are now on exhibition in the American Art Galleries, No. 6 East 23 St., previous to their sale at auction—the oils in the Plaza ballroom on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next, Jan. 18-19, and the watercolors and prints at the American Art Galleries on Thursday evening next, Jan. 20.

As has already been said in the ART NEWS, the collection as a whole and in many of its individual examples is one of the best, if not the best, as representing the earlier and later modern schools of Germany, France and America, that has ever come upon the American market, and it is needless to say that there will be a large attendance at the sale of collectors and art lovers, and some keen competition for many of the more representative examples.

A "Clean" Collection.

Mr. Reisinger, although a German by birth, and while he retained a strong predilection for the art of his native land, although a resident here for many years—was also a lover and admirer of modern French and American art, and purchased, through a course of years, with knowledge and discrimination, so that his collection is thoroughly representative of the modern painters whom he favored. He was also a careful buyer and collector and his collection is singularly free from works of doubtful authenticity. It is what may be called an unusually "clean" collection, and while there may be differences of opinion as to the relative merits or qualities of some examples of noted painters, there can be little questioning of the validity of these examples, and in most cases of their representative character. Of necessity, modern pictures, many of whose painters are still living can be more easily "Expertised" than those painted by masters dead and gone—but, never the less, collections, as "clean" and attractive as Mr. Reisinger's seldom come to the auction block.

The Modern Germans.

The German modern painters represented in the collection number some 56 and include good to superior examples of such noted painters as F. Althaus (2), von Bartels (3), Bocklin (1), Bracht (1), E. Claus (1), Crodel (1), Dill (1), A. Feudel (1), C. Feudel (1), Fleischer (1), Gëbhardt (1), Habermann (1) von Hoffman (2), Hollman (2), Hubner (1), Jank (1), Kampf (2), Keller (1), Klinger (2), Kuehl (3), Leibl (1), Leistikow (1), Lenbach (1), Liebermann (8), Meissner (1), Menzel (2), Mohrbutter (1), Munch (1), Munzer (1), Oppler (1), Osswald (1), Ostermayer (1), Piltz (1), Putz (3), Reinicke (6), Scinnerer (1), Shonleber (2), Schramm-Zittau (3), Schuch (2), Slevogt (3), Struck (3), Stuck (1), Thoma (1), Trubner (2), von Uhde (1), Valkenburg (1), and Zuegel (5).

These pictures would, of course, have had a better market in Germany before the war than here, and in fact it had been planned to hold the sale of them in Berlin, had it not been for the war. It will be interesting to see whether the American market will take them at any good prices, save the examples of the men known here such as Lenbach, Bocklin, Liebermann, Leibl, Menzel, and Stuck, or whether, even with the war still on, they will go back through orders from German dealers and collectors to Germany.

Dutch and Swedish Pictures.

There are some good Dutch and Swedish pictures in the collection and of course the examples, both in oil and black and white, of Zorn, will find ready buyers, while Larsen, Liljefors, the Swedes may sell well, as will the examples of the Dutch Artzeniuses, Jacob and William Maris, Mastenbroek, Mauve, Israels, de Bock, Gorter, Mesdag, Sande-Bakhuysen and Van der Windt, while Fritz Thaulow is represented by 2 examples.

Good French Canvases.

Among the modern Frenchmen there are examples, fair to fine of Boudin (3), Cazin (2), Corot (1), Degas (2), Caro-Delvaile (1), Diaz (1), Dupre (1), Fantin-Latour (3), Fromentin (1), La Touche (2), Harnpignes (1), Isabey (1), Jacque (1), Jongkind (1), Lepine (1), L'Hermitte (1), Menard (1), Millet (2), Monet (2), Pissaro (3), Raffaelli (2), Renoir (2), Sisley (1), and of the Belgian, Alfred Steen (4). There are a few Italian moderns, notably Mancini (1), Simoni (1) and of the Spaniard Sorolla, a fine typical outdoor bath scene, and of the Hungarian, Munkacsy (1).

OLD ARTIST'S WORK A GIFT.

Mrs. Helen Miller Wellens, of Ardmore, Pa., has presented to the St. James' Episcopal Church, of Lancaster, a picture painted by her great-grandfather, Jacob Eicholtz, who died in 1842, called "The Crucifixion." The picture was presented by Mrs. Wellens as a memorial to her grandmother, a daughter of the artist, who lived in Lancaster.

The work of Jacob Eicholtz is well-known to art lovers.

lectures even while it included tea, namely $2, was too high, and chilled the general art public, while the wealthier element of art lovers were too busy with social duties in this gay season to attend art exhibitions and afternoon art talks.

The fact that the pictures and sketches shown, while dainty and decorative, were, with few exceptions, studio memoranda, valuable as souvenirs, but slight, played its part in the surprising apathy of the art public towards this deserving display. It was wisely decided to abandon the exhibition, and also not to send the 100 pictures and sketches on a tour of the country, as had been planned, but to distribute them among those who had drawn them by lot.

The Besnard Murals may go on tour soon.

CAN'T GET BACK IN CLUB.

Supreme Court Justice Ford recently denied the application of Mrs. Lillian Baynes Griffin, photographer and writer, wife of Walter Griffin for reinstatement in the Camera Club, from which she was ousted last summer. She was said to have violated repeatedly the club's rules and to have been in arrears. Mrs. Griffin says she was put out because she would not follow President Frank S. Harsting's orders, and tell one of the members he was a liar and traitor. The judge thought the club trial had been rather loosely conducted, but that there was not sufficient reason for him to order a reinstatement.

A plan to move the Art Palace of the Pana-Pacific Exposition to the civic centre of San Francisco has been defeated.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Copley and Sargent at Museum.

The chief attraction at the press view on Tuesday, at the Metropolitan Museum, were a recently acquired and important example of Copley and a group of works by John S. Sargent, formed of an oil painting—a Tyrolean interior, and ten watercolors. The first was bought from the Hearn Fund. The Copley, whose sale to the Museum was announced exclusively on Dec. 18 in the ART NEWS, is a three-quarter length seated portrait of Mrs. Mary Bowers, daughter of Joseph Sherburne, which comes from Mrs. Mary Isabel Jenckes, the widow of the great, great grandson of the subject. Mrs. Bowers is shown holding a spaniel in her lap. The picture is a work of much distinction and in remarkably fine condition. The watercolors of Sargent make a brilliant showing, in one of the galleries in connection with others works in the same medium by Homer and Brabazon, owned by the Institution. In this room are also two loaned paintings in monochrome by Puvis de Chavannes, very distinguished early examples painted during the siege of Paris, when the artist was serving on the ramparts. They are single figures of women with distant views of Paris, one called "The Carrier Pigeon" and the other "The Dove" were sent in 1872 to aid the sufferers by the Chicago Fire and are loaned by Mrs. James R. Jesup.

There is also shown a highly interesting collection of modern drawings, owned by the museum, including examples of Matisse and fellow "moderns" among others.

Besides the Copley and Sargents in the recent accessions room are displayed a superb XVIII century Japanese screen by Koyetsu, one of a pair, the other being owned by Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, some Japanese and Chinese ceramics given by Mrs. Russell Sage and others, a miniature portrait of Mrs. Robert Watts by A. Dickenson, which is a purchase, and textile gifts by Sir Charles and Lady Waldstein, Mrs. R. T. Auchmuty and Miss A. S. Foshay. In a class room there is shown a collection of drawings by children, who studied in the Boston Museum under Miss Deborah Kallen.

In the absence of Director Robinson, who was slightly indisposed, Secretary Henry W. Kent called attention, in addition to other features, that with the present issue the bulletin begins its 11th year. The opening article by R. H. T. Halsey is on the Judge A. T. Clearwater Collection of Colonial silver owned by the museum.

Old and Modern Dutch Pictures.

The firm of Regnard & Co., of Amsterdam, has opened a New York branch at 57 W. 49 St., which is in charge of Mr. R. Broeke, a member of the firm, and Baron H. W. van Till. There are on view there, among other works, both ancient and modern, an important picture of "The Resurrection" by Caspar de Crayer, and a highly interesting Abraham Hondius, an "Adoration of the Shepherds."

There are country fairs attributed to Jan Steen and H. van Rootvelt, and another by F. de Braakelaer. There is a Wouwermans "Landscape" and a "Cavalry Fight" by Simon Dow. The fine art of Boosboom is shown in a "Church Interior" and besides some interesting early drawings by Israels, there is his "Woodcutters." A similar subject is by Mauve. "Christ with the Scribes" is attributed to Vroomans.

Highly interesting are a little woman's portrait by David Bles, the spirited drawing by Bakwerkorff called the "Unexpected Visit" and Verelst's "The Festival of Victory." Others represented are H. Vaarberg, De John, Maurik, De Groot, Ockaa, De Lariviere, De Budt, Rink and Vaarberg.

Landscapes at Reinhardt's.

There are two new exhibitions at Reinhardt's Galleries, 556 Fifth Ave., to Jan. 29. Downstairs one finds colorful, sunny landscapes and figures in the open by Frank Townsend Hutchens. Sparkling snow, brilliantly tinted foliage under an autumn sun, a graceful little nude by a stream in summer time, and women and flowers out of doors predominate.

Portraits by E. Gowdy Baker.

Portraits in watercolor by Elizabeth Gowdy Baker are shown in the upstairs Gallery at Reinhardt's. The sitters seem unaware of observation and are very much alive. Among the most interesting is a portrayal of Mrs. James S. Clarkson, attired in cream lace with pearls and a pale turquoise blue scarf; the delicate greens in the background complete a delicate color ensemble, suited to the type of woman. A delightful interpretation of youth and innocence is the artist's conception of Miss Esther Nash, with golden hair, blue-grey eyes and a wonderfully sweet expression, and others particularly appealing are of Mrs. A. R. McMichael and of Mr. Henry Gaines Hawn.

"Modernists" at the Gamut Club.

Ten "moderns" are exhibiting at the Gamut Club, 69 W. 46 St., to Jan. 23. A visitor even, if most willing to be convinced, would surely be at a loss to decipher Marsden Hartley's "No. 47," and the non-committal caption leads one to suspect that the perpetrator himself didn't know when the spasm in which he produced the work was over, and what it was all about. Overhearing a visitor suggest that it might be the interior of a stomach, I wondered if it could be symbolical of gnawing hunger, which it most suggests. Its size, vivid color and conspicuous placing however, force one to ponder over it.

Paul Bohland's still lifes are exquisite, the flowers are delightful in treatment and color, and poetic and novel in composition. A pencil drawing of a nude by Andrew Dasberg, well expresses movement and power. John Marin's landscapes can be recognized as such and indicate a good color sense.

With the exception of a gorgeous arrangement of Oriental poppies, against deep blue drapery, Lee Simonson's canvases are overcrowded and badly composed. Arthur G. Dove gets a soft rich tone if nothing else, appealing, in his scientifically organized landscape motives.

Alfred Maurer sends his usual conceptions of nature, and A. Walkowitz contributes three drawings in black and white and two in color, these abstract ensembles in which all is not absolutely essential is eliminated are exceedingly interesting demonstrations of the theory he advocates.

Works by Warshawsky.

A painter of talent is A. G. Warshawsky, a Pennsylvanian, long resident in Paris, who is showing 22 of his works at the Braun Galleries, 13 W. 46 St. His work has some crudities but shows much promise. A follower of the pleinairists, he is a good, if rather vivid colorist, and sometimes misses his values. He is apt to be painterly but is successful with his effects of atmosphere. He shows figure works, views of Paris and French landscape subjects. The figure subjects show two young women and a child in the sunlight and an old woman. The views of Paris are attractive and include a quay view and one of the Gardens of the Luxembourg. There are fine atmosphere and color in "Late Afternoon, Morbihan," and "Dernieres Feuilles" is effective. The group of boy bathers, called "Sun Worshipers," is quite remarkable, though rather forced in color.

Portraits and Landscapes by Joseph Boston. At the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, a group of oils and pastels by Joseph Boston, on view to Jan. 29, makes an entertaining exhibition.

There are landscapes, inspired by the splendor of the Adirondacks and some portraits of those of men, are vigorously treated and convincing, and the others, delicate interpretations of femininity, amid surroundings, charmingly quiet in color and nice in arrangement. Five of the canvases, including "The Au Sable Valley," one of the strongest and most impressive of the open air subjects, have been loaned by Mr. Ludwig Nissen.

Gothic Panels at Arden Gallery.

At the Arden Gallery, 599 Fifth Ave., twelve Gothic panels and four doors are displayed. These seventeenth century English wood carvings are exceptionally fascinating and noteworthy examples. They were discovered in an old house at Worcester, between the outer wall and the inside plaster when the house, which had been condemned because it was undermined by the river, was torn down. Quaint figures, representative of the people and customs of the period, are the decorations, and the wood is still pretty well covered with bits of plaster.

Portraits of Lincoln.

There is a unique and exceedingly interesting group of oils at Bruno's Garrett, 58 Washington Sq., to Jan. 24. The artist is Capt. George Edward Hall, a personal friend of Lincoln and his mother, Nancy Hanks. Numerous portraits of both are included in the exhibition. They have been painted recently from sketches made from life when the Captain, now almost eighty, was a young man. There are landscapes, painted in the vicinity of Rockport, Mass., and mountains and splendid trees of Santa Barbara. California furnished inspiration for most of the nature studies. There are baskets and varied arrangements of oranges and other fruits, amazingly realistic. The portraits, all of Lincoln and his mother, with the exception of one of the painter himself, are handled in such a manner that they suggest bas-reliefs in tinted clay. The effect obtained is astonishingly life-like, but would be much more vital if the heads had been painted life size or less, rather than twice or thrice as large.

At the Union League.

In the exhibition on at the Union League Club, paintings and sculptures are combined. The 16 canvases shown include four by Wm. R. Derrick, one, a large still life, of red dahlias against a light blue background. The landscapes are typically strong and true to nature—one, especially delightful in tone and composition exhales the very spirit of springtime.

Wm. T. Dannat's three canvases are characteristic out-door subjects. Carroll Beckwith has three examples, a head of a sleeping girl, one entitled "Destiny Contemplates the Ravages of War," and a composition showing two children, by a brook in summertime, and J. Robinson's depiction of autumn fruits, flowers and foliage, is skillfully painted and rich in tone. There are three landscapes by F. W. Kost, a little interior, pleasing in tone, by Walter Gay, and representative examples of the early American school by S. R. Gifford. The sculptors represented are Robert Aitken, who shows two small dancing figures in bronze, patined in green, and A. A. Weinman, who shows an Indian head and a small bust of Lincoln.

Shurtleff Memorial Exhibition.

A memorial exhibition of works by the late Roswell Morse Shurtleff, the veteran Academician, whose landscapes, and especially his paintings of forest and wood interiors brought him name and fame, and whose sudden death last winter so saddened a host of friends, and also admirers of his art, will open at the Lotos Club Gallery in West 57th street with a "stag" reception this evening, and will continue for a fortnight, with a possible extension of time. Ladies will be admitted on Monday to Wednesday next, inclusive, on invitation. This exhibition, notice of which will be made next week, is anticipated as an important event of the season.

Cornish (N. H.) Artists' Exhibit.

The first representative exhibition of artists associated with the Cornish, N. H., colony is on at Robinson Hall, Dartmouth College, filling the auditorium of the Little Theatre and five other rooms on the second floor of the building. One gallery is filled with fifteen bronzes by Augustus Saint-Gaudens, the founder of the colony, and an adjoining gallery is devoted to the work of his pupils and assistants who have become themselves sculptors. Another room is devoted to paintings by Maxfield Parrish and a fourth to photographs of gardens by Ellen Shipman and of houses and country places designed by Charles A. Platt. There are studies for mural paintings by Kenyon Cox and Barry Faulkner, and paintings, drawings, and miniatures by about forty artists.

Church's Art Coll'n Catalog.

There has been issued a fully and well-illustrated descriptive catalog of the highly interesting and valuable coll'n of pictures with religious subjects placed by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Walker in the auditorium and Sunday school rooms of the Guild Hall will offer at

Public dispersal on Thursday and Friday Evenings (Jan. 20 & 21) from 8.15 each evening

An exceptionally interesting aggregate collection of Foreign and American Oil Paintings pertaining to several well-known Estates—including (by executor's orders) the characteristic canvases gathered by the late Geo. A. Dowden, Esq., of Newark, N. J.—Adolph Schreyer, Daubigny, A. Marais, F. E. Church, Martin Rico, Tonetti and Ziem.

Bierstadt's Masterpiece, "The Marioposa Grove, Cal.," measuring 129 in. by 58 in., and property of Louis A. Biddle, Esq., of Philadelphia.

Characteristic examples of Daubigny, Boucher, Coypel, Rico and Dupré.

of the Hennepin Ave Methodist Church of Minneapolis. Beneath the tinted half tone plates is a brief biographical sketch of the painter, and on the opposite page, a description of his work. The preface is written by Mr. R. H. Adams. A list of the pictures was published in the ART NEWS of Jan. 8.

There are some new pictures hung on the walls of the Catherine Lorillard Wolf Club rooms, upstairs in Grace Church house. Intangible impressions by Ethel Louise Paddock are vigorously treated and promising. Lucile Lloyd shows a couple of pleasing little oils, a book plate—simple and effective—and a design for a stained glass window, subject The Annunciation. Sara K. Hunter's still life with flowers is a vivid and convincing note. Eleanor Duer Laroque and Ethel Harrington also exhibit.

BERLIN SCORES HARTLEY.

Marsden Hartley, in revenge possibly for the activities of German agents, provocateurs and acts, in this country has invaded Germany with his advanced decorative paintings and is holding an exhibition on the Pariser Platz, which strange to say hasn't been renamed as yet, and is about all of Paris that the Teutons have on hand at this time. One of Mr. Hartley's production pictures an "American War Correspondent in Action."

"A. G. H." in the Lokalanzeiger, defends the Fatherland with frenzied vigor and under the head of "A New American Misfit Genius," says:

"It's all rot, what has so far been painted—rot, rot, and again rot! Wretched daubers, pitiful daubers were they all, from Antonello da Messina down to Max Liebermann. I, I furnish the only real painting, Marsden Hartley, from Mixed Pickles in Bluffage, I. Marsden Hartley, from Mixed Pickles in Bluffage, I. Look, I take a brush in my hand—why, no, I take ten big brushes in my hand, stab them in my color pots and paint 'Characterizations of the Moment,' as I call them by my latest advertising phrase. Circles, wave lines, triangles, shreds, numbers, letters, even music notes I paint on the canvas in clean unmixed colors, blue, red, green, white, and black, just as the manufacturer furnishes them to me.

BOSTON.

Vernon Ellis, a vivid, young, plastic personality, breaks through the academic traditions in which Boston is still enmeshed with a sunny, vigorous little show at a local gallery. The artist chooses luxuriant nature in various phases as his subject. He rejoices in abundance, both of sun, color and tropical vegetation. Bermuda, where he spent last winter was a source of special inspiration, and a "Lily Field" on the banks of the St. George Bay, perhaps the most important picture in the present showing, epitomizes or contains the florescence of his rich temperament.

His pictures are rare in a riot of color, administered with the love and enthusiasm of a prodigal nature, yet fully controlled by an accurate sense of values, and a fine use of the deep accent in holding a canvas together. This is notably evident in the two canvases which introduce into an architectural setting characteristic of Bermuda, with its houses of white coral reef, a study of a black nude made from the interesting native type indigenous to the soil.

Mr. Ellis spends most of the year upon his estate at Plainfield, Mass., in a house of which he was both architect and builder surrounded by an immense flower garden, the whole set in the midst of a forest. His philosophy is intolerant of the culture that narrow rather than widens the horizon. He is a great student and spends his life studying philosophy. He does not work at painting as a craft believing that that attitude produces work that is sterile and powerless to move.

Activities at Vose Galleries.

Following the present exhibition of works by the late George Inness at the Vose Galleries, Boylston Street, will come a "one-man" show by Randall Davey. Of the ten Inness canvases shown all but two are the property of the Messrs. Vose, and are excellent examples. One of the landscapes passed through this dealer's hand many years ago and was rebought recently at an advanced price.

St. Botolph Club Shows Seyffert Portraits.

Leopold Seyffert of Phila. has a "one-man" show of 23 recent oils at the St. Botolph Club. This exploits very evenly the various phases of the young painter's work. One of its most vital ones is the character portraits done in Holland several years ago. Of this epoch he shows the remarkably rendered portrait of an old Volendam woman grinding coffee, which took honorable mention at the Carnegie Institute three years ago. Of his Spanish period, Mr. Seyffert shows the large canvas containing a group of Spanish peasants, which was a feature of the last exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery. Diametrically opposed is the highly finished, professional portrait of Charlton Yarnall, of Philadelphia, so much admired in the Pa. Academy Annual of 1914.

The two most recent canvasses are portrait sketches of himself and Mrs. Seyffert. The self-portrait is remarkable in its sincerity and a faithful, introspective document.

The Boston Art Club has reverted to type, and its spacious gallery is now hospitably housing a watercolor exhibition of genuine merit, that of the Boston Society of Watercolor Painters. So far this year, the Art Club has had only its own offspring to show—and the recently closed members' exhibition lasted so long that it was almost looked upon by the mere outsider as a permanent display. Just why the Art Club cannot bring itself to the point of engineering a series of exhibitions through the winter months—in the manner of its enterprising contemporary, the St. Botolph Club—is one of the unsolved mysteries. With the best gallery in the city to prick the sides of its intent, why is it so unprogressive? Truth to tell, its spirit does not seem to be equal to its material advantages.

Last week M. Pierre Tartoué of Paris-via-

New York, with his vivacious little American wife, formerly Miss Dodsworth of N. Y., received a favored section of the local public at a private view of his recent portraits, held at a local gallery. Behold, then, a social function of considerable distinction, in which "gowns" played their appointed part, and one looked instinctively around to see "who was there." A very French collection of pastels and oils!—wherein all the ladies looked very pretty and modish, with very blue eyes, and the radiant complexions that ladies in real life should have, if they haven't, while the children reminded one of human angels in smart clothes. The sunny, smiling presentment of Miss Louise Hayman of Brookline, Mass., was prodigiously admired (the fair-haired original herself being at the private view), and those of the two little daughters of former Senator W. A. Clark also claimed attention. Unless it be a genuine king, one can think of no more effective subject for a portrait than a genuine cardinal—and a cardinal, as the great Richelieu proved, is frequently much more interesting than a mere king. All this apropos of the fact that M. Tartoué has made a really fine and effective portrait out of his distinguished sitter, Cardinal Farley, shown in the red robes of his high office.

PHILADELPHIA.

It would be quite safe to say that very few of the people gazing with admiration upon the beautiful model of the proposed Art Museum now on exhibition in the court yard of the City Hall, and reproduced in this issue, realize the amount of money already spent upon the project—almost a quarter of a million, according to the "Evening Bulletin," or the length of time that has elapsed since the movement was started twenty-five years ago. More than six dozen plans, drawing and preliminary sketches have been submitted up to date by various architects, nearly $50,000 of the people's money have been used in payment of commissions to these architects for work that was only tentative at the best and discontinued at that stage. Some $15,000 were appropriated by City Councils twenty years ago for a prize competition for plans of an Art Museum to be erected on Lemon Hill, not far from the Fairmount Avenue entrance, the first award of $6,000 going to Henry Bacon and James Brite, of N. Y.; the second of $3,000 to Lord, Hewlett & Hull, of N. Y., and the third of $2,000 to M. Marcel P. de Monchos, of Paris. Some $36,000 is reported to have been paid to Messrs. Borie, Trumbauer and Lanzinger for the preliminary plans for a museum on Fairmount Hill, from which the model now on exhibition has been evolved. With an available loan fund of $800,000 and possible addition of three million in the next municipal loan, it is said that the museum might be completed in 1918 if work were to commence at once on the site now prepared by the leveling off of the old reservoir basins. "One must always break some eggs in order to make an omelette."

Dr. Thomas H. Fenton was elected President of the Art Club at the annual meeting, Jan. 8. Wm. M. Coates and Leslie W. Miller were chosen Vice-Presidents. Wm.

De Kraff, Treasurer, and Samuel W. Cooper, Secretary.

Some 41 watercolors of subjects drawn from Egypt, Greece and Ceylon, the work of the late Henry Bacon, are now on exhibition to Jan. 24, at McClees' Galleries. Mr. Bacon was well known previous to 1895 as a painter in oil, and as such exhibited in 25 Salons. He later took up watercolor as a medium, used in pure washes, until his death in 1912. The works now shown were exhibited through the country two years ago.

At the Phila. Sketch Club, H. Lyman Sayen is holding an exhibition of his paintings, futuristic in tendency, puzzling to the critics for the most part, yet no doubt interesting if the artist could transmit a message through them. Mr. Sayen has always been averse to giving titles to his pictures, so one is often left in the dark as to his intent.

A sale to the highest bidder of valuable paintings, Flemish tapestries, Old English furniture, engravings and plate belonging to the estates of the late Robert Hare Towell and Miss D. H. Weeks was held this week at the Phila. Art Galleries. Miss Weeks was connected for many years with the business of Earle's Galleries, well known to local people, and later conducted an establishment under her own name.

The first prize of $100 in the poster competition arranged for students of foreign birth or parentage, in connection with the conference on immigration to be held there Jan. 19-20, was won by John W. Butler of the Graphic Sketch Club. The second prize of $25 was taken by Henry Tedlie of the same club. The Butler design has the glow of color, suggestive of enamelled or jewelled surfaces, are wonderfully effective on a dull gold wall. Enthusiasm has been aroused by Mr. Lawson's work, which was never shown here collectively before.

The work of D. Murray Smith, well-known both in England and America, shows at first glance the influence of Corot and others of the Barbizon group, both in color and choice of subject.

Chicago.

The National Association of Portrait Painters, whose exhibition is on at the Art Institute, is made up of the 43 presentments which were fully noticed in the ART NEWS when shown at the Fine Arts Galleries, New York, early this season.

Helen Hyde has in view in the Art Institute 95 vital pictures, some from the etched plate, others from the woodblock, and others in deliciously watercolors. Some of her individual methods of work and expression in colors are forceful. Her art grows in general appreciation through its inherent qualities. The Mexican and Orient pictures convey a new spirit, although the scenes are often familiar. Of the latter, "The Good Luck Branch," "In Kite Time," and "A Sudden Shower" are especially good, with their cherry blooms, and picturesque little women and babies. There is a quintet of the Chinese brand that attracts much praise and "The Furious Dragon" and "Miss Apricot Cloud of Shanghai" are as unique as subtle a treatment. The Japanese woodcut prints are familiar through previous shows. The pictures painted in Old Mexico are very fetching.

Portraits and figure paintings by Hovsop Pushman are installed in a gallery of the Institute; twenty-one wonderfully glowing pictures by this artist of Armenian parentage, who is called an American, and who returned to this country from Paris just before the war. The portrait of Mrs. Pushman is winning plaudits for its general composition and its remarkable beauty of coloring. Many of the paintings are loaned, among them "A Memento of Old Madrid" lent by Mr. Samuel O. Buckner, "The Hour of Rest" by the Milwaukee Art Society, "The Persian Wine Cup" by Dr. Charles E. Albright, "A Nubian Princess" by Alfred T. James, and "Caribbean Girl" by Victor L. Brown.

In Denton's Galleries.

Childe Hassam at Roullier's is showing the etchings and dry points recently exhibited in New York, and then noticed in the ART NEWS. There is also an assemblage of paintings by American artists at Roullier's from the Macbeth galleries, New York, in charge of Mr. Cheshire Boone.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1 is devoted to the Bray-
ton Ives Collection of Prints sold at the American Art Galleries April 12-14 and
No. 2 to the Blakeslee and Duveen Picture
Sales, under the same auspices, at the Plaza
Hotel Ball Room, April 21-23 and April 29.

ART SALES MAY STIR TRADE.

The near holding of a series of large and important art auctions, which will begin with the dispersal of the Reisinger pictures Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next, the preliminary exhibition being now on, is a subject of discussion and speculation in the studios
and galleries throughout the country.
Something—it is almost universally admitted—is needed to galvanize the art season into life, for, despite the stories of returned prosperity, heard on all sides, the art business, while more active than last season, is still not what had been hoped, and the golden stream flowing out of Wall St. and the manufactories of munitions has apparently been dammed up somewhere and somehow, so that it has not as yet flowed into the galleries and studios. Even the so-called "Kobbe Comet," the fancy of an imaginative writer on art, which was to "Come out of the West," and make glad the hearts, and fill the purses of the New York art dealers, has not as yet materialized, and must have swung out of its orbit and spent itself
in some beer saloon near Herald Square.

The importance of the Reisinger pictures, which include those of the best modern foreign and American schools—of a number of the old and modern canvases in the Catholina Lambert, and of modern Americans in the Andrews collection, also soon to be dispersed—should, and almost undoubtedly will,
bring collectors and buyers here from all over the country and stimulate the art trade. This is "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

EXPSN. ART PALACE REOPENS.

Amid much enthusiasm, Governor Johnson of California reopened the Exposition Art Palace at San Francisco,
after its temporary closing, on Jan. 1.
The Palace itself, it has already been decided, will remain as a permanent structure, and through Director Trask's efforts, a sufficient number of exhibits
will remain, with new ones to be added,
to continue the art display in the Galleries until next Spring, at least. This is a good thing and art lovers everywhere will be pleased to know that the beautiful conception of Mr. Maybeck will not only be preserved, but will, in all probability, become a permanent Museum of art, in and for San Francisco. We congratulate San Francisco upon its interest and zeal in the plan to perpetuate the beautiful and inspiring structure and to, in time, fill it with art treasures.

BONNAT TO MOSLER.

The friends of Henry Mosler and the art loving public, will be pleased to learn, that he has entirely recovered from his recent serious street car accident. Some time ago he sent a check to Leon Bonnat, president of La Fraternelle des Artistes, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of French artists. To this he received, during the time of recovery, a reply, of which the follow is a translation:

Paris, Nov. 9, 1915.

La Fraternelle des Artistes.

M. Leon Bonnat,

Member de l'Institut.

My Dear Comrade and Friend:

Your letter of Oct. 17, came surely to me, and I hasten to send you my thanks, and those of the French artists, for your generous contribution and the sympathetic sentiments which accompany it. The members of the Committee of the Fraternelle des Artistes were much touched by the friendship you retain for your French comrades and also for the faith you express in the triumph of the Allies.

Be certain that we will never forget the brotherly aid our American friends have given us during the battle, and that on the day of victory our gratitude will be poured out. Believe my dear Mosler in my very cordial and very sincere friendship.
Leon Bonnat.

Capt. Hall, whose exhibition is on at Bruno's Garret, was knocked down by a taxicab in Greenwich village, Tuesday. He was not seriously injured.

NEWS FROM THE STUDIOS.

Henry Clews, Jr., and Mrs. C. Lewis returned on the Lafayette from France on Tuesday.

Gabriel Nicolet, member of the English
Royal Society of Portrait Painters, arrived Tuesday on the Lafayette, bringing a number of his works, many of them portraits, which will be shown at the galleries of Braun & Co., 13 W. 46 St., beginning Jan. 22. One of the pictures called "The Good Samaritan," represented a young American woman knitting a scarf for a French soldier.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney announces that she will give an exhibition of her own sculptures at her studio, 8 West 8th, following the loan collection now there displayed and which has attracted much attention. On Tuesday Mrs. Whitney entertained the students of the Art Students League who visited the display in a body. The time of the exhibition has been extended to Jan. 25.

Mrs. Leslie Cotton arrived from France
Tuesday on the Lafayette. Among her recent portraits are those of the Infanta Eula-lie, Duc and Duchesse de Grammont, the Duc and Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld and the Comtesse de Belazichy, formerly Miss Wright. She will hold an exhibition later in the season at the Knoedler Galleries.

An entertainment will be held on the afternoon of Feb. 1 at the home of Mrs. Marshall Orme Wilson for the benefit of the students of the Ecole des Beaux Arts at the front. Well known entertainers have volunteered their services and the affair has been organized in part by those Americans who have studied at the Beaux Arts. Tickets at $5 each may be had of Mr. H. R. Sedgwick, 107 East 37th street.

Everett Henry of Ridgwood, N. J., a student at the New York School of Fine and Applied Art, won the $25 prize in a poster contest for the Junior League performance of "The City of Beautiful Nonsenses," at the Waldorf-Astoria, Jan. 24-26. The competition was held at the residence of Mrs.
Marshall Orme Wilson, and the judges were
C. D. Gibson and B. P. Trowbridge.

The Board of Trustees of the Albright Gallery in Buffalo have accepted a portrait of John J. Albright, by Edmund C. Tarbell, given by Gen. Edmund Hayes. It was painted a year ago and shows the subject seated in his library. It was also decided to create a fund to be known as "The Seymour J. Knox Memorial Fund" for the purchase of works of art, etc. The bequest has a present market value of about $60,000.

An art museum association has recently been formed at Lexington, Kentucky.

Joseph Pennell who was to have delivered a lecture on Whistler last week at the Boston Museum was unable to appear, having been suddenly called back to England. He will soon return and plans to make his permanent home here.

The Copley Society of Boston will hold
in the Spring a display of the Swedish works at the Pana-Pacific Exposition.

Henry Golden Dearth is not to exhibit in a special room at the continued Pana-Pacific art exhibit, as was announced, as he was unable to secure the loan of a sufficient amount of his works from their owners to make an adequate display.

Harry W. Ranger will sail Jan. 29 for San Juan, Porto Rico, where following his annual custom, he will spend the remainder of the Winter. In his West 67th street Studio
Mr. Ranger is finishing three landscapes, whose subjects were sketched near his summer residence at Noank, Conn., and which is original, and, in one case, daring, but successful composition, joyousness and clearness of atmosphere, poetic feeling and delicacy, and anon richness of color, are among the best canvases his able brush has yet produced.

A noted London painter has just arrived in New York, Horace Brodzky, a member of the most advanced group of painters in England, and an important exhibitor, and member of the well-known
"London Group," which includes among others the sculptor, Jacob Epstein, formerly of New York. Brodzky is of Russo-Polish origin, and on a trip from Australia to England by way of New York, was for a short time at the National Academy here.

Thomas R. Congdon and Mrs. Congdon,
after a residence of fifteen years in Paris,
have returned to New York, to remain

OBITUARY.

Rembrandt Bugatti.

An Italian animal sculptor of great talent,
Rembrandt Bugatti, died in Paris, Sunday last, of gas poisoning, and is supposed to have committed suicide. He was found unconscious in his studio in the Rue Joseph Bara and expired in the Hospital Laennec.
A number of Signor Buggati's sculptures were, and some are still at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St., and a view of the more important of them was reproduced in the ART NEWS, April 11, 1914. The sculptor's work is impressive, almost magistral and as individual as that of Barye. His work appears in many of the principal European galleries. At the opening of the war he was making studies of the animals in the Antwerp Zoological Gardens. He joined the Belgian Ambulance Corps, and on the evacuation of Antwerp, returned to his native Italy through Holland. As his class was not mobilized he went to Paris and declaring, it is stated, that it was not the time to model animals, began to model a figure of the Saviour, which is now at the foundry.

Frank H. Dodd.

Mr. Frank Howard Dodd, head and founder of the well known firm of Dodd, Mead & Co., publishers, died on Monday in this city in his 72nd year. He was born in Bloomfield, N. J., and was preparing for Yale College, when he temporarily began to work for his father, then a publisher in Printing House Square. There he remained until 1870, when, with Mr. Edward S. Mead, he organized the present firm which succeeded to his father's business. The firm, in 1895, established The Bookman, and in 1902 published the New International Encyclopedia. Mr. Dodd married in 1868, Miss Martha Bliss Parker. He is survived by a son, Mr. Edward H. Dodd, a member of the firm, and two daughters. He was a member of the Century and City Clubs and the National Club of London, and was president of the American Publisher's Association.

Edmond J. La Place.

Edmond J. La Place, dealer in antiques, died Jan. 6, in this city, aged 57. He was born in Mount Vernon and was first associated in business, with the Herts Brothers.
His principal place of business was at 6
West 28 St., and he had branches in London and Paris. He retired temporarily in 1914, and then his collection was sold at the American Art Galleries. Mr. La Place was a member of the N. Y. Athletic Club and the Elks.

Carlo Nicolini.

The Italian sculptor, Carlo Nicolini, died recently in his villa at Caprara. He was the owner of a large sculptural studio. He is succeeded by his son, also a sculptor, Prof. Gino Nicolini.

Miss Marianne E. Havell, daughter of Robert Havell, artist and publisher and engraver of Audubon's "Birds of America" died in this city, recently, at the age of 68.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

Mr. Vitall Benguiat returned from France
on the Lafayette on Tuesday.

Mr. Walter Fearon, formerly of the Cottier Galleries, 718 Fifth Ave., is with the Admiralty Offices in London.

Sales at Ehrich Galleries.

From the interesting and important exhibition of works by the Lesser Masters at the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth avenue, there have been recently sold a strong and rich man's portrait by Lucas, the pupil of Goya,
a rarely good example of Harlow, the pupil
of Lawrence, an unusual example of Sir Peter Lely, and a Wilson landscape, exceptionally rich in quality. Other sales are under consideration.

at 43 West 70th St. and a studio for this winter in the Broadway Studio Building, Broadway and 80 St.

Mr. Congdon has painted portraits of many noted people in Paris, Berlin and London, and his genre subjects are well known in the Salon. He is represented by two works in the Luxembourg, and two in the Palais des Beaux Arts, in Paris.

J. Dunbar Wright, who is to have a sale of his studio effects and some of his pictures and art objects at Clarke's Auction rooms next week, will leave soon after the sale for Honolulu, where he purposes spending the remainder of the winter, and where he will paint, and, it is to be hoped, secure more of his remarkable photographs, which,
with his painting, have won him deserved reputation in the art world.

A feature of the display of the Royal Birmingham Society of Artists, is a collection of 100 examples of the late Walter Crane.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Jan. 5, 1916.

At Christie's recently, Mr. Amor paid as much as 210/ an ounce (£130 in all) for a magnificent Irish silver potato-ring, by W. Hughes of Dublin, 1773, while a Queen Anne tobacco box, 1713, with a lengthy inscription to that "glorious martyr," Charles I, fetched 190/ an ounce, its total sum being £38. Mr. Amor was also a purchaser at the sale, also at Christie's, of some of the Trinity College furniture, acquiring for 30 gns. a Jacobean oak dresser which had stood in one of the rooms of the Oxford College for many years.

Owing to the advisability of having the contents of one's houses properly valued, with a view to making adequate claim upon the insurance companies in the event of further Zeppelin raids, I am told that many unsuspected possessions of value are being brought to light, while at the same time disconcertingly low valuations are put upon others, which, owing to family tradition, have hitherto enjoyed an unwarranted esteem on the part of their owners. This necessity for procuring "expert" opinion is all for the good of the owners, who are thus enabled to form an unbiased and reliable estimate of the market value of their treasures. Messrs. Hampton are busily engaged upon a great deal of this kind of work.

Belgian Pictures of London.

One of the most delightful of the exhibitions now running is that at the Knoedler Gallery in Bond Street, where the originals of the illustrations to Mr. John Lane's "Book of Belgium's Gratitude," are to be seen. London, with its infinite variety of atmospheric effects, its curious combination of the picturesque and the prosaic, its ever changing aspects of life and drama, has apparently "intrigued" our Belgian guests to the extinction of other subjects for the majority of the pictures are inspired by scenes viewed in this city and viewed, I may say by observant and appreciative eyes. The River Thames is to be seen in every guise in which different seasons find her, from the wintry bleakness, so cleverly portrayed by Mr. Baertson to the summer garb which has taken the fancy of M. Wagemans. It is instructive to observe how familiar landmarks appear to other eyes, and in these Belgian sketches one finds here and there, beauties which even Whistler himself left it to foreigners to discover. The one piece of sculpture in the exhibition is a bust of Lady Diana Manners, by Victor Rousseau, less impressionistic in type than the drawings, but possessing striking individuality and grace.

The late Dr. W. H. Cummings was a collector who specialized in the portraits of musicians, but when these came to be sold at Christie's a few days ago, the only one which realized even a moderately good price was Gainsborough's portrait of Charles Abel, the famous performer on the viol da gamba. The sum paid was 380 gns., and the purchaser was Mr. Sulley, the Bond St. dealer. Two portraits were printed by Gainsborough of this sitter, one a three-quarter length and the other a full length, the latter coming into the possession of Mr. C. J. Wertheimer at the sale of Lord Egremont's collection in 1894, for the sum of 1,400 gns. The picture is now owned by Mr. George J. Gould. The three-quarter length sold to Mr. Sulley, was put up at Puttick and Simpson's with other portraits of musicians in 1866, when it was "passed" being subsequently acquired by an obscure London dealer for an insignificant sum. There has been a striking dissimilarity in the careers of the two pictures.

Faked Furniture in the Cowley Sale.

There has been considerable stir in the art trade in connection with events arising from the Cowley Sale, and which have led to an action being brought by Messrs. H. J. Simmons of Duke Street, against the auctioneers, Messrs. Nicholas, for the recovery of the sum of seven gns. for expenses and loss of time occasioned by attending the sale, under a misrepresentation of its contents. The judge took the view that auctioneers cannot be held responsible for the authenticity of attributions made to them by sellers and indeed, if such were the case, every saleroom would be involved in enormous expenses in the maintenance of a staff of experts. Consequently Mr. Simmons, who had brought the action as much for the protection of other dealers as for his own benefit, and who deserves the thanks of his brethren for an extremely public-spirited act, lost his case on these technical grounds, though on the other hand, he scored very greatly in exposing what has of late years become a grave scandal. I refer to the "watering" of sales of genuine stuff with inferior and faked goods, put into them by dealers who take advantage of the reflected glory of a few pieces which emanate from some ancestral home and from some apparently trustworthy source.

CLEVELAND.

Herman Matzen, Cleveland sculptor, whose Soldiers and Sailors' monument at Indianapolis first made him known as one of the foremost Middle West sculptors, has been awarded the commission for the twelve sculpture groups which ornament the new city hall, one of the chief buildings in the "group plan" of Cleveland. His "Schiller" in Belle Isle Park, Detroit, the commission for which was won in a national commission competition, his "Moses" and "Pope Gregory" on the Court House front here, about a decade ago, and his memorial tablet, given in memory of the children who perished in the Collinwood school fire, are some of the other works which have added to his reputation for strong creative work. There will be six figures on the top of the city hall, which will represent the city's leading industries, steel, transportation, shipbuilding, textiles, oil and chemistry. Larger groups at the entrances will typify the departments of the city government.

Henry G. Keller has been awarded the decoration of the seventy foot wall which, it is claimed, will give the city hall one of the largest murals in existence. Mr. Keller's allegorical painting, "Wisdom and Destiny," which has been only second to his work as an animal painter in giving him prominence, will be used as the basis of the mural for the center of the space.

Orville Peets, whose etchings are well known here and in Europe, where he has made his home for the most part of late years, is showing a number of etchings and monotypes at the Korner and Wood gallery. A few colored etchings, mezzotints and drawings and several oils, are also included in the exhibition, among the last being a winter landscape of great charm.

Mrs. Janet Lyon, landscapist and former pupil of Wyant, who has removed from Pittsburg to this city, is showing at the Guenther gallery several oils. "Interior, Oswegatchie Woods, Connecticut," is a beautiful late summer forest scene, strongly suggestive of William Keith in technique and coloring. "Sunset in Santa Barbara" and "Golden October in the Berkshires" are others deserving of high praise.

Jessie C. Glasier.

TOLEDO.

The Artkian studio started the new year with the largest membership of students since the "klan" was organized about three years ago.

Before taking his paintings on an exhibition tour, Thomas S. Parkhurst is holding an exhibition in his studio for a week. There are 30 large paintings and 50 "thumb-boxes" on view, the majority landscapes, with a few marines.

After the close of his December exhibit at the Museum, Alexis Jean Fournier placed a few of his paintings in the Mohr galleries for an indefinite period.

The Museum has now two important and interesting exhibits, namely the works of Robert Henri and paintings and sculptures from the Guild of Boston Artists.

Good Showing of Americans.

When one come to the modern Americans, one is most impressed with Mr. Reisinger's breadth of view and discernment, for he bought almost as well of American as of modern German art. Here are George Bellows (1), George Elmer Browne (1), Chase (1) a still life, Leon Dabor (2), Derath (1), Dewing (3), Dougherty (1), Frieseke (1), Hassam (5), George Hitchcock (1), Homer (1) a fine Maine Coast watercolor, W. S. Horton (2), Louis Kronberg (1), Ernest Lawson (2), Willard Metcalf (1), Carl Marr (1), Richard Miller (1), J. F. Murphy (1), Redfield (1), Robert Reid (1), Theodore Robinson (1), Schofield (1), Albert Sterner (1), George Sautter (1), Allen Tucker (1), Twachtman (2), Waugh (1), Whistler (2), and G. A. Williams (2).

There are also examples, one each, of John Lavery and Grosvenor Thomas, the Scotchmen, and of A. E. John, the Welshman (1).

Watercolors and Etchings.

The etchings and watercolors are notable for the many examples of Zorn, the two of Whistler, the eight of Joseph Pennell, and those of Haden, one of Rembrandt, one each of the Japanese Hokkel and Hokusai, the four of Liebermann, the two of Millet and the three of Brangwyn.

It is unnecessary to detail individual examples of the many artists of modern schools noted as represented above.

Opinions will differ and the collector must study the collection as a whole and individually if he wishes to buy intelligently. But the list as analyzed above, gives a good idea of the remarkable scope and variety of the collection.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.

The sale next week of the modern pictures owned by the late Hugo Reisinger, and which is eagerly anticipated in art circles, will presumably whet the appetite the more of collectors and buyers for the sale, also at auction, of the far larger and more variety, of assemblage of both old and modern pictures collected through many years of effort and study by Mr. Catholina Lambert, and which will, with over 400 canvases, require four evenings in mid-February for their dispersal in the Plaza ballroom.

In its way the Lambert sale will be the most important of the season, for its offerings will appeal to collectors of various tastes and predelections. They range from the early Italian to the modern American masters, and among them are a number, over which collectors will struggle for possession, such as, for example, the fine Luini, the important Del Sarto, the superior Reynolds portrait, the large Lawrence, the early Dutch portraits by Van der Helst, Verspronck, Mytens, Mierevelt, Ravenstyn and others over whose attributions "Experts" will quarrel, but whose quality none will dispute.

A collection that contains examples of all the Barbizon masters, of Monet, Pissaro and Sisley, no less than 17 Michels, 21 Monticellis, example, and good ones of Puvis de Chavannes, Courbet and Delacroix, and among modern Americans, no less than even Blakelocks, including the famous "Moonlight," 6 by 4 ft., and examples of such painters as George Inness, Bogert, and others, many of them painted for Mr. Lambert, would at any time make a great stir, and especially now that it is the first of so varied a character and of such size and importance to come upon the market in many a day.

There are also in the collection, it must not be forgotten, some 50 sculptures, some noted pieces among them, of which more will be said later on. The dismantling of the large Gallery in Buena Vista castle at Paterson, N. J., where Mr. Lambert has enjoyed his treasures for many years, to prepare the pictures and sculptures for the coming sale, has much of sadness, not only to its esteemed owner, but to the host of American art lovers who have enjoyed the study of his treasures there.

Matthews' Picture Sale.

Some 81 oils by Old and Modern painters, owned by Mr. Nicholas M. Matthews of Baltimore—several of which were offered at auction at the American Art Galleries last season—and other owners, are on exhibition in the Anderson Galleries, previous to their sale at auction there Monday evening next, Jan. 17.

The assortment is curiously mixed but contains some good canvases, notably examples of E. Rau of Munich, Gustave Wolff, an American modern; Alden Weir, Bunce, Gruppe, David Johnson, William Hart, Twachtman, the Belgian Noterman, Berne-Bellecour, M. F. H. De Haas and William Magrath.

There is a large early William Keith, for which the owner paid $2,500 in 1909, an early and not typical Geo. Elmer Browne, and only fair examples of Carleton Wiggins, William Sartain, Ernest Parton, J. F. Murphy and C. M. Dewey. There are also canvases attributed to Geo. Morland, Franz Snyders, Ziem, Van Marcke, Jules Dupre, Rosa Bonheur, Michel, Constable, Jan Wynants, J. Van der Velde, Molenaer, Weenix, Angelica Kauffman, Salvator Rosa, de Koninck and Hondecoeter.

A. W. Bahr Sale.

A collection of old Chinese porcelains, pottery, jades, screens, paintings on glass, rugs, carpets, etc., formed by Mr. A. W. Bahr, an Englishman who has become known to American art lovers through exhibitions of choice early Chinese paintings and sculptures, etc., at the Montross Gallery in past seasons and who has a small collection in view there now, is shown at the American Art Galleries No. 6 East 23rd street and will be sold there at auction on the afternoons of Monday-Wednesday next, Jan. 17-19, at 2.30 o'clock each day.

There are 597 numbers in the elaborate and handsomely printed and illustrated Catalog, and the range of objects and period is remarkable and unusual. Especially notable are some lacquer shrines and caskets, a buffalo horn bird cage, the paintings on glass, the embroideries on silk, some pieces of blue and white, famille verte vases, a few of the single color specimens, a unique sang de boeuf "Dog Foo," a choice little collection of Fukien or blanc de chine porcelains, some fine turquoise and powder blue vases, an important tall Ming pottery figure, some lacquer panels, a large and beautiful Comandel screen, and a number of rare and rich antique rugs, mats and carpets.

Moulton and Ricketts Stock.

A large and important collection of etchings, engravings, watercolors and oils is to be sold at the Anderson Galleries by order of the U. S. District Court, under the direction of Frank M. McKey, Esq., of Chicago, trustee in bankruptcy for Robb R. Ricketts, trading as Moulton & Ricketts. The material will be placed on exhibition Wed. next and will be sold in three evening sessions beginning Wed., Jan. 26.

The numerous etchings and mezzotints are by some of the leading artists of this country and Europe, but a more important division consists of watercolors by distinguished Academicians. Many of these were in the collection originally made by Mr. Gustav H. Buek of New York. The pictures were chosen, not alone because of the importance of the artists represented, but in order to preserve a line of American watercolors from the early period of the Hudson River school down to the present day. This collection has been exhibited in many art museums throughout the country.

The most important division of the collection consists of the oils. Among these are excellent examples of the work of distinguished American and foreign artists, including William Keith, F. S. Church, Walter Shirlaw, Robert C. Minor, Homer Martin, George McCord, Ralph A. Blakelock, Elliot Dangerfield, William Ritchell, Bruce Crane, James M. Hart, W. T. Richards, J. H. Weissenbruck, Rosa Bonheur, Corot and many others.

Old Miniatures at Anderson's.

An exhibition of early Persian miniatures and Mss. owned by M. L. A. Rosenberg of Paris and consigned by him to Tonying & Co. of this city, is on at the Anderson Galleries, Madison avenue and 40th street. The owner is serving in the French Aviation Corps.

While the Persian miniatures are good in quality, they are not new to American art lovers, who will be more interested in the early European examples, for the most part executed on pages of missals and other church books which have been torn out of volumes. These are daintily and minutely painted and much gold has been used in their painting.

Clarke Sale Totals $73,872.

The sale, at the American Art Galleries, of the Thomas B. Clarke collection of plates and textiles closed on Jan. 8 with a result for the session of $47,655, which brought the grand total to $73,872 for 742 catalog numbers. The second session, Jan. 6, resulted in $9,626.50 and the third, Jan. 7, in $11,275. The highest price of the sale was $10,900, paid on the last aft. by Mr. H. G. Kelekian for a XVI Century Polish rug. He likewise gave $1,500 for a XV Century Valencia plate. The highest price among the plates was $2,600, paid by Mr. Stanley Mortimer for a XVI Century Diruta example, with St. Catherine and her wheel of torture. He also secured a second Diruta plate for $600. Lewis and Simmons gave $1,000 for another Diruta example, showing S. Francis; $975 for an Italian jardiniere velvet portal and $400 for an Italian faience plate. C. and E. Canessa paid $900 for a Hispano-Mauresque. Mr. Timothy F. Crowley gave $360 for an early XVI Century Diruta plate and Mr. F. J. Macomber the same amount for another, while Mr. A. A. Healy secured one for $270.

The Tiffany Studios obtained for $1,900 a XVI Century Ispahan rug. Otto Bernet paid $1,200 for a XVI Century Spanish cope. A Portuguese renaissance velvet portiere sold to the Metropolitan Museum for $320. Mr. M. H. Manhart gave $300 for a XV Century Italian chasuble, and Mr. Marion McMillin the same amount for a XVII Century Spanish ecclesiastical banner. W. W. Seaman, agent, paid $575 for a Spanish renaissance tapestry; Mrs. A. Morse $550 for a pair of Venetian dalmatics and Miss G. Waterbury $410 for a XVII Century Spanish banner.

Mr. G. Harding gave $790 for an early Urbino plate and Tabbagh brothers $540 for a XVII Century Rhodian plate. An Italian cope and dalmatics went to Mr. L. Oorselli for 425. To Miss R. H. Lorenz, agent, went for $360 a piece of velvet with a gold border and for $310 an Italian chasuble.

At the second session Mr. R. A. Plimpton gave $300 for an Italian velvet hanging and Miss Lorenz $220 for a XV Century Venetian velvet panel. She also gave $200 each

FROM ART TALKS WITH RANGER—by Raley Husted Bell—
 "A popular fallacy is that the American is naturally devoid of art, and solely devoted to the pursuit of wealth and material things. My experience, which perhaps has been particularly happy, is that we have a large percentage of altruistic idealists. The numerous and increasing Museum foundations only serve as a small illustration of the case in point."

Kelekian Buys Lydig Velvets.

Mr. H. G. Kelekian has recently purchased from Charles of London, some 150 yards of the fine old Italian Renaissance velvets, which were a feature of the Mrs. Philip Lydig sale. These splendid stuffs were purchased at that sale, as will be remembered, by Huber & Co. for some $7,800, or about $55 a yard, and passed through several hands before they reached Charles.

Sensational Auction Room Scene.

The concluding session was marked by an unusual incident which produced a sensation in the Galleries, namely an animated discussion between Mr. Isaac Simmons and the auctioneer, Mr. Kirby, Mr. Simmons being at some distance from the restrum, as to a Diruta plate which Mr. Simmons considered he had secured at his bid of $1,100, but which was also claimed by Mr. Stanley Mortmire at the same bid. The discussion was lively one between Mr. Simmons and the auctioneer—the former insisting on his claim, but he finally yielded, and the plate having been again put up Mr. Simmons bid Mr. Mortmire up on it to $2,600, the latter finally securing it at the last much advanced figure.

Fairly high prices were obtained, on the whole, and the atmosphere was surcharged with electricity. Mr. H. G. Kelekian secured the beautiful green Polish rug which was a feature of the sale for $10,000, but even this seemingly high figure is said to have been $5,000 below its cost to Mr. Clarke. The rare and fine Valencia blue and white Sixteenth century plate, a reproduction of which adorned the front page of the handsome sale catalog, was also secured by Mr. Kelekian for $1,500, together with some beautiful Gothic velvets. Mr. Timothy F. Crowley was the fortunate buyer of an Urbino XVI Century plate, perhaps the rarest and most beautiful in the sale, for $450. A new buyer was Capt. Marion McMillin, son of Mr. Emerson McMillin, who secured a Spanish church banner for $300.

Shelley Letter Fetches $1,485.

A notable letter from Shelley to his friend Peacock, about his visit to Byron at Ravenna, the Guiccioli, Don Juan and the turning night into day life, he joined in for a while, brought $1,485 from Mr. George D. Smith, at the first session Monday, in the Anderson Galleries of Part VII of the John Boyd Thacher coll'n. He also paid $575 for a letter of Sir Thomas Lucy, the original of Shakespeare's Justice Shallow, $152 for a Newton letter; $95 for one by Richardson, the novelist; $82 for a letter of Pope, and $79 for an Allan Ramsey Mss. The total of the session was $3,505.60.

At the second and final session Tuesday, Mr. William T. Walters, of Baltimore, gave $410 for the Mss. of Hawthorne's "Times Portraiture, Being the Carrier's Address to the Patrons of the Salem Gazette" for Jan. 1, 1832. Mr. George D. Smith gave $385 for a Swift letter. He also secured a Wolsey letter for $300; a Wadsworth letter for $126, and a Peg Woffington signature for $110. His other purchases included a letter of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, $88; a pen and ink drawing by Thackeray, $62.50; a letter of Charles Wesley, $50; a letter of Leonora d'Este, $41.50, and a letter of Steele, $41. The total for the session was $2,478.85, and for Part VII, $5,984.45. This makes the grand total for various parts of the sale $51,782.65.

C. C. Townsend Library Sale.

The sale of the library of the late Charles Cooper Townsend of Phila., at the American Art Galleries, on Jan. 6 brought $16,339.25. "The Annals of Sporting and Fancy Gazette," London, 1822-28, with colored and other plates by Cruikshank, etc., brought $720. Mr. G. D. Smith gave $650 for six watercolors by Aiken; $340 for "The Fancy or True Sportsman's Guide," and $280 for ten scenes from the life of "Master George," colored by Aiken and including a watercolor by him. Mr. Gabriel Weiss paid $560 for Thackeray's essay on George Cruikshank; $530 for "The National Sports of Great Britain," with three original drawings and plates by Aiken; $515 for a collection of over a 100 drawings, some in pen and ink, by George Cruikshank; $455 for "The Scourge or Monthly Expositor," London, 1811-16.

Westin Scott's "The English Spy," with drawings by Robert Cruikshank, first edition fetched $255. Pierce Egan's "Boxiana," with George Cruikshank illustrations, $110 and "Ackerman's Poetical Magazine," with plates by Rowlandson, $90.

J. S. Kennedy Library Sale.

The sale, at the American Art Galleries, of the library of the late John S. Kennedy, fetched in an afternoon and an evening session on Jan. 7 $9,950.50. Mr. John Lewis secured for $1,350 Walton and Cotton's "The Compleat Angler," extra illustrated, the Pickering edition, London, 1836, extended from two to seven volumes. Mr. Gabriel Weiss paid $760 for Horne's "Napoleon," extra illustrated, and $740 for "Autographs et Gravures de Napoleon et son Temps." He also gave $132.50 for a set of the earliest edition of Dickens' "Christmas

A MEMLING SOLD.

Perhaps the most important picture sale since the purchase by the late Mr. Peter B. Widener of the Panshanger Raphael, took place in this city within the past few days. A noted Paris picture house, having a Fifth Ave. branch in this city in the mid-fifties, is said to have sold to a New York collector, who is a connoisseur in jewels, as well as pictures, and whose small collection of Old Masters is notable for the quality and rarity of its examples, a beautiful Flemish Primitive, no less than an example of Hans Memling. His works are so scarce and difficult to obtain that a transaction involving one, is almost as rare as one involving an example of Albrecht Durer or Da Vinci. Both the fortunate selling firm and the happy collector are so modest that they request that no publication of their names be made and while, of course, it must respect this request the "ART NEWS" is pleased to inform the art public (the cognoscenti will know the identities of seller and purchaser) of this new addition to the art treasures owned in the United States.

INTERESTING PICTURE CASE.

There was a hearing before Judge Waite in the Appraisers General Court in the Public Stores Building, Washington and Christopher Sts., on Tuesday last which had much interest to the art trade.

A Fifth Ave. art dealer, from whom the Government Art Appraiser demanded duty on a portrait of a young woman, attributed to a lesser master of the early English school, imported in 1913—on the ground that it was a modern imitation or copy—protested against such payment.

For the Government appeared the Appraiser Mr. Hecht, the artist restorer, Arthur Dawson; and the restorers, Marcel Rougeron and Carel F. L. De Wild, the last an employe of another Fifth Ave. picture dealer. For the dealer whose picture was in question, there appeared G. Frank Muller, an art "expert," long resident in Paris and London; Stephen Pechetto, a restorer, and a representative of the dealer himself.

The testimony as to the age and validity of the picture which was produced in Court was most conflicting, and it is doubtful whether a verdict can be easily or soon rendered. The dealer produced evidence that the picture had been purchased in good faith from a leading London picture house which formerly had a branch in this city, and his witness, Mr. Muller offered as testimony, a large volume, "British Portrait Painters in the XIX Century," by M. H. Spielmann, art critic of the London Daily News, which he had recently found, containing what seemed to be a photogravure of the picture in question. Mr. Pechetto testified that the picture in his opinion, while somewhat restored, was over one hundred years old and therefore not dutiable.

On the other hand Mr. Hecht stated that in his opinion the picture was a modern imitation, and Arthur Dawson called it a "furniture picture," while M. Rougeron asserted that the work was "half fish and half meat," and Mr. De Wild, the employe of another Fifth Ave. firm, gave a somewhat contradictory opinion.

There was much etchnical disputing and attempts at description as to how copies or imitations of old pictures can be distinguished from originals.

WAR POSTERS IN PARIS.

The blank street walls and kiosques of Paris are partly covered with posters celebrating the deeds of the French soldier. Jonas, Leandre, Willette, whose graceful pencil limns the wives and sweethearts and Neumont are among the artists.

Guerin and Wheeler on Art Board.

Mayor Mitchel on Wednesday appointed Jules Guerin, painter and Professor James R. Wheeler members of the Art Commission. Mr. Guerin succeeds George W. Breck and Professor Wheeler, who holds the chair of Greek Archaeology and Art at Columbia University. Mr. John A. Mitchell.

NOW DUVEEN BROS., Inc.

Duveen Brothers, art dealers, 710 Fifth Ave., filed a certificate of incorporation Tuesday in Albany as Duveen Brothers, Inc. The capital of the corporation is $2,550,000 and the Board of Directors consists of Mr. Henry J. Duveen, brother of the founder of the house, Sir Joseph Duveen, and his nephews, Messrs. Joseph, Louis J., Benjamin J., and Ernest J. Duveen, and John B. Stanchfield and former Judge Morgan J. O'Brien.

The house of Duveen was established about 1870 in London by Joel Joseph Duveen, the family coming originally from Holland. The founder had a shop in Oxford Street, where he sold Dutch potteries and period furniture. He obtained a wide reputation and was knighted by King Edward VII for giving to the British na-

COMING BALL OF THE GODS.

Preparations for the "Ball of the Gods," to be given under the auspices of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, at the Hotel Astor Feb. 11 next, are progressing and already there is much preparatory excitement in the modish drawing rooms and boudoirs, as well as in the studios of the city.

The ball with its accompanying pageants and accessories promises to be the most gorgeous and artistic spectacle of the kind ever given in America, and will surpass in beauty the famous Venetian fete, given under the same auspices at the Astor in Feb. 1913.

A wide range of costumes is afforded by the subject of the ball this year, which while generally mythological in character, tion a building for the paintings Turner had bequeathed.

The New York house was established by Mr. Henry J. Duveen in John Street. For many years the firm was at Fifth Ave. and 31 St. and two years ago built the structure at 710 Fifth Ave. of stone imported from France. Duveen Brothers, Inc., also have an establishment in Paris.

A CEZANNE SOLD FOR $18,000.

From an exhibition, of more or less "modernist" French paintings, now on at a Fifth Ave. gallery, a Boston collector has purchased, for $18,000, Cezanne's canvas called "The Two Sisters."

A number of watercolor examples by Cezanne, from the collection, now on view at the Montross Gallery, 550 Fifth Ave., have also been sold. To that collection has been added an important still life, in oil, very fine in color and quality, showing a dessert of pears and apples, with a bottle of liqueur.

Acting on a suggestion of Prof. Dr. Masner, the city of Breslau has decided to establish a "Museum of the Present War." It has been suggested that the buildings, erected in 1913 for the Centennial Peace Exhibition, and now unoccupied, be utilized for the purpose.

offers much choice of adornment. The men are more puzzled as to costumes for the coming ball, than the women, as it was a habit of the Gods of Mythology to discard any raiment and Anthony Comstock though dead, has a successor.

For these perplexed lords of creation, as well as for others who may be in doubt as to what to wear—the Society of Beaux Arts Architects at 126 East 72 St., will give information and provide books of ancient costumes etc. for study.

QUERIES CHICAGO M'S'M ART.

According to a Chicago despatch M. Paul L. Snutzel, who is there with the French and Belgian pictures from the Pan-Pacific Exposition, has expressed decided doubt as to the genuineness of a Van Dyck and a Corot at the Art Institute. The first is the "Virgin, Infant Christ and St. Catherine," given by Mrs. A. A. Sprague last year and the Corot the smaller example in the Field Collection. He says if the Van Dyck is genuine it is the poorest he ever saw. Pres't C. L. Hutchinson answered that the Belgian Gov't wanted to borrow the Van Dyck two years ago and that there was no doubt about the genuineness of either work.

KANSAS CITY MUSEUM

Another year will bring an art museum to Kansas City if the plans of the trustees of the estate of Mrs. Mary Atkins, a former resident of the city who died five years ago, are carried out. Mrs. Atkins left an estate valued at more than a million, a part of which was to be dedicated to the building of an art museum to be named after her.

The trustees until now have been kept from formulating definite plans for the building by the fact that most of the property was in real estate, which, if sold in haste, would be gotten rid of at a sacrifice. The last block of property sold has brought the available funds up to $312,000, according to the annual report of the trustees, filed with the probate court Jan. 11. Five pieces of real estate still remain in their hands and it is probable that the proceeds from these will further swell the fund to about $400,000.

A plan is already being considered whereby the museum may be built on a hill, part of the city park system, opposite the new Union Station, the largest terminal outside of New York. The plans for parking this hill already include a possible site for the museum, and an impressive approach to the building. The Union Station is not far from the downtown district. The necessity of keeping the management of the museum in private hands, according to the terms of the bequest, and the character of the park laws of Kansas City may put some legal obstacles in the way of this project.

The directors of the Fine Arts Institute are already negotiating with the Atkins trustees for room for the Institute school in the museum building, and it is possible that other funds may be raised to build a wing to the central building to accommodate the art school.

The Missouri Valley Historical Society, which has a fund started for a museum, is considering the use of the money for a supplementary wing to the Atkins Museum.

A POLICE ART COLLECTOR.

It has transpired that William W. McLaughlin, retired police inspector, is an ardent art collector, through the suits of his wife, Mrs. Mary A. McLaughlin, against four fire insurance companies. The case is on trial before a jury and Judge Hough in the Federal court. The suits aggregate $70,194.04, and are against the Royal, Aetna, National and Orient Co's.

The fire almost completely destroyed the McLaughlin residence, 60 E. 83 St., on Feb. 23 last. The more than 600 paintings and etchings were valued, with other goods, at nearly $250,000.

"Experts" called by the plaintiff valued the etchings and paintings at far above the prices fixed by McLaughlin, who himself testified he had been collecting for upward of 35 years.

He bought works attributed to Reynolds, Turner, Greuze, Millet, Corot, Troyon, Dupre, Schreyer, Landseer, Neuhuys and De Neuville, among others, and etchings after Meissonier. Among the pictures destroyed were two attributed to Reynolds, which he purchased for $1,000 and $1,200; a Turner he paid $1,250 for; a Corot, valued at $1,500; two Troyons, $1,500 each, and two Dupres, at $1,000 and $200.

Among the uninjured works are "The Game Hunter," Landseer, for which he paid $100; two De Neuilles, $75 and $100; a Jules Dupre, $50; two Troyons, at $150; a Millet, "The Peasant Girl," $250; and a Delacroix, $500. The Inspector bought cheap.

ARCHITECTS' GARDEN PARTY.

The Architectural League this year is planning an innovation in the matter of architectural exhibitions. Recognizing the increasing interest in country houses and landscape architecture, the Vanderbilt Gallery, in the Fine Arts Building, will be arranged as a Formal Garden with plants and flowers, architectural details and sculpture. The officers of the League have decided to dispense with the Annual Dinner which, with its necessary tables and other paraphernalia would injure the beauty of the scene. In place of the dinner, the members of the League will organize a garden party with an entertainment, "Souper a la Champetre," and dancing on the greensward. Appropriate music and rustic diversions will carry out the sylvan quality of the festival. The League will on this occasion depart from its ordinary custom and extend the hospitality of the opening night to ladies.

THE HUGO REISINGER SALE.

The art event of the week has been the sale of the oils, watercolors and etchings, assembled by the late Hugo Reisinger, which, as told below, have been disposed of in three evening sessions, two in the Plaza ballroom on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and the third and final session at the American Art Galleries on Thursday evening.

The grand total of the three sessions, allowing for a deduction of some $320, due to the reselling on Thursday evening of three pictures bought on Tuesday evening and not taken by the customer—and which resale fell short of the original one to this amount—was $217,925. The best figures were obtained from the oils of the modern American-French schools at the first session, or $139,335. The modern German pictures, sold on Wednesday evening, as had been anticipated, while the auctioneers stated that they brought within 5% of their cost to Mr. Reisinger—only really reached the sum of some $50,000 for some 65 examples—the remainder of that evening's sale total of $68,625 or some $18,000 having been obtained for 22 examples of the modern Dutch masters, of the five English and Scotch painters, A. John, Lavery, Gregory, Grosvenor Thomas and Sauter, one of the Italian Mancini and one, and a good one, of the Spaniard Sorolla.

The watercolors and etchings, save for 28 etchings by Zorn, a few by Pennell and one each by von Menzel and Seymour Haden—not a remarkable lot—still sold well, and some, notably the Pennells and the Zorns, brought American auction record prices, the total for 86 numbers having been $10,285.

The modern Americans really bore off the honors of the sale and held their own well with the French pictures. When Twachtmanns bring $4,350 and $3,330 from dealers, a Weir, $3,000, a Murphy $4,950, a Chase still life, $1,550 from a Museum, a Waugh $1,200, and a Bellows $1,075, at auction, they take commercial as well as artistic rank with the best modern foreign works, long so popular with American collectors, and have at last and belated, "come into their own."

Story of First Session.

At the first session for 84 nos. by modern Foreign and American artists in the Catalog, all oils, save three or four examples in watercolor and pastel, the good total of $139,335 was obtained.

This made an average of some $1,500 a picture, and while the bidding, save for an example here and there, was not spirited, on the whole it did not lag. There were several American art auction records broken, both for native and foreign works, and the prices, as a rule, were higher than those paid by Mr. Reisinger.

The American pictures at this first session held their own well. One of the two examples of the late John H. Twachtmann "Wild Cherry Tree" brought the record auction figure for his work of $4,350, and another example brought $3,300. J. Alden Weir's "Midday" also broke his auction record at $3,000, while a late example of J.

Francis Murphy almost reached his record of $4,950, and a Winslow Homer watercolor "Maine Coast" made a record for his watercolors at $1,600. A typical panel by Dewing brought $3,400 and a Chase still life of Fish (a record price for his still lifes) of $1,550. Childe Hassam's "Leda and the Swan" brought $2,000, and his "Brooklyn Bridge in Winter," $2,225. The Carnegie Institute of Pittsburgh paid, through Director Beatty, $1,200 for Willard Metcalf's "Dogwood Blossoms," and George Bellows' "Morning Snow" brought $1,075.

On the other hand two good Hudson River vistas by Leon Dabo only brought $375 and $425 respectively, and Carl Marr's good portrait of Prince Luipold of Bavaria fetched $475, about a quarter of the figure it would have reached if sold in Munich.

The high figure of the sale was $10,200, paid by Mrs. Hugo Reisinger for a good "silvery" Corot. A small Cazin brought $1,700 and a larger example $2,300, a Renoir $4,950, a Pissarro $1,850, a small pastel by L'Hermitte $1,950, a Claude Monet, one of the "Thames series," $9,300, a record for America; a fine Boudin "Beach at Etretat" $400, and Zorn's "The Bather" $7,000, also an American record.

The dealers were out in force, as will be seen by their purchases and Durand-Ruel bought at good figures the best examples of the French Impressionists. There were few new collectors who bought. The large number of purchases by a Mr. Charles were credited to Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, who was present.

Total, $139,335

Second Session.

At the second session, Wed. eve., a total of $68,625 was obtained for some 88 works—one, a copy of an old master, having been withdrawn, mostly oils of the German modern school with a few modern English and Scotch pictures, and one example of Sorolla.

This total, about half that of the first session, is accounted for by the fact that modern German art and painters, with a few exceptions, such as Bocklin, Lenbach, Leibl and Stuck, are not known to nor appreciated by American collectors and art lovers, while the prevalent prejudice against Germany and its productions, undoubtedly also affected the sale. This prejudice unquestionably affected the attendance, which was not nearly as large as that of Tuesday evening, had few representative dealers or collectors and no modish people and was almost entirely composed of Germans or Germans born in America.

The comparatively low figures for which most of the pictures sold, however, are said by the auctioneers to have been only about 5% below that at which Mr. Reisinger purchased them. Of the dealers in Germany, Heinemann of Munich alone bought under his own name. It must be said that several of the examples of noted German artists were not truly representative, and it seemed evident that Mr. Reisinger had purchased these for names rather than quality.

The highest figure of the sale, $8,200, was paid, as she paid the highest figure at Tuesday's sale, for the Corot, by Mrs. Reisinger, for Arnold Bocklin's good, but not truly representative, "At the Spring." The one example of Lenbach, again not typical, "Ecstasy," was bought for $2,700 by Mr. A. Chatain, the former "Expert" of Glaenzler & Co., now resident in Chicago. Knoedler & Co. secured the fine and typical beach scene by the Spaniard, Sorolla, for $3,300. Joseph Stransky, the music director, bought some $12,000 of the German pictures.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Wed. evening, with the numbers, artists' name, titles and sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices:

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger
and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will soon appear.

DEALERS AS APPRAISERS.

The interesting picture case heard before the General Appraisers Court at the Public Stores in this city this week,
and told of elsewhere in our columns,
brings to the fore the question discussed in the fine art trade for many years past, as to the wisdom of the custom of the Government appraisers,
when in need of opinions as to art importations to sustain or oppose their own, in order to enable them to arrive at a just decision; of calling as witnesses or to give such opinions, of art dealers or their employees. These frequently may be competitors of the dealers whose importations are in question as to their dutiable character, or values as for duties.

While we do not say nor believe that there are not art dealers of sufficient breadth of view, kindness of disposition, and good will towards their competitors or rivals and who are therefore capable of giving a fair and just opinion on the merits or values of such competitors' or rivals' importations—
the age and validity of art works, especially old pictures, so often admit of doubt and differing opinions by the best posted persons—that with human nature as it is, there is danger of injustice being done. The opportunity also offered by the appearance at hearings on contested duty cases to learn a rival or competing dealer's business secrets is a tempting one, and, to our knowledge, has been taken advantage of in certain ways, several times during the past few years, by unscrupulous dealers.

The custom and practice therefore of the Government's calling in of art dealers or their employees, to pass upon other dealers' importations is, in our opinion, and we feel sure in that of the trade in general, a wrong and unjust
one and should cease.

There should be, in our opinion, a Board or Jury, of competent persons, whose members should be appointed
after due examination as to their qualifications, who should be in readiness to serve when called upon, and properly remunerated by the Government for their time of service—and who should not be art dealers nor employes of art dealers, when the importations
of other art dealers are to be judged—to pass upon all art importations on which the regular Government appraisers are not able to decide.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Those Library Lions.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:
Dear Sir: I have suspected for some time that the model for the good natured lions in front of the public library, which you well dubbed some time ago on account of their chin whiskers, "Peter Cooper" and "Horace Greeley," was a stuffed one. On careful examination I am confirmed in my opinion.

Directly behind the right fore leg of the northernmost lion is a patch showing distinctly that whoever executed the copy was more than Chinese in his love for detail and exact reproduction.

Yours very truly,
S. H. P. Pell.

New York, Jan. 17, 1916.

BRITISH GOV'T. BUYS ART.

Although the funds available for public art purchases have been considerably restricted, several interesting works have been acquired for the nation, notably the "Premier Matin" of the Belgian Sculptor,
M. Egide Rombaux, bought by public subscription for the Tate Gallery. This was one of the most striking exhibits in the Spring Academy and its acquisition is distinctly a matter for congratulation. The paucity of funds for purchasing for the nation important works of art in the years to come will probably lead to some species of legislation akin to that which at present obtains in Italy and of which the object
will be to prevent private owners from allowing family heirlooms to leave the country to enter foreign collections. Unless some measure of this kind be introduced, England is likely to find herself bereft of much which it is desirable that she should retain.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

The Barzizon Painters.—By Arthur
Hoerber. 12mo. F. A. Stokes Co.

By Arthur Hoerber. 12 Mo., F. A. Stokes Co.
Mr. Hoerber's last book is one of the late critic's best attainments. This volume on the Barbizon men—Millet, Corot, Diaz, Dupré, Troyon, Rousseau, Daubigny and Jacque is, however, a compound of critical and biographical matter that has little new in it. He retells, politely, tales well-known to readers of the literature of modern French art, but he tells them so simply and in a way so innocently, that one can easily imagine such a book finding warm recommendation for the "general" reader of succinct biographies.

Much of the intimate personal matter relative to the artists is quoted from European writers such as Richard Muther, Albert Wolff, Sensier and Louis Hourticq.
The American artists Will Low, Theodore Robinson and Dwight W. Tryon, are drawn on for recollections of Millet, Corot and Daubigny—Tryon's Daubigny material being especially interesting. Not until the chapter on Theodore Rousseau does Mr.
Hoerber feel called to indulge his enthusiasms.

Calling Rousseau "the greatest modern master of landscape work," he follows, with a dramatic story of his interestingly tragic career, an unusually warm commendation of Rousseau's art. Some of the best writing in the book is to be found in this chapter on Rousseau. The final chapter on Charles Jacque is also of unusual interest. Mr. Hoerber's book presents to readers in English, matter from the French which might not otherwise reach the American reader. For this reason the life stories of the Barbizon painters, which he has put together, will be welcomed.

OBITUARY.

Jeannette L. Gilder.

Miss Jeannette L. Gilder, for many years a familiar figure in N. Y. art and literary circles, died at her residence in this city
Monday evening last, aged 66.

She was born in Flushing, L. I., a daughter of the late Rev. Richard H. Gilder, and was a sister of the late Richard Watson Gilder, Col. Wm. H. Gilder and Mrs. Cholmondeley Jones and Mrs. J. G. Puron and Jos. B. Gilder. When eighteen she became a reporter on the Newark, N. J., Register, later was associated with her brother,
Richard W. Gilder, in editing the Century Magazine, and in 1881, with her young brother, Joseph Gilder, started the Critic, afterwards Putnam's Magazine, and which during its life of nearly twenty-five circles.

Miss Gilder was also dramatic and literary critic on the Herald for a period of years, and was the N. Y. correspondent of the Boston Saturday Eve. Gazette and other out of town publications on art, literary and dramatic topics. But her forte was literary criticism and by this she became best known.

Of late years, Miss Gilder, who was a warm friend of Miss Marbury's and Miss de Wolfe's, entered more into social life.
She was a member of the Colony Club and last season superintended one of the dancing halls, in which Miss Marbury was interested.

Miss Gilder was greatly esteemed and beloved by those who knew her well for her sterling qualities of mind and heart.
In her earlier days, and while always opposed to the idea of Woman Suffrage, she adopted almost a masculine costume, which won for her the reputation of eccentricity.

Miss Gilder wrote several books on literary, dramatic and social subjects.

Joseph Hirsch.

Joseph Hirsch, an old and respected cotton goods merchant, died suddenly of heart disease in this city Monday last, aged 84.
He was the father of the late Leon Hirsch,
the art collector, whose sudden death from accident three years ago so saddened a wide circle of friends, and also of Mr.
Nathan Hirsch, who is following his lamented brother's lead as an art collector.
Mr. Joseph Hirsch was a philanthropist, and a generous contributor to Jewish charities, of several of which he was a director.

Mrs. Elise Flagg.

Mrs. Elise Flagg, widow of the late Montague Flagg, portrait painter, died Wednesday at the Gainsborough Studios. Mrs.
Flagg, who had been ill for some time,
survived her husband less than a month.
There are no children.

The Albright Gallery in Buffalo is showing an interesting display of works selected from the permanent collection of the Detroit Museum.

F. Zirnbauer, who went to Carthage, Mo., recently from Paris has displayed there landscapes and portraits.

ENGLAND'S SAD ART YEAR.

The universal preaching of economy and the public duty of the investment of all available cash in the war loans necessarily led to comparative quietude in English sale-room events in 1915. Yet, on the other hand, one must look back with satisfaction on the successful series of art sales held on behalf of the Red Cross Fund and of various kindred charities, events which have gone far to prove how far the Englishman's purse can stretch when some worthy object makes a demand upon it. The artists themselves, although belonging to the class which has perhaps suffered most directly through the war, have given generously of their time and work and through their efforts have enabled many an unfortunate comrade to tide over a difficult time.

In spite of adverse conditions, the past year has been by no means devoid of its sensations. The Gilbey Sale with its total result of £37,000 and the Crews Sale with its £25,600, head the list of saleroom happenings, while among the special sale items worthy of mention, come the Althorp Rembrandt, bought by Sir Herbert Cook for £35,000, Mme. Le Brun's Portrait of herself which fetched £6,930, and Sir Thomas Lawrence's portrait of "Col. Hardy's Daughters," sold for £5,460. Three Morlands fetched over £1,000 apiece and a Van der Neer, £1,102.

Attendance at picture exhibitions has necessarily diminished from the diversion of general interest into non-artistic channels, but statistics show a gradual improvement in this respect. This is due, no doubt, to the realization that nothing can afford so satisfactory a distraction from sordid realities as truly fine art, and that it is the duty of everyone to take from time to time that relaxation which shall
the best strengthen for the strain of current events. So far it can hardly be said that the war has left much impress upon English art but, since one must stand at a certain distance from an object before one can properly observe it, this fact is not surprising. Many of our younger men have already joined the forces; others are about to do so; it is not therefore to be expected that art is likely to make any very great strides until the country is in a more settled state.

SLIGHTLY INVOLVED?

"Because St. Louis is a city, people are apt to forget that St. Louis also is a saint.
But such he is (sic) and so the cathedral in the city that is named after him also has taken his name, and appropriately is the Roman Catholic Cathedral of St. Louis."— Gustave Kobbé in N. Y. Herald, Jan. 16, 1916.

JANUARY BURLINGTON.

The opening article, in the Burlington Magazine for January, is by Giovanni Poggi and treats of Botticelli's "Annunciation" of San Martino. The head of the angel in this is reproduced for a frontispiece, while the two sections of the painting formed by the pen-dentives and lunettes of the vaulted chamber, are reproduced in two full pages. The decorations showing Achilles and Polyxne, which appear on a hydria in the Hermitage at Petrograd, furnish the subject of a paper by J. D.
Beasley. As illustrations are used sections of hydria and a stamnos, all of which are by the painter of the Berlin amphora. Campbell Dodgson has a first, of a series of articles, on the "Rare
Woodcuts in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford." As a New Year's greeting, the Burlington reproduces Blake's "The Spiritual Form of Nelson Guiding Leviathan" in the National Gallery of British Art, first published a year ago,
with the greeting, "Rule, Britannia!
Britannia Rules the Waves." Sir Martin Conway has an article on the first part of Dr. Fischel's publication of Ra-phael's Drawings, which, it says, "Has a melancholy interest, . . . ."
"bears the imprint—Berlin, 1913, but only reached us shortly before the beginning of the War." Ananda Coom-araswamy discusses some "Buddhist Primitives" in Sculpture and S. Squire Sprigg, M. D., has a curious and highly interesting article on "Art and Medicine." The Burlington may be had of the American agent, James B. Townsend, 15 E. 40 St.

The new Museum for Art and Art History
was opened at Lübeck recently.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Jan. 12, 1916.

Apropos of Academy pictures which eventually find their way to the walls of municipal galleries, "Tom" Mostyn's canvas, "The Garden of Peace," which formed so prominent a feature of last summer's show at Burlington House, and which was exhibited at the Autumn Exhibition in the Walker Art Gallery of Liverpool, has now been purchased by a Liverpool citizen and presented by him to the Liverpool Corporation for their permanent collection. Mr. Mostyn, who combines with a singular depth of imaginative power a striking sense of color, enjoys the distinction of having had more pictures purchased by and for municipal galleries than almost any other living English artist. It is not only in British galleries that his works are to be seen but also in numerous galleries on the Continent and in the Colonies.

A few weeks ago we were informed that the famous "Smile of Rheims," the smiling head of the Angel of the Cortège of Saint Nicaise of Rheims Cathedral, knocked off during the bombardment, had been purchased by a well-known American, and the statement caused special inquiries to be made by the Ministry of Fine Arts. We now learn that the head, which is unfortunately in four separate pieces, has been found in the cellar of the Archbishopal Palace and is awaiting reconstruction when the proper time arrives. As "exact" models both of the head and of the entire figure are in the Museum of Sculpture at the Trocadéro, there will be little difficulty in carrying out the restoration of this exquisite piece of sculpture with the greatest fidelity.

Bequest to Nat'l Gallery.

The National Portrait Gallery, although for the time being closed to the public, has just been enriched through the will of the late Miss Isabel Swinburne, sister of the poet, by a watercolor portrait of her brother. It will be remembered that one of the most beautiful of the Watts portraits is that of Algernon Charles Swinburne in this collection.

Never has a more speedy, nor a more substantial success, been made than that of the Dutch cartoonist, Raemakers. Ever since his exhibition opened at the Fine Art Society, he has been besieged with offers from the various newspapers and weekly magazines, reproductions of his work have been prepared in different forms and his popularity has manifested itself in all manner of profitable ways. It would be interesting to know what this clever Dutchman's income amounted to month by month in 1915, for of late he has practically been able to name his own terms to the numerous newspaper proprietors who have been clamoring for his cartoons. Mr. Raemakers' accession to fame and fortune is one of the romances of modern times and it is the more admirable since the moral influence of his work has become quite a potent factor in the armor of the Allies.

At a recent conference held at the Office of Works, attended by representatives of the Admiralty and War Office, as well as by Directors of the great Museums and Galleries, it was agreed by the naval and military experts present that no public building could be protected by any structural device from attack by air bombs. It appears however that the care of ecclesiastical buildings which are actually in use, rests in every case with the Dean and Chapter and that no responsibility with regard to them devolves upon the civic authorities.

CHICAGO.

Although the French exhibition from the Panama Exposition has arrived at the Art Institute, and is installed so that it can be partially studied, it is too confusing in its entirety for any specific comment—and the catalogs are not ready for distribution. The display gives an unusual opportunity for the study of modern French art. Chicago has the initial "stand" of this French collection, which is on tour and is now headed for Eastern cities.

The Antiquarian Society of the Art Institute opened its annual exhibition of antiques Jan. 21 with a reception, always one of the important social events of the season. A large collection of Chinese curios is an interesting feature of this display, and the permanent assemblage of fabrics, robes, textiles, cathedral cloths and other traditional textiles, pottery and bronzes, ivories and other "relics," is augmented by others lent by collectors. Among the contributors are Mmes. Martin A. Ryerson, J. Ogden Armour, William Calhoun, Charles Adams, Chauncey Keep, Russel Tyson, W. R. Lynn, Samuel E. Barrett, Chauncey A. Blair, John J. Borland, C. Morse Ely, Theodore A. Shaw, Arthur Heun and George Smith.

Charles W. Dahlgren, a local artist, has on show an assemblage of his etchings and monotypes in the Art Institute.

The Palette and Chisel Club has elected its new official staff, as follows: Pres't, John E. Phillips; Vice-Pres't, Harry L. Timmons; Sec'y, Hiram H. Thompson; Treas., Fred T. Larson; and librarian, J. Jeffrey Grant. Edward B. Butler, Chauncey Keep, Martin A. Ryerson, Frank G. Logan, V. M. Oliver and Charles H. Wacker are new associate members.

The Chicago Society of Artists has adopted the "large jury" system, and herein lies a hope that the local jury squabble, very much alive for five years, now and again, may gradually glide into a calm method of selection for competitive shows. The Chicago Society has chosen the following artists to serve for its forthcoming annual exhibition in the Art Institute: Painters, Ralph Clarkson, E. S. Cameron, Pauline Palmer, A. E. Albright, F. C. Bartlett, Ethel Coe, F. C. Peyraud, C. E. Boutwood, C. F. Browne, K. E. Buher, A. Clark, Lucie Hart-rath, F. V. Dudley, A. Juergens, W. Irvine, L. Parker, A. Nyholm, F. Werner, J. F. Stacey, L. Roecker, W. R. Reynolds; sculptors, E. Zettler, L. Crunelle, L. Taft, G. E. Ganiere and Nellie Walker.

The Art Institute officials held their annual election last week, and the directorate

PHILADELPHIA.

A group of portraits by Robert Reid is shown at the Roscubach Galleries, among them those of Mrs. Otis Skinner and Miss Katherine Wharton Morris, daughter of Harrison S. Morris.

The Art Alliance proposes to raise a fund of $300,000 within the next two weeks to complete the sum necessary for the purchase of the site and erection of a building on Walnut St., facing Rittenhouse Square, for the home of the Allied Arts and Letters. The whole amount proposed to be used is $600,000 and it is reported that a trust company has offered to advance half of this on a first mortgage on the building. The Chairman of Board of Directors of the Art Alliance is Mrs. W. Yorke Stevenson. President of the "Plays and Players" Club.

The annual "Rabbit" party of the Plastic Club, Jan. 15, took the form this year of a Russian Fête. As the club is composed exclusively of women the participants will be only of that sex. At the annual New Year's Levée of the officers of the Pa. Railroad Co. there was presented to the Board of Directors an excellent portrait of Pres.

BOSTON.

At the Boston Art Club, the Boston Society of Watercolor Painters, is giving a good account of itself. As it is a "stag party" affair, some of our best aquarellists (namely, those of feminine persuasion) are not represented. One recalls strong and original work by Sarah C. Sears, Susan Bradley, Martha Silsbee, Margaret Patterson, and Lucy Conant, for instance, which would have given this show just the "pep" it needs. However, Messrs. Richert, Nordell, Kronberg, Gallagher, Hardwick, Bixbee, Button, Pierce, and Copeland do their "durnedest"—and that is pretty good. The two first named bring youth, courage and "go" to their work, with the happiest of results. A. P. Button has a decorative sense, both of color and design, and shows some unique work. Ettore Caser (an invitee) is represented by original etchings. Louis Kronberg has a picture with a clever fan design as a centre.

Boston has many prophets—artistic and otherwise!—from Dr. Denman Ross, who has revolutionized the system of art teaching, to Eben Comins, who has compiled an elaborate method, which he imparts to inquiring minds at East Gloucester every summer. At the present date Mr. Comins has a show on at that bulwark of American art production, the Copley Gallery. Mr. Comins is reported to have discovered a feature at Gloucester, not yet exploited and cheapened by the summer artist horde at that resort, namely, the "Guinea Boats" of the Sicilian fishermen. These Guinea boats are full of color, inside and out, and Mr. Comins, who has "seen" them with chromatic exuberance, includes them in this exhibition. These and other varieties of craft that swarm in the harbor of East Gloucester, make a series of bright pictures which the "average man" can enjoy to the full, untroubled by the fact that the artist has esoteric "color schemes" and subtle theories about "linear movements in color."

Apropos of art prophets, Frederick Bosley has a "one-man" show at the Guild of Boston Artists. One feels that he has something to say in a new language, although its graces and elegancies have not yet appealed to him. It is a step forward for a Boston-trained painter to acknowledge that art has more than one beaten track! This man has a rather rare color feeling, which, although not always beautiful in all its relations and juxtapositions, is nevertheless interesting.

The Museum has an important new acquisition, a painting by Corot, given by Augustus Hemenway, in memory of Louis and Amy Hemenway Cabot.

Fogg Art Museum.

In addition to the exhibition illustrating the history of artistic lithography, the directors of the Museum opened on Monday last an important loan exhibition of Spanish Paintings especially designed to set before the students in Prof. Post's course on Spanish Art, fine original examples of the work of some of the greatest artists about whom he has been lecturing. The exhibition deserves and is sure to receive the attention of a larger University and outside public, for in addition to the wonderful portrait of Olivarez, from the Villahermosa Collection in Madrid, painted by Velasquez in 1624, there are shown fine examples of the work of El Greco, Zurbaran, Carreno, Coello, Gaya and others. Catalonian primitive art will be illustrated by the splendid Borrassa, kindly lent by the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston.

Prof. Post's conference will be announced later, and it is hoped that he will shortly publish a full account of the exhibition.

Oswald Sirén, the Scandinavian critic and student of early Italian art, delivered the first of a series of twelve lectures on Giotto and his followers in the large lecture room of the Museum on Monday last.

A Gilbert Stuart Sold.

The portrait of Bryant Parrott Tilden, painted by Gilbert Stuart in Boston in 1810 and reproduced on this page, has been sold by the Holland Galleries. The portrait is a characteristic one and was exhibited in Boston in the old Athenaeum, in the memorial display of Stuart works in 1828—the year following the artist's death.

Mr. Tilden was a prominent resident of Boston and was the Vice-President of the Handel and Hayden Society of that city.

At the Ernst Arnold Gallery, Dresden, Prof. Richard Müller, for 17 years instructor at the Academy of that city, has been exhibiting 150 drawings of war scenes in Belgium and Western France. As a reward for his work, he has been attached to the headquarters of the German army.

The Karl Blechen scholarship of $375 has been divided between Erich Feyerabend and Erich Müller, painters, while the Schulz scholarship of $750 has been awarded between the sculptors Herbert Barbe and Willy Kluck.

was continued. There were few changes made in committeemen. Charles L. Hutchinson, for many years a very active President, continues in office, as also vice-presidents Frank G. Logan and Martin A. Ryerson. Newton H. Carpenter was elected secretary again and re-appointed acting Director. William F. Tuttle was re-elected assistant secretary.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl N. Werntz spent the holiday season at Tarpon Springs.

Chicago has a brand new Art-crafts Club, and it is announced that this aggregation of "commercial artists" is not a rival of the Palette and Chisel Club. The membership is broadly liberal in its recognition of art in crafts, and includes interior decorators, jewelry designers, art productions manufacturers, metal designers, lithographers, wall paper designers, engravers and printers and art dealers and salesmen. Headquarters will be at 646 South State Street. A. D. Severinus, who was in charge of interior decorative work for Stanford White for nine years, Walter Farrington, C. G. Christensen, A. H. Menke, M. F. J. Meserow, A. Petryl and L. Huehne are among the leaders in the establishment of the club.

H. Effa Webster.

Samuel P. Rea by Julian Story. Leopold Seyffert is engaged on a portrait of Mr. Wm. H. Donner. Henry Rittenburg and Albert Rosenthal have each painted portraits of Judge Sulzberger, who has just retired from the bench. One of these will be hung in the Court of Common Pleas, where the judge recently presided, and the other goes to the Law Academy Hall, presented by members of the legal profession.

Public interest in the model of the proposed Art Museum continues, although one does not see the long file of visitors that besieged the little pavilion in City Hall court yard during the holidays.

Seven local Allied Art organizations have again combined for the presentation of the Artists' Masque to be given at the Academy of Music Feb. 22, and to be followed by a spectacular Costume Ball in Horticultural Hall. The Masque will be a continuous, romantic pageant or fantasy, the whole conceived, designed and executed by artists, with original costumes and stage settings—the music specially arranged and conducted by Stanley Muschamp, Jr. Three hundred local artists will appear in a moving color drama of superb invention and exquisite.

FROM ART TALKS WITH RANGER — (G. P. Putnam's Sons—Publishers)
 "Language is an unsatisfactory means with which to describe the subtlety of art. Art can only be explained by art itself. This is one of the unfortunate things of art criticism. Can a person describe the color blue, or with words tell the difference between a major and a minor chord in music? We get on by enough of us agreeing that certain words shall stand for certain things."

Shurtleff Memorial Exhibition.

The memorial exhibition of some 55 oils by the late Roswell M. Shurtleff, which opened in the Lotos Club Gallery with a "Stag" reception last Saturday evening—too late for notice last week, and which is still on there—numbers some 55 oils, and is a surprise, even to those who best knew the veteran Academician's painting, in the proof it affords of his ability, versatility, rare knowledge of the anatomy of trees, and the atmosphere of the forest and woodland, and intense love of Nature.

The collection, assembled by the artist's widow and friends, was skillfully hung by Mr. William T. Evans, chairman of the club's art committee, with the assistance of Charles F. Naegle, and the consensus of opinion on the display is that it is one of the most important, interesting, and best of its kind ever held in this city.

It is impossible, were it necessary, to give any detailed notice of the many beautiful and striking canvases shown. For the most part they are able and truthful transcriptions, touched with imagination and poetry of cool woodland and forest glades, with filtered sunlight or soft shadows, and of valleys and mountain-sides, through which the cool winds of Autumn, and the softer ones of Spring, sweep and blow under cloudy or sunlit skies.

The influence of the artist's fellow painter and friend, A. H. Wyant, is felt and discerned, at times, especially in the valley and mountain Autumn canvases which have, as a rule, fine color quality—but in his woodland and forest pictures, Shurtleff is entirely himself, and no other American artist has surpassed him in such renderings, which have won for him, and deservedly, the title of "the American Diaz."

Some of the best canvases have been kindly loaned by their owners, notably Mrs. L. D. Alexander's "On the Alert," which with its finely drawn stag, recalls Rosa Bonheur's portrayal of the same subject, Mr. Henry S. Harper's "Giant of the Valley," "Mysterious Woods" from the Evans National Gallery collection, Mrs. Murray Gibson's "Pathway of Light," Mr. A. M. Henry's "Autumn Glow," Mr. Collin Armstrong's "September-Adirondacks," Mr. F. T. Hill's "In the Wildwood," Mr. Willis D. Wood's "Forest-Upper Ausable," Mr. F. L. Rodewald's "Down the Brook," Miss Emily S. Wood's "Sunny Morning," and Mr. James M. Gifford's "Gleams of Sunshine."

The two or three pictures which have animals in them prove that the artist could have been a successful painter of animals, had his failing health, in latter years when he essayed their portrayal, permitted.

The display, as a whole, emphasizes the loss to American art of this gifted, kindly, American painter. James B. Townsend.

By the Contemporary Group.

Ten men painters and two women sculptors form the Contemporary Group, whose first exhibition is now on, to Jan. 20, at the Folsom Galleries, 396 Fifth Ave. The show is a highly interesting one and the galleries are decorated with much elegance and taste. Besides the 20 oils and 8 sculptures, there are 18 drawings in various media, including pastel.

Harry Berlin shows remarkable gifts in a strange "Pieta," which appears to be a slave market and a landscape, "Over the Bar," with a view of a small country church yard, in a most originally composed and solid painted landscape, very effectively lighted. Everything in the first work is subordinated to the well painted figure of the adolescent girl. Sparkling with light and delicate in color is Karl Anderson's "Westonia," while almost as attractive is "Melissa-My fair Lady" who is but a child.

Strong in color, picturesque and majestic in handling, the landscapes being well distanced, are Charles Reiffel's "Off the Highway" and "Hillside." Samuel Halpert sends his familiar "Greenwich Village" scene and a "Hillside," while Ernest Lawson is brilliant in "City Suburbs" and "Spring." William Sommer has a painted, but rather outré suggestion of Blake, called "Primitive Man." Other painters represented are D. Putnam Brinley, Hayley Lever, Allen Tucker and S. D. Shaw. The sculptures are by the late Edith Woodman Burroughs and Sarah Morris Greene who shows talent in bacchantes, among other subjects.

Pennell's at Keppel &amp; Co.'s.

Remarkable virtuosity is shown by Joseph Pennell in the collection of etchings, now on view to Feb. 18 at the Keppel Galleries, 4 East 39 St. There are a number of new N. Y. plates including views of the lower business and financial districts, as well as scenes on and from the outskirts, with the arteries of commerce as features. There are besides American views from San Francisco to Pittsburgh and a really delightful series of London scenes, architectural and riverside, recalling at times Haden and Whistler, but marked besides with a very individual cachet.

Women Artists' at Arlington Galleries.

Eight women, seven painters and one a sculptor, are exhibiting works at the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., to Jan. 29, inclusive. Among other frank and vigorously attacked "expressions" by Jane Peterson is a still life "The Mrs. Galt Corsage Bouquet," the arrangement of orchids and violets which the President presented to Mrs. Galt on their engagement. Miss Peterson's other contributions are characteristic bits of sea and shore, fishermen's cottages, docks, piers, etc. Flower gardens by Mrs. A. P. T. de Haas are genuine renderings of rich natural outdoor color schemes.

CUPID AND STILL LIFE
Cezanne

She also shows a marine and a still life, "The Spanish Shawl," well composed and charming in color. The shawl from which the little picture derives its caption was brought from Spain in 1804 by the painter's great-grandfather, Comm. Edward Preble, U. S. N., known as the "Hero of Tripoli." Mrs. de Haas, among several delightful miniatures shows one of Philip Van Rensselaer Schuyler, Jr.

"The Harbor," one of Edith Penman's canvases, is sensitive in color and atmosphere. Harriette Bowdoin's corners of Venice and fountains and gardens at Elberon, N. J., are joyous and spirited, and "A Harmony in Blue" by Agnes M. Richmond shows that she can draw better than some of her other canvases would lead one to believe. There is appealing sentiment in the work of Alethea H. Platt, and "The Mission by Moonlight" is among the five interesting exhibits by Clara T. MacChesney.

A Trio of Painters Show.

A brilliant little exhibition of 15 works by three painters is on in one of the upper galleries at Macbeth's, 450 Fifth Ave. to Feb. 1. The exhibitors are Emil Carlsen, Helen M. Turner and Daniel Garber. The first shows a couple of masterly still life canvases, one of simple objects and the other "The Mandarin's Necklace," a couple of quiet toned landscapes and a superb marine, a view of the "Sand Bar at Skagen." The second has the same number of works in a solidly handled plein air vein two women's figures, one with a guitar, another in "The Golden Hours," and the third a brilliant little interior study of a woman in negligee reading "The Morning News." Miss Turner has also two landscapes. Mr. Garber who envelops four of his five landscapes in fine light and air, is at his best in "Morning in the Hills" and "Morning Mist." There is also a picturesque "The Old Apple Tree." The color in all three is full and of fine quality.

Portrait Drawings by Mrs. McNamee.

A group of attractive and very well individualized portraits of children and women by Dorothy McNamee, are on view, to Jan. 29, at the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St. The works are in pastel, lightly colored light reds predominating, and there is delicacy and correctness of outline. Holbein has evidently been Mrs. McNamee's model and she is successful alike in her profiles and her three-quarter views. There is perhaps a little too much prominence given to the eyes, and there is some lack of decision in the drawing, which is, however, graceful. The artist is a daughter of Admiral Swinburne, and the wife of Commander Luke McNamee, U. S. N., lately returned from Mexico, where he commanded the U. S. Sacramento. Her mother was a sculptor and a pupil of St. Gaudens.

Group of "Ten" at MacDowell Club.

Members of the group of ten now on exhibition at the MacDowell Club, 108 West Fifty-fifth St. to Jan. 30 inclusive are showing thumbbox sketches as well as finished canvases. The work of F. K. Detwiller has charm of color and his painting is sensitive. A view of the Tuileries gardens is among his larger exhibits, also a Provincetown street in autumn and a moonlight picture. His small contributions include some entertaining notes of Brittany and of Paris. Louis Skidmore's "Cargo Coaster" and "Black Diamonds" are two of the most interesting canvases shown. Frank Moore shows a nice decorative sense in his realistic and vigorously treated landscapes "November Sun Sets," "Afternoon Glow," etc. His "Woods in Springtime," an impression of blossoming dogwood trees, is one of the most delightful and spontaneous of the thumbboxes. John E. Parker's portrayals of battles have good action and are individual.

There is a rather effective artificially lighted arrangement of a nude girl in a disordered studio, arranging her hair by J. E. Costigan. The nude holding up a bracelet, in one of his other canvases is not as fleshy and the "spotting" of the whole is less effective. Marguerite Allen, a woman of "modernistic" persuasion shows a girl in dishabille, some flowers and a still life—all are unafraid in color and clever as to arrangement—a bit coarse and crude, however.

Works by Kirchner.

At the Rose Galleries, 246 Fifth Ave., Mr. Boss of the Bruton Galleries of London and Paris has on view to Feb. 3, 54 works by Raphael Kirchner, which picture the charms, chiefly in half nakedness, of women. They are drawn with much delicacy and skill in somewhat the same style as the pen and inks familiar in the "Vie Parisienne," and similar French publications. There is also a capital portrait of the Comte de Chrissey. Mr. Kirchner has had many medals and has works in various museums, including that at Orleans, an "Entry of Jeanne d'Arc." There is a long bridge from this to the pimpantes Parisiennes.

Blue Dome Fellowship Show.

At an exhibition of paintings by members of the Blue Dome Fellowship, now at 37 Mad. Ave. to Jan. 31, a group of watercolors by Charles B. Cook are noteworthy for a good sense of decoration, Henrik Hillbom's "June Morning—Catskills," a landscape with figures, in which the laurel is especially true to nature, has nice pictorial quality. Helen A. T. Penniman shows a nude in sunlight, well drawn and posed, and Abbie Sullivan an atmospheric composition of a river with boats.

Miss Dewing Woodward contributes three canvases. Her "Rose Curtains" is vigorously handled and decidedly original. Two studies from the nude entitled "First Morning and Second Morning Hour," have refinement of vision and are rendered in a charmingly subtle manner. A. E. Champlin shows some decorative watercolors, good illustrations for a child's fairy book and two small landscapes by Roy Elliott Bates are true to nature and poetic quality.

Among other exhibitors are Lilian Whish, Gertrude Stanwood, Anne Schuyler, Florence S. Rolfe, Edmund Rolfe and Edith F. Raymond.

Book of the Homeless Sale.

A quite original exhibit and sale, opening today, of drawings, paintings and manuscripts, is to be held by the courtesy of Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, at the American Art Galleries, 6 East 23 St., for the benefit of the "American Hostess for the Refugees and the Children of Flanders." The sale will take place Jan. 25 at 3 p. m. The objects to be sold were contributed to the "Book of the Homeless," published by Charles Scribner's Sons and compiled by Mrs. Wharton from the above object. The authors range from Barres to Stravinsky, the draughtsmen from Bakst to Van Rysselberghe and the painters from Max Beerbohm to Sargent.

Decorative Panels by F. S. Church.

In a lower gallery at Macbeth's, 450 Fifth Ave. there are to be seen to Feb. 1, 19 decorative flower panels from the sympathetic brush of F. S. Church. With them is one of the best of his quaintly humorous animal subjects, showing as the main figure, a polar bear who is "Our Northern Correspondent."

Old Art at Chadwick's.

At the John Chadwick Gallery, 13 East 57 St., there are now on exhibition and sale rare and interesting textiles just arrived from Europe after much delay—Velvets, Brocades, Tapestries and Laces of XIV to XVII century, some old Talavera and Alcora pottery, Hispano-Moresque Placques, Arabic Marbles and Copper Vessels, glass and other works of art.

TOO MUCH FRENCH ART.

(By the Second Viewer.)

The premature taking down of the French paintings hung in the ball-room of the Ritz-Carlton, because the attendance was insufficient to justify the exhibition's continuance, is an adequate explanation of the fact that New York is having a surfeit of modern French art. Dealers and others may as well take warning that beyond a certain point, the exploitation of modern European art, decadent or otherwise, is neither good for the disinterested progress of fine arts in this country or lastingly good for the purely business side of fine art dealing.

Even the name of Cezanne, potent as it has become, through the undeniable merits that have been "discovered" in his works, as through the clever inflation of his vogue, cannot cover with glory a group of artists, whose merits at best are second or ever third rate.

Recent exhibitions have made it more than ever clear that America is today producing the healthiest art in the world, and that any neglect on the part of those engaged in the propagation of meritorious productions, denotes failure to observe and take advantage of prevailing conditions. The art writers of the daily press, to whom so many look for judicious guidance with regard to exhibitions, could do much toward putting "the powers" properly in touch with contemporaneous work, if these writers would assert, once in a while, an ability to really guide, rather than a willingness to serve. The dealers are clever men, quick to note any change in the public temper, and it is an injustice to the dealer, as well as to the public, to give misrepresentations and publicity to exhibitions which mark French art in its decline. A modest dose of Cezanne is a good thing—the same can be said of Van Gogh (will not some one get up a show of Gauguin?)—but when good space that might be devoted to fine American painting is utilized to expose yards of La Touches, Besnards, Simons and Cottets, one feels like making a declaration of war. Let us have some strong American shows, not the hackneyed stuff, but the live painting and sculpture. There is plenty of it.

BALTIMORE.

Eight of the beautiful landscapes by Charles H. Collings, the Canadian artist, hold the place of honor—generally reserved for a single large work of more or less striking physical features—at the 20th annual exhibition of the Baltimore Watercolor Club, now on at the Peabody Gallery. Mr. Collings' paintings are greatly admired, especially by the artists. It has been a long time since any art works of the kind have been shown here that could compare with them in subtle poetry or exquisite color. The show has 191 numbers and while more conservative than customary, there is plenty of variety of style and subject and a sufficient element of modernity. Hayley Lever, John J. Dull, George Luks and Fred Wagner are the artists whose works, perhaps, contribute the most brilliant factors, in point of color at least. Mr. Dull sent seven of his joyous Addingham group of six of his sketches.

ART AND BOOK AUCTIONS.
Bahr Oriental Art Sold.

At the opening session of the sale of a collection of Oriental art objects formed by Mr. H. W. Bahr, at the American Art Galleries on Monday afternoon last, a total of $17,732.50 was obtained.

Mr. W. W. Seaman, as agent, gave $720 for a Chien Lung agate carving of a duck for a Chien Lung agate vase and cover, $330 for an agate vase and cover, $330 for a buffalo horn bird cage, $300 for an enamelled snuff bottle, $270 and $250 for two others. Mr. Roland Moore paid $520 for an enamelled snuff bottle and $270 for another example. Mr. W. E. Benjamin gave $420 for a mythical white jade animal, and Miss Louise McCarthy $330 for a carved white jade bowl and cover and $250 for a Chien-Lung snuff bottle. To K. U. Painter went for $250 an enamelled snuff bottle. Mr. H. J. Henry gave $350 for a red lacquer jewel casket, and $290 for a writer's brush pot of jade.

At the session of Tuesday, $26,010 was realized. The highest price of the art was the $900 paid by Mrs. P. J. Ballou, for a Fu-Kien Goddess of Mercy. For another figure of the same in blanc-de-chine, she paid $75, and for a blue and white club shaped vase, $570. Mr. Tomes paid $700 for an animal in sang-de-boeuf glaze and $375 for a figure of Kuan-Yin, Goddess of Mercy. To Miss Lorenz, agent, went a moss green bowl at $610; a cream white Yung-Cheng bottle at $600; a Fu-Kein figure of Dai-Mu, $520, and a seated figure of Kuan-Yin, $300.

The concluding session Wednesday fetched $26,532, which made the grand total of the sale $70,275.

The highest price of the day was paid by Mr. O. A. Jones, who secured for $5,200 a large Kang-Hsi Imperial yellow Chinese rug. Miss Lorenz, agent, obtained for $1,250 a pair of Chien-Lung kingfisher feather screens. Four sets of K'o-Ssu Imperial hangings went to Mr. L. L. Jones at $1,200. He also secured for $560 the Shun-Chia "Coromandel" carved screen, and for $375 a mirror painted palace screen.

Mr. Henry gave $430 for one Chien-Lung carpet and $310 for another. The first amount was given by Mr. Seaman, agent, for a pair of teakwood wall panels, with gilt bronze figures. Mr. Towne paid $340 for an Imperial silk K'o-Ssu robe and "Gramercy" $390 for a set of XVIII century embroidered silk panels. Mrs. A. Lehman gave $300 for two K'o-Ssu hangings.

Levy Print Collection Sold.

At a sale of a collection of prints from the estates of Miss Elizabeth Levy and others, held at the American Art Galleries Monday afternoon last, a total of $4,627.54 was realized. The highest figure of the sale, $825, was paid by Mr. James Henry for a fine impression of Shoengauer's "Virgin Appealing to St. John," who also gave $340 for Shoengauer's "St. George" and $50 for his "Crucifixion." A. Haig's "Mount St. Michel" sold for $310, and $170 was given for Van Meckenem's "The Beheading of St. John." Mr. F. Meder paid $140 for Durer's "Knight, Death and Devil" and $110 for his "Melancholia."

End of Burton Book Sale.

At the Session, Jan. 13, of the sale at the Anderson Galleries of Part VII, of the Burton Library, $464 was realized. The Brooklyn Public Library gave $22 for the first 7 vols. of the "Old Guard Magazine, 1863-1870," and the Cadmus Book Co. $15.50 for a lot consisting of "The Military and Naval History of the Rebellion," "Mission Ridge" and "Women in Battle."

On Jan. 14 Mr. George D. Smith paid $30 for Gerrit Smith's speeches and letters on "The Rebellion," and Mr. G. H. Blake $27.50 for a collection of the annual reports of U. S. Treasurer Spinner, 1861-1874. The total was $501, which brought the grand total to $26,904.50.

Daniel Huntington Library Sold.

At the first session of a book sale at the Anderson Galleries Monday afternoon the library of the late Daniel Huntington, former president of the National Academy, was dispersed. This included a number of the artist's sketch-books, and were purchased by Mr. George D. Smith, who secured for $275 a set of 22 with landscape studies; for $157.50, miscellaneous sketches; for $155, several pencil studies for portraits; for $135, another lot; for $130, some 200 drawings from nature; for $120; a set of sketch books, and for $102.50, some landscape sketches.

Mr. E. J. Ellison secured for $205 several books, among which were Abbey's and Boughton's "Sketching Rambles in Holland" and "Old Masters and New" by Kenyon Cox. Mr. Harold Ehrich gave $158 for 3 volumes of engravings after Reynolds and Mr. Russell Peabody $55 for a collection of medallion portraits by St. Memin. The total for the session was $4,146.45.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.

The success of the sale of the Reisinger pictures this week augurs well for the coming dispersal of the unusually fine, large and varied collection of pictures formed by Mr. Catholina Lambert, and which is to be dispersed in a four evenings' sale in the Plaza ballroom, probably on Feb. 21-24 next, inclusive, following an exhibition in the American Art Galleries, to open Feb. 12 next.

While the Reisinger pictures were all modern, those of Mr. Lambert have many examples of the Old Masters, some of great value and importance, and there are also many fine modern canvases. They will therefore appeal to a larger audience, and to more picture collectors than did the signed by Rembrandt, dated 1632, from Durand-Ruel, portraits by Mytens, Janssens, Mierevelt, van Ravensteyn, Van der Helst and two each given to Van Dyck and Jordaens.

The English school is represented—Reynolds with five examples, Lawrence with eight, Gainsborough with two, Romney by two, Wilson by three, and Hoppner, Raeburn, Beechey and others by one or more each, for the most part purchased through or from the late T. J. Blakeslee.

Modern French Paintings.

Among the Barbizon masters and their contemporaries there are two good Corot landscapes and examples each of Rousseau, Troyon and Diaz, Daubigny, Jules Dupre, Delacroix, Lepine and Boudin.

Puvis de Chavannes is represented by three examples, among them his "Saint Genevieve," and Georges Michel by 17 examples.

Claude Monet has six canvases, Renoir, four; Sisley, eight, and Pissarro, seven. Of the Monticellis, two were painted for the Empress Eugenie. Courbet, Huget the other painters of the later XIX century are represented.

Reisinger pictures, as the taste for the collection of Old Masters is still strong and growing in this country.

The pictures in Mr. Lambert's collection, and of which the ART NEWS will have more to say, and, in detail, before the sale, were secured by him both in Europe and America, and have a wide range of subjects, school and period, from the early Italian school of the XV century to the modern American masters. The most important of the early Italian works are Madonnas by Botticelli and del Sarto, the former from the late Sir William Agnew's collections, and the latter from that of the late Martin Colnaghi. There is also a large, most important and beautiful altar piece by Bernardino Luini (1465-1533), purchased through the Blakeslee Gallery some years ago, and reproduced in the ART NEWS at that time. The late Sir William Agnew placed this really great picture with Mr. Morgan's Raphael, now in the Metropolitan Museum, and Carlo Dolci's Madonna of the Eight Stars, then at Plenheim Palace, as the three greatest altar pieces of the world.

Old Spanish, Dutch and Flemish Works.

The Spanish pictures include examples of Murillo, Pereda, El Greco, Carreno de Miranda, Coello and Ribera.

Among the Dutch and Flemish XVII century works is a portrait of de Gelder

Verestchagin is represented by his "The Kremlin at Moscow," "Pearl Mosque at Agra" and several smaller examples.

The Modern Americans.

Among the modern American school is a series of Blakeslee's, eleven in all, among them "Landscape and Moonlight," 6 ft by 4. The majority of them were painted for Mr. Lambert by Geo. Inness, Alexander Harrison, Arthur Quartley, Bogert, Rehn, Kost, F. M. Boggs, Carleton Wiggins and other American artists are all represented.

There are fifty sculptures in the collection, including "Young Apollo," A. E. M. Wolff; "Hiawatha," Hiram Powers; "Pandora," C. B. Ives; "The Rose of Sharon," P. Romanelli; "The Youthful Tasso," Lelio Horelli; "Cupid and Psyche," Tademi; "The Jewish Maiden," C. B. Ives; "Diana of the Ephesians," and "Cæsar," from the antique; "Crouching Venus," N. Barzanti; "Susanah," Lombardi; "Bianco Capello," G. Trentonove; "Reclining Venus" and "Ruth," S. N. Freeborne; "Night," "Vanity" and "Modesty," C. B. Ives.

Philadelphia Picture Sale.

At the sale of paintings from the estates of Robt. Hall Powel and Miss D. H. Weeks at the Philadelphia Art Galleries last week the highest price, $260, was for a figure subject by Detti. A marine by Wm. T. Richards brought $235 and "Rural Life in France" by E. Debat-Ponson went for $250. "The Sanctuary" by E. Leutze was sold for $225. "Evening Landscape" by Julian Rix fetched $210; "On the Seine" by D. R. Knight $185; a small Clay's "Group of Boats on the Escant" $120; "Sheep-Interior" by C. A. Jacque $130; "Coming from the Pasture," C. P. Gruppe, $140; "Near Chatillon, Vosges" by J. Monchablon $150; "Evening on L. I. Sound," Edward Moran, $125, and "Waiting for the Boats" by Jos. Israels $155.

Sale of Bronzes and Clocks.

Theodore S. Starr, Inc., Fifth Ave., jewelers and silversmiths, having decided to discontinue their clock and bronze department, have consigned the entire stock to the Anderson Galleries for unrestricted public sale. The goods filled an entire floor in their Fifth Ave. store and are mainly new and of recent importation. Among the bronzes are fine examples of the works of the leading French sculptors, including Meissonnier, Gerome, Carpeaux, Moreau and others, while among the American sculptors represented are MacMonnies, Borglum, Shradly and Mrs. Vonnoh.

The collection of clocks is large and of great variety, embracing French period clock sets, mantel chiming clocks, important hall clocks and a few interesting antiques. The sale also includes vases of Louis XVI period, minatures by Patout, a leading Paris miniaturist, and examples of Wedgwood and Minton porcelains, the latter unique reproductions, exclusively for this house, of famous Sevres vases in the Wallace collection. These collections will be on exhibition in the Anderson Galleries from Feb. 1 to the sale in four afternoon and evening sessions, beginning Mon. aft. Feb. 7.

PROVIDENCE.

At the Rhode Island School of Design, paintings, portraits and landscapes, by Wilbur D. Hamilton are on view. In his portraits, Mr. Hamilton does not hesitate to introduce vivid primary colors in costumes and accessories. The portrait of Dr. Edward Cowles, a scholarly and dignified sitter, is the best and most straightforward canvas shown. Other important canvases are a full length portrait of Mrs. Hamilton in pale green with accessory note of lavender, portrait group of Mrs. Davenport Brown and daughter with its insistent notes of rose and cherry, and a portrait of Mrs. R. D. Harris, a seated figure in grey with accents of color in the upholstered chair.

"Evening—November" is full of quiet repose. A second small canvas, "Evening," suggests the influence of Corot.

In the inner gallery are shown striking war posters and a large canvas by Robert H. Nisbet, "The Hum of Noon." This painting is full of color and form and is a conscientious and able work.

Prof. John F. Greene of Brown University was the speaker at the Sunday afternoon docent talk at the R. I. School of Design, taking as his topic "Art in a Roman Household."

The Whitaker paintings are still on at the Art Club and several recent sales are announced, among which are "The Meadow Brook" and a small rich toned wood interior.

The Providence Art Club held its annual meeting Jan. 5. Mr. Sydney R. Burleigh was elected president, Mr. Russell W. Knight, vice-pres.; Mr. James A. Kinghorn, treasurer, and Mr. George L. Cooke, secretary.

At the recent annual meeting of the Providence Water Color Club, M. Cyrus Farnum was elected President, H. Anthony Dyer, Vice-Pres., Mrs. Maude Richmond Fenner, Treas., and W. Alden Brown, Secy. The annual exhibition of this club will come early in February, after which a rotary exhibition, similar to last season's will be inaugurated. It will be shown in April at Syracuse, N. Y.

Mrs. S. M. Pitman and Mr. Pitman are in San Diego, Cal., for a stay and Mrs. Pitman will presumably bring home some interesting watercolors. W. Alden Brown.

The Düsseldorf Art gallery of Edward Schulte recently closed its doors until the termination of the war. Regret has been expressed at this step having been found necessary.

The exhibition of works by Suabian artists by the Schaller Gallery, Stuttgart, has been prolonged. Special prominence is given to the paintings of Karl Goll.

The Baden Art Society recently held a memorial exhibition at Carlsruhe of works by Carlos Grethe, the noted marine painter, who died in 1913, and who had been a professor at Carlsruhe before becoming director of the Stuttgart Art Academy.

The Schleswig-Holstein Provincial Museum has been holding two exhibitions of Military Art.

SALE TO COME.

Bankrupt Art Firm's Stock Sold.

An important collection of etchings, engravings, watercolors and oils is now on exhibition at the Anderson Galleries, Madison Ave. at 40 St., preliminary to public sale on Wed., Thurs. and Fri. eves., Jan. 26-28. The collection is to be sold by order of the U. S. District Court under the direction of Mr. Frank M. McKey, of Chicago, trustee in bankruptcy for Robb R. Ricketts, who traded as Moulton & Ricketts.

Etchings, colored photo-engravings, sporting prints, colored facsimiles, original colored lithographs, and colored artist-proof mezzotints will be sold on Wed. eve. and among the artists represented in this division are Greenhead, James, Payrau, Stevenson, Haig, Brangwyn, Dicksee, Howarth, Sadler and Unwin.

The watercolors are to be sold on Thurs. eve. Nearly 200 of these formed part of a collection originally made by Mr. Gustav H. Buek, of N. Y., and were chosen, not alone because of the importance of the artists represented, but to preserve a line of American watercolors from the early period of the Hudson River school to the present day. The collection has been exhibited in the Art Museums of Brooklyn, Chicago, St. Louis, Toledo, and other cities, and has everywhere attracted wide interest. Among the artists represented are Beckwith, Burroughs, Crane, Eaton, Fenn, Gibson, Hart, January 20th to February 3d, 1 to 5 P. M.

DAILY EXCEPT TUESDAYS.

Inness, Lippincott, Millet, Moran, Ochtman, Parsons, Remington, Satterlee, Smedley, Smillie, Turner and Weir.

The sixty-five oils are to be sold Friday eve. and among the artists represented are George Inness, Robert Minor, Homer Martin, Elliott Daingerfield, Walter Shirlaw, Ralph A. Blakelock and William Keith.

The painting by James M. Hart, is entitled "Midsummer" and is a signed canvas 32 by 45 in—a fine example. William Steelink, the Dutch painter, is represented by a signed canvas slightly smaller in size, entitled "The Return to the Fold." Achille Fould's "Blind Man's Buff," also illustrated in the catalogue is an unusually fine piece of work. The Sir Peter Lely is a portrait of the "Duchess of Bedford," and was purchased from Arthur Tooth & Sons. The same firm sold the portrait by Thomas Hudson. Rosa Bonheur is represented by two examples each with the seal of her sale on the back. "Fawn at Rest," and "The Tiger." The Corot, a signed and dated canvas of 1868, is the "Port de Dinan."

TORONTO.
Canadian artists have been doing their part towards the relief of those suffering from the effects of the war, as well as contributing constantly to the Red Cross funds. The raising of funds for the Belgian sufferers has been undertaken by Mrs. Agar Adamson, and in connection with her work, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Reid and Miss Mary Winch are holding an exhibit of some 30 oils at the Royal Ontario Museum. All the pictures were sold on the first afternoon, and over $300 realized for the relief of the Belgians. Interest in the exhibit has not abated.
The attractive studio of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Britton is open for visitors. There is a wealth of beautiful color in Mr. Britton's work in both oil and watercolor.
Mrs. Dignam has a group of her summer and autumn sketches of beautiful gardens painted in different parts of Canada and Holland, on view at the new home of the Woman's Art Association. Mrs. Dignam was the energetic founder of this large society of women artists about 30 years ago. Miss Dorothy Stevens won the travelling scholarship awarded at the recent salon of the Royal Canadian Academy, Montreal, for her two pictures. The scholarship is $1,000, but Miss Stevens will not go abroad until the termination of the war.

An exhibition of Ion. Thompson's Algonquin Park sketches is on in the Arts and Letters Club. This artist sleeps in a tent on his sketching expeditions and gets on familiar footing with Mother Nature.
A. S. Wrenshall.

KANSAS CITY.
An exhibition of paintings by American artists of today followed the showing of works by French Impressionists, from the Durand-Ruel Galleries, N. Y., at the Fine Arts Institute. The inevitable fish still life by Chase and a mildly interesting "Portrait of a Lady," by the same painter; two Henri's in that master's latest manner; two landscapes by Gardner Symons, and a Frieseke that, surprisingly enough, lacks vividness of color, form the nucleus of the exhibit. Louise Brumback is represented by an interesting view of a Gloucester pier. George Bellows sends two purported landscapes that do little to guarantee, what is chiefly a reputation, to the Middle West. Others represented are Dougherty, Guy Wiggins, Hawthorne, Ritschell, Jonas Lie, Lawson, Irving Wiles, Douglas Volk, William Potter, Daniel Garber, Davey and George R. Barse.

NEWARK (N. J.)
The Newark Museum Association will hold an exhibition of the Textile Industries of New Jersey, Feb. 1 to March 18 next, to include cloth making, knitting, embroidery, rug weaving and felt hat making. The display will be primarily commercial, but so carefully arranged and classified as to be also of educational and artistic value. Processes as well as products will be shown; pamphlets telling the story of weaving will be prepared, and Museum instructors will explain to classes of school children, club-women and other groups, the several aspects of the industry here to be illustrated. The exhibition will trace the development of weaving in New Jersey. The American Museum of Natural History will lend for this their collection of bark mats and bags and a primitive loom, showing how the Delaware Indians spun and wove before the white man came.
The Museum hopes to show by a series of these one-industry displays, year by year, the value of specialized exhibits covering a given field, and frankly commercial as well as scientific, industrial and artistic in character. It hopes, too, to demonstrate how inexpensively museums, localities or groups of manufacturers, can arrange dignified and attractive exhibitions, which will give rational and helpful publicity to the manufacturer and at the same time educate the public to a better knowledge and appreciation of the world of industry.

Swedish Art in Brooklyn.
The Swedish art exhibit, at the Pan-Pacific Exposition, at San Francisco, is to be transferred to the Brooklyn Museum, and remain on view there from Jan. 30 to Feb. 28, inclusive. There are to be additions sent from Sweden. The opening reception will be held Jan. 29. The display will later be shown at the Copley Gallery in Boston, the Pa. Academy, and the Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Toledo Museums. The organizer of this rotary show is Mr. William Henry Fox, the director of the Brooklyn Museum, who was a member of the International Jury at San Francisco. The display will be hung in Brooklyn by the Swedish Commissioner, Mr. Anshelm Schulzberg. The catalog will be by Dr. Christian Brinton.

AROUND THE STUDIOS.
Edward McCarter has moved from his studio at 5 W. 16 St. to one at 120 E. 34 St.

George Gray Barnard recently exhibited the working model of his "Lincoln" to a number of friends.

Miss Renee Prahar has recovered from her illness and is working on a Mermaid fountain.

Henry Herring is to model the sculptures for the section of the Field Museum, Chicago, to be built out over the lake, back of the Art Institute.

Frederick W. MacMonnies has taken the studio at 158 E. 51 St., formerly occupied by Mr. Proctor. Mr. MacMonnies's reason for returning from Europe was not the war, but a desire to execute the City Hall monument on the spot and to be in close touch with the architects connected with it.

A Watteauesque mural, painted by Jerome Brush, son of George de Forest Brush, has just been placed in the new Edison building at Hartford, Conn.

Miss Malvina Hoffman has moved to the new studio building at 120 E. 34 St.

Arthur Crisp's garden party decoration, entitled "Hospitality," shown at the Allied Artist's exhibition last spring, has been placed as an over mantel in the living room of a private residence at Buffalo.

Robert Aitken is modeling a "Wounded Diana," the conception refreshingly original.

Gaetone Capone has just completed a most interesting portrait of Miss Marguerite St. Clair and is at work on a composition, a nude girl, seated on a rock watching the incoming tide.

Albert P. Lucas has returned to his studio after a six weeks' visit in Boston, where he has been painting portraits.

OLD MASTERS of the English, Dutch and Italian Schools.
MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 14 CLIFFORD STREET LONDON, W. is acting as private agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

FINAL ACADEMY SALES.
During last week—the last of the Winter Academy—sales were made of a sculpture "South Winds" by Louise Allen, for $60, and of an oil "Gin and the News" by H. Schnakenberg for $150.
These sales, added to those already published in the ART NEWS, made a total of 16 oils, sold for $12,485, and of 13 sculptures, sold for $690, a grand total of $13,475. There were 17 buyers and one oil and two sculptures went to England.
The Winter Academy this year is considered to have been very successful in both sales and attendance. The two largest sales were made to prominent N. Y. collectors.

Newport.
The Art Association of Newport will probably move into its new home in the John N. A. Griswold house about March 18. On that date the lease of the present quarters on Church street runs out and it would have to be renewed if they remained there. The association, however, will take possession of the Griswold place probably toward the first of February, as it must according to the agreement, which would lapse on February 1. Still, the association is not inclined to call for an early transfer of the deed as it is probable that the committee on ways and means will be able to report something that will result in the scaling down of the required mortgage within a few weeks.

American Art News

VOL. XIV., No. 17. Entered as second class mail matter, N. Y. P. O. under Act of March 3, 1879.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 29, 1916.

SINGLE COPIES, 10 CENTS.

MR. DREICER'S MEMLING.

It was exclusively announced in the ART NEWS last week, which gave the news to the dailies, that a well known New York and Paris dealer, who is Mr. Kleinberger, had sold to a collector of jewels as well as pictures, who is Mr. Michael Dreicer, an important example of the work of Hans Memling and said to be his last, the famous "The Archer," which was once owned by the late Freiherr Albert von Oppenheim, but was sold before it was decided to offer his collection at auction year before last in Berlin. This sale, it will be recalled, was not held on account of the war. The portrait of the young man holding an arrow, reproduced on this page, is a work of much distinction and one of the very finest examples of the famous Flemish master. The tradition is that it is a portrait of one of the sons of Charles the Bold. The panel measures 10 x 12 inches and the date is 1483. In 1911 it was exhibited at Brussels.

COMING "BALL OF THE GODS."

There has been such a flood of applications from patronesses desiring boxes for the "Ball of the Gods," at the Hotel Astor, Friday, February 11, under the auspices of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, that the Committee will be obliged to select the holders by lot. The distribution of boxes will be made immediately after the drawing of lots, and the names of the winners will then be made known. The fact that the boxes are in such demand lends renewed evidence that the ball will surpass both point of attendance and in general brilliance, the beautiful Venetian Fete of 1913.

No one will be admitted to the ball or in the boxes, unless in mythological costume, and to aid those who will attend, the committee has arranged a large exhibit of materials and designs for costumes at the Beaux Arts Society Rooms, 126 East 75 Street, on view every day until the date of the ball; and from 4-6 P.M., a costumer will be in attendance to take measurements and orders.

For the pageant, which will require the services of 500 men and women, a number of distinguished artists have offered their aid. There will be a prolog, written by Charles Raun Kennedy, to be recited by Edith Wynne Matthison and special music composed by Kurt Schindler, who will appear as the High Priest. Ruth St. Denis and husband, Mr. Shawn, will dance in the Hindu tableau. The pageant, to be produced under the direction of Howard Greenley, is divided into three parts, India, Egypt and Greece. The scene, an abandoned temple on the Island of Cyprus, will be designed and be constructed by Mr. James Monroe Hewlett.

A group representing India is being organized by Gerome Brush; Egypt by C. Grant LaFarge; Greece by Mrs. John W. Alexander and Lloyd Warren. The orchestra will be under the direction of Kenneth M. Murchison. Groups representing the musicians will be organized by Alonzo Potter and Mr. Schindler, from members of the Scuola Cantorum. The group of the designers of costumes will be organized by Miss Claire Avery; the groups of writers and poets by Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff, Jr.; a group from the Players' Club by Oswald Herring; a group of interior decorators by Mrs. Belmont Tiffany; and a group of painters and sculptors by Mr. and Mrs. Gerome Brush.

Among the Gods of India will be Miss Janet Scudder as Ratti, the Goddess of Night; and Mrs. Gerome Brush as Sita. In the Egyptian group, Mrs. Alexander D. B. Pratt will appear as Isis; Mrs. Ogden Mills as Mephtys; Miss Barbara Rutherford as Matt; and Mrs. William M. Wright as Sefket. In the Grecian group, Gordon Knox Bell will appear as Pan, and Mrs. Austin Gray will lead the Hours of the Night. Apollo will be represented by Malcolm Whitman, and Zeus by Joseph Howland Hunt. Mrs. John Jacob Astor will appear as Hera; Mrs. Sidney Breese as Pallas-Athena; Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas will be Artemis; and Mrs. Lydig Hoyt will be Persephone. The Ballet of the Rainbow will be led by Miss Juliana Cutting, and the Maidens of Lethe will be under the direction of Mrs. Robert L. Bacon.

Mr. Lloyd Warren is chairman of the Ball Committee and 100 modish women will act as patronesses.

CANFIELD ART APPRAISAL.

The report of the transfer tax appraiser, Mr. Charles Sweeney, who has been taking testimony in the estate of Richard Canfield, appraises his antique furniture, just sold, at $65,175, paintings at $14,750, porcelains at $8,765, and books at $834. Forty-five Whistler lithographs are appraised at $5,000, one picture by Harpignies at $2,500, and another at $2,000; and two Boudins at $1,000 each. Curiously the Whistler portrait of Mr. Canfield is appraised at only $3,000.

The special exhibit of textiles in the Metropolitan Museum will be continued through Feb. 13, after which the gallery containing it will be closed in preparation for an important exhibition of early Chinese art to be opened at the beginning of March.

Moulton and Ricketts Dividend.

A second dividend of 3% has been declared by the Referee in Bankruptcy for Robb R. Ricketts, trading as Moulton and Ricketts, whose failure season before last, made such a sensation in the art trade. Meanwhile Mr. Ricketts is merrily trading in pictures again under the name of Moulton and Ricketts, and is doing business with N. Y. and other art dealers. There are mysteries in the American art business world, and this is one of the greatest.

Bankrupt's Firm's Small Dividend.

After a dividend of 3% some little time ago the Referee in Bankruptcy for H. O. Watson and Co. announces a second and final dividend of 1%, payable in February. This is a disappointing result for the creditors of this old house.

A. FREEMAN PICTURE SALE.

As was predicted in the ART NEWS of Dec. 11 last, soon after the death of Andrew Freedman, at which time the ART NEWS published exclusively a list of the more important paintings in his unusually important collection of works by the most noted modern Foreign painters, with a few examples of modern Americans—the collection is to be sold at auction by the American Art Association, under the direction of Messrs. Walter G. Oakman, Samuel Untermyer and the Guaranty Trust Co., executors, in the Plaza Ballroom early in April next.

Mr. Freedman was an amateur collector who acquired from interest and some study of the subject a knowledge of the pictures of the schools he favored, and through the advice, guidance and assistance of friends better posted, was enabled to form a collection composed of works of unusual quality, chiefly of the modern Foreign schools. He was a buyer, on the advice of friendly dealers at the best auctions of past seasons, notably at those of the H. S. Henry, James A. Garland, Theron Butler and Alexander Blumenstiel collections, from which sales most of his best pictures came.

Leading the examples of "The Men of 1830" in the collection, are the two important Troyons "Normandy Pastures" from the Theron Butler and "Return from Market" from the H. S. Henry collections. From the same H. S. Henry collection is a fine example of Fromentin "Fantasia" and from the A. E. Borie collection, another "The Falconer."

Corot is represented by "Nymphs Bathing" from the Mary Jane Morgan, James A. Garland and Alexander Blumenstiel collections. There are two Diazes "Scenes in Fontainebleau Forest," a good Jacque—a typical work "Sheep Near Fontainebleau," and a superior Jules Dupre, "Cattle Isle d'Adam."

From the poetic brush of Cazin there are three examples, while an important Schreyer, "Arabs en Route," is of rare quality. Marie Dieterle, the gifted daughter of Van Marcke, is represented by a charming canvas, "Cows in Pasture." There are four important examples by Henner in that master's best manner. Harpignies is represented by "The Brook," "Paysage pres la Mer," "In the Woods" and "The Bridge," all of the highest quality. Pasini by "Le Marchand d'estoffes," a typical canvas, and Alma Tadema by "The Flag of Truce," a cabinet size example.

Vibert's "The Cardinal" comes from the Theron R. Butler collection sold in N. Y. in 1910, and Ziem is represented by an important canvas, "Sunset in Venice" from the Alexander Blumenstiel collection, sold in 1906. The late Mr. Blumenstiel obtained this picture direct from the artist.

Of Fantin La Tour, the decorative, graceful Frenchman, there are two fine examples, both figure subjects, while Frits Thaulow is represented by "The Sun, Stream and Night."

Other noted painters well represented are Gerome, Charlemont, Constable, Chelminski, Weiss, Brendell, Carrier-Bellouse, Julian Rix, Blakelock and Isabey.

A descriptive catalog is in course of preparation to be illustrated by fine halftone reproductions.

ORIENTAL ART AT U. OF P.

After three years of construction, the addition to the University of Pennsylvania Museum is at last completed. The lower story has been in use for some weeks, and the main exhibition room, called Charles Custis Harrison Hall, in honor of the former provost, now a vice-president of the museum, will be dedicated with a reception on the eve of Feb. 12. Thereafter, beginning Sunday afternoon, Feb. 13, there will be open to the public what, in the opinion of many experts, is the greatest exhibition of Oriental art ever made in this country or Europe.

Prominent will be the Morgan collection of Chinese porcelains loaned by the Duveens. The Museum has purchased some of the most striking and valuable pieces. The 400 pieces to be exhibited comprise the most valuable works of the collection.

Mrs. Whitney Buys Academy Pictures.

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney purchased from the recent Winter Academy "The Offering," by Chas. W. Hawthorne, the Geo. Bellows nude, Benj. D. Koopmann's portrait of an old man and a piece of sculpture by Mahonri Young, "The Man With the Wheelbarrow."

THE ARCHER
Hans Memling

Thought to be a Portrait of Son of Charles the Bold.
Sold by the Kleinberger Galleries to Mr. Michael Dreicer.

Finger Prints Stop "Fakes."

"For the certain identification of an artist's picture I heard recently from Mr. Elliott Daingerfield a, to me, brand new suggestion. It was the adoption of the 'finger print' method, so successful in detecting criminals in other directions! It was a surprise, later, to see in one of our exhibitions the pictures by a venerable contributor marked in this very way.

"Supposing Wyant, Martin, Inness, Blakelock and other artists who are shining marks for the forger's skill, had so identified their pictures, an honest, or anyhow, a different profession, would have been chosen by many a clever painter. The crop of forgeries this season is unusually large, showing that, for some reason, the scare of a few years ago has been forgotten. Forgers are getting to be more expert too, frequently deceiving "experts."

"I think that poor Blakelock has been more successfully copied, or rather, his style imitated more closely, than that of any other artist. It is quite unsafe for most people to purchase a picture bearing the name of Blakelock, unless it happens to have a pedigree that can be proved. A modern pedigree can be traced."—Macbeth's Art Notes.

HOPKINSON SMITH'S ESTATE.

The 184 oils, watercolors and charcoals left by F. Hopkinson Smith, have been appraised at $12,340. "Under the Dome of St. Pauls" was valued at $150. The whole estate was appraised at $43,846. The literary royalties were estimated at $7,500 and those on the unpublished book "Felix O'Day" at the same amount. One asset is a $3,000 contract for the moving picture rights of "Kennedy Square."

THE RHINELANDER PICTURES.

The appraisal of the estate of Miss Laura V. Rhinelandt includes the following pictures: Jane L. Gardner's "Dans le Bois" $1,000, and "La Fille du Fermier" $750, and Henry Mosler, "The Secret" $500. As an example of the correctness of official appraisals, it may be stated that a Meunier, valued at $1,000 is given the title of "Mentionne Anterieurement," which simply means that the artist had previous to the date of its exhibition received a mention at the Salon, which fact was printed on a paper label pasted on the frame, and was taken for a title by the N. Y. appraiser.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*Apostle of Light and Air.

Camille Pissaro, apostle of light, air, color, and movement, is represented at the Durand-Ruel Galleries, by an exhibition to Feb. 12 next of 18 works, a historical series, which ranges from 1870-1901.

It is no wonder that this early "plein-airist" should have many followers, for he was a master of the highest rank, whose methods were simple, strong and direct, and easy to be understood. Take, for instance, "Village aux Environs de Mantes" (1870). Here is a landscape, whose opulent mantle of color and form has been transferred in magisterial fashion to the canvas. Light breaks in more decided fashion, and pervades the superb scene at "Pontoise," 1872, and over the "Chamieres au Pointoise, Printemps, of 1875. To a little later period belongs the view of the "Palais Royal a L'Ermitage."

From later years come the brilliant scenes on the "Boulevard des Italiens" (1897) and "Place du Theatre Francais" (1898) with their street crowds, so full of movement. There is a remarkable sky in the misty glimpse over the "Jardin des Tuileries" (1899). Among the figure works are the beautiful "Becheuse" of 1882, as fine as a Millet.

John Sloan's Works at Whitney Studios.

Some 70 examples of the work of John Sloan are on view at Mrs. Whitney's studio, 8 W. 8 St., to Feb. 6, inclusive. There are oils, etchings, monotypes, lithographs and drawings in chalk and pencil and a wide range of subjects. The black and whites—largely intimate glimpses of life among the habitues of the under world—express movement excellently and are intensely vital and full of color and done by a man who must have deep understanding and keen appreciation of the subject. Sketches from the nude show strong draughtsmanship and among the oils are some spontaneous interpretations of village children at play, of a woman hanging out washing, an impression of Isadora Duncan, some street scenes and bits of Gloucester landscapes. They are frank, unafraid and rather brutal expressions, which will not appeal to those who like subtle charm, poetic color and sensitive painting.

More Cezannes On View.

The Cezanne cult is getting to be sporadic. It has now broken out at the Modern Gallery, 500 Fifth Ave., where a half-dozen oils and drawings are on view. There is a quite remarkable vase with flowers, standing on a table covered with a figured cloth. This is very plastic in effect, solid in color, and true in values—on object lesson in still life. Another oil is a sketchy view of a castle on the Riviera, called "Le Chateau Noir," but probably for other reasons than that its color is orange. Among the drawings is an interesting group of 6 nude men in water color and pastel. It is a relief from the surfeit of nude women.

Tapestries at Folsom Gallery.

An interesting exhibition of tapestries from the looms of Mrs. Francis Bailey Vanderhoef, Greenwich, Conn., is on at the Folsom Galleries, 396 5 Ave., to Feb. 16, inclusive. The object is to show that modern American weaves can equal antiques in beauty and quality and these now shown certainly compare most favorably with XV. century Gothic, Gobelins and other beautiful pieces shown with them. There are compositions after Watteau and other painters and some original designs. In combinations of wool, rich in color, and beautifully blended with linen, there are unique designs, decorative in every sense of the word. Conventionalized peacocks and other birds and beasts are utilized, as well as flowers. In some instances one can scarcely distinguish the ancient from the modern weaves.

Pictures by Howard Russel Butler.

Some forty marines and landscapes and a number of sketches and Thumb Boxes by Howard Russell Butler are shown in the Century Club Gallery. The marines and coast scenes were, for the most part, painted on the Maine and middle California coasts, and while a few are familiar some are recent works. There is a joyousness of feeling and atmosphere investing the strong painting of this artist, a sympathy with Nature, a varying moods, a truthfulness of coloring, and a certain poetry which places him in the front rank of American landscape, and especially of American, marine and coast painters.

Dougherty and Waugh have painted no finer canvases than the "Bald Head Cliff" and others in the present display. In all the artists' presentments there is a convincing quality. The display is one of the most delightful and enjoyable of many years.

Gracious Art of Nicolet.

There is something fascinating about the facile art of Gabriel Nicolet, who is showing a number of his portraits and other works at the galleries of Braun et Cie, 13 W. 46 St. The artist, who is a member of various societies, and has won several medals, draws admirably and is an excellent colorist. He is apt at catching a likeness and is a capital draughtsman. His principal portrait, one of Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, is apparently like, and has much distinction. A most attractive figure work is "The Butterfly," a young woman with a Roman scarf in double bows on her head and another about her waist. "Thrill" shows an emotional young woman.

"The Good Samaritan" is a highly attractive young woman, about whose identity much mystery is made, seated knitting at the bedside of a wounded soldier who, perhaps discreetly, is not shown. Other titles, the stories prettily told, are "The Poem," "Cinderella," "A Parisian," "Daughter of Brittany" and "Cinderella." Two portraits are of Mme. Nicolet and "The Misses Stieffel. There are four capital drawings of children.

Swedish Art in Brooklyn.

The Swedish Art exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition has been transferred to the Brooklyn Museum, and will be exhibited there on and after Sunday next to Feb. 28, inclusive. The exhibits will be supplemented by others especially sent over from Sweden.

Following the four weeks display in Brooklyn, the collection, also including the works recently sent from Sweden, will be successively shown by the Copley Society in Copley Hall, Boston; the Pa. Academy, Phila., and the Museums of Pittsburg, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Toledo.

The organizer of this round of exhibitions, to begin in Brooklyn, is Mr. William Henry Fox, Director of the Brooklyn Museum, and a member of the International Jury for Sweden at the Exposition. The Swedish Art Commissioner, Mr. Anshelm Schulzberg, has been an active co-operator and assistant in these plans, and will arrange and hang the Brooklyn exhibition. The catalog, including an introduction on Swedish art, has been prepared by Dr. Christian Brinton. The exhibition is not confined to the 117 oils, but includes watercolors, engravings, etchings and sculptures in marble, bronze and wood, some 150 numbers in all.

The Swedish Section was one of the most interesting features of the art display at San Francisco, and fared well at the hands of the jury, as Sweden was awarded two grand prizes, two medals of honor, 13 gold and 13 silver medals—a record unequalled by any other foreign section.

Miss Zimmerman's Art Jewelry.

Miss Marie Zimmerman has been showing at the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., a quite remarkable collection of artistic jewelry, and a number of small bronzes for household use and decoration. The jewelry is in various styles, and very rich in effect.

Paintings by Graner at Lawlor's.

At the gallery of Mr. F. A. Lawlor, 300 Madison Ave., are shown a number of oils by Luis Graner, the Spanish artist, who spent a season here some years ago, chief of which are his brilliant portraits of Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas and Mrs. Craig Biddle. There is a most artistic and Whistleresque night scene in Barcelona harbor and a similar one in some Southern port. The Atlantic fleet, at anchor in the North River, is another subject. "Venetian Fete" is another night scene, handled with great skill. A brilliant canvas is a scene on the northern Spanish littoral.

A War Correspondent's Work.

Boardman Robinson, who has been in Europe as war correspondent, is showing 9 cartoons and 58 drawings, done during his seven months tour of the Eastern fronts of the war at the Thumb Box Gallery, 24 East 49 St. to Feb. 5. One is impressed by a breadth and maturity of feeling quite out of the ordinary, in these sketches. There are types of officers, wounded soldiers, typhus convalescents, men dodging shrapnel in Serbian trenches, hospitals, an impression of "Ivan The Horrible," and many intimate glimpses of life in war ridden Europe.

Notable among the cartoons is one showing War as the physically, mentally and morally warped child of Pride and Greed. Big and simple in outline and compact in mass it is admirable as a composition, aside from the idea. "The Man of the Crowd," "The Masque of the Red Death"—illustrations for stories by Poe—and a print of Lincoln are also in the exhibition.

M. Signorini's Watercolors.

A group of watercolors by M. Signorini, on exhibition at the Hotel Claridge, B'way and 44 St., to Monday, defy the accuracy of the camera. One is entitled "The Double Game," a dainty lady in old time garb leaning over to watch her father and lover play a game of cards. Depictions of a Martinique fruit vender and of an Abyssinian Chief are astonishingly realistic.

Eliot J. Enneking's Landscapes.

Nature's varying moods are sympathetically realized by Eliot J. Enneking, son of the veteran Boston landscapist, who is showing thirty small oils at the Cathedral Parkway Galleries, 2,837 B'way, to Feb. 16, inclusive. Picturesque New England furnished the inspiration and there are light and air in the little impressions. The rich tones of Autumn, the tender greens of early Spring foliage, the gray skies of bleak November and the sparkling snow and ice of mid-Winter are well portrayed.

In "The Red Bain" (a Summer time picture), rippling water reflects the color of the building, of its background of trees and of a water logged schooner. A frozen winding brook with snow on the banks and leafless trees, a Thanlow motive, has much of the cold outdoors and there are lily ponds, trout streams, apple orchards, corn shocks on a hillside and little Connecticut homes, pleasing in color and feeling.

Landscapes by Denys Wortman.

A landscape painter of talent, Denys Wortman, is showing at the Daniel Gallery, 2 W. 47 St., a group of 13 landscapes, which are quite remarkable in their effects of air and sunlight. They are somewhat heavy in impasto, but silvery in tone, and suggest both Clays and Boudin. Especially successful are "Gloucester," well composed and full of fresh morning air, the large distant view of a city in "Winter" and "After the Rain." "The Willows" has a fine simulation of movement in the leaves of the trees. There is some inclination to chalkiness in the artist's work.

Oils by Birge Harrison.

Repetitions by Birge Harrison of his favorite theme and some of this year's work, which is rather different, are shown at the Louis Katz Galleries, 103 W. 74 St., to Feb. 5. There is a vague appeal, something exceedingly subtle, about the artist's Canadian snow scenes, delicately charming in their tonal quality. There are both pastels and oils, and among the former are "Sunrise on the Hill" and others in the group of snow pictures, shown at the Allied Artists' exhibition last spring.

The "Red Mill at Cos Cob," so dear to this artist's heart, is shown frequently, there are characteristic moonlights, a canvas called "Before the Blizzard," which is full of atmosphere and a virile marine.

Landscapes by Marin.

That very interesting artistic personality, John Marin, has on view at the Photo-Secession Galleries, 291 Fifth Ave., a number of studies in landscape analysis which are brilliant in color, and evidence earnest intention, if not always apparently objective in effect. They suggest rather than represent.

Coming Old Master Display.

There will open at the Ehrich Galleries, 707 Fifth Ave., probably next week, an unusual exhibition of some remarkable examples of Titian and Paris Bordone—from the collections of Prof. Volpi and the Ehrich Galleries.

"Americanization Through Art."

The exhibition of works by local artists of foreign birth or parentage organized by Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury and a committee in co-operation figuring as part of the scheme known as "Americanization Through Art," is on at Memorial Hall, Fairmont Park, Phila., to Feb. 22.

There are 119 oils, 138 watercolors, pastels and black and whites, including a number of etchings and mezzotints, a case of more than a score of miniatures and 64 sculptures distributed upon temporary screens and pedestals especially arranged for this purpose in the not too well lighted central hall. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's exhibit "The Immigrant in America" was brought over from N. Y. and is shown as a separate group, and there also is an interesting collection of arts and crafts work.

Many of the important paintings and sculptures have been seen before in the standard art shows at the Phila. Academy's Annuals, or at the Phila. Art, Sketch and Plastic Club, and there are also others, apparently painted or modeled with reference to this particular exhibition and seen for the first time. One of these is Leopold C. Seyffert's self-portrait with the title "In My Studio," a fine bit of auto-analysis of character. The artist is equally successful in the portrayal of a quaintly garbed Dutch couple celebrating their wedding anniversary in the picture entitled "The Bridal Bonnet."

C. A. Ricciardi shows a full length portrait of a graceful girl in black, "Miss Mayer," and a delicately-toned landscape entitled "The High Moon." Henry Rittenberg has a figure of a charming young woman, "Reflection," shown at the Art Club.

There is an excellent standing portrait of Mr. James E. McClees, the well known Phila. art dealer, by Lazar Raditz, and another by the same artist of Mr. Geo. Wood. Albert Rosenthal is well represented by two interesting canvases "La Midinette" and "The Yellow Jacket," both figures of a type of Parisienne familiar to the boulevardier. Robert Susan sent "The Girl in Black," an attractive work exhibited at the Academy's Annual last year, and Morris Morlarsky a graceful, reclining "Lady in White."

The personality of an engaging young girl is well indicated in a portrait by David Kornhauser. "Prof. Warren P. Laird" is the subject of an excellent portrait reflecting the distinctive intellectual character of the sitter by Max A. Bernhardt. "The Art Student," a well-credited work by Joseph Sacks and Albert Jean Adolphe's self portrait is most delightful in warm color and tonal unity. Very real and vibrating with color is a study of children by Benj. Kelman, "Water Babies." Characteristic landscapes are shown by Wm. Sartain, Fred Wagner Paulking, Elsa K. Nitzsche, F. Lesshaft, Fredk. Nunn and E. W. Schofield.

The foreign-born sculptors make an impressive show, Albin Polasek's bronze "Inspiration," winner of the Widener Medal, being one of the notable works, as is his portrait of Mr. J. P. Morgan. Luigi Maraffi's portrait bust of Mr. E. T. Stotesbury also attracts much attention, as does Giuseppe Donato's group from the Hershey fountain "Dance of Eternal Spring," reproduced in the AMERICAN ART NEWS Dec. 4 last. Louis Milione exhibits a number of well executed pieces, among them a graceful male figure entitled "Narcissus." Eugene Castello.

ANDREWS-IVES-CANFIELD SALE.

The first session of the sale of pictures from the estates of J. R. Andrews, Richard Canfield and Brayton Ives, with additions from other owners, notably Mr. P. McMahon, of Brooklyn, and other estates, took place in the Plaza ballroom Thursday evening. The attendance was only fair, as the pictures offered were, with few exceptions, not of superior quality.

A total of $23,415 was obtained for 87 canvases, chiefly of modern Foreign and American schools, with a sprinkling of old pictures from Mr. McMahon, some of which were familiar to art auction frequenters. The highest figure of the sale was $1,100, paid by Mr. Henry Schultheis, for a good example of Termeulen, his familiar sheep subject. Knoedler and Co. paid $500 for a Winslow Homer watercolor of the Hudson River series. Other fair prices were $500, paid by Mr. Julian Detmer, for a good Bogert "Moonlight-Venice"; $690, paid by Mr. W. Miller, for an excellent example of Louis P. Dessar "Sheep and Shepherd"; $420 for a Monchablon by Mr. Seaman as agent and $520 for a De Bock also by Mr. Seaman as agent.

The story of the concluding session of the sale Friday evening will be given next week with the detailed list of pictures sold and the grand total.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without re-
gard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or, more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the
advisability of consulting our Bureau of Ap-
praisal either in the first place or for re-
vision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for
many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals
are made without regard to anything but
quality and values, and our charges are
moderate—our chief desire being to save
our patrons and the public from ignorant,
needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and others interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger
and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will
soon appear.

RECORD ART AUCTION SEASON.

The present art season bids fair to pass into history as one which broke the record in New York—which from the European war and other causes, has become the art auction mart of the world. Never have art auctions so crowded upon one another, as since the New Year, and the number of those announced already for the next two months, is bewildering. Every art auction room and gallery is running on full time, and their managers are turning away applicants for sales every day.

While, thus far, the quality of the collections offered, has not been surpassing, and there will probably be no Yerkes, Marquand or Borden sales this year—there will come to the block,
from now on until mid-April, a number of art collections of quality and importance. Notable among these will be those of the pictures owned by the late Andrew Freedman, and by Mr. Catho-lina Lambert.

Other sales are projected and are being arranged for, which will greatly interest the art public, and which should stimulate the art trade, which has not as yet materially felt the return of prosperity in this country.

DEALERS AS APPRAISERS.

We have received a gratifying and wide response to our editorial on this subject in our last issue. Not one letter or message of the many which have come to us, has expressed dissent
with the truth and force of our general argument against the calling in by the Government of dealers or their employees, to pass upon the validity or value of art works held up by the Custom House appraisers, and imported by their rivals or competitors, with its natural and necessary attendant evils.

One correspondent suggests that an effort be made to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to, at least, consider the method pursued in Paris of art apprais-als. In that city there is a Board or Jury, generally composed of an artist,
a dealer, an "expert" and a restorer,
who are chosen by the Government, paid for their time of service, and who are kept in ignorance of the ownership of the works they pass upon. This Board or Jury serves a year and sometimes two, and then is superseded by another Board or Jury, with a similar personnel. In the course of a few years the members of a Jury of one year may be re-elected to serve another term.

This custom has worked well in Paris. There is seldom, if ever, any questioning of its findings, and no jeal-ousies are aroused among those dealers
whose works have to be passed upon.
Why cannot this plan be at least tried here?

Pa. Academy Jury.

The jury for the coming 111th annual display of the Pa. Academy is—painting, Daniel Garber, Chairman; Gifford Beal, R. B.
Farley, J. McLure Hamilton, R. E. Miller,
W. M. Paxton, E. W. Redfield, E. F. Rook,
C. Rosen, R. Vonnoh, H. W. Watrous and
F. J. Waugh; sculpture, C. Grafly, P. W.
Bartleet and H. A. MacNeil.
The hanging committee is composed of
D. Garber, R. B. Farley, C. Grafly, E. W.
Redfield and the president, ex-officio.
The action of the jury and of the hanging committee is final.

CORRESPONDENCE

Cincinnati Collector Goes West.

Editor American Art News.

Dear Sir:

It will undoubtedly be of interest to many of your readers to know that Mr. Simon Hubig, the well known local art collector,
will hereafter reside in Pasadena, Cal.

Mr. Hubig bought his first American painting from the writer, about eight years ago, and since that time has acquired an interesting collection of over 400 paintings, nearly all of which were produced by local artists. He has recently purchased 24 paintings from local artists, including 15 from the well-known flower painter, Martin Rettig. Mr. Hubig says that in his new home he will have a "Flower room," devoted to the paintings of Martin Rettig, a "Hurley room" showing the paintings and etchings of E. T. Hurley, noted for his etchings of familiar local scenes; a "Dutch room," filled with the paintings of John Rettig, whose work is always serious and convincing, and an "Earhart room," which will contain about 60 paintings by this artist, representing views along the rivers and valleys of southern Ohio, and in the Forest of Fontainebleau, France.

In addition to the artists named there are about 70 other local painters represented in this collection by from one to ten examples
each.

Mr. Hubig is an honorary member of the Cincinnati Art Club. He has done a great deal more for the encouragement of good art here than any other man. As an evidence of the esteem in which he is held the Arts Club gave a smoker and special entertainment in his honor Jan. 21. The members of the Art Club will sorely miss this genial personality.

Yours truly,

J. F. Earhart.

Fairbank, Cincinnati, O., Jan. 27, 1916.

THE "CUBIST DAMOSEL."

(With Apologies to Rossetti)

The "Cubist Damsel" leaned out
From a "shot-to-pieces" Heaven.
Her shoulders looked like bales of hay,
And her head was on uneven.
Her legs were four or five feet long,
And her arms were six or seven.

Her robe, ungirt from clasp to hem,
Some "dewdads" did adorn
And curlycues and twisty things
Like a fellow sees next morn.
Her hair that looked like a railroad track
Was greenish like spoiled corn.

It was the ramparts of a house
(They said) she stood upon,
But never such a house was seen
Since time was first begun.
The chimneys spiraled like the smoke,
And the whole house had a "bun."

She seemed to lie across a flood
Of plumssauce like a bridge.
Her knees were sharp as carving knives.
And on her back a ridge
Rose up to meet a new-laid moon.
Her nose was just a smidge.

She smiled a smile like a broad path
That ran between her ears.
She lay her crawly arms along
The crooked barriers.
She knew she looked a perfect fright
And wept six oblong tears.
Walter G. Doty.

"Praise from Sir Hubert."

"It was quite refreshing to read in a recent issue of the AMERICAN ART NEWS a vigorous editorial on picture frauds offered in the auction rooms.

"It especially warns its readers to beware of the sales advertised to be held in private residences, and advises a close study of the pictures in advance of the sales. There is a reference to the very old story of the foolish people who, for a few dollars, purchase canvases with big names, when a little thought should convince them that genuine works would naturally be offered in the usual channels where fair prices would be obtained.
The editor promises to keep a close watch
on 'fake' auction concerns."—Macbeth's Art Notes.

Pastels by Miss Crittenden.

There is an exhibition of pastels by Lillian Crittenden at the Business Women's Club, 36 West 40 St., on indefinitely. Some of the little snow scenes have charm and there is a clever impression of a girl, playing a guitar, a view of lower Ausable Lake and bits of Keene Valley, N. Y. Picturesque Orange County seems to have appealed strongly to the artist, whose work is a bit immature.

ART BOOK REVIEWS.

The Conception of Art by Henry Rankin
Poore, 12 mo. Putnams, $2 net.

Mr. Poore's book is distinctly germane to the parlor controversy, now waging between "modernism" and—shall we say—
"reactionism?" As a painter Mr. Poore has the confidence that a painter always has when expressing himself on a subject
in which, as his quotation from Albrecht Durer has it, he "can prove what he sayeth by his own hand." Mr. Poore devotes a deal of space, necessarily to the consideration of the "definition" of art, quoting various authors who have had their say about what art is—and what it is not. With Tolstoi's idea of a moral motive being the great one in art, Mr. Poore has little sympathy, neither does he care for the theory that "all truth is beauty and therefore the artist should help himself to anything in nature."

He quotes Whistler's scouting remark about nature "being always right" and aligns himself with the "selectivists." The theory that art should express its own age (which it is apt to do without consent) makes little appeal to this author, while Manet's epigram "not nature but the natural" is taken as an illuminating ray of truth before which Rodin's assertion of endeavor to copy nature is dispelled. The artist in Mr. Poore comes forth in the chapter on "Realism and Idealism," which finishes with a burst of truly Catholic comprehension in the phrase—
"each artist interprets his problem as seemeth him best."

The chapter on "Individual Expression,"
one of the least controversial in the book serves to introduce a resumption of battle
in which Tolstoi's "art is not a pleasure,
a solace, or an amusement; art is a great matter," is discounted and the theories of Theodore Delsarte more clearly subscribed to. Some sane words on Cezanne
"the directness" of whose paintings "would appeal to anyone as a great simple honesty,"
and some appreciative remarks on the art of Vincent Van Gogh and Paul Gauguin lead to considerations of Matisse, the arch diagrammatist, who errs most arrantly in his apparent contempt for "quality of tone."
Mr. Poore rounds up well in his final paragraph in saying, "art should be lenient, ready and even anxious to put her arm about the shoulders of any new creed which can prove its care," and adds most happily some verses of Edmund Gosse which leave the reader with this solemn admonition:

"So to my days extremity,
May I in patience infinite Attend the beauty that must be
And—though it slay me, welcome it."

OBITUARY.

Florence Barlow Ruthrauff.

Mrs. Florence May Barlow Ruthrauff, widow of Charles C. Ruthrauff, an art collector who died some three years ago, and who was herself a lover of art and writer on art topics, died at the home of her mother in Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 22 last.

Mrs. Ruthrauff was a cultivated woman, with much charm of personality, and was well known in New York art galleries and studios. For the past few years, and since her husband's death, she had been art critic
for "The Spur," and at one time was art critic on the Morning Telegraph.

She leaves a son, Mr. Wilbur B. Ruthrauff of Cranford, N. J., and daughter, Mrs.
Edwin W. Cassebeer.

Sir John Leslie.

Sir John Leslie from his friendship with Millais, Hunt and Watts, considered as the last of the Pre-Raphaelites, died Monday in London at the age of 93. He was the father-in-law of the former Miss Leonie Blanche Jerome of N. Y. After serving in the Life Guards from 1843 to 1850, he resigned to devote himself to art.

Carl Lorensen.

The Danish-American sculptor, Carl Lorensen, long a resident of Chicago, died in that city Jan. 17 in his 52 year. Born at Klakring he became a pupil of Kroyer, studying for many years at the Copenhagen Academy. He went to Chicago in 1890 and did a number of sculptures for the World's Fair, several of which are in the Field Museum. For the palace at Bucharest he did a number of friezes. Mr.
Lorensen was a regular exhibitor at the Chicago Institute. He is survived by a widow and son.

J. K. Chambers.

J. K. Chambers died in Boston last week at the age of 50. He was born in Ireland, but came early in life to this country. A painter of portraits, landscapes and marines
he had extraordinary facility and could paint in almost any manner. He had done all kinds of artistic work including scene painting.

 Rev. Dr. E. Lissman for $100. Worthington Wittridge's "A View of the Hills," went to Mr. P. Jordan for $85. The ninety-six paintings brought $2,575.
 At the second session, Jan. 21, eighty-four pictures brought $13,723, making a total for the collection of $16,648. The highest price, $3,350, paid by Henry Schultheis for Schreyer's "Rough Road in Russia."

D. Huntington Sale.
 At the opening, Wed., at the Keeler Galleries, 12 Vesey St., of the Sale of the Coll'n of the late Daniel Huntington, former president of the Nat'l Academy, the total was but $2,350. Mr. Henry Schultheis paid $85 for an 1855 Inness "Summer Landscape with Cattle" and Mr. Atwater the same amount for Thomas Birch's "Naval Salute."
 The latter secured for $32 Kensett's "Lake
 George," while that artist's "Flume, White Mountains," sold for but $27. Kensett's
 "An Island Pond, near Newport" fetched
 $29 from Mr. J. A. Morgan

Notable Mss. Sold at Anderson's.
 At a Mss. sale in the Anderson Galleries, Jan. 20, Mr. George D. Smith gave $352 for a letter written by John Brown a few days before his execution, and addressed to Miss Stems of Springfield, Mass. He also secured four letters written by Gen. Grant to his sister, during the Civil War, for $172; several issues of the Richmond Sentinel, 1864-5, for $105 and a letter of Doni-zetti for $24.50.

At the second session, Jan. 21, Mr. George D. Smith paid $225 for an autograph diary of the painter, Charles Wilson Peale, from Dec. 4, 1776, to Jan. 20, 1777, which includes an account of the Battle of Trenton, in which he had a command. For a letter of Voltaire he gave $48. To the total of the session was $1,571.10 and of the sale $3,693.05.

The Catholina Lambert Sale.
 The art auctions are crowding so upon each other, and in such rapid succession this winter, that it is difficult for the most experienced auction frequenter and buyer to keep pace with them, and not to confuse dates on the calendar.

With the exception of a few old pictures
 in the Andrews-Canfield-Ives sale this week, owned by Mr. McMahon, an old Brooklyn dealer, lovers of old pictures have not yet had an opportunity to see and bid on the paintings in which they are most interested,
 and these, as well as art lovers in general,
 are therefore the more eagerly anticipating the coming sale of the large collection of old and modern pictures formed by Mr.
 Catholina Lambert, and which has long been in his beautiful residence, "Buena Vista" castle on the heights overlooking Paterson,
 N. J., from the west.
 Attention has already been called in the ART NEWS to the importance of this large and interesting collection, and especially to its richness in the examples of the American painter Blakelock, the French Monticelli and Michel, and the early Flemish, Italian and English masters.

As was said last week, the collection, numbering some four hundred and more canvases, will be placed on exhibition in the American Art Galleries on Feb. 12 next or a fortnight from today, and will be sold on four evenings in the Plaza Ballroom, beginning Feb. 21 next. There will be a throng of art lovers at the Galleries during the week's exhibition of these important paintings, and also at all the four evening sales, and both exhibition and sale will probably be the most important of the art auction season this year.

There will be, of necessity, many and long discussions among "Experts," students and art lovers, over the merits of the more notable works, which are many in number, and much excitement over the dispersal of certain pictures, notably the superb large altar piece by Bernadino Luini—perhaps the finest example of this master that has ever come on the market, and which the late Sir William Agnew ranked with the Morgan
 Raphael, now in the Metropolitan Museum, and Carlo Dolci's "Madonna of the Eight Stars," formerly at Blenheim Palace—the "Madonna and Holy Family" given to Del Sarto, although some critics ascribe it to an even great man, another great Madonna, given to Botticelli, the large and fine example of Coello and another, even finer, given to Albani—four unusual paintings given to the School of Rembrandt, although three are so close to the Master that some critics unhesitatingly pronounce them his work, the splendid portraits by Verspronck, Van der Helst, Mytens, Janssen Mierevelt and Ravenstyn, and others given to the early English masters, Lawrence (8), Gainsborough
 (2), Romney (2), and Hoppner, Beechey, Raeburn, Opie and the lesser master, Harlow.
 Then, for the lover of the modern French

Impressionists, there are fine examples of Monet, Renoir, Sisley and Pissaro—for the admirers of the Barbizon masters good and superior canvases given to Corot, Rousseau, Troyon, Diaz, Daubigny, Dupre, and also to Delacroix, Lepine and Boudin.

In short the pictures owned by Mr. Lambert have so wide a range of schools, periods, painters and subjects that every taste
 should find something to satisfy.
 The reproduction published in the ART
 NEWS this morning of the fine canvas given to del Sarto, but which, as said above, some critics attribute to an even greater painter, emphasizes, as did the portrait of a man by Vederspronck, reproduced in the ART NEWS
 a fortnight ago the importance of the coming sale, and the fact that it will disperse unusual treasures.

Stevenson Autographs to Be Sold.
 Part III of the Robert Louis Stevenson collection of autograph letters and drawings will be placed on exhib'n at the Anderson Galleries on Feb. 7, prior to sale on the afts. of Feb. 16 and 17. When the first part of this collection was cataloged in Nov., 1914, 122 lots were claimed by Mrs.
 Katherine D. Osbourne and withdrawn.
 The courts have now decided that they are the property of Mrs. Salisbury Field, formerly Mrs. Isobel Strong, daughter of Mrs.
 Robert Louis Stevenson. These lots will form the first session of the sale of Part III, and additional letters and drawings
 will be sold in the second session.

Books in Beautiful Bindings.
 For many years Robert Riviere & Son of London have been regarded as among the best book-binders in the world. Every American collection of any importance has scores of books that have passed through their hands, and it has been the boast of the present manager of the firm, Arthur E. Calkin, whose recent visit to America is pleasantly remembered, that every first folio Shakespeare in the world has been examined, and in many cases repaired or bound by them. More than a hundred beautiful bindings by this house have been consigned for sale by the Anderson Galleries, and will be placed on exhib'n Feb. 7.
 The sale will be held on the aft. of Feb. 18.

Sale of Coins and Medals.
 The coll'n of coins and medals to be sold on Friday aft. by the Anderson Galleries, contains many fine foreign and American specimens, but is particularly notable for the coins of Greece and Rome.

Clocks, Bronzes and Porcelains.
 Theodore B. Starr, Inc., of Fifth Ave., having decided to discontinue their Clock and Bronze Department have consigned the entire stock to the Anderson Galleries for sale. The stock will be placed on exhib'n on Tuesday preliminary to sale on the aft's and eve'gs of Feb. 7-8.

OLD MASTERS

 MR. ARTHUR RUCK of 4 BERKELEY

 vate agent for owners who are obliged by the exigencies of the times to part with their family and historic paintings. He is consequently enabled to place American collectors and Museums in touch with heirloom pictures of unquestionable pedigree.

 The annual sale of art objects of the Orient by Yamanaka & Co., to be held at the American Art Galleries, February 7-9, afternoons, will include, this year, Buddhist sculptures, jades, rock crystals, corals and Chinese screens. There will be also a number of beautiful, artistic bird cages, which makes this sale almost as much a society as an art event, as these are in great demand by women of the modish world. There will also be sold this year
 a number of artistic dog kennels.

Sales of French Modern Art.
 From an exhibition of modern French art
 at a local French gallery, besides Cezanne's
 "Two Sisters," whose sale was already announced in the ART NEWS, the works sold to museums and collectors include Bes-nard's "On the Terrace," Carriere's "Writing Lesson," Cottet's "La Bretagne" and
 "Old Woman," Dagnan-Bouveret's "Brittany Man," Degas, "Femme sur Lit," Gau-guin's "Head of a Man," six examples of La Touche, "Spring," "The Bathers," "The Artists' Reception," "Fire Works," "The Swans" and "Dancing Girls;" Manet's
 "Mlle. C. Campbell," Menard's "Antique Landscape," Monet's "La Seine a Lavacour," Pissaro's "Landscape," Renoir's
 "Jeune Femme," Sisley's "Landscape" and Simon's "Feast in Brittany."

Prof. Volpi Leases Gallery.
 Professor Volpi, the art "expert" and collector of Florence, who for some time past has been at the Holland House with a small but remarkable collection of Old Masters, is now installed in a gallery on the

FAMOUS ART CASE SETTLED?

(Special cable to AMERICAN ART NEWS.)

London, Feb. 3, 1916.—It is reported, on what seems most reliable authority here, that the cause celebre, regarding the authenticity of the double portrait of Mrs. Siddons, and her sister, Mrs. Kemble, sold as by Romney by Lewis and Simmons, to Mr. Henry E. Huntington, for the reported sum of $100,000, and which sum Mr. Huntington brought suit to recover last Autumn, on the ground that the picture was not by Romney, is approaching a settlement out of court. Mr. Huntington's attorneys, it is said, have withdrawn the charge that the picture in question is not by Romney, and all that remains to finally settle the case is the clearing up of the painting's history. M. A.

GREAT MORGAN MUSEUM GIFT.

The present Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has just made great gifts to the Metropolitan Museum, including the famous Colonna Raphael, which is said to have cost his father $500,000, the Hoentschel coll'n, and the sculptures of "The Entombment" and the "Pieta" from the Chateau de Biron.

Director Edward Robinson made the announcement, at a special meeting, with the members of the press on Wed. aft. He stated, in announcing the gift, that on Tuesday the Museum received notice, from the executors of the estate of the late J. Pierpont Morgan that all, had been transferred to his son, and at the same time received a letter from the last stating that "in pursuance of his father's idea," he had resolved to present to the Museum the Gothic section of the Hoentschel coll'n comprising 332 pieces of early sculpture, furniture, textiles, ivories, stained glass, wood work and architectural fragments, also the monumental groups of late Gothic French sculpture from the Biron chateau. He also announced the gift of the Raphael. The Hoentschel coll'n which Mr. Morgan purchased from the French architect in 1906 consisted of two main sections, a mediaeval and an XVIII one, the latter of which he at once presented to the Museum, the whole being installed in 1910. The monuments from Biron were purchased later and sent to the Museum to be exhibited in the same department.

The announcement of the Morgan gift, one of the greatest made to the institution, gave an unusual fillip to the largely attended President and trustees' reception on Thursday evening. The monthly bulletin announces the recent acquisition by the Museum of two important works of ancient Chinese art, two flower pots of the Tisung dynasty and of three Greek and Roman heads.

THE CATHOLINA LAMBERT SALE.

As the time draws near for the exhibition of the collection of some 400 oils, owned by Mr. Catholina Lambert, and which will begin at the American Art Galleries Saturday next, Feb. 12, to last over a full week, or until the sale at the Plaza Ballroom on the four evenings of Feb. 21-24, interest and curiosity as to the contents and merits of the collection increases daily in art circles.

The number of pictures which form the collection, its wide range of periods, schools and subjects and the importance and fine quality of many of the individual numbers—will make the coming sale, not only the most important and interesting of the current art auction season, but the most notable of any past season, possibly excepting those which brought the dispersal of the Yerkes and Borden collections.

The pictures which have been carefully looked over and, when necessary, cleaned and put in order—all in "Buena Vista" castle at Paterson, which has been their home for many years, are now being removed in huge vans to the American Art Galleries—present a most attractive appearance and afford a fascinating and absorbing study. A close inspection and study of the works reveals many beautiful canvases, unseen or unknown before, even to those most familiar with them, of Mr. Lambert's many friends and acquaintances among art lovers, who have visited the castle, and it is safe to say there will be many surprises at the exhibition and sale.

No preceding picture auction in New York, or in fact anywhere, that can be recalled, has presented so many problems as to attributions as will the coming dispersal of the Lambert paintings. There are, of course, a goodly number of fine old pictures that will be unquestioned such, for instance, as the examples of Verspronck and Van der Helst, Alonso Cano and Ribalta, and of Luini and others—but there are others, some of exceptional quality over which even the most noted "experts" will dispute—such, for example, as the striking "Portrait of a Rabbi," endorsed by Dr. Freedlander, as a finer example of Rembrandt than the original or, some will say, the replica of the same subject in the Berlin Museum. There assembled by Mr. Lambert from many and diverse sources.

The illustrated catalog, a really valuable and beautiful work, with unusually full notes and descriptions of the pictures and effective half-tone reproductions of the principal works, will be issued next week at a cost of $5.

The Memorial Art Gallery of Rochester has recently received an important acquisition to its permanent collection of paintings in Alfred Bergstrom's landscape "Spring Day," which won a gold medal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It is the gift of Mrs. Hiram W. Sibley.

are two other striking works in the Rembrandt manner, which will also admit of dispute and questioning, although one will be cataloged discreetly as the work of Jan Victors. Then, too, is the splendid full-length standing portrait of a young Englishwoman, long given to Lawrence, but which may now be called the best example of Lawrence's strongest follower, George Henry Harlow, and the equally interesting full length standing presentment of an Austrian Archduchess, a most charming and decorative work, which is presumably from the brush of Anton Raphael Mengs. These last two paintings have only recently been identified; good evidence of the surprises that await the collector and art lover in this collection.

The reproductions of some of the more important canvases in the collection on this and other pages this week, following those in previous issues, emphasize the exceeding importance of the collection, which was

THE TOMB OF PERNEB.

There is a new feature of great interest at the Metropolitan Museum. A real Egyptian tomb has been erected on the main floor, brought block by block, at the expense of a trustee, Mr. Edward H. Harkness, from the hill side of Sakkara. It was discovered by Mr. Albert M. Lithgoe, the curator of Egyptian art and is the tomb of Perneb "Sole Companion and Lord Chamberlain" to the great King Zozer of Memphis. The excavation of the tomb was begun in 1913 and by camel back the blocks were carried to the Nile, where two steamers brought the tomb to Cairo. Two columns flank the entrance to the courtyard of the tomb, which rises 18 feet and with a recessed doorway, at either side of which are painted low relief figures of Perneb. Above the doorway is an inscription, and in the inner chamber many painted figures. This tomb is the only one of its kind in any museum.

ACADEMY SPURNS MATISSE.

It is said on good authority that Matisse has returned to his original method of painting, the style in which he failed before he conceived the idea of creating absurdities, which he now admits he employed in order to force recognition from the art public, which had previously ignored him. Perhaps it was this "old style" of work that represented him in the four canvases he submitted to the recent Winter Academy, which were not recognized by the jury (among whose members were a number of his most ardent admirers) and were consigned to the cellar as too mediocre to hang. The "sane" painters are now enjoying the laugh on the followers of Matisse.

COMING BALL OF THE GODS.

Lloyd Warren, Chairman of the Ball Committee of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, has announced the result of the lot-drawing for boxes at the Ball of the Gods, to be held at the Hotel Astor on Friday, Feb. 11. As there were more than 100 applications, the holders could not be selected in any other way. Among the winners are Mmes. John Jacob Astor, William Burnham, George S. Chappell, Seymour L. Cromwell, Howard G. Cushing, John Drexel, William Emersan, Geo. Peabody Eustis, Ernesto G. Fabbri, Joseph H. Freedlander, Clinton Gilbert, Charles C. Goodrich and Robt. W. Goelet.

A large number of models and designs for costumes will be on exhibition daily until the ball, in the Herter studios, and a costumer will be in attendance to show materials and give advice. This exhibition of sketches and models of costumes of the prehistoric Grecian, Egyptian and Hindu periods has been placed on view, by way of suggestion, for those who are planning to attend the Ball. The edict "Costumes Mythologiques de Rigueur," contained in the cards of invitation, has apparently created considerable misunderstanding, as the Committee has been besieged with inquiries and as a result, Mr. Warren has issued the following instructions: "The greatest latitude in the choice of mythological costumes will be approved by the committee. All costumes relating to myths of every kind will be recognized. Besides the Religious Myths of all ages, with their attendant priests and worshippers, there are the mythical personages of Poetry, Legend and Fairy Tales; the Allegories of the Painters, the Personifications of the qualities and attributes of the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms, etc. In short it is an imaginative character in the costumes which is sought. No purely modern costumes, such as soldiers, sailors, convicts, etc., will be countenanced."

The ballroom of the Astor is to be transformed to represent an abandoned temple on the Island of Cyprus for the occasion, and the ball will open with a pageant in which 500 men and women will take part.

THE LOST TIEPOLO.

"Entering the historic church of the Scalzi," says a Venice correspondent, "a scene of havoc and ruin is presented—twisted beams and arches, panels and columns of alabaster crushed into bits and lying around in heaps, the richly carved pulpit blown to pieces, with only a faint outline of its former wonders remaining, and above, the roof wide open to the sky, with the wonderful frescoes of Tiepolo dumped in huge masses of debris on the stone pavement. Faint edges of the grand old frescoes idea of the beauties of the work torn away. The high altar was not touched, and the electric candles circling the church were undisturbed. But, with these two exceptions, everything is a ruin, frescoed ceiling, inlaid marble sidewalls, sculptures, confessionals, memorial tablets, baptistry and marble mosaic pavement—all lying about in fragments.

"It was about 11 o'clock in the morning when the explosion occurred. The Austrian monoplane, flying very high, hurled the bomb apparently at the railway station, but it struck square on top of the famous old church. It did not explode when it hit the roof. Instead, it made a clean hole through the roof, and then shooting downward, exploded just above and in front of the pulpit.

ARCHITECTS AND DECORATORS IN ALL THE GREAT PERIODS. FURNITURE.—ITALIAN FRENCH, ENGLISH AND CHINESE. Objets D'Art.

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON*TITIANS AND BORDONES.

The great war, with its daily surprises in the battlefields, the courts and cities of Europe and Asia, and on "the seven seas," has brought surprises even to the American art world.

The importation and exhibition of even one work by Titian, "La Schiavona," now owned by Sir Frederick Cook of London, made almost a sensation in New York three seasons ago—and now, owing to the war two works given to Titian, not to speak of two examples of his closest follower and pupil, Paris Bordone, have been brought from Italy and are on exhibition at the Ehrich Galleries, No. 707 Fifth Ave.

Two of the pictures, the well-known "Portrait of Titian's daughter Lavinia," bearing a salver of fruit, has been one of the most reproduced of "Old Masters." The "Salome" of the Madrid Prado, of which the present picture is either a replica or the original, it is claimed, is one of the greatest of that Museum's treasures and with its companion, the "Portrait of an Unknown Lady," also a most beautiful and convincing work, were brought over some months ago by Commandatore Elia Volpi, the well known "Expert," collector and dealer of Florence, from whose well known gallery in that city "La Batista," some of the most important pictures in the collections of the late J. Pierpont Morgan and P. A. B. Widener, of Mr. J. G. Johnson, and of the European and American Museums, have come directly or through dealers.

Works are Convincing.

There was an unfortunate incident and accident, due to the stupidity of officials, connected with Prof. Volpi's arrival here some weeks ago, with these and other remarkable "Old Masters," and through a still mysterious, as to its source, and regrettable story in the press, perhaps due to the fact that so unprecedented an occurrence as the importation of two works frankly and boldly attributed to Titian, and the added fact that the subject of one the "Portrait of the Artist's daughter" is well known, doubts were expressed in this story and since then, in private, in art circles as to their authenticity.

American art critics, students and lovers, who know of Prof. Volpi's standing and knowledge, and who will now be able to see and study the Volpi Titian canvases and the other unquestioned pictures, owned by Prof. Volpi, which he has brought over, will also read the written endorsements of the Volpi Titians by such authorities on early Italian art as Messrs. F. Mason Perkins and Charles Loser, and of Prof. Carvanaghi of the Grera Museum. If, through their knowledge of Prof. Volpi, and these endorsements, those of them who may doubt, are not convinced as to the two Volpi Titians, they will, at least, admit that the authorities above named, had ground, and good ground, for their favorable opinions and endorsements.

The pictures were painted, Prof. Volpi states, during the years 1545-1550, for Cardinal Archinto, Archbishop of Milan, for his dining room, have never been separated, and come directly from the descendants of the Cardinal—certainly a good provenance.

But the pictures must be studied by everyone who has himself knowledge of Titian's brushwork and technique, from long acquaintance with his greatest paintings, and each must form his own opinion. It is not safe nor just in the presence of such beautiful, convincing canvases as these, to rely upon the disputations and verdicts of "Experts" and critics. In strength, richness and beauty of color, wonderful painting of accessories of flesh, and in expression, the pictures speak for themselves. If these are copies—let America have more of such copies, if possible to procure them.

Portrait of a Chancellor.

The third example of the great Venetian, a "Portrait of Chancellor Andrea Franchi," owned by the Ehrich Galleries, is so different in subject as not only to emphasize Titian's versatility, but to add greatly to the interest of the other pictures. This painting, a three-quarter length standing one, depicts the Chancellor, in the rich red robes of his office, with a blue sash over his left shoulder, holding a letter in his left hand. The work is strongly endorsed by Gronau and Dr. Bode, in letters published in the attractive and dainty little Catalog, and comes from the collections, in turn, of the late Louis Viardot, art critic and author of "Les Musees d'Europe," and of his widow, the singer, Pauline Viardot, nee Garcia.

Two Fine Bordones.

The two examples of the art of Paris Bordone are also remarkable pictures. One owned by Prof. Volpi, entitled "La Bella," a favorite model of the artist, is shown, seated three-quarters length, richly gowned with her bosom exposed. It would in richness of color and beauty of expression almost pass as a Titian, was painted in 1535, and comes from an old Italian family.

The other Bordone is the charming standing portrait of Titian's daughter Lavinia at the age of seven, the same as the great master painted as "Salome," comes from the collection of Baron Lazzaroni of Rome, and is owned by the Ehrich galleries, where it has been shown before and always greeted with delight and enthusiasm.

In an outer gallery are hung a large, rich and superior example of Jacopo Palma, "Tobias and the Angel," and a fine three-quarter length standing presentment of a "Man in Armor" by Moroni—which well supplement the unique display in the large Gallery.

This exhibition is the event of the season as far as exhibitions in dealer's galleries are concerned, and it is to be hoped that the reception given it will atone to Prof. Volpi for his rude welcome here, and bring to the Messrs. Ehrich the appreciation that their discernment in welcoming Prof. Volpi and his pictures to their gallery, and their enterprise, deserve.

Mr. Gallatin's Collection at Seligmann's.

It is a pleasure indeed, even in this time of crowding art displays, to see the selection of some 68 modern American, French, Russian, English and Belgian oils, watercolors, lithographs, etchings, and pen and ink drawings, selected by Mr. A. E. Gallatin from his collections, and now shown at the Jacques Seligmann Gallery, No. 705 Fifth Ave., until Feb. 13 for the benefit of the French Fraternal des Artistes. The little display has an intimate and refined atmosphere and is convincing evidence of the rare taste of one of the most discerning of younger American collectors.

No better presentment of the art of the younger and more advanced men and women artists, whom Mr. Gallatin most favors, could be imagined, and even those conservatives who still consider the work of such Americans as John Sloan, Eugene Higgins, William Glackens, and even Ernest Lawson of the French Forain and Steinlen, the Russian Bakst, and the English Nicholson as an acquired taste, will be converted after an hour's study of the display.

Quality in the oils and watercolors, and strength and grace of line in the black and whites evidently most appeal to Mr. Gallatin and he has chosen well his examples. Here are two small recent landscapes in oil by Ernest Lawson, richer in quality than his larger canvases, four pastels, an oil, a chalk drawing and two etchings, (the first he has ever had shown in public), by that joyous, virile artist, William Glackens, seven examples of the "American Daumier," John Sloan, as his admirers call him, all familiar and typical, five etchings, two etchings, a lithograph and a scenic drawing by that fellow illustrator and painter of the underworld, Eugene Higgins, two black and whites by the comparatively new arrival, Boardman Robinson, (a powerful drawing of the aged Francis Joseph and a fine head of a Serb), and examples of Robert Henri, Whistler, Howard Cushing, Ernest Haskell, Hayley Lever, Max Kuehne (a delightful, tender "Street-Granada"), William Zorach, Geo. Luks, John Marin, Everett Shinn, Alden Weir, Walter Gay, Maxfield Parrish, John S. Sargent and Malvina Hoffman, and Guy Pene Du Bois' Gavarni-like, most humorous figure work, "Automobile Tires."

Mr. Gallatin's French examples include a lithograph and a pen and ink by the incomparable Forain, two Daumier-like Steinlens (again a lithograph and a pen and ink), a red chalk by Daumier himself, and rarely good works by Degas, Manet, Pirois, Raffaelli, Renoir (one a charcoal portrait of the artist's son, wounded in battle), Toulouse-Lautrec, and a dry point by Rodin.

A Bakst costume study, examples of the English Thomas Way, Nicholson, Max Beerbohm, and, of course, Aubrey Beardsley, and a small oil landscape by H. Prat, the Belgian, complete this dainty art show, of which Mr. Gallatin may well be proud.

McDowell Group Display.

Some charming sculptures by Brenda Putnam and Lillian Link add to the attractiveness of the present MacDowell Club display, now on at 108 W. 55 St. to Feb. 13. Miss Putnam's baby faun book-ends are good and she shows some interesting studies, a portrait bust of Theodore Spiering and a plaster impression of Forbes Robertson as Shylock. Miss Link shows among other things a sun dial and bird bath and diminutive figures of children, very realistic and delightful.

A decorative landscape with the figure of a huntress is among the most interesting examples of 6 noteworthy canvases by Robert K. Royland. His panels, each with a draped female figure, one symbolical of Spring and the other of Autumn, are poetic in feeling and the color schemes and composition admirable.

A small study for the nymph decoration hung at the Architectural League last year is also shown.

Duncan Smith contributes a large outdoor portrait of his wife, an interior with a girl sewing, and a most convincing portrayal of a young woman seated on a piazza with a background of tropical foliage, and a large dark blue parasol. The last profile is very expressive, suggesting the personality of the subject.

Charles Needham's interpretations of nature have a certain mystery and charm, and W. N. Taylor's outdoor pictures appeal. The other exhibitors are F. Tolles Chamberlin, A. T. Schwartz, and Katherine Beecher Stetson.

Works by Jules Guerin.

A brilliantly decorative, and color surcharged group of 16 oils, by Jules Guerin is on view, in an upper gallery, at Macbeth's, 450 Fifth Ave. to Feb. 15. The artist, who has sought his subjects and his inspiration in Italy, Tangier and Egypt, suggests Fortuny, though he lacks the latter's suave brilliancy of technique. One of the two "Bathers" has sunset hair and a single figure nude "By the Sea" is apparently incandescent. "The Coffee Drinkers—Tangier" is striking and the "Prayer of the East" and the landscapes and street views are picturesque and unusual in composition.

Cal's Landscapes by Boronda.

In a lower Macbeth Gallery, 450 Fifth Ave., are shown to Feb. 15, a number of California landscapes by Lester D. Boronda. A technique, very vigorous on occasion, and usually strong, is seen at its best, in "Wood Choppers' Trail," with its fine sky, and in the admirable stretch of distance to "Blue Bay." Oaks, pines and cypress, furnish picturesque incidents, in several of the canvases.

Pictures by A. G. Schulman.

At the Arlington Galleries, 274 Madison Ave., A. G. Schulman has on view, to Feb. 12, a most interesting group of landscapes and shore scenes, chiefly on Mason's Island, and some of Fisher's Island on Long Island Sound. The scenes, with their picturesque groups of cedars and glimpses across water of distant shores, have something Italian about them. The color is strong, the handling vigorous and the selection of subject most artistic.

Two Women Painters at Goupil's.

In the Goupil Galleries, 58 W. 45 St., Emmelene Abbey Dunn and Harriet S. Phillips are showing their recent works to Feb. 15. The first has an agreeable group of 28 oils, watercolors and pastels, including landscapes, at home and abroad and some portraits. The second, who paints in both oil and tempera handles her subjects in a large and decorative fashion. They include foreign and American scenes, Italy, Bavaria and the Tyrol furnishing some of the subjects, while others were found in Bermuda.

More Prizes for Young Artists.

The fourth competition of the Friends of Young Artists will be for decorators, and the theme will be suggested by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. Mr. Otto H. Kahn offers the first prize of $200 and Mrs. Whitney, in whose studio, 8 W. 8 St., the exhibit of the work submitted will be opened April 15, gives as usual 10 of $25 each.

Old English and French Engravings.

A display of old English and French engravings in color, all of exceptional quality, and which includes several brilliant impressions of famous subjects, now on at the Kennedy Gallery, 613 Fifth Ave., to Feb. 29, will delight all lovers of this alluring branch of art.

A panel of early French engravings includes Deboucourt's "Palais Royal," the same engraver's always charming "Menuet de la mariee," and two exquisite dainty plates by De Marlian, after Huet. There are also two fine plates by Bonnet.

The early English plates are more numerous than the French, but are as representative and attractive. The most notable is a superb one of W. Ward's after Morland's "The Kite Entangled," with full margins. Almost as fine are the same engraver's "Vegetable Market" and "Poultry Market," after his brother's, J. Ward's, paintings. There are also fine plates of Earlom's "Preparing for Market" and "Going to Market," after Wheatley, a rare portrait of "Master Henry Hoan" by Wilkin, after Reynolds, with full margins, a fine one of "The Weary Sportsman" by Bond, after Morland, and an exceptionally beautiful one of the "Bacchus and Nymphs" by Bartolozzi, after Angelica Kauffmann.

Howarth Etchings at Ralston's.

While some critics still call Albany Howarth a "commercial etcher," the little and well selected display of his etchings now on at the Ralston Gallery, 567 Fifth Ave., has so much of charm and merit, both in its individual examples, and as a whole, that it is difficult to accept this verdict.

The plates of old streets and buildings in Rouen, in particular, prove the artist's possession of much love of and ability to portray the picturesque in architecture, that the lover of the needle's work, must perforce linger before them. There are also some landscape bits, so full of sentiment and love of Nature, as to again prove that the producer has an artistic appreciation and soul. The show is attractive and well arranged.

Military Subjects by Chelminski.

Twenty-eight oils by J. V. Chelminski—a brother-in-law of Mr. Roland Knoedler, a memory painter par excellence and a facile draftsman—are at the Knoedler galleries, 556 5th Ave. to Feb. 12, inclusive. They are of French, Russian, Polish and British military subjects, and the horses, in particular are wonderfully drawn. The artist has well expressed motion—skillfully catching the transition from one action to another so that the movement does not seem arrested. There are transcripts of the sparkling snows of Switzerland and again a background of trees with luxuriant foliage or dark pines, standing out against snow-clad mountains.

The Women's University Club is planning to hold an exhibition of miniatures at their club house, 106 East 52 St., Feb. 13 to 26. The exhibitors will include a number of members of the American Society of Miniature Painters. There will also be a group of sculptures by Marie Apel. Among the painters will be Lucia Fairchild Fuller, Laura Coombs Hills, Maria Streat, William Whittemore, William S. Potts, Katherine Myrick, Helen M. Turner, Alice Beckington, Margaret Hawley, Lydia Longacre, Sarah L. Cowan and others.

ANDREWS-IVES-CANFIELD SALE.

The second and concluding session of the sale of pictures, old and modern, from the collections of the late J. R. Andrews, Richard Canfield and Brayton Ives, which took place in the Plaza Ballroom Jan. 28, too late to be recorded in last week's issue of the ART NEWS, resulted in an announced total of $96,830 for 70 numbers, which, added to the total of the first session, or $23,385, made a grand total for the sale of $120,215.

While the attendance at this last session was better than at the first, owing to the better quality of the works offered, there was no excitement and the dealers secured most of the good canvases offered.

A beautiful Boudin "Baie de Fourmier" brought $5,000, a record American auction price, from Col. Ruppert, although it had been appraised in the Canfield estate at only $1,000. Two fine examples of Monet's late period, "Antibes" and "Haystacks," cataloged as "the property of a Lady," were owned, as were several other fine canvases cataloged in the same way by the wife of a well-known collector, were bought under the name of Seaman, Agent, for $5,000 each. The highest figure the auctioneer announced was $7,900, given for a very white Fontainebleau panel ascribed to Diaz, and cataloged as "property of a Lady," by a "Mr. F. George." The two Winslow Homer watercolors in the sale went, as was expected, to Knoedler and Co. for $650 and $1,050 each.

The old pictures variously attributed to Reynolds, Lof, Constable, Bassano and Hogarth, sold for small amounts as compared with their cost, as stated by auctioneer, Mr. Thos. E. Kirby, and pulled down the expected total of the sale. Mr. W. Everts Benjamin, however, secured at a bargain price, $2,600, a good portrait by Verspronck.

Second Session.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Friday eve., with the numbers, artists' names, titles, and sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices:

A Sculpture Competition.

A joint committee on sculpture, Studio of the Soc'y of Beaux Arts Architects and the Nat'l Sculpture Soc'y, proposes as a subject for a competition, a silver Trophy Cup, to be presented to that ship of the U. S. Navy which achieves the second highest percentage of efficiency in target practice, there being already a trophy for the first. The first prize will be $100 and the second $50 and they are offered by the Nat'l Defence Soc'y. There will be two competitions, one ending Feb. 28 and the final one, Mar. 27. The chairman of the joint committee is Mr. Lloyd Warren.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or private sale of art work of all kinds, pictures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc., will be given at the office of the AMERICAN ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value of art works and the obtaining of the best "expert" opinion on the same. For these services a nominal fee will be charged. Persons having art works and desirous of disposing or obtaining an idea of their value will find our service on these lines a saving of time, and, in many instances of unnecessary expense. It is guaranteed that any opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass upon the value of art works for collectors and estates, for the purpose of insurance, sale, or more especially to determine whether prior appraisals made to fix the amount due under the inheritance or death taxes are just and correct ones—and so often find that such former appraisals have been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or market values, with resultant deception and often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is conducted by persons in every way qualified by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested are reminded that the first two numbers of Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form, are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will soon appear.

MORGAN ENRICHES MUSEUM.

The gift to the Metropolitan Museum by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, this week, of the Colonna, or, as it is now better known, the Morgan Raphael, and the remaining portion of the Hoentschel collection of Gothic and Renaissance art—the other portions having already been donated to the institution by his late father—is a gracious and generous act.

While it was undoubtedly the wish of the late J. Pierpont Morgan that his art treasures, or at least all but a small portion which had sentimental associations—should be given the Museum, his son was left by the former's will with full discretionary power as to the disposition of the Morgan collections and through the sale of the Oriental porcelains, and the Fragonard panels the art public had gained the impression that the City and the Museum would not receive perhaps any part even of the collections.

Mr. Morgan's decision to carry out his father's evident wish, as expressed in his will, for the passing of his treasures to the Museum will remove this public impression, as regards not only his disposition of the Morgan art, but his attitude towards the Museum, for it had been more than hinted, and most unjustly, that he was hostile, on account of real or imagined grievances, towards the Museum, and its present officials. The gift will also raise the hope that it will be followed by another of the remaining Morgan pictures and the miniatures, at least.

The occurrence also would seem to strengthen the idea, long prevalent in art circles, that the reason for the sale of the porcelains, and perhaps of the Fragonard panels, was due to the fact that there was a substantial balance of payment still to be made on them, under the long credits which the late Mr. Morgan enjoyed, and which he, sometimes, in his art collecting took advantage of, most legitimately and wisely, to have time for thorough study and "expertizing" of these purchases—to the dealers from whom they came, and to whom the porcelains, at least, returned. It was only natural, if this idea is well founded, that the present Mr. Morgan preferred, especially in the dark days following the war's outbreak, to get for the estate the return of monies already paid, with probably a good profit, and to obviate the payment of a large balance.

DID BUNCE PAINT IT?

Hartford, Conn., Feb. 3, 1916.

An interesting picture, offered and sold at the Anderson Galleries recently as an example of Gedney Bunce's Venetian painting, is the innocent cause of a remarkable lapse of memory on the part of the artist. This canvas, an upright composition of moderate size distinguished from other Bunces by virtue of a blue (rather than a yellow or red or green) general tone, which sold at auction for the astonishing low price of $30 as quoted in the ART NEWS has been sent here where the artist occupies a studio in the winter season, for the painter's identification.

Bunce, on seeing the picture, declared that he did not remember whether he painted it or not. Curtiss H. Moyer, Bunce's local dealer, who has disposed of about a dozen of his pictures during the last year at good prices, furtively smiled when asked for his opinion as to the genuineness of the picture in question and diplomatically quotes Bunce.

Friends of the artist say that he signs his pictures variously, and that his memory, of late years, has been so faulty that he is often convinced, with difficulty, that some of the most important and best authenticated pictures painted by him 30 or 40 years ago are really his own work.

The picture in question, however, is believed to have been painted more recently. It is on canvas while Bunce usually, although not always, paints pictures of its size on mahogany panels. Although Bunce is an easy man to imitate it is not believed that there have been any spurious Bunces in the market.

CORRESPONDENCE

Dealers as Art Appraisers.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir,

Permit me to congratulate you upon your frank and courageous expose and criticism of what seems to me, and many of my fellows, nothing less than an abuse—namely the custom of calling in professional, or indeed other art dealers (for there are gentry who pose as private collectors who are in reality dealers) by the N. Y. Custom House appraisers' office, to pass upon the validity or value of art works imported by their fellows.

Such a custom would not be tolerated by any other Government in the world—much less originated by Government officials. It cannot fail, as it has several times in the past few years, to work the greatest injury to reputable dealers. Through the gaining of knowledge of the sources of supply of their competitors by the dealers called by the Custom House, these competitors have not only had these sources stopped up, through large commissions offered for exclusive service. Injury has also been caused other dealers by the "knocking" of art works to their customers, by rivals who had opportunity to see and study them in the Custom House before delivery, through the latter having been called as witnesses in disputed duty cases.

It is passing strange that the heads of leading American art houses should not object to the calling of witnesses in these custom house cases, of their employes, but I am informed that at least one large N. Y. art house apparently favors such calling of its employes to pass upon the importations of other houses. Can this be possible? Surely if opposition were made by the employers of restorers, salesmen, or others in their employ to such service, the Government officials would recognize the justice of the request and refrain from calling such employes.

No, Mr. Editor, the custom which you so well and bravely criticize and protest against is all wrong—and should be stopped at once even if the Secretary of the Treasury has to be appealed to.

Yours very truly,

Veteran Art Dealer.

New York, Feb. 2, 1916.

Will Finger Prints Stop Picture "Faking"?

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS.

Dear Sir:

Will finger prints stop "fakes"? It is timely and interesting to note that some publicity is being given to the subject of insuring, such as the "finger print" method referred to in an article in one of your recent issues.

All would welcome a means of positive identification. In the writer's opinion, the "finger print" can be duplicated just as readily as the signature and date and, perhaps, with greater ease and accuracy. To illustrate, it may be accomplished in at least two ways: (a) Manual skill, by "picchietamenti" (imitating with small instruments and brush), and (b) Mechanical, by use of a dye or plate, with which an accurate impression, giving the same effect of the finger, can be made either upon the gold leaf seal or canvas itself.

Some system of identification should be adopted, not alone for the preservation of records but also to act as a check to "faking." Although the "finger print" may, to a limited extent, be a step in this direction, it seems to me that the intentional imitator, a clever and skilled artisan, can, with impunity, continue his practices, just so soon as he has "mastered" the "finger print."

The case is not analogous to that of the identification of the criminal in modern times, because, although the criminal is often brought to justice by the tell-tale print he left behind, we know that he did not do so for that express purpose; and, further, after he is apprehended, the law throws an additional safeguard about him, for fear of mistake, in that it requires, before there can be a conviction, that he be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, before a court and jury.

At present it is mainly by the intimate study and knowledge of the individual characteristics of the painter's method, style, brushwork, etc., by which we identify and classify the work, almost regardless of the fact whether or not there is imprinted, brushed, signed or endorsed thereon the name, date, finger print, number or code mark, for the purported identification and genuineness.

May it not be a good idea for artists to sign and serially number their pictures, or use an individual code mark? Those who do not approve the signature and number method could use an individual code system, a copy of which could be deposited with a recognized museum, organization or other duly constituted governmental body or board, authorized to receive and preserve such record. In the contingency that the artist should inadvertently duplicate the number or code mark, or omit the same, there is little likelihood that the composition would be the same. In any event, should the question of genuineness arise in any similar or different situation, it would facilitate the decision of the competent.

Very truly yours,

N. Y., Jan. 31, 1916. Stephen Pichetto.

Those "Library Lions."

Editor American Art News.

Dear Sir:

I note with keen regret, in your issue of Jan. 22, a letter from a correspondent making light of the lions in front of the Public Library. The letter is of little consequence in itself, and I have no intention of defending the sculptures in question, which are of so high an order to need no defense from me, but I cannot refrain from expressing surprise, and even indignation, that you should give such a letter a place in your periodical, whose aims are so admirable.

The statues which are treated so flippantly are the serious product of a sculptor who, as you know, has produced and is producing works of exceptional merit, and who has the high respect of his fellow artists. I think you, too, should accord him the respect which his talents and his sincerity have won for him in the art world, and that you should guard him and all other serious artists from ridicule, so far as you can. Thoughtful criticism is proper and desirable, but no good purpose is served by such an article as the one to which I refer, and it is not only useless and silly, but cruel and unjust.

Yours faithfully,

Daniel C. French.

New York, Jan. 31, 1916.

[While we regret that Mr. Pell's humorous little fling at the Library Lions should have so annoyed Mr. French, we are confident Mr. Pell intended no reflection nor did we intend, ourselves to make any such reflection on Mr. Potter's ability as a sculptor.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

Ruger Donoho.

A landscape painter of much talent, Ruger Donoho, who had exhibited with notable success both abroad and in this country, died suddenly Jan. 29 at his home, 130 W. 57 St., at the age of 58. Born at Church Hill, Mississippi, Mr. Donoho first became a pupil of R. Swain Gifford. He also studied at the Art Students League and in the early 80's went to Paris and entered the Julien Atelier, among his masters being Tony Robert Fleury, Bouguereau, Lefebvre and Boulangier. It was with a landscape painted at Grez and called "La Marcellerie," that the artist made his first success. This was exhibited at the Salon and now forms part of the permanent collection of the Brooklyn Museum. Mr. Donoho won a silver medal at the Paris Universal Exposition in 1889. In 1892 he won the Webb prize at the exhibition of the Society of American Artists and the following year a medal at the Columbia Exhibition in Chicago. He also won a silver medal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. At the Carnegie Institute displays at Pittsburgh he was often represented and won an honorable mention there in 1911. Mr. Donoho, who leaves a widow, Miss Matilda Ackley of Philadelphia, was a member of the Lotos and Players Clubs.

Mrs. E. M. Gardner.

Just as she finished her thousandth painting of cats, Mrs. E. M. Gardner was stricken with blindness in her home in Pitman, N. J., and died there. Her sight held out just long enough for her to realize the ambition of her life.

Mrs. Gardner was born in Colchester, Conn. She began painting thirty years ago in Phila. and painted only cats.

DEALERS' NOTES.

The superior collection of Engraved Portraits by the master engravers of the XVII Century, formed by Mr. Junius S. Morgan, and which was purchased from that collector by a German art dealer of this city last year, will be sold at auction at the American Art Galleries Friday evening, Feb. 18 next.

Dr. Paul Mersch arrived from Paris, via Bordeaux, on "L'Espagne" recently, and is at the Savoy Hotel. He will be at the Brandus Galleries in the Windsor Arcade for the present. Mr. Brandus has returned from Boston.

Mr. Charles S. Carstairs of Knoedler & Co., 556 Fifth Ave., has recently returned from a trip to Palm Beach, where he was the guest of Mr. Henry C. Frick.

CHICAGO.

The fund now being raised here for the older French artists ineligible for war service and unable to dispose of their products in the depressed art market is to be distributed by the society "Appui aux Artistes" in Paris, and as already stated, Charles W. Dahlgren has contributed a hundred prints of his etching "Colmar" to this fund, each print selling for six dollars. Five American artists resident in Paris have turned their studios into restaurants where meals are provided, under the auspices of the society, for the older French artists at low prices. The "Appui aux Artistes" fund is increasing here, and local artists are supplementing the Dahlgren contribution.

The Antiquarian Society is making a success of its Chinese antique loan collection show now at the Art Institute. The loan comes from several collectors, the collection in its entirety fully represents the whole field of early Chinese art. On the first Sunday of the show, 10,198 visitors toured the galleries.

Mr. Ambrose Cramer, of Lake Forest, has loaned to the Institute a collection of Persian miniatures, books and MSS.—and this is the present attraction in the print rooms.

William Penhallow Henderson's exhibition of original pastels, at Roullier's, is of especial local and suburban interest. The pastels of gardens were done in Lake Forest and Lake Geneva. In the display there are also portrayals of city and country scenes, ballet scenes, glimpses of old Spain, of N. Y., of Boston—and even quaint dashes of the Chicago River! A versatile art has Henderson, lucid and mobile, and aglow with truth.

The Artists' Guild is featuring an exhibition of pastels by Matilda Vanderpoel, head of the juvenile department of the Art Institute School.

Pastels and drawings by Whistler have been loaned for exhibition at the Art Institute by Mr. Marshall Field.

E. Effa Webster.

WASHINGTON.

The loan exhibition of paintings by Edmund C. Tarbell in the new special exhibition room of the Corcoran Gallery of Art on Feb. 13, brings out 31 works, several of them lent by museums. The collection is quite representative of this oeuvre, all the various genres being included—portraits, figure pieces, interiors, etc.—and there are some canvases that go back as far as the Chicago World's Fair period, as for instance, the "In the Orchard," lent by Mrs. Tarbell. The list of lenders is in itself eloquent testimony to the recognition that the painter has received in his own country.

The pictures lent by public art museums include "My Children in the Woods," from the Boston Museum; "The Golden Screen," from the permanent collection of the Pa. Academy; "The Ventian Blind," from the Worcester Museum; "Preparing for the Matinee," from the permanent collection of the St. Louis Museum; "Josephine and Marie," owned by the Corcoran Gallery, and "The Blue Bowl," from the art gallery of Smith College.

The full-length and life-size portrait of Dean Briggs is lent by Harvard; the portrait of Mrs. Daniel Lothrop by the National Society of Children of the American Revolution; the portrait of Dr. J. H. Arnold by the Harvard Law School; the portrait of Mr. G. by the Tavern Club, Boston.

Among the other portraits, all loans, are those of Mmes. John S. Ames, Charles Taintor, Charles Goodyear, Samuel Cabot, Jr., Justice John W. Hammond, Mrs. John S. Lawrence, Franklin D. Locke, J. J. Albright and children and the portrait of Mrs. C., lent by Lawrence Minot.

In the class of interiors with figures the famous "Girl Crocheting," belonging to Bela L. Pratt, the sculptor, takes the leading place. The charming "Girl Cutting Patterns" is lent by Dr. John Morgan. "Young Woman Studying" is the most recent of these interiors, and will take rank easily among the best of its kind. Besides the six public galleries which possess examples of Tarbell's work, here exhibited, he is represented in several other museums, including those of Cincinnati, Providence, etc., and in the Wilstach collection in Phila.

PORTLAND (Oregon).

The December exhibition at the Museum consisted of tiles by Ernest A. Batchelder, and a collection of modern textiles, brocades, tapestries, velours and velvets. The Jan. exhibit, now on, includes some interesting Japanese prints, both ancient and modern, with notable examples of the best older men, together with modern Japanese textiles and old temple hangings.

Mrs. Frederic Platt of Brooklyn, N. Y., has given the Museum three pictures, "The Black Hat," Alden Weir; "Sunset," George Inness, and a watercolor by Mauve.

BOSTON.

William M. Paxton's exhibition, which is on during the current fortnight at the Guild of Boston Artists Gallery, has filled a long-felt want in the eyes of many. His work, for the most part, is finished to the last degree, so that no one is left wondering as to what he might have done if he had done more, with any one of his examples, or, indeed, what he intends to do next. This is a great boon to the bridge players and auto enthusiasts, as it saves their brains for really important things. Mr. Paxton shows about a baker's dozen of pictures, giving a handsome, representative impression. Marvelously skillful are these works, to which the word "artistry" applies beyond dispute. Among these pictures—so well drawn and brilliant in color—are "1875," a lady in a bright green gown of the style of the period, his last Phila. Academy and medal picture, and his attractive "Green Princess," and the prettily painted "Girl with Hand Mirror," "Blue Book" and "The Letter." There are also one or two very life-like portraits. In fact, Mr. Paxton's "long suite" is to make his painting very "like" the object he is painting. What he lacks is idealism. His vision is not equal to his technique and his powers of reproduction. He has skill of the hand, but not the vision of the soul.

Gertrude Fiske, one of the most talented of the more recent Art Museum graduates, is to follow Paxton with an exhibition at the Guild. Any one acquainted with her work may confidently look for something original and daring. On Friday A. T. Hibbard opened a show at the Boston Art Club. He is a recent winner of the Paige Traveling Scholarship. Mr. Hibbard is a good draughtsman and has a good decorative sense. His pictures are, for the most part, well composed, with the light and shade and color well balanced.

Vose's Gallery has been showing Walter Gilman Page's recent pictures during the past week. Mr. Page is another painter who produces carefully finished work. It is certainly not of the slapdash order. The results of his methods are effective and pleasing. Among his favorite subjects are feminine portrait heads in profile. Some of these are very successful—as where he poses girl with dark hair and pearly skin against a pale gray background, making an effective silhouette. One might say that a distinguishing quality of Mr. Page's work is his sense of refinement and delicacy.

Miss Helena Sturtevant, of Newport, R. I., has been showing an interesting collection of oils and pastels at the Copley Gallery. Miss Sturtevant has many of the qualities of the good landscapist. Among the pictures here exhibited is her exceedingly well-done "Winter," which was awarded the Robert Reid prize at a recent exhibition of the Newport Art Exhibition.

John Doe.

KANSAS CITY.

The City Club is showing this week a collection of paintings by Birger Sandzen of Lindsborg, Kas. Mr. Sandzen studied under Zorn and in Paris. His color is extraordinarily vivid and atmospheric. The paintings are chiefly of mountain scenes of the West. The Club has purchased a painting "Capri," a delicate presentation of the island in its shimmering light by Charles A. Wilimovsky, of the Fine Arts Institute faculty.

The Findlay Gallery is showing a group of portraits and landscape sketches by Susan Ricker Knox of New York. Miss Knox's work shows an access of color and a freedom in handling that surpasses the work by her previously shown in Kansas City.

The Rombong at some near date will show designs by Leon Bakst and other colorists in illustration of the costumes worn by the Diaghileff Ballet Russe.

Ralph J. Block.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post-season art on the Exposition grounds is not proving so profitable as was hoped by the promoters of the plan to keep the fine arts exhibition open during the remainder of the winter and spring months.

Since the Palace of Fine Arts, with its rearranged and augmented collection of pictures and statuary, was reopened, its receipts have run steadily behind the expense of maintaining the exhibition. Official figures show that the daily expense of keeping the Fine Arts Palace open even exceeds the total cash receipts from admissions to the grounds. As the paid admissions to the Exposition grounds are by no means all from visitors to the art gallery, it is figured that the actual cash returns brought to the exposition from keeping the palace open are very slight indeed.

PHILADELPHIA.

At the recent annual meeting of the Fairmount Park Art Ass'n. a design by Edgar V. Seeler, architect, and Charles Grafly, sculptor, for the Ellen Phillips Samuel Memorial was exhibited. The Park Commissioners have approved of the general scheme of the Memorial which will illustrate, by means of architectural decoration and statuary extending along the eastern bank of the Schuylkill, the history of America. An appropriation of $3,800 from the Art Ass'n General Fund was made to pay for the designs. The income of the sum of $500,000, the amount of the bequest is to be used, as it becomes available, for the purpose of carrying out the wishes of the testator, the late Mrs. J. Bunford Samuel. Mr. Edward T. Stotesbury, President, and Dr. L. W. Miller, Secretary, of the Ass'n state, in their report, that the new Art Museum is virtually assured, that the development of the plan of the proposed Ericsson Memorial and the Fairmount Water Front improvement has been temporarily suspended owing to the absence, on service in the French army, of Prof. Paul P. Cret, the architect. There is a fund of $18,118 in the treasury.

The Art Club announces the opening of an exhibition of a collection of 65 marines and landscapes by Clifford W. Ashley.

The exhibition of Portrait Impressions by Robert Reid is still in progress at the Rosenbach Galleries, resulting in a number of commissions for the painter, now busily engaged on them at the Ritz-Carlton. This exhibition will be followed by another of the works of Pierre Tartové.

The Morgan Collection of Chinese Porcelains included in an important collection of Oriental Art will be opened to the public in Charles Custis Harrison Hall of the University Museum, Feb. 13.

A reward of $1,000 is offered for the recovery of a collection of jewelry forming the Ida E. S. Noves Memorial, stolen from the Chicago Art Institute, Dec. 11. A valuable and artistic opal necklace, the work of René Lalique, of Paris, is the principal object missing.

Eugene Castello.

CINCINNATI.

Reminiscent, yet decidedly original too, though beautifully complete, is the art of Paul Manship exemplified in his "one man" show now at the Museum. An accomplished craftsman, an enthusiastic student of classic and oriental art, and of a sane and extremely happy temperament, Manship's short career has been one of great popularity.

Messrs. Duvencek and Meskin are now printing for the first time since 1884, when Golding in London did the work, a new series of the former's etchings.

A little exhibition of oils, gathered by a local woman collector, is on exhibition at the Museum. The collection is quite unique, through the strongly personal taste of the collector and includes a number of gems. Among the artists represented are Cottet, De Nittis, Sisley, de la Gandara, La Touche, Thaulow, Caputo, Ullman.

Norbert Heermann.

NASHVILLE.

The Art Association has just held a three weeks' exhibition of paintings from the American Watercolor Society.

The next exhibit will be one of fifty selected oils from the American Federation of Art.

There was interest displayed in the recent lecture of Mr. Arthur Stanley Riggs under the auspices of the Archaeological Institute and the Art Association given at "Woodstock," home of Mrs. James C. Bradford, the president of both the Archaeological Society and Art Association. The subject was "The Art and Civilization of Sicily," illustrated with colored stereopticon slides.

Mrs. Bradford extended the courtesies of her home for the lecture, not only to the members of the two organizations, but to the faculties of the schools and universities, the press, Tenn. Woman's Press and Authors' Club, the Federated Clubs, etc.

Announcement is made of the coming exhibition of the Besnard Peace Canvas and Ceiling Decoration under the auspices of the Art Association for the benefit of the French Artists' Fund. Much local interest is developed in the event.

AN ARCHITECTS' PAGEANT.

On Friday night the classic pageant of the Architectural League held in the Fine Art Galleries, was inaugurated by a procession, with banner bearers, trumpeters and heralds, who descended into the South gallery and grouped themselves around the President of the Secret Garden of Inspiration, to listen to his opening speech. The architects were costumed in dark red, the painters in blue, and the sculptors in green, the President being in vermillion.

The Heralds then announced the opening of the Secret Garden of Inspiration. Into this the procession passed, followed by the guests and members. In the center of the Garden knelt vestal virgins guarding the sacred fire. The orchestra then played selections from Grieg, and girls in Greek costumes, carrying flowers, danced in the centre of the Garden.

The High Priestess, Mme. Varonieskb, after a special dance, released two doves. Varonieskb appeared and gave a peacock dance, followed by a pageant Dance of the Hours. For the third time the chief dancer appeared in a sensational act.

After the pageant supper was served. Winsor McKay did some artistic screen work and F. Luis Mora appeared again in his noted bull fighter act. A dance followed.

SALES PAST AND TO COME.

Books on Law and Science.

At a sale of books on law and science from the libraries of Dr. W. O. Tucker, C. B. Merrill and M. S. Wilcox at the Anderson Galleries Jan. 29, $1,055.90 was realized. Mr. S. C. Hooker paid $166 for a complete set of the American Chemical Journal and $38 for the Journal of the American Chemical Society. D. Logan and Son gave $39 for the Journal of the Chemical Society of London and Dr. Joseph Martini $38 for the Surgeon-General's Library. Scott & Peters paid $37.50 for "Lawyers Reports Annotated."

Sale at Clarke's Rooms.

At the second session of the Andrews, Landon, Coe and Oppenheimer sale at Clarke's Auction Rooms, 12 W. 44, on Wed., the grand total of the sale was brought to $18,170. Clapp & Graham gave $700 for Carleton Wiggins' "Cattle at a Pool" and W. R. F. Ross $260 for E. L. Weeks' "The Favorites of the Harem." Mr. Morris Kirby paid $230 for Hebert's "On the River" and Mr. McLean $220 for E. Sanche-Perrier's "Spanish Villa."

Bibliographical Collection Sale.

Victor H. Paltsits, formerly of New York, State historian and now keeper of MSS. in the New York Public Library, has consigned to the Anderson Galleries from his private library a valuable bibliographical collection, including works on incunabula, topography, cartography, and other subjects, and catalogs of famous sales, books on Canada and the Indians, and other valuable Americana. These books, of particular interest to collectors, catalogers, librarians, and bibliographers generally, are now on exhibition and will be sold Monday and Tuesday afts., Feb. 14 and 15.

Perry-Canfield Furniture Sale.

The sale Jan. 29 at the American Art Galleries of antique furniture of objects of art from the collections of Marsden J. Perry and the late Richard Canfield resulted in $31,580.50 for 148 numbers. Mr. H. Burlingham gave $1,365, the highest price, for a Chippendale set, chairs and a settee from the Perry collection. He also gave $1,275 for a mahogany Chippendale later period china cabinet from the Canfield collection; $825 for a mahogany Chippendale secretary bookcase of the middle period from that of Mr. Perry; $625 for a mahogany Chippendale silver table and $375 for a Chippendale card table from the same collection. Mr. Otto Bernet, agent, paid $1,200 for Mr. Canfield's Barye bronze "Theseus fighting the Minotaur," and Mr. H. Burlingham $625 for the same collector's Barye bronze "Seated Lion." To Mr. Henry Symons fell for $900 the large mahogany break-front George III. bookcase which figured in both the Canfield and Perry collections and at $450 a Heppelwhite wine cooler and pedestal. For a Chippendale tea kettle or urn stand Mr. Morris Schwartz paid $625. Miss Lorenze, agent paid $525 for a Chippendale silver table and $500 for two Chippendale chairs. Mr. Frank Bradley secured for $330 a mahogany Sheraton secretary and Mr. Irving Untermeyer $310 for a famille verte Chinese vase. The last amount was paid by Mr. R. H. Swarthout for an XVIII. century Chippendale period marble-topped side table and for an early Chippendale period walnut arm chair. For an early XVIII. century English marguerite tall clock he paid $400.

FROM ART TALKS WITH RANGER—(G. P. Putnam's Sons—Publishers)
 "The skillful artist—the first rate craftsman—leaves none of his effects to the caprice of chance. He can drive the technical and the theoretical steeds of his art, side by side as it were, or in tandem, without entangling them in the traces of his art. Many a man, not without cleverness, has been undone in attempting this feat. The cause of disaster can usually be traced to lack of taste or a faulty knowledge of principles involved."

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON.

The Arts and Architecture.

Sculpture and decorative painting, rather over shadow architecture at this year's display, to Feb. 26, of the Architectural League, inaugurated last evening by a brilliant Terpsichorean garden fete, replacing the annual dinner. For this the Vanderbilt Gallery was transformed into a formal classic garden, in which sculptural exhibits look their place, the illusion being further carried out by draperies of blue gauze above and to the north, through the latter tree forms and stars were seen. There was a "Souper Champetre" and dancing both in costume and general.

The garden, which remains during the month's exhibition, has to the east, an ivy-covered arbor of five niches, while to the west, rise columns of an atrium, through which is seen the very large and striking panorama of New York in 1915, by Burch Burdette Long, which figured in the New York Building at the Pana-Pacific Exposition. Indeed as the last display, of the League was in much of its work, a prelude to the Exposition sculptural features, the present one is partly recrudescence, for several other of the sculptures are shown. The centre of the artificial sward, in which small sheets of water appear, is held by Robert Aitkin's masterly bronze sun dial fountain, with its two boy figures. To the east, in front of the arbor, rises the full size model of D. C. French's "The Spirit of Life," from the Trask memorial, while to the east of the atrium, is the model of Augustus Lukeman's reclining figure for the Strauss memorial fountain. Between the niches, on the left, are small exposition figures by D. C. French and Joseph Krupka, the former showing among others "Agriculture" and "Panama," and the latter "India." The capital groups of "Faith and Love" and "Hope" and "Charity" by Edward F. Sanford, for the Core Mansoleum at Norfolk, Va., designed by H. Van Buren MacGonigle appear. Another sculpture of note in this gallery, whose walls are chiefly covered with architectural designs and photographs, is Louis Ulrich's spirited "Fountain Imp." Then there is Janet Scudder's graceful figure in a fountain niche.

In the Central Gallery.

Sculpture is again the dominating figure in the central gallery. Here are Herbert Adams' colossal figure of "Peace" and Chas. Keck's equally large statue of "Letters" for Columbia College. Other works are Fred E. Clark's large and effective group of Music and Fun for the Shenley Conservatory fountain at Pittsburgh and F. H. Packer's effective War and Peace for the General Greene memorial at Greensboro, N. C. Here also are V. D. Brenner's group for the Shenley memorial fountain at Pittsburgh and Sherry E. Fry's rather stiff "Victory Commanding Peace" for the Barret memorial at St. George, S. I. Chester Beach has a capital fountain figure and Anna V. Hyatt's excellent Joan of Arc statue appears in a small model with pedestal and in a photograph. Also figure C. C. Rumsey's model for the prize for the arch of the Manhattan bridge approach; Albert H. Atkins' panel for the Copenhagen memorial fountain in Boston; Maud Daggett's attractive model for a garden wall fountain, and Frederick B. Clarke's charming holy water fount. Two graceful spaniel figures, and two terminal figures for the Panama-Pacific court of the Four Seasons are by Augustus Jaegers. Nancy Coosman shows a pleasing model of a drinking fountain at St. Louis and Ulysses Ricci a well handled fountain with two figures for a country estate. A picturesque sundial and bird bath was modelled by B. Lillian Link. Horace Piccerilli sends an artistic figure of "The Cock" and Charles R. Harley a well modelled "Cup." An imposing and interesting architectural exhibit is a plaster model section through the rotunda of Tracy and Swarthout's Missouri State Capitol. The "Boy Pan with a Frog" is an attractive statue by Clement T. Barnhorn.

Some Decorative Works.

In the outer gallery the principal feature in size is a work of good execution, admirably composed by Stanley Arthur, a mural decoration for the Dover, Del., State capitol, depicting the departure during the Revolution from Dover of the first Delaware troops. Violet Oakley shows a brilliant series of studies from the life of Penn for the cycle of the prize in the governor's room in the Pa. State capitol and a Dante window of much elaboration. W. Laurel Harris exhibits color studies for the decoration of the sanctuary of the Church of St. Nicholas of the Children at Passaic, N. J. By R. W. Chanler there is an elaborate Japanese decorative screen. H. W. Rubins has a decorative work in oil showing "The Young Sculptor," and Kenyon Cox a study of his decoration of the Meeting of the Atlantic and Pacific. J. Mortimer Lichtenauer sends a couple of brilliant nude studies in sanguine. By Ernest Peixotto there are attractive decorative landscape over mantel panels. Arthur Covey signs a bright series of sketches for a decoration for a city steamship office. Albert Hencke dedicates "To Spring" some artistic panels. A bright color note is furnished by Stephen Haweis' "Tea Garden Study." Ambitious and well designed is the panel by Howard McCormick, "Bringing Presents to the Seigneur." An over mantel by Carroll T. Berry represents "The Builders." Henry Reuterdahl makes picturesque use of "Sky-Scrapers."

John Wenger depicts "The Chase" and Edith M. Magonigle shows Persian influence in her quaint "The Fortune Teller," "The Falconess" and "The King." Fritz Winold Reiss has a decoratively handled landscape. An altar triptych has been well designed by Edward D. Herrick. Warren Dahser shows a judgment of Paris, in which Paris looks rather sheepish and the women are not over attractive. The general effect is, however, rather good. W. T. Benda has three spirited groups of dancers. Victor Perard made capital decorative use of the new Pa. bridge.

The Rome Prize room makes a fine showing. John Gregory, sculptor, shows admirable fruits of his three years' work in his seated figure of a young apprentice, a figure of young Juno with her peacock, a "Princess" group in relief and a 3 panel relief in marble called "Venus." The work has a distinct early Egyptian flavor, which is not at all imitative. The architect is Kenneth E. Carpenter, who has designed an imposing music hall, of which there is a model. With him on this the painter, Eugene Savage, and the sculptor have collaborated. Another interesting exhibit is that of the classes of the Beaux Arts Architects. There was no award made this year of the Avery architect, sculptor and painter joint competition.

The Gold Medal of the League was awarded to Mr. Cass Gilbert for his Woolworth Building. To Herbert Adams fell the prize for sculpture and to Violet Oakley that for painting. A. v. C.

Some 28 oils by Harry L. Hoffman on at the Folsom Galleries, 396 5 Ave., to Feb. 17, are brilliant in color and vigorously brushed. One of especial interest shows washerwomen on the outskirts of a small Spanish town, picturesquely grouped about a stream, washing their clothes.

In another of the Spanish pictures—a bridge reflected in the water is a skillful rendering of light and shadow. There are southern pictures—"Great Falls of the Potomac," an interior—lower in key than the others—showing colored women picking cotton, most realistic, a view of Washington's headquarters at Williamsburg, Va., and others.

Good Show at Liberal Club.

There is a little show on at the Liberal Club, 135 MacDougal St., in which there are some good and some commonplace pictures, and some "cubistic" effusions, which is difficult to classify. Among the best of the good pictures is John Sloan's virile portrayal of "Patrick Quinlan." The artist has caught racial traits, skillfully. He also contributes "Sally in the Garden," a gawky little girl with legs and arms a bit too long to drape gracefully, is sitting on the grass, doubled up in a convincing, if awkward, position. It is painted premier coup and the color is fresh. Eugene Higgins in "Two Murderers," shows a gressomely realistic portrayal of a "Bill Sykesesque" man, accompanied by a wicked-looking dog of more definite type than Bill's and "Patriots"—a vulture swooping over wounded soldiers.

Maurice Becker's portraits of women are like school studies. Homer Boss gives no caption as a key to what may be a rock-bound coast and a little schooner on a blue sea. Glenn Coleman's Washington Square in winter is a little gem and his pictures of Chinatown are interesting. The most sane of John Pandick's cubistic portraits is an uncomfortably realistic depiction of an elderly man with a most disconcerting and original cross-eyed expression. A hideous girl of Mongolian type, depicted by A. Baylenson, stares vacantly into space and clasps her hands tightly. In this and a "Landscape" the painter shows skill in applying his medium.

Pastels by F. Mortimer Lamb.

An artist of talent, J. Mortimer Lamb, who has a graceful way of expressing himself, has on view, at the Schwartz Galleries, 290 Fifth Ave., a collection of landscapes in oil and pastel, 40 in number. These are remarkable for a large and masterly handling of the skies, which are featured. Effective is "My Garden Gate" and capital are "The Canopy of Heaven," "Storm Clouds," and "The Glory of Sunshine."

Watercolor Society's Fiftieth Year.

The 49th exhibition of the American Watercolor Society, on to Feb. 27, at the National Arts Club, 119 E. 19 St., is one of the best shows that has been seen since the society was organized 50 years ago, Dec. 5, 1866, with Samuel Colman as the first president. The president of today, William S. Robinson, says that as far as he has been able to learn, Mr. Colman is the only survivor.

The Hudnut prize of $200 for the most meritorious work was awarded to W. Granville Smith for his bright street scene in "Old Phila."

From a wide experience, it can be stated that no show of its size in the world—there are 356 exhibits—is superior to the present one, which has as special features groups of works by the president of the Academy, J. Alden Weir, and the late F. Hopkinson Smith. Mr. Weir's six examples are tender and artistic. The five works by Hopkinson Smith include scenes in Holland, Venice and England. A. L. Groll has a group of six artistic views in Arizona and New Mexico, and one in Central Park, done in wax crayons.

A large motor boat group called the "Return from the Weir" is by George Elmer Browne, and is a scene near Provincetown. This is flanked by two clever N. Y. street scenes by Felicia Waldo Howell. E. J. Course presents an Italian subject, simple and E. H. Potthast has a group of four of his brilliant beach scenes, one, "The Baptism," especially fine. Jane Peterson has several clever gouaches on gray paper, Gloucester and Edgartown street and shore scenes.

Arthur Crisp is very bright in a pantomime scene and has also a sea cliff scene with figures largely handled.

A group of the contortionists includes C. Bertram Hartman, W. Meyerowitz, and Charles H. Wright, who shows three cleverly handled nude females with scarlet, black and brown hair turning hand springs in the open. Emil Hering has two cleverly handled figures of "The Ancestor" and "The Attack," both prehistoric and Germanic. Victor Hall has a clever nude on the seashore. Philip Boileau has a highly artistic nude, "Etude."

Carroll Beckwith sends a charming peasant and girl by a hay stack (Normandy) and a pastel, not so good, called "Fairfield in the Distance." By W. S. Robinson there is a delicate impression of early morning, "In the North Woods," and in a different vein, "Fishing Boats."

Rosina Emmett Sherwood has a fine group of four works, brilliant in color, including "Portrait" and "The Green Umbrella." Everett Warner shows a view remarkable for its atmospheric effect and color, of West Street, N. J. Beautiful is Adam Emory Albright's group of two children, "The Coffee Mill," and "The Wonderful Story," with another pair.

Florence T. Snell signs a well massed view of "Bridge and Convent, Assisi." Mary Langtry is more than usually ambitious in a decorative of the Palisades. Capital is Geo. Wharton Edwards' "A Village at Monhegan."

Among others represented are Ben Foster, W. J. Aylward, L. F. Berneker, C. C. Curran, C. W. Eaton, R. O. Chadeayne, Josephine W. Colby, F. M. Lamb, Louise B. Mansfield, Frances I. Neill, J. F. Carlson, Olive Rush, C. T. Ryder, Susan H. Bradley, E. Dufner, S. K. Hartman, G. H. Hilder, Roy Browne, E. St. Leger, F. M. Lamb, C. Basing, S. D. Shaw, G. Grant, C. P. Gruppe, R. Beal, A. Brown and H. P. Browne, G. L. Nelson and Euphonia C. Mallison.

Landscapes by Mazzanovich.

Ten landscapes, in oil, by L. Mazzanovich are at the City Club, 55 W. 44 St., to Feb. 14. The majority of them are rather hard and photographic and not very convincing in color. The captions—"Invocation," "High Solitude," "Fields of Azure," etc., are more poetic than the renderings. However, a canvas entitled "Moon Dark" has elusive charm and is nice in design and there is one view of rural New Hampshire, in early spring which seems a faithful transcript of nature. The exceedingly blue "River of Gertitude" and "Spring Freshets" do not inspire much emotion in the observer.

Persian Miniatures on View.

Mr. Emile Tabbagh, who is established in attractive galleries, at 707 Fifth Ave., is showing an interesting collection of early Persian miniatures (which range from the early XV. to the XVIII. century), the latter examples being of the Indo-Persian school. The charms of the work of the early trans-Caucasian artists consists of both art and naivete, and the present collection contains examples of the work, among others of Riza Abbassy, Bihzad and Shah Mahmood.

Swedish Art at Brooklyn Museum.

With art as with literature it is largely a question of environment, and so the art of the Scandinavian countries, is the art of a land of cold gray seas and skies, and snow covered shores ice bound for half the year, and is therefore morbid and material, prosaic and generally "painty." There are, to be sure, occasional exceptions, for Zorn although material and at times coarse, is not at all morbid, but rather jovial, and Larsen is delightful in his scenes of child life, as remarkable for their simplicity as the work of De Monvel.

Zorn is represented in the Swedish exhibition, open through the month at the Brooklyn Museum by six oils, including the Dalecarlian girl, which, with the majority of the exhibits, appeared at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The remainder of his works shown are loaned, and include a brilliantly painted nude, "The Cigarette Girl," and "The Water Pails," as well as a number of etchings. Larsen, in addition to his large and coldly decorative "In the Birch Grove" has three home scenes, including the inevitable "Summer Morning," with the nude figure of a small girl seen from the back and the very complete picture, showing a small boy on skis.

The portraits of Rector Schuch by Masolle, and of the late Prof. Curman by Osterman, are vigorous and full of character, although the first has a coat that is both blue and green.

Hjortzberg makes his Italian a gloomy and vicious looking person; Mas-Olle's Dalecarlian peasant is unsympathetic and Torne-man's "The Fantasist," is a degenerate appearing individual. Elsa Backlund-Celsing lightens things up a little with her young woman, "Tobogganing." Schultzberg is most interesting in his winter and summer night landscapes, and Anna Boberg is effective, although very painty, in "Fishing Fleet at Anchor." Wilhelm Smith has five works, of which "Ploughing" is notable.

The winter scenes are numerous and generally rather depressing. Fjaestad and Bergman having a number, and those by Behm are particularly good.

Others represented by pictures are Bergstrom, Burmeister, Carlberg, Fahkrantz von Knafel, Hedberg, Hesselbom, Hüllgren, Johansson, Kallstenius, Kusel, Liljefors, Osslund, Schultzberg, Strandberg, Torsander, Anna Wrangel and oir. The sculptures include a number of figurines, and the prints are interesting.

LONDON LETTER.

London, Jan. 25, 1916.

An interesting innovation was introduced at the Victoria and Albert Museum during the Christmas holidays for the instruction and amusement of the juvenile visitors. One of the large rooms on the ground floor was especially set aside as a "Children's Room," and the exhibits were specially selected with a view to appealing to the youthful taste. There were weapons of war from all the ages, examples of armour and horses' trappings from every clime and every epoch to interest the boys, while for the girls were arranged a series of models wearing the gowns of bygone days, dolls' houses that had been the joy of some eighteenth century miss, and specimens of the iron jewelry worn by the women who had sacrificed their gold and precious gems to enrich their nation's coffers when depleted by the Napoleonic Wars. Demonstrations of hand-weaving, spinning, block-printing and stencilling were also arranged, and a number of guides conducted the children among the various exhibits, explaining in simple terms the historical and artistic significance of each. Enterprises such as this should do much to teach the future generation the habit of frequenting and enjoying museums and of taking an intelligent interest in the relics of past ages.

The Burglary at Kedleston.

The burglars who are responsible for the theft of a number of valuable antiques from Kedleston Hall, the seat of Earl Curzon's father, were evidently no ordinary house-breakers, but gentlemen with a decided "flair" for art, for they made a most judicious selection from among the family treasures, possessing themselves of a quantity of the finest of Lord Scarsdale's seventeenth century silver, some rare antique snuff-boxes, and several family miniatures. The difficulty of disposing of the booty in England points to its probable destination being America, so that American collectors should beware of acquiring from any but trustworthy sources miniatures by Nathaniel Hone, Queen Anne snuff-boxes of unusual merit, and George III. toilet silver. On this side the famous collection is well known to connoisseurs, so that it may fairly be assumed that no efforts will be made to offer the pieces to buyers on this side.

Gossip has it that one of the most important of the London galleries (I speak not of a dealer's establishment, but of galleries used for the purpose of exhibitions of various types) will shortly close its doors, the war having curtailed so materially the sales effected and the attendance registered, that the takings have not of late been sufficient to meet the considerable rent. Galleries, such as the one of which I write, have suffered much more severely than the ordinary dealers who have, as a rule, their own clientele, whose members, even if they are not purchasing to the same extent as in normal times, are always ready to make an exception when informed of an unusual opportunity of adding to their collections.

A Velasquez at Birmingham.

Visitors to the Birmingham Art Gallery have now the opportunity of examining there two interesting pictures lent by Mr. M. H. Spielmann, one of which is the "Angels appearing to the Shepherds" by Velasquez, for many years in the Louvre, and the other a contemporary copy of Titian's "Bacchus and Ariadne," the original of which is one of the greatest treasures in the National Gallery. The Velasquez, on being given up by the Louvre to the heirs of Louis Philippe, was sent to England, where it eventually found its way to Christie's, passing from one ownership to another, until in 1911 it was discovered, posing as a Murillo, in a Bond street salesroom. A couple of years later it was given the place of honor in the Spanish Exhibition at the Grafton Galleries, where it gave rise to considerable controversy among the critics. The copy of the Titian is also exceedingly fine and of especial value in that it establishes a number of details which, through roughness in cleaning, have been entirely lost in the National Gallery original. The character of the canvas used and of the paint employed, point to the fact that this copy was doubtless executed in Titian's studio, while certain passages are believed to have been painted by the master himself.

Miniaturists Are Prosperous.

Miniature painters have not for many a year known such days of prosperity as they are enjoying at present and many of the most capable have lately undertaken more commissions than they see any prospect of filling for many months to come. These, of course, are for the most part destined for gifts to be given to soldiers by those they leave at home, the feeling being that a greater intimacy attaches to the painted presentment than can be claimed for the mechanical process of photography. This sudden increase in the popularity of the miniature should do much to develop and deepen an art which for some time past has languished in the realms of the "pretty-pretty" and been content to be regarded as merely mildly decorative and nothing more. It may safely be prophesied that much good work will soon be forthcoming in this direction and that the greater part of it will be produced by our women artists.

It was a happy idea on the part of the directors of the Leicester Galleries to devote a section of their rooms to paintings and etchings by the "Artists' Rifles," a corps which has already distinguished itself in a variety of ways. A large number of the works shown were carried out before the beginning of the war, so that the general aspect of the exhibition is hardly so martial as might have been expected. There are, however, a number of sketches, made "somewhere in France," impressions which should prove invaluable later in the execution of the more ambitious records of warfare, which, it is to be hoped, will emanate from our artist-soldiers in the days to come.

If one pauses to remember that only scant time for artistic creation is afforded to the man on the active service, one may find comfort in the reflection that had a higher level of merit been observable in the majority of work produced while on active

IN STUDIO AND GALLERY.

The exhib'n of the works of Frank Townsend Hutchens at the Reinhardt galleries, 567 Fifth Ave., was so successful that it was extended a week, closing today.

At the Braus Gallery, 2123 Broadway, there are on view 24 pictures by the late W. C. Fittler, which include a number of summer and autumn views in his picturesque and poetic manner.

A Fifth Ave. gallery recently sold to Mr. Joseph Bancroft, for the estate of Samuel Bancroft, Jr., of Wilmington, Del., D. G. Rosetti's picture, "Mme. Mosyne."

The exhib'n of the Nat'l Association of Portrait Painters is on to Feb. 23, at the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh.

The joint committee of the Soc'y of Beaux Arts Architects and the Mural Painters is holding a competition to be judged Feb. 29, for the decoration of a city drawing room.

PARIS LETTER.

Paris, Jan. 25, 1916.

It may be imagined by many in America that France, after seventeen months of war, is deserted by foreign artists. This it not so. Of American artists, especially, a numerous and valiant rear-guard has remained, and has done good work in two senses; in the steadfast pursuit of art and in giving practical aid to the French nation in its struggle. From the first weeks of the war American artists have been conspicuous among their fellow-countrymen who have entered the ambulance service, and several have been exposed to real danger at or near the front. I have not at hand the names of all who volunteered for field ambulance service, and it is with no invidious intention that I mention here only two whose work has been particularly zealous and efficient: Charles Thorndike and Herman Webster. Thorndike was actually in the great September battle in Champagne as driver of an American ambulance car, into which he received wounded men while under fire of shrapnel and musketry. Webster, as lieutenant of a whole ambulance section, has displayed incessant activity, and his life has also been frequently imperilled. He left Paris again recently at the head of a group of ambulance men who are to do a special work in the Alsatian mountains. Both the men and the stretchers which they are using are mounted on skis, for the transportation of the wounded over the frozen snow, up and down the steep inclines. Thorndike is known as a talented painter of the less radical wing of the post-impressionist school, and Webster as an etcher of distinctive qualities.

Among the American artists who have given their services at the ambulance hospital established by Americans at Neuilly are the painters Frederick Frieseke and Morton Johnson and the sculptor Mac-Adams.

Since many American artists who were living in France have returned to their own country, those who are left here have been drawn much more closely together. In a relative sense, the American Art Association's club rooms in the rue Joseph Bara have become more than ever the real centre of the Anglo-Saxon art colony. It now counts several members who owe allegiance to Great Britain. The greater need of intimate fellowship in war time has led also to the holding of a weekly dinner, at which a true Bohemian spirit reigns and to which artists of other nationalities are sometimes invited. Of course, of the French painters only those that are too old or are physically incapacitated from military service remain in Paris. At two recent dinners Matisse, the well-known marine painter (not Henri Matisse, the "Post-impressionist") was present, and also James W. Morrice, the English artist, one of whose pictures, a scene on the Quai des Grands Augustins, is now exhibited in the Edmund Davis collections at the Luxembourg.

French Artists' Show at American Club.

An exhibition of works by a group of Frenchmen at the club has just closed. It was the first of a proposed series of exhibitions by non-American artists. The next will be by English artists. Those to whom this privilege is offered are carefully selected by a managing committee. Each exhibition is limited to a small number of participants, so that each of these may be represented by as many examples of his work as can be accommodated with wall space, and as far as possible they are kept together. The innovation of this series of exhibitions promises not only to strengthen the bond of sympathy between the American and other artists resident in France, but also to stimulate artistic emulation. Thus it will promote the sale of pictures and statuary and be of practical utility, both to the present exhibitors and to the members of the association. The series is to be continued throughout the war; and, after that, when exhibitions of the works of American artists are resumed, the beneficial effects of this liberal and friendly policy will undoubtedly be felt.

Among the French artists represented at the first war time exhibition were Messrs. Luce, vice-president of the Autumn Salon; Lebasque, vice-president of the Independent Salon; Matisse (marine painter); Desgallaix, whose floral pictures are of extraordinary merit; de Warroquier, who strongly reflects the influence of Japanese painting, and Lefevre, the sculptor, who showed a "Salome" of excellent grace and originality.

A considerable number of eminent French painters have given much of their time to the drawing of posters which the government has used effectively in advertising the great war loan and other voluntary features of the auxiliary work of the war, and which collectors are already eager to obtain.

Several exhibitions in dealers' galleries are attracting marked attention, in spite of the graver interests that are in everyone's thoughts. I shall touch upon these later.

service, perhaps the quality of the actual soldiering might not have been of that value attributed to it by Sir John French, who has spoken of the "wonderful work" which the Artists' Rifles have done.

An interesting dispute, in which a Persian carpet is concerned, is now occupying the courts and is being closely watched by carpet experts. The plaintiff states that she agreed to entrust for repair to a firm in Victoria street a carpet of 14th Century Persian manufacture as well as one of 16th Century origin, in return for four pieces of tapestry and the sum of £20. The latter carpet only was taken away by the defendants for restoration, the tapestry being sent to them at the same time. A carpet was subsequently delivered by them to the owner, which is alleged not to be that in question, distinct differences both in color, pattern and size being noticeable. As the firm concerned refused to supply any other carpet or to return the tapestry, a claim of £300 damages, in default of the original carpet and the pieces of tapestry has been made. A carpet "expert" has stated in evidence that the carpet sent for repair was not Persian but Kooltoek, not 16th Century but 18th, and not worth more than £70, while Mr. Rochelle Thomas on the other hand has given it as his opinion that the pieces of tapestry were worth as much as £160, being 17th Century Flemish. The case has been adjourned until next week.

Heppie Earl Wicks has a nearly completed portrait of Miss Violet Hamilton in her studio at Carnegie Hall. Miss Hamilton is the grand-daughter of Alexander Hamilton. The color scheme of the canvas is in rich warm yellows with tapestry background.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Nott Allen gave a charming reception at their Sherwood studio last week. Mrs. Helen Gue, daughter-in-law of the artist Davis Gue, sang charmingly. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. E. Irving Couse, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur T. Hill, Carroll Brown, the Misses McCord, daughters of the late George H. McCord, recently arrived from Paris.

Rare Books in Fine Bindings.

The largest and finest collection of rare books in beautiful bindings seen in this country since the dispersal of the Robert Hoe library, has been consigned to the Anderson Galleries, for unrestricted sale by Robert Riviere & Son, the famous London binders, and is now on exhibition and will be sold on Friday evening, Feb. 18. The collection includes Illuminated Mss., rare first editions of famous books, Cosway bindings, jeweled bindings Kelmscott Press publications colored plate books extra-illustrated works, collected sets, and rare engravings, and represents some of the finest work that these binders have ever produced. War conditions in England led to the shipment of these books to America.

Sale of Stevensoniana.

The third and concluding part of the great collection of Stevensoniana, consigned to the Anderson Galleries by Mrs. Salisbury Field, daughter of the late Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson, is now on exhibition and will be sold on Wed. and Thurs. afts., Feb. 16 and 17. Part I. of the collection was sold at these galleries in Nov., 1914, for $47,367; and Part II. sold the following January, brought $19,127.95, a total for the two parts of $66,494.95.

With the exception of a few books by Stevenson, Part III. consists entirely of autograph letters, written by him to his father and mother. At the time of the first sale a claim to some of the early letters was made by Mrs. Katherine D. Osbourne, and they were withdrawn, pending a judicial decision. The courts have now restored the letters to Mrs. Field, and they will comprise the first session of the coming sale.

This is the last great sale of Stevensoniana that will ever take place, for the material is now scattered to all parts of the world. These coll'ns are of the highest interest to Stevenson Collectors. Many of the letters were written when Stevenson was very young, indeed the material goes back to the time when he was only 2 years old, the first item in the catalogue being what is called a baby letter, consisting of meaningless scrawls, with the signature "Smoutie" (his nickname) undoubtedly written with the assistance of his mother. Then comes a record in his mother's hand which she entitles "Remarks for about 1/4 of an hour by Mr. Smoutie;" this was when the boy was a child of 2 years. The next item is a letter written by his nurse, four years later, which is signed "Robert Lewis B. Stevenson," and this is the earliest known signature of the great poet and novelist. Following this come many letters and notes to his parents and some very curious pen-and-ink drawings. There is also the only known copy of The School Boys Magazine, wholly in Mss., and evidently the first of the numerous magazines started by Stevenson—"An Island Pond, near New York" fetched son in his early days.

Mr. Emile Pares, of 20 E. 55 St., who is adding to his establishment the second floor of the building, left for Europe on Jan. 4, is now in Spain, and will probably return in March.

Mr. Martin Hofer, of 660 Fifth Ave., is in Chicago, where he has been showing his collection of primitives, and will return this week.

Moulton and Ricketts Bankrupt Sale.

At the third and concluding session of the sale of the stock of Robb R. Ricketts, of Chicago, formerly and now, since his release from bankruptcy, trading as Moulton and Ricketts, at the Anderson Galleries, Jan. 28, a total of $8,613.50 was obtained for 64 oils of the modern Foreign and American schools. This, added to the totals of the first two sessions, or $4,086, made a grand total of $12,639.50 for the sale.

The table below shows that several examples, attributed to Blakelock, sold very low, one at $15, while even the highest price for an example of this American master was $50. These low figures will recall the exhibition some seasons ago at the then Moulton and Ricketts Fifth Ave. gallery, of a collection of small pictures cataloged as Blakelocks, which afterwards went to the firm's Chicago house. These pictures, it was afterward learned, had been painted by a young artist in Brooklyn, who cleverly imitates Blakelock's manner of painting. It would appear that there was at least a suspicion, on Friday evening, that some, at least, of these had been left in Mr. Ricketts' stock.

Third Session.

The following is a list of the pictures sold Friday eve., with the numbers, artists' names, titles, and sizes in inches, first height and then width, the names of the buyers, where obtainable, and the prices:

INTO FAR JAPAN.

The art season in New York, without the annual Yamanaka auction at the American Art Galleries, would be lacking in one of its most interesting and important events. This year's exhibition, which was thrown open to the public Wednesday last, surpasses all previous displays.

The Yamanaka auctions have novelty as well as quality. To find novelties in old China and young Japan shows that the Yamanaka searchers know both the Orientals and us.

A short time ago the Chinese bird cages,

"OLD MASTERS" known to the art world, are increased in number only by the rare chance of discovery. We have made such "discoveries" and the Paintings have been sold to important museums and private collectors. Acquisitions by museums are surely lessening the number possible for private ownership. The Ehrich Galleries deal exclusively in "Old Masters" and are in possession of many world-famous examples. Visitors always welcome.

brought from palaces, made of the most precious materials, created a sensation. There are other bird cages of equal interest in the present show, and some that far surpass in richness of ornament any seen here.

But the exclamations of delight will be for the dog kennels. Such dog kennels have never before been seen here. One that dates from the Ch'ien-lung period has upright supporting posts of turquoise enamel, the structure of brass, resting on wheels of cloisonne.

Bronzes, Clocks and Vases.

Theodore B. Starr, Inc., Fifth Ave., jewelers and silversmiths, have decided to discontinue their clock and bronze department and have consigned the entire stock for unrestricted sale at the Anderson Galleries, where the material is now on exhibition, to be sold Monday and Tuesday, afts., Feb. 7-8. The bronzes include work by Meissonier, Gerome, Carpeaux, Moreau and other French artists, and by MacMonnies, Borglum, Shady and Mrs. Vonnoh, among the Americans. The collection of clocks is large and of great variety and beauty. The sale also includes Louis XVI vases and fine examples of Wedgwood and Royal Minton porcelains, the latter reproductions of the famous Sevres vases in the Wallace collection, made exclusively for the Starr Company. The collection is new, of recent importation, and of high quality.

Big Price for Stamp.

An early Canadian postage stamp, the twelve-pence black variety of the 1852 issue, sold for $457 at a recent auction of the late Charles Gregory's collection at the Collectors' Club in this city.

The statue in honor of the widow of Herr Henschel, a leading manufacturer, was the object of a competition to be decided in November. It is expected thus to enrich the monumental features of the city of Cassel.

CATHOLINA LAMBERT COLL'N.

With the opening at the American Art Galleries today of the exhibition of the 368 pictures and the 33 marble sculptures and statuary from the collections of Mr. Catholina Lambert, removed from his residence, "Buena Vista" castle, near Paterson, N. J., and which will be shown at the Galleries until Feb. 21 on the evening of which day their sale will begin, to be continued for that and three following evenings in the Plaza Ballroom—are collectors and lovers will have an opportunity to see and study one of the most interesting and important assemblages of art works, that has ever been offered at auction in this country.

In previous notices the ART NEWS has endeavored to point out the salient features of this remarkable collection—but it has been impossible to do more than notice and to illustrate a few of the more important and valuable pictures. Even now, as this last review must be written before the works are placed on view, even with the aid of the handsome Catalog it must necessarily be inadequate to the subject.

It may be well, however, to indicate to the art lovers who purpose visiting the exhibition and attending the sale, the more striking features of the collections and to emphasize its interest and value as an aid to art education.

For Mr. Lambert, through his long life time of collecting pictures and sculptures, has been rarely catholic in his taste and his collecting. Unlike many of his fellows he has not confined his collecting to the narrow limits of any one school of painting, old or modern, but has roamed afield, with a discerning and discriminating taste and eye, and has sought to secure works which appealed to him for their beauty and as representative of the varied schools and painters which he most liked, and with which schools and painters he thus soon became well acquainted. And he bought not in any one market, but where and when he pleased—one summer in London, another in Paris, and now and then in Vienna, Rome, Milan, Florence and even Berlin, not neglecting New York. And he knew all the prominent collectors and dealers of Europe and America, in whose homes and galleries, the cheery, sturdy, spectacled, middle aged and then elderly man was always welcome. The "tricks of the trade" he also knew, and a twinkle in his good, kindly eyes, and sometimes a flash, discernible through his gold rimmed spectacles were the signals to those who knew him, either of amusement at his own discernment, or of annoyance at some detected attempted deception.

But, while remarkably cultivated and studied in the history of art Mr. Lambert, who began life as a Yorkshire cotton spinner, and became one of America's best known and wealthiest silk manufacturers, was ever modest. He never laid claim to infallibility as an "Expert," but modestly and quietly went on his collecting way—giving pleasure to himself in the pursuit of his art collecting hobby, and to a host of friends in his collections, which he delighted to show to these friends in his beautiful castle at Paterson, for many years.

Such is the manner of man that Mr. Lambert is. Now, when he has arrived in the eighties, but still comparatively vigorous and as mentally alert as ever—the fortunes of war—for it is due to the European war that through consequent tightness of the money market in 1914, he was forced to turn over his properties, including his collections to a Trust Co. (not making any failure, however), he sees these collections pass to other hands. The life of Mr. Lambert and the near dispersal of his collections is a veritable romance that someday some writer may tell in detail to an admiring public, and thus this final chapter in the history of this old collector makes the coming exhibition and sale of peculiar and unique interest.

Varied Schools Represented.

An idea of the scope of the Lambert collections may be obtained when it is stated that it contains examples of the early Italian, French, Flemish, Spanish and English and of the modern French, English, Hungarian, Russian and American schools, most of them representative, and all interesting. Lovers of old pictures will be especially interested in the collections, for while they have many and good examples, as said above of the modern Foreign and American painters, there are numerous panels and canvases by famous old painters, and others, over whose attributions and authorships, the critics and "experts" will dispute.

Early Italian Pictures.

The early Italian painters are largely represented and the work which most stands out, is the large and fine altar piece "The Madonna Enthroned" by Bernardino Luini, reproduced on this page of this issue, which came from the late Sir William Agnew, who ranked it with the Morgan Raphael, recently presented to the Metropolitan Museum, by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, and the Blenheim Palace Raphael of the same subject. The angels on the Predella in this picture rival the famous ones of Carpaccio. Next in importance to this

There are Madonnas and Infant Christ; and presentments of various Saints by Albertinelli, Guercino, Cariani, L. Carracci, da Sesto, Cimabue, Cima, Cipriani, Santa Croce, de Treviso, Grandi, Parmigiano, Sassoferrato, Innocenzo, Salai, Santi, Schidone, Sirani, a portrait of "Leonora de Toledo" by Bronzino, a Roman ruin by Pannini, and other works, attributed to the schools of Veronese, and Titian. All these pictures, with few exceptions, have a good provenance or history, and those who purchase them will have an opportunity for study and research, which may reveal new beautiful work is perhaps the "Holy Family," given to Andrea del Sarto, but which some critics attribute to a greater brush, and which was reproduced in the ART NEWS on Feb. 5. A typical oval panel of the "Virgin and Child," sold by Agnew and Sons of London to Mr. Lambert, as by Botticelli, is also a beautiful work, and is warmly endorsed by competent authorities. A large, typically decorative "Ascension of St. Margaret," from the Bishop of York, England, is probably the original, for even a larger painting of the same subject by G. B. Tiepolo.

facts regarding them of surprising interest and value.

Old Dutch and Flemish Paintings.

Numerous also are the old Dutch and Flemish paintings in the collection. These include no less than four, given to Ferdinand Bol, Rembrandt's greatest pupil and follower, portraits of a man and of a woman and of Rembrandt's mother, purchased respectively by the late H. O. Watson in London for Mr. Lambert, and by the collector himself from Edward Brandus, the late T. J. Blakeslee, and the "St. John Chiding Herod"—the last by far the best, from Dowdeswells of London. There is a Jan Brueghel "Raising of Lazarus," an attributed A. Cuyp, a fine G. van Eckhout, "The Tribute Money," from the Earl of Dudley's collection, a striking Govert Flinck, "King Lear," from Laurie and Co., two excellent portraits of men by B. Van der Helst, and an equally good "Portrait of a Lady" by L. Van der Helst, a large and sensational canvas, given to Jacob Jordaens "Daedalus Fastening Wings on Icarus," two portraits of women, given to Nicolas Maes, the one of the older woman from Dowdeswells, much the best, a typical G. Metsu, an equally typical Portrait of "Pieter de Scheldt" by Mierevelt, a fair Molenaer, "Village Pete" from Durand-Ruel and a "Portrait of the Sheriff of Dordecht" by Faustus Moreese, also from Durand-Ruel.

One finds among the early Dutch and Flemish pictures, examples of Daniel Mytens, a full length standing presentment of the Marquis of Huntley, as good as a Van Dyck, a striking work, of Francis Pourbus the Younger, a "Portrait of A Rabbi," boldly given to Rembrandt in the Catalog and which is probably a replica of the same subject in the Berlin Museum, and no less than eight pictures, wisely cataloged as of the "Rembrandt school"—all superior works, and which, by a less careful collector, would be given to the great master.

There is a large and interesting canvas, cataloged as by Rubens, "Virgin and Child" from Durand-Ruel, two examples of Van der Neer, one each of Van de Werff and Van de Velde, and four in the Van Dyck manner, two given to the "Period," and two to the "School of Van Dyck," two examples of Van Goyen, one of van Honthorst, three of Van Keulen, three, given to Bernard van Orley, a van Ostade, a Van Ravenstyn, one each of Jacob and Solomon Ruysdael, a really stunning man's portrait by Verspronck, reproduced in the ART NEWS of Jan. 29, and a Cornelis de Vos, which list completes the long list of the more striking early Dutch and Flemish works.

Early Spanish Pictures.

The early Spanish pictures are few but good in quality, and comprise two examples of Carreno de Miranda, a good Coello, a splendid "St. Christopher and the Christ Child," by Alonso Cano—one of the best works in the entire collection, and reproduced in the ART NEWS of Feb. 5, a "Good Mother and Child," by C. Coello, a small "St. Francis" by El Greco, an attributed Murillo, a charming portrait by Pacheco, "Daughter of Velasquez," two examples of Pereda, one of Perez, and a "Portrait of a Spanish Bishop" by Zurbarán.

Old French Pictures.

These, again, are few in number, but representative, the most important the "Death of the Grandfather," one of the four pictures said to have been painted by Greuze for the Lyons Museum, but never delivered, and purchased from Durand-Ruel, the large group portrait of three members of the artist's family, given to Largilliere, a smaller replica probably of the still larger canvas of the same subject at Versailles, and two good examples of Drouais.

Early English Paintings.

Mr. Lambert favored greatly the works of the masters and their followers of the early English school, and the examples he secured, many from the late T. J. Blakeslee, are many and of varying quality. The most important are the large canvases given to Lawrence and Harlow, and the beautiful Italian landscape by Richard Wilson. The "At the Opening of the Gate" is boldly given to Lawrence by the Cataloger, Mr. W. E. Roberts of London, but in a footnote he curiously doubts his own attribution, and says it is "the work of an able studio assistant of the master." It is a fine work and Mr. Roberts' strange "volte face" needs explanation.

It was the custom of Lawrence to leave the accessions, painting of animals, etc., in a picture, to his assistant, and in this there is evidence that the donkey and background are the work of the assistant, who, it is said, was a much better animal painter than Sir Thomas himself.

The remaining five canvases given to Lawrence are fair to good examples. The four portraits by George Henry Harlow show this able painter at his best and especially the portrait of a young woman, long given to Lawrence, but which is finer than many a Lawrence.

ARCHITECTS AND DECORATORS IN ALL THE GREAT PERIODS. FURNITURE.—ITALIAN FRENCH, ENGLISH AND CHINESE Objets D'Art.

The head of an elderly man by Andrew Geddes, A.R.A., is an especially clever work by this Scotch master and is one of his best pictures, painted after his visit to Holland where he made a special study of Rembrandt's work.

Of the three portraits given to Reynolds, that of Mrs. Bennet is the best, while Gainsborough is represented by a landscape, and a "Portrait of Gen Johnson"; Hogarth by the "Price Family," Hoppner by a "Portrait of a Lady," and Romney by two portraits, one of a lady, and another of Mr. William Henschel.

Other early English pictures of note, are two portraits by Beechey, a "Portrait of an Old Merchant," by Barker of Bath, the landscapist, two landscapes by Callcott, two studies by Constable, a good "Old Crome," three fine, strong portraits by William Dobson, an excellent "Portrait of a Lady," by Watson Gordon, a lovely example of Angelica Kauffman, "Mother and Child," two typical examples of Kneller, two of Lely, two of Morland, a charming "Portrait of the Marchioness of Rockingham," by Sir Francis Cotes, reproduced on page 5; good landscapes by Shayer, Stannard, Stark, Vincent and Willcock, the last almost a Constable in quality, and a handsome "Classical Landscape" given to Turner, but more suggestive of some clever imitator of Claude Lorraine.

The Modern Pictures.

If, perchance, the old pictures owned by Mr. Lambert should not realize all expectations, the modern ones will certainly atone for any loss. They are, with few exceptions, of superior quality and unquestioned as to attribution. In the list of modern French works are to be found examples of Anastasi, Bague, Boudin (3), J. L. Brown (4), Corot, (2), Courbet (3), Daubigny (2)—one a beauty—Delacroix (2), Desbouts, Diaz, Dupre (2), Goubie, Huguet (3), Lepine (3), Michel—the unusual number of 18, all excellent examples—Millet, Monet (6), Montenard (2), Monticelli—again the unusual number of 29—some of splendid quality—Moreau, Pesne, Pissarro (7), Puvis de Chavannes (3), Renoir (4), Rico, Rousseau, Roybet, Sisley (8), and Troyon, surely a fine feast for Barbizon and Giverny school lovers. Mr. Lambert knew Monticelli well and purchased several of the examples of the painter directly from him.

Modern American Works.

And last, but not least, come the modern American pictures, which are in, themselves, notable. There are 11 Blakelocks, all good and, one the "Moonlight," reproduced on the front page of last week's ART NEWS, the finest landscape by the artist he ever painted. There is a good Bogert, and a Boggs, two Franzen portraits, one Hassam, one E. L. Henry, a fine Inness landscape, from the Richard Halsted sale, a good Kost, an early and fine Geo. McCord, an Arthur Parton, a Quartley, three examples of F. K. M. Rehn, a Julian Rix and a Marcuis Simons.

The Sculptures and Statuary.

The 33 sculptures and statuary are fairly good, if some are old-fashioned. There are examples of the American Freeborne, Ives (6), Powers, his "Hiawatha," and Wolff, James B. Townsend.

PENNA. ACADEMY DISPLAY.

The one hundred and eleventh annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, which opened to the public in Phila. last Sunday, Feb. 6, following the annual reception the preceding Saturday evening, differs little in general average of merit and conservativeness of tone from its predecessors of the past few years. As always, there is a goodly proportion of what may be called clever work among the exhibits and, again, even a larger proportion than usual of pictures that have already been shown in N. Y. this season—so many indeed from the recent Winter Academy display that the New York visitor might well fancy himself, at times, wandering through the Fine Arts Galleries in West 57 Street.

Absence of Works from Europe.

A distinguishing feature of the exhibition in former years, namely, the only representative showing of recent work by the strongest American artists resident abroad, was necessarily, owing to the war, absent from last year's exhibition, and is this year, from the same cause, again missing. While a few of these artists, notably Frank Boggs, Marie Louise Brent and Alexander Harrison, have sent examples from Paris, these are not enough to strike any distinctive note. The absence of works by these Americans, which are, as a rule, more or less expressive of the latest art developments or tendencies in Europe, and which are also, as a rule, distinctly clever and original, made it necessary again this year for the Academy officials to invite more of the stronger works shown elsewhere; and, as said above, many of these come from the recent Winter Academy and certain displays in N. Y. dealers' galleries, and from the, also recent, annual Chicago Institute display. The presence of these works, now familiar to general art lovers, and to those who follow the routine exhibitions, not only tends to sober the general atmosphere of the exhibition, but to deprive it of that freshness and novelty which were formerly its chief characteristics. In fact, the Pa. show this year reminds one of a larger and more varied N. Y. Academy exhibition. This is not meant as a reflection upon the Phila. show, for the N. Y. Academy displays have slowly, but steadily, improved in scope, variety and strength during the past five years.

The exhibition has 439 oils this year, as against 481 last year, and 217 sculptures, as against 219 last year; so that it is relatively about as large. The hanging of the pictures and placing of the sculptures are, as usual, good; but the task of the Pa. Academy jury and Hanging Committee, with eleven picture galleries—most of them large and well lit—and a large sculpture corridor and gallery, is much more simple than that of the N. Y. Academy juries and hanging committees, which have to pack too much that is good into too small a space for proper display, and, for the same reason, to fail to hang or place, or to reject many deserving works.

A Strongly Local Jury.

There is, as a rule, less dissatisfaction with the Pa. Academy awards than with those of the other large routine art exhibitions of the country, although there is always a general feeling among American artists that the institution favors the medalling and honoring of former pupils of the Academy and of Pa. artists, at times, a little too much, as against those artists whom Heaven has not favored with birth or residence in the Keystone State or, more happily, in the Quaker City. But this is only the natural idea of exhibitors, disappointed as to receipt of honors; and as the jury is always—and notably this year—composed of men of high standing in the profession and had upon it, in addition, to its local members, Daniel Garber (chairman), E. W. Redfield (of course), R. B. Farley, J. McL. Hamilton, Chas. Rosen, Robt. Vonnoh, and Chas. Gray, the N. Y. painters, Gifford Beal, and F. J. Waugh, and the N. Y. Sculptors Paul W. Bartlett and H. A. McNeil, it would seem as if there were a sufficient counter influence against any local favoritism. It is to be noted, however, that the hanging committee, composed of Daniel Garber, R. B. Farley, Chas. Grafly and E. W. Redfield (of course), was entirely local.

The Prize Winners.

The chief honors of the display were carried off this year by Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., who not only captured the first and most important prize, the Temple Gold Medal, for the best picture without regard to subject, for his large oil, a landscape with geese in the foreground, entitled "On the Valley," but also the new Edward T. Stotesbury prize, given by the committee on exhibition to "the most important contribution to the success of the exhibition," for the same painting. This is a remarkable feat for any artist in this country, but there can be no question of the merit of the canvas, original in subject and treatment and having charm of color and atmosphere, although there is grave questioning as to whether the rather hard fungus-covered, dead tree trunks in the foreground, just behind the two well painted geese, which "strike one in the eye," as it were, and were evidently introduced for sensational effect, had not better have been omitted, with benefit to the beauty of the canvas.

The Jennie Sesnan Gold Medal was given to Emil Carlsen for his fine, breezy, truthful and beautiful marine and coast scene, "Entrance to St. Thomas Harbor," which was shown at the last Winter Academy; and the Carol H. Beck Gold Medal, for the best portrait in the display, to the veteran Douglas Volk, for his most dignified, solidly painted and virile bust portrait of "Dr. Felix Adler," also shown at the last Winter Academy.

Miss Nancy Ferguson won the Mary Smith prize for the best painting by a woman, for her fresh, charmingly colored little view of Provincetown, Mass., in summer; and Karl Anderson, who promised well in N. Y. some years ago, but who has not exhibited much of late years, and has been almost forgotten, captured the Walter Lippincott prize for the best figure painting, for his canvas entitled "The Heirloom," a strong composition, well thought out and ably handled. The Geo. D. Widener Memorial Medal, for the best piece of sculpture in the display, was won by Edward McCartan with his figure entitled "The Spirit of the Woods," a well modelled work, but in subject and feeling almost too close to MacMonnies' famous "Bacchante," by which it was evidently inspired, to be exactly original.

Many Familiar Pictures.

To give the list of works on exhibition which have already been shown, and which are more or less familiar, would require too much space and would only weary the reader, but it is always good to see again such canvases as Leon Kroll's "West Shore Terminal," C. C. Cooper's "Malines Cathedral," H. W. Watrous's strong figure composition, "The Dregs," and "Just Two Girls," Irving R. Wiles's "Isabel and her Father," Gardner Symons's "New England Mill," Wm. M. Chase's old outdoors (with Robt. Blum as the figure), "Sunshine and Shadow," W. Granville-Smith's "Summer Sea," George Bellows's "Fisherman's Family," Wm. Ritschel's "Allurement," J. Alden Weir's ten familiar canvases, and his portrait of his father, the late Robt. W. Weir, an early work, but far stronger and better than his later fellows. To Mr. Weir was given a medal of honor for his exhibit.

Best Pictures in the Display.

While, of course, writers, and even artists will differ individually as to which may be called the really best pictures and sculptures in such an exhibition as the one now under discussion, there will be little question, I think, that the honors of the display rest with Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., Robert Spencer, and the Chicago painter, Frederick Clay Bartlett. The last is represented by three canvases, "Flowing Fountain," "Grey and Sunlight" and "Roof Garden Tea," all, and especially the last, spontaneous works, fresh and clear in color, and full of life. The last canvas, although its composition is a little too much spread out, is a really remarkable painting of an indoors with figures, opening out onto a landscape, with most effective distance and atmosphere. It is a most joyous work, and the artist is to be congratulated upon it.

Robert Spencer has four excellent pictures of which "The Blue Gown" is, perhaps, the strongest—a delightful and freely handled portrayal of a young woman seated, against a gray background, with pensive expression. His "Huckster Cart" is admirable in drawing and presentment, his "Rabbit Run Farm" delicious in tone and color, and his "Back Yard," a more typical subject, restrained, and again delightful in tone. There are also superior paintings by Edmund Greacen of N. Y., William Wendt, George Obersteuffer, J. B. Grossman, Carroll S. Tyson, Jr., Chas. E. Woodbury and a splendid recent Cornish Coast scene, "Sunlight and Surf," by Paul Dougherty. Mary Cassatt shows an early work, but one of her strongest, "Woman Sitting in a Garden," and John S. Sargent's always beautiful "Moorish Courtyard" is also shown.

One finds also Martha Walter's clever dashing portrait of "Dorothy Lee Bell" and near it Cecelia Baux's stiff and unattractive, if well painted, portrait, "Mrs. B.," from the last Winter Academy. Mention must be made of Gustave Wiegand's always charming landscape "Blue Mountain Lake, N. Y.," and Miss M. Bradish Titcomb's two sunny and breezy little outdoors. W. M. Paxton is at his best this year in his finely, smoothly painted modern Vermeer, "The Letter," and Mrs. Paxton sends her clever interior with figure, "Sick Abed." "The Autumn Fleet" by Jonas Lie, a picture which has already been shown in N. Y., has the strength and color that ranks it even above Hayley Lever's pictures of the same subject—a Cornish harbor with boats.

In "June Morning" by Walter Griffin there is a richness and quality of color which sustains his deserved reputation, and Lawton Parker's "Souvenir" is one of the best canvases from this able painter in many a day. Tender and delicate color mark Daniel Garber's "Down the River—May." The details are too crowded in Carl J. Nordell's figure work, "The Guest," and his still life is better. A delightful example of Chas. H. Davis is his "After the Ball." Thos. Eakins departs from his usual portraits and interiors with figures, this year, and sends two delightful outdoor canvases of sporting subjects, depicting rail shooting. There are fine quality and good composition in Murray P. Bewley's "Image Vender," and Everett L. Warner's "Snowfall in the Woods," Ernest Lawson's "Squatters' Cabin" and Chas. H. Woodbury's "After the Gale" are all strong.

Paul King's "Village—Moonlight" is full of sentiment and delightful in tone, but Hugh H. Breckenridge's "Ivory, Gold and Blue" is tawdry in color. A strong, fine and rich composition by A. G. Warshawsky, "Humble Lives," and a stunning, virile, rich portrait by Frank W. Benson, "Red and Gold," must complete the list of those pictures which most strike one at first view of the exhibition.

Some Good Portraits.

Portraits are less numerous in the present display than usual, but include some exceedingly clever and exceptionally good works. Leopold G. Seyfert has four, of which his presentment of Mrs. Henry S. Paul, Jr., a full length standing one, is perhaps the best. Mention must also be made of the two double children's portraits by Lydia F. Emmet, both in her best vein; of Louis Betts' "Renie," also one of his best; of Wm. Cotton's now almost too familiar, but always good to see, presentment of Mrs. Cotton, painted when she was Miss Dvorak; of the exceedingly fine presentment of "Mr. George Wood" by Lazar Raditz; Julian Story's strong and most successful "Mrs. Nicholas Biddle," exquisitely refined and painted with much sympathy, and of his also strong, if not as attractive, presentment of "Mr. Samuel Rea."

There are also good portraits by Philip Hale, "The Spanish Lady"; Robt. W. Vonnoh, his familiar, truthful presentment of the late Charles Francis Adams; and by Rich'd Blossom Farley, better known as a landscapist, a strong presentment of Mrs. Thomas Ridgway; Arthur R. Freedlander's "Mildred," Jos. de Camp's "Pauline," Carl J. Nordell's "Miss C.," I. H. Caliga's "Ethel," Geo. Bellows' old but always good "Dr. Thompson," Alice M. Roberts' "Miss J. Mumford" and Margaret F. Richardson's "Arthur C. Goodwin," the last an exceedingly strong work. Miss Violet Oakley's four portraits hardly sustain her reputation.

GENERAL ART NEWS.

Mr. Ellsworth's Good Purchase.

Mr. James W. Ellsworth, the well known collector of American pictures and Oriental and near Oriental art objects and textiles, and who has for some years past resided in Florence, Italy, where he has a beautiful villa, but is now again a resident of New York, is being warmly congratulated upon his purchase, at the recent Andrews-Ives-Canfield picture sale, of the canvas "Fog and Surf," by the late Robert A. Eichelberger. This picture, which Mr. Ellsworth secured for the bargain figure of $1,500, was the last painted by the gifted young American artist just before his death in 1890, was left unsigned, and was shown at the twelfth annual exhibition of the old Society of American Artists in that year, where it was purchased by the late Gen. Brayton Ives. It was shown at the Paris Exposition of 1900, where it was warmly praised by the French critics. The work has always been considered by American collectors and art lovers as one of the finest ever painted by a native artist. It is not only a masterly and truthful rendering of swirling surf on a soft foggy day on the Long Island coast near Easthampton, but is permeated with tender sentiment and poetic feeling.

Gimbels Buy Haseltine Pictures.

Gimbel Bros. of Phila., have bought the collection of paintings, etchings, engravings, etc., owned by the late Chas. F. Haseltine, and the entire collection is now on exhibition and sale in a special large art gallery on the seventh floor of the Phila. store. Mr. Haseltine valued his holdings at $400,000, but the price paid by Gimbels for the collection has not been made public.

A group of paintings, which the former owner sent to the San Francisco Exposition, will form part of the Gimbel exhibition. Mr. Haseltine had traveled all over the world in quest of art treasures. He acted as "expert" collector for the Corcoran Gallery, Washington; Carnegie Institute, the Buffalo Academy and the Cincinnati Museum.

The various art works will not be auctioned at the Gimbel store. Instead, there will be a price mark on each one. More than 2,000 paintings will be put on sale, and the etchings, engravings and mezzotints number more than 10,000.

Among the artists represented are: Meissonier, Maccari, Rosa Bonheur, Courbet, Tissot, Leutze, Brascasse, Linford, Duez, Achenbach, John Crome, and Wylie. Some of the older paintings have been authenticated, and they will be so labeled. Others, about which there may be doubt as to originality, will be placarded in such a way as to avoid confusion.

Canessa Firm Honored.

President Poincaré, escorted by General Duparge paid a visit to the auxiliary hospital "Garibaldi No. 166," connected with the "Union des Dames de France," located in the Avenue des Champs Elysées No. 125, Paris, which has been graciously placed at the disposal of French soldiers wounded at war, by the owners of the building, Messrs. Canessa, the antiquarians. President Poincaré was received by M. Virot, Vice-President of the Municipal Council of Paris, and secretary general of the Prefect of Police, by Dr. Maréchal, Mayor of the Eight "Arrondissement," by Madame Chatanand, Dr. Delanney, head surgeon, Drs. de Pariente, Vogt, Pierre Sée and Vidal, by the Reverend Bishop Ponsagrives and all the personnel of the institution.

President Poincaré conferred ten "croix de guerre" and two "medailles militaires" on some of the soldiers wounded in Champagne, and after having warmly eulogized all the valorous patients he took leave, applauded by a large public waiting for him at the exit.

FRIEDSAM BUYS A MEMLING.

Mr. Michael Friedsam, of B. Altman & Co., recently purchased from the Kleinberger Galleries an early example of Memling, a "Virgin and Child in a Landscape," painted it is thought about 1465. It comes from the collections of Lord Northwick and Sir Charles Dilke.

LIPPI TAKEN TO MORGAN'S.

Mr. J. P. Morgan has had Filippo Lippi's triptych, "Saint Lawrence with Saints Cosimo and Damien," removed from the Metropolitan Museum and placed in his library. It is one of the most remarkable as well as one of the most valuable works in the Morgan Coll'n of paintings, from which he recently gave the famous Raphael to the Museum.

Henri Paints Mrs. Whitney.

Robert Henri is painting a portrait of Mrs. Henry Payne Whitney. She has already been painted by Prince Pierre Troubetskoy, while Prince Paul has reproduced her in sculpture. Another portrait of Mrs. Whitney is by Troy Kinney.

W. M. Voynich in New York.

W. M. Voynich of London, who is at the Waldorf-Astoria, plans to sail on the Adriatic, Feb. 16, for London, and to return here in May to deliver a course of lectures

EXHIBITIONS NOW ON

The High Jinks of Artistry.

This year as last, 50 artists are holding their annual artistic revel to Mar. 4, with 50 of their most eccentric productions, at the Montross Galleries, 550 Fifth Ave. Being invited and evidently taking their cue, they have sent, in the main, the most outre things they could do. To be sure, a few who take art seriously have contributed works of moment, but the rest have followed their somewhat perverse natural bent and carried their futurist and modernist fads to the limit.

But there are pearls among all this wayward painting by men of undoubted talent. Witness the beautiful little picture by Herbert Crowley, in which gold leaf is used with such telling effect, showing a church, on a mountain side "Lit for Blessed Mysteries," and Carl Anderson's delightful study, so beautiful in color and tender in sentiment, of Mrs. Chauncey J. Blair's Rosselino "Madonna." Contrast these with Hugo Robu's chromatic phantasy "The Dance," George Hart's group of inhabitants of Mars, skating on "Englewood Ice Pond," Henry Fitch Taylor's "Color Hypothesis," "The Rat Catcher's Daughter," Joseph Stella's "The Procession—A Chromatic Sensation," Max Weber's "The Salmagundi Club's Annual Auction.

The annual exhibition of small paintings by members of the Salmagundi Club is now on in the Club gallery, 14 W. 12 St. preparatory to their sale at auction, the evenings of Feb. 16-18 inclusive.

There is a poetic little landscape by Granville-Smith. Bruce Crane's "Golden Glow" is unusual in conception, and Warren Eaton's rendering of a sunset in Holland is typical of his art. There are pictures of "Fishing Boats, St. Ives" by Guy Wiggins; of "Cows" by E. C. Volkert; "Oxen at Work" by Paul King; a nude by Warren B. Davies, and by Paul Cornoyer, "Columbus Circle," his accustomed able portrayal of N. Y. streets on a wet day.

"The Mill Stream" by Edmund Greacen, who is keenly sensitive to the quiet moods of nature, has appeal, and there is a diminutive expression of Frank T. Johnson's favorite theme—"Night in Juarez"—and a delightful Cullen Yates, "Autumn Foliage." Oscar Fehrer sends a strong little picture—"Annisquam Sand Dunes," and C. H. Macrum's N. Y. street scene is good. G. L. Nelson contributes "The Toilet." He pictures in an original way, the inevitable nude, reflected in a mirror. The arrangement is good, and the little figure well modeled. F. Luis Mora's Spanish street scene, "Hustling Business" has life and movement. Denman Fink's women and children on the beach is brilliant. There is a F. Waugh marine only fair in quality, a spring time landscape, with tender green foliage by Jules Turcas, a pleasing arrangement of a girl sewing by Ledyard Towle, a Hobart Nichol snow scene, a poetic little nude by Edward Dufner, and a strong Autumn landscape by Frank De Haven.

God of "Humormystics."

A strange artistic production, full of odd imagery, is Henry Clews, Jr.'s "God of Humormystics," now on view at the galleries of Jacques Seligman & Co., Inc., 705 Fifth Ave. From a basic column of colored marble, about whose base disport three bronze amorini, one with wings and drunk, and another uplifting a wreath, rises an emaciated and strongly modeled bronze figure of an aged man, crowned with a bird's nest at whose edge two doves bill and coo. He stands on a base, bearing a woman's head and hand and a colossal frog. He holds in one hand a rose and in the other nothing. About the round base circle 18 heads, including those of the Saviour and the Virgin, and others, crowned and uncrowned, but nearly all grotesquely ugly. Inspired by the early art of the Chinese the work is a bitter satire on life, sardonic and rather horrible, if somewhat fascinating.

on his specialty of old illuminated and art illustrated Mss. and books in universities of the middle West. He will give another series of these lectures at other universities next Autumn, but will spend the summer in Europe.

Mr. Voynich, who is an authority on his subject, is more strictly a dealer in and collector of art than of literary material, but is exceptionally well versed in both subjects. He has had a most successful visit in America during the past six months, and has left a number of treasures here which greatly enrich the collections of Western museums.

Another Copley Sale.

The extraordinary list of recent purchases of portraits by John Singleton Copley, America's earliest "old master," received an addition in the recent disposal, by the Copley Gallery of Boston to an important buyer in the Middle West, of an early Boston Copley, the fine portrait of Nathaniel Hurd, the silversmith and engraver. Copley and Hurd were known to have been intimate friends and the portrait is a worthy tribute from one artist to another. The painting of the hands is strong, and the general composition is original in conception.

"Casually Dropped" into a Tomb.

"Casually dropping, through a hole in the roof into an ancient tomb near Sakkara, Egypt, and looking about and deciding that it was just the tomb for the Egyptian department of the Metropolitan Museum to have among its exhibits, Mr. Albert M. Lithgoe, curator of that department, secured the huge structure."—Gustave Kobbé in N. Y. Herald.

Vocal Solo" and S. I. Slomka's "Bathing Scene," with its cleverly fantastic shapes.

The notes of truth are struck with resonance in such works as Randall Davey's really beautiful "Girl in Black," Eugene Speicher's sterling "Portrait of Hervey White" and Robert Henri's "The Sleeping Girl," a remarkably well painted if rather prosaic half nude. Wood Gaylor shows a "Dawn," well designed, but with terra cotta colored and non-modelled figures of a father and mother whose child is darker than they are, and Arthur B. Davies a "Bacchante Mother" and other figures in sector planes. W. J. Glackens sends a brilliant figure of a "Young Girl" in the Renoir vein and Walter Pach a woman's "Portrait," in No-Light Land. Hamilton Easter Field produces an artistic as well as a realistic effect with simple means in "Causerie" and Charles Reiffel has a cleverly brushed and sunny landscape. A brilliant color study is Eugene P. Ullman's "Bouquet."

Among others represented are Berlin, Brinley, Gussow, Hartman, Heath, Kuhn, Lever, Lichtenstein, Macrae, Nankivell, Pascin, L. Kroll, I. F. Parker, the Prendergasts, Stinemetz, Charles Walther and Walters.

BUREAU OF EXPERTIZING.

Advice as to the placing at public or
private sale of art work of all kinds, pic-
tures, sculptures, furniture, bibelots, etc.,
will be given at the office of the AMERICAN
ART NEWS, and also counsel as to the value
of art works and the obtaining of the best
"expert" opinion on the same. For these
services a nominal fee will be charged. Per-
sons having art works and desirous of dis-
posing or obtaining an idea of their value
will find our service on these lines a saving
of time, and, in many instances of unneces-
sary expense. It is guaranteed that any
opinion given will be so given without regard to personal or commercial motives.

BUREAU OF APPRAISAL.

We are so frequently called upon to pass
upon the value of art works for collectors
and estates, for the purpose of insurance,
sale, or more especially to determine
whether prior appraisals made to fix the
amount due under the inheritance or death
taxes are just and correct ones—and so
often find that such former appraisals have
been made by persons not qualified by experience or knowledge of art quality or
market values, with resultant deception and
often overpayments of taxes, etc.—that we
suggest to all collectors and executors the advisability of consulting our Bureau of Appraisal either in the first place or for revision of other appraisals. This Bureau is
conducted by persons in every way qualified
by experience and study of art works for many years, and especially of market values, both here and abroad; our appraisals are made without regard to anything but quality and values, and our charges are moderate—
our chief desire being to save our patrons and the public from ignorant, needless and costly appraisal expenditure.

ART SALE RECORDS.

Collectors, dealers and other interested
are reminded that the first two numbers of
Sales of the Year for 1915, in pamphlet form,
are still on sale at the AMERICAN ART NEWS
office, 15 East 40 St., at 25 cents each, postage prepaid. No. 1, the Brayton Ives Collection of Prints, and No. 2, the Blakeslee
and Duveen Pictures Sales. The first of the series for 1916, No. 3, the Reisinger
and Andrews-Canfield Picture Sales, will
soon appear.

NEARING SEASON'S HEIGHT.

The week which opens tomorrow will bring the art world nearly to the height of the current art season in America.
Our columns this week, crowded as they are with art news, exhibitions and records of art and literary auctions, past and to come, bear evidence of the exceeding activities of this world art mart
at this season.

Our readers in war-smitten Europe,
or in the far south and middle and far west, may naturally assume from our record of all this activity, that the art business season is flourishing. Alas.
Art exhibitions and auction sales do not necessarily spell prosperity. The art business requires more than these.
It needs the golden stream which has happily brought prosperity and happiness to the stock and other markets to flow, if only slowly, its way. But above all it needs new and young art collectors to "rattle around in, if they cannot fill," the shoes of the older ones who have recently passed and are passing.

CORRESPONDENCE

That "Wounded" Library Lion.

Editor AMERICAN ART NEWS:

Dear Sir:

Referring to Mr. French's communication in the ART NEWS today, and my letter regarding the library lions, of course, as an amateur I defer to Mr. French's judgment, but my letter was prompted entirely by the fact that I hated to see one of the most prominent pieces of sculpture in our great city go on forever with a patch in its side
I do not know whether it is intended to repair the poor lion's serious wound, or whether it is intended to leave him there disabled; but, at any rate, I can see no harm
in calling attention to it.

Battle-scarred statues will be popular in Europe after this great war, but New York has not been bombarded since 1778, and I do think that even a poor outsider like myself can hope that the sculpture and decoration of our public buildings would at least start their careers whole.

Yours very truly,

S. H. P. Pell.

New York, Feb. 5, 1916.

MUSEUM BUYS A STUART.

The brilliant full-length standing portrait of Master Ward by Gilbert Stuart, shown at the Scott and Fowles galleries here two years ago, has been purchased by the Minneapolis Museum from the Dunwoodie Fox Fund, through the Reinhardt Galleries.

OBITUARY.

Earle M. Cosgrove.

Earle M. Cosgrove, died Dec. 21, at Los Angeles, Cal., at the age of 24. He was born on Santa Catalina Island. Four years ago he studied at the N. Y. School of Art and Design. He had done good work as a scene painter and originated the idea of lobby display posters.

Rudolph Blind.

The artist and translator, Rudolph Blind, died Feb. 3, in London, in his 66th year. He was born in Brussels and studied in the University School and the Royal Academy. He assisted in the decoration of the Vienna Opera House. Among his pictures are "The Throne of Grace," "The Golden Gates" and "Christ the Consoler." He fought in the Franco-Prussian war and received the Prussian medal at the siege of Strassburg.

Louis Japy.

Louis Japy, the landscape painter, and one of the last pupils of Corot, died in Paris a few days ago, aged 76. From the same province as Courbet, he studied with Francais, as well as Corot, and made his debut at the Salon in 1864. He was a member of the Société des Artistes Francais, winning the silver medal in 1900, and was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1906. He was a painter of much charm and sentiment, especially successful in his views in the Doubs and the Jura, his native country.

A. W. Drake

Alexander Wilson Drake.

Alexander Wilson Drake, for 40 odd years art editor of "Scribner's Monthly" and its successor the "Century Magazine" and the "St. Nicholas Magazine," died in this city, aged 73, on Feb. 4. He retired in 1913, was for a time art editor emeritus, and in the same year he was given a dinner by 400 artists. A man of singularly agreeable and kindly nature, Mr. Drake was largely responsible for the high quality of both American illustration and wood engraving.
To the young artist he was both friend and patron. He was noted as a collector and for a number of years had gathered, at his home in East 8th St., overflowing collections of pewter, brass and copper, as well as rings, bottles, silver boxes, cotton prints,
samplers, amber, ship models, bird cages,
and even decorated handboxes. So many of these things did he collect, that the overflow resulted in several sales.

The "father of the new wood engraving,"
which attracted so much attention abroad,
as well as at home, was born at Westfield,
N. J. In early youth he became an apprentice to William Howland, then a leading wood engraver, and managed his business, when the latter went to the Civil War. He drew on wood also, studied oil and watercolor painting and taught drawing at the Cooper Union, starting after it was over in business for himself. J. G. Holland, Roswell Smith, Richard Watson Gilder, and he started for the Scribner firm, "Scribner's Monthly."

Juengling, Cole, F. S. King and Henry Wolf were the "big four" in American wood engraving he helped develop, while the artists whose work he brought forward included Robert Blum, whom he brought from Cincinnati. With him in the art department of the "Century" became associated Messrs.
Frazer and Whittle, the last of whom still survives, but is not with the magazine. In the Union Square days the way to the literary and art dep'ts was an illustrator's gallery. Mr. Drake was the author of a number of poems and short stories. A founder of the Aldine Club, he was also a member of the Century Players, National Arts, Gro-liers, Authors and Salamagundi Clubs as well as the Caxton Club of Chicago. He was married three times, first to Miss Hilah Lloyd, second to her cousin Miss Anne Lloyd and thirdly to Miss Edith True, who survives him. By his first wife he leaves two married daughters.

The True Collector.

In a dozen forms the passion of Alexander Wilson Drake as an art collector found expression for many years. In each because of his zeal and judgment as a trained expert
he excelled.

He rummaged through east side shelves
in search of some new find in Russian or Italian brass or copper work. He ransacked chance corners for old bottles of colored glass and odd shapes. Lacquered and painted bird cages from the hands of Chinese, Japanese and Dutch craftsmen were his delight. His pewter plates and tankards all had historical associations or bore the mark of famous makers of France, Germany and the American colonies. Old flowered hand-boxes, figured cotton prints, long out of date, hundreds of rings of artistic design, small silver boxes, engraved and hammered, for the toilet tables of ladies of past generations, he gathered them together from every quarter wherever they came under his eye.
His house was a museum of treasures personally selected with infinite care, until at times it became so over-stocked that he was forced to sell parts of his collections. When he sold, he started the search anew, not as a millionaire art patron with his check-book in hand, but with the imparting instinct of the man who knew the game and played

it for the pleasure he found in it.

These were Mr. Drake's recreations, the pastimes of the busy life of an art editor whose fostering hand contributed very largely to the development of American wood engraving. Art to him was not entirely a matter of costly canvases by old masters, rare tapestries or porcelains of fabulous value; he found it everywhere.—
Editorial, New York World, Feb. 7, 1916.

W. S. Burton.

William Shakespeare Burton, son of the actor W. E. Burton, died last week at Lee, England, aged 84. He was born in London, and on his father and mother separating,
was placed under a guardian, and sent to King's College. He later entered the Royal Academy Schools and won the gold medal.
Five years thereafter he sent to the Royal Academy exhibition "The Wounded Cavalier." This was rejected, but attracted so much attention in the discard, that it was finally hung on the line. Other pictures, which attracted much attention, were "The World's Ingratitude" and "Auto da Fe."

The artist suffered much from ill health and passed several years in a darkened room. A daughter was alone left to him in his old age, out of several children. He aided his mother to secure dower rights in the estate of his father, who left all to charity.

Mary L. Macomber.

Miss Mary L. Macomber died in Boston
Feb. 4 last, aged 54. She was born in Fall River, Mass., in 1861, and began to paint when only 19. In 1883 she went to Boston and studied in the Museum art school there. Her first appearance in public was with her picture "Ruth" in 1889, and since that time her work has been shown at exhibitions throughout the country. Her "Love Awakening Memory" was shown at the Chicago Exposition in 1893, and brought her deserved reputation. Of late years she had chiefly devoted her time to the painting of portraits.

In the passing of Mary L. Macomber
the American art world has lost a distinguished artist and one, who if she had not been overmodest and had not lived and worked in a rather narrow environment, would have had the larger and wider fame her ability and her art merited. For Mary Macomber, while her work was well known and duly appreciated in Boston, was, with her work, too little known to the American art public. She was a rarely strong woman painter, and her pictures had exceeding richness, depth of color, and an old master quality; while those of allegorical subjects, which she most affected, were permeated with deep and rarely fine poetic and spiritual feeling.
She was greatly influenced by the masters of the English Pre-Raphaelite school, and especially by the Rossettis, and, in fact, was at one time called in Boston, "America's Christina Rossetti." Had Mary Macomber lived and painted in Paris, London or even New York, her passing would have been
